A.D. 1661 Ormond averr'd to be true, and that they refus'd to receive him into Limerick, but endeavour'd to intercept and murder him in his Return to Dublin. Then the Earl of Orrery produc'd a Paper ſign'd by Plunket and ſeveral of the ſupreme Council of Kilkenny, asking him if it was not his Hand, and if the Hands of others of them then preſent were not of their Writing. The Marquis of Ormond ſeeing it cry'd, Sir Nicholas Plunket, that is certainly your Writing, which neither he nor the others cou'd deny, and being read, it appear'd to be an Order of the Supream Council to proſecute the Marquis of Ormond by Name, then Lord Lieutenant, and his Party with Fire and Sword. Upon which the Earl of Orrery ſaid, Theſe muſt be very Loyal Subjects indeed, that had declar'd War againſt his Majeſty's Commiſſion'd Lieutenant! He added, It will be prov'd to this moſt Honourable Board, that the Iriſh did not only declare War againſt his Majeſty's Lieutenant, but that Sir Nicholas Plunket himſelf had been impower'd by them by a Commiſſion under the Hands of the Supream Council, which he alſo produc'd, and the Iriſh Commiſſioners cou'd not deny the Hand Writing of Plunket and others of them, to offer the Pope the Kingdom of Ireland: If he refus'd it, to offer it to the King of Spain; and in caſe he wou'd not accept of it, to make the ſame Offer to the King of France, the Duke of Lorrain, or any other Catholick Prince. Then his Lordſhip ſhew'd the Council another Paper ſubſcrib'd as before, which I have ſeen in Print, and deſir'd it might be read. It was a Petition drawn up by the Heads of the Iriſh Nation, about the Tranſplantation; wherein they gave the Common-wealth Parliament the Stile and Title of the ſupream Authority, acknowledging it to be juſtly and lawfully lodg'd in that Aſſembly to whom they ſubmitted their Lives and Fortunes. The King was oblig'd to yield to ſo much Proof and Reaſon; the Iriſh Petition was rejected, and Plunket and the other Popiſh Deputies were forbidden his Preſence and Court, pro Formâ, but he had nevertheleſs Intereſt and Favour in it. The Earl of Montrath and the ſix other Proteſtant Commiſſioners were very inquiſitive to know how Lord Orrery came by thoſe Papers, and why he had not communicated them to his Fellow-Commiſſioners before the Hearing. His Lordſhip told them, He wou'd not truſt his Brother with them for Fear; if 'twere known he had ſuch original Papers the Papiſts, who were confident of Succeſs without ſuch Evidence againſt them, might uſe ſome Art or other to render them ineffectual, which, if they were ſurpriz'd with them, they cou'd not do. He ſaid, the Manner of his coming by ſuch Originals was very extraordinary, "That upon his being nam'd one of the "Deputies for the Proteſtants in Ireland, a plain, "grave, Country Gentleman came to his Houſe "in Munſter, and deſir'd to ſpeak with him in "private;" which being admitted he ſaid, He heard his Lordſhip was going to Court in ſuch a Commiſſion, and knowing him to be a Man of Integrity, he had brought ſome Papers, which he thought wou'd be uſeful to him for the Engliſh Intereſt againſt the Iriſh; that he wou'd not truſt his own Son with them, and therefore came in Perſon to wait on his Lordſhip, and deliver them to him. My Lord ask'd how he got them! The Gentleman reply'd, He had had ſuch a Command in the Army, and one of his Soldiers, in rifling the Houſe of an Iriſh Papiſt of Diſtinction, brought away theſe Papers, which he took from him, and laid them up ſafe to be made uſe of upon Occaſion, and none cou'd be more proper than this. When the Earl of Orrery ask'd what his Name was, and where he liv'd, he deſir'd to be excus'd; and having deliver'd the Papers to him, he went his Way; nor cou'd the Earl ever ſee him, or hear of him afterwards. A.D. 1661

Soon after the Earl of Orrery, the Earl of Montrath, and Sir Maurice Euſtace, made Lord Chancellor of Ireland, were appointed Lords Juſtices of that Kingdom, and were directed to call and hold a Parliament there, in which paſs'd the famous Act of Settlement, the Draft of which was prepar'd by the Earl of Orrery. The King, to whom the latter had deliver'd all the original Papers above-mention'd, by Command, gave the Earl a Liſt of Papiſt's Names, whoſe Eſtates were to be excepted out of the Act; the Duke of Ormond did the ſame. By this Act the forfeited Eſtates were ſettled on the Purchaſers, Officers and Soldiers who had them for their Arrears, and others who had them by Purchaſe; but the Court of Claims broke in upon it ſo much, in Favour of the Iriſh Papiſts, by Direction from England, that 'twas the Cauſe of a loud continual Clamour, 'till it was repeal'd in the Reign of this King's Brother, King James.

Scotland. The Scots had very great Reaſon to hope that the Kirk was coming into Halcyon Days, having a Covenanting King on the Throne; a King who had thrice taken that ſolemn League, in the moſt ſolemn Manner, and by a tremendous Appeal to the living God, that his Heart went with his Hand and his Lips in ſubſcribing and pronouncing it. But their Hope, and their Covenant vaniſh'd in a few Months, and a Set of cruel impious Governors were put over them both in Church and State.

In Auguſt the Earl of Glencairne was ſent down to Scotland, to call the Committee of Eſtates, till the Parliament, which was to meet in January, cou'd ſit. There met alſo at Edinburgh ten or twelve Miniſters, who had a Paper before them, drawn up by Mr. Guthry, a very warm Man, in which, after ſome cold Complements to the King, on his Reſtoration, "they "put him in Mind of the Covenant, which he "had ſo ſolemnly ſworn while among them; "they lamented, that inſtead of purſuing the "Ends of it in England, according to the Oaths "he had taken, he had ſet up the Common-"Prayer in his Chappel, and the Order of Bi-"ſhops; upon which they made terrible Denun-"ciations of heavy Judgments from God upon "him, if he did not ſtand to the Covenant, "which they call'd the Oath of God." The Earl of Glencairne having Notice of this Meeting, ſent Officers who ſeiz'd every one of the Miniſters, together with their Paper. The Government ſet the other Miniſters at Liberty, after they had ſuffer'd ſome Severities in Priſon; but Mr. Guthry, Miniſter of Sterling, when the King reſided there, was kept cloſe Priſoner, and was cited to anſwer for ſome Expreſſions in the Pulpit, which had offended the King and his Counſellors. He refus'd anſwering to any one but the Presbytery; he alſo proteſted for Remedy at Law againſt the King, for diſturbing him in the Exerciſe of his Miniſtry; at which his Majeſty was ſo irritated, that it was reſolv'd to make an Example of him, and ſtrike Terror into his Brethren. Mr. Guthry's Sufferings.

The Committee of Eſtates ſummon'd great Numbers of Perſons, who had been buſy in the late Times, to appear before them, and give Bail for their forth Coming, at the Opening of the Parliament. Many ſaw that the Intentions of this, was to fright them into a Compoſition, and alſo into a Concurrence with the Meaſures that were to be taken; ſo they comply'd and redeem'd themſelves by Preſents from farther Vexation, which Preſents fell moſtly into the Hands of Sir Archibald

A.D.1661 Archibald Primroſe and Sir John Fletcher. The Meaſures and Manners in Scotland cannot fail of being of a Piece with thoſe in England. The Earl of Middleton is ſent thither to open the Parliament, and ſee what Account Biſhop Burnet gives of him, "His Way of Living was not only "the moſt ſplendid the Nation had ever ſeen, "but was likewiſe the moſt ſcandalous; for Vices "of all Sorts were the open Practices of thoſe "about him. Drinking was the moſt notorious "of all, which was often continu'd thro' the "whole Night, till the next Morning, and many "Diſorders happening after thoſe irregular Heats, "the People, who had never before that time "ſeen any thing like it, came to look with an ill "Eye on every thing that was done by ſuch a "Set of lewd and vicious Men. This laid in all "Mens Minds a new Prejudice againſt Epiſco- "pacy." The Parliament, in the Tranſport that ſeiz'd them, after reading the King's Letter, paſs'd an Act, extending the King's Prerogative as far as Primroſe, who drew it, had Words to extend it. They paſs'd another Act, whereby all Leagues not made by the King's Authority, were declar'd illegal, which ſtriking at the very Root of the Covenant, extreamly troubled the Presbytery; for the Covenant was a League made with England 1643, which was thus condemn'd, and declar'd of no Force for the future. Mr. Macquair Miniſter of Glaſgow, was baniſh'd the Kingdom for proteſting againſt this Act. Another paſs'd by this Parliament was to reſcind all Parliaments held ſince the Year 1633, which tho' Epiſcopacy was not nam'd, imply'd, that it wou'd be re-eſtabliſh'd, becauſe it was ſuppreſs'd by Parliaments ſince that Time. The Earl of Crawford and Duke Hamilton argu'd much againſt this Bill, and it was ſo extravagant, the King himſelf did not like it: Upon which the Earl of Glencairne and Rothes were ſent to London, to give the King a full Account of that Proceeding and others; and with them went Sharp, who had been ſo zealous for the Presbytery, to preſs the ſpeedy ſetting up of Epiſcopacy, which Middleton and he perſwaded the King, that the Scots Nation waited for with great Impatience, tho' of all the Synods in Scotland, that of Aberdeen was the only Body, who made an Addreſs that look'd towards Epiſcopacy, and the forcing it upon theſe People, was the Occaſion of all the Tumults and Diſtractions, with which they were afflicted from the Reſtoration to the Revolution. It was a mad roaring Time, ſays my Lord of Sarum, and no Wonder it was ſo, when the Men of Affairs were almoſt perpetually Drunk.

Vicious Times.

Archbiſhop Sharp.

Marquis of Argyle.

We have mention'd the Marquis of Argyle's being ſeiz'd at London, when he came to compliment the King on his Return to Whitehall. He was impriſon'd in the Tower, and from thence ſent to Scotland, to be attainted by this Parliament, before whom he was accus'd of High Treaſon. The chief Articles were, joining with thoſe who were for delivering up the late King to the Engliſh Army, and concurring with Cromwell, who had oblig'd the whole Scots Nation to concur with him, by Perſwaſion or Power. Then the King's Advocate put in the Military Executions done by his Forces in the late Wars, and ſome other Particulars, which made him accountable for the Blood that had been ſpilt in Defence of his Vaſſals and Country, againſt the Maſſacres and Devaſtations of the Macdonalds and other Popiſh Rebels, who came from Ireland on Purpoſe to waſte and deſtroy his Territory. The Lord Argyle was a Man of excellent Senſe, and a Genius ſuperior to a hundred of the Glencairnes and Middletons, his implacable Enemies and Proſecutors; and it was an excellent Defence he made, had not the Times been fallen into the laſt Degeneracy with reſpect to Virtue and Juſtice: He ſaid, "He did not think himſelf bound "to anſwer what was done before the Year 1651, "all Things being then bury'd in the Act of Ob- "livion paſs'd by the preſent King, whom he "crown'd in Scotland: That he was at London, "when moſt of the Barbarities his Men were "charg'd with, were committed; nor did it ap- "pear that he gave any Orders about them, that "it was well known great Outrages had been "committed by the Mackdonals, and he believ'd "his People, when they had the better of them, "had taken cruel Revenges, which was to be "imputed to the Heat of the Time, and the "Temper of the People, who had been much "provok'd by the Burning of his whole Coun- "try, and by much Blood that was ſhed. As "to his complying with the Uſurpation, he had "ſtood out till the Nation was quite conquer'd, "and in that Caſe, it was the receiv'd Opinion "both of Divines and Lawyers, that Men might "lawfully ſubmit to Uſurpers, when forc'd to it "by an inevitable Neceſſity. It was an Epidemi- "cal Sin, and his Circumſtances were ſuch, that "more than a bare Compliance was requir'd of "him. What he did that way, was only to pre- "ſerve himſelf and his Family, and was not "done on deſign to oppoſe the King's Intereſt, "nor did he ſuffer by any thing he did. As to "Cromwell, he ſaid, What cou'd he think of "that Matter, after a Man ſo eminent in the Law "as his Majeſty's Advocate Sir John Fletcher had "taken the Engagement." At which that merce- "nary Wretch was ſo enflam'd, that he call'd the Marquis of Argyle Impudent Villain, and was not ſo much as chid for that barbarous Treatment. The Marquis gravely reply'd, I have learn'd in my Affliction to bear Reproaches, but if the Parliament ſee no Cauſe to condemn me, I am leſs concern'd at the King's Advocate's railing. The Earl of Middleton, who thirſted after the Blood of the Marquis, ſunk an Order from the King to have the whole Proceedings in Parliament againſt him tranſmitted to London, and made a vehement Speech, intimating, that the Lord Argyle was concern'd in the Death of the King. But Gilmore, Preſident of the Seſſion, who had been a zealous Royaliſt, anſwer'd him thirteen or fourteen Times, and with ſuch Strength of Reaſon, that notwithſtanding the Parliament was enough prejudic'd againſt the Marquis, they acquitted him of that Charge by a great Majority, at which the Lord Argyle expreſs'd ſo much Joy, that he ſeem'd little concern'd at any thing which cou'd happen to him after that. His Defence was ſo good, that it ſtagger'd many Members of the Scots Parliament, till ſome Letters from the Marquis of Argyle, to the perfidious Monk, were produc'd. Read what the Biſhop of Salisbury writes of that baſe Man, and then judge whether my Language is not worthy of him, "While it was very doubtful how it wou'd have "gone, Monk by an inexcuſable Baſeneſs, had "ſearch'd among his Letters, and found ſome "that were written by Argyle to himſelf, that "were hearty and zealous on their Side, the Side "that the falſe and ungrateful Monk was en- "gag'd in, that of the Common-wealth and "Cromwel. Theſe he ſent down to Scotland, "and after they were read in Parliament, it cou'd "not be pretended that his Compliance was "feign'd or extorted from him. Every body "blam'd Monk for ſending theſe down: The "Treaſon may be lov'd, but the Traitor is always "hated. Since it was a betraying the Confidence "they liv'd in, they were ſent by an Expreſs, "and came to the Earl of Middleton after the

Monk's wicked Treachery.

A.D.1661 " Parliament was engag'd in the Debate, ſo he " order'd the Letters to be read, which alſo was " much blam'd, as contrary to the Forms of Ju- " ſtice, ſince Probation was clos'd on both Sides." Upon reading of theſe Letters, the Marquis's Friends went out, finding there was no room left to pretend that his Compliance was forc'd. It was very generous of the Marquis of Montroſs, he went out too, and refuſs'd to Vote, owning He had too much Reſentment to judge in that Matter. Upon this he was ſoon condemn'd, though there appears not any more Reaſon for it after the Letters came than before, unleſs they wou'd make every one anſwerable who had comply'd with the Common-wealth and Cromwel. A Man may be forc'd to comply with a thing which he wou'd not have done without Force, and yet after his Compliance, he may innocently enough expreſs his Satisfaction in the Force that was put upon him; for that Expreſſion may be feign'd to encreaſe, as his Compliance might have been to preſerve his Intereſt. When he was condemn'd, 'twas deſign'd to execute him after the manner of Montroſs's Execution, but it was carry'd that he ſhou'd be Beheaded, and he ſuffer'd May the 27th, with all the Compoſure of a Chriſtian Hero. Echard, that has prais'd and flatter'd ſo many worthleſs Characters, cannot part with this without an infamous Reflection; He ſubmitted his Head to the Block, upon which Head the Blood of ſeveral lay heavy. He ſpoke highly in Juſtification of the Covenant, calling it the Cauſe and Work of God, and expreſs'd his Apprehenſion of ſad Times to follow, which might have been juſtly apprehended by Perſons of much leſs Foreſight than the Marquis of Argyle had, in whoſe Murder the Archdeacon ſeems to take great Delight.

Mr. Guthry the Miniſter hang'd.

Mr. Guthry, the Miniſter, was accus'd of Acceding to the Remonſtrance when the King was in Scotland, and for a Book he had printed with the Title of the Cauſes of God's Wrath upon the Nation; in which the treating with the King, the tendring him the Covenant, and the admitting him to the Exerciſe of the Government, were aggravated as Acts of Apoſtacy. The reading of this Accuſation only is ſufficient to let us into the Iſſue of this Trial, eſpecially when the Reader is told that Mr. Guthry had excommunicated the Earl of Middleton ſome Years before for his Enormities; and the People who approv'd not of Guthry's Warmth, deteſted Middleton's appearing in the Proſecution. The Miniſter was ſoon condemn'd to be hang'd, notwithſtanding a very ſteddy Oppoſition made by the Lord Tweedale to the Sentence, in which are ſome Words, as if the Proſecution had flow'd from the King's Reſentment of his Behaviour to himſelf. Biſhop Burnet, who ſaw him ſuffer, tells us he was ſo far from expreſſing any Fear, that he rather expreſs'd a Contempt of Death. He ſpoke an Hour upon the Ladder with the Compoſedneſs of a Man who was delivering a Sermon rather than his laſt Words; he juſtify'd all he had done, and exhorted all People to adhere to the COVENANT, which he magnify'd highly.

One Govan was Executed at the ſame Time, for deſerting to Cromwel's Army twelve Years before. Macclud of Aſſin, who had betray'd Montroſs, was let go without any Cenſure. The Biſhop gives us the Reaſon of it; He ſtruck up to a high pitch of Vice and Impiety, and gave great Entertainments in Priſon, which notwithſtanding the Baſeneſs of the Man and his Crimes, begot him many Friends. The Laird of Wariſtoun being abſent, was attainted. The Laird Swintoun, who was turn'd Quaker, ſo mov'd his Judges by the new Meekneſs of his Spirit, that they recommended him to the King for Mercy; the rather, becauſe Middleton hated Lauderdale, who had a Grant of Swintoun's Eſtate. For after what we have read, and ſhall read of theſe Men, both as to Spirituals and Temporals, one cannot imagine they do one Act of Generoſity out of a generous Principle, or one juſt Act for the ſake of Juſtice. A.D.1661

We have mention'd another perfidious Paraſite, Sharp, who was the Presbytery's Agent, and ſent on their chief Errands by them to Holland and London, where he is now betraying their Cauſe and Covenant, and earneſtly ſolliciting the King to ſet up Epiſcopacy in Scotland: The Earl of Lauderdale oppos'd it, telling the King that Sharp miſrepreſented the Diſpoſition of the Scots Nation. Sharp alledg'd the general Bent was for Epiſcopacy. Lauderdale affirm'd that thoſe who ſeem'd zealous for it, ran into it to gain Favour only. However, Sharp being back'd by Middleton, the King ſuffer'd them to ſet aſide the Preſbytery, though, ſays Biſhop Burnet, with a viſible Reluctancy. His Majeſty, ſays he, remember'd when he was among them, that the Scots had an Averſion to an Hierarchy. The Earl of Clarendon and the Duke of Ormond ſupported Middleton and Sharp, the Earl of Crawford was of the ſame Opinion with Lauderdale; but the latter declaring againſt it only as 'twas unſeaſonable, and Duke Hamilton, and Sir Robert Murray making the ſame Declaration, Zeal got the better of Diſcretion, and a Letter being ſent from the King to Scotland about it, the Earls of Middleton and Glencairne took Care to have ſuch an Anſwer return'd by the Privy-Council there, as wou'd effectually confound Presbytery. Accordingly, upon receipt of it, Perſons were thought of to fill the Scotiſh Sees. Sydſerfe, the old Biſhop of Galloway, was living, and tranſlated to Orkney. Sharp was order'd to find out Perſons to be made Biſhops, and, according to Biſhop Burnet, the Choice was generally very bad. Sharp's Treachery.

Fairfoul, who was made Biſhop of Glaſgow, was an inſinuating crafty Man, a better Phyſician than a Divine, his Life was ſcarce free from Scandal, and he was eminent in nothing that belong'd to his own Function; he had not only ſworn the Covenant, but had perſuaded others to ſwear it. Soon after his Conſecration, ſays the Biſhop, his Parts ſo ſunk that he became almoſt a Changeling. Hamilton, who was made Biſhop of Galloway, had been wont when he gave the Sacrament to excommunicate all that were not true to the Covenant. Sharp was promoted to the Archbiſhoprick of St. Andrews, and proteſted he ſubmitted to that Poſt, on Deſign to moderate Matters, and to cover ſome good Men from a Storm. Biſhop Burnet adds, So deeply did he ſtill diſſemble. Of Dr. Leighton, who was another of the new Biſhops, the Biſhop of Sarum gives the moſt Seraphick Character that one can meet with; among other things he ſays of him, " That having talk'd of ſome Points of Popery " with the freedom of an abſtracted and ſpecu- " lative Man, the Papiſts had ſome Hopes of " him; yet he expreſs'd another Senſe of the " Matter when he came to ſee it was really in- " tended to be brought in among us." Which being one of the main Points intended to be prov'd by this Hiſtory, I hope the Evidence of ſo divine a Perſon as Archbiſhop Leighton, for ſo he became, is ſufficient in that Article. Sharp, as well as Leighton, had never had Epiſcopal Ordination; ſo before he was conſecrated, he was privately ordain'd Prieſt and Deacon; which was perform'd in Weſtminſter-Abbey by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and two other Engliſh Biſhops; and to uſe Biſhop Burnet's Words, " He who had " the Archb. Sharp's Perfidy. K. Charles for Popery.

A.D.1661 " the greateſt Hand in it, proceeded with ſo
" much Diſſimulation, and the reſt of the Order
" were ſo mean and ſo ſelfiſh, and the Earl of Middleton's Wickedneſs. " Middleton, with the other Secular Men who " conducted it, were ſo openly impious and viti-
" ous, that it did caſt a Reproach upon every " thing relating to Religion, to ſee it manag'd
" by ſuch Inſtruments." All the Steps that were made afterwards were of a Piece with this melancholy Beginning, as may be ſeen in almoſt every Inſtance of Eccleſiaſtical Matters from the Reſtoration, till the Church of Scotland was reſtor'd after the Revolution.

When we return to England, we ſhall find a parcel of mad Men got together in London with an extravagant Imagination that they ſhou'd be able to overturn the Government by fighting Two againſt Ten Thouſand. There is ſo much Abuſe of Scripture in the Accounts of this Inſurrection, written by ſome of our Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians, that I dare not repeat it. The Chief of this Enthuſiaſtical Rabble was one Venner, who had been a noiſy crazy Fifth Monarchy Man in Cromwel's Time. If Oliver had ſent him and his Followers to Bedlam, he had done an Act of Charity. Theſe Fellows had certain Scriptural Phraſes in their Mouths, which they repeated, as Oliver's Porter us'd to do in the ſame Hoſpital, King Jeſus, Powers of the Earth, Kings in Chains, Nobles in Fetters, One chace a Thouſand, Poſſeſs the Gate, Hiſſing and Curſing, Gideon, Daniel, and the Revelations, Captivity captive. Theſe, as you will find it in Echard, were all ſhot out of a Conventicle like ſo many Granadoes out of a Mortar-piece; and Sir Richard Browne, the prudent and vigilant Lord Mayor, detach'd a Body of Militia to put an end to the War. Venner, the Wine-Cooper, beſides the Army of Words abovemention'd, had forty or fifty Fellows with him as much in their Wits as he was; theſe routed the Lord Mayor's Troops, but were afterwards routed themſelves, and their Garriſon taken, as Echard has it. It was an Alehouſe near Cripplegate, and Col. Cox took an effectual Way to reduce it. He ſurrounded the Houſe, and order'd it to be until'd at the top, by which Means his Soldiers cou'd fire down upon the Garriſon, who were poſted in the Garret. At the ſame Time another Party of the Colonel's Soldiers mounted the Stairs, broke down the Door, and enter'd the Garret. Six of the Rebels were kill'd before, another refuſing Quarter was knock'd down, and then ſhot with a Musket. The reſt of the Garriſon were taken Priſoners, as were Venner, Hodgkins, Gowler, Allen, Pym, Aſhton, Prichard, Fall, Hopkins, Wells, and others, of whom about ſixteen were hang'd at Tyburn. The Archdeacon and another Reverend Hiſtorian, and other ſuch Hiſtory Writers, do make the moſt of this Grand Rebellion, on purpoſe to blacken the Nonconformiſts, as if they had encourag'd it, and were conſpiring to do the like. Therefore it is ſaid, Venner held a Conventicle, Venner ſally'd from a Meeting-houſe, Venner was hang'd over-againſt his Meeting-houſe, Venner's Plot juſtify'd the Proclamation, prohibiting unlawful Meetings under Pretence of Religious Worſhip! Now it begins; the Felicities of the Times are bloſſoming, and the Reverend Hiſtorians rejoice in the Hopes of a rich Harveſt.

The Happineſſes of this Reign.

About a Month after, February the 14th, the Army was disbanded on Tower-Hill, Monk's Regiment of Foot and Life-Guard of Horſe only excepted.

Coronation.

On the 23d of April, being St. George's Day, the King was Crown'd in Weſtminſter-Abbey, having, as Mr. Archdeacon obſerves, paſs'd from the Tower to Weſtminſter through four Triumphal Arches, Emblems of his Majeſty's Triumphs; for a Deſcription of which, he refers his Reader, as I do mine, to that ingenious Poet Mr. John Ogilby. A.D.1661 Creations.

The Splendor of this Solemnity was very glittering and coſtly, and to prepare for it there were ſeveral Promotions and Creations, as Knights of the Garter, and Knights of the Bath; Arthur, Lord Capel, was created Earl of Eſſex, Thomas, Lord Brudenel, Earl of Cardigan, Charles Howard, Earl of Carliſle, Sir John Greenvile, Earl of Bath, Sir George Booth, Lord Delamere, Sir Horatio Townſend, Baron of Lyn-Regis, John Crew, Eſq; Lord Crew of Stene. Mr. Echard glorying in the Weather on this Occaſion, informs us, that 'twas obſerv'd that the Day of Cavalcade, and the Day of Coronation, were the only Days clear from Rain; and others made an Obſervation, that as ſoon as the Solemnity was over, there fell ſuch a Storm of Thunder, Lightning, and Rain, as had never been known at that Time of the Year; which, according to the Archdeacon himſelf, Several were ready to look upon as ominous, and portending ſome future Calamities.

Savoy Conference.

The firſt Incident which follows in his Hiſtory is the Savoy Conference, which the King iſſu'd his Commiſſion for, to reconcile the Church of England and the Presbyterians, a very laudable Deſign! ſays the Reverend Hiſtorian, and no Doubt it wou'd have been very laudable, had there indeed been any ſuch Deſign. By the King's Declaration Matters relating to Church Government were ſo regulated, that it wou'd certainly have produc'd a Comprehenſion at leaſt, if not a Union. The Affair of the Liturgy was more difficult, becauſe thoſe who were for it, and thoſe who were againſt it, were inflexible on that Head. It was by the Declaration to be receiv'd, reform'd, and new Forms drawn up in Scripture Phraſe, ſuited to the ſeveral Parts of Worſhip, that Men might uſe which of them they pleaſe. In order to this the Conference at the Savoy was appointed, and Dr. Reynolds and Mr. Calamy were authoriz'd to name the Perſons on the Presbyterian Side to confer with the Biſhops and Doctors on the other Side. The King's Commiſſion to both Sides is dated the 25th of March, and the Perſons nominated were,

The

A.D.1661 The Misnomer of Mr. William Drake for Dr. Roger Drake was the Reason that the latter did not assist at the Conference. The Commissioners met at the Bishop of London's Lodgings in the Savoy, where the Bishop of London told the Ministers, That they, and not the Bishops, had been Seekers of the Conference, being desirous of Alterations in the Liturgy, and that therefore there was nothing to be done till they had brought in all they had to say against it in Writing, and all the additional Forms and Alterations which they desir'd. The Ministers mov'd for an amicable Conference, according to the King's Commission. One of the Reasons they gave for it is worth observing, That their Cause and Conference might not be misrepresented and publish'd as the Conference at Hampton-Court was. But the Bishops insisted on the Bishop of London's Proposal, and Ministers were nam'd to draw up their Exceptions, which was done by Dr. Reynolds, Dr. Wallis, Mr. Calamy, Mr. Newcomen, Dr. Bates, Mr. Clarke, Dr. Jacomb, who in their Paper propos'd, " That the " Prayers and Materials of the Liturgy might " have nothing in them doubtful or question'd " amongst pious, learned and Orthodox Persons." This Echard calls an impracticable Proposal, and thereby confesses that the Prayers and Materials of the Liturgy have Things in them doubtful, and question'd by pious, learned and Orthodox Persons, which I think is sufficient Argument for it's Amendment, and to say it is impracticable argues his Ignorance in his Function; for let the Prayers be in Scripture Phrase taken out of plain, clear Passages, and let the other Materials be the same, and then they cannot be question'd, without questioning the Truth of the Gospel and the Authority of the Bible.

The Presbyterian Ministers desir'd, That as the Reformers at first so compos'd the Liturgy, as might be most likely to win upon the Papists, and draw them into their Church Communion, by varying as little, as well they cou'd, from the Romish Forms before in Use; so it might, according to the same Rule of Prudence, be then so compos'd as to gain upon the Judgment and Affection of all those who, in the Substantials of the Protestant Religion, are of the same Persuasion. This material Proposition is wholly omitted by the Compleat Historian, tho' it as much deserv'd to be taken notice of as the other. Dr. Calamy adds, I'll leave the Reader to guess at the Reason why that shou'd be pass'd by, when what went before and follows is particularly recited. This is more likely to have been a design'd than an accidental Thing.

The Ministers desir'd, That the Repetitions and Responsals of Clerk and People might be omitted. Any one may observe, that those Repetitions and Responsals are us'd by Men, Women and Children as Things said by Rote without Devotion or Attention, and to say that is the Abuse of it, and not the Use of it, is meer Sophistry, for those that say it know, if they know any thing, that the Imposition of Things, which are so liable to Abuse, is contrary to the Purity and Piety of God's Worship, and if not directly sinful, inexpedient and dangerous. Add to this, that the insisting upon such Things meerly for the Vexation of Consciences truly scrupulous, is little consistent with Christian Charity, or indeed with Right Reason or Humane Prudence.

They desir'd, That the Petitions of the Litany might be cast into one solemn Prayer to be offer'd up by the Minister, and not so as that the Precatory Part shou'd be utter'd only by the People. In which Request, if they had not been entirely indulg'd, it might have been well enough, had other of their Proposals been comply'd with.

They desir'd, That there be nothing in the Liturgy countenancing the Observation of Lent as a religious Fast. A.D.1661 And truly, considering what Work is made of that Fast, that it is very often the less Meat the more Drink, the less Flesh the more Fish, it wou'd not have been yielding too much to have own'd that there was more Temperance than Religion in the Observance of it.

They desir'd, That the religious Observation of Saints Days and Vigils be omitted.

That the Liturgy be not so impos'd as to exclude the Gift of Prayer in any Part of Publick Service.

That the new Translation of the Scriptures be us'd instead of the old Version, which in many Places is justly exceptionable.

That Apocryphal Lessons might be omitted. Instead of which more such Lessons were soon after added, particularly the Story of Bel and the Dragon, which is not much more sacred than that of St. George and the Dragon, considering that Saint has the Honour to be the Patron of England; and instead of lessening the Credit of the Saints Days and Vigils, two new Holidays were added, St. Barnabas and the Conversion of St. Paul. It can't be said we know not what Spirit these Men are of.

They desir'd, That the Minister be not requir'd to rehearse the Liturgy at the Communion Table; and why it shou'd be read there, where not half the Church can hear it, rather than in the Middle of the Church where all may hear it, is worthy the Wisdom of a Convocation to explain.

They desir'd, That the Word Priest and Curate throughout the Book be turn'd into that of Minister, and Sunday into Lord's Day; which indeed does not seem to be of the last Importance, and if desir'd or deny'd, must be done as much out of Pique and Prejudice, as Reason and Conscience.

That obsolete Words be chang'd into Words generally receiv'd and better understood. The next Desire is something like a Petition to make use of Sense instead of Nonsense; That no Portions of the Old Testament, or of the Book of the Acts, be stil'd or read as Epistles; or in other Words, that Leviticus and Deuteronomy might not be put on the same Epistolary Foot with the Colossians and Philippians.

That the Phrase which supposes all in Communion to be regenerated, while due Care is not taken about the Exercise of Discipline, might be reform'd. Does that need any Hesitation! Is the Act of Communion the Act of Regeneration! And is it absolutely necessary to affirm, when to hope is the most that Christians are allow'd in, That the Petitions in the Prayers might have a more orderly Connection, and the Forms be of a more competent Length, which wou'd be more to Edification, and tend to gain the Reverence of the People! Every one feels this as soon as he thinks of it; but the Truth of it is, it is thought of so little, that 'tis no Wonder there are so few edify'd.

That the Liturgy might be so contriv'd as to comprehend the Sum of all such Sins as are ordinarily to be confest in Prayer by the Church, and of such Petitions and Thanksgivings as are ordinarily to be put up to God, and the Catechism annex'd, might summarily comprehend all such Doctrines as are necessary to be heard, and those explicitly sat down.

That Ceremonies not necessary in themselves, and that had for above 100 Years caus'd sad Divisions, and been the Fountain of manifold Evils, might not be impos'd by the Liturgy, but left at Liberty.

A.D.1661 The Unreaſonableneſs of theſe Requeſts is much amplify'd by the Archdeacon and the Compleat Hiſtorian, at which doubtleſs the Reader will be ſurpriz'd, when he finds nothing in them but what is reaſonable and modeſt; for tho' a Man may with good Conſcience conform to Laws, and reckon his Obedience due to the Conſtitution, yet he may with good Conſcience and good Reaſon deſire many Things to be alter'd which give Offence to ſcrupulous Minds; and others neither need it nor deſire it; for their Conſciences being without Scruple, they are ready to conform to every thing that ſhall be requir'd of them, eſpecially if it touches their Intereſt, their Eaſe, their Vanity, or their Paſſions. It had been well if the Biſhops and Doctors had weigh'd the following Argument at the Cloſe of the Paper the Miniſters gave them, containing their Objections.

" We know much hath been ſpoken and writ" ten by way of Apology, in Anſwer to many " Things that have been objected, but yet the " Doubts and Scruples of tender Conſciences ſtill
" continue, or rather are encreas'd. We do hum-
" bly conceive it therefore a Work worthy of thoſe
" Wonders of Salvation which God hath wrought
" for his Majeſty now on the Throne, and for the " whole Kingdom, and exceedingly becoming
" the Miniſters of the Goſpel of Peace, with all
" holy Moderation and Tenderneſs, to endea-
" vour the Removal of every thing out of the " Worſhip of God, which may juſtly offend or
" grieve the Spirits of ſober and godly Perſons:
" The Things themſelves that are deſir'd to be
" remov'd not being of the Foundation of Reli" gion, nor the Eſſentials of publick Worſhip,
" nor the Removal of them any way tending to
" the Prejudice of the Church or State; there" fore their Continuance and rigorous Impoſition
" can no ways be able to countervail the laying
" aſide of ſo many pious and able Miniſters, and
" the inconceivable Grief that will ariſe to Mul-
" titudes of his Majeſty's moſt loyal and peace-
" able Subjects, who upon all Occaſions are rea" dy to ſerve him with their Prayers, Eſtates and " Lives. For the preventing of which Evils we " humbly pray that theſe Particulars may be " taken into Conſideration.

Objections to the Liturgy. After the general Propoſals a great many particular Exceptions were added, as to the ſeveral Parts of the Liturgy and Paſſages in it, of which theſe that follow are the chief.

" As to the Morning and Evening Prayer, they " excepted againſt that Part of the Rubrick,
" which ſpeaking of Ornaments to be us'd in the " Church, left Room to bring back the Cope,
" Albe and other Veſtments." The Temper the Biſhops and Doctors were in did not promiſe much Reformation; for Dr. Bates urging to Dr. Gunning, that on the ſame Reaſons they ſo impos'd the Croſs and Surplice, they might bring in Holy Water and Lights, and abundance of ſuch Ceremonies, which we have caſt out. Gunning reply'd, And ſo I think we ought to have more, and not fewer, if we do well.

What do theſe Men think of the Salvation of Souls? Are all the Ceremonies impos'd by the Church; are all the Ceremonies that Invention can contrive worth the ſaving of one Soul? And if one Soul only ſubmitting to a Ceremony in divine Service, contrary to the Conviction of his Conſcience, did in ſo doing hazard his eternal Salvation, can one think upon ſuch an Impoſition without Trembling! I put the Caſe, and doubt it is not in the Power of Sophiſtry to ſalve it.

The Miniſters excepted againſt " the leaving
" out the Doxology at the End of the Lord's " Prayer, the frequent Repetition of Glory be to
" the Father, &c. the Singing of the Leſſons,
" Epiſtles and Goſpels; againſt the uſing of the " Benedicite rather than a Pſalm or Scripture
" Hymn. In the Litany they excepted againſt
" the Expreſſion Deadly Sin, and mov'd it might " be chang'd into Heinous or Grievous; againſt
" the Expreſſion Sudden Death, which they
" mov'd to be chang'd into Dying ſuddenly and
" unpreparedly; againſt Praying for all that tra- " vel by Land and Water, &c. ſo univerſally,
" which they deſir'd to have put indefinitely,
" thoſe that travel, &c. In the Collect for
" Chriſtmas-Day they excepted againſt the Word
" This Day us'd two or three Days ſucceſſively.
" Wou'd one think there ſhou'd be Occaſion given
" for ſuch an Exception?

Concerning the Adminiſtration of the Sacrament, " they excepted againſt the Time aſſign'd
" for giving Notice to the Miniſter, as too ſhort,
" when confin'd to over Night, or in the Morn-
" ing, as to Perſons who deſign'd to communi" cate. They excepted againſt the Rubrick about
" the Miniſter's keeping unqualify'd Perſons from
" the Lord's Table, as not ſufficiently clear and
" ſtrong." But that Exception is now aggravated by forcing People to come to it, or to ſtarve. There is not an Officer in the Army or Fleet, in the Cuſtoms, in the Exciſe, in Corporations and Pariſhes, but is oblig'd to communicate, or beſides paying 500 Pounds to loſe his Office, and be incapacited for holding any as long as he lives. The Miniſter is ſo far from being at Liberty to refuſe him the Sacrament, that he loads himſelf, if he does, with the Damages the Perſon refus'd ſuſtains by it. This is not all yet; have I not known Perſons living in open Adultery admitted? Did I ever know a Perſon refus'd but out of Pique by the Vicar or Curate; I put it to every Reader, whether theſe Things are not within his Knowledge? It was ſaid for Anſwer to this Exception, that the Miniſter might refuſe a Communicant, if he thought him unfit: That cannot be ſaid now in Caſe of the Teſt. But what can be more notorious than that there is no where due Care taken about Fitneſs or Unfitneſs? And if to adminiſter the Sacrament to Perſons known to live in continu'd Acts of Lewdneſs, Diſhoneſty and Debauchery be a Sin, how neceſſary is it to remove all Temptations to it, and eſpecially all Injunctions? Salvation is not to be forc'd upon People. Is it out of Care of their Souls that they are compell'd to communicate, fit or not fit, and to eat ſpiritual, or to want temporal Bread? What is it the Conſtitution wou'd provide againſt? The Worſhip of God in Society is hop'd to be a Means of obtaining his Grace. Is that Society ſupported by Coercion and Compulſion, or by Perſwaſion and Conviction? Or is there any ſeparate Intereſt which ſubſiſts only by the Being of that Society? If it is ſeparate, it cannot be ſacred, and then it has nothing to do with the moſt Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Sacramental Teſt.

It will eaſily be imagin'd why I am ſo myſterious, and it is not the greateſt Felicity we enjoy, that there's Occaſion for ſo much Myſtery.

There were many other Exceptions, as may be ſeen at large in Mr. Baxter's Life, and in Dr. Calamy's Abridgment; but not one of them being amended, I ſhall not enlarge upon them here. The Example of the Hampton-Court Conference might have convinc'd the Miniſters, that the Savoy Conference wou'd only expoſe them to the Inſults of their Enemies under Protection of the Court.

Mr. Baxter drew up a new Liturgy, conſiſting entirely of Scriptural Phraſes. The Presbyterians are now beginning to pay for their bring-

A.D.1661 ing in the King without Conditions. A Year ago not one of theſe Doctors wou'd have look'd them in the Face, but with Meekneſs and Humility; but the Air and the Tone are now alter'd, and are as lordly as the Title conferr'd upon them.

There were many Miniſters at the Conference, beſides thoſe in the Commiſſion, as on the Biſhops Side Dr. Pory, Dr. Crowther, &c. and with the Miniſters, as Auditors, were Mr. Miles, Mr. Tillotſon, &c.

Baxter's Life. p. 337.

After the Exceptions in general and in particular, had been ſometime in a Paper Controverſy, Biſhop Reynolds and the Miniſters, earneſtly preſs'd for a Verbal Conference, and with much ado obtain'd it. Dr. Pearſon, Dr. Gunning, Dr. Sparrow, were appointed for the Biſhops; Dr. Bates, Dr. Jacomb, Mr. Baxter, for the Miniſters.

When Mr. Baxter began to prove ſome of the Epiſcopal Impoſitions ſinful, Dr. Coſens took Offence at the Word, ſaying, He condemn'd all the Churches of Chriſt, who all of them impos'd ſome Geſture or other. Mr. Baxter reply'd, Many of the Reform'd Churches impos'd none. He might have ſaid, not one of the Reform'd Churches impos'd one Ceremony, as eſſential to Church Membership, or under any Penalty, much leſs under Pain of Loſs of Living, and Cure of Souls. Biſhop Lany told Mr. Baxter, that juſtify'd Perſons have no Sin, and are no Sinners, becauſe Juſtification taketh it away. Mr. Baxter anſwer'd, Juſtification takes not away the Sin but the Guilt, which ſo confounded Lany, that according to Mr. B—— he unſaid all again, and knew not what he ſaid. Dr. Morley continually interrupting Mr. Baxter, Dr. Bates cry'd, Pray, my Lord, give him Leave to ſpeak, but he cou'd not obtain it, without frequent Interruption. Dr. Crowther, tho' no Commiſſioner, took up Mr. Baxter about Juſtification; and as Mr. Baxter himſelf writes, with a little Nonſenſe, wou'd have prov'd that Iſrael never ſinn'd, 'till Jereboam made the Iſraelites to ſin.

When the Biſhops were deſir'd to have Compaſſion on the Souls of their Brethren, and that they wou'd not unneceſſarily caſt ſo many out of the Miniſtry, Biſhop Coſens ſaid, What do you threaten us with Numbers? for my Part, I think the King wou'd do well to make you name them all; upon which Mr. B—— reflects thus, A charitable and wiſe Motion! to name all the Thouſands of England, who diſſented from them, and who had ſworn the Covenant, and whom they wou'd afterwards perſecute. In the Preface to the Miniſters Exceptions againſt the Liturgy, it was ſaid, That after twenty Years Calamity, they wou'd not yield to that, which ſeveral Biſhops voluntarily offer'd twenty Years before, meaning the Corrections of the Liturgy, offer'd by thoſe moſt pious, learned and reverend Fathers of our Church, Archbiſhop Uſher, Archbiſhop Williams, Biſhop Moreton, Biſhop Prideaux, Biſhop Hall, and many others. Aſſoon as that Paſſage was read, cry'd Biſhop Coſens, What do you threaten us with a new War! It is Time for the King to look to you. It is time to find out ſome Plot to take away their Liberties and Lives. I muſt confeſs, I cannot pity the Presbyterians as much as they ſeem to deſerve, when I ſee them bully'd and browbeaten: I think preſently it was owing to themſelves. How came thoſe Biſhops and Doctors to have Power over them? Cou'd any thing better be expected from ſuch Men? Were they ever charg'd with Moderation, Humanity, or any of thoſe divine Virtues that tend to Union and Peace? Mr. Baxter proceeds, " I had no Shelter " from the Fury of Biſhop Coſens, but to name " Dr. Hammond, and tell him, I remember'd Dr.

Biſhop Coſens's Arrogance.

" Hammond inſiſted on the ſame Argument, A.D.1661 " That twenty Years Calamity ſhou'd have taught " Men more Charity, and brought them to Re- " pentance and Brotherly Love; and that it is " an Aggravation of their Sin to be unmerciful, " after ſo long and heavy Warnings from God's " Hand. Coſens reply'd, If that's your Meaning, " all is well, and theſe were the moſt logical " Diſcourſes of that Biſhop." Mr. Baxter entreating them not to caſt out ſo many of their Brethren thro' the Nation, Dr. Sterne, Biſhop of Carliſle, turn'd to the reſt of the Biſhops and cry'd, He will not ſay a Kingdom, leſt he own a King. Mr. Baxter anſwer'd, Half the Charity which became ſo grave a Biſhop, might have ſuffic'd to have help'd him to a better Expoſition of the Word Nation, from the Mouths of ſuch, who have ſo lately taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and ſworn Fidelity to the King, as his Chaplains, and had ſuch Teſtimonies from him as we have had, and that our Caſe was ſad. If we cou'd plead by the King's Commiſſion for Accommodation, upon no better Terms than to be noted as Traitors, every time we us'd ſuch a Word as the NATION, which all Monarchical Writers uſe.

Mr. Baxter charges Biſhop Morley with giving him perpetual Interruption when he offer'd to ſpeak, and the Audience with laughing always in the wrong Place. He informs us, that a learned Doctor who was not in the Commiſſion, deſir'd to be heard, as if he had ſome unanſwerable Argument; and it was a Queſtion, Whether all that ſcrupled Conformity, whom we pleaded for, were not ſuch as had been againſt the King? Here are the Fruits of the Act of Oblivion. All that pleaded for them had been for the King, or he had never been poſſeſs'd of the Kingdom. Mr. Baxter reply'd, " The King himſelf has gi- " ven ſufficient Teſtimony of many of them; " there is not one Miniſter of twenty whom we " plead for, that had ever any thing to do in the " Wars againſt the King, moſt of them being then " Boys at School or in the Univerſity. He added, " Men on both Sides had been againſt the King." Upon which Biſhop Morley ask'd, Whether Mr. Baxter ever knew a conformable Man for the Parliament? Yes, my Lord, ſaid he, many a one. Name one, cry'd ſome of the Doctors. I will, reply'd Mr. Baxter, not only a Man, but a Biſhop, nay an Archbiſhop, the Archbiſhop of York, Dr. Williams, ſome time Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, who was Commander of the Forces for the Parliament in Wales. At which the Biſhops and Doctors were all ſilent.

He told them, if they caſt out all the Nonconformiſts, there wou'd not be tolerable Miniſters enough to ſupply the Congregations. Biſhop Morley anſwer'd, So it was in the late Times, and that ſome Places had no Miniſters at all through all thoſe Times of Uſurpation, naming Ailesbury, which he knew to have had none upon his own Knowledge. Enquiry being made into it, Aileſbury was found to have been well ſupply'd, either by a ſettled Incumbent, or the Preacher of the Garriſon. You ſhou'd remember, ſays Morley, how you did by us, and that you talk'd not then as you do now. Mr. Baxter reply'd, " I am confident " there is no Man here preſent, that had ever a " Hand in ſilencing any of you. For my own " part, I have been in Judgment for caſting out " utterly Inſufficient and notoriouſly Scandalous " indifferently, of what Opinion or Side ſoever; " but I have publickly written againſt the ſilen- " cing or diſplacing any worthy Man for being " againſt the Parliament: And if it had been " otherwiſe, you ſhou'd take warning by others

" Faults,

A.D.1661 " Faults, and not imitate them, and do Evil be-
" cauſe Cromwel did ſo.

Upon this Dr. Walton, Biſhop of Cheſter, ſaid, Indeed, Mr. Baxter did write againſt the caſting of us out: But, Mr. Baxter, did you not ſay, If our Churches had no more than bare Liberty, as others had, without the Compulſion of the Sword, that none but Drunkards wou'd join in them? He anſwer'd, No, my Lord, I did not; I only ſaid, that as they had been order'd, if they had but equal Liberty for Voluntiers, they wou'd be like Ale-houſes, where many honeſt Men may come; but the Number of worſe Comers is ſo great, as makes it diſhonourable.

The Biſhops and Doctors ſpoke of the Antiquity of Liturgies; upon which Mr. Baxter entreated them to let true Antiquity be imitated by them, and deſir'd any of them to prove that ever any Prince did impoſe one Form of Prayer or Liturgy for Uniformity on all the Churches in his Dominions, or even upon one Province or Country under him; or even that any Council, Synod, or Patriarchs, or Metropolitans, did impoſe one Liturgy upon all the Biſhops and Churches under them? He prov'd to them, not only from the Inſtances of Baſil and the Church of Neocesarea, but from others, that every Biſhop then choſe what Forms he pleas'd for his own Church. Baxter adds, They cou'd deny nothing of all this; but Antiquity is nothing to them when it makes againſt them.

As the Conference was drawing to an End, Biſhop Coſens produces a Paper as from a conſiderable Perſon, containing a Method to end the Controverſy. The main Thing in it was a Motion to put the Complainers upon diſtinguiſhing between the Things they charg'd as ſinful, and thoſe which they oppos'd as inexpedient only. The three Diſputants on the Miniſters Side were deſir'd to draw up an Anſwer to it againſt the next Morning, and they did ſo, and deliver'd it, but it was in their own Names only. Eight Things they in this their Reply charg'd as flatly ſinful, and contrary to the Word of God: That no Miniſter be admitted to baptize without the preſcrib'd Uſe of the tranſient Image of the Croſs. That no Miniſter be admitted to read or pray, or exercise the other Parts of his Office, that dares not wear a Surplice. That none be admitted to Communion in the Lord's Supper, that dare not receive it kneeling; and that all Miniſters be enjoin'd to deny it to ſuch. That Miniſters be forc'd to pronounce all baptiz'd Infants Regenerate by the Holy Ghoſt, whether Children of Chriſtians or not. That Miniſters be forc'd to deliver the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt unto the Unfit, both in Health and Sickneſs, and that with Perſonal Application, putting it into their Hands; and that ſuch are forc'd to receive it, though againſt their Wills, in the Conſcience of their Impenitency. That Miniſters be forc'd to abſolve the Unfit, and that in abſolute Expreſſions. That they are forc'd to give Thanks for all whom they bury, as Brethren whom God hath deliver'd and taken to himſelf. And that none may be a Preacher that dare not ſubſcribe that there is nothing in the Common Prayer Book, the Book of Ordination, and the Nine and Thirty Articles, that is contrary to the Word of God. And the Miniſters undertook to prove as much.

Things charg'd as ſinful.

Compleat Hiſtory falſe.

The Compleat Hiſtorian, whom Echard copies here, declares that the Fifth and Sixth Things mention'd were poſitively falſe in the Suppoſition of them. Dr. Calamy animadverts upon it thus:
" He muſt allow it to appear ſtrange to others,
" that he ſhou'd ſay this with ſo much Aſſu-
" rance, when he himſelf cannot be inſenſible
" that there has all along been a Party in the

The greateſt Part of the Diſputation on the Miniſters Side fell to Mr. Baxter's Share, and to Dr. Gunning's on the Side of the Biſhops. I can't tell what Writer Echard took his Libel upon Mr. Baxter from, but it is of a Piece with the reſt of his Authorities. " Baxter was either per- Echard vi- ones ſeldom confuted. Biſhop Burnet ſpeaks of him as a Man of great Piety, and one of the moſt learned Men of the Age. And even A. Wood, that bitter Enemy to Moderation and Charity, calls him the Learned and moſt Eminent Nonconformiſt. Of his Opponent, Dr. Gunning, the Bp. Gun-

Reaſoning. He was unwearied ly active to very little Purpoſe, much ſet on reconciling us to Popery: He had no ſound Judgment nor Prudence in Affairs. The Queſtion theſe two learned Men diſputed, was, Whether it was lawful to determine the certain Uſe of Things indifferent in the Worſhip of God? The Biſhops held the Miniſters to this Point, and preſs'd them to ſhew that any of the Things impos'd were of themſelves unlawful. The Miniſters affirm'd, that other Circumſtances might make it become unlawful to ſettle a peremptory Law about Things indifferent, which they apply'd particularly to kneeling at the Sacrament; and ſtood upon it, that a Law which excluded all that did not kneel from the Sacrament, was unlawful, as a Limitation in the Point of Communion put on the Laws of Chriſt, which ought to be the only Condition of thoſe who had a Right to it. The Queſtion is thus ſtated by Biſhop Burnet, and I chooſe to make uſe of him

A.D.1661 him in this Caſe on Account of his Function, which cou'd not biaſs him on the Presbyterian Side. Here it is agreed by both Sides, and by all Sides, that Chriſtians under the beſt Preparation their Hearts are capable of, by uſing the proper Means towards it, have a Right to the holy Communion, which the Scripture no where directs to be received kneeling; but on the contrary, leaves the Poſture the ſame as at common Suppers in the Eaſtern Countries in thoſe Days. If therefore, ſince the Idolatry of the Hoſt has been ſet up, and Communicants have been taught that the Bread is God himſelf, to whom they are to pay Adoration by kneeling at the Sacrament, which Heylin, and hundreds of other ſuch Divines have aſſerted, ſcrupulous Perſons cannot think otherwiſe of it than of Idolatry, and are refus'd the Communion becauſe they cannot kneel. Whether the Miniſter, whoſe Duty it is to give them the Sacrament, ſins in refuſing to do it, let all the World judge, who make Scripture the Rule of their Faith. To ſay Human Laws may ſpeak where the Scriptures are ſilent in Things of the laſt Concernment, as is Eternal Life or Death, is to ſay what I cannot ſpare Words to explain; and to ſuppoſe that a poor unhappy Soul has been oblig'd to kneel at the Lord's Supper, when he was afraid he was kneeling to an Idol only in the Material Bread, is in that Suppoſition to make him commit Sin when he was in the higheſt Act of Devotion. Add to all this, that ſince kneeling is no where directed in Holy Writ, and ſince, on the contrary, another Poſture was practiſed at the firſt Inſtitution of the Sacrament, and ſince alſo it is a Ceremony at beſt not eſſential to the well receiving of the Communion, What Neceſſity was there for the Biſhops and Doctors to turn two or three thouſand Miniſters out of their Livings, and their Wives and Children out of their Houſes, purely to ſatisfy the Obſtinacy, Perverſeneſs, Peeviſhneſs, and Reſentment of Sheldon, Morley, Gunning, Stern, and other ſuch Biſhops and Doctors? Whoever have a Mind to ſee this Queſtion in various Logical Shapes, are referr'd to the Diſpute at large in Baxter's Folio Life, where they will ſoon diſcover on which Side the Scale turn'd.

Kneeling at the Sacrament objected againſt.

Mr. Baxter informs us, that after the Queſtion was left to the before-mention'd Diſputants, Three of a Side, moſt of the Biſhops and Doctors ſtill attended to fill up the Number of Voices, and the Divines on the Side of the Miniſters abſented themſelves, as thinking their Three Diſputants were only to manage it; but at the Cloſe of all, the Biſhops and Doctors, Dr. Sanderſon in the Chair, ſhorten'd the Matter by putting it to the Vote, Whether Dr. Gunning or Mr. Baxter had the better? And it paſs'd, as every body will imagine, though Mr. Baxter's Reply to Gunning was heard; and after it was heard, Biſhop Coſens put it to the Vote, All you that think Dr. Gunning hath prov'd his Argument, ſay I; upon which they all cry'd I, I. Mr. Baxter ſaid very truly, I believe we knew your Opinion before; and if this is the Uſe you make of our Conceſſion, that you ſhou'd all be preſent while our Miniſters are all abſent, it ſhews that your Cauſe is very needy of Defence, when your own Voices muſt go inſtead of Argument: But if you will go on upon ſuch lamentable Reaſoning, truly in my Opinion it may be call'd ſo, as you have us'd, to caſt out the faithful Paſtors, and the People, and divide the Church, and afflict your Brethren, the Day is coming when your own Votes ſhall not abſolve you.

They then fell upon the Point of Charity and Compaſſion to the Church, and the fruſtrating the King's Commiſſion, and the Kingdom's Hopes, by the Biſhops and Doctors, at the ſame time that they profeſs'd their Deſires of the Church's Peace; for which Mr. Baxter told them, You will not abate the ſmalleſt Thing, nor correct your groſſeſt Error. A.D.1661

The very Choice of the Biſhops and Doctors in the King's Commiſſion was enough to ſhew what the End of the Conference wou'd be. They were the moſt obſtinate, perverſe, peeviſh and revengeful that made any Figure in the Church. Had ſuch Men been employ'd as Biſhop Griffith, Biſhop Lucy, Biſhop Nicholſon, Biſhop Lloyd, Dr. Whichcot, Dr. Cudworth, Biſhop Wilkins, Dr. More, Dr. Worthington, alike diſtinguiſh'd for Piety and Virtue, Learning and Abilities, the Peace of the Church had been eſtabliſh'd inſtead of the Eſtabliſhment procur'd by the Savoy Biſhops and Doctors, of whom Biſhop Burnet writes thus, "What the Biſhops did with their "great Fines was a Pattern to all the lower Dignitaries, who generally took more Care of themſelves than of the Church. The Men of Service were loaded with many Livings, and "many Dignities. With this great Acceſſion of "Wealth, there broke in upon the Church a "great deal of Luxury and high Living on the "Pretence of Hoſpitality: And with this Overſet of Wealth and Pomp that came on Men in "the Decline of their Age, they who were now "growing into old Age, became lazy and negligent in all the true Concerns of the Church." Bp. Burnet's Account of the Biſhops and Clergy. By every Step taken in the Savoy Conference it is obvious, that thoſe Biſhops and Doctors thought the true Concerns of the Church were, Pomp, and Wealth, Power, Superſtition and Ceremony: That Load of Livings was in all Probability the main Argument for turning ſo many pious, laborious, learned and able Miniſters out of their Churches. I was told by a Friend of Mr. Baxter, that a Day or two before this Conference broke up, a Divine happen'd to offer it to one of the Biſhops as a Thing reaſonable, that thoſe elder Presbyterian Miniſters who were outed of their Benefices, and thoſe younger who never had any, ſhou'd be provided for as Livings dropp'd. The Biſhop took no Notice of it; and whatever the Miniſters ſaid afterwards was worſe receiv'd even than what they had ſaid before. But Biſhop Burnet diſcovers ſomething that reflects more on the approaching Statute of Uniformity, than any Diſſenter can ſay; for every one knows it was the darling Act of the Lord Clarendon, and that all the Clergy of England, and all the Members of our two famous Univerſities, have ador'd him for his Care of the Church; whereas my Lord of Sarum aſſures us, his real Care was of them. The Lord Clarendon was heavily charg'd, as having ſhewn that he was more the Biſhops Friend than the Church's.

The King did not ſeem very fond of having a Convocation, which was the only Thing wanting to fill up Echard's Meaſure of Felicity. He has got a rich Parliament choſen, which, without a religious Synod, wou'd have been like a Cripple without Crutches; and therefore he not only tells us, that ſome body was put upon writing to the King about it, but who that ſome body was too; it was the valuable Heylin, who wrote a Letter to a great Man to ſpeak to his Majeſty for a Convocation; and upon this ſingle Letter, of a Man of no more Value than Peter Heylin, was that Convocation call'd, who gave their Sanction to the Bartholomew Bill. Dr. Calamy writes thus of it; "During this Interval the Convocation was "choſen, which was politickly deferr'd till now. "Had it been call'd when the King came in, the "inferior Clergy wou'd have been againſt the "Dioceſan; but afterwards many Hundreds were turn'd Convocation.

A.D.1661 " turn'd out, that the old ſequeſter'd Miniſters, " how meanly ſoever qualify'd, might come in. " Thoſe Miniſters who had been ordain'd ſince " Epiſcopacy was laid aſide twenty Years before, " were deny'd Voices in the Election; by which " Means, and a great many Miniſter's Scruples, " who thought it unlawful to have any thing to " do in chooſing ſuch a kind of Aſſembly, the " Dioceſan Party wholly prevail'd.

Second Long Parliament.

But before we proceed any farther in Church Hiſtory, we muſt return to that of the State. The new Parliament met the 8th of May, and are recommended to us by Echard as Perſons to be preferr'd before all others, on account of their prodigious Fortunes. The Vanity and Falſhood of his Recommendation appear in the ſame Paragraph of his Hiſtory. They were call'd, and indeed they were, the Penſionary Parliament, as I ſhall prove preſently; yet becauſe they paſs'd that ſevere Act, which upon one Day flung 2000 Miniſters out of their Pulpits, they are to want no good Characters which he can beſtow upon them. I confeſs, I am aſham'd to mention ſo poor and worthleſs a Hiſtory ſo often; but, as I have elſewhere obſerv'd, he and his Brother Hiſtorians have impos'd upon me the Office of a Scavenger, and I am forc'd to remove the Dirt and Filth as I go along, to make Way for my Reader. " This Parliament muſt in the main " be ſaid to have been excellently well and wiſe- " ly choſen, for the good and peaceable Eſta- " bliſhment of the publick Affairs. The Houſe " of Commons, conſiſting of the moſt conſidera- " ble and eminent Perſons for Birth, Eſtates, " Knowledge and Experience, that were to be " found in the three Kingdoms;" which is ſo falſe, as well as impertinent, that it cou'd not be; for he brags, that the Nine in Ten of them were for the Laudæan Church, and not one in a thouſand of ſuch Men had been in any Place to learn Experience for almoſt twenty Years paſt.

p. 340. Echard wrong.

As to their Eſtates and other fine Qualities, we ſhall ſee what they were in the State Tracts. " The Friends to Arbitrary Power in the Begin- " ning of King Charles the Second's Reign pur- " ſu'd the ſame Deſign as in Strafford and Laud's " Time, of ſubverting our Conſtitution, but took " Methods quite different from what thoſe be- " fore us'd to effect it. They remembred the ill " Succeſs of Projects and Monopolies, and Pre- " tences of Prerogative to ſupply the Govern- " ment with Money. They had found out and " felt by Experience, that a Free Parliament " cou'd not be aw'd, and that the People in the " Intervals of Parliament wou'd not be forc'd to " pay Taxes which were not legally impos'd; " yet there was an abſolute Neceſſity for the " Crown to be ſupply'd, without which it cou'd " not ſubſiſt. 'Twas therefore reſolv'd to attempt " that by Fraud which they cou'd not compaſs " by Force, and in order thereunto they took the " Advantage of the preſent Temper of the Peo- " ple, whoſe Heads were turn'd with the Arch- " deacon's Felicities as well as his own, which " carry'd them, without conſidering what Con- " ſequences might be to every thing that was " agreeable to the Court." What follows relates to Echard's Birth, Eſtates, &c. " They recom- " mended ſuch to be choſen Members of the " Houſe of Commons, whoſe Fortunes had been " moſt impair'd in the late Wars, and whoſe " Dependance on the Court might encline to a " Compliance with whatever ſhou'd be demand- " ed of them. And theſe good-natur'd loyal " Gentlemen repeal'd the Act of the 16th of " Car. I. for Triennial Parliaments, while a few " worthy Patriots labour'd to defend it. Places " and Penſions were liberally beſtow'd on all that " cou'd be brought over to the Court; and 'tis A.D.1661 " no Wonder they gave ſuch prodigious Sums " of Money out of the poor People's Purſes, when " a great Part was again refunded into their own." This was ſufficiently prov'd by Mr. Bertie and Sir Stephen Fox; tho', when Sir John Hotham, Sir Robert Peyton, and Sir John Holman were ſent by the Houſe of Commons to fetch Sir Stephen's Books, the Lord Chanberlain came to them and ſaid, No Books or Papers concerning the King ſhou'd be carry'd away. Theſe Diſcoveries happen'd ſome Time after, but are proper to be mention'd here, to ſhew thro' what pure Hearts and clean Hands ſo many religious and uſeful Bills paſs'd. We ſhall enter into the Detail of the Penſioners when we come to that Period where the Penſions were ſettled, which they cou'd not be at firſt; and ſome of theſe Members were Recruiters: However, they were choſen with as much Wiſdom and Foreſight as thoſe who ſate at the Opening of the Seſſion, when the King made a Speech to both Houſes of Parliament; a Word of which Mr. Archdeacon tells us is not to be ſpar'd, I ſuppoſe for the ſake of this Paſſage, I do value my ſelf much upon keeping my Word, upon making good whatſoever I do promiſe my Subjects. How the King kept his Word. His Majeſty had three Times ſworn the Solemn League and Covenant. He had promis'd to eſtabliſh it in England, and ſome Days after this Speech he paſs'd an Act to aboliſh it. The Lord Chancellor Hyde's Speech comes next, wherein he puts their Blood in a Ferment, by alarming them with Rumours of Plots, after he has ſet out the Tumult under Venner, as one of the moſt formidable Rebellions which had been ever known. Sham Plot. " A little Time after the Diſſolution of " the laſt Parliament, while his Majeſty accom- " pany'd his Mother to the Sea-ſide, the moſt " deſperate and prodigious Rebellion broke out " in this City that had been heard of in any Age, " and by the Multitude of intercepted Letters " from and to all the Counties of England, in " which the Time was ſet down wherein the " Work of the Lord was to be done by the deſpe- " rate Carriage of the Traitors themſelves, and " the bragging of their Friends, it might be con- " cluded the Combination reach'd very far, and " if the indefatigable Induſtry of the Lord Mayor " had not prevented it, probably the Fury wou'd " not have been extinguiſh'd before this famous " City, or a great Part of it, had been burnt to " Aſhes, and therefore it became their Wiſdoms " to provide new Remedies for new Diſeaſes." We ſhall ſee by and by what ſort of State Phyſicians this wonderful Senate were, and how much this poor Nation was indebted to their Wiſdoms.

Sir Edw. Turner, the Speech-making Speaker.

The Houſe of Commons, as the Court directed, choſe Sir Edward Turner the Duke of York's Sollicitor for their Speaker, and he was led to the Chair by Sir Charles Berkley and Sir Heneage Finch. As ſoon as he was confirm'd by the King, he made a long Speech, and continu'd to make long Speeches upon all Occaſions, 'till he was remov'd to the Upper Houſe, where he ſate as an Aſſiſtant, being ſometime after made Lord Chief Baron. He is for his much ſpeaking, term'd the Speech-Making Speaker. Echard preſerves them all, as if they were as precious as the Orations of Cicero, but I know

A.D.1661 the Merit of them too well to follow his Example. After he had done, the Lord Chancellor made another Speech, wherein he painted the Monſter Common-wealth in proper Colours, and told them the King was going to Worceſter, to thank God for his Deliverance there, and to thank God even in thoſe Cottages and Barns wherein he was ſhelter'd, and feaſted, and preſerv'd; and in the Cloſe of that Progreſs, he hopes he ſhall find his Queen in his Arms: For the Parliament had receiv'd the Propoſal of his Marriage with the Infanta of Portugal as joyfully as if his Majeſty's Wedding-day was to have been their own. Then they order'd the ſolemn League and Covenant, and ſome Acts made in the late Times, to be burnt. They order'd a Bill to be brought in to enable his Majeſty to ſend out Commiſſions to receive the free and voluntary Contributions of his People, which the King paſs'd the 8th of July, with another Bill to confirm the Oblivion Act, and the Speaker made a Speech when he preſented thoſe Acts to him, in which he has a pretty Expreſſion concerning the latter, That we might with ſome Chearfulneſs ſee your Majeſty's Face, we have brought our Brother Benjamin with us; I mean your Act of Oblivion, &c. Then the King made a Speech too about that Bill. They proceeded ſtill with great Vigour, and confiſcated the Eſtates of thoſe of the King's Judges who were dead, and of the Lord Mounſon, Sir Henry Mildmay, Sir James Harrington, and Mr. John Phelps. The two firſt were degraded of their Titles, and together with Mr. Robert Wallop, order'd to be drawn upon Sledges from the Tower to Tyburn, with Ropes about their Necks, which, ſays Echard, was very ſolemnly done on the 30th of January following. About three Weeks after there were more Bills ready, and when the Speaker preſented them, he had another Speech ready in Praiſe of thoſe Acts. The firſt was to puniſh ſeverely any Man who ſhou'd call the King Papiſt, tho' the Lord Clarendon, who promoted this Bill, knew he was a Papiſt. The next Bill was to reſtore the Biſhops to their Seats in the Houſe of Lords. The next, an Act to diſcourage Petitions and Addreſſes, A Declaration that the ſole Right of the Militia be in the King. An Act concerning the Navy, for confiſcating the above-mention'd Eſtates; and becauſe the King had told them, he intended to take a Journey, the Speaker ſaid, they had prepar'd a Bill for providing neceſſary Carriages in all his Royal Progreſſes and Removals. His Majeſty anſwer'd this Speech alſo with another, and then the Parliament adjourn'd to the 20th of November.

Convocation. The Convocation met on the 8th of May, Dr. Thomas Pierce preach'd a Latin Sermon, and Dr. Henry Fearne was choſen Prolocutor, which Buſineſs in our Times takes up the Seſſion, but this Convocation did ſomething more: For beſides the two new Holidays, for which we are indebted to them, and the Leſſon of Bell and the Dragon, for which they muſt alſo have Credit, Biſhop Burnet informs us, "Two new Offices "were drawn for two new Days, the Thirtieth "of January, call'd King Charles the Martyr, "and the Twenty-ninth of May, the Day of the "King's Birth and Return. Sancroft drew for "theſe ſome Offices of a very high Strain, yet "others of a more moderate Strain were pre-"ferr'd to them: But he coming to be advanc'd "to the See of Canterbury, got his Offices to be "publiſh'd by the King's Anthority, in a Time "when ſo high a Stile as was in them, did "not ſound well in the Nation. Such Care was "taken in the Choice and Return of the Mem-"bers of the Convocation, that every thing went "among them as was directed by Sheldon and "Morley: We ſhall ſee what Directions they gave "them in the Sequel. A.D.1661

This good Parliament rais'd the Diſcontents of the late Anarchy, according to Echard, and therefore new Deſigns are thought of. Counſels were held, Meetings were held, and to prove the Truth of theſe dangerous Conſpiracies, Mr. Praiſe God Barebone was taken. It is almoſt a Miracle that he eſcap'd hanging, conſidering his Chriſtian Name. Alderman Ireton was alſo apprehended, very likely on Account of his Sirname. Mr. Samuel Moyer, Col. Salmon, Major Haines, and Major Wildman, were apprehended to keep the Plot in Countenance; the latter of an Underſtanding ſo ſuperior to all his Proſecutors, that their Inſolence raiſes ones Indignation more than Compaſſion. Echard cannot help ſaying, The Presbyterian Defenders alledge, that theſe were only ſham Plots, to help forwards the ſevere Act of Uniformity, but others believe the Contrary. Who are his others? L'Eſtrange, Nalſon, Heylin, Warwick, Dugdale, himſelf, &c. Mr. Locke, at whoſe Names all this Fry vaniſh, as Goblins at the Appearance of Light, believ'd and affirm'd they were ſham Plots, and that the People were ſham'd by it into the ſeveral Acts. New Plots.

"As the Top Stone of the whole Fabrick, a "Pretence ſhall be taken from the Jealouſies "they themſelves have rais'd by their ſham Plots. Mr. Des Maiz Col. p. 59.

"Pray mind what Lord Clarendon ſaid about "the Conſpiracies, &c. And a real Neceſſity from "the Smallneſs of their Party Thirty to one," according to L'Eſtrange, "to encreaſe and keep "up a ſtanding Army, and then in due Time "the Cavalier and Church Men will be made "greater Tools, but as errant Slaves as the reſt "of the Nation. In Order to this, the firſt Step "was made in the Act for regulating Corpora-"tions," of which we ſhall be oblig'd to ſay more in a Paragraph or two. For we muſt now follow the Earl of Sandwich, and his Vice-Admiral, Sir John Lawſon, into the Mediterranean.

On July the 29th they came before Algier, and ſent a Meſſage to the Dey to come out and confirm the League with England. Echard makes a meer Dog-Turk of him: But though he did come out, the Archdeacon tells us he behav'd ſo inſolently, that the Engliſh Admiral ſtood into the Harbour, but he ſteer'd out again, and found it adviſable to bring off his Fleet, which had ſuffer'd extreamly in their Sails and Rigging. So he left Sir John Lawſon to block them up if he cou'd, croſs'd over to Spain, croſs'd back again to Tangier, and thence back again to Liſbon. Mr. Archdeacon tells us, the Common-wealth's Men, out of meer Envy and Sedition, remark'd that the Naval Power of England wou'd never be ſo formidable under Monarchy as it had been under a Common-wealth: If he had reported their Remark right, it wou'd have had another Turn: That the Naval Power wou'd never be ſo formidable under King Charles or his Brother, as it had been under the Common-wealth. For when he wrote his Hiſtory, Monarchy had been near thirty Years in the Hands of Princes equally great and good, under whom the Naval Power of England was the moſt formidable in the World. The Fleet.

On the Day appointed the Parliament met, and his Majeſty made a very long Speech, the Cloſe of which was very promiſing, That the Happineſs of his Government wou'd perſuade our Neighbours to that Eſteem and Value they had formerly had for us. If it had been added, from the death of Queen Elizabeth to the firſt Long Parliament, it had been very true and juſt. Parliament.

They began with freſh Proceedings againſt the Regicides, and a Bill was brought in to hang up all

A.D. 1661 all that were reſerv'd for Parliamentary Execution; but it dropp'd, and ſo they were all ſent to ſeveral remote Priſons. Echard tells us, It had like to have gone hard with them on Account of More Plots. new Plots, Chancellor Hyde telling the Parliament, There had been a real Deſign forming ever ſince March laſt, he proceeded, ſays Echard, to name the Conſpirators, with the Manner and Baxt. Life, Vol. I. p. Contrivance of their barbarous Deſigns. I go no farther in the Fiction, but refer to Dr. Calamy. 181. Theſe Plots were the general Cry. This all the Pamphlets printed at this Time ran upon, and it was in this very Seſſion that the Bill of UNIFORMITY paſs'd the Houſe. And that the general Cry occaſion'd by theſe Sham Plots much promoted it, will eaſily be judged by any one who will be at the Pains to peruſe Capt. Yarrington's p. 177. Narrative. Again, He who wou'd paſs a right Judgment concerning the Act of Uniformity, ought ſedately to conſider the ſcandalous Arts that were us'd to obtain it, and the bitter Fruits and Conſequences which it produc'd. Again, Many worthy Miniſters and ſober Gentlemen were impriſon'd in divers Counties throughout England. Sham Plots. Sir John Packington carry'd on the Sham ſo far in Worceſter, that Mr. Ambroſe Sparry, a learned pious Divine, Mr. Oſland, Mr. Moore, Mr. Brian, three other pious learned Divines, were ſeiz'd and kept by Soldiers rais'd by the Cathedral Men at Worceſter, and commanded by a Paritor. They had double Pay, and were call'd the Clergy Band: This was while the Act was paſſing. Theſe Infernal Wretches put a poor old Man to the Torture for asking one of the Soldiers how Mr. Oſland the Miniſter did, and ſaying he was no Traitor, when one of the Clergy p. 179. Band call'd him ſo. They put lighted Matches A Man put to Torture on that ſcore. between his Fingers, and burnt them to the very Bone, to extort a Confeſſion from him that there was a Plot. Captain Yarrington was ſeiz'd by a Troop of Horſe, and impriſon'd at Worceſter, as were ſeventy or eighty ſober Men for this Diabolical Forgery, which Mr. Yarrington at length found out by Acknowledgment of the Perſon employed by Packington to carry a Packet of Capt. Yarrington's ſham Plot. counterfeit Letters to one Cole of Martley, in which were ſeveral directed to Capt. Yarrington, and other honeſt Gentlemen, containing treaſonable Matters. Theſe Letters were pretended to be intercepted by the Fellow who was hir'd to deliver them, and carry'd to Sir John Packington; upon which ſo many religious innocent Perſons were thrown into Goals, and Packington intended to have had them proſecuted to the utmoſt. The Fellow confeſſing the Villany, Mrs. Yarrington gives Notice of it to her Husband in his Confinement, who immediately enters Actions againſt thoſe that had impriſon'd him. Being at laſt diſcharg'd, he went to London, and prevail'd with the Earl of Briſtol, though a Papiſt, to acquaint the King how the Lord Clarendon, and his other Miniſters, impos'd Sham Plots upon him. Upon which the Deputy-Lieutenants of Worceſterſhire, and other Shires where the like Plots had been forg'd, were order'd to appear at the Council Board. They endeavour'd to clear themſelves, and deſir'd Time to conſult their Friends in the Country. But afterwards Sir J. W. one of them, arreſted Capt. Yarrington for High Treaſon, and he was releas'd upon the Earl of Briſtol's procuring the King's Privy-Seal: For Papiſts, who were Men of Honour, deteſted theſe ſcandalous Arts, and the more, for that they were to carry on Deſigns which the Miniſtry durſt not otherwiſe own. Yarrington, a Man of Spirit, proſecutes his Proſecutors; but within ſix Months, Perſons were ſuborn'd to ſwear againſt him, That he had ſpoken Treaſonable Words againſt the King and Government. For this he was Try'd at Worceſter Aſſizes before Judge Twiſden, and upon a full Hearing, was preſently acquitted by the Jury. One of the Witneſſes confeſs'd he had five Pounds given him for being an Evidence. What Coin muſt that be which comes out of ſuch a Mint? I ſhall not touch upon the Sham Plots in Oxfordſhire, Staffordſhire, and Herefordſhire, they being all as falſe and deteſtable as this in Worceſterſhire. But they were tim'd like Things which are made on Purpoſe, and the Miniſtry put theſe Words into the King's Mouth. I am ſorry to find that the general Temper and Affection of the Nation are not ſo well compoſs'd as I hop'd they wou'd have been after ſo ſignal Bleſſings of God Almighty upon us all, and after ſo great Indulgence and Condeſcenſions from me towards all Intereſts, there are many wicked Inſtruments ſtill as active as ever, who labour Night and Day to diſturb the Publick Peace, and to make People jealous of each other. It may be worthy your Care and Vigilance to provide proper Remedies for Diſeaſes of that kind; and if you find new Diſeaſes, you muſt find new Remedies, &c. Hyde knew all this was a Farce of his own Invention, or of the Invention of his Inſtruments. However, when the Houſe of Commons after the Speech came to their Debates, up ſtands Sir John Packington, and with open Mouth cries out, a horrid Plot in his County of Worceſter, a horrid, dangerous Presbyterian Plot, When the Uniformity Act paſt. for which many Plotters were already in Goal! Then ſuch wiſe and well-choſen Members gave the like Information for the Counties of Oxford, Hereford, and Stafford; and ſays Dr. Calamy, as above, 'Twas in this very Seſſion that this Bill of Uniformity paſs'd. I think it will not bear Reflection.

A.D. 1661 King's Speech about the ſham Plots.

On the 29th of December the King paſs'd ſome Bills; An Act for granting 1,260,000 Pounds; An Act about Leaſes for the Dutchy of Cornwal; An Act for regulating Corporations. Echard boaſts, that the laſt prov'd a ſevere Mortification and Blow to one Party, which conſiſted of every wiſe and honeſt Man in England. For he who contributes to the enſlaving of his Country, muſt be as much a Fool as a Villain. This wretched Hiſtory Writer, after all the Miſchiefs which that odious Act was the Cauſe of, glories in it as a Triumph of the Faction which triumph'd over the Spiritual and Temporal Liberties of England. I'm pleas'd that Mr. Locke has touch'd upon this Enormity; for though he is inſenſible of Shame upon my Animadverſion, he will be ſtill more the Scorn of Mankind if he ſtands out againſt Mr. Locke's. In order to make one as Errant Slaves as the other, " The firſt " Step they took was the Act for regulating Cor- " porations; wiſely beginning, that in thoſe leſ- " ſer Governments, which Echard calls Neſts of p. 60. " Sedition, which they meant afterwards to in- " troduce upon the Government of the Nation, " and making them ſwear to a Declaration and " Belief of ſuch Propoſitions as they themſelves " afterwards, upon Debate, were enforc'd to al- " ter, and cou'd not juſtify in theſe Words." Letter to a Perſon of Quality.

I A. B. do declare and believe, that it is not lawful upon any Pretence whatſoever, to take Arms againſt the King; and that I do abhor that Traiterous Poſition of taking Arms by his Authority againſt his Perſon, or againſt thoſe that are commiſſion'd by him. A vile Oath impos'd.

All Perſons bearing any Office of Magiſtracy, Place of Truſt, or other Employment relating to the Government of any City, Corporation, Burrough, &c were order'd to take this Oath; by which, ſays Mr. Locke, many of the wealthieſt, worthieſt, and ſobereſt Men were thruſt out, and

A.D.1661 are ſtill kept out of the Magiſtracy. It was the ſame in Harley's Time, when the Schiſm Act, and Occaſional Act, both now happily defunct, remov'd wealthy, worthy, and ſober Men, to make room for the reverſe of them. We have liv'd to ſee the Makers of that ſlaviſh Oath acting againſt it; and cou'd any thing bind a Man to deſtroy his Country, the taking Arms againſt King James the Second wou'd have render'd almoſt all that did it forſworn. And if the Dread of it had hinder'd them, what wou'd the Conſtitution of England have been by this Time? I have not in all my Reading met with an Aſſembly of Men ſo blind to the Publick Intereſt, and ſo ready to run their Necks into a Collar. We have ſeen what laudable Care they have taken of the Bodies of Men, and we ſhall ſoon ſee what Care they will take of their Souls. If I had not already given the Reader a Liſt of ſome of the moſt remarkable ones among them, I wou'd here have inſerted the Names of all of them. But it wou'd have been pity that a great Number of Gentlemen, who though not a Majority, were yet a very conſiderable Party, Strugglers againſt this Corporation Act, and that other unrighteous Act that is to follow it, ſhou'd any where appear in after times with thoſe Names, that are a Diſhonour to Hiſtory.

1662. Queen of Bohemia's Death. Archdeacon Echard ends the laſt Year as I begin this, with the Death of that religious, ſuffering, and belov'd Princeſs, the Queen of Bohemia, his preſent Majeſty's Royal great Grandmother, Daughter of King James the Firſt. She dy'd on the 13th of February, and was bury'd in Weſtminſter-Abbey, in the ſame Vault with Prince Henry, her eldeſt Brother.

The Parliament had been adjourn'd to the 10th of January, and were farther alarm'd with Plots and Conſpiracies, according to Echard. I More ſham Plots. have obſerv'd, that the Continuance of theſe Plots was a ſad Piece of the Lord Chancellor's Policy: A ſorry thin Diſguiſe, which every one ſaw thro', but thoſe who wink'd their Eyes and wou'd not ſee. The Chancellor's Speech on this Occaſion wou'd be extreamly diverting, as all merry Things are, when ſaid with grave Faces, were it not for the dreadful Calamities which were the Effects of it. It is thus;

" There was found with Salmon, a Liſt of " 160 Officers of the late Army. It is further " diſcover'd, that there ſhou'd have been a Meeting at London about the 10th of December, " and that they intended about the End of Ja- " nuary, to have made ſure of Shrewsbury, Co- " ventry and Briſtol, and that they ſhou'd riſe " in ſeveral Parts at once, like Moles in Beds of " Aſparagus, that where they were prevalent, " they ſhou'd begin with Aſſaſſination, which " mov'd one of them to relate, That ſome of the " late King's Judges were entertain'd in France, " Holland and Germany," that many Arms were brought in Order to this Deſign. It is impoſſible to go thorough with it, and not be ſhock'd beyond Conception. Not a Word of it is credible, except it is where he ſays, The Duke of Albemarle has put two Troops into Shrewsbury, and as many into Coventry; what follows, is to let the Parliament ſee, that the immenſe Sums they laviſh'd away, had a good Effect; which two Troops, by the Way, had taken twenty Thieves. " Upon this Report, ſays the Archdeacon, the " Houſe reſolv'd to proceed againſt Sir Henry " Vane, Lieutenant General Lambert, Sir Har- " dreſs Waller, and with exemplary Simpli- " city he confeſſes," Upon this Report, they proceeded with greater Activity in the Uniformity Act; in which they had a Spur from the King himſelf in a new Speech, " Gentlemen, I " hear you are very zealous for the Church, and A.D.1662 " very ſollicitous, and even jealous, that there " is not Expedition enough us'd in that Affair. " I thank you for it, ſince I preſume it proceeds " from a good Root of Piety and Devotion." Such Words from ſuch a Prince! whoſe Vices wou'd have been a Scandal to the worſt Religion in the World, if there cou'd be a worſe than his own, that of Popery. " I know you will not take it " unkindly, if I tell you I am as zealous for the " Church of England as any of you can be, and " am enough acquainted with the Enemies of it " on all Sides, and have Prejudice to thoſe who " do not love it." He certainly does not mean the Papiſts, being a Papiſt himſelf, if any thing. " I am as much in love with the Book of Com- " mon-Prayer as you can wiſh: It is believ'd; " and have Prejudice enough to thoſe who do " not love it. I do as much deſire to ſee an " Uniformity, you may rely upon me in it. I " have tranſmitted the Book of Common-Prayer, " which has been preſented to me by the Convo- " cation, to the Houſe of Peers, with my Appro- " bation, that the Act of Uniformity may relate " to it, &c." Echard brags, that this Speech is not in Print; ſo I will rob him of no more of it.

Dr. Ferne, Prolocutor of the Convocation, being made Biſhop of Cheſter, Dr. Barwick ſucceeded him as Prolocutor. They determin'd that Uniformity Biſhops might ſit and judge in Caſes of Blood, Act. and added a Prayer to the Liturgy for the High Court of Parliament, wherein the King is ſtil'd our moſt religious King. Neither Echard, nor King the Compleat Hiſtorian, nor any one of that ſort Charles of Writers, obſerve the amazing Inconſiſtency ſtil'd a of that Term with the King's Life and Con- moſt reli- verſation, Biſhop Burnet has a juſt Obſervation gious King. upon it. A Collect was drawn for the Parliament, in which a new Epithet was added to the King's Title, that gave great Offence, and occaſion'd much Railery. He was ſtil'd our moſt religious King. It was not eaſy to give a proper Senſe to this, and to make it go well down, ſince whatever the Signification of Religious might be in the Latin Word, as importing the Sacredneſs of the King's Party; yet in the Engliſh Language, it bore a Signification that was no way applicable to the King; and thoſe who took great Liberty with him, have often ask'd him, what muſt all his People think, when they heard him pray'd for as their moſt religious King? Mr. Roger Coke takes this Notice of it; " The Parliament chim'd p. 120. " in with the Church, and by the Act of Uni- " formity enjoin'd, that every one who holds any " Eccleſiaſtical Promotion, ſhall publickly declare " before his Congregation, his unfeigned Aſſent " and Conſent to every thing contain'd and pre- " ſcrib'd in the Book, entitled the Book of Com- " mon-Prayer, &c. Put theſe together, I L. E. " do declare my unfeign'd Aſſent and Conſent, " that the King, Charles II. is my moſt religious " King; if he be ſo, how came you to know " it? and if you do not know it, how came you " ſo unfeignedly to aſſent and conſent, that he is " ſo? But tho' to get your Living, you tell the " Congregation ſo, when you do not know it, I " think it is dreadful for you to tell God Almighty " ſo. Was God well pleas'd with theſe Things, The Happi- " you ſhall ſoon ſee unjuſt Wars and diſhonoura- neſs of his " ble Peace: Such Judgments of Plague, Fire Reign. " and Invaſion into our Ports, as never before " were heard of.

While this ſame Conformity Act went on ſo ſwimingly, the Presbyterians had fair Words given to their Petitions and Addreſſes, nay a Promiſe of the Law's being diſpenc'd with, tho' it was made, and in the making of it, it met with much Oppoſition. For the Biſhops, inſtead of

A.D.1662 using any moderate, ſoftning Meaſures, had got the Act ſo worded by Keeling the Lawyer, that the Terms of Conformity were made harder than ever. Biſhop Sheldon told Dr. Allen, a Member of the Convocation, who propos'd ſoftning, moderate Meaſures, What will be done is reſolv'd upon before, or during the Savoy Conference, &c. Sober Gentlemen telling another Biſhop, It was Pity the Door was ſo ſtrait, that many pious Miniſters cou'd not have Admiſſion, he reply'd, It is no Pity at all; if we had thought ſo many of them wou'd have conform'd, we wou'd have made it ſtraiter, and the King himſelf was of the ſame Opinion.

Uniformity Act. It is reported, that notwithſtanding all the falſe Alarms of pretended Conſpiracies, and all other ſcandalous Arts for procuring this uncharitable Act, when it was put to the Vote whether it ſhou'd paſs or not, the Tale was wrong, it being thus, 186 Noes, 180 Yeas; tho' others with more Probability affirm the Tale to have been thus, 186 Yeas, 180 Noes, for the Numbers are the ſame in both Accounts. The very eminent Dr. Bates, as polite a Writer as his Friend Archbiſhop Tillotſon, ſpeaking of this Act in Mr. Baxter's Funeral Sermon, ſays, The old Clergy, from Wrath and Revenge, and the young Gentry, from their ſervile Compliance with the Court, were very active to carry it on and compleat it.

By this Act all Miniſters were to read and publickly declare unfeigned Aſſent and Conſent to all and every thing contain'd and preſcrib'd in and by the Book of Common-Prayer before the Feaſt of St. Bartholomew then enſuing; on which Feſtival, juſt 90 Years before, above 100,000 Proteſtants were maſſacred in France. All Incumbents and Schoolmaſters were oblig'd to ſwear the Corporation Oath, and to forſwear the Covenant which they had ſworn or not ſworn; for ſeveral of the Biſhops had taken that Oath, as Gauden, Ward, &c. The Author of the Hiſtory which is entituled Compleat, and is one of the moſt ridiculous Miſnomers one can meet with, tells us, It was found neceſſary for the Peace and Safety of the State, as well as for the Good and Glory of the Church, to compel religious Miniſters to atteſt before God and his Church, that King Charles II. was a moſt religious King to aſſent, conſent and ſubſcribe, 1. To the Doctrine of Real Baptiſmal Regeneration and certain Salvation. 2. To the Uſe of Godfathers and Godmothers. 3. To the Sign of the Croſs in Baptiſm. 4. To the Geſture of Kneeling at the Sacrament. 5. That Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons are three diſtinct Orders in the Church by Divine Appointment. To pronounce all ſav'd that are buried, except the Unbaptiz'd, Excommunicate or Self-Mutherers. To read in Divine Service the Stories of Judith and Baruch, Tobit and his Dog, Bel and the Dragon, under the Title of the Holy Scripture. To aſſent and conſent, and ſubſcribe to St. Athanaſius's Creed. To ſwear to the Canons, which to repeat is beyond my Patience, &c. All which Things, according to the Compleat Hiſtorian, was for the Peace of the State, and the Good and Glory of the Church. Tho' the Writer was an Eccleſiaſtical Perſon, I might have preſum'd to have ask'd, Was it for the Peace of the State to lay religious Hardſhips upon a Million of Conſciences? Was it for the Glory of the Church to lie under the Charge of Want of Charity and Humanity? But what does he, and what does Echard mean by the Glory of the Church? Has ſhe any thing to glory in but Piety, Purity, Conſtancy, and all Chriſtian Virtues, and all Chriſtian Graces? What has ſhe to do with any thing elſe? Has not her Lord and Maſter commanded her and her Sons to believe that his Kingdom is not of this World? Are we not ſo taught by every Leſſon in Holy Writ? And did not the Prelates, who promoted this deplorable Bill, prove, by every Action of their Lives, that their Kingdom was of this World? A.D.1662

Another ugly Circumſtance attending this Act was, that the Biſhops had it ſo contriv'd, that the Oath the Miniſters were to ſubſcribe to, and ſwear to, did not come out of the Preſs till a few Days before the 24th of Auguſt; ſo that of the 7000 Miniſters who kept their Livings, very few of them cou'd poſſibly have a Sight of the Book with it's Alterations, till after they had declar'd their Aſſent and Conſent; nay, ſome were ejected, to whom the Book was not brought till after Bartholomew-Day, particularly one Mr. B. by Sir Edward Lake. The Speaker, Turner, among other Nonſenſe, told the King in his Speech about this Bill, That their Forms of Prayer were decry'd as Superſtitious, Strange and Wonderful! and in lieu thereof was introduc'd nothing — Echard, for want of Judgment, or what is worſe, Sincerity, has borrow'd a Falſity from ſome ſuch authentick Writer as himſelf. It was undoubtedly the Faction and Sedition of the ſeveral Sects and Parties that work'd up the Wiſdom of the Nation, like Barm in a Fat of Wort, into this Expedient Awe and Reſtraint upon them; which is as falſe as it is baſe and fooliſh. I ſhall juſtify ſuch Language to ſuch Men upon ſuch Things in my Preface. The Faction and Sedition of the Presbyterians never appear'd but in the Times of the Common-Wealth, and the two Cromwels; and by that Sedition and Faction they brought in the King, who had thrice taken their Covenant; and the Biſhops, who by this Act rewarded them with Jails and Beggary. Dr. Calamy, *p.*259.

Now it was that the Word Schiſmatick was invented to be ſynonymous with Presbyterian; tho' with reſpect to the Presbyterians 'twas as wild as if they were call'd Charibbeans, or Canibals. Read the moſt worthy and celebrated Hales of Eaton, and let it ſtand as an eternal Reproof to all thoſe Vicars and Curates who ſound it aloud in their Pulpits, whether they do not, or do underſtand what the Word means.

" To load our publick Forms with the private Hales up-
" Fancies upon which we differ, is the moſt ſo- on Schiſm.
" vereign Way to perpetuate Schiſm to the World's " End. Prayer, Confeſſion, Thanſgiving, Read-

" Geſtures, of Imagery or Muſick, of Matter con" cerning the Dead, of many Sutterfluities which " creep into the Church under the Name of " Order and Decency." This excellent Man, the very learned, wiſe and pious Mr. Hales, was a Royaliſt and zealous Churchman. Obſerve what a Buſtle they make with thoſe Words Decency and Order! Take away them, and their Argument is left as naked, not as Innocence but as Indigence. The Reverend Mr. Hales proceeds,

" To charge Churches and Liturgies with things
" unneceſſary, was the firſt Beginning of all Su-
" perſtition; and when Scruple of Conſcience
" began to be made or pretended, then Schiſm
" began to break in. If the ſpecial Guides and " Fathers of the Church wou'd be a little ſparing
" of incumbring Churches with Superfluities, or " not over-rigid, either in reviving obſolete Cu-
" ſtoms, or impoſing new, there wou'd be far
" leſs Cauſe of Schiſm or Superſtition, and all
" the Inconveniencies were likely to enſue wou'd
" be but this; they ſhou'd in ſo doing yield a
" little to the Imbecillity of their Inferiors."

A Thing

A.D.1662 A Thing which St. Paul wou'd never have refus'd to do, but which every one of his pretended Succeſſors at the Savoy Conference did refuſe to do, and therein ſhew'd how far they were from a true Apoſtolical Spirit. " Mean while, where-
" ſoever falſe or ſuſpected Opinions are made a " Piece of Church Liturgy, he who ſeparates is " not the Schiſmatick; for it is alike unlawful
" to make Profeſſion of known or ſuſpected
" Falſhood, as to put in Practice unlawful or
" ſuſpected Actions.

That holy Man's Learning and Knowledge will more than weigh againſt all the Eccleſiaſticks that have touch'd upon this Controverſy, which we leave under his ſevere Cenſure. One Swadlin. of the beſt of them, Dr. Swadling, ſpeaking of the publick Service, ſaid very roundly in a Sermon on the 30th of January, There is not a Tittle of it but was by the Dictate of the Holy Ghoſt. The Excuſe is, that Doctor was out of his Wits. But Biſhop Saunderſon told Biſhop Walton, That the Holy Ghoſt ſeem'd to aſſiſt the Compoſers of the Common Prayer, in thoſe Inſtances the Regeneration of Infants at their Baptiſm, and the Salvation of Sinners at their Burial.

I am quite tir'd with ſuch Reaſoning, and fear the Reader is ſo too. Let us now ſee what were the terrible Effects of this Uniformity Act. Above Two thouſand Worthy, Learned, Pious and Orthodox Divines (I take it from the illuſtrious Mr. Locke) were thrown out of the Church; they, their Wives and Families, aged Relations, and helpleſs Children, were driven from their Dwellings, from their Bread, from the Society of their deareſt Friends, and what is ſtill more killing, from the Charge of their deareſt Flocks, the Care of whoſe Souls they had been entruſted with:
Black Bartholomew Day. They had merited much of the Government; many of them had ventur'd their Lives for the King; all of them had labour'd indefatigably for his Reſtoration. He had promis'd all of them the Liberty of their Conſciences; but alas! what a Pillar did they build upon! Their Calamities are the Reproach of their Friends whom they deſerted, and the Mirth of their Enemies whom they had ſerv'd. What ſays Dr. Calamy of them? " They were not a poor inconſiderable
" Handful, a few Scores only of acceptable and " uſeful Miniſters, who were by this Act caſt
" out of the Church, but many Hundreds. They " did not throw themſelves out of Service, but " were forcibly ejected. They begg'd for Con" tinuance with all imaginable Earneſtneſs, and
" urg'd unanſwerable Arguments in their Peti" tion for Peace, but were repuls'd. They were " not caſt out becauſe not needed to carry on the " Work of the Goſpel in the Land, for there
" were, and ſtill are among us many deſolate
" Quarters that are over-run with Ignorance and
" Profaneneſs; and there was more to be done
" in order to general Inſtruction, Excitation and " Reformation, than all their joint Labours
" wou'd have fully ſuffic'd for, and yet they were " ejected. This was an Action without a Pre-
" cedent, the like to which the Reform'd Church,
" nay the Chriſtian World, never ſaw before.

Who were the chief Agents in that bad Work. Let the Names of the chief Agents in this dreadful Work be remembred for ever; Edward Hyde, Earl of Clarendon; Sir Edward Turner, Speaker of the Houſe of Commons; Sir Heneage Finch, Sollicitor General; John Keeling, Serjeant at Law; Gilbert Sheldon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; George Morley, Biſhop of Wincheſter; Richard Sterne, Archbiſhop of York; John Coſens, Biſhop of Durham; Humphry Henchman, Biſhop of Salisbury; Dr. Barwick, Dr. Pierce, Dr. Fearne, Dr. Gunning, Mr. Thorndyke, Dr. Sparrow, Dr. Heylin, and all the Doctors who hop'd for Dignities. If ſuch as adore the Memory of theſe Men and their Works are capable of Shame, what Confuſion muſt they be in at the Reproaches of Mr. Locke, the greateſt Genius of that Age! A.D.1662

" Immediately after this followeth the Act of " Uniformity, by which all the Clergy of Eng-
" land are oblig'd to ſubſcribe and declare what
" the Corporations, Nobility and Gentry had " before ſworn. The Clergy readily comply'd
" with it; for you know that ſort of Men are " taught rather to obey than underſtand, and
" to uſe that Learning they have to juſtify, not
" to examine, what Superiors command, exactly
" the Caſe of the Archdeacon, and the Compleat

" was fatal to our Church and Religion in throw-

" ed, pious and orthodox Divines, who cou'd
" not come up to ſeveral Things in that Act.
" And it is upon this Occaſion worth your Know-

" on this Church-Affair, and ſo blind was the " Obedience requir'd, that if you compare the Sir Henry Vane. This Church Hiſtory is follow'd with the Trial, Condemnation and Execution of the famous Sir Henry Vane, whoſe Head, as the Biſhop of Sarum informs us, was ſtruck off becauſe they were afraid of it. We have ſeen the King value himſelf much before the Lords and Commons, for being a Prince of his Word, nay, to do it when he was breaking an Oath he had thrice ſworn; and now, to ſhew the World how merciful he is, he thirſts after the Blood of a Gentleman whom he promis'd to ſave. Read Bp. Burnet, The putting of Sir Henry Vane to Death was much blam'd; for the Declaration from Breda being full for an Indemnity to all except the Regicides, he was comprehended in that; ſince tho' he was for changing the Government, and depoſing the King, yet he did not approve of the putting him to Death. An Addreſs was made by both Houſes on his Behalf, to which the King gave a favourable Anſwer; ſo he reckon'd he was ſafe, that being equivalent to an Act of Parliament. Yet the great Opinion that was had of his Parts and Capacity, made the Court think it was neceſſary to put him out of the Way. Again, " When he ſaw his

He is murder'd. " Death was deſign'd, he compos'd himſelf to
" it with a Reſolution which was amazing to
" thoſe who knew how little of that was na" tural to him. Some Inſtances of this were " very extraordinary, tho' they cannot be men-
" tion'd with Decency." I think the Biſhop is too delicate here, and that it is not at all indecent for a Couple in the Conjugal State to perform the Duty of Wedlock; and it is ſaid the Lady Vane began her Reckoning for her Son, the Lord Bernard, from the Night before Sir Henry loſt his Head on Tower-Hill, where a new and barbarous Practice was begun. My Lord of Sarum proceeds, " It was obſerv'd that the Dying
" Speeches of the Regicides had left Impreſſions
" on the Hearers that were not at all to the Ad" vantage of the Government; ſo Strains of a " peculiar Nature being expected from him to " prevent that, Drummers were plac'd under
" the Scaffold, who, as ſoon as he began to " ſtruck up with their Drums. This put him in no

A D. 1662 " no Diſorder: He deſir'd they might be ſtopp'd, " for he underſtood what was meant by it. Then " he went thro' his Devotions; and as he was " taking Leave of thoſe about him, he happen- " ing to ſay ſomewhat with relation to the Times, " the Drums ſtruck up a ſecond time:" Upon which he ſaid, 'Tis a wretched Cauſe that will not hear the Breath of a dying Man. Something like it was ſaid by Scot. Biſhop Burnet adds, So he gave over, and died with ſo much Compoſedneſs, that it was generally thought the Government had loſt more than it had gain'd by his Death. This Execution was about two Months before the Act of Uniformity was executed upon 2 or 3000 Miniſters of the Goſpel. Lieutenant General Lambert, who was try'd the ſame Day with Sir Henry Vane, 16th of June, extenuated his Crime, and pleaded Ignorance of Sir George Booth or Monk's Deſigns. The Court did not fear him ſo much as they fear'd Sir Henry Vane; ſo tho' he was condemn'd, his Life was ſpar'd, and he dy'd a Priſoner in St. Nicholas Iſland near Plymouth about twenty-four Years after. Starling was the Sheriff who commanded the Drums to beat when Sir Henry was on the Scaffold. Lieutenant General Ludlow ſays of Vane, " He " left it doubtful which was greater, his Elo- " quence, Soundneſs of Judgment, and Preſence " of Mind, his Gravity and Magnanimity, his " conſtant Adherence to the Cauſe of his Coun- " try, and Heroick Carriage during the Time of " his Confinement, and at the Hour of his Death; " or the Malice of his Enemies, and the fri- " volous Suggeſtions at his Trial, the Breach of " the publick Faith in the Uſage he found, the " Incivility of the Bench, thoſe ſanguinary Hire- " lings calling him foul Names, tho' in Compari- " ſon with his Birth and Quality, they were all " of the Dregs of the People, and the ſavage " Rudeneſs of the Sheriff, were very remarka- " ble." After what Biſhop Burnet and General Ludlow have ſaid of them, what an Opinion muſt the Reader have of thoſe wretched Writers, who have bely'd and inſulted this injur'd Gentleman, even in the Moment when he was about to lay down his Life for the Cauſe he had engag'd in? One of them, the Compleat Hiſtorian, avers, that it was a juſt Sentence, and that he ran out into Lectures of Treaſon and Enthuſiaſm on the Scaffold. He then applauds the Loyalty and Judgment of the Sheriff, who got Drums and Trumpets to drown his Voice, that he might not be heard. Another of them, Echard, tells the World, Nothing cou'd be more ſurprizing and ſhocking than his Pride; he tore his Papers on the Scaffold in great Wrath; he fell into Rants, &c. when, directly contrary to both theſe Eccleſiaſticks, my Lord of Sarum aſſures us he dy'd with great Compoſedneſs. Echard blames Sir Henry for two Rants, as he calls them; one was his Anſwer to a Perſon who perſuaded him to ſubmit to the King, If the King does not think himſelf more concern'd for his Honour and his Word than I do for my Life, they may take it; nay, I value my Life leſs in a good Cauſe than the King can do his Honour. I don't wonder that thoſe two Hiſtorians call every thing that has Fervency in Devotion Enthuſiaſm, as they call every one that will not aſſociate with them a Schiſmatick. Their Argument is nothing, take away thoſe two Words from them, which, like the Drums under the Scaffold, are to drown the Voice of Religion and Reaſon. Echard never fails to take notice of his Majeſty's unparalell'd Clemency, ſuch as giving a Man's Quarters when the Hangman is cutting him in Pieces to his Friends, and now in admitting Sir Henry Vane to have his Head cut off, when the Judge had doom'd him to be hang'd. But what the Mercies of ſome are, we are inform'd in Scripture. A.D. 1662

Beheaded.

The Princeſs Katharine, Infanta of Portugal, was marry'd at Lisbon to his Majeſty by Proxy, the Earl of Sandwich, who had been one of Oliver's Privy-Council in the Beginning of the War, and that Earl, who had been alſo an Independant, or Presbyterian, or both, in Honour of the Feaſt of St. George, took her a-board the 23d of April. The Duke of York met her at the Iſle of Wight, and the King receiv'd her at Portſmouth, where the Compleat Hiſtorian, and other Hiſtorians as compleat as he, aſſure us, ſhe was marry'd by Dr. Gilbert Sheldon, Biſhop of London, to his Majeſty. But the ſame Hiſtorian and others alſo ſay, ſhe refus'd to be marry'd by any but a Prieſt of her own Religion, which was alſo the King's Religion. The King had two Millions of Croiſadoes with her, beſides the Important Town of Tangier, which was of ſo much Importance, as to coſt England ten times as much Money as the King had with his Wife, and then to be demoliſh'd and abandon'd, and the Rich Town of Bombay in the Eaſt-Indies, which the Company rented of the King for 15 Pounds a Year. Soon after the Arrival of the Queen-Conſort, the Queen-Mother, with the Earl of St. Alban's, arriv'd from France, and had a Court ſettled for her at Somerſet-houſe.

Echard tells us, he was aſſur'd by a knowing Perſon, That the King's firſt Motive for the Sale of Dunkirk was, the great Expence in the keeping of it. When he gives us Inſtances of the Knowledge of his knowing Perſons, we always find it to be of the Size of his own. The Parliament had juſt given him Money for the keeping of it, and wou'd have kept it till Dooms-day, if Money wou'd have done it. Biſhop Burnet informs us, that the faithful Monk poſitively adviſ'd the King to let it go to France for the Money ſhe offer'd; and Mareſchal Schombergh, who was then in England in his Way to Portugal to command the French and Confederate Forces there, poſitively adviſ'd the King to keep it, ſaying, It cou'd never be taken, conſidering the Naval Power of England. He added, Tho' France ſpeaks big, as if they wou'd break with England, unleſs it was deliver'd up, yet they are far from the Thoughts of it; the holding it will keep both France and Spain in a Dependance upon England: So it was ſold, and all the Money, ſays Biſhop Burnet, immediately ſquander'd away among the Miſtreſſes Creatures, tho' he had promiſ'd he wou'd lay it up all in the Tower, and that it ſhou'd not be touch'd but upon extraordinary Occaſions. Did not his Majeſty value himſelf upon being a King of his Word? The King's Promiſes. 179.

It was not long after the King's Marriage that he gave himſelf up to an avow'd Courſe of Lewdneſs; they are my Lord of Sarum's Words: He continu'd it as long as he liv'd, to the great Scandal of the World, and to the particular Reproach of all that ſerv'd about him in the Court. The very Biſhops and Doctors, who ſo ſtrenuouſly promoted the Uniformity Act, ſay, He uſually came from his Miſtreſſes Lodgings to Church, even on Sacrament Days. He held as it were a Court in them. King's lewd Courſes.

A few Weeks before the Paſſing of the Act of Uniformity, Col. Okey, Mr. Miles Corbett, and Col. Barkſtead were ſeiz'd in Holland, and ſent Priſoners to England. Col. Okey and Col. Barkſtead had been receiv'd into Protection of the City of Hanaw in Germany, where they were made Burgeſſes, together with Col. Walton and Col. Dixwell. Barkſtead and Okey taking a Journey to Holland to meet ſome Relations, who were contented to baniſh themſelves with them, and to conduct

A.D.1662 conduct them to the Place which they had choſen for their Reſidence. Information of it was given to George Downing, a New England Teacher, who had ſerv'd Col. Okey, as Chaplain to his Regiment, and who had given Okey Aſſurance, by a Friend, that he had no Orders to look after him; for Downing, whom Cromwel had preferr'd as a gifted Perſon, to be his Agent in Holland, had accepted of the King's Agency, and acted for him with as much Zeal as he had acted againſt him, excepting that he did not make ſo much uſe of his Gifts. This Fellow, for ſure he was not ſo conſiderable as Mr. Aſcham, the Parliament's Ambaſſador in Spain, whom the Lord Clarendon ſo ſtiles, obtain'd an Order from the States to apprehend his old Maſter Col. Okey, Col. Barkſtead, and Mr. Corbett, which was done accordingly. He ſhip'd them all three for England, where they were ſhut up in the Tower, and from thence carry'd to Tyburn, being all under Attainder, and there hang'd, drawn and quarter'd. Mind Echard now, Col. Okey having been hang'd, bowel'd and quarter'd, his Majeſty was moſt graciouſly pleas'd, in regard to his Chriſtian Carriage, to return his Quarters to his Friends.

But notwithſtanding this moſt gracious Act, the Quarters were taken away again. He ſays, very falſly, on account of the tumultuous Concourſe of Fanaticks, who wou'd have attended them to the Grave. The Concourſe was numerous, ſeveral Thouſands, but not tumultuous. They behav'd themſelves with Decency and Modeſty, ſays Ludlow; however, the King was ſo alarm'd, that he revok'd his Grant, and diſpatch'd Orders to the Sheriffs, Francis Menil and Samuel Starling, to diſperſe the People.

A ſham Plot. The next hanging Work for State Matters, were the Executions of George Philips, Serjeant to a Foot Company, Thomas Tongue, a Strong-Water Man, Francis Stubs, a Cheeſe-monger, Nathaniel Gibbs, a Felt-maker, who with James Hind, a Gunner, John Sellars, a Compaſs-maker, one Thomas, one Nye, with Elton, Rawdon, Spurway and Ward, were to turn the King, Lords and Commons out of the Government, to rout the Army and Fleet, and ſet up a Common-wealth, and a Council of State, which Council of State was to be compos'd of the abovemention'd, Thomas, Nye, Elton, Rawdon, Spurway and Ward. They were to kill all that came in their Way, particularly Monk the General, and Browne the Wood-monger. This Farce has a very tragical End, for Gibbs, Stubbs, Tongue and Philips were actually hang'd, drawn and quarter'd, tho' the moſt credible Part of the Story was incredible, that Lieutenant General Ludlow was to have headed theſe obſcure Wretches, who I doubt not hated both Browne and Monk, and the Duke of York, and perhaps the King, enough to have taken Arms againſt them, if Opportunity offer'd, and enough to have talk'd after that idle and treaſonable Rate; but to imagine that ſo wiſe and wary a Man as Ludlow, wou'd throw himſelf at the Mercy of his Enemies, under the Protection of a Cheeſe-monger, a Strong-Water Man, and a Serjeant of Foot, murders all Credibility; and had not the Men dy'd for't, wou'd have been as merry a Plot as ever appear'd on the Stage. But the Men being put to Death, there is no laughing at it. Echard has ſtamp'd it with his Authority, So that upon the whole, we cannot find upon what Reaſon this can be reckon'd a SHAM PLOT. Turn now to Ludlow, "In "the mean Time, the Engliſh Court knowing "themſelves to be fallen under the Hatred and "Contempt of the People, for their Cruelty, Im-"morality and Corruption, aggravated by the "late Sale of Dunkirk, reſolv'd by the Contri-"vance of a Plot, to diſarm their Enemies, and A.D.1662 "provide for their preſent Safety: To this End, "by the Means of Major General Browne and "others, Money was advanc'd, and Arms put "into the Hands of ſome Perſons, among whom "one Bradley, who had formerly belong'd to "Cromwel, was the Principal, that by giving "ſmall Sums to Indigent Officers of the late "Army, and by ſhewing the Arms they had "ready, they might engage them and others in "this pretended Deſign.

"An Account of this Plot was printed and "publiſh'd, affirming that divers Thouſands "of ill affected Perſons were ready, under "any Command to ſieze the Tower, and the "City of London; then to march directly to "Whitehall, in order to kill the King and Monk, "with a Reſolution to give no Quarter to any "that adher'd to them, and after that to de-"clare for a Common-wealth. By this Means, "one Baker, who had been of the Guard to "Cromwel, and ſince the Disbanding of the Ar-"my, had been reduc'd to grind Knives for a "poor Living, having receiv'd half a Crown "from Bradley, and promis'd his Aſſiſtance "when there ſhou'd be Occaſion, was executed "with ſome others for this Conſpiracy. How-"ever, this ſerv'd the Court for a Pretence to ſieze "five or ſix Hundred Perſons, to diſarm all thoſe "they ſuſpected, to require thoſe they had taken, "to give Bonds of 200 Pounds each, not to take "up Arms againſt the King, and to encreaſe "their ſtanding Guards. They were not aſham'd "alſo to give out that their Meſſengers had been "ſo near to ſieze my Perſon, that they had ta-"ken my Cloak and Slippers, and committed "two Gentlemen to the Tower, for accompany-"ing me, as they ſaid, to the Sea-ſide, in Or-"der to my Eſcape, tho' at the ſame Time they "knew ſo well where I was, that they employ'd "Inſtruments to procure me to be aſſaſſinated, "which was diſcover'd to a Merchant of Lauſanne, by a Perſon of Quality, living in theſe "Parts, who had refus'd 10,000 Crowns offer'd "to him by the Dutcheſs of Anjou, Siſter to "his gracious Majeſty, if he would undertake "that Province.

The Lord Clarendon ſeems to me to be the deepeſt in theſe ſham Plots; and if they were Shams, as there is Reaſon enough to believe they were, what ſort of Men muſt they be, who cou'd make Plots and Plotters, and hang them for Plots of their own making? Such were the Champions of the Cauſe, which the Compleat Hiſtorians have eſpous'd.

Sir John Lawſon, whom the Earl of Sandwich left behind him in the Streights, brought the Governments of Algier, Tripoli and Tunis to Reaſon. By good Management, and the Terror of Blake's Name, ſtill freſh in their Memory, he prevail'd with them to confirm the Articles of the former Treaties.

The Earl of Peterborough took Poſſeſſion of Tangier for his Majeſty, and the Earl of Tiviot, who had been Governor of Dunkirk, was ſent to command there. The City was made a free Port, and, as the Archdeacon juſtly obſerves, it was ſeated very commodiouſly for Strength and Safety to guard any Naval Power, and to command thoſe Seas. But the Heads of the Politicians in England were otherwiſe taken up. Acts were paſs'd and paſſing, that wou'd ruin the Trade at home, and then I know not what the Trade abroad ſignify'd.

His Majeſty's Counſels, ſays Echard, for above two Years were regular and ſteady, and carry'd on with Wiſdom and Forecaſt. There is not one Inſtance of it in any Hiſtory, whether Church or 1663.

A.D.1663 Presbyterian. Was it a Mark of his Steadineſs to paſs his Declaration for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs in October, and the Uniformity Act ſix Months after, and the Toleration four Months after? Were theſe Things the Effects of Wiſdom and Foreca ſt, of Steadineſs and Regularity? The Archdeacon, to lay a Blemiſh on the King's Declaration of Indulgence, publiſh'd in the Beginning of this Year, intimates, that it was contriv'd among the Popiſh Prieſts at Somerſet-Houſe. The Papiſts were indulg'd as well as the Diſſenters, and it was on that Account that the Miniſters refus'd to thank the King for it. Aſſoon as the Parliament met, which was on the 18th of February, his Majeſty ſpoke of the Declaration in a favourable Way, which did not hinder the Parliament's preſenting an Addreſs againſt it; wherein they diſcharg'd him of his Promiſe at Breda, touching Liberty of Conſcience. And that they might not give the Papiſts too much Countenance by their Severity to Proteſtant Diſſenters, they preſented a Petition to the King againſt Prieſts and Jeſuits. The Declaration of Indulgence was a daring Act of arbitrary Power. Echard calls the Uniformity Act, the Laws of the Land; and it was therefore illegal to diſpenſe with it, but the Kings of this royal Houſe, as a noble Lord once obſerv'd to me, lov'd the Encreaſe of Power every way but by Arms. His Majeſty ſpoke very graciouſly to the Parliament, notwithſtanding he was not very well pleas'd with their Petition againſt the Papiſts, whoſe Services and Merits he extoll'd. On the 12th of June he made a Speech to the Commons in the Banquetting-Houſe, which is very long, and has an Expreſſion in it worth Notice: God knows I do not long more for any Bleſſing in this World, than that I may live to call a Parliament, and not ask or receive any Money from them; which I do verily believe, tho' not in the Senſe he ſpoke, or they took it; for there was at this time a Project on Foot. Father Orleans tells us, 'twas projected by Alexander Popham, Eſq; to raiſe a certain Fund yearly, ſufficient to diſcharge the King's neceſſary and unneceſſary Expences, without a Parliament. Biſhop Burnet and Wellwood informs us, the Earl of Southampton, Lord Treaſurer, gave into it, not with a View of giving Interruption to Parliaments, but out of pure Affection to the Service of the Exchequer. The Earl of Clarendon ſecretly oppos'd it. I cannot complement him with an Opinion, that he did it out of a Spirit of Liberty, or to keep the Crown in Dependance upon Parliamentary Subſidies. Every Body agrees, that he was declining in the King's Favour, owing chiefly to the continual Complaints of the Cavaliers, who thought their Merits were not ſufficiently rewarded, and to the more ſucceſsful Arts and Inſinuations of the Miſtreſſes, eſpecially the reigning Miſtreſs, the Counteſs of Caſtlemain, Roger Palmer's Wife, who hated him for ſlighting her, whom all others courted. This Scheme coming in the Way, at ſuch a Juncture, the Lord Clarendon thought to arm himſelf againſt Diſgrace, by a popular Intereſt, and therefore pretended to be extreamly in love with Parliaments. Such a one as the preſent was, might indeed be much in his good Graces, but a good Parliament wou'd never have done his Buſineſs, both in Church and State. Wellwood writes, One might have thought this Parliament had glutted his Ambition to the full, by heaping thoſe Prerogatives upon him, which had been conteſted for, with his Father, at the Expence of ſo much Blood and Treaſure; but he graſp'd early after more, and from his firſt Acceſſion to the Crown, ſhew'd but little Inclination to depend upon Parliaments. Yet he's always telling them, that he's enamour'd with them; and wou'd not one think by his Speeches, that Mrs. Palmer had leſs of his Heart than the Houſe of Commons? Chancellor Hyde knew him too well to believe a Word of it; and having a private Conference with the good Earl of Southampton concerning the Project, he told that Lord, He was better acquainted with the King's Temper and Inclinations than Southampton cou'd expect to be, having had long and intimate Acquaintance with his Majeſty abroad, and knew him ſo well, that if ſuch a Revenue was ſettled upon him for Life, according to the Scheme, neither of thoſe two wou'd be of any farther Uſe, and they wou'd not in probability ſee many Seſſions of Parliament, during that Reign: Upon which Southampton thought no more of the Project; but this Paſſage coming to the Ears of the King, prov'd the true Reaſon why his Majeſty abandon'd Hyde to his Enemies.

A.D.1663

Project to raiſe Money ſpoil'd by Clar.

Mr. Archdeacon ſpeaking of the Proclamation againſt Jeſuits and Prieſts, owns, it did not appear to be much more in the real Intentions of the Court, than another popular Proclamation for the better Obſervation of the Lord's Day, which was generally ſpent then in Gaming and Revelling of all Kinds, and likewiſe for renewing a former Proclamation againſt vicious, debauch'd and profane Perſons; when as Mr. Echard juſtly obſerves, it became more viſible, that Popery and Profaneneſs, were both in the Encreaſe at Court; yet at the ſame Time that he acknowledges it, he highly approves of the Parliament's taking Care of the King's Revenue. They had given him a new Tax, call'd Chimney-Money, amounting to about 200,000 Pounds a Year. He had had 300,000 Pounds with his Wife, 300,000 more for Dunkirk, beſides his Siſter's Portion paid out of that Sale. He had 1,200,000 Pounds by an Aſſeſſment the laſt Year, and had 1,200,000 Pounds ſettled Revenue. Thus by the modeſteſt Computation, he had receiv'd about five Millions ſince he came into England, not full three Years when the laſt Money was paid him; yet he tells this Parliament, If you yourſelves had not in an extraordinary Manner improv'd my Revenue, the Government cou'd not have been ſupported; and if it be not yet improv'd, the Conſequence will be the ſame. To warm them in their Proceedings, after he has chid them a little for their Coldneſs, he acquaints them with a Plot in Ireland, for the Surprize of the Caſtle of Dublin, &c. Thus by his obliging Carriage partly, and partly by other Inducements, ſays Wellwood, he made a ſhift to get more Money out of his firſt Parliament, towards the Expence of his Pleaſures, than all his Predeceſſors of the Norman Race had obtain'd before, towards the Charge of their Wars. We ſhall not be miſled, if we remember this when we read what Lord Clarendon told the Parliament of the Taxes, Burthens, and profuſe Expences in the late Times, which amidſt perpetual War, did not in the Maintenance of victorious Fleets and Armies come into any Manner of Compariſon with the Squanderings of the Court on Miſtreſſes, Minions, on Luxury and Debauchery.

Another Plot.

The Parliament gave the King four entire Subſidies. Echard aſſures us, they were perſuaded to it by the affecting Way of his Majeſty's Delivery of his Speech. It wou'd have been no great Encomium on their Underſtandings, if he had ſaid they were mov'd to it by the Strength of Reaſoning; for it is certainly a Parcel of ſmooth Words only without Energy, or any perſuaſive Power. But what this Parliament were, is excellently well deſcrib'd in the Eloquence of Lawrence Womach, D. D. who was made a Biſhop for

A.D.1663 for that, and other ſuch admirable Performances of his. They were the ſtrenuous Impugners of Schiſm and Rebellion, the ingenuous Aſſertors of the King's Supremacy, Crown, and Dignity; the zealous Patrons of the Church's Hierarchy and Liturgy; the vigorous Champions of Uniformity, aſſembled under the moſt Excellent and Auſpicious Majeſty of King Charles the Second. About this Time a Book was publiſh'd which explain'd the good Effects of the late Acts made for the Glory of the Church, as two Reverend Hiſtorians and more have aſſur'd us. It was entitled, The Five Groans of the Church; prudently foreſeeing and paſſionately bewailing her ſecond Fall threaten'd by theſe Five dangerous, tho' undiſcern'd Miſcarriages that caus'd her Firſt, viz. 1. Undue Ordination, 2. Looſe Profaneneſs, 3. Unconſcionable Symony, 4. Careleſs Non-reſidence, 5. Encroaching Pluralities, humbly preſented to her Supream Head and Governor the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, and his great Council the Parliament. The Author, a very ſtrict Conformiſt, complains with great Warmth of above 3000 Miniſters admitted into the Church, who were unfit to teach becauſe of their Youth; of 1500 debauch'd Men ordain'd; of the Ordination of many illiterate Men, of 1342 factious Miniſters a little before ordain'd; that of 12000 Church-Livings, or thereabouts, 3000 and more being Impropriate, and 4165 Sine Cures, or Non-reſident Livings, there was but a poor Remainder left for a painful and honeſt Miniſtry. Had the Biſhops, inſtead of adding another Groan to the Church, employed their Time, Pains, Prayers, and Intereſt to take away theſe Five Groans, wou'd it not have been more for the Glory of God, than the Act which made room for the 2842 debauch'd and illiterate Men above-mention'd?

The Uniformity Act is laying itſelf about in all Quarters of the Kingdom, particularly in Worceſterſhire, where Mr. Baxter was unhandſomly if not inhumanly dealt with by Dr. Morley, Biſhop of that Dioceſs, who not only refus'd him a Licence to preach in his Dioceſs, but went in Perſon to Kidderminſter, and preach'd a long Invective againſt him. See Mr. Baxter's own Words, "He came himſelf one Day, and preach'd "to them a long Invective againſt them and me "as Presbyterians, and I know not what: So "that the People wonder'd that ever a Man "wou'd venture to come into a Pulpit, and ſpeak "ſo confidently to a People that he knew not, "the Things which they commonly knew to be "untrue." Sir Robert Holt, Knight of the Shire for Warwickſhire, made a Speech in Parliament againſt Mr. Baxter, as one who pray'd ſeditiouſly, but he did not remember the Words: And the thirteen Capital Burgeſſes, the Bailiff and Juſtice of Kidderminſter, and almoſt all the twenty-five inferior Burgeſſes were turn'd out by the Act, which oblig'd all Perſons incorporated to declare they held no Obligation lying upon them or any other Perſon from the Oath call'd the Solemn League and Covenant, though not above two or three of them had taken it.

Miniſters bully'd and beaten.

I had exceeded my intended Number before I was aware of it; and to theſe might be added near Two Thouſand more, learned, pious, able and orthodox Divines, who were turn'd out of their Houſes, thrown into Priſons, plunder'd, whipp'd and can'd, bully'd, cudgell'd and curs'd at the Pleaſure of every drunken Juſtice and lewd Informer. 'Twou'd be endleſs if I ſhou'd enter into the Detail of the Uſage theſe venerable Divines met with, not only from the Juſtices, but even from the Biſhops, every County in England had ſuch Worſhipful Magiſtrates, as Sir Edmund Bacon, Sir Gervaſe Elways, and Sir Algernoon May in Suffolk! The former, Bacon, meeting --- Scandaret, M. A. of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Miniſter of Haveril in that County on the Road, whipp'd him with his Horſe-whip firſt, and then ſnatching Mr. Scandaret's Cane out of his Hand, can'd him with it till he was weary. Peter Gunning, Biſhop of Chicheſter, ran about with the Conſtables himſelf to break open

A.D. 1663 Doors and diſturb religious People in the Worſhip of God after the Way of the Reform'd. Once finding a Door ſhut againſt him, he order'd the Conſtable to break it open; upon which one of the Crowd cry'd out, What has Peter loſt his Keys? And upon his firing hotly againſt the poor praying Garriſon within Doors, another call'd him Peter Gunner; but nothing diſcourag'd him in his Warfare, he ſate as a Juſtice on the Bench at the Quarter-Seſſions at Lewis. A Barriſter at Law, who was in Commiſſion of the Peace, and us'd to give the Charge, deſir'd the Biſhop ſo to do, which ſham'd him a little; but tho' he took it as an Affront he ſate ſtill to have his furious Will on ſome Proteſtant Preachers and Hearers. A Juſtice, whom he wou'd have ſpirited up againſt them, refus'd it, ſaying, He who wou'd have good Neighbours muſt be a good Neighbour himſelf. I have been a Witneſs of the plundering of Men's Houſes and Barns, and driving away their Cattle by Biſhops Men and others in Somerſetſhire, having Warrants from Sir Edward Phillips, Hobbs, and other ſuch Juſtices as Bacon of Suffolk. But it was obſerv'd of that Hobbs in particular, that from Beggaring others he became a Beggar himſelf, and that the Plunder taken from Proteſtant Diſſenters, as Dr. Calamy informs us, ſeldom enrich'd the Plunderers. God ſo order'd it in his Providence, that the Loſers were but little the poorer, and they who were eager for ſuch ill-gotten Goods were not much the richer.

Chancellor Hyde impeach'd of High Treaſon.

This ſhou'd not be look'd upon as a Digreſſion, for the greateſt Part of the Buſineſs in this Reign is of this Kind. The King's Wars were all with Presbyterians, at home and abroad, and if the Activity of the Government, in perſecuting the Non-conformiſts, muſt not have a Place in our Hiſtory, it will be a meer Skeleton. The Glory of the Church, as the Eccleſiaſtical Writers term the Uniformity-Bill, was maintain'd after the above-mention'd Manner, 'till the next Popiſh King reſolv'd to glorify his own Church, that of Rome, and granted a Toleration to Proteſtant, as well as Popiſh Diſſenters. For the great Share Chancellor Hyde had in the aforeſaid Bill and Glory, Mr. Archdeacon will not believe a Word of the Earl of Briſtol's Charge of High Treaſon againſt him, exhibited in the Houſe of Lords, contrary to the King's particular Injunction, That he arrogated a ſupream Direction in all things, with a traiterous Intent to bring his Majeſty into a Contempt. 'Tis true, he arrogated the ſupream Direction, which of Conſequence, render'd the King contemptible: But I do not believe the Earl of Clarendon made himſelf great on Purpoſe to make the King little; That he alienated the Hearts of his Majeſty's Subjects, by ſaying, the King intended to bring in Popery, and he ſaid nothing but the Truth, knowing him to be a Papiſt; and what follows is as true, that he had ſaid, The King was dangerouſly corrupted in his Religion, that Papiſts had ſuch Acceſs to him, and Credit with him, that unleſs there was a watchful Eye upon it, the Proteſtant Religion wou'd be overthrown, which is what I am endeavouring to prove, that he ſaid, His Majeſty had given 10,000 Pounds to remove a zealous Proteſtant, Sir Edward Nicholas, that he might bring into that high Place of Secretary of State, a conceal'd Papiſt, Sir Henry Bennet. That ſeveral of his Dependants did not ſtick to ſay, If the Lord Chancellor does not ſtand in the Gap, Popery will be introduc'd in this Kingdom: That he perſwaded the King to allow his Name to be us'd to the Pope and Cardinals, for the Sollicitation of a Cardinal's Cap for the Lord Aubigny, which is very likely, and that he employ'd one Richard Bealing, a known Papiſt, in that Affair, upon Promiſe of great Favour to Papiſts: That he had promis'd the Pope to do his Endeavour to take away the Penal Laws againſt them: That he concluded the Articles of Marriage between his Majeſty and the Queen, upon Terms ſcandalous and dangerous to the Proteſtant Religion: That he brought the King and Queen together, without any ſettled Agreement about the Performance of the Marriage Rites; whereby the Queen refuſing to be marry'd by a Proteſtant Prieſt, in caſe of her being with Child, either the Succeſſion ſhou'd be made uncertain for want of the due Rites of Matrimony, or elſe his Majeſty be expos'd to a Suſpicion of having been marry'd in his own Dominion by a Romiſh Prieſt: That he vented opprobrious Scandals againſt his Majeſty's Perſon and Courſe of Life, ſuch as are not fit to be mention'd, but ſuch as were doubtleſs very true: That he perſwaded the King, againſt the Advice of General Monk, to withdraw the Engliſh Garriſons out of Scotland: That he told his Majeſty, There never was ſo weak and inconſiderable a Houſe of Lords, nor never ſo weak and heady a Houſe of Commons, which as to the latter, is a more juſt Character of them than Echard's wiſe Ones and experienc'd Ones: That he had adviſ'd the King to ſell Dunkirk: That he had enrich'd himſelf and his Creatures by ſale of Offices: That he had converted Money, rais'd in Ireland for the publick Service, to his own Uſe: That he had procur'd a Farm of the Cuſtoms at a low Rate to make his Profit of it, &c. I don't think that Echard's ſcowring has clear'd the Character of Chancellor Hyde as to ſeveral of theſe Articles, which are generally allow'd to be true, but the King cou'd not yet part with him: He had diſoblig'd his Subjects of the Reform'd Religion, and if he ſhou'd diſoblige his other Subjects the Papiſts, and the Promoters of the late Act, he wou'd be in Danger of travelling again, ſo the Judges were taught to give it as their Opinion, That one Peer cou'd not exhibit a Charge of High Treaſon againſt another. The Lords agreeing to it, the Proſecution ſunk for the preſent, and the Earl of Briſtol abſconded for a while, to avoid the Reſentment of his Enemy. A.D. 1663

At the Breaking up of the Parliament, Echard brings his Speaker again upon the Stage, with a handſome Speech, tho' the handſomeſt Part of it is, where he tells the King, that to ſecure the Peace of the Nation againſt the Diſſenters, the Parliament preſented him with an additional Bill for raiſing the Militia. The King anſwers him in a Speech, wherein he tells the Parliament, he has given it in Charge to the Judges, to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours in their Circuits to prevent and puniſh ſeditious Meetings. And as to the Papiſts, he will take them to Task himſelf. I will be as watchful, and take all the Pains I can to convict them; and if he had done his Buſineſs againſt them as well as the Judges and Juſtices did theirs againſt the Proteſtants, there wou'd not hath been ſuch an eternal Clamour at the Growth of Popery.

About the Beginning of Auguſt, the King and Queen went from London to the Bath. They were entertain'd at Shaw, near Newbury in Berkſhire, by Sir Thomas Doleman; at Littlecot in Wiltſhire by Alexander Popham, Eſq; one of Oliver's Lords; at Marlborough by the Lord Seymour; at Longleat by Sir James Thynne; at Badminton in Glouceſterſhire by the Marquis of Worceſter; at Cornbury in Oxfordſhire by Chancellor Hyde; and at Oxford by the Univerſity. In this Progreſs, Echard takes Care to tell us, his Majeſty touch'd above 300 People for the Kings-Evil, which I believe is to be cur'd by a Touch as ſoon as any other Evil.

During

A.D. 1663 Yorkſhire plot.

During this Progreſs, there broke out a Plot in Yorkſhire; the main Deſign of which was to ſeize Glouceſter and Newcaſtle, Whitehall and Nottingham, Worceſter and Boſton, and all the Paſſes on the Severne, the Trent, and the Tine. Boſton lay convenient for Aſſiſtance from Holland; Newcaſtle was in the Neighbourhood of the Scots, and Glouceſter lay handy to receive the Welch Army that was to come and join them. Their Pretences were to reform the Lawyers and Clergy, to put down Chimney-Money, and other Taxes, and procure a Reſurrection for the Long Parliament, which Chancellor Hyde told both Lords and Commons, had been bury'd at a prodigious Charge, three or four Years before.

The Forlorn of theſe Armies appear'd at Farnley Wood in Yorkſhire, but the Militia, and ſome regular Troops meeting them, inſtead of Dutchmen and Switzers, the Plot was ſpoil'd, and the Plotters too: The Chief of whom were, Robert Oldroyd, Joſhua Aſhnith, Peregrine Corney, William Tolſon, John Nettleton, Senior, John Nettleton, Junior, Ralph Rimer, Thomas Oates, Samuel Ellis, Robert Scott, John Foſter, John Snowden, John Smith, William Aſh, Charles Carre, John Errington, Robert Atkins, William Cotton, George Denham, Henry Watſon, Richard Wilſon, who were all taken, and hang'd at their own Doors, and other Places. The very Names of theſe Wretches prove the Falſhood of General Ludlow's engaging with them, for Reaſons more than once offer'd in the preceding Pages. I do not at all wonder that the Court and Miniſtry are frighted out of their Wits at the Rumour of forty or fifty Rumpers got together, nor that the very Names of Lambert and Ludlow fling them into a Panick. They were told that theſe Yorkſhire Men had ſent for Lambert to head them, though they had him ſafe in the Tower, or in St. Nicholas Iſland. I doubt not that theſe raſh, deſperate Fellows, might have reſolv'd to join with any body that ſhou'd appear in Arms againſt ſo unpopular a Government, and that they might be ſo fooliſh as to provide themſelves of Weapons for ſuch an Attempt, nay, to make a Motion, in hopes the general Hate of the People wou'd ſtir up a general Riſing; for by this Time Court and Courtiers were hated as much as Men cou'd be, who were deſpis'd: The Reader will probably think Ludlow expreſſes it better than I can.

More Plotters.

" the beſt Judges were of Opinion, if a favour" able Juncture ſhou'd happen, they wou'd be as " ready to ſhake off the Yoke, as they had been
" fooliſh and inconſiderate in putting it on; and
" our Friends in all Parts began to entertain
" Hopes that they might be again employed to
" reſcue their Country from Servitude." And it is true, Col. Sidney had an Interview about the ſame Time with Lieutenant General Ludlow and the Refugees in Switzerland, where they did all agree not to be wanting to the publick Service, if an Opportunity offer'd. But it is monſtrous to think they wou'd concert Meaſures, or engage with ſuch ſorry Tools as Oldroyd, Aſhnith, Corney, Oates, and the Yorkſhire Gang. Echard makes a very ſilly Reflection on this Paſſage out of Ludlow; It plainly ſhew'd his Diſpoſition, and the Diſpoſition of the reſt of his Opinion, to do what? to make War upon King Charles, upon Hyde and Monk, and the perſecuting Biſhops: Who ever doubted it? But does it ſhew any Diſpoſition in him to join with a raſcally Rout, without Ships, without Men, without Money, and without any thing but good Will? Was he ſuch a ſort of a Man? A Year after, when the King had declar'd War with the Dutch, who had ſo highly oblig'd him, both he and Col. Sidney, and every Hand that had held a Sword in what they call'd the Good Old Cauſe, were certainly very deſirous to have taken Vengeance on their Enemies in a military Way.

A.D. 1664

About the Time that the Yorkſhire Men were hang'd, John Twine, a Printer, was executed for printing a Common wealth Pamphlet; but they pillory'd Simon Dover, Printer, Thomas Brewſter, Bookſeller, and Nathaniel Brooks, Bookbinder, for uttering ſomething written by Milton, Buchanan, and other ſuch mean Writers. Echard tells us, that what Milton wrote, was in Oppoſition to that excellent Oath in the Corporation Act, That it is unlawful in any Caſe whatſoever to abdicate a Sovereign.

Upon the Death of Dr. William Juxon, the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury was given to Dr. Gilbert Sheldon, to whom the Proteſtant Religion and Engliſh Liberty were indebted for the Act of Uniformity, and the other ſtinging Acts againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters, whoſe Religion being the ſame with that of the Dutch, it is not to be doubted but the King's Quarrel with the latter was much more out of Hatred to it, than out of Concern for the Honour and Intereſt of England, which none of this Royal Houſe were ever much concern'd about till after the Revolution.

1664. Parliament impos'd on by the King.

The Politicks of this Government had no Diſguiſe but what the weakeſt Eyes cou'd ſee thro', and they needed no more Art than the Miniſters were capable of, to lead this willing Parliament into any thing. Never was Aſſembly ſo proſtituted to the Pleaſure of the Court, never one ſo ſhamefully Betrayers of their Country both in Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Matters. The Triennial Bill, which paſs'd after a long Struggle in King Charles the Firſt's Reign, ſtuck in the King's Stomach, and therefore in his Speech at the opening of the next Seſſions of Parliament, March the 18th, he recommends it to the Commons to be reviſ'd, in his uſual coaxing Way. Having told them of the terrible Rebellion in Yorkſhire, and ſaid all he cou'd think of to alarm them, and exaſperate them ſtill more againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters, as at the bottom of that and all other Plots, he comes to the Point.

" Some wou'd ſtill inſiſt on the Authority
" of the Long Parliament, of which, they
" ſay, they have Members enough who are " willing to meet: Others have fancied to them-
" ſelves, by ſome Computation of their own,
" upon ſome Clauſe in the TRIENNIAL
" BILL, That this preſent Parliament was at
" an End ſome Months ſince, and that for want
" of new Writs, they may aſſemble themſelves,
" and chooſe Members for Parliament; and this " is the beſt Expedient to bring them together
" for their own Purpoſes. For the Long Par- " liament, you and I can do no more to inform " and compoſe the Minds of all Men, let them
" proceed upon their Peril. But methinks there " is nothing done to diſabuſe them in reſpect of " the Triennial Bill. I confeſs, my Lords and
" Gentlemen, I have often my ſelf read over that " Bill; and though there is no Colour for the " Fancy of the Determination of this Parlia" ment, yet I will not deny to you, that I have " always expected you wou'd, and even admir'd
" you have not conſider'd the wonderful Clauſes
" in that Bill (and he might very well have ad-

*A.D.*1664 mir'd, if he had before intimated his Deſire to have it repeal'd; for he can hardly be fonder of abſolute arbitrary Power, than they are become fond of abſolute Submiſſion) "which paſs'd in "a Time very uncareful for the Dignity of the "Crown, or Security of the People."—So uncareful, that they were at the Expence of many Millions of Money and Blood in Proportion for their Security. "I pray, Mr. Speaker, and you Gen- "tlemen of the Houſe of Commons, give that Tri- "ennial Bill once a Reading in your Houſe, "and then, in God's Name, do what you think "fit for me, and your ſelves, and the whole King- "dom. I need not tell you how much I love Par- "liaments (Their Ears are all ſtretch'd out to hear this) "never King was ſo much beholden "to Parliaments as I have been, nor do I think "the Crown can ever be happy without frequent "Parliaments; and to ſhew how much he va- lu'd himſelf on being a Prince of his Word, he kept this near eighteen Years, and ſometimes ſaw them not for ten or twelve Months. "But "aſſure your ſelves, if I did think otherwiſe, I "wou'd never ſuffer a Parliament to come to- "gether by the Means preſcrib'd by that Bill." He tells them there very plainly, that he matters not the Law, and intimates, if they don't repeal it, he wou'd do it himſelf, and never let it be put in execution: But he need be in no Concern about it. This Aſſembly had no reliſh of Engliſh Liberty, they fled from her, adorn'd as ſhe is with Celeſtial Beauty, and ran into the Arms of Slavery, the fouleſt of all Shadowy Beings. The Bill ſoon paſs'd to repeal the Act for Triennial Parliaments, but they were aſham'd to let it go by its right Name, ſo it was ſtil'd, An Act for aſſembling and holding of Parliaments once in three Years at leaſt. Biſhop Burnet informs us what an abſurd ridiculous Buſineſs it was; pray turn to the King's wheedling Speech about it, and then read what his Lordſhip ſays. "The Parliament repealed the Triennial Bill, "which had been obtain'd with ſo much Diffi- "culty, and was clogg'd with ſo many Clauſes, "which ſeem'd to transfer the Power from the "Crown to the People, that when it was car- "ried, it was thought the greateſt Security the "People had for all their other Liberties. The King has been juſt telling the two Houſes of Lords and Commons that it utterly deſtroyed their Security. "It was now given up without a Struggle, "or any Clauſes for a Certainty of Parliaments, "beſides a general one; that there ſhou'd be a "Parliament call'd within three Years after the "Diſſolution of the preſent Parliament, and ſo "ever afterwards; but without any ſevere Clauſes "in Caſe the Act was not obſerv'd." However, both Echard and the Compleat Hiſtorian are in the beſt Humour in the World on this Occaſion; when it is impoſſible for a good Engliſhman to behold his dear Country in the Hands of ſuch a Parliament, without trembling with Fear, and melting with Compaſſion.— The Speech-making Speaker, when the Parliament was prorogu'd, told his Majeſty, That the Act of Security, ſpoken of by my Lord of Sarum, was impracticable, and only uſeful to learn the People how to rebel. Then comes ſome elegant Nonſenſe: Therefore we melted it down, extracted the pure Metal from counterfeit and droſſy Allay, and then preſented it to your Majeſty to be ſtamp'd, and made current Coin. He return'd the Parliament's moſt humble Thanks to the King, that he had been moſt graciouſly pleas'd to paſs that new Bill, which threw down the Fences of their Security, and laid them at the Mercy of Miſtreſſes and Minions. Echard tells us, the Yorkſhire Plot gave Occaſion to that infamous Bill call'd the Conventicle Act. The Infamy of it aroſe from the vile Arts made uſe of to give a Colour to it, and the Cruelty and Inhumanity of the Penalties. We will repeat what Turner the Speaker ſaid of it in his Prorogation Speech; it will ſhew us what his Head was, and what his Heart. "Whilſt we were intent upon "theſe weighty Affairs, we were often interrupt- "ed by Petitions, and Letters, and Motions, re- "preſenting the unſettled Conditions of ſome "Counties, by reaſon of Fanaticks, Sectaries, "and Nonconformiſts. They differ in their Shapes "and Species, and accordingly are more or leſs "dangerous; but in this they all agree, they are "no Friends to the eſtabliſh'd Government either "in Church or State. And if the old Rule be "true,

Qui Eccleſiæ contradicit, non eſt pacificus,

"we have great Reaſon to prevent their Growth, "and to puniſh their Practice. To this Purpoſe "we have prepar'd a Bill againſt their frequent- "ing of Conventicles; the Seed-Plots and Nur- "ſeries of their Opinions, UNDER PRE- "TENCE of Religious Worſhip.

"But the third Offence is Baniſhment to ſome "Foreign Plantation.

Immedicabile Vulnus ne pars ſincera trahatur.

The two Reverend Hiſtorians are not at all mov'd at this; or if they are mov'd at all, 'tis with an Emotion of Pleaſure, as much as it is ſcandalous and ſhameful to Chriſtianity itſelf. The Biſhop of Salisbury ſays, All People were amaz'd at this Severity, and well might it ſtrike them with Amazement and Horror. To ſee People pretending to be Proteſtants making a Law to ruin and deſtroy their Brethren of the ſame Religion, for worſhipping God in their Houſes, after they themſelves had driven them out of their Churches.

All this while was the Deſign of a War with Holland working. Biſhop Burnet informs us, he was poſitively aſſur'd by Stateſmen on both Sides, that the French ſet it on in a very artificial Manner. They encourag'd the Engliſh to inſiſt on ſome extravagant Demands, and at the ſame Time preſs'd the Dutch not to yield to them. Theſe were Fineſſes in Politicks, too ſubtil to be obſerv'd by a Court and Miniſtry, whoſe Heads were full of Sham-Plots and Perſecution, and a Parliament that had given themſelves up to Bigotry and Penſions. As the French put the Dutch in hopes that if a Rupture ſhou'd follow, they wou'd aſſiſt them according to their Alliance, ſo they aſſur'd the Engliſh they wou'd do them no hurt. Downing before-mention'd, the New-England Pulpiteer, was then unemploy'd in England. The Biſhop of Salisbury tells us, "He was a "crafty fawning Man, who was ready to turn to "every Side that was uppermoſt, and to betray "thoſe who by their former Friendſhip and Ser- "vices thought they might depend on him; as "he did ſome of the Regicides, whom he got in- "to his Hands under Truſt, and then deliver'd "them up, particularly Col. Okey, whoſe Chap- "lain he had been. Cromwel employ'd him as his "Agent in Holland, where he had offer'd perſo- "ſonal Affronts both to the King and to the "Duke; yet he had by ſome baſe Practices got "himſelf to be ſo effectually recommended by "Monk (Obſerve what Inſtruments are made uſe of) "that all his former Offences were forgiven, "and he was ſent into Holland as the King's "Ambaſſador; whoſe Behaviour to the King "himſelf the States had obſerv'd, ſo they had "Reaſon to conclude he was ſent over with no "good

There was no viſible Cauſe of a War, " a Complaint of a Ship taken was ready to have " been ſatisfied, but Downing, the quondam Independant Parſon hinder'd it; wherefore it was " plain the King hated the Dutch, and ſome " cry'd they were ſo feeble, and the Engliſh ſo " much ſuperior to them, that a War wou'd hum- " ble them to an entire Submiſſion. The States " had treated and preſented him with great " Magnificence, and at a vaſt Charge, &c. as " has been ſhewn already." But out of hatred to the Presbyterian Religion, and love to the French, who deſir'd to ſee the Engliſh Hereticks deſtroy the Dutch, that they might the more eaſily deſtroy the Engliſh afterwards, no Endeavours were wanting in England to ſet both City and Country againſt the Hollanders, as Incroachers on the Commerce of the Engliſh Merchants. Turner, the Speaker, ſaid in his Speech, We find that beſides the inſufferable Indignities offer'd to your Royal Majeſty, the Dutch have in a few Years ſpoil'd your Subjects to the value of 800,000 Pounds. The inſufferable Indignities were not ſpoken of when they were waſting their Treaſure in Treats upon him at the Hague, before he took Shipping for England. Both Houſes of Parliament had addreſs'd him to procure Satisfaction of the Dutch, with Promiſes to ſtand by him with their Lives and Fortunes; and they gave him Money enough to have maintain'd the Honour of England, if he had had it at Heart ſo much as maintaining the Profuſion, Luxury, and Vanity of the Female Court.

Coke, p. 141. The greateſt Cauſe of Complaint againſt the Dutch, was for Injuries done to Sir William Courteen, and Sir Paul Pindar, and the Perſon to whom he granted Letters of Repriſal, Sir Edward Turner did, no doubt, forward the Buſineſs in Parliament to the utmoſt of his Power: But the true Reaſon was probably the ſecret League between Lewis XIV. and Charles II. ſuppos'd to be concluded by the Queen Mother, with the Aſſiſtance of Monſieur Colbert, who ſucceeded as Prime Miniſter in France after Cardinal Mazarine's Death. Colbert's Agent, Abbot Primi, gave a clear Account of this Treaty, in a Book printed by Authority at Paris, in the Year 1682, and ſuppreſs'd upon Complaint of Lord Preſton, the Engliſh Ambaſſador, and the Abbot ſent to the Baſtile for ten Days only. However, we have another Authority for it in Sir William Temple's Letters, and another ſtill, that of Dr. Jonathan Swift, Dean of St. Patrick's, who teſtifies, that he had that Information from the Author himſelf, That the Diſcovery happen'd to fall from the King's own Mouth, when an accidental Paſſion had render'd him unguarded. In purſuance of this League, the learned Acherly tells us, " Was the " Declaration of War made the 22d of February, " 1664, againſt the Dutch, in order to bear down " that Proteſtant Power? The Pretences were, to " recover Satisfaction for the Wrongs which the " Engliſh had ſuffer'd in Trade.

Sir Richard Fanſhaw was ſent Ambaſſador to Spain, to engage that King in the intended War againſt the Hollanders; but alas, the Spaniſh Court knew better than to be led away with the Bugbears, Common-wealth's Men and Schiſmaticks, while the French King was daily encreaſing in Ambition and Power, and threaten'd to break in upon them on all Sides, as ſoon as their weak Monarch dy'd, which was every Day expected. They no more look'd upon the Dutch as Rebels, but as their beſt Friends and Allies, in Caſe of a War in Flanders, which they cou'd no longer doubt wou'd be unavoidable on the King of Spain's Death; and the French King by ſuch an Addition of Power in the Netherlands, wou'd become ſtrong enough to give Laws to all his Neighbours. The Engliſh Miniſters and Parliament never thought of France and the Netherlands; their Heads were full of deſtroying the Presbyterians where-ever they found them; and without either Alliances, or any juſt Reaſon, they hurry'd the Nation into a War, in which whatever Side was Conqueror, they were both ſure to be ruin'd at the end of it. Biſhop Burnet has aſſur'd us, There was no viſible Cauſe of a War; the inviſible one muſt then be, that the Dutch were Proteſtants, that they were Friends to Liberty, and as ſuch, hated and dreaded by all Promoters of Tyranny, Popery, and Perſecution. The Biſhop of Saliſbury again; The Grounds of this War were ſo ſlight, that it was viſible there was ſomewhat more at bottom than openly own'd. A great Comet which appear'd then, rais'd the Apprehenſions of the People. The Houſe of Commons was ſo far from examining nicely into the Grounds of the War, that without any Difficulty they gave the King two Millions and a half for carrying it on; and as ſoon as the War broke out, a moſt terrible Plague broke out alſo.

It may well be wonder'd at, that an Engliſh Parliament ſhou'd not ſee all this. A true Engliſh Parliament wou'd have ſeen it, and inſtead of addreſſing for a War with the Dutch, wou'd have addreſs'd for a Peace with our ſelves. I have more than once obſerv'd what kind of Aſſembly this was, but it is better explain'd in the State Tracts. The Act which repeal'd the Triennial Bill, " left the King at Liberty to conti- Vol. II. p. 340.

" ſcandalous Proceeding was manifeſt, and con-

" (through whoſe Hands much publick Money
" then paſs'd) in the Houſe of Commons, who
" acknowledg'd he paid annually many and great

" ſtill more hereafter." What cou'd be expected from ſuch an Aſſembly, but ſuch Bills as Bartholomew Acts, Conventicle Acts, Corporation Acts, Acts againſt Parliaments, &c.

Downing demanded Reparation of the States in ſo inſolent a Manner, that the French Ambaſſador D'Eſtrades was aſham'd of him. The States ſent Van Goch into England to ward off the Blow, and to offer Satisfaction, when the Accounts of Damages on both Sides were liquidated. Echard picks up a ſilly Pretence for the War, out of a Letter written by a conceal'd Papiſt to the Ambaſſador Fanſhaw in Spain, which is that upon Downing's bullying the States, and threatning them with War inſtead of paying down the 800,000 Pounds at Demand, they order'd Ships to be got ready for their Defence in caſe they were attack'd before the Accounts were fairly ſtated, and that conceal'd Papiſt Bennet, ſo the Lord

A.D.1664 Briſtol call'd him, tells Ambaſſador Fanſhaw, that to prepare for Defence is a Declaration of War. One may expect rare Politicians from ſuch fine Reaſoners! The Dutch knew full well what was intended againſt them, by Intelligence from their Friends both in England and France. Lud-

Growth of Popery, low writes, " Some of the moſt eminent Pro-
" teſtants in France ſent into Holland, to give In" formation that the Deſtruction of the whole
" Proteſtant Party was intended, and to adviſe the " States to make the beſt Preparations they cou'd
" for their Defence, aſſuring them, if they ſhou'd
" be borndown in the War, the Reform'd Reli" gion wou'd ſoon be extinguiſh'd in France.

In the mean time the Engliſh King, ſays the Hiſtorian, made it his Buſineſs and his great Pleaſure to viſit his Docks, and in November the Duke of York, Prince Rupert, and the Earl of Sandwich joining ſeveral great Squadrons of Men of War, form'd a Fleet, which ſtruck Terror upon the Coaſts of Holland, and took ſeveral Ships laden with Wine and Brandy, bound from Bourdeaux to Holland, which, according to Mr. Archdeacon, were condemn'd as lawful Prize, tho' no War had been actually declar'd. This Proceeding, continues he, was thought to be more arbitrary than was allow'd by the Law of Nations. But then he adviſes us not to blame the King or his Miniſters for it; it was not their Doing. He ſeems to be willing to give his Oath, that it was no foreign Project, but the Cry of all the great Merchants, and of the City of London. France, according to his Information or Underſtanding, had nothing to do with it. The Spaniards were better inform'd, and underſtood better, who, in a Memorial deliver'd to the States ſometime after, ſay, The French procur'd with a premeditated and private Deſign, a War with England, to weaken the United Provinces, and afterward to tyrannize over both. He knew not, or takes no Notice of it, that the King and his Miniſters had, by various Artifices and Rumours, been working up the Spirits of the trading People with Hopes of procuring them golden Heaps of Satisfaction for ſmall Damages, which are unavoidable between Nations ſo jealous of their Commerce, and ſo well able to ſupport it as the Engliſh and Dutch. The latter had diſpoſſeſs'd the Engliſh of their Factories at Cape de Verd, and an Iſland call'd Gogee, ſome Months before. What Pretenſions they had to them he does not tell us, only offers it as an Excuſe for taking the Dutch Bourdeaux Fleet in Breach of the Law of Nations, but does not ſay a Word of Holmes's Acts of Hoſtility againſt the Dutch in Guinea before that, for which the States Ambaſſador ask'd Satisfaction in vain, nor that Holmes had taken Cape de Verd from the Dutch long before that.

About a Year after the Dutch had ſpent ſo much Money on the King and his Brothers, Holmes not only took from them Cape de Verd, and ſeveral other Forts in Guinea, but the whole Province of New-Netherlands, now New-York, in America, in the Year 1661; yet does the ingenious and impartial Eckard juſtify King Charles's Breach of the Law of Nations, by the firſt Acts of Hoſtility of the Dutch in Guinea and New-York, only to recover thoſe Places which Holmes had ſurpriz'd and piratically taken by prior Acts of Hoſtility in time of profound Peace, and juſt when the State had been ſquandering their Treaſure upon the King and his Family: However, by a ſtrange logical Turn, he and his Flatterers call'd them Ungrateful as well as Inſolent, tho' he had never had it in his Power, and much leſs in his Will, to oblige them.

The Parliament met again on the 24th of November, and the King in his Speech mentions a vile Jealouſy rais'd of him, that when the Parliament had given him Money to carry on the War, he wou'd clap up a Peace, and put it into his Pocket. If the War had not been againſt the Hollanders, I ſhou'd have thought that Jealouſy not ſo unreaſonable as his Majeſty conceiv'd it; but there does not ſeem to be any Grounds for his ſo ſaying, from his Opinion of the Dutch Religion and Government. This Parliament then gave him that prodigious Sum of 2,500,000 Pounds before-mention'd, and the King promis'd them, that it ſhou'd all be expended to the Advantage and Satisfaction of his People. A.D.1664

The Members of Parliament who were moſt active in promoting this unnatural War, were known Favourers of Popery; the moſt buſy was Mr. Clifford, afterwards Lord Clifford, a Papiſt, who was Chairman of the Committee, who examin'd into the 800,000 Pounds Damages ſpoken of by Sir Edward Turner, and reported it to the Houſe.

The Compleat Hiſtorian has, in it's due Place, proper Paragraphs, which he calls the State of Religion, and he has ſome Remarkables that are not to be forgotten. The Church of England, ſays he, was happily eſtabliſh'd by the Act of Uniformity, the Wiſdom and Moderation of which the World has Reaſon to admire. The Moderation and Wiſdom of this Remark of his will not bear remarking, it is below Reflection. He then informs us, Mr. Edmund Calamy was the firſt that broke thro' it to preach in his own Church, to which God had given him a Call, when the Congregation was diſappointed of a Sermon. It looks like a Plot, ſays he, for he preach'd upon the Ark of God, and then comes his Wiſdom and Moderation. He cou'd not be thought leſs than a ſeditious, as well as a diſabled Preacher. This Writer being, as I am inform'd, a Preacher himſelf, wou'd have more adorn'd the Function, had he let his Charity have appear'd more on this Occaſion, and not have cenſur'd two Miniſters of the Goſpel as in a Plot, one to be abſent, and another preſent, for the promoting of Sedition. Beſides, it is not probable, that ſo good a Churchman as the Miniſter muſt be, who was got into Mr. Calamy's Pulpit after he was pull'd out of it by the late Act, wou'd be acceſſary to ſuch a ſeditious Lecture. The Truth is, the Diſcourſe was unpremeditated, and purely occaſion'd by the Diſappointment. What was ſaid in the Sermon about the Danger the Reform'd Church of England was in, is well explain'd by Dr. Calamy, Grandſon of the Gentleman we are ſpeaking of. As Circumſtances then were, there might well be a Concern ſtirring for ſerious Religion, which was in no ſmall Danger. And had this Author wav'd that Reflection, his Work wou'd not have loſt any of its Beauty. I ſhou'd have been at the Pains to have pointed to thoſe Beauties in his Work, as I have done in Echard's, had they been as worthy of it. The Writer is delighted with the Execution of the new Law upon him; Mr Calamy was committed to Newgate by the Lord Mayor, Sir John Robinſon, where, according to the Hiſtorian, he lay but a few Days before he was diſcharg'd by his Majeſty's expreſs Order, without the due Manner of a legal Diſcharge. You ſee how ſorry he is for it; and again, which brought a Contempt upon the Law and Church. How long it had been a Law, and what a Law it was, we have ſeen already. Dr. Calamy repreſents it thus, He was ſoon releas'd, when it was ſeen what a Reſort of Perſons of all Qualities there went to him in Newgate.

The next Eccleſiaſtical Affair of greateſt Importance, ſays the Compleat Hiſtorian, was the providing a better Maintenance for the conform-

A.D.1664 ing Clergy. There was a pious Diſpoſition in the Commons to make every Benefice a Cure of Comfort and Credit, which is an Explanation of that comfortable Importance elſewhere mention'd: Then he ſpeaks of the Plot in Yorkſhire for the Presbyterians and Republicans, and complains that the Uniformity Act, and Conventicle Act, were not ſteadily executed. A new Order was iſſu'd for all Rectors, Vicars and Curates, to read Divine Service in their Surplices; and thus ſtands the State of Religion with him, 'till the breaking out of the Dutch War.

We muſt not forget that Mr. Prynne, having taken upon him to amend an Act of Parliament, after it had been read in the Houſe, was reprimanded by Mr. Speaker; nor can we be juſt to Truth, unleſs we remember that Lord Clarendon was now very cool in the Affair of the Dutch War. The King intended, as he told the two Houſes, that the Lord Chancellor ſhou'd have enlarg'd upon that Matter, but he being indiſpos'd, the Steps that had been taken in it, were put into Writing, and deliver'd to them: 'Tis ſuppos'd that his Indiſpoſition was affected, and that obſerving there was no ſuch thing as a general Cry againſt the Dutch, but what the Court had work'd up in London and other Places, or elſe doubting the Iſſue of the War, or that he ſhou'd not have the Management of it, he was not forward in concerning himſelf in it. Indeed his Intereſt ſunk lower and lower every Day, and it was not long before he became the Subject of the Duke of Buckingham, and other witty Lords Mirth and Mimickry; yet he continu'd in his Poſt as long as he cou'd, and let them be as merry and as witty as they wou'd with him, he thought the Seal was worth more than all that.

1665. This very terrible Year opens with the Dutch War. If I took the ſame Liberty with divine Providence as the reverend Hiſtorians do, I cou'd not avoid applying all the dreadful Calamities of this and the following Year, War, Plague, and Fire, to the Judgments of Heaven, for the Lewdneſs, Profaneneſs, Deceit, and Cruelty of the Times; in which there was not the leaſt Appearance of Religion or Virtue in the Courtiers, or their Creatures, and very little any where elſe throughout the whole Kingdom.

Times wicked.

Dreadful Calamities.

In February was publiſh'd his Majeſty's Declaration of War, with this Introduction.

At the Court at Whitehall, Feb. 22, 166$\frac{4}{5}$.

Declaration of War.

Preſent the King's moſt excellent Majeſty, Duke of York, Prince Rupert, Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Duke of Buckingham, Duke of Albemarle, Marquis of Dorcheſter, Lord Great Chamberlain, Lord Chamberlain, Earl of Berkſhire, Earl of Angleſey, Earl of Bath, Earl of Carliſle, Earl of Lauderdale, Earl of Carbery, Lord Wentworth, Lord Aſhley, Mr. Treaſurer, Mr. Secretary Morrice, Mr. Secretary Bennet, Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, Mr. Chancellor of the Dutchy. A.D.1665

I think the Names of them ought not to be forgotten, nor muſt we forget that we do not find in this Liſt, the principal Counſellors, the Earl of Southampton, and Earl of Clarendon; they wou'd not countenance this unjuſt War, not only with their Counſel, but with their Preſence at the Board.

The States having publiſh'd a Memorial in Anſwer to Sir George Downing's, the Compleat Hiſtorian calls it a Libel: Downing exhibiting a Memorial, the ſame compleat Writer terms the States Anſwer to it, A ſecond Libel, and he affirms, there were ſeveral Invectives in it againſt the Engliſh Nation, whereas the Dutch declar'd, their Quarrel was not againſt the People, but againſt the King of England, and that their Deſigns in the defenſive War, was only to ſecure themſelves againſt the double Dealing they had met with from the Engliſh Court.

Several Bills being ready for the Royal Aſſent, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and paſs'd them, particularly one for the Regulation of the Law, which muſt be an excellent one, it being ſo well regulated at preſent by that and other Helps ſince that. I ſhall repeat a Paragraph of the Speaker's Speech, and then have done with it, and with the Speaker. It is to ſhew what a Trifler he is, tho' he's a perfect Narciſſus, with reſpect to his Opinion of his Eloquence. He is about to preſent the King with a Bill to make a River or two Navigable, ſuch as the Wye and the Lugg, ſo often ſpoken of on the like Occaſions, and he cannot do this without a Speech too.

I ud. p. 183.

Coſmographers do agree, that this Iſland is incomparably furniſh'd with pleaſant Rivers, like Veins in the natural Body, which convey the Blood into all the Parts, whereby the whole is nouriſh'd and made uſeful; therefore we have prepar'd ſome Bills for making ſmall Rivers navigable: A Thing that in other Countries hath been more experienc'd, and hath been found very advantagious; it eaſeth the People of their great Charge of Land Carriages, preſerves the High-ways, which are daily worn out with Waggons, carrying exceſſive Burthens: It breeds up a Nurſery of Watermen, which upon Occaſion, will prove good Seamen, and with much more Facility maintains Intercourſe and Communication between Cities and Countries. It will be a hard Matter to meet with any thing more impertinent than this, in all Orators, antient and modern. The King's Majeſty, the moſt Honourable Lords, and moſt Reverend Biſhops, the Honourable Repreſentatives of the People of England, are held in Attention by Sir Edward Turner, while he tells them there are Rivers in England, and that Water Carriage is cheaper than Land Carriage. It was in this Seſſion of Parliament that a Clauſe was put in the Act for the Royal Aid, to oblige the Clergy to pay Taxes in the ſame Manner their Neighbours did, which before were levy'd upon them by Grants in Convocation, and Mr. Echard tells us, they were pleas'd to ſubmit to it.

Turner's ridiculous Speech.

Clergy p. 129. Tax'd with the Laity.

He and the Compleat Hiſtorian cry out againſt the Dutch for De Ruyter's leaving Sir John Lawſon in the Streights, when he was about humbling the proud Algerines, and paſſing thence to Barbados, and from thence to Cape de Verd, as has been obſerv'd already, inglorioufly beginning a Piratick War, under the ſacred Bands of Friendſhip. He ſays not a Syllable of Sir Robert

A. D. 1665 bert Holmes's Piratick War on the Dutch in Guinea, before De Ruyter's Expedition at Cape de Verd.

The Fleet, and the Duke of York the Admiral, being ready, the Archdeacon informs us, that the Court took a proper and pious Care to compleat the Preparations, by an Order for a general Faſt, on April the 5th, to emplore the Bleſſing of God on his Majeſty's Forces againſt the Dutch in an unjuſt War, as my Lord of Sarum juſtly terms it. What a monſtrous Mixture is here, Faſting and Lewdneſs, Injuſtice and Piety! The two Popiſh Queens, the King's Mother, and his Wife, did eminently manifeſt their Zeal on this Occaſion (It is the Archdeacon who tells it) and commanded all their Friars and Prieſts, their Men-Servants and Maid-Servants to ſet themſelves apart with entire Abſtinence, and extraordinary Devotions for the Service of the Day; to light up all their Tapers, tell over all their Beads, to bring out their moſt ſtately Idols, and worſhip with more than ordinary Idolatry, for the Deſtruction of the Presbyterian Hereticks of Holland. It requir'd but a ſmall Portion of common Underſtanding to conceal ſuch Infirmities in this Reign, which there was no need of expoſing. But never did Writer ſet up for an Hiſtorian with ſo little Judgment and Diſcretion. Acherly the Lawyer obſerves, The Circumſtances which attended this War, demonſtrated the ſecret Meaning to be for carrying on the ſecret Intereſt, to make the King abſolute Maſter of his Parliaments; for no ſort of People were ſo zealous in promoting it, as the Papiſts, the Queen Mother, and the Queen Conſort, did both eminently manifeſt their Zeal, &c.

The Part the French had in this War, is too well known to ſay any thing of their Endeavours to mediate a Peace between the King and the States, or to take Notice of Monſieur Courtin's, and Monſieur Veneuil's extraordinary Embaſſy on that Negotiation. Their Maſter, Lewis XIV. muſt have as mean an Opinion of the Underſtandings, as of the Honeſty of the Engliſh, if he thought he cou'd make them believe that he was in earneſt, when he talk'd of Peace, while he was on both Sides fomenting the War; but he was oblig'd by his Treaties with the Dutch to aſſiſt them, in caſe they ſhou'd be attack'd, and this Negotiation was only to amuſe them, and gain Time while they were deſtroying one another, than which nothing cou'd better prepare the Way for his future Conqueſts.

The firſt Action of Note which happen'd in this War, was the taking a Dutch Caper of ſeven Guns, and two Direction Ships, one of Thirty-two Guns and Eighty Men, which was taken by the Diamond, Capt. Golding, who was kill'd in the Engagement; the other of Twenty-two Guns and Sixty Men, was taken by the Yarmouth. Young Evertz, Son of the Admiral, commanded one of the Direction Ships, whoſe Father having done good Offices for the King when he was in Holland, his Majeſty order'd him to be ſet at Liberty, and an Hundred Pounds to be paid him, to carry him home.

Sea Fight between the Engliſh and Dutch.

On the 2d of June, the Duke of York, with about 110 Men of War, gave Battle to the Dutch Fleet off the Coaſt of Harwich. The Dutch Admiral Opdam, fell Side to Side with him, and the Fight was fierce and bloody; at laſt Opdam's great Ship was blown up, either by Accident a-board her, or by the Fire of the Engliſh, and it threw the Hollanders into ſo great a Conſternation, that the Engliſh obtain'd a ſignal Victory, and purſu'd the Dutch with good Execution, 'till a Stop was put to it. I ſhall leave Echard here, and borrow none of his Medals nor Mottos on the Deſtruction of the Dutch, but follow the Biſhop of Sarum.

As ſoon as the Hollanders ſteer'd off, a Council of War was call'd to conſult the Method of Action, when they ſhou'd come up with them. In that Council Pen, who commanded under the Duke, happen'd to ſay, We muſt prepare for hotter Work in the next Engagement. He knew well enough the Courage of the Dutch was never ſo high, as when they were deſperate. The Earl of Montague, who was then a Volunteer, and one of the Duke's Court, ſaid, it very viſibly made an Impreſſion, and all the Duke's Domeſticks cry'd, He had got Honour enough, why ſhou'd he venture a ſecond Time? When Matters were ſettled, they went to ſleep, and the Duke order'd a Call to be given him, when they ſhou'd come up with the Dutch Fleet. It is not known what paſt between the Duke and Brounker, who was of the Bed-Chamber, and was then in waiting; but he came to Pen, as from the Duke, and ſaid the Duke order'd the Sail to be ſlacken'd. Pen was ſtruck with the Order, but did not go to argue the Matter with the Duke as he ought to have done. He obey'd the Order, and when the Duke awoke, he came out on the Quarter-Deck, ſeeming amaz'd to ſee the Sails ſlacken'd, and that thereby all Hope of overtaking the Dutch was loſt. He queſtion'd Pen upon it; Pen put it on Brounker, who ſaid nothing. The Duke deny'd he had given any ſuch Order, but he neither puniſh'd Brounker for carrying it, nor Pen for obeying it. He indeed put Brounker out of his Service, and it was ſaid, he durſt do no more, becauſe he was ſo much in the King's Favour, and in the Miſtreſſes. Pen was more in his Favour after that than ever before, which he continu'd to his Son after him, tho' a Quaker, and it was thought that all that Favour was to oblige him to keep the Secret. Lord Montague did believe that the Duke was ſtruck, ſeeing the Earl of Falmouth, the King's Favourite, the Lord Muskerry, and Mr. Boyl kill'd very near him, and that he had no Mind to engage again. Nay, according to Acherly, it had ſuch an Effect upon him, that it deterr'd him from venturing any more on Board the Fleet. Biſhop Burnet adds, 'twas thought Pen had been privately with him. If Brounker was ſo much in Fault as he ſeem'd to be, the Duke, in the Paſſion that this muſt have rais'd in him, wou'd have proceeded to greater Extremities, and not have acted with ſo much Phlegm. This prov'd the breaking the Deſigns of the King's whole Reign. Coke gives it another Turn, tho' not much better; If it had not been for fear of diſturbing the Duke's Nights Reſt, it's believ'd the whole Dutch Fleet might have been deſtroy'd. They loſt ſeventeen or eighteen ſtout Men of War, and beſides Admiral Opdam, there fell Cantineere, Stillingwolf and Stamp, all Flag Officers. De Wit, Penſionary of Holland, who had then the Direction of the Dutch Affairs, was ſo apprehenſive of Miſmanagenent a-board their Fleet, that he reſolv'd to ſhare the Command of it in Perſon. Beſides the Perſons of Quality above-mention'd, there were kill'd on the Engliſh Side, the Earl of Marlborough, who was only a Captain of a Ship, Rear-Admiral Sampſon, and Vice-Admiral Sir John Lawſon ſoon after dy'd of his Wounds.

Bp. Burnet, p. 219.

Now, ſays Echard, the Duke of York was in the Height of his Glory. He then reckons up how it was, and among other Degrees of it, tells us, he had the Wine Licenſes beſtow'd upon him. Soon after this Battle, the Queen-Mother return'd to France. It being reſolv'd that his Royal Highneſs ſhou'd not venture his Perſon in another Sea Fight, the Command of the Fleet was diſpos'd of thus; Edward Earl of Sandwich, Admirals.

A.D. 1665 Sandwich, Admiral, Sir George Ayſcue, Vice-Admiral, Sir Thomas Tiddiman, Rear-Admiral, Sir William Penn, Admiral of the White, Sir William Berkley, Vice-Admiral, Sir Joſeph Jordan, Rear-Admiral, Sir Thomas Allen, Admiral of the Blue, Sir Chriſtopher Minns, Vice-Admiral, Sir John Harman, Rear-Admiral, Sir Edward Spragg, a Papiſt, Sir ---- Cuttings, and Sir Jeremy Smith were Captains. Which I take Notice to ſhew how his Majeſty rewarded his Sea-Officers, moſt of theſe being Knights of the laſt Dubbing.

Before Echard enters into the Hiſtory of the Fleet's next Enterpriſes, he tells us, that the Dutch waited for the Return of De Ruyter, who having been beaten off from Barbados, ſail'd to Newfoundland, where he plunder'd the Engliſh of their very Cloaths, a great Booty at St. John's, and took two Cod Veſſels, the Diamond of Plymouth, and the Unity of Dartmouth. I mention this to ſhew what an admirable Uſe he makes of his Hiſtorical Facts. With theſe few Prizes, continues he, De Ruyter crept home, and was immediately made Admiral of the Dutch Fleet, tho' the Superintendency was committed to De Wit, Huygens and Boreel, Deputies of the States General.

The Dutch, with very good Reaſon, were in Pain for their Eaſt-India, Smyrna and other Fleets, which were order'd North about, for the Earl of Sandwich was ſail'd in queſt of them; but they were got ſafe into the Harbour of Berghen in Norway; upon which the Archdeadon obliges the World with a Manuſcript Account of a Negotiation carry'd on with the King of Denmark, by Sir Gilbert Talbot who wrote it, to ſeize all that Treaſure in the Port of Berghen by the Engliſh Fleet, his Daniſh Majeſty only breaking the Laws of Treaties and Nations by delivering up his Allies into the Hands of their Enemies. But Sir Gilbert's Negotiation coming to nothing, I ſhall make no more uſe of his Manuſcript. The Earl of Sandwich did not ſeem to hearken ſo much to him as was neceſſary for carrying off thoſe rich Fleets. Sir Thomas Clifford was a-board the Engliſh Fleet, and was ſent into Berghen to diſcourſe the Governor, who putting him off with Excuſes, 'twas reſolv'd to force their Way into the Harbour: Accordingly Sir Thomas Tiddiman got in with a Squadron of Men of War, but had much ado to get out again; for the Commander of the Citadel, with the Aſſiſtance of the Holland Gunners, made no Shot in vain. So Tiddiman finding his Squadron ruin'd, and himſelf ready to ſink, was compell'd at length to ſlip his Cables, and fall off to the grand Fleet. Echard aſſures us, He went boldly in, and if the reſt of the Knight's Manuſcripts is no truer than that, it ought to have no Place in any Hiſtory but his own. For other Authors, tell us, Sir Thomas Tiddiman was order'd to attack the Dutch in the Harbour, but did not do it, as he might have done upon his firſt Approach; he only ſent to the Governor of the Caſtle to treat without. The Dutch within, alarm'd at the Danger, ſet all Hands at work that Night; ſo that by the Morning they had ſo fortify'd the Caſtle, that it was impoſſible for the Engliſh to force a Paſſage. There were few Perſons who did not cenſure the Attempt to bribe the King of Denmark, by an Offer of ſharing the Treaſure with him, to betray his Confederates. An Offer that did indeed ſo ſtagger his Daniſh Majeſty, that 'tis thought he cou'd not have reſiſted it, had the Engliſh had more Patience, and not deſtroy'd their Deſign by precipitating it. King Charles excus'd it, by ſaying, all Means were lawful to humble an inſolent and ungrateful Enemy. What is meant here by Ungrateful? What Obligations had his Majeſty laid upon them, beſides putting them to the Charge of 2 or 300,000 Crowns for his Entertainment a few Days? Part of the Engliſh Fleet fell in with ſome of the Dutch rich India and other Ships, and took very conſiderable Prizes. Sir Jeremy Smith was ſent with a Squadron into the Streights to carry on the War againſt the Dutch in that Sea. Sir Chriſtopher Minns commanded in the Channel, and kept the Hollanders from interrupting the Engliſh Commerce there; thence he ſail'd to the Mouth of the Elbe, where, as Mr. Archdeacon informs us, he had the Honour of a Viſit from the famous Swediſh General, Count Wrangle, and ſuch was the Concluſion of the firſt Year's War. A.D. 1665

Mr. Coke ſays, It ſeems God was not pleas'd at theſe Things, for this Year he ſent a horrible Plague, which raged over almoſt all Parts of England. Indeed it is well worth obſerving that there have been many Thouſands more of Men, Women, and Children, ſwept away by the Plague ſince the Houſe of Stuart began their Reigns in England, than is at leaſt recorded from the Beginning of Times to that. I always dread to make Judgments where it may be Heaven left Things to Second Cauſes, though nothing is more common in Echard, and other Eccleſiaſtical Writers; but really one cannot help thinking that the Firſt Cauſe mov'd in this, and the former Viſitations ſince the Death of Queen Elizabeth. There have been all along ſuch Diſſembling with God and Man, ſuch Perſecution, Oppreſſion, ſuch Wickedneſs and Impiety, Superſtition and Cruelty, which are the Provocations for Judgments, that it is hardly poſſible to read of theſe horrible Peſtilences, and of this in particular, without having Recourſe to Divine Vengeance. The laſt mention'd Author proceeds; The greateſt Plague which happen'd ſince Edward the Third's Time in England, was in the firſt Year of this King's Grandfather, James the Firſt; yet there was a greater in his Father, Charles the Firſt's Reign; and now a greater than either, in the ſixth Year of his actual Reign. Though Mr. Archdeacon is no very good Painter himſelf, yet he ſometimes lights upon a better Pencil than his own, and then one may make a little Uſe of him. " Death now " rode triumphant after a very different manner " than it had done in the Seas and Ocean, and " with a much more melancholy and formidable " Aſpect, terrifying and confounding Men of all " Religions and all Profeſſions. It was certainly " a diſmal thing to ſee the great Emporium of " the World deſolate, and ſcarce any thing ven- " dible but Coffins (he cannot help quibbling in " the midſt of the Peſtilence) and to be continu- " ally entertain'd with the daily Groans and " Cries from the Windows, Pray for us! and " the Nightly Calls, Bring out your Dead, which " like Dung were thrown into Carts and flung into " Pits, without numbring. But it was ſtill more " amazing to ſee the prodigious Mixture both of " Piety and Profaneneſs at the ſame Time, which " was thus: In one Houſe you might hear them " roaring under the Pangs of Death; in the next " Tippling, Whoring, and belching out Blaſ- " phemies againſt God: One Houſe ſhut up, " with a Red Croſs, and Lord have Mercy upon " us! the next open to all Uncleanneſs and Im- " piety, as altogether inſenſible of the Vengeance " of Heaven. The dreadful Plague. Lewdneſs and Impiety.

But what is ſtill more amazing than all this, is, that in the midſt of theſe Horrors, when one wou'd think the general Judgment ſhou'd have united all Minds in general Contrition, and Charity ſhou'd have melted the hardeſt Hearts, and have left no room but for Penitence and Pity, then, then, even then, were the perſecuting Biſhops, Sheldon, Pierce, Wrenn, Ward, Henchman, Blandford, Coſens, Hyde, Morley, Sterne, and the Doctors, their Creatures, contriving new Cruelties towards Proteſtant Diſſenters, as will be ſeen hereafter. There were ſeveral pious, learned, and reverend Biſhops and Doctors who abhorr'd that unchriſtian Temper, but the others had the King and his Miniſters, if not his Miſtreſſes, on their Side; and thoſe good Prelates and Divines cou'd only pray for the Peace of Chriſt's Church, under all Denominations.

A particular Deſcription of the Plague.

To take a more particular Survey of this devouring Peſtilence, let us refer to Authors of Credit and Humanity; Thomas Vincent, M. A. of Chriſt-Church Oxon, who had been turn'd out of his Living of St. Mary Magdalen Milk-ſtreet, for no other Crime than being of the Reform'd Religion, as profeſs'd in France, Holland, &c. wrote a Treatiſe of it, entitled, God's terrible Voice in the City, which he was well qualify'd to write, having continu'd there during the greateſt Violence of the Plague, preaching and viſiting of the Sick. He tells us in that Treatiſe, it was in Holland in 1664, and the ſame Year began in ſome remote Parts of England, though the Weekly-Bills of the City took Notice but of Three who then dy'd of that Diſeaſe. In the beginning of May, 1665, Nine dy'd of it in the Heart of the City, and Eight in the Suburbs. The next Week the Bill fell from Nine to Three. In the next Week it mounted from Three to Fourteen; in the next to Seventeen; in the next to Forty-three. In June the Number encreas'd from Forty-three to One hundred and twelve; the next Week to One hundred ſixty-eight; the next to Two hundred ſixty-ſeven; the next to Four hundred and ſeventy. In the firſt Week of July the Number aroſe to Seven hundred twenty-five. Thus we may obſerve, that in two Months the Bills of Mortality, in the Plague-Time, were but little more than double in Number to thoſe of the common Deaths, which muſt give Opportunity to Thouſands of Families to remove, and leave the City deſolate and helpleſs. In the ſecond Week of July, the Bills mounted to One thouſand and eighty-nine; the next to One thouſand eight hundred forty-three; the next to Two thouſand and ten. In the firſt Week in Auguſt the Number encreas'd to Two thouſand eight hundred and ſeventeen; the next to Three thouſand eight hundred and eighty; the next to Four thouſand two hundred thirty-ſeven; the next to Six thouſand one hundred and two. In September a Decreaſe of the Diſtemper was hop'd for, but it was not yet come to its Height: In the firſt Week there dy'd of it Six thouſand nine hundred eighty-eight; and though in the ſecond Week the Number abated to Six thouſand five hundred forty-four, yet in the third Week it aroſe to Seven thouſand one hundred ſixty-five, which was the higheſt. And then of the 130 Pariſhes in and about the City, there were but four which were not infected; and in theſe there were but few People remaining who were not gone into the Country. In the Houſe where Mr. Vincent liv'd, there were eight in Family, three Men, three Youths, an old Woman, and a Maid. It was the latter End of September before any of them were touch'd: The Maid was firſt ſeiz'd with the Diſtemper, which began with a ſhivering and trembling. It ſeiz'd her Spirits on the Monday, and on the Thurſday ſhe dy'd full of Tokens. On Friday one of the Youths had a ſwelling in his Groin, and on Sunday he dy'd with the Marks of the Diſtemper upon him. On the ſame Day another of the Youths ſicken'd, and on the Wedneſday following he dy'd. On Thurſday Night the Maſter of the Houſe fell ſick, and within a Day or two was full of Spots, but was ſtrangely recover'd, beyond his own, or others Expectations. I knew a Man and his Wife who liv'd at that time near Spittle-Fields, and were then in ſo mean Condition, that they cou'd not procure Help when it was to be purchas'd at a dear Rate. The Man was taken firſt, and ſo near Death, that his Wife expected ſhe muſt deliver up his Corpſe at the next Call, Bring out your Dead; but he mended viſibly before the Hour came, and recover'd. His Wife being ſeiz'd immediately after, he aſſiſted her in the ſame manner, till ſhe was in the ſame Danger, and had the ſame unexpected Recovery. They grew Wealthy as they grew in Years, and told me this Account of themſelves above forty Years after.

The Plague at the Height.

Particulars of the Peſtilence.

In the fourth Week in September there was a Decreaſe to Five thouſand five hundred thirty-eight. In the firſt Week in October there was a farther Decreaſe to Four thouſand nine hundred twenty-nine; in the next to Four thouſand three hundred twenty-ſeven; the next to Two thouſand ſix hundred ſixty-five; the next to One thouſand four hundred twenty-nine, and the next to One thouſand and thirty-one. The firſt Week in November there was an Encreaſe to One thouſand four hundred and fourteen, but it fell after to One thouſand and fifty, and the Week after to Six hundred fifty-two, and ſo leſſen'd more and more to the End of the Year. By which it appears that the Peſtilence did not rage above ſix Months, tho' ſome dy'd of it before May, and after November. The whole Number of thoſe who were reckon'd to die of the Plague in London this Year, was Sixty-eight thouſand five hundred ninety-ſix; but when we add by Computation, Baptiſts, Quakers, and others not number'd in the Bills of Mortality, the Sum will be ſtill greater. From London the Plague ſpread through many Counties. The Towns and Villages near the City were infected in June and July, and thoſe at a greater Diſtance in July and Auguſt.

The whole Number of the Dead.

Country infected.

Miniſters, Church and Diſſenting, ſtay in London.

Dr. Calamy informs us, That ſome Divines of the Eſtabliſhment maintain'd their Stations at that Time with a Primitive Zeal and Fervour. Which is not to be wonder'd at, there being a great Number of learned, pious, and able Divines of the Eſtabliſhment, who were Men of true Primitive Zeal, without that Bitterneſs which never accompanies Zeal but when it is falſe; and the Memory of thoſe godly, zealous Miniſters of the Church of England, is, and will be always reſpected, as are the Perſons of thoſe living Miniſters who imitate their Piety and Charity. And whenever another ſort of Clergy are mention'd, whether Biſhops or others, the Reflection is Perſonal to the Character of the Men, and not General, to that of the Reform'd Church of England, of which they were unworthy Members. Echard owns of the Perſecuted Clergy, "Several Miniſters in that ſad Time of Trial deſerted their Flocks, whoſe empty Pulpits were ſometimes charitably fill'd by thoſe of other Perſuaſions; whoſe ſeaſonable Fervour is ſaid to have had good Effects upon a wicked People." And to reward them for ſo doing, or rather to prevent their doing the like Good again, the Biſhops before-mention'd, or their Adherents, at that very Time got a Bill paſs'd in Parliament, to drive all thoſe Miniſters not only out of their Houſes in London, and all Corporation-Towns, but five Miles from the ſaid City and Corporations, as will be mention'd again immediately. As to the Miniſters of the Eſtabliſhment, who continu'd Preaching in London all the Time of the Plague, the Names of Dr. Walker, Dr. Horton, and Dr. Meriton, ſhew of what moderate Principles

A.D.1665 ciples they were. Among the Presbyterians, who diſtinguiſh'd themſelves in this dangerous and important Service, were the above-mention'd Mr. Vincent, Mr. Ckeſter, Mr. Franklin, Mr. Janaway, Mr. Turner, and Mr. Grimes; by whoſe aſſiduous Labours, and thoſe of their Brethren, Sermons were preach'd, and the Sick viſited, to the great Comfort of the Sick both in Body and Mind. The Cures for this raging Diſeaſe, beſides the Order of the Lord Mayor, Sir John Lawrence, the Aldermen, and Common-Council, of the 2d of September, for keeping conſtant Fires in the Streets and Lanes of London for three Days and Nights ſucceſſively, were, according to Mr. Archdeacon, 1. A Form of Prayer, drawn up by the Biſhops, and appointed by the King to be us'd in all Churches and Chapels within the Bills of Mortality, on every Wedneſday in the Week during the Contagion. 2. A Proclamation requiring all Officers and Soldiers who had ſerv'd the Parliament, or the two Protectors, to depart the Cities of London and Weſtminſter: He adds, It was believ'd the Biſhops Form of Prayer had extraordinary Effects; ſo liable is it to give the moſt terrible Subject in the World a Turn that is hardly conſiſtent with the Gravity of Hiſtory. He adds, The King manifeſted a Paternal Regard to his Subjects, by retiring firſt to Hampton-Court, and then to Salisbury, and leaving the City to the affectionate Care of the brave George Duke of Albemarle, and the glorious Behaviour of William Earl of Craven. The latter indeed behav'd very generouſly, and Archbiſhop Sheldon continu'd at Lambeth and Croydon all the Time of the greateſt Danger.

Echard thinks he has now ſome good Evidence of the Certainty of the Sham Plots; for that Ludlow freely informs us of ſome Negotiations between the Dutch and the Engliſh Refugees in Holland, Germany, and Switzerland, for their putting themſelves a-board the Dutch Fleet, and ſerving againſt King Charles in this War. But is it of Conſequence, that becauſe Lieutenant General Ludlow was willing to put himſelf at the Head of an Army of Republicans, to reſtore his darling Republick in England, that therefore he wou'd engage with a Serjeant of Foot, and a Brandy-man at one Time, and with Oldroyd, Aſhnith, Corney, and the Yorkſhire Fanaticks at another? What Logick is this! But 'tis the beſt he has. General Ludlow owns he was ready to make an Attempt with an Army of Foreign Proteſtants, to reſtore the Common-wealth. Several of his condemn'd Companions abroad expreſs'd the ſame Readineſs, ſo did Col. Sidney. It will not be deny'd; What then? Did they think that the doing ſo was what Echard calls Serving againſt their own natural Prince and Country? A late Author writes of this Matter with more Sobriety.

" I do not queſtion but General Ludlow did hold " Correſpondence with Mynheer Newport, and " the Dutch Miniſters of State, during their War " with the King of England; and that if they " wou'd have furniſh'd him with an Army, as they " once offer'd to do, he wou'd have landed with " them; as alſo, that Rathbone and his Brother " Soldiers wou'd have been among them. But " I can as ſoon believe Ludlow wou'd have made " Mr. Echard one of his Cabinet-Council, as have " truſted ſuch a Crew as the Archdeacon has " liſted for him. Ludlow, as much as he was " in the Wrong, believ'd doubtleſs he was in the " Right; That the King and his Miniſters had " unjuſtly ſtripp'd him of a large Fortune, and " condemn'd him to an ignominious Death, and " that it was very lawful for him to make Repri- " ſals; but he had too much good Senſe and Ho- " nour, too much Bravery and Virtue, making " Allowances for his miſtaken Principles, to do " any thing otherwiſe than by open Hoſtility, " which he look'd upon as fair War. The Laws " were againſt him, and had made him ſo guilty, " that nothing he cou'd act againſt King Charles " the Second, cou'd have added any thing to his " Puniſhment. A Man of Courage and Spirit, " in ſuch Circumſtances, cannot underſtand now " Tameneſs is a Duty, when a military Revenge " offers; and his entring into the Service of Hol- " land, when the prevailing Power in his own " Country had thrown him off, was doing no " more than Hanibal and Labienus of old, the " Prince of Conde, the Mareſchal Schomberg, and " many other renowned Heroes, have done on " the like Occaſion. But to think that he wou'd " have made ſuch a pitiful Wretch as Oldroyd " his Brother Plotter, or have conſpir'd with ſuch " pitiful Wretches as Tucker, Flint, and Cole, to " kill the King's Majeſty, his Grace General " Monk, and his Worſhip Sir Richard Browne, " is ſo incredible, that it makes the Fable more " modeſt than Hiſtory.'

About the Time that the Plague was at the Heighth, October the 9th, the King met the Parliament at Chriſt-church in Oxford, and in his Speech told them the Money was almoſt all gone which they gave him in the laſt Seſſions: A great deal of it to the Popiſh Biſhop of Munſter, who he ſaid was in the Bowels of the States General's Country, and he wanted Money not only to carry on the War againſt them, but alſo to defend himſelf againſt the French King, if he ſhou'd prefer their Friendſhip to his, of which he knew more than any one elſe. Parliament at Oxford.

The Lord Chancellor, whoſe Friends boaſt of his being againſt the Dutch War, did in his Speech expreſs as much Malignity againſt them as cou'd be expected from the moſt inveterate Enemy, " notwithſtanding the Indignities his " Majeſty had receiv'd in Holland, where he " had been little leſs proſcrib'd than in England." To ſay the contrary to this is a known Truth, is too little to expreſs the Falſity and Ingratitude: Turn to what the King ſaid to them before he embark'd for England, "They load us with ſuch " Reproaches as the Civility of no other Lan- " guage will admit the Relation: The Truth is, " they have a Dialect of Rudeneſs ſo peculiar " to their Language and their People, that it is " high Time for all Princes to oblige them to " ſome Reformation, if they intend to hold " Correſpondence and Commerce with them." Then he appeals to the Parliament Men, Whether the Countenances of the Presbyterians and other Diſſenters in England have not been more erect. His Words are, our Domeſtick Foes in all Places ſince the Beginning of the War. He adds then a Plot, which wanted nothing but a Lucky Day, and upon peruſing the Almanack, the 3d of September was pitch'd upon as having a great deal of Luck in it; for on that Day the Presbyterians were beaten at Dunbar, and on that Day Cromwel dy'd; therefore he adviſes them to provide againſt their Enemies at Home, and we ſhall, without Doubt, have ſome Act for it in a few Days. But before it cou'd paſs, Both Houſes, and alſo the Convocation in Oxford, made a Vote to thank the Univerſity for their unparellel'd Zeal in refuſing the Covenant, tho' the King had ſo often taken and ſworn it. The Archdeacon informs us, theſe Thanks were in a very ſolemn Manner preſented to the Univerſity in full Convocation by four of the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Lawrence Hyde and Sir Heneage Finch, Members for the Univerſity, and Sir John Birkenhead and Col. Giles Strangeways, who all were created Do- Sham Plot.

A. D. 1665 ctors of the Civil Law, November the 7th, as was alſo Sir Cyril Wyche, tho' he had taken his Maſter's Degree there before, when the Covenant was in full Force and Virtue.

Being heartily tired with Sir Edward Turner the Speaker's Speeches, we ſhall repeat no more of them, only remember, that when he preſented the King with the Five Mile Act, he call'd it Shibboleth. Echard will have it that it paſs'd with equal Vigour, Unanimity and Diſpatch; and he adds, It does not appear by any ſubſtantial Proof, that the Members had ever been yet led or induc'd to act contrary to their natural Inclination. There is ſomething after this ſo very falſe, that we cannot ſtay to reflect upon this Paſſage. We have mention'd how the Miniſters, at the Hazard of their Lives, ventur'd to preach and viſit the Sick in the Plague time; let us ſee what Biſhop Burnet ſays, "This was repreſented very odiouſly at Oxford; ſo a ſevere Bill was brought in, requiring all the ſilenc'd Miniſters to take an Oath, "declaring it was not lawful, on any Pretence whatſoever, to take Arms againſt the King, or any commiſſion'd by him; and that they wou'd not at any Time endeavour an Alteration in the Government of Church or State. Such as refus'd this were not admitted to come within five Miles of any City or Parliament Borough, or of the Church where they had ſerv'd. This was much oppos'd in both Houſes! (Mr. Echard's Unanimity) The Earl of Southampton ſpoke vehemently againſt it in the Houſe of Lords; he ſaid, He cou'd take no ſuch Oath himſelf; for how firm ſoever he had always been to the Church, yet, as Things were manag'd, he did not know but he himſelf might ſee Cauſe to endeavour an Alteration. Dr. Earl, Biſhop of Salisbury, declar'd himſelf much againſt this Act. Sheldon and Ward were the Biſhops that acted and argu'd moſt for it. All that were the ſecret Favourers of Popery promoted it; which is alſo obſerv'd by that learned Lawyer Mr. Acherly; tho' Echard is poſitive that this Parliament was under no Influence but the Rectitude of their Underſtandings and Wills. Acherly ſays, The Proteſtant Diſſenters ſhewing a manifeſt Diſinclination to the Dutch War, were by the Inſtigation of the Popiſh Cabal, puniſh'd by an Act call'd the Five Mile Act. Biſhop Burnet proceeds, while the Act was before the Houſe of Commons, "Vaughan, afterwards made Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, mov'd that the Word legally might be added to the Words commiſſion'd by the King. But Finch the Attorney-General ſaid, that was needleſs, ſince, unleſs the Commiſſion was legal, it was no Commiſſion; and to make it legal it muſt be iſſued out for a lawful Occaſion, and to Perſons capable of it, and muſt paſs in due Form of Law. The other inſiſted, that the Addition wou'd clear all Scruples, and procure them univerſal Compliance; but that cou'd not be obtain'd, for it was intended to lay Difficulties in the Way of thoſe againſt whom the Act was levell'd. When the Bill came to the Houſe of Lords, the Earl of Southampton mov'd for the ſame Addition, but was anſwer'd by the Earl of Angleſey, who had been a Covenant-taking Presbyterian." It was ſtrongly oppos'd by the Lord Wharton and Lord Aſhley, as well as the Earl of Southampton. The Penalty of the Act was forty Pounds, or ſix Months Impriſonment, for every Offence, unleſs in paſſing upon the Road. Mr. Locke, whom Echard calls the Anonymous Author, terms the Oath moſt Unlawful and Unjuſtifiable.

Five Mile Act.

We have ſhewn what Preparations were made for this Act, that it was promoted by Papiſts, that the Oath it enjoin'd was Unjuſtifiable and Unlawful; and let us now ſhew what baſe or falſe Arguments are made uſe of to juſtify it, and prove it lawful; they are in the Archdeacon's Hiſtory, and ſome of thoſe Paſſages that have ſunk it ſo low in the Opinion of honeſt and judicious Men. "It has been generally an Obſervation, that whatever Hardſhips the Diſſenting Party met, or felt from the Laws, they aroſe more from the Seditions of ſome of them than the religious Exerciſes of any of them." This is ſo ſcandalouſly falſe, that when the cruel Bartholomew Act paſs'd, the Diſſenters were in the Height of their Merit for RESTORING the King. "And that every Act of Parliament "made to their Detriment was founded upon the "Reality of ſome Plot or Conſpiracy againſt the "Nation's Peace." The Man who ſays it, knows that there was ſcarce a Perſon of common Senſe and common Honeſty all over England, who did not take them to be what Mr. Locke and other great Men call'd them, SHAM PLOTS. Which Plots and Conſpiracies "they had promoted and "encourag'd; ſo that what the Parliament did, "look'd more like Self-Preſervation than Perſecution." The Presbyterians, according to him, were about to turn the Parliament out of Doors, and the Rectors, Vicars, &c. out of their Churches, and ſo they were jayl'd, and plunder'd, and beggar'd, and ſtarv'd, purely to preſerve the Biſhops and Clergy from being ſo treated. He then wou'd glue together the Deſign of ſome Malecontents in Holland with the before-mention'd Sham Plots: For that the Malecontents did really intend to deliver the oppreſs'd, perſecuted Proteſtants in England from Perſecution and Oppreſſion, if they cou'd by the Aſſiſtance of Foreign Proteſtants, is not deny'd. The Vileneſs of the Inſinuation is, That becauſe ſome Engliſh, diſaffected Perſons, intended to ſerve in the Dutch War againſt King Charles, therefore Col. Sidney, Col. Ludlow, and others, had an Intention to have join'd with Aſhnith and Flint, two ſorry, hair-brain'd Fellows, in two Conſpiracies againſt the Engliſh Nation. Another Act paſs'd, enjoining Thomas Doleman, Joſeph Bamfield, Thomas Scott, Son to Mr. Thomas Scott, whom they had hang'd, drawn and quarter'd, and others in the Dutch Service, to return by a Day, under Penalty of High-Treaſon. Accordingly Major General Desborough, Colonel Thomas Kelſey, Col. John White, Major John Grove, Sir Robert Honeywood, Capt. Nicholas, and others, were ſummon'd to return to England before the 23d of July next enſuing, on Pain of being proceeded againſt as Traitors. Echard wou'd not tell us what Ludlow adds to this, "But "not being contented with this, they employ'd "a Jeſuit to procure the Penſioner John de Wit "to be murder'd, who not only undertook that "Employment, but promis'd to get me to be "aſſaſſinated alſo. Mynheer Niewport, who had "formerly been Ambaſſador for the States in "England, ſent his Son to Mr. Say to acquaint "him with this Matter, aſſuring him, that the "Jeſuit was already come to Holland, and that "they hop'd to ſeize him; but leſt other Perſons might be engag'd with him in the Deſign "againſt me, of whom they had no Information, "he deſir'd that I might be forthwith adviſ'd of "what they had diſcover'd, which Mr. Say punctually perform'd.

Not only the Dutch Republicans gave the Engliſh Refugees Encouragement to enter into that State's Service, but the moſt Monarchical Man that ever was in the World ſince the Monarchy of Nimrod, Lewis XIV. the French King, not only promis'd

A. D. 1665 promis'd them his Protection and Support, but actually ſent Orders to the Count D'Eſtrades his Ambaſſador at the Hague, to ſend Lieutenant General Ludlow a Paſs for his ſafe coming to Holland. The French Ambaſſador at Mentz met Col. Sidney at Frankfort, and ſhew'd him a Letter from Monſieur de Lionne Secretary of State, written in Cyphers by Order of the French King, in which he was commanded to give all the Engliſh Refugees all the Security the Government of France cou'd give, or they cou'd deſire, for the Safety of their Perſons. But General Ludlow wou'd have nothing to do with France, being well aſſur'd of the Treachery of that Court; and as to Holland, the Terms on which he propos'd to engage in the Dutch Service, were ſuch as a wiſe and gallant Man might own without bluſhing, conſidering the Circumſtances he was in. In the firſt Place he demanded Satisfaction of the States for the delivering up of Col. Okey, Col. Barkſtead and Mr. Corbett to that Foreſworn Covenanter Downing, Okey's Chaplain, who deliver'd him and them up to the Hangman. He demanded that the States ſhou'd publiſh a Declaration of their Error; that they ſhou'd promiſe to uſe their Endeavours to reſtore the Common-wealth to the Exerciſe of their Authority; that they ſhou'd furniſh ſuch a Number of Troops of the Reform'd Religion as might probably be ſufficient to protect the Engliſh, who ſhou'd come in to them, and oblige themſelves not to leave him and his Friends in a worſe Condition than he found them. For notwithſtanding what the Chancellor wrongfully ſays of General Ludlow in his florid Speeches, he was too wiſe and too wary to engage in any Deſign which had not a probable Proſpect of Succeſs, and was incapable of engaging in ſuch mad Conſpiracies as he charges him with, among a Rabble of obſcure Plotters.

Mr. Baxter's Account of the Five Mile Act.

Mr. Baxter's Account of the Five Mile Act, which the reverend Hiſtorian is ſo in Love with, is thus; " While God was conſuming the Peo" ple by theſe terrible Judgments, and the Non-
" conformiſts were labouring to ſave Mens Souls,
" the Parliament which ſate at Oxford, whither
" the King remov'd from the Danger of the " Plague, was buſy in making an Act of Con-
" finement, to make the ſilenc'd Miniſters Caſe
" incomparably harder than it was before, by " putting upon them a certain Oath, &c. So " little did the Senſe of God's terrible Judgments
" of the Neceſſities of many Hundred Thouſand
" ignorant Souls, or the Groans of the poor Peo" ple, or the Fear of the great and final Reckon-
" ing, affect the Hearts of the Prelatiſts, or ſtop
" them in their Way. The chief Promoters of " this among the Clergy were ſaid to be the " Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Dr. Seth Ward,
" Biſhop of Salisbury." The latter had not only taken the Covenant, but the Engagement; by both which he had renounc'd and abjur'd both the Church and the King. The Earl of Southampton ſaid in the Houſe of Lords, No honeſt Man wou'd take that Oath. As to Echard's Pretences for the Neceſſity of that Act on account of Sedition among the Proteſtant Diſſenting Preachers, Mr. Baxter obſerves, " The Act which impoſes this
" Oath openly accuſes the Nonconforming Mini-
" ſters of Seditious Doctrine, and ſuch heinous
" Crimes; wherefore, when it firſt came out, I " thought that at ſuch an Accuſation no inno-
" cent Perſons ſhould be ſilent, eſpecially when
" Papiſts, Strangers, and Poſterity may think
" that a recorded Statute is a ſufficient Hiſtory
" to prove us to be guilty." This is all the Compleat Hiſtorian and Echard have to ſay for the late Acts, however procur'd; They are the Law of the Land, the Laws of the Land, but Laws which future Parliaments have rejected with Indignation; nay, this very Parliament will, we find, bring in and paſs a Bill directly contrary to the Conventicle Act and the Uniformity Act, which was perfidiouſly loſt before it had the Royal Aſſent. Mr. Baxter drew up a Vindication of the Nonconformiſts againſt the Charge of Sedition. But Dr. Seaman and others perſuaded him againſt publiſhing it, giving for Reaſon, That the Malice of the Prelatiſts wou'd make an ill Uſe of it, and turn it all againſt themſelves. Mr. Baxter adds, Wiſe Stateſmen laugh'd at me for thinking that Reaſon wou'd be regarded by ſuch Men as we had to do with, as Sheldon, Ward, Gunning, Hyde, Keeling, and Turner, and wou'd not exaſperate them the more.

Baxt. Life, Part iii. p. 3.

The Miniſters finding the Preſſures of this Act ſo great, and ſo great the Loſs like to be to Cities and Corporations, ſome of them ſtudy'd how to take this unlawful Oath lawfully. Dr. Bates being much in ſeeming Favour with the Lord Chief Baron Bridgman, afterwards Lord Keeper, conſulted with him about it, and he promis'd to be at the next Seſſion, and to declare on the Bench of Juſtices openly, that by Endeavour to change the Church Government was meant only Unlawful Endeavour, which ſatisfying him, he thereby ſatisfy'd others, and ſo ſeveral Miniſters came in at the Seſſions of Peace and took the Oaths; as Dr. Bates, Dr. Jacomb, Mr. Samuel Clark, Mr. Sheffield, Mr. Hall, Mr. Church, Mr. Matthew Pool, Mr. Lood, Mr. Stancliffe, Mr. Rolls, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Smith, Mr. Arthur, Mr. Baſtwick, Mr. Brooks, Mr. Overton, Mr. Cary, Mr. Wildbore, Mr. Hooker, Mr. Mayo, Mr. Buſler, Mr. Newton of Taunton in Somerſetſhire, Mr. William Thomas of the ſame County, Mr. Cooper of Southwark.

Miniſters who took the Oath.

Dr. Conant in Northamptonſhire took the Oath, and conform'd fully ſometime after. Not only the Lord Bridgman but Judge Twiſden, Judge Browne, Judge Archer, Judge Windham, Judge Atkins, all the Judges then in London, declar'd, that only Tumultuous and Seditious Endeavours were meant, as did even Judge Keeling, who drew up the Act of Uniformity, and deſerves ſome Statue for it, which is not yet erected. Be it as it will, the Explanation did not ſatisfy many, and the poor Miniſters were forc'd to get Lodgings in Cottages, Barns, Stables, and wherever they cou'd have a Covering from the Inclemency of the Sky.

The Sedition before-mention'd is ſpoken of in the State Tracts; " Nothing is more notoriouſly
" known than that in the Reigns of the Houſe
" of Stuart many Church Arts and Court Pra" ctices were us'd to break in upon this happy
" Conſtitution, by raiſing the Power of the King
" above what it ought to be, and by reducing
" the Commons to a narrower Compaſs of Power
" than that of Right belongs to them. And 'tis al-
" ſo very well known, that whoſoever have ſhewn
" their Reſentments hereupon, have been repre-
" ſented as Common-wealths Men and Antimo-
" narchical, &c.

Vol. II. p. 635.

Upon the whole, as ſuch an Unlawful, Unjuſtifiable Oath was never impos'd upon a Chriſtian free People, ſo moſt certainly there was never ſuch a Thoughtleſs, Worthleſs Set of Men as thoſe, who promoted and procur'd it. They were for impoſing it on the whole Nation, and making the People of England a Nation of Knaves; for as Lord Southampton declar'd, No honeſt Man wou'd take it. That this National Knavery was not made the Law of the Land, as far as the Commons cou'd make it, was owing only to Accident, or rather to Providence, as the great Mr. Locke words it; " And the Providence

A.D. 1665 " by which this ſecond Bill was thrown out was " very remarkable, for Mr. Peregrine Bertie was " that Morning introduc'd into the Houſe by his " Brother the now Earl of Lindſey, and Sir Thomas Osborn now Lord Treaſurer, who all three " gave their Votes againſt that Bill, and the " Numbers were ſo even upon the Diviſion, that " their three Votes carry'd the Queſtion againſt " it. But we owe that Right to the Earl of " Lindſey and the Lord Treaſurer, as to acknow- " ledge that they have ſince made ample Satiſ- " faction for whatever Offence they gave either " the Church or Court in that Vote.

His Majeſty being ſo very hearty a Proteſtant, it wou'd be ungrateful not to take Notice, as the Archdeacon does, of his Civility to the Hugonots, who came to England, for which the French Church in the Savoy return'd him humble Thanks.

Michaelmas Term was kept at Oxford on Account of the Plague at London, and Keeling was there made Lord Chief Juſtice, to receive his Honour in the Place where the Bill he drew was ſo acceptable and praiſe-worthy.

His Majeſty declar'd in Council, and then wrote to the Lord Mayor, that both himſelf and his Royal Conſort wou'd wear neither Inſide nor Outſide of their Cloaths any thing but what was manufactur'd within his Kingdom of England, which his Majeſty did, ſays Echard, to reſtrain Extravagancy and promote good Husbandry by his Example, tho' at the very ſame Time the Prodigality of one of his Miſtreſſes only coſt him above 20,000 Pounds a Year.

Great-rakes the Stroker.

Mr. Valentine Greatrakes, the Iriſh Juſtice of Peace, came now to England, and the ſame Hiſtorian aſſures us, he cur'd the Kings-Evil with a Touch, which was an Invaſion of the Prerogative in this Reign. By a ſecond Impulſe, cries he, he cur'd Agues and Head-ach; by a third, Wounds and Ulcers; by other Impulſes Convulſions, Dropſies, &c. His Stand was in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, where other Counterfeits had alſo their Stands as well as he. The Lord Arlington introduc'd him to the King as a Rarity, and to uſe Echard's wiſe Words, many wiſe and eminent Men believ'd he cou'd with a Stroke cure all theſe Diſtempers, from whence he was call'd the Stroker, tho' in Truth he was a notorious Cheat, and ſneak'd off as ſoon as his Credit began to ſink. The Oxford Parliament gave the King 1,250,000 Pounds for carrying on the War againſt the Hollanders, and a Fleet was got ready early the next Year, great enough to have been a Glory to this Nation, and a Terror to others, had the Management been in the Hands of Men who were diſpos'd to make the beſt Uſe of their Power. It is objected to ſuch as call this War with Holland Unjuſt, that the Common-wealth of England made War with the Common-wealth of Holland; but that War was to humble, not to deſtroy them. The Parliament were able and willing to give a Check to the Ambition of France, if ſhe offer'd to take any Advantage of the Weakneſs of the Dutch, which King Charles was neither willing nor able to do, and cou'd not deſtroy the Dutch, without expoſing the Engliſh to Deſtruction. Van Goch the States Ambaſſador was ſtill in England when the King was at Oxford, but finding his Stay was in vain, he took his Audience of Leave, and the King ſent a Letter by him to his Maſters, wherein, after having charg'd them with being Authors of the War, he expreſs'd himſelf ready to come to ſuch a Treaty of Peace as he ſhou'd approve of. The Oxford Parliament was prorogu'd October the 31ſt, to meet again February the 20th, but they did not then ſit, continuing under ſeveral Prorogations almoſt a whole Year, which was one of the early Bleſſings produc'd by the Repeal of the Triennial Bill. A.D. 1666

Long Prorogation of Parliament.

If I remember the Viſit his Majeſty made to the College of Phyſicians after his Return to London, it is only to copy ſome of the quainteſt Hiſtory that ever I met with, after the quainteſt Hiſtorian, Mr. Archdeacon. " Here he ſaw the " Marble Statue of the famous Harvey, the great " Diſcoverer of the Blood Circulation, and heard " the Preſident Dr. George Ent with Eloquence " and Art, reading upon the Myſteries of Ana- " tomy, whom he there honour'd with Knight- " hood. There he ſaw the chief Phyſician Bates, " renown'd both in the Medical Skill and his " Knowledge in the Latin Tongue, and Fraſier " his chief Phyſician, and Gliſſon excellent in " Medicine, and ſucceſsful Micklethwayte, and " much eſteem'd Cox and Scarborough, famous " among the Muſes, and Wharton Secretary of " the Glandules, &c." To theſe I might have added ſeveral other fine Panegyricks of his in the next Page, as that of the Excellent and Exorbitant Sir Kenelm Digby a Papiſt, Son of Sir Evrard Digby, who was hang'd for the Gunpowder-Plot; but I leave him the Glory of handling ſuch ſublime Subjects, and go on with the Hiſtory.

1666. French King's Mock-War with England.

The French King finding the Dutch wou'd be oblig'd to make Peace with the King of England, if he did not diſſemble ſo far as to join with them in the War, 'till both Engliſh and Dutch had waſted their Treaſure and Strength, he in January publiſh'd a mock Declaration of War againſt England, which he intended to carry on no farther than wou'd encourage the Dutch to carry it on to their Ruin The Lord Hollis, King Charles's Ambaſſador in France, who was not in the Secret, labour'd as heartily to prevent the French King's Aſſiſting the Dutch, as if it had been his real Intention to aſſiſt them. 'Tis true, he ſent a Parcel of ſickly Soldiers, which rather infected than aſſiſted the Dutch Troops, and the Men of War which were to be his Quota, were ſo long a coming, and when come, did ſo little Service, that the Hollanders ſoon ſaw they had made Choice of the wrong Man to build their Hopes upon. Mr. Archdeacon inſerts a Paſſage out of a Letter from Chancellor Hyde to Sir William Temple, which he calls remarkable. " There is nothing now ought to be labour'd " with ſo much Induſtry and Dexterity as the " uniting England, Spain and Flanders, which " wou'd give, and which only can give Peace to " Chriſtendom; I am ſure our Maſter is paſ- " ſionately enclin'd to it;" that Maſter of theirs who five or ſix Years after, made another War with the Dutch, purely to give the French King an Opportunity to over-run, not only Flanders, but Holland. This is the Prince of whom Chancellor Hyde ſays, he is ſure that he is paſſionately enclin'd to unite England and Spain, for the Preſervation of the Netherlands. His Words are indeed remarkable.

King of Denmark aſſiſts the Dutch.

In the mean Time, the King of Denmark concluded a Treaty with the Dutch, which the Penetration of the Engliſh Miniſters cou'd not get a Hint of, 'till it was perfected. He was to lend the States Thirty Men of War, and ſome Land Forces, in Conſideration of 1,500,000 Livres a Year, as long as the War laſted. The Biſhop of Munſter, who had receiv'd a round Sum of Engliſh Money, to make an Irruption into Friezeland the laſt Summer, not being ſupply'd as plentiful as he expected from England, fell off, and concluded a Peace, by the Mediation of Brandenburg. The latter, and the Houſe of Luxenburg, were in Alliance with the States, and wou'd probably have been better Allies, had they not waited

A.D. 1666 waited to ſee what France wou'd do, and like the Dutch, made too much Dependance upon her. After the Biſhop of Munſter had abandon'd King Charles, the Bills of Exchange came from England to Sir William Temple at Bruſſels; but the beſt Service Sir William cou'd do, was to ſend them back again. Thus the King of England, ſays Mr. Archdeacon, was left deſtitute of his chief Friends. However, when he return'd to his Palace at Whitehall, it was to the infinite Joy of the Citizens. And have they not had good Reaſon for it in the unſpeakable Felicities of his Reign! They preſented him with an Addreſs upon it, and his Majeſty preſented the two Sheriffs, Robert Hanſon and William Hooker, with Knight-hood. After he was well ſettled at Whitehall, he publiſh'd his Declaration of War againſt France; the moſt remarkable Words of which are, The relying upon the Help of God Almighty in the Juſtice of our Cauſe, which Biſhop Burnet calls Unjuſt, Do declare, &c. The French King was more in earneſt in the War againſt the Engliſh than in that for the Dutch, and he had no ſooner reſolv'd upon his Declaration, than he ſent a ſtout Squadron of Ships to the Weſt-Indies. The Troops that were on Board, diſpoſſeſs'd the Engliſh of St. Chriſtopher's and other Places, and the Dutch drove them out of Surinam. The Compleat Hiſtorian informs us, that the French King did his Endeavours to engage Major General Lambert in his Intereſt, but he tells his Story ſo confuſedly, one can make nothing of it. "The "French King, to do ſecret Miſchief, ſends the "Governor of Chouſey over from France, in a "ſmall Boat, to carry a Letter to Major Gene- "ral Lambert there in Priſon, and to offer him "good Terms, for contriving to deliver up that "Iſland to the French." He does not tell us where he was in Priſon, nor what Iſland it was he was to deliver up. The laſt Place he mentions was St. Chriſtopher's, one of the Leeward Iſlands in America; I ſuppoſe he means St. Nicholas's Iſland, near Plymouth, General Lambert having been long confin'd there. He proceeds, "But this perfidious Governor being apprehend- "ed, did at laſt confeſs the whole Matter, and "he and his Pilot were executed on the common "Gallows, for Spies.

King Charles's mock War againſt France.

We have glorious Accounts in his Hiſtory, and Mr. Echard's, of a mighty Victory over the Dutch, obtain'd by the Duke of Albemarle, but I have better Authorities, and I ſhall copy Biſhop Burnet; "It was reſolv'd on, the Duke of York "ſhou'd not go to Sea, but that Monk ſhou'd "command the great Fleet of between Fifty and "Sixty Ships of the Line, and that Prince Rupert ſhou'd be ſent with a Squadron of about "Twenty-five Ships to meet the French Fleet, and "to hinder their Conjunction with the Dutch; "for the French had promis'd a Fleet to join "the Dutch, but never ſent it. Monk went out "ſo certain of Victory, that he ſeem'd only con- "cern'd for fear the Dutch ſhou'd not come out. "The Court flatter'd themſelves with the Hopes "of a very happy Year, but it prov'd a fatal "one." King Charles did not think ſo, he told his Parliament when he met them, I need not tell you the Succeſs of this Year, in which God hath given us great Succeſs. My Lord of Sarum proceeds, "The Dutch Fleet came out, De Wit "and ſome of the States being on Board, they "engag'd the Engliſh Fleet for two Days, in "which they had a manifeſt Superiority, but it "coſt them dear, for the Engliſh fought well. "The Dutch were ſuperior in Number, and were "ſo well furniſh'd with Chain Shot (a peculiar "Contrivance of which De Wit had the Honour "to be thought the Inventor) that the Engliſh "Fleet was quite unrigged, and Monk was in no "Condition to have work'd himſelf off, but his "Ships muſt have been all taken, ſunk or burnt, "if Prince Rupert, being yet in the Channel, "and hearing that they were engag'd, by the "continual Roaring of Guns, had not made all "poſſible haſte to get to them. He came in good "Time, and the Dutch, who had ſuffer'd ſo "much, ſeeing ſo great Force come up, ſteer'd "off. He was in no Condition to purſue them, "but brought off our Fleet, which ſav'd us a "great Loſs, that ſeem'd otherwiſe unavoidable." Monk's Fleet having been ſo miſerably ſhatter'd by De Wit's (the Biſhop again) the Court gave out that it was a Victory. Echard and the Compleat Hiſtorian give out the ſame; however, 'tis certain his Conduct was blam'd even by Chancellor Hyde himſelf, tho' for ſo many Years he had been his good Lord General; and publick Thankſgivings were order'd, which, ſays Biſhop Burnet, was a horrid Mocking of God, and a Lying to the World. I have avoided making uſe of that ſtrong Phraſe, tho' I have been provok'd to it, in almoſt every Page of their Hiſtories, either in Whole or in Part, by Miſ-repreſentation, Prevarication or downright Falſity. Biſhop Burnet adds, We had in one Reſpect, Reaſon to thank God, that we had not loſt our whole Fleet; a new Felicity which Monk was like to bring upon us. We loſt Sir William Berkley, and Sir Chriſtopher Minns, two gallant Officers, in this unhappy Engagement; Sir George Ayſcue's large Ship the Prince ran aſhoar, was ſtranded, burnt, and Sir George taken Priſoner. Sir John Harman behav'd with great Bravery, and the brave Engliſh Officers and Seamen deſerv'd a better Cauſe, and better Succeſs: The dividing the Fleet before the Battle, is much cenſur'd. Coke reflects upon it, 'Tis left a Problem, whether it were a greater Treachery to divide the Fleet, or Madneſs to fight the Dutch with the reſt, when they cou'd not uſe their lower Tire of Guns. One might be very ready to believe Monk to be Treacherous, if he had any Intereſt to promote by it, for he has prov'd himſelf to be guilty of the baſeſt Treachery and Ingratitude, but he had no Market to make by it, and beſides, the Fleet was not entirely at his Diſpoſal. The Dutch made great Rejoicings for this dear bought Victory, and demanded of the French King, their hopeful Ally, that Te Deum might be ſung for it at Paris, but he refus'd it.

A.D. 1666 Monk in Diſtreſs, relev'd by Prince Rupert.

The Loſs and Damage which the Engliſh ſuſtain'd in the laſt Fight, gave the Dutch an Opportunity to put out to Sea, and ride braving upon the Engliſh Coaſts three Weeks or a Month before the Duke of York, Lord Admiral, cou'd get the Fleet repair'd and refitted. But upon the 17th of July the Engliſh alſo put to Sea, and the Dutch retir'd to their own Coaſts, where the Engliſh engag'd them again on the 25th, beat the Dutch, and forc'd them into their Harbours. In this Fight, Evertz (Brother to that Evertz, kill'd by Sir John Harman) Admiral of the Zealand Squadron, Tirich Hiddes of the Friezeland Squadron, Vice-Admiral Conder, and ſix Captains were kill'd, and Vice-Admiral Bancker's Ship, and the beſt Ship of Harlem, were taken and burnt. Echard tells us of a Farce which was play'd amidſt this Trajedy, and is as ſerious as if it was worth telling; "The Enemy met with a ridiculous kind of "Mortification. The Fanfan, a Sort of a Plea- "ſure-Boat made for Prince Rupert, made up "with her Oars to De Ruyter himſelf, and bring- "ing her two little Guns on one Side, continu'd "for near an Hour, plying Broad ſides, to the "great Laughter of the Engliſh and Indignation "of the Dutch, to ſee their chief Admiral at-

Second Fight this Year.

"tack'd

A D 1666 " tack'd by a ſingle Sloop." He then delights himſelf with the Story of Sir Robert Holmes's Landing in the Iſle of Schelling, and burning Brandaris, an open defenceleſs Town, making a Bonfire of Ships and Houſes. Holmes had a Piratical Genius, and was the fitteſt Man in the Fleet for making ſuch ſort of Bonfires and deſtroying, when Fighting was over. He ſent in five Fire-Ships among a Fleet of 150 Dutch Merchant Men at the Vlie, near the Mouth of the Texel, and deſtroy'd moſt of them; in which the Compleat Hiſtorians take infinite Pleaſure, but ſober Writers ſpeak otherwiſe, particularly Mr. Baxter. " Many mutter'd that it was not wiſe-
" ly done, to provoke the Dutch, by burning
" their Houſes, when it was eaſy for them to do
" the like by us on our Sea Coaſts. It was no
" good Sign of future Proſperity, when thoſe that " believ'd not that there was a God, wou'd give " him ſolemn Thanks for the unprofitable Burn" ing of the Houſes of innocent Proteſtants; but " our Height was quickly taken down by our " great Loſſes, &c.

Upon the 16th of Auguſt the Dutch put to Sea again, and now the Engliſh had ten or twelve Men of War more than the Dutch, which was the only Time in this, and the other Dutch War, the Engliſh had ſo many Men of War as the Dutch, and to the Amazement of all People, the Dutch forſook their own Coaſt, and ſail'd towards that of France: For which, ſays Coke, " No other
" Reaſon can be given, but that the French
" King, who equally lov'd the Dutch and Eng-
" liſh, had decoy'd the Dutch to join that invi-
" ſible Fleet, which we divided ours to fight
" with. The Engliſh purſu'd the Dutch thro'
" the Streights, between Dover and Calais, and
" were ready to engage them, when by a terri" ble Storm, the Wind drove the Engliſh to an
" Anchor at St. Hellen's Point, where in the Paſ-
" ſage, the St. Andrew, a ſecond Rate, broke
" her Back upon a Sand." The Dutch came to an Anchor in the Bay of Bulloigne, and the Wind about the 8th of September turning, brought the Dutch home before the Engliſh cou'd engage them.

The very great Wickedneſs of introducing the Fire of London, with a Tale of a Plot carry'd on by Diſſenters, is fit for no Hiſtory but the compleat One, and its Copy the Archdeacon's. It is done to throw off any Suſpicion of Guilt from the Papiſts. I have ſet the Negociation with General Ludlow in a fair Light. Echard has his Memoirs before him, in which he had read, that Ludlow wou'd not engage with the Dutch, but on certain Conditions, which they did not think fit to comply with, and he bleſſes God that he had not engag'd with them; ſince, by the Treaty of Peace ſoon after concluded, they oblig'd themſelves to deliver up the very Man whom they ſo much courted to ſerve them. Yet does Echard with unparellel'd Aſſurance affirm that Rathbone's Plot was a Concatenation with Ludlow's, and to honour Rathbone, and make ſome body of him, gives him the Command of a Regiment. His fellow Plotters were, Thomas Flint, William Saunders, Henry Tucker, Thomas Evans, John Myles, William Weſcot, who beſides killing the King, were to kill alſo General George Monk, Alderman Sir John Robinſon, and Alderman Sir Richard Browne, and when they had knock'd them on the Head, they were to declare for an equal Diviſion of Lands. Mr. Ludlow was to put himſelf in Arms, and come over to fight for ſome Land. He had enough of his own, if they wou'd have let him enjoy it; he had Maiden-Bradley in Wiltſhire, but Sir Edward Seymour kept it from him, and ſeveral other Mannors in Wilt- ſhire and Somerſetſhire, a fairer Inheritance than his Country Man Hyde was born to; and if he fought for any Lands, they muſt have been for leſs than his own, ſince upon an equal Diviſion, ſo much wou'd not have come to his Share; and becauſe he was a half-witted credulous Creature, he will do nothing but on ſome lucky Day. Rathbone and he will have a Planet on their Side, and therefore they have the Nativity of their Plot caſt in April, and found by Lilly's Almanack alſo, that the third of September was a Day of Luck. As to theſe Plotters intending to join the Dutch if they had landed, I doubt it not, and that a great many Thouſands wou'd have done the ſame, for one can't think that the late Acts of Parliament and Government had made the People in love with it. The French King ſaid of King Charles at this Time, The King of England has no Friend nor Ally, and is oblig'd to carry on the War, with the Forces of a Kingdom only, divided into ſeveral Sects, all diſaffected to his Government. Theſe Plotters doubtleſs wou'd have join'd Ludlow, or Doleman, or the firſt Commander that offer'd to lead them; they might intend it, they might talk of it, and ſay enough to be hang'd for't; but that Mr. Sidney, and Lieutenant General Ludlow wou'd engage with ſuch Fellows is incredible and monſtrous in Imagination.

D'Eſtrades.

I have mention'd the Wickedneſs of joining Mr. Ludlow's Negotiations with the Dutch with Rathbone's Plot, and Rathbone's Plot with the Fire of London; and to prove it, I need only repeat the Archdeacon's Words: The third of September was a Day auſpicious, and full of Expectation from one Party, but at this Time ominous and direful to the Nation; and though the Hand of Juſtice laid hold of theſe laſt Criminals, yet the City was burnt at the very Time thus projected and prognoſticated; which gave a ſtrong Suſpicion, though not a full Proof of the Authors and Promoters; and that by Concatenation, Colonel Adney, Lieutenant General Ludlow, Col. Doleman, Mr. Say, &c. were concern'd with Flint, Tucker, &c. who were hang'd ſix Months before, for a Plot to ſet London on Fire on the third of September. I might here make uſe of the ſtrong Phraſe us'd by Biſhop Burnet before-mention'd; but though ſuch Hiſtories little deſerve it, I will obſerve more Decorum, and to ſhew I might make uſe of it, read what Echard ſays of the Duke of York's Diligence to put out the Fire: He was as diligent as poſſible; he commended and encourag'd the Forward; he aſſiſted the miſerable Sufferers, and gave a moſt generous Example to all, by the vigorous Oppoſition he made againſt the devouring Flames. Contrary to all which, it is known that the Gaiety of his Look and Air diſcover'd the Pleaſure he took in that dreadful Spectacle. Biſhop Burnet tells us, The Citizens were not well ſatisfy'd with the Duke's Behaviour; they thought he look'd too gay, and too little concern'd.

Duke of York pleas'd with the Fire of London.

On September the 2d, after Midnight, London was ſet on Fire. On September the 3d the Exchange was burnt, and in three Days almoſt all the City within the Walls. The Seaſon before had been exceeding dry, and the Wind in the Eaſt, where the Fire began. The People having none to conduct them right, cou'd do nothing to reſiſt it, but ſtand and ſee their Houſes burn without Remedy, the Engines being preſently out of order and uſeleſs. The Streets were crowded with People and Carts to carry away what Goods they cou'd get out. They who were moſt active, and had alſo moſt Money to pay Cartage at exorbitant Prices, as five, ten, twenty, and thirty Pounds for a Cart, ſav'd much, and the reſt loſt almoſt all. The Loſs in Houſes and Goods is ſcarcely to

A.D.1666 to be valu'd; and among the reſt, the Loſs of Books was an exceeding great Detriment not to the Owners only, but to Learning. Almoſt all the Bookſellers in St. Paul's Church-Yard, brought their Books into Vaults under St. Paul's Church, where it was thought almoſt impoſſible that Fire ſhou'd come. But the Church itſelf being on Fire, the prodigious Weight of Stones falling down, broke into the Vaults, let in the Fire, and the Bookſellers cou'd not come near to ſave their Books. The Library at Sion College, and moſt private Libraries in London were burnt; inſomuch that the one Article of Books only loſt in the Fire, amounted to 150,000 Pounds.

Where it began and ſtopp'd.

The Fire broke out in Pudding-lane, at the Houſe of one Fariner a Baker, and ſpread itſelf, beſides Breadth, from almoſt Tower-Hill to St. Dunſtan's Church in Fleet-ſtreet. After it had burnt almoſt three Days and Nights, ſome Seamen taught the People to blow up ſome of the next Houſes with Gunpowder, which ſtopp'd the Fire; ſo that contrary to the Inſcription on the Monument, there were humane Counſels in the ſtopping of the Fire, though thoſe Counſels muſt be acknowledg'd as the Will of Heaven. It ſtopp'd at Holborn Bridge, and near St. Dunſtan's Church in Fleet-ſtreet, and at Sepulchre's Church, when the Church was burnt; and at Chriſt-Church, when the Church was burnt; and near Alderſgate and Cripplegate, and other Places at the Wall; and in Auſtin-Friars, the Dutch Church ſtopp'd it, and eſcap'd. It ſtopp'd in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, and Leadenhall-ſtreet, and Fenchurch-ſtreet, in the midſt of the Streets, and ſhort of the Tower. All beyond the River, and Southwark eſcap'd. There periſh'd in the Flames 13,200 Houſes, valu'd one with another at no more than twenty-five Pounds yearly Rent, amount at twelve Years Purchaſe to 3,900,000 Pounds. The eighty-ſeven Churches, the ſpacious Cathedral of St. Paul's, the ſix Chapels, the Exchange, Cuſtom-houſe, Guildhall, the magnificent Halls of Companies, the ſeveral principal City Gates, with other publick Edifices and Colleges, may be well valued at 2,000,000 Pounds. The Wares, Houſhold-Goods, Money loſt and ſpoilt by the Fire, or pilfer'd away by thoſe wicked Wretches that made their Gains of the common Calamity, may modeſtly be computed at above 2,000,000 Pounds. The Money ſpent in general removing of Goods into the Fields, during the Fire, and bringing them back afterwards, in the Hire of Boats, Carts, and Porters, may be reckon'd at leaſt 2,000,000 Pounds; the Total of which is 10,050,000 Pounds, of which general Loſs, Alderman Jefferies had a particular Loſs in the one Commodity of Tobacco, to the Value of 20,000 Pounds.

I have not made uſe of the Account given by publick Authority, printed in the Compleat Hiſtory, becauſe I think my Hiſtorian's Authority, Mr. Baxter's, much better. He informs us, "The Burnt by Papiſts.

" great Talk at that Time was, Who were the " Burners of the City? And there came in ſo ma- " ny Teſtimonies to prove it was the plotted Wea- " pon of the Papiſts as caus'd the | Parliament " themſelves to appoint a Committee to enquire " after it, and receive Information; upon which Hubert, a French Papiſt ſet Fire to it. p. 230.

" one Hubert, a French Papiſt, confeſs'd openly " and conſtantly, to the laſt, that he began the " Fire." The Compleat Hiſtorian and Archdeacon Echard are poſitive that he was a French Presbyterian, they ſay, Hugonot; for which we muſt in Charity ſay, The Lord forgive them! Biſhop Burnet aſſures us he was a French Papiſt. Let us repeat what he ſays: "The Papiſts were " generally charg'd with it. One Hubert, a French " Papiſt was ſeiz'd on in Eſſex, as he was going " out of the Way in great Confuſion. He con- " feſs'd he had begun the Fire, and perſiſted in A.D.1666 " his Confeſſion to his Death, for he was hang'd " upon no other Evidence but that of his own " Confeſſion. It is true, he gave ſo broken an " Account of the whole Matter, that he was " thought mad: Yet he was blindfolded, and " carry'd to ſeveral Places of the City, and then " his Eyes being open'd, he was ask'd if that " was the Place; and he being carry'd to wrong " Places, after he look'd round about for ſome " time, he ſaid, that was not the Place: But " when he was brought to the Place where the " Fire broke out, he affirm'd that was the true " Place. And Tillotſon told me, that Howel, then " the Recorder of London, was with him, and " had much Diſcourſe with him, and that he " concluded it was impoſſible it cou'd be a me- " lancholy Dream. The Horror of the Fact, and " the Terror of Death, and perhaps ſome En- " gagements in Confeſſion (Remember Echard and the Compleat Hiſtorian call him a Hugonot or French Presbyterian) " might put him into " ſuch Diſorder, that it was not poſſible to draw " a clear Account from him; but of what rela- " ted to himſelf, Tillotſon, who believ'd the Ci- " ty was burnt on Deſign, told me a Circum- " ſtance that made the Papiſts employing ſuch " a craz'd Man the more credible, &c." I omit ſeveral other Circumſtances in Burnet and Baxter, which corroborate the Evidence againſt the Papiſts, and ſhall only add the Inſcription about the Plinth of the lower Pedeſtal of the Monument, which is deſignedly omitted by Echard, who has printed the large Inſcription on the Pedeſtal itſelf.

This Pillar was ſet up in perpetual Remembrance of the moſt dreadful Burning this Proteſtant City, begun and carry'd on by the Treachery and Malice of the Popiſh Faction, in the Beginning of September, in the Year of our Lord 1666, in order to the carrying on their horrid Plot for the extirpating the Proteſtant Religion, and Old Engliſh Liberty, and introducing Popery and Slavery.

This Inſcription was eraz'd by King James, upon his Acceſſion to the Crown, but re-inſcrib'd preſently after the happy Revolution, in ſuch deep Characters as are not eaſily to be blotted out again.

In direct Oppoſition to theſe Authorities, publick and private, the Archdeacon cloſes his wild Account of the Fire thus: That he will judge on the charitable, and perhaps probable Side, that neither the Beginning nor the End of this dreadful Fire, were the Effects of Humane Means or Counſels. While the Terrors occaſion'd by this Conflagration remain'd on the Minds of Men, the perſecuting Biſhops and Magiſtrates ſuſpended their Rage againſt the Proteſtants who had not conform'd, and many of their Miniſters preach'd in the midſt of the burning Ruins, to a willing attentive People; as Dr. Manton, Mr. Thomas Vincent, Mr. Wadſworth, Mr. Janeway, Mr. Thomas Doolittle, Dr. Anneſley, Mr. Cheſter, Mr. Franklin, Mr. Grimes, Mr. Watſon, Dr. Jacomb, Mr. Nathaniel Vincent, Mr. Turner, Mr. Griffiths, Mr. Brooks, Dr. Owen, Mr. Nye, Mr. Caryl, Dr. Goodwin, Mr. Barker. Many pious, learned, and eminent Divines of the Church of England, were more than ordinarily diligent in the Diſcharge of their Holy Function in this calamitous Time; as Dr. Tillotſon, Dr. Stillingfleet, Dr. Whitchot, Dr. Horton, Dr. Patrick, Mr. White, Dr. Outram, Dr. Horton, Mr. Gifford, Mr. Neſt, Dr. Meriton, &c. Divines of equal Merit and Moderation, Ornaments of their Sacred Profeſſion and the Eſtabliſhed Church. When I am to ſpeak of ſuch Men as theſe, I begin with Pleaſure and end with Pain.

Presbyterians and Church Miniſters frequent Preachers.

A.D.1666 On the 21ſt of September the Parliament met at Weſtminſter. They were, ſays Echard, the Life and Expectation of the Nation; and to ſhew it in their Actions, they gave the King 1,800,000 Pounds, and thank'd him for his great Care in the Management of the War, which they did in return for his Majeſty's moſt acceptable Speech, wherein he told them, I wiſh with all my Heart that I cou'd bear the whole Charge of the War myſelf, and that my Subjects ſhou'd reap the Benefit of it to themſelves; by which they wou'd not be much oblig'd to him.

The Clamours rais'd againſt the Papiſts after the Fire of London, produc'd an Addreſs from the Parliament, and a Proclamation from the King, For ſuppreſſing the Inſolencies of the Papiſts. The Houſe of Commons impeach'd the Lord Viſcount Mordaunt, Conſtable of Windſor-Caſtle, for impriſoning Mr. Taleur, who intended to ſtand for one of the Burgeſſes for Windſor; which I mention, becauſe the ſaid Taleur was a Priſoner for Debt in the Town Priſon, when he intended to ſtand for a Member of this Parliament, and was taken thence by the Lord Mordaunt's Soldiers, to be put in Hold in the Caſtle; which lets us a little into the Truth of the Archdeacon's Rich and Wiſe Men before ſpoken of. The Impeachment of the Lord Mordaunt, who was the King's Servant, diſguſted the King, according to Echard, though Taleur was his Servant alſo. The greateſt Importance of it was, that it caus'd a Miſunderſtanding between the two Houſes, which laſted to the End of the Seſſions, when the Speaker, Turner, made a Speech of unconſcionable Length, February the 8th, at which Time the King alſo ſpoke almoſt as long; and then the Lord Roberts, Lord Privy-Seal, prorogu'd the Parliament to the 10th Day of October.

Parliament prorogu'd.

The King and this eaſy Parliament, as Mr. Acherly calls them, began to cool a little towards each other, which was viſible on the King's Side, by ſome Expreſſions of his, in a Speech he made to them a few Days before the Prorogation. I am not willing to complain that you have dealt unkindly with me in a Bill I have now paſs'd, in which you have manifeſted a greater Diſtruſt of me than I have deſerv'd. I do not pretend to be without Infirmities, but I have never broken my Word. Sure enough has been ſaid of this Matter already! If I do not flatter my ſelf, the Nation had never leſs Cauſe to complain of Grievances, or the leaſt Injuſtice or Oppreſſion, than it hath had for theſe ſeven Years it hath pleas'd God to reſtore me to you; and I wou'd be glad to be us'd accordingly. The Commons had appointed Commiſſioners in the Poll-Bill, and his Majeſty wou'd have had it left to him. It is certain he did flatter himſelf egregiouſly in the Affair of Grievances. See Mr. Acherly, p. 572, in ſeveral Inſtances.

King never broke his Word.

Grievances under him. 1. The Secret League with France. 2. His abandoning himſelf to Pleaſures, and delegating his Government into the Hands of his Brother. 3. His Contrivance to make himſelf abſolute Maſter of his Parliaments by means of the ſaid French League. 4. His concerting with Lewis XIV. all his Treaties with the Dutch, under a ſecret Aſſurance that the ſame ſhou'd never hurt, but promote the French Intereſt. To this may be added his repealing the Triennial Bill; his modelling of Corporations by the Act ſo call'd; his Five Mile Act; his Profuſion, and the Inundation of Lewdneſs and Impiety with which the Nation was overwhelm'd by his Example.

Committee for the Fire. Before the Houſe of Commons broke up, Sir Robert Brook, Chairman of the Committee, appointed to enquire into the Firing of London, reported to the Houſe, that the Committee had ſome Information concerning the Matter, which might probably be enlightned by Examination of Hubert, which the Houſe reſolv'd to do: But Hubert was hang'd up the next Day, before the Houſe ſat. Several Evidences had been given in to the Committee, that Men were ſeen in many Parts of the City caſting Fire-Balls into the Houſes; and ſome that were taken firing Houſes were brought to the Guard of Soldiers, and to the Duke of York, but never heard of afterwards. Some Weeks after Sir Robert Brook went to France, and as he was ferry'd over a River was drown'd, with a Kinſman of his, and that Buſineſs drown'd with him. A.D.1666

Hubert hang'd to prevent his being examin'd.

The King of England having declar'd War againſt Denmark for that King's joining with the Dutch, the Dane did the ſame by the King of England, with better Advantage; for the Engliſh cou'd ſeize but little Effects of the Danes in England, whereas the latter not only ſeiz'd all the Engliſh Effects, which were very great in Denmark, but his Daniſh Majeſty ſtopp'd the Payment of vaſt Sums which he ow'd to the Engliſh Company at Hamburgh.

It muſt not be forgot that in the laſt Seſſion of Parliament the Act paſs'd for preventing the Importation of Iriſh Cattle (the Inconveniencies of which are well ſet forth by Mr. Coke) another Act for Burying in Woollen, to which alſo Objections have been made: But the two Acts For Re-building the City of London, and for Erecting a Court of Judicature for determining of Differences touching Houſes burnt and demoliſh'd, were very uſeful; which cannot be ſaid of many Acts of this Parliament, from their Commencement to this time.

Iriſh Cattle not to be brought over.

Echard opens the next Year with an Account of the King's Coat, Waiſtcoat and Breeches, which were eſtabliſh'd by a Solemn and Peremptory Declaration, Straight Spaniſh Breeches, a Long Veſt down to the Middle inſtead of a Waiſtcoat, and above that a Looſe Coat after the Muſcovite or Poliſh Faſhion, the Sword girt over the Veſt, and inſtead of Shoes and Stockings a Pair of Buſkins or Brodekins, which I repeat, that my Hiſtory may have an Ornament that is no where to be met with in antient Hiſtories, ſuch as thoſe of Thucydides, Livy, &c. He then tells us, that Dr. Barbon, Son of Praiſe God Barbon, ſet up an Inſurance-Office againſt Fire, and that Sir Jonas Moor had a great Hand in the City's Reſurrection. As the War with the Dutch began unjuſtly, ſo it ended diſhonourably. The Parliament had given Money enough for carrying it on this Year; but their growing inquiſitive about the Expence of what they had given, caus'd Suſpicion in the King and his Courtiers, that they wou'd hold their Hand, and therefore it was Time to put an End to a War, which tho' begun with no Reaſon, there was very good Reaſon to put an End to it; ſo Ambaſſadors were appointed on all Sides, and Breda, the Prince of Orange's Town, was agreed upon to be the Place of Treaty. The King of England's Ambaſſadors were Denzil Lord Hollis, Henry Coventry, Eſq; The French King's, the Count D'Eſtrades, Monſieur Courtin. Treaty at Breda.

Ludlow tells us, "The Dutch ſhew'd themſelves ready to treat with England upon the "Foot of the Treaty concluded between them "in the Year 1662. The Engliſh Plenipotentiaries, notwithſtanding the ill Condition of "Affairs at Home, ſpent a whole Month at "Breda without entring into Conference with "thoſe of Holland, which, with the Quarrels "that

A.D.1667 " that happen'd between theſe two Miniſters, " gave the States farther Occaſion to improve " the preſent Conjuncture to the beſt Advantage." The King had given his Word, that all the Monies granted for carrying on this War, ſhou'd be expended on that Service: He has had near ſix Millions for it. But Acherly informs us, 'Twas all ſo diſſipated that he cou'd ſet out no Fleet this Summer, when the Dutch had a very good one at Sea very early, as the Engliſh found to their Coſt. Echard aſſures us, he had diſſipated the Money, but was adviſ'd, after his ſeveral Victories, to fit out a light Fleet only, which by dividing it ſelf might make great Spoil on the Dutch Merchant Ships.

The States had order'd 4000 Land Forces under Col. Doleman, who was to have reſign'd the Command to General Ludlow, if he wou'd have accepted of it; and this is all the Grounds that the Compleat Hiſtorians have for raving as they do againſt the Engliſh Common-wealth's Men, that were enclin'd to join the Dutch Common-wealth's Men. The Holland Fleet under Admiral De Ruyter ſail'd directly to the River Thames. The Court of England having made no Preparations for Defence, was alarm'd to the laſt Degree with the News of their Approach, and at the firſt Meeting of the Council a Propoſition was made to aſſemble the Parliament with all poſſible Expedition, tho' they were under Adjournment, that by their Advice either a Peace might be made to the Satisfaction of the Nation, or the War be carry'd on to the beſt Advantage. On the other Side Chancellor Hyde knowing himſelf to be in Danger from the Parliament, did all he cou'd to oppoſe that Motion, and conceiving an Army more uſeful to promote the arbitrary Deſigns of the Court, took this Occaſion to propoſe the raiſing of 12,000 Men. And tho' the major Part of the Council carry'd it for aſſembling the Parliament on the 25th of the next enſuing July, and that a Proclamation ſhou'd be forthwith iſſued to that End, yet the Deſign of raiſing an Army was not laid aſide.

Dutch Fleet in the Thames.

Ludlow, Vol. III. p. 300, & ſeq.

Early in the Spring the Dutch ſent Van Ghendt with a good Fleet and Land-Forces on board to the Frith in Scotland, with Orders to burn the Coaſt, and land his Troops, if he found Encouragement from the Malecontents. He enter'd the Frith on the firſt of May. If he had at firſt hung out Engliſh Colours, and attack'd Leith Harbour immediately, which was then full of Ships, Biſhop Burnet thinks he might have done what Miſchief he pleas'd, for all were in Security looking for Sir Jeremy Smith with ſome Frigates for the Defence of the Coaſts, ſince the King had ſet out no Fleet this Year. There had been ſuch a Diſſipation of Treaſure, that for all the Money that was given, there was not enough left to ſet out a Fleet. The Biſhop adds, " The Court " cover'd this by ſaying the Peace was as good as " concluded at Breda, where the Lord Hollis " and Mr. Coventry were treating about it as " Plenipotentiaries; and tho' no Ceſſation was " agreed on, yet they reckon'd on it as ſure. " Upon this a Saying of the Earl of Northum- " berland was much repeated, when it was ſaid " the King's Miſtreſſes were like to ruin the " Nation; No, ſays he, they ſave the Nation, " while we have a Houſe of Commons, who give " all the Money that is ask'd; it is better to have " the Money ſquander'd away in Luxury, than " to have it ſav'd for worſe Purpoſes." This is the King, and this the Parliament, who pretended to have ſuch a Regard to the Souls of Men, as to oblige them by Fines and Force to worſhip God in what they call'd the Orthodox Way! Witneſs the Bartholomew Act, the Five Mile Act, &c. This is the King, and this the Parliament; who pretended to have ſuch a Regard for the Security of the Subject! Witneſs the Corporation Act, the Triennial Parliament Act, &c. Good God! into what Hands are the poor People of England fallen! Inſtead of Glory and Liberty, of Religion and Trade, they are become the Contempt of the Contemptible, and a Prey to Luxury and Perſecution.

Calamities in England.

Van Ghendt ſailing to the Frith was only a Faint to divert the King from that which was chiefly intended, for he ſail'd out and join'd de Ruyter, who enter'd the River Thames the 9th of June. The firſt Ships he ſaw were eight or nine Outward-bound Merchant-men with their Convoy, which, upon Diſcovery of the Holland Fleet, tack'd, and were chac'd by the Dutch up to the Hope; but the Hollanders being ſuddenly becalm'd, were oblig'd to come to an Anchor. Here the Dutch met with a Storm, which ending in a favourable North-Eaſt Wind, de Ruyter ſtood towards the Iſle of Shepey, where he landed about 800 Men, took the Fort of Sheerneſs, which Sir Edward Sprague a Papiſt deſerted, having not fortify'd it as he ought to have done, being the Governor; Echard extols his Bravery on this Occaſion. A Man of War that lay for the Guard of that Fort was taken by the Dutch Ships at the ſame Time. The Dutch having poſſeſs'd themſelves of this Fort, Van Ghendt, with 18 of their ſmaller Ships, ſail'd up Chatham River the next Day; and notwithſtanding Ships had been ſunk to hinder their Paſſage, they came up to the Iron Chain which travers'd the River, and had been made on that Occaſion, fought the Matthias and Charles V. which were order'd to defend it, kill'd moſt of their Men, burnt thoſe Ships, broke the Bomb, and paſſing by Upnor Caſtle (ruin'd for want of Repair) burnt the Mary, took the Unity and Royal Charles, and, ſays Ludlow, plac'd their Colours on the latter, in View of her Maſter, who ſtood on the Shoar obſerving the Effects of his prudent and vigilant Government. They cou'd conquer Venner in London, and Oldreyd in Yorkſhire: They cou'd hang up Rathbone and Flint as ſtoutly as Oliver or the Rump cou'd have done: They cou'd make Acts and Plots, and deſtroy the Diſarm'd and the Defenceleſs: Let them now come and ſhew their Valour; let them now come out and defend their Country, or weep Blood for the Shame they have brought upon her. Monk ſtands on the Shoar with his Cane in his Hand, ſees the Royal Navy of England in Flames, a foreign Enemy roaring their Cannon within the Hearing of London, and has neither a Hand to help, nor a Heart to lament the Miſery and Infamy he has brought upon a betray'd and abus'd People.

On the Third Day the Dutch burnt the Royal Oak, the Royal James, and the Royal London. Were the Naſeby, the Victory, the Speaker, the Fairfax burnt in a River of England! Cou'd Blake live after ſuch a killing Sight as Monk is beholding! What is the good Lord General now doing! Ludlow tells us, Van Ghendt having burnt ſeveral ſmaller Ships, Monk had no other Way to ſave the reſt but by ſinking them in the River, and ſending five Fireſhips among the Dutch Fleet, which had not the expected Succeſs. In the mean time the Train'd-Bands from all the adjacent Parts were marching towards Chatham, to endeavour to prevent farther Miſchief by Land. Nine Ships were ſunk at Woolwich, and four at Blackwall. Platforms were rais'd and furniſh'd with Artillery, and Works to defend them, and hinder the Enemy from coming up to London. But the Dutch, who had another

London in a Fright.

A.D. 1667 another Game to play, having exacted a Sum of Money from the Inhabitants of the Iſle of Shepey, they did not make Bonfires of their Houſes as Holmes did at Brandaris, and carry'd off the Guns and Ammunition they found at Sheerneſs; they ſell down with their Fleet to the Buoy in the Nore, landed ſome Troops below Tilbury, and ſwept the Country of Sheep and Cattle in Sight of 2 or 3,000 Militia within 20 Miles of London.

What ſays a Modern Author on this? There is nothing like it in all Hiſtory: A foreign Fleet to throw the City of London into Conſternation! I will not ſay ſince the Death of Queen Elizabeth, but ſince the Death of King Edgar. Blake's Aſhes are dug out of his Grave. Did he ever ſuffer an Enemy to appear within the four Seas, but at his Peril? The Enemy is now triumphant in our very Rivers, and the Citizens of London tremble in their very Houſes.

Let us now ſee how the Monarch behav'd on this Occaſion: The Monarch who is ſo greedy of Power, and exerciſes it ſo notably againſt his Proteſtant Diſſenting Subjects. Coke writes thus, "The next Morning after the Dutch had en- "ter'd the River, I was walking in St. James's "Park, when a Gentleman whiſper'd to me, "The Dutch are in the River. The King had "then fed his Ducks, and was walking on "the Weſt-ſide of the Park. Prince Rupert "overtook us, and met the King at the "further End of the Pall-Mall. He told the "Prince he had ſhot a Duck, and ſuch a Dog "fetch'd it; ſo they walk'd on till the King "came to St. James's Houſe, and there ſaid to "the Prince, Let's go ſee Cambridge and Kendal, the Duke's two Sons, who then lay a dy- "ing. But upon his Return to Whitehall he "found all in an Uprore, the Lady Caſtlemain "bewailing above all others, that ſhe ſhou'd be "firſt torn to Pieces. If the Dutch had come "up to London, they wou'd have found all open "to them, not one Gun mounted at Tilbury- "Fort." The Artillery made uſe of in thoſe Days were Warrants, Excommunications, Capiendo's, and the like; and the Enemy was the Preſbyterians. Tho' Monk cou'd do nothing at Chatham, the Earl of Macklesfield and Capt. Elliot, who were ſent to Portſmouth, us'd ſuch Diligence in fortifying it, that when the Dutch came before the Harbour, they thought not fit to attempt to do what they had done at Chatham. Biſhop Burnet's Account of this execrable Buſineſs is as follows; "The Affair of Chatham was "a terrible Blow; and tho' the Loſs was great, "the Infamy was greater. The Parliament had "given above five Millions toward the War, but "thro' the Luxury and Waſte of the Court, the Money ſquander'd "Money was ſo ſquander'd away, that the King "cou'd neither ſet out a Fleet, nor defend his "Coaſts. Upon the News of the Dutch Fleet's "being in the River, the King did not ride "down himſelf, nor appear at the Head of his "People, who were then in ſuch imminent Dan-
The King afraid of the Dutch "ger; he only ſent the Duke of Albemarle down, "and was intending to retire to Windſor. But "that look'd ſo like a flying from Danger, that "he was prevail'd on to ſtay. And it was given "out, that he was chearful that Night at Sup-
Libels upon the King "per with his Miſtreſſes, which drew many Li- "bels upon him, writ with much Wit, and "brought him under a general Contempt," where we will leave him, and deſire to know by what Action of his future Reign he got out of it. The Biſhop again; "He was compar'd to Nero, who "ſung while Rome was burning." The Biſhop refers to ſome Lines in Sir John Denham's Advice to a Painter, where this King's Government, eſpecially with reſpect to this War, is very naturally deſcrib'd, and much more agreeable to Truth than the Compleat Hiſtory, or Echard's. The Verſes indeed are not ſo harmonious as thoſe of Cooper's Hill. But the following are ſome of them: A.D. 1667

Denham's Verſes upon the Infamy at Chatham.

So paſſing Chatham, make Whitehall appear,
If not in Danger, yet at leaſt in Fear;
Make our Dejection, if thou canſt, ſeem more
Than our Pride, Sloth, and Ignorance before;
The King of Danger now ſhews far more Fear,
Than he did ever to prevent it care:
Yet to the City doth himſelf convey,
Bravely to ſhew he was not run away;
Whilſt the Black Prince, and our fifth Harry's
Are only acted on our Theatres: [Wars,
As Nero once with Harp in Hand ſurvey'd,
His flaming Rome, and as that burnt, he play'd;
So our great Charles, when the Dutch Fleet
Saw his Ships burn, &c. [arriv'd,

The King in the City.

Mr. Baxter ſpeaks of the King's conveying himſelf into the City; "He came in Perſon "among the Citizens to perſwade them not to "deſert him, and made a Speech to them on "Tower-Hill. He had great Experience of their "Loyalty, who after ſuch Sufferings, and under "ſuch Preſſures in Matters of Conſcience, and "of worldly Intereſt, even in ſuch Extremity, "were neither prov'd to do, or ſay any thing that "was contrary to their Fidelity to him." Biſhop Burnet mentions this, and adds, "But the Matter "went heavily; the City was yet in Aſhes, and "the Jealouſy of burning it on Deſign, had got "ſo among the Citizens, that the King himſelf "was not free from Suſpicion. The Court was "at a ſtand what to do, for the French had "aſſur'd them, the Treaty was as good as finiſh'd. "Whether the French ſet this on, as that which "wou'd weaken the Fleet of England, and "alienate the King ſo entirely from the Dutch, "that he wou'd be eaſily engag'd in new Alli- "ances to revenge this Affront, as many believ'd, "I cannot pretend to determine.

His ſecret League with France.

This and other Diſaſters created a Suſpicion, and rais'd Clamours at the King's ſecret Meaſures with France, inſomuch, ſays Acherly, that he loſt all Confidence with the People, which as he never in Truth deſerv'd, ſo he never recover'd.

His diſhonourable Peace with the Dutch.

A Peace was immediately clapp'd up with the Dutch, and ſign'd on the 9th of July, at Breda. Coke ſpeaks thus of it, "However the Diſhonour "which the Nation ſuſtain'd at Chatham may "be forgotten, yet the ſudden and diſhonourable "Peace concluded at Breda never will be. By "the third Article, the Buſineſs of Amboyna is "bury'd, and never to be call'd in Queſtion, "which Oliver, tho' he made Peace with the "Dutch, wou'd not do. The Hollanders had "Polerone, out of which they had expell'd our "Eaſt-India Company during this War, con- "firm'd to them, whereby they became ſole Pro- "prietors of the Spice Trade, as well in Europe "as other Parts of the Indies, Arabia and Per- "ſia." Nay, ſo little Care was taken for Reparation of Damages, that the Agents under the Letters of Repriſal for Sir Paul Pindar, and Sir William Courteen's Ships, valued at 151,612 Pounds, were try'd as Pirates, by Sir Lionel Jenkins, who had the Silver Oar carry'd before him; and, ſays Mr. Coke, was very zealous to have hang'd them. A Work that went forward from the Beginning to the End of this Reign.

Parliament.

Whilſt theſe Things were in Agitation, the Parliament met on the 25th of July, according to the late Proclamation, and entring immediately upon the Debate of the Army, which they reſolv'd

A.D. 1667 ſolv'd to break, ſpoke ſo clearly and freely touching this Matter, that the Court reſolv'd to give them a little Interruption, hoping in that Time to take off ſome of thoſe who had appear'd with the greateſt Warmth, by ſuch Means as they had in their Hands; or if that Deſign ſhou'd not ſucceed, to think upon taking new Meaſures. To this End they were acquainted by the Chancellor Hyde, that it was the King's Pleaſure they ſhou'd adjourn 'till the 29th of the ſame Month. But before this Meſſage came to them, they had paſs'd a Reſolution, that the King ſhou'd be deſir'd forthwith to disband the Army he had lately rais'd. The Day to which they had adjourn'd being come, their Speaker, Turner, appear'd not 'till the King came to the Houſe of Peers, where, having ſent for the Houſe of Commons, he made a ſhort Speech touching the late Peace, and then directed the Chancellor to do as he commanded; who without any Preamble, told them, It was his Majeſty's Pleaſure they ſhou'd be adjourn'd to the 10th of October next. But for all this, ſome of the Council had the Courage to oppoſe the violent Courſes, and to adviſe, that the Army might be disbanded, according to the Deſire of the Houſe of Commons; that the Seal ſhou'd be taken from Hyde, and that the Parliament ſhou'd meet at the Time appointed, and be left to the Liberty of providing for the publick Safety in their own Way. Purſuant to this Advice, Monk mas employ'd to demand the Seal of the Chancellor; and Ludlow tells us, he embrac'd this Occaſion of Revenge with Joy, for the Chancellor had openly blam'd his Conduct, in preſuming to attack the whole Dutch Fleet the laſt Year, whilſt Prince Rupert, with Part of the Engliſh Fleet, was ſeperated from him. The Chancellor refus'd to deliver the Seal to Monk, under Pretence that ſome Men had ſuffer'd for parting with it too eaſily; ſaying, He wou'd bring it to the King in Council the next Day, being not without Hopes by his Intereſt and Preſence to prevail with them to change their Reſolution; but his Maſter finding himſelf oblig'd to give way to the preſent Torrent, perſiſted in his Demand, and having receiv'd the Seal from his Hand, entruſted it with Sir Orlando Bridgeman with the Title of Lord Keeper.

Sir Orlando Bridgman Lord Keeper.

Among the various Reaſons that were given to juſtify the King in abandoning the Chancellor to the Reſentment of the People, one was, that he had countermin'd the King in the Deſign he had to be divorc'd from the Queen, under Pretence that ſhe had been engag'd to another Perſon, that ſhe had made a Vow of Chaſtity before her Marriage, and that ſhe was incapable of having Children. The Perſon deſign'd to fill her Place, was one Mrs. Stuart, a young and beautiful Lady, who had ſome Office under the Queen. The Chancellor, who, ſome ſay, procur'd his Daughter to be marry'd to the Duke of York, and was therefore ſuſpected of having made the Match with the Infanta of Portugal, that he might make way for the Succeſſion of the Collateral Line, ſent for the Duke of Richmond, and pretending to be ſorry that a Perſon of his Worth, and near Relation to the King, ſhou'd receive no Marks of his Favour, adviſ'd him to marry Mrs. Stuart, as the moſt certain Way he cou'd take to advance himſelf. The young Gentleman unwarily took in the Bait, and, ſays Ludlow, credulouſly relying on what the old VOLPONE had ſaid, made immediate Application to the young Lady, who was ignorant of the King's Intention, and in a few Days marry'd her. The King being thus diſappointed, and ſoon after inform'd by what Means this Match had been brought about, baniſh'd the Duke and his new Dutcheſs from the Court, and kept his Reſentment againſt the Chancellor to a more convenient Opportunity. A.D. 1667

King intends a Divorce from the Queen.

The Duke of York had at the ſame time a Deſign to be divorc'd from the Chancellor's Daughter, under Pretence of Incontinence, and had promis'd the King to engage his whole Intereſt in the Houſe of Commons, to paſs the King's Divorce, if the King wou'd do the ſame for him. Several great Lords were prevail'd with to promote the double Divorce in Parliament; and the Chancellor to prevent it, told thoſe Lords, and others in Confidence, that the Duke was a Papiſt, and deſign'd to marry a Papiſt, and diſinherit his Proteſtant Children; which being whiſper'd about, rais'd ſuch a Jealouſy in and out of Parliament, that the Duke's Creatures durſt not make any ſuch Motion.

Some Time before this, the Duke of Buckingham was committed to Cuſtody of the Black-Rod, and the Earl of Oſſory, the Duke of Ormond's Son, to the Tower, for a Challenge that had paſs'd between them, on Account of Words ſpoken in the Houſe of Lords; and not long after there happen'd another Diſturbance between the ſame Duke and the Marquis of Dorcheſter, for Room at a Free Conference in the Painted-Chamber. Here the Duke preſſing very hard upon the Marquis, the latter told him, he ought not to crowd him ſo much, for he was as good a Man as he. The Duke made ſome very ſmart Reply, to which the Marquis return'd him the Lye, upon which the Duke either gave him a Blow, or pull'd him by the Perriwig, and the Houſe of Lords committed them both to the Tower. As the Duke paſs'd thro' the City to the Tower, the People made Acclamations, not as he was a Priſoner, but to ſhew their Reſpect to him, for he was become popular by his Averſion to Hyde. Shortly after the Duke having gotten his Liberty, without begging the King's Pardon, appear'd at Court on Chriſtmas Day, for which he was immediately forbidden the King's Preſence. The Duke was a Man of Spirit and Wit, and the Court gave daily Occaſion for Raillery. Buckingham knew them, and ſpar'd them not, by which he ſo provok'd the King, that he order'd a Serjeant at Arms to apprehend him. The Serjeant having been a little roughly us'd in the Attempt, the Duke withdrew himſelf, and the King iſſu'd a Proclamation againſt him, but his Diſpleaſure laſted not long, and upon his asking Pardon, he was recall'd and reſtor'd to Favour.

Duke of Bucks confin'd,

Quarrels with the Marquis of Dorcheſter.

If the Earl of Clarendon had not loaded himſelf with the Guilt of the Miſery and Ruin which were the Conſequences of the Bartholomew Act, the Five Mile Act, and the other Stinging Acts, as Echard terms them with much Delectation; had he contented himſelf with the Diſcharge of his Office in the Chancery, he wou'd have been a Praiſe-worthy Magiſtrate. But his meddling with Politicks, of which he was no great Maſter, and his ſuffering himſelf to be inſpir'd with the Spirit of the perſecuting Biſhops, loſt him the Reſpect of Foreigners, and the Love of his Countrymen. 'Tis certain, he ſecretly oppos'd the Meaſures of the Court for two or three Years before his Diſgrace; but it is certain alſo, that his Reſentment for the Slights he daily met with, contributed as much to that laudable Oppoſition, as his Zeal for the publick Good; nor is it eaſy to think, that a Man who had promoted thoſe miſerable Bills, did any thing out of Affection to the Common-wealth.

Earl of Clarendon changes his Conduct.

He was the Courtiers Jeſt ſome time before they accompliſh'd his Fall, which his Conduct towards the King himſelf much facilitated; for he did frequently cenſure his Majeſty's lewd Courſe of Life, and was more free with the Male and

A.D.1667 Female Favourites, who ſeem'd to outvy each other in Lewdneſs and Debauchery. They wou'd often ſay to the King, when the Chancellor paſs'd Is a Jeſt. in the Court, There goes your Schoolmaſter. And Buckingham wou'd often act and mimick him in the King's Preſence, walking ſtately with a pair of Bellows before him for the Purſe, and Col. Titus carrying a Fire-ſhovel on his Shoulder for the Mace; which ſort of Mimickry the King was much captivated with. Hyde's laying out 50,000 Pounds in a magnificent Palace by the Park, which the People call'd Dunkirk-Houſe, referring to the ignominious Sale of that Town, was a very impolitick Act in a time of Plague, Conflagration, and War; and the Death of the Earl of Southampton, his faſt Friend, and a faſt Friend to the Publick, was an irreparable Loſs to him. The Treaſury, on the Lord Southampton's Death, was put into Commiſſion; and to ſhew what excellent Politicians now flouriſh'd, the Firſt Commiſſioner was General Monk, who underſtood Fluxions as well as Accompts; the other Lords of the Treaſury were Lord Aſhley Cooper, Chancellor of the Exchequer; Sir Thomas Clifford, Comptroller of the Houſhold; Sir William Coventry, Sir John Duncomb, Privy-Counſellors.

And the Parliament having laſt Seſſions talk'd of a Bill for Taking and Stating the Publick Accompts, the King, to ſupport his Authority Royal, iſſu'd a Commiſſion for that Purpoſe. The King's Commiſſioners of Accompts. Commiſſioners were John Earl of Bridgwater, Oliver Earl of Bolinbroke, Robert Earl of Ailesbury, Edward Viſcount Conway, John Lord Lucas, John Lord Crew, Edward Boſcawen, Eſq; Giles Strangeways, Eſq; William Garraway, Eſq; Sir William Lowther, Sir Thomas Mears, Sir Humphry Winch, Sir Thomas Littleton, Sir William Thompſon, Sir Thomas Osborn, Sir Thomas Gower, Colonel Samuel Sandys, John Jones, Eſq. But what they did is not told us; on the contrary, we are inform'd that the Parliament, when they met, did not like this Commiſſion, and that they appointed a Committee to examine the Publick Parliaments Committee of Accompts. Accompts; of which William Pierpoint, Eſq; Lord Brereton, Col. Thompſon, Sir James Langham, and Sir William Turner were chief; they were call'd the Committee of Brook-Houſe, and were ſo diligent, and made ſuch Diſcoveries in the Accompts, particularly thoſe of the Treaſurer of the Navy, that they were ſummon'd before the King and Council, and ſeverely rebuk'd, as endeavouring to make Differences between the King and Parliament. His Majeſty alſo undertook the Deciſion of the Buſineſs, and acquitted the Treaſurer; at which the Parliament were as much diſguſted as Men cou'd be who were ſo well paid.

About this time the Earl of Shrewsbury, a Papiſt, having a very fair Wife, Daughter of the Earl of C—— a Papiſt alſo, with whom liv'd Mr. Johnſon, the diſputing Champion for Popery: She lik'd other Men ſo much better than her Huſband, that ſhe forſook him. The Earl believing the Duke of Buckingham kept her ſecretly, was Duel between the Duke of Buckingham and Earl of Shrewſbury. not content to loſe his Wife, but he wou'd alſo loſe his Life; and ſending the Duke a Challenge, they met and fought. The Duke having for Seconds Capt. Holmes and Mr. Jenkins; the Earl's Seconds were Mr. Bernard Howard, and —— Bernard. Howard kill'd Jenkins, and the Duke mortally wounded the Earl, who dy'd in a Day or two.

About this time the French King ſet up a Title to the Spaniſh Netherlands, under this groſs French King's poor Pretence to the Netherlands. Pretence, That by the Laws of Brabant, a Daughter by the firſt Wife ſhou'd inherit before the Son of a ſecond Wife; and that his Queen, being the Daughter of the late King of Spain by his firſt Wife, ought to inherit the Spaniſh Netherlands, preferable to the King of Spain, who was Son by the ſecond Wife; under which Pretence he pour'd into Flanders a great Army, took ten or twelve ſtrong Towns by Surprize, march'd another Army into Franche-Comte, and took poſſeſſion of it and Burgundy, which made the Parliament of England ſtill more uneaſy. A.D.1667

The Lord Mohun, a young Nobleman, gave out ſome Words which caus'd a common Scandal in Court and City againſt Dolben Biſhop of Ro- Biſhop of Rocheſter accus'd of - - - cheſter, as guilty of moſt obſcure Actions with the ſaid Lord; and they muſt be monſtrous, as well as obſcure, to cauſe Scandal in ſuch a Court. The Reproach of it was long the Talk of the Town, but it hinder'd not his Promotion to the Archbiſhoprick of York. Echard tells us, he was an Officer in the Cavalier Army, and a particular Support of the Church.

On the 10th of October the Parliament met, Parliament. and we are not now troubled with ſuch long tedious Harangues as when the Earl of Clarendon and Speaker Turner infected one another with the Itch of Speech-making. The King's Speech was very ſhort, and the Lord Keeper Bridgman's not very long, but to the Purpoſe. The Houſe of Commons Voted the King Thanks for disbanding the Army, which he cou'd not maintain; for turning Papiſts out of his Guards, and other Military Employments; tho' Sir Edward Sprague, a Flag-Officer, and many other Sea and Land Officers were continu'd, notwithſtanding they were Papiſts. They alſo thank'd him for quickning the Execution of the Law againſt Importation of Iriſh Cattle, and for diſplacing the late Lord Chancellor. His Majeſty thank'd them for their Thanks, and promis'd never more to employ the Earl of Clarendon: Who, on the 26th of October, was charg'd with by Mr. Edward Seymour, Earl of Claren- afterwards Sir Edward, with variety of great don impeach'd. Crimes; and ſeveral Debates aroſe about the Reaſon and Manner of Impeaching him; in which Debates will be found ſome of the greateſt Names at that Time flouriſhing. The Members who Members ſpoke for him were Lawrence Hyde, Eſq; Sir He- for him, neage Finch, Sir Francis Goodrich, Mr. Swinſen, Mr. Coleman, Sir Robert Ackland, Sir John Goodrich, Sir Edward Thurland, Sir John Shaw, Sir John Bramſton, Sir Thomas Mears, Mr. Coventry, Sir Thomas Clifford, Sir John Talbot. Members who ſpoke againſt him, were Mr. Edward againſt him. Seymour, Sir Thomas Littleton, Mr. Vaughan, Sir Richard Temple, Sir John Holland, Sir Robert Howard, Mr. John Trevor, Lord St. John, Sir Thomas Osborn, Sir Charles Wheeler, Richard Hampden, Eſq; Mr. Street, Mr. Thomas, Andrew Marvel, Eſq; Sir John Denham, William Prynne, Eſq; Sir Robert Carr, Mr. Steward, Mr. Waller, Colonel Bowls, Sir Job Charlton, Lord Vaughan, Sir William Coventry, Mr. Garraway, the Sollicitor General, Sir Robert Atkins, Sir Walter Young, Sir Thomas Thompkins, Sir Thomas Lee, Mr. Secretary Morrice, Sir Humphry Winchcomb, Hugh Boſcawen, Eſq; Sir Thomas Gower, Lord Torrington, afterwards Duke of Albemarle.

Here are Monk's Son, Torrington, and Monk's Couſin, Morrice, in the Liſt of the Proſecutors of Clarendon, whoſe worſt Name for Monk was that of the good Lord General; but the General had loſt all his Goodneſs ſince he came to fetch the Seal from the Chancellor. After a ſhort Debate about the Nature of the Evidence againſt the Lord Clarendon, and the Manner of Impeaching him, Sir Thomas Littleton, who was Chairman of the Committee appointed to draw up Heads for an Accuſation, preſented them to the Houſe; and when they were Debated, Proof of them being requir'd, it was Reſolv'd that the Members ſhou'd ſpeak to each Article what they cou'd

A.D.1667 cou'd ſay for it; and if none offer'd any thing ſufficient to induce the Houſe to paſs it, that it ſhou'd be laid aſide.

He is charg'd with being for a Standing Army. The Firſt Article related to his deſigning a Standing Army; which being read, the Lord Vaughan and Sir Robert Howard ſaid, they had heard from Perſons of Quality, that it wou'd be prov'd.

Calls the King Papiſt. The Second Article, with having ſaid, The King was a Papiſt in his Heart. To this the Lord St. John ſpoke; Perſons of great Quality have aſſur'd me they will make it good; if they do not, I will acquaint the Houſe who they are.

Grants illegal Patents. The Third Article related to his receiving Money for Patents, and granting illegal Injunctions. To this Mr. Edward Seymour ſpoke thus; Sufficient Perſons will make it good; and that he ſaid, with Reſpect to one of the Patents, So long as the King is King, and I Lord Chancellor, the Patent will ſtand.

The Fourth and Fifth Articles charg'd him with having procur'd People to be Impriſon'd in remote Iſlands againſt Law, and Farming the Cuſtoms at Under-rates. To which Sir Richard Temple ſaid, Divers have undertaken to make it good, if they do not, I will name them: I am inform'd he had a Share for under-ſelling them, and 90,000 Pounds Bribe.

Under-farms the Cuſtoms.

The ſame. Sir Thomas Littleton. " It appears by the " Farmers Confeſſion, that they had it 50,000 " Pounds under, beſides Time of Payment, which " was 30,000 Pounds more." Mr. Seymour ſaid, The others had more; they were told they ſhou'd not have it, and had about 1000 Pounds each given them to bid no more. Sir Thomas Osborn declar'd, that the Earl of Clarendon ſaid, Bid who wou'd for the Cuſtoms, none ſhou'd have them but the old Farmers.

Takes Money for Penalties. The Sixth Article was touching his receiving Money of Vintners to free them from Penalties. To this Sir Robert Car ſaid, I know who will prove it.

Gets exorbitant Grants. The Seventh Article related to his having rais'd a vaſt Eſtate, and got exorbitant Grants from the King. To which ſeveral Members ſpoke, as Mr. Edward Seymour, I ſuppoſe you need no Proof, the Sun ſhines at Noon-day. Sir Thomas Littleton. The Matter of Fact in this Article is eaſily made out, for his Place, as Chancellor, cou'd not be worth above 4 or 5000 Pounds a Year.

The Eighth Article charg'd him with introducing an Arbitrary Government in the Plantations. To this Sir Thomas Littleton, and Sir Thomas Osborn ſpoke, acquainting the Houſe, that Col. John Farmer, a Barbados Planter, came from that Iſland to complain of it; and that he, with ſeveral other Planters, Sir John Bawdon, a Barbados Merchant, and others, complain'd of it by a Petition in Parliament; but Farmer was thrown into Priſon, and Bawdon, and the other Barbados Merchants threaten'd, which ſo diſcourag'd them, that they dropp'd their Petition.

Illegally impriſons Men.

The loſs of the Leeward Iſlands. The Ninth Article related to his fruſtrating Propoſals for preſerving the Leeward Iſlands. To this Sir Charles Wheeler ſaid, My Lord Chancellor was the only Perſon oppos'd it.

Correſponds with Cromwel. The Tenth Article was touching his correſponding with Cromwel, and his Accomplices when he was with the King in Exile. Sir Charles Wheeler anſwer'd the Houſe he cou'd prove it clearly; but it was agreed that he was indemniſy'd by the Act of Grace, and the Article was expung'd.

Sells Dunkirk. The Eleventh Article related to the Sale of Dunkirk. And Sir Thomas Osborn, afterwards Duke of Leeds, ſaid to it, A great Lord told me the Earl of Clarendon had made a Bargain for Dunkirk three quarters of a Year before it was known. Several Members ſpoke to this Article, for and againſt him, and it was Debated whether it was Treaſon or not: Prynne ſaid, It cannot be Treaſon, becauſe ſold by the King's Conſent. Mr. Vaughan, afterwards Lord Chief Juſtice, reply'd, If the King agree to it, doth it follow that he who adviſeth the King to a Thing deſtructive to his Kingdom is not a Traitor? A.D.1667

Alters a Patent. The Twelfth Article was concerning his altering a Patent for Enrolment. Mr. Street inform'd the Houſe how the Caſe ſtood. The King gives a Thing to Dr. Crowther. In the Grant was a Miſtake of a County. Crowther finds the Miſtake, and petitions the King to amend it. The King calls for the Chancellor and Seal, and in the King's Preſence it was amended and ſeal'd. Sir Thomas Littleton. The Crime ſeems as great as the Chancellor cou'd commit. The King was to preſent by ſuch a Day, or not at all. The Error was found after that Day; ſo that the King by Act of Parliament had loſt his Right. The Chancellor did alter the Patent, and the Record was fetch'd away by one of the Chancellor's Servants, and brought back read and alter'd; which might be done, and in other Caſes is done, where a Word only has been miſtaken; but that is ſomething preciſely in the King's Power, and to ſave new Sealing: But here cou'd be no new Sealing, the Time being elaps'd; it was to throw another Man into his Freehold, and is a great Crime.

The Thirteenth Article was touching his drawing Men's Lands into Queſtion, and determining Caſes of Law at the Council-Board. To this Mr. Thomas ſaid, I ſhall be able to make it out.

The Fourteenth Article was touching Quo Warranto's to Corporations. To which Sir Thomas Littleton ſaid, This is ſo publick a Thing, that it needs not to be prov'd.

The Fifteenth Article related to his procuring of Bills for the Settlement of Ireland. To this Sir Robert Howard ſaid, I doubt not but it will be made out.

Betrays the Nation in Foreign Treaties. The Sixteenth Article was concerning his betraying the Nation in foreign Treaties, and diſcovering his Majeſty's ſecret Counſels to his Enemies. Sir Thomas Littleton. This will appear by the Treaties themſelves putting us in Hopes of Peace, and ſo hindering the Fleet's going out. Lord Vaughan. I brought in the Article of betraying the King's Council to the French King during the War, and that in the Secrecy of State, which was the Occaſion of the late Miſchiefs. Sir Thomas Osborn. That is direct adhering to the King's Enemies; and if ſo, it is Treaſon. Mr. Sollicitor General. This muſt be Treaſon, if you have any Inducement to believe it. Sir Robert Howard. I have heard it from an Eye-Witneſs, who told it me, and added, That we were neither to be truſted nor dealt with who were ſo betray'd. Several others ſpoke to this Matter; and the Queſtion at laſt was, Whether he had ſo far diſcover'd the King's Council as to be guilty of Treaſon, which was carry'd in the Affirmative, Yeas 186, Noes 89.

The Seventeenth Article was about the Miſcarriages of the War by his Means. To which Mr. Thomas ſaid, I want not Perſons to bring to make it good. Sir Thomas Littleton. Sir Edward Sprague deſires Money to give an Intelligencer, and has it. Sprague brings the Intelligencer to the King, the King commands him to meet at the Chancellor's: There he met the King, and then Order was given to divide the Fleet. Theſe Articles being read, Mr. Marvel charg'd Mr. Seymour with ſaying, when he mov'd the Matter againſt the Earl of Clarendon, that the Earl ſhou'd have ſaid, The King was inſufficient for Government, which is left out of theſe Articles. To this Mr. Seymour reply'd, The Party that told me at firſt, differ'd ſomething afterwards;

A. D. 1667 therefore I rather withdraw it than to trouble you with Uncertainties; but a Gentleman in the Houſe can give you further Satisfaction. Sir John Denham, A Peer of the Land heard the Earl of Clarendon ſay in a Coach, That the King was an unactive Perſon, and indiſpos'd for Government. This will be made good. But the Words having been ſpoken before the Act of Oblivion, it was paſs'd over. Upon the whole, an Impeachment of Treaſon, and other Crimes and Miſdemeanors was reſolv'd on, and Mr. Edward Seymour order'd to carry it to the Lords, which he did the 12th of November.

But the Lords did not think fit to ſecure the Earl's Perſon, becauſe the Charge was general and without Proof, which gave great Offence to the Houſe of Commons, and occaſion'd a warm Debate about their Privileges in this Caſe and Precedents. They had ſeveral Conferences with the Lords, who inſiſted upon it to have their Reaſons for the Impeachment before they cou'd ſecure the Earl of Clarendon, to whom the perſecuting Biſhops ſtuck cloſe. In the mean time the Earl provided for himſelf, and made his Eſcape to France, where he reſided at and near Rouan as long as he liv'd. The Houſe hearing he was gone, order'd Sir Thomas Clifford, Comptroller of the Houſhold, to deſire his Majeſty that the Ports might be ſtopp'd, which was done, but the Bird was flown firſt. The Earl left a kind of Petition behind him addreſs'd to the Houſe, juſtifying or extenuating his Offences in a Stile and Air no ways becoming a Perſon under an Impeachment of High-Treaſon. This Petition was deliver'd at a Conference to the Commons by the Duke of Buckingham, who ſaid, when he deliver'd it,

Earl of Clarendon flies.

The Lords have commanded me to deliver to you this ſcandalous and ſeditious Paper ſent from the Earl of Clarendon, deſiring the Committee of Peers to preſent it to you, and to deſire you, in a convenient Time, to ſend it to their Lordſhips again, for it has a Stile which they are in Love with, and deſire to keep it.

His Petition gives Offence.

The Petition, or rather Remonſtrance, is very long, and I refer for it to the Hiſtoriographers. After it was read, Mr. Vaughan ſpoke to it, and ſaid among other Things, "'Tis the firſt Time "that I ever heard an innocent Man run away "under the greateſt Charge with Hopes to re- "turn again and vindicate himſelf. Mark one "Expreſſion, he ſays, He is as far from Corrup- "tion as from Diſloyalty. If he had ſaid he "was guilty of neither, he had ſaid ſomething; "but by that Expreſſion he may be guilty of "both. So inſolent a Paper I never met with "in this Kingdom, nor have I ever heard the "like in any other. So inconſiderable a Part of "the Nation as he is to lay it upon the Nation, "who, if innocent, might defend himſelf! If "guilty, why doth he charge the Nation with "Perſecuting? Therefore, without troubling "your ſelves with it, do as the Lords have done, "who deliver'd it to you as a ſcandalous and "ſeditious Paper; it hath Malice in it, and is "the greateſt Reproach upon the King and the "whole Nation that ever was given by Man." Therefore put the Queſtion whether this Paper ſhall not have the Character, That it is a ſcandalous and malicious Paper, and a Reproach to the Juſtice of the Nation, which was carry'd in the Affimative. Sir Robert Howard mov'd that it ſhou'd be burnt by the Hands of the Common Hangman; but that was oppos'd, becauſe the Lords deſir'd the Paper might be return'd: However, it was carry'd in the Affirmative, tho' I am fully convinc'd that ſome of his Speeches when he was Chancellor, eſpecially thoſe vile ones about Sham Plots, and ſome of his Characters in the Grand Rebellion Hiſtory, eſpecially that of the great Hampden, deſerve that Uſage much more than his Petition, and had he not been the Inſtrument of ſo much Miſchief to humour the perſecuting Prelates in the Stinging Acts, a generous Mind cou'd not now have deny'd him Compaſſion. "It was a notable Pro- "vidence of God, ſays Mr. Baxter, that this "Man, who had been the grand Inſtrument of "State, and done almoſt all, and had dealt ſo "cruelly with the Nonconformiſts, ſhou'd thus "by his own Friends be caſt out and baniſh'd, "while thoſe that he had perſecuted were the "moſt moderate in his Cauſe, and many for him. "And it was a great Eaſe that befel good Peo- "ple throughout the Land by his Dejection; "for his Way was to decoy Men into Conſpira- "cies, or to pretend Plots." Echard and the Compleat Hiſtorian inſiſt upon it ſtrenuouſly that they were true Plots. "And then, upon the "Rumour of a Plot, the innocent People of ma- "ny Countries were laid in Priſon, ſo that no "Man knew when he was ſafe. And it is nota- "ble, that he who did ſo much to make the "Oxford Law for baniſhing Miniſters from Cor- "porations who took not that Oath, does in his "Letter from France, ſince his Baniſhment, ſay, "that he never was in Favour ſince the Parlia- "ment ſate at Oxford.

A. D. 1667

He made the Sham Plots.

The Parliament reſolv'd on an Addreſs for a Proclamation to ſummon the ſaid Earl to appear by a Day, and to apprehend him, in order to his Trial. But the Lords wou'd not give their Concurrence to this Vote, they having paſs'd a Bill for Baniſhing the Earl of Clarendon, which many of the Houſe of Commons did not think a ſufficient Puniſhment. Mr. Trevor ſaid, What if he hath Life in other Parts, his Family untainted, and his Children alive, and enjoy his Eſtate.

Baniſh'd by an Act of Parliament.

Sir Robert Howard. There is no Attainder; but if there had been ſuch a Bill, the Thing which ſhou'd ſway me, ſhou'd be the Duke of York's Marriage, &c. This Bill occaſion'd great Debate between thoſe who thought Baniſhment was not Puniſhment enough, and thoſe who thought it was. At laſt it was put to the Vote, and carry'd in the Affirmative. Yeas 109 Noes 55.

Duke of Buckingham a Miniſter.

After his Fall the Duke of Buckingham came into Play, and was look'd upon as Prime Miniſter. He ſhew'd himſelf openly for Toleration or Liberty for all Parties in Matters of God's Worſhip; and others alſo ſeem'd to look that Way, as thinking the King was for it. One Reaſon was, his being an Enemy to every thing that diſturb'd him in his Pleaſures: Another was, his being a Friend to Popery, which was to be underſtood in a general Toleration. This Diſpoſition of the King's ſo diſquieted Dr. Sheldon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that he cou'd not help ſhewing it. His Heart ſeems to have been incapable of any tender Emotion: Piety the moſt tender of all, vaniſh'd in Ceremonies and Forms, and carry'd away Charity with it. The King diſcours'd with Sheldon about removing Lord Clarendon from the Miniſtry, and thought it was the Archbiſhop's Opinion that it ought to be done by what he then ſaid. But when he was remov'd the King ſent for the Archbiſhop to tell him of it. Sheldon made him no Anſwer. The King requiring him to declare himſelf, Sir, ſays the Biſhop, I wiſh you wou'd put away this Woman that you keep. The King reply'd ſmartly, Why did not you talk to me of it ſooner, but take this Occaſion to do it? Other warm Words paſs'd between them, and Sheldon cou'd never recover the King's Confidence. 'Tis evident, that his re-proving

A.D. 1667 proving the King for keeping a Harlot at that Time, and not doing it in ſeven Years before, proceeded not ſo much from a pious Indignation at Lewdneſs, as from Reſentment for the Diſgrace of the Chancellor, who had procur'd the Perſecuting Acts at the Inſtigation of this proud Prelate. Morley, Biſhop of Wincheſter, was ſoon after diſplac'd as Dean of the Chapel, and was ſucceeded by Dr. Croſts, Biſhop of Hereford, who not liking a Court Life reſign'd his Office, and had for Succeſſor Blandford, Biſhop of Oxford, at which Time Dr. Crew, Son to the Lord Crew, afterwards Biſhop of Durham, was made Clerk of the Cloſet.

Sheldon reproves the King for Lewdneſs. The King reproves him.

Echard, in taking Leave of the Earl of Clarendon, has this Reflection. " Thus was this Great " Man, who had ſo often triumph'd in his Elo- " quence almoſt from the Throne (He means his Speeches recommending the Bartholomew Act, the Five Mile Act, the Corporation Act, &c.) " re- " duc'd to employ his Parts to plead, in Effect, " at the Bar of the ſame Houſe. Again, Thus " after he had ſpent the Vigour of his Life in " the moſt difficult Services of two GREAT " KINGS, Charles I, and Charles II, &c."

On the 19th of December, the Day after the Commons had paſs'd the Bill againſt the Earl, the King, by Commiſſion, paſs'd it, and ſome other Bills; which being of no great moment, I leave in Mr. Archdeacon's Liſt, as I ſhou'd this other Paſſage in the Chronicle, was it not for its abundant Curioſities; That his Majeſty went in- to the City, laid the firſt Stone of the Foundati- on of the Royal Exchange, was treated by the Lord Mayor, Sir William Boulton, and Knighted the two Sheriffs, Sir Dennis Gauden, and Sir Thomas Davis: That the Duke of York went thither a Week after, and laid the firſt Stone for a ſecond Pillar, was treated as his Brother had been; and the Laying theſe Stones gave ſo great Encouragement to the Workmen, that ſo large a Structure was never carry'd on with greater Expedition.

Great Hiſtorical Curioſities.

The King, who was himſelf as good a Catholick as his Libertiniſms wou'd let him be, publiſh'd a Proclamation to hinder the Concourſe of Catholicks to the Popiſh Chapels at St. James's and Somerſet-Houſe. In which ſort of Acts, Echard is ſo weak as to ſay, the King took great Delight; though a Page or two afterwards he owns, That Popery, as well as Pleaſures, became more open in the Engliſh Court; which he wou'd not have been ſo careful to remember, if the Miniſters had not ſhewn a Diſpoſition to Moderation towards Proteſtant Diſſenters.

1668. The Scene of the little Action there is, varies ſo often, that without interrupting the Courſe of the Hiſtory with the Affairs of Scotland and Ireland, we are forc'd to break in upon Chronological Order. To do it as little as poſſible, we have poſtpon'd the Affairs of thoſe Kingdoms till the End of the firſt Dutch War in this Reign, which is the firſt Remarkable Period in it.

We have ſeen what dangerous Deſigns have been carrying on in England againſt the Conſtitution, as it is Proteſtant and Free; and the Adminiſtration in Ireland and Scotland has not been better.

Ireland. I touch the Affairs of Ireland firſt, becauſe leaſt has been ſaid of them. We have mention'd the Government of that Kingdom to have been put into the Hands of the Earl of Orrery, the Earl of Montrath, and Sir Maurice Euſtace, as Lords Juſtices; of whom, the two Earls had ſignaliz'd their Zeal to the Good Old Cauſe, as they call'd it, under the Rump and Cromwel.

We have hinted ſomething of the Debate before the King and Council concerning the Iriſh forfeited Lands. Sir Nicholas Plunket, then mentioned, was a Knight of the Pope's making. His A.D. 1668 Reaſons againſt the Settlement of theſe Lands on the Purchaſers, Officers, and Soldiers, were anſwer'd with great Solidity at the Council-Table in Ireland by the Lord Santry, Lord Chief Juſtice of Ireland; who, when the Parliament met at Dublin, was confin'd for a Day or two in the Caſtle of Dublin, at the Motion of the Earl of Orrery, for inſiſting on his Right to be Speaker of the Houſe of Lords, in Oppoſition to the Primate, the Archbiſhop of Armagh, nominated by the Lords Juſtices. Had the Lord Santry's Advice been taken, 'twas thought few of the Iriſh Rebels wou'd have got their Eſtates. But the Duke of Ormond and Earl of Angleſea, great Proprietors in Ireland, falling in with the Court-Party, the Lord Santry's Advice to leave the Popiſh Claimants to be try'd at Common-Law, was ſet aſide, and a Court of Claims erected, compos'd of Members entirely devoted to the Pleaſure of the King and his Miniſters.

The Lords Juſtices having receiv'd a Commiſſion for calling a Parliament, juſt when it was about to be read, and the two Houſes were got together in order to obey it, 'twas found to have no Date; ſo the Lords Juſtices were forc'd to ſend an Expreſs to England for a New Commiſſion, and ſome Pretence was contriv'd to put off the Opening of the Seſſion till that Commiſſion arriv'd, which was within ſix Days.

But the great Diſputes in this Aſſembly about 1662. the Variety of Intereſts, made it neceſſary to ſend over a Lord Lieutenant, who was a Perſon of Character ſufficient to have Weight of his own in the Balance of thoſe Diſputes; and the Privy-Council in England were for the Lord Roberts, a Perſon whoſe Indifferency, as to the various and oppoſite Intereſts of that Kingdom, might produce an impartial Settlement, he being an Engliſh-man, and no Proprietor in Ireland: But the Duke of York ſo work'd the Matter with his Brother, that the Duke of Ormond was ſent thither as Lord Lieutenant; in whom however the Papiſts, contrary to the Expectation of the Court, were diſappointed. For though he was plac'd at the Helm, in Kindneſs to the Iriſh, yet he ſo ſignally eſpous'd the Intereſt of the Engliſh Proteſtants in all their juſt and legal Demands, that he loſt the Favour of the Duke of York.

The Iriſh found Means to get ſeveral Commiſſioners of the Court of Claims ſet aſide, and others put in, exactly calculated for their preſent Deſign. The Chief of them was one Rainsford, who drove ſo furiouſly, that Complaints were made to the King. Talbot, afterwards Earl of Tyrconnel, was the Iriſh Agent at Court, the Duke's Favourite, and not much leſs the King's. He often procur'd Letters of Recommendation of Cauſes in the Court of Claims, by which, and other unwarrantable Artifices, many of the Iriſh Rebels had their Eſtates reſtor'd to them, and many paſs'd Claims for twice as much Land as they had loſt, as the Earl of Clancarty, Earl of Clanrickard, Lord Coſtelo, Dillon, Earl of Carlingford, &c.

Iriſh Rebels get their Eſtates, and more than they had.

It was believ'd, that upon the King's Reſtoration, there cou'd not have been the twentieth Part of Ireland gain'd from the Engliſh, yet what with the Thirds taken from them at one Blow, and by Nominees, and other State Stratagems, there was almoſt half of the Kingdom in Value loſt, notwithſtanding at the ſame Time, the moſt Innocent of the Iriſh were depriv'd of their Eſtates, and the greateſt Rebels got more than their own. This, ſays my Author, was the firſt Step advanc'd for the Introduction of Popery into that Kingdom, and notwithſtanding the ſmall Progreſs it had then ſeemingly made, it ſo far encourag'd, even in this Time of its Infancy, the moſt conſidera-

Illegal Practices of the Court of Claims.

A.D.1668 ble of the Iriſh, as often to intimate to the Engliſh, that in a ſhort Time the Proteſtants and they muſt be of one Religion.

Popery promoted. The Earl of Orrery, upon the coming over of the Duke of Ormond, as Lord Lieutenant, retir'd to Charleville, where he kept his Court, as Preſident of Munſter, and among other good Acts of Government, he took due Care of the Church, not in Echard's, or the Compleat Hiſtorian's Way, by providing profuſely for the Avarice or Extravagance of Eccleſiaſticks, but by being careful that the Eccleſiaſticks ſhou'd do their Duty. He particularly ſent for Sing, Biſhop of Cork, and admoniſh'd him to ſend Clergy-men into the Weſtern Parts of his Dioceſs, where were a great Number of Proteſtants but no Miniſters, the Biſhop keeping the Revenues of thoſe Livings in his own Hands, as fine Cures. Biſhop Sing told my Lord, he was very willing to do as he commanded, but he wanted Clergy-men. Then, ſays the Earl, you will do well to employ the Revenues of the fine Cures, in the Education and Maintenance of young Men in the College for that Purpoſe; and if you do not, I will ſequeſter thoſe Livings for the Maintenance and Education of ſuch young Men as may be fit for the Miniſtry. The Biſhop promis'd to obey the Lord Preſident's Injunctions, and ſome Time after, ſix young Miniſters were ſent into thoſe Parts. The Duke of Ormond had not been long in Ireland before there was a Rumour of a Plot. The Author of the Earl of Orrery's Memoirs will have it, that his Lordſhip diſcover'd it by his Spies in his Province of Munſter, and that the Chief of the Conſpiracy was Col. Jephſon, a conſiderable Officer in the ſame Service with himſelf, and Coote, Earl of Montrath. He was to have ſurpriz'd the Caſtle and Government of Dublin, by the Help of the Soldiers who were diſaffected

A Plot. on account of the Wrongs done them in the forfeited Eſtates. Indeed, ſo many Men who had deſerv'd well of the Proteſtant Cauſe, were in danger of being ruin'd by the unjuſt Proceedings of the Court of Claims; that it is more than probable, they did expreſs much Reſentment, and in Times of Plot making, 'twas eaſy to work up a Conſpiracy out of a very ſmall Ferment. Several Members of Parliament in Ireland, as Mr. Staples, Mr. Shapcot, being accus'd of Intelligence with the Conſpirators, were call'd to the Bar of the Houſe of Commons, and expell'd for ever; which 'tis likely wou'd not have been thought ſufficient Puniſhment, if the Government had really had ſufficient Proof againſt them. Some under Plotters were however hang'd: A quick Way of determining Matters ſince the Year 1660.

Scotland. We left the Affairs of Scotland immediately after Mr. Guthrie the Miniſter was executed, and ſhall take them up there again out of our Author, who ſeems to be well acquainted with the Scotiſh Hiſtory.

Mem. Ch. Scot. Having now taſted Blood, ſays he, their Fury ſeem'd to encreaſe, and in conſequence of the Act for reſtoring Prelacy, they advanc'd ſuch Principles as they knew were directly contrary to the Presbyterian Doctrine, and ſuch as they knew no Bonds, no Affliction, no not Death it ſelf wou'd ever bring the Kirk to comply with. Theſe were,

1. " A Declaration in the Preamble to the Act
" for eſtabliſhing Epiſcopacy, ſignifying, that the " Diſpoſal of the Government of the Church is
2. " in the King, as an inherent Right of the Crown,
" Depriving the Church of the Freedom of call" ing and chooſing their own Paſtors. This was
3. " included in the Act for reſtoring Patronages,
" diſpoſſeſſing the Miniſters who wou'd not con-
" form to Epiſcopacy, and this without legal A.D.1668
" Proſecution, by a meer Act of Council.

Theſe tyrannical Proceedings were owing to the Meaſures concerted by the Earl of Middleton and Archbiſhop Sharp. Lauderdale, who liv'd at Court, declar'd at firſt againſt them, and gave a Charge in Writing againſt Middleton, when he came to Court, for ſeveral Articles of Male-Adminiſtration; but Sheldon, and even Monk ſupported Middleton, yet the Earl of Lauderdale got the King's Ear, and Sharp coming to London to vindicate Middleton's Conduct, finding the King was alienated from Middleton, he made great Submiſſion to Lauderdale, who reproaching Biſhop Burnet. him for his Engagements with Middleton, Sharp denied all, particularly that he had written to the King in Middleton's Favour; but the King Sharp's Treachery. had given the original Letter to Lauderdale, who upon Sharp's ſolemn Denial of it, ſhew'd it him; with which Biſhop Burnet tells us, he was ſo ſtruck, that he fell a crying in a moſt abject Man- Prov'd upon him. ner. This was not very long after he was conſecrated; and this Man, who made no Scruple of telling, and even ſwearing Things which he knew to be falſe, is Echard's Champion for the Church. His Morals were a Scandal to the His Wickedneſs. Name of Religion; but ſuch Scandals are nothing to ſome Men if they are varniſh'd over with a glaring Zeal for Forms, Dignities, Revenues and Power. Lauderdale promiſing to be a better Friend to the Church than Middleton had been, Sharp forſook his Patron at once, and deliver'd himſelf up to the Earl of Lauderdale, the King's Buffoon, and the Caterer of his libidinous Pleaſures, inſomuch that 'tis ſaid, he ſhou'd ſay to the King in his Jollity, Wonnot your moſt ſaucred Maujeſty plaſe to have a Whear to Nit? And his Miniſtry was ſo acceptable to his Majeſty, that Secretary Morrice was, at his Inſtigation, ſent with an Order to Middleton to deliver his Commiſſion, and he was turn'd out of all. The Earl of Rothes was declar'd the King's Commiſſioner, but Lauderdale would not truſt him, ſo he went with him to Scotland, where 1663. the Parliament met again, and condemn'd the Lord Wariſtoun, Uncle to Biſhop Burnet, for ſiding with Cromwel. He had eſcap'd beyond Sea after the Reſtoration, but was deliver'd up by thoſe he confided in, and put to Death Lord without Mercy, notwithſtanding his great Age, Wari- and great Intereſt among the Presbyterians, who ſtoun be- almoſt idoliz'd him. He well deſerv'd their ut- headed. moſt Eſteem and Reſpect, being a Gentleman of great Parts and Piety, and of an unalterable Affection to the Common-wealth. He ſpoke long before the Parliament, but his Speech was broken and diſorder'd, occaſion'd by his Age and Infirmities, and not affected, to raiſe Pity, as his Enemies fancied. When the Day of his Execution came, he was very ſerene, chearful, and fully ſatisfy'd with his Death. He read a Speech twice over on the Scaffold, all which he compos'd himſelf. In it he juſtify'd all the Proceedings in the Covenant, and aſſerted his own Sincerity, but condemn'd his joining with Cromwel, tho' even in that, his Intentions had been ſincere. The King was particularly ſet againſt him, and his Virtue, Conſtancy, Capacity and Popularity, are Things which cou'd not but render him criminal beyond Pardon to ſuch a Prince as we write of. What adds to the Merit of this good Man's Memory, is, that he was Father of the excellent and worthy Mr. Secretary Johnſtoun, whoſe Services to the Publick, in and after the Revolution, will be a conſiderable Part of the Hiſtory of thoſe Times, if he ſhall think fit to make them known under their proper Name. This Parliament paſs'd an Act, ſomething like the

Five

A.D.1668 Five Mile Act in England; and another, offering an Army of 20,000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe to the King, to be ready upon Summons, with Forty Days Proviſion. When the Seſſion broke up, the two Earls, Rothes and Lauderdale, return'd to London, the Government in Scotland being left to the Earl of Glencairne, Lord Chancellor, who oppos'd Sharp's driving ſo furiouſly as he did, not out of Love to the Presbyterians, but out of Pique againſt Rothes, who ſupported Sharp, and was recommended by that imperious Prieſt to the Biſhops in England. Sharp follow'd to London, to complain of Glencairne, and the Privy-Council, who giving a little Check only to his Rage, he ſaid, There was ſuch a Remiſſneſs, that unleſs ſome more Spirit was put in the Adminiſtration, it wou'd be impoſſible to preſerve the Church. That was the Word, ſays the Biſhop of Salisbury, always us'd, as if there had been a Charm in it, and as ſuch Echard uſes it, ſo does the Compleat Hiſtorian, and ſo has it been us'd in and out of Convocation by all thoſe that claim the Merit of being the only good Church Men. Sharp's chief Buſineſs was to get a High Commiſſion Court ſet up in Scotland, and an Order that he ſhou'd ſit above the Lord Chancellor: Lauderdale gave into it, Biſhop Burnet tells us, much againſt his own Mind; and that tho' then very young, he expoſtulated with him upon it, and adds he, I thought he was acting the Earl of Traquair's Part, giving way to all the Follies of 1664. the Biſhops, on Deſign to ruin them. The Modeſty of Sharp was equal to his Honeſty, for the Earl of Glencairne dying about this Time, Sharp's Pride and Wickedneſs. he wrote to Sheldon, his Brother Archbiſhop, that upon the Diſpoſal of the Seals, the very Being of the Church did ſo abſolutely depend, that he begg'd he wou'd preſs the King very earneſtly in the Matter, and procure his being ſent for to Court, before that Poſt ſhou'd be fill'd up. Sheldon fail'd not to ſpeak to the King, who had a very ill Opinion of Sharp, and bid him tell him, he wou'd take Care about it, and that he need not come up to London. Notwithſtanding this Check, away comes the Archbiſhop, and was receiv'd very coldly by his Majeſty, who ask'd him, If he had not receiv'd the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's Letter; Yes, reply'd Sharp; but I choſe rather to venture on your Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, than to ſee the Church ruin'd. The Charm again! The Earl of Rothes had the Seals given to him, 'till ſome other Chancellor cou'd be pitch'd upon; and it being a Propoſal of Sharp's, after his own Diſappointment, when he return'd to Scotland, a dreadful Scene of illegal Violence was open'd. Sharp govern'd Lord Rothes, who abandon'd himſelf to Pleaſure; and when ſome cenſur'd him for it, all the Anſwer he made was a ſevere A.D.1668 Piece of Raillery, That he who was the King's Commiſſioner, ought to repreſent his Perſon. Sharp's Creatures made work for the new High Commiſſion Court, and brought daily Offenders before it, to be puniſh'd by Fines, Whippings, Jails, and other inhumane Severities, for not coming to Church to hear Curates, whoſe Morals they abhorr'd, and whoſe Ignorance they deſpis'd. This Cruelty and Injuſtice rag'd towards the Weſt of Scotland, where the Country was ever now and then ſwept of Conventiclers, to fill the Priſons. The Lawyers ſtanding too much on Forms of Law in theſe Proſecutions, Sharp often complain'd that Favour was ſhewn to the Enemies of the Church, and often did he cry, muſt the Church be ruin'd for Punctilio's of Law? The Earls of Argyle, Tweedale and Kincardin were cold in theſe Matters, upon which Sharp ſaid, they were Friends to the Church's Enemies.

Further Wickedneſs of Sharp.

Sir James Turner was order'd to quarter the Guards thro' the Country, where the Miniſters had forſaken their Pulpits, and the People flock'd to hear them pray and preach in other Places: He was commanded to take Orders from the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, and being mad when he was The Scot's drunk, which was very often, he liv'd as if he dragoon'd. had been upon Military Executions. He confeſt to Biſhop Burnet, it went ſometimes againſt the Grain with him to ſerve ſuch a debauch'd and worthleſs Company, as the Clergy generally were; and that he often did not act up to the Rigour of his Orders, for which he was always chid by Sharp, but never for his illegal and violent Proceedings. And tho' the Complaints of him were very high, ſo that when he was afterwards ſeiz'd on at Dumfries, it was intended to make a Sacrifice of him; yet when the Covenanters look'd into his Orders, and found that his Proceedings, how fierce ſoever, fell ſhort of theſe, they ſpar'd him, as a Man who had merited by being ſo gentle among them. Some time after Sharp went to London again, and accus'd Lord Lauderdale Sharp a as a Favourer of Fanaticks; ſo did this wicked Renegade. Renegade call the Party, for which he had formerly been a zealous Agent. Lauderdale deſir'd that Sharp might put his Charge in Writing; the King conſented to it, and that he ſhou'd demand it of Sharp, which he did in ſo ſevere a Tone, that Sharp fell a trembling, and retracted what he had ſaid to the King, who preſently accus'd the Earl of Lauderdale of ill Nature, Gives him- to preſs it ſo heavily on Archbiſhop Sharp, ſelf the and force him upon giving himſelf the Lye in Lye. ſuch coarſe Terms. This Sharp is Sheldon's Fel- Ibid. low Labourer.

In October, after the Fire of London, Turner was commanded to renew his Hoſtilities in the Weſt of Scotland. The People were alarm'd, and ſaw they were to be undone: Upon which they met together, and ſome Miniſters came among them. Two Gentlemen who had ſerv'd in the Wars, Lieutenant Colonel Wallace, and Major Lairmonth, were the beſt Officers they had. The chief Gentlemen of that Country had been thrown into Priſon, under Pretence of a Dutch Invaſion; ſo the Multitude had no body to head them of more Note than Wallace and Lairmonth. They were told that all things were in ſuch Confuſion after London was burnt, Covenan- that a vigorous Attempt might be their Deli- ters riſe. verance; and truly the Provocations they had met with were intolerable; for beſides the Laws Impious before-mention'd, theſe impious and barbarous Edicts Edicts had paſs'd by Procurement chiefly of againſt Middleton and Sharp, two wicked Renegades. them.

They ſuſpended, depriv'd, excommunicated, impriſon'd, condemn'd and tortur'd at Pleaſure. A Miniſter was ſentenc'd to Baniſhment for calling that Lordly Prelate Sir, and not My Lord. Mr. John Levinſton, an eminent Reverend Miniſter, being baniſh'd the Kingdom for the ſame Scruple, Scot, a lewd Curate, at that Time under Excommunication, had his Benefice given him, and the Pariſhioners hating him, as an immoral, ſcandalous Perſon, four of them were brought before the High Commiſſion for being preſent when ſome others of the Pariſh had expreſs'd their Diſſatisfaction at Scot's coming to their Kirk, for which this deteſtable Sentence was pronounc'd againſt them, That they ſhou'd be ſcourg'd thro' the Town, ſtigmatiz'd on the Forehead with the Letter T at Edinburgh Croſs, and ſent Slaves to Barbados.

Tyrannical Government.

Cruelty.

I cou'd fill Volumes with Inſtances of the like Injuſtice and Cruelty exercis'd againſt the Proteſtants in Scotland; and is it a Wonder that People, who every Day lay expos'd to the Rage and Barbarity of bloody-minded Mercenaries, worſe if poſſible than French Dragoons, had rather die with Arms in their Hands, than be ſtarv'd or tortur'd to Death, as was the Fate of thoſe that ſtay'd and thoſe that fled?

1666.

" If the poor People, ſays my Scotch Author, " were by thoſe inſupportable Violences made " deſperate, and driven to all the Extremities " of a wild Deſpair, who can juſtly reflect upon " them? when they read in the Word of God, " That Oppreſſion makes a wiſe Man mad: And " therefore, were there no other Original of the " Inſurrection, known by the Name of the Ri- " ſing of Pentland, it was nothing but what the " intolerable Oppreſſions of thoſe Times might " have juſtify'd to all the World; Nature ha- " ving dictated to all People a Right of Self- " Defence, when illegally and arbitrarily attack'd " in a Manner not juſtifiable either by the Laws " of God, or the Laws of the Country.

A.D.1668

We have ſeen that the Riſing of Pentland was a raſh Action on a ſudden, without Concert even with the Scots at fifty Miles Diſtance; yet Echard, I deſire the Reader to meaſure the Man's Conſcience and Capacity by this Inſtance, aſſerts with a ſurprizing Confidence, that this Inſurrection was not on a ſudden, but fram'd and rais'd by the Presbyterians in Scotland, in Concert with the Presbyterians in England, who, ſays he, were thought to have held too near a Correſpondence with them. The Compleat Hiſtorian is no fairer in his Account of this Riſing than Mr Archdeacon. They by Degrees form'd an Army, and then with an Inſolence which they were taught by the Stinging Acts, the Miniſters are put at the Head of them. Moſt of the Leaders of theſe Troops were caſhier'd Preachers. Let us now read the true Hiſtory of this Presbyterian Army.

Mem. Ch. Scot. 160.

Sir James Turner was an Officer of Dragoons, who by Order of the Council was ſent with his Troops to quarter at Diſcretion upon the poor Weſtern People of Scotland, becauſe there they found the chief Body of the conſtant Sufferers for, and Adherers to the true Religion. Turner was a Tool to their Minds, a Stranger to the Country, being an Engliſhman, bred to Plunder and Rapine in the Service of the French, perfectly void of the Fear of God or Man, and unacquainted either with Religion or Humanity. He had made three Invaſions into the Weſt of Scotland, where his Exactions and Cruelty had been ſuch as had almoſt ſtripp'd the Country, not of its Subſtance only, but of its Inhabitants, who were oblig'd to quit their Habitations to avoid the Fury and Brutality of the Soldiers. 'Tis impoſſible to give the Detail of the Cruelties and inhumane Uſage the miſerable People met with from this Butcher, ſent among them by Sharp. They had patiently ſuffer'd the mercileſs Treatment this Man ſhew'd them many Months, and thereby teſtify'd more Paſſive Obedience than moſt of thoſe who have ſince upbraided them with Reſiſtance can pretend to, when Sir James Turner put an End to their Patience by the following Occaſion.

Sir James Turner's Character.

On the 13th of November, 1666, he ſent four Soldiers from Dumfries, where he quarter'd, to a Town call'd Dalray, in the Shire of Galloway, with Orders to ſeize upon a poor Man's Goods, who, he pretended, had broken the Laws by not coming to his Pariſh-Church; and if he had no Goods, to take the Man, and bring him Priſoner to Dumfries. The Soldiers, as Turner alledg'd afterwards, went beyond their Inſtructions, in ſeizing not only his Goods, but his Perſon, and binding the old Man Hand and Foot, brought him out like a Beaſt, and laid him on the Ground while they rifled the Houſe. The Neighbours mov'd with Compaſſion at the Indignity of this Treatment, and at ſeeing a poor antient Man lying on the Ground, bound like a Sheep to be carry'd away to the Slaughter, came to the Soldiers, and calmly entreated them to unbind him, and let him go like a Priſoner, and like a Man, not like a Beaſt. The Soldiers pretended to be affronted at this Motion, fell immediately upon the People with their Swords, and wounded two or three of them; which ſo enrag'd the reſt, that they attack'd the Soldiers, wounded one, and the reſt throwing down their Arms, begg'd Quarter.

This

A.D. 1668 This Breach, tho' purely accidental, and by an unforeſeen Provocation, being begun, the Compleat Hiſtorian affirms 'twas a fram'd Deſign; Echard, that it was in Correſpondence with the Engliſh Presbyterians. The Soldiers vow'd Revenge, and preparing to fall upon the whole neighbouring Country, drove the innocent People Ib. 161. to the Neceſſity of gathering together, and ſtanding upon their own Defence; ſo that when ten or twelve Soldiers return'd with their bloody Reſolution of Plunder and Deſolation, they were diſarm'd and made Priſoners. Upon which ſome Troops were ſent on the ſame Errand, who found the People too ſtrong to be attack'd; upon which the Cry was preſently, A REBELLION, and they ſent for more Forces to deſtroy them. This naturally excited others to run in to the Aid of their Brethren; all which was purely caſual; till finding themſelves reduc'd by this laſt Gathering to a Circumſtance, that Stay or Go wou'd be fatal to them; if they fell into the Hands of a cruel Government, they ſaw no Remedy but to ſtand to it; and inviting all the injur'd and oppreſs'd People to join with them, they declar'd For Liberty and the Kirk of Scotland. They then enter'd Dumfries and ſeiz'd Sir James Turner their Perſecutor. Thence they march'd to Kirkenbright, Aire, and ſo to Lanerick, where they ſolemnly renew'd the Covenant, and reſolv'd to ſeal it with their Blood. From Lanerick they advanc'd towards Edinburgh, where they arriv'd to the Number of about 2000 on the 17th of November; but being not ſtrong enough to attack the City, they poſted themſelves on the South-Weſt, at the Foot of Pentland Hills, waiting for the Conjunction of other Friends. They carry'd Sir James Turner Priſoner along with them, intending to make an Exchange of him for others of the Covenanters that might fall into the Enemies Hands, and they us'd him very civilly, as he himſelf confeſs'd.

The Governor of Carliſle ſent the firſt Expreſs of this Commotion to Court, and another from Sharp follow'd it two Days after. It is not eaſily to be imagin'd into what Conſternation it threw that inſolent Prelate and his Inſtruments; nor were the Court of England without thoſe Fears, which are ſoon mov'd in the Minds of thoſe who have done wrong. Biſhop Burnet informs us, Sharp was in a terrible Fright, and his Obſervation confirms it, That Cruelty and Cowardice go together: He mov'd that the Privy-Council might ſhut themſelves up in Edinburgh Caſtle; but the reſt of the Board were aſham'd of his cowardly Council, ſaying, it was to abandon the Town, and betray an unbecoming Fear. Dalzeel, who had learnt his good Manners and good Nature among the Ruſſians, whom he had ſerv'd, was ſent againſt the Covenanters with all the Forces that cou'd be got together. He publiſh'd a Proclamation of Pardon to all who ſhou'd return Home in 24 Hours, which reduc'd the Covenanters from 2000 to 800; the major Part of them loſing Heart when they ſaw no body of Note come to them out of Edinburgh, and but very few Citizens or People from any other Parts of the Kingdom. The chief Noblemen, as Duke Hamilton, the Earls of Athol and Airly, purſu'd the Inſpirations of Sharp, and put themſelves and their Vaſſals in Arms againſt the Covenanters. The Earl of Argyle, who had been reſtor'd in Blood and Eſtate, rais'd 1500 Men, but Sharp was afraid to truſt them, and acting as chief Conductor of the War, ſent him no Orders to march; ſo he was at a vaſt Charge to levy and maintain his Men to no Purpoſe. But this Charge, vaſt as it was, bore no Compariſon with the Expence that noble Lord and his Father had been at for the Service of King Charles II. in whoſe Reign A.D. 1668 they were both condemn'd to die, after they had expended 40,000 Pounds Sterling to ſerve him, which he promis'd to repay, but never did, and made no other Acknowledgments for it than the Tragical Ones juſt mention'd. On the 28th of November, during a Ceſſation proclaim'd for 24 Hours, to give the Whigs (ſo the Covenanters were at this Time firſt ſtil'd) Opportunity to retire, Dalzeel ſurpriz'd and attack'd them, and after a very bold Reſiſtance they were at length over-power'd and broken. About 50 were kill'd in the Place, 80 were taken Priſoners, and the reſt ſav'd themſelves by Flight. The King's Forces Covenanters routed. did not purſue them very vigorouſly; beſides, being weary with long Marches, they had no great Affection to the Service; for, ſays the Biſhop of Salisbury, the Covenanters were a poor harmleſs Company of Men become mad by Oppreſſion. Not above five of the King's Soldiers were ſlain; and now had the perſecuting Scots Prelates a Triumph, which cou'd not but be inexpreſſibly grateful to them, as giving them an Opportunity to have their Fill of Blood. Biſhop Burnet tells us, the Archbiſhops of St. Andrew's and Glaſgow enflam'd the Lord Rothes, who came down from London full of Rage, and provok'd him to proceed againſt the Priſoners with the utmoſt Severity. Glaſgow, not Leighton, adviſ'd him to hang up all who wou'd not renounce the Covenant. The beſt of the Epiſcopal Clergy ſet upon the Biſhops to lay hold upon this Opportunity to recover the Affections of the People by interceeding for the Priſoners: But Sharp wou'd not be mollify'd. It was a moving Sight, continues his Lordſhip, to ſee ten of them hang'd upon one Gibbet at Edinburgh. Thirty-five more were ſent to their Countries, and hang'd up before their own Doors, the Epiſcopal Clergy all the while uſing them hardly, and declaring them Damn'd for their Rebellion. They might have all ſav'd their Lives, if they wou'd have renounc'd the Covenant. So they were really a ſort of Martyrs for it. Are Martyrs for the Covenant. They did all at their Death give their Teſtimony, according to their Phraſe, to it, and they expreſs'd great Joy in their Sufferings. Sharp publiſh'd a Proclamation prohibiting the Concealing any of thoſe who fled, under Penalty of High Treaſon, naming the following Miniſters in particular; Mr. John Welch, Mr. James Smith, Mr. John Cuningham, Mr. Gabriel Semple, Mr. Alexander Peddin, Mr. William Veach, Mr. John Crookſhanks, Mr. Gabriel Maxwell, Mr. John Carſtairs, Mr. John Guthrie. The latter was conceal'd in the Houſe of Biſhop Burnet's Mother, a zealous Covenanter, Siſter to the Lord Warriſton. Mr. Maccail, a young Miniſter, who had been with the Covenanters at Pentland Hill, was put to the Torture of the Boot, and for all the Pains of the Rack dy'd in this Rapture of Joy, Farewel Sun, Moon, and Stars; Farewel Kindred and Friends; Farewel World and Time; Farewel weak and frail Body. Welcome Eternity; Welcome Angels and Saints; Welcome Saviour of the World; and Welcome God the Judge of all; " which, ſays Biſhop Burnet, he ſpoke with " a Voice and Manner that ſtruck all who " heard it. Miniſters proſcrib'd.

Were the Compleat Hiſtorians ſenſible of the Pathetick and Sublime in Eloquence, they wou'd own there is nothing like it in whatever they have ſeen of Antiquity; and it being a ſuffering Miniſter's dying Words, adds a Truth to the Beauty, which cannot be met with in prophane Learning. This is one of the Covenant Martyrs, which the Scots Curates gave over to Damnation. Tho' I doubt not every good Chriſtian, after reading the Divine Exultation of Mr. Maccail, will be

A.D.1668 ready to ſay to them, Be my Portion with this good Man, and take ye your Lot with one another.

We muſt now return to the Affairs of England, which are our Principal Subject; and we treat of Scotland and Ireland only as they have Relation to them.

Triple-League. The Archdeacon, and moſt of our Hiſtoriographers, ſpeak of the King's entring into a League with Holland and Sweden for the Preſervation of the Netherlands, as one of the moſt Politick Acts of this Politick Reign; and it was certainly grounded on the beſt Reaſon that right Judgment cou'd lead Miniſters into. England, Holland, and Sweden, being the only Powers who were willing or able to have put a Stop to the French King's Conqueſts, if the King and his Chief Miniſters had been as much in earneſt as were the People. But King Charles had no Pretence left him to ask Money of Parliament, to whom a very ſlight Pretence wou'd have been ſufficient. He had made an inglorious War and Peace, after an Expence of many Millions of Money. He knew the Engliſh Nation was very jealous of the French Acquiſitions in Flanders, which they juſtly look'd on as a Barrier to England; and any Meaſures taken to preſerve it from falling into French Hands, wou'd be very popular, and extreamly acceptable to the States-General; ſo he order'd Sir William Temple, his Envoy at Bruſſels, to repair to the Hague in the Beginning of January, and conclude a Treaty with the United Provinces; which was perfected and ſign'd a few Days after his Arrival, to the great Joy of the two Nations. The Purport of it was, to oblige France by Mediation or Force to ſtop the further Progreſs of her Army in the Spaniſh Netherlands; and Sweden entring into this Alliance ſoon after the Concluſion of it, 'twas call'd the Triple-League. But the Dutch only were ſincere in it; and Lewis XIV. knew the King of England's Inclination and Religion too well to be alarm'd at it. All the Miniſters of the three Allies, who had the Conduct of this Treaty, were in the French Intereſt, as well in Holland, as in England and Sweden, Sir William Temple only excepted, who was as hearty in it as he was diligent. The French King knowing that whatever Publick Alliances the Engliſh and Dutch Miniſters might conclude, they were ſtill at his Devotion, ſeem'd to take little Notice of the Concluſion of this; the League being all Grimace in thoſe that were to execute it. For tho' the Penſionary De Wit told the Count D'Eſtrades, his Ambaſſador at the Hague, The States are of Neceſſity to endeavour for ſuch Securities and Alliances as may ſhelter them from his Majeſty's great Power; yet he remain'd as much attach'd to the French King's Intereſt as ever, out of Fear of the Prince of Orange's Party, who, with the Prince, had been extreamly ill us'd by him; and he thought he cou'd not have a better Support againſt both than the French King. Before the Triple-League was perfected, the Count de Lionne, Secretary of State in France, wrote thus to D'Eſtrades, which ſhews ſufficiently that his Maſter was in no manner of Pain about an Alliance concluded by Potentates whoſe Miniſters he had made ſure of. Live merrily whatever you ſee happen, be under no Concern about the Triple-League. He knows what he ſays, and on what Foundation; and D'Eſtrades cou'd not help ſaying, It will all vaniſh in Smoak, and the King my Maſter will but laugh at it. The French Faction in England talk'd after the ſame Rate. Sir Thomas Clifford whiſper'd a Gentleman in ſome Company where this League was highly extoll'd, Well, for all this Noiſe, we muſt yet have another War with the Dutch before it be long. This Treaty being little leſs than Felonious on the Part of England and Sweden, it is not worth dwelling upon, or one might very much enlarge on it out of Sir William Temple's Memoirs and Letters. A.D.1668

The Irruption of Lewis XIV. into the Spaniſh Netherlands, very much facilitated the Peace, which was now concluded between Spain and Portugal; the Earl of Sandwich, the King of England's Ambaſſador, acting as a Mediator; which proves that it was no very difficult Negotiation.

Parliament. On the 10th of February the Parliament met, and his Majeſty made a Speech to them, wherein he mention'd the Triple-League, and wiſh'd them to think ſeriouſly of ſome Courſe to beget a better Underſtanding and Compoſure in the Minds of his Proteſtant Subjects, in Matters of Religion; whereby they may be induc'd not only to ſubmit quietly to the Government, but alſo chearfully give their Aſſiſtance for the Support of it. Theſe Sentiments put in Exerciſe in the beginning of his Reign, wou'd have prevented the miſchievous Conſequences of the Lord Clarendon's Stinging Acts. The Houſe of Commons order'd a Committee to enquire into the late Miſcarriages at Sea, and at Chatham, and expell'd Mr. Brouncker, before-mention'd, for giving the Orders for ſlackening Sail. They impeach'd Sir Peter Pett, and Sir William Penn, Commiſſioners in his Majeſty's Yards, for Irregularities and Embezzlements. Theſe Impeachments ſerving only to retard Buſineſs, ſays Echard, by which he means giving of Money, were never compleated ſo as to anſwer the Ends of them: For as yet this Aſſembly is too full of Penſioners to compleat any thing that the Court does not reliſh. He then tells us, they had ſome other Buſineſs beſides giving Money, and notwithſtanding it is but a Year or two before this Parliament will, by a Publick Act, declare that they are ſenſible of the Growth of Popery, from the Diſunion among Proteſtants, yet does this ingenious Hiſtorian aſſure us now, That the Houſe of Commons were ſtill of the Earl of Clarendon's Judgment; that Popery had its Growth under Cover of indulging Proteſtant Diſſenters; tho', in truth, while thoſe Diſſenters were moſt cruelly perſecuted, the Papiſts were moſt tenderly indulg'd. But this Aſſembly had ſtill a Majority of the ſame Judgment with Sir John Duncomb, Sir John Robinſon, Sir Courtney Pool, Sir Job Charlton, &c. which Four only had among them 5500 Pounds yearly in Penſions, as will be further made appear in the Sequel. As yet Sheldon, Morley, and the perſecuting Prelates, had an Influence upon them; and they muſt undergo ſtill more Calamities before their Eyes will be open to ſee the Beauty of Charity and Moderation. They ſhew'd their Wiſdoms in taking this Way to compoſe the Minds of the King's Proteſtant Subjects, the preſenting an Addreſs againſt the Meetings of Nonconformiſts; they cou'd not well help joining the Papiſts too, and a Proclamation was iſſu'd accordingly.

Two Houſes differ in Skinner's Caſe. In this Seſſion of Parliament a Difference happen'd between the Two Houſes, in the Caſe of Mr. Thomas Skinner, a Merchant of London; who having receiv'd great Damages from the Eaſt-India Company, had brought the Matter by Petition into the Houſe of Lords originally, and was reliev'd in 5000 Pounds Coſts. This the Commons Voted to be not agreeable to the Laws of the Land, and that Thomas Skinner, in procuring Judgment, with Directions, to be ſerv'd upon the Governor of the Eaſt-India Company, being a Member of the Houſe, is guilty of a Breach of Privilege, and they order'd him to be taken into Cuſtody of their Serjeant at Arms. This occaſion'd

A.D.1668 ſion'd ſeveral Conferences. The Lords Voted the Petition of the Eaſt-India Company to the Commons to be Scandalous; the Commons Voted it to be not Scandalous, and ſent a Meſſage to the Peers, that for promoting a fair Union between the Two Houſes, all further Proceedings be forborn upon the Sentence in the Caſe of Skinner; and that Sir Andrew Riccard, Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, Mr. Rowland Gwynne, and Mr. Chriſtopher Boone be ſet at Liberty; and Reſolv'd, that whoever ſhall be aiding and aſſiſting in putting in Execution the Sentence of the Lords, in the Caſe of Skinner, againſt the Eaſt-India Company, ſhall be deem'd a Betrayer of the Rights and Liberties of the Commons, &c. On the ſame Day that they paſs'd this Vote, May the 8th, the King ſent for them to the Houſe of Peers, and paſs'd an Act for raiſing 301,000 Pounds by an Impoſt on Wines, and three or four Acts more. Coke tells us, the Parliament gave an additional Duty of eight Pounds a Ton on French Wines, and Twelve Pounds a Ton on Spaniſh Wines, for eight Years, which amounted to 560,000 Pounds; alſo an Act for Sale of the Fee-Farm Rents, to the Value of 1,300,000 Pounds, which enabled him to ſtay almoſt a Year and half without a Seſſion. The Parliament was then adjourn'd to the 11th of Auguſt, but it was then prorogu'd, and again after that; ſo they met not again till the 19th of October in the following Year.

When the Conteſt was on foot between the Lords and Commons in the Caſe of Skinner, the Lord Hollis wrote a Pamphlet on the Side of the Houſe of Peers, in which he ſeem'd to outdo the higheſt who had ever written for the Privileges of the Houſe of Lords; which was the more taken Notice of, becauſe it was the Reverſe of his Opinion when he was a Member of the Houſe of Commons. For Ludlow ſays, " He ſo far deſpis'd " the Privileges of the Lords, that at a Confe- " rence between the Two Houſes, in which the " Peers ſhew'd themſelves unwilling to comply " with the Commons, he ſaid openly, If they " perſiſt to refuſe their Concurrence, the Commons " will do the Thing without them. One of the " Members of the Houſe of Commons anſwer'd " Lord Hollis's Pamphlet with ſuch Force and " Sharpneſs, that upon Debate, the Commons " came to three Reſolutions to this Effect: That " divers Things affirm'd in his Book are falſe and " ſcandalous: That from this Time the Lords " ſhall never originally intermeddle with the Cauſe " of any Commoner; and that what the Lords " have done in the Buſineſs of Skinner, ſhall be " raz'd out of their Books. Which Votes being " carry'd to the Lords for their Approbation, " they return'd for Anſwer, they wou'd ſhortly " ſend them a Bill touching that Matter.

The Hiſtory is very thin of Buſineſs all this Reign, unleſs in Proſecution of Proteſtant Diſſenters, and making Plots, and hanging Plotters. But the chief Plot-maker, the Earl of Clarendon, being in Exile again, other Work is found out A Tumult. for the Executioner. A Rabble of lewd Fellows, not lewder however than their Betters, aſſembled the 25th of March in a tumultuous Manner, it being in Eaſter Holidays. They broke open ſeveral Priſons, and demoliſh'd the Houſes of ſome Perſons who had given them Offence; but the Guards coming, diſpers'd them. Several of the Rioters were taken, and this Government knew well what to do with their Priſoners: Four of them were hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd at Tyburn.

The French King having not yet prepar'd Matters for carrying on a War in the Netherlands, himſelf march'd another Way at the Head of an Army of 40,000 Men, and over-ran the Franche Compte and Burgundy, for two excellent Reaſons, to forward the Peace with Spain, and to ſecure himſelf againſt any Army the Emperor might raiſe and ſend into Burgundy. England and Holland were very active in procuring a Peace between France and Spain; Aix la Chapelle was appointed for the Place of Treaty. Sir William Temple was the Engliſh Miniſter; and the Neceſſity of the Affairs of Spain was ſuch, that ſhe was forc'd to part with Charleroy, Binch, Aeth, Doway, Fort de Scarpe, Tournay, Oudenarde, Liſle, Armentiers, Courtray, Bergues, and Furnes, with their Dependencies, to France. This was the firſt good Effect of the Triple-Alliance; inſtead of making War, to recover thoſe Cities and Territories in the Netherlands, the League joins in giving them up. Spain indeed was not very punctual in payment of the Subſidies promis'd to Sweden. The King of England never intended to make War againſt France, though not only the Spaniſh, but the Dutch Netherlands were in Danger; nay, he was ſo far from any ſuch Intention, that he ſeem'd more enclin'd to make War againſt England, by the Aſſiſtance of the French King, as appears by D'Eſtrades's Letter to that King of the 21ſt of July, 1667, when the Breda Treaty was juſt concluded. If the King of England will take the ſame Counſel he did when I was Ambaſſador there, not to pretend to any thing in Flanders, but to aſſiſt your Majeſty with all his Power to conquer it, provided you wou'd aſſiſt him with 10,000 Foot, and ſome Horſe, one need not mind the States. Echard, after Coke, tells us, that whatever the Spaniards loſt, the Engliſh got ſomething by the French Ravages; for they drove one Brewer out of Flanders into England, where he taught the Engliſh Diers a new Way of dying fine Cloths forty per Cent. cheaper than they cou'd die before; which theſe two notable Hiſtorians tells us only as a Proof of an old Saying, 'Tis a bad Wind, &c. The Archdeacon then informs us, that Sir William Temple thought the Spirit and Vigour of the great Men in England were enervated; as if they had ever been nervated ſince this King came to the Crown! Then out of his great Zeal to the Earl of Clarendon's Church, he falls foul upon his Succeſſor in the Miniſtry, the Duke of Buckingham, and his Aſſociate the Earl of Rocheſter, who ſeem'd capable of corrupting any Court in the World but the Court of England, which was incapable of Corruption, the Meaſure of whoſe Vices were as full as the Vial of Vengeance that threaten'd them. He owns, That the Court, following the King's Example, was over-run with Luxury and Extravagance. The Light of Natural Reaſon led thoſe two Lords into an Opinion that the Cruelty towards Proteſtant Diſſenters was unchriſtian like, and inhumane, and contrary to the natural Right of Free-born Men. Allow that they did not act from a Principle of Chriſtian Charity, but from meer Humanity and good Nature, thoſe are amiable and laudable Qualities, infinitely preferable to blind Zeal and frantick Bigotry.

Spain's diſhonourable Peace with France.

The Court lewd.

The King had expreſs'd his Willingneſs to have the Minds of the Diſſenters compos'd, in his late Speech, and the Duke of Buckingham declaring himſelf for Liberty, they were conniv'd at in London; which occaſion'd the Country Miniſters to hold their Meetings as openly as the London Miniſters held theirs.

Diſſenters conniv'd at.

The Compleat Hiſtorian, among a thouſand weak and malicious Reflections, has this: " It " cou'd be no great Credit to the Diſſenting Party " to have had the Earl of Clarendon their Oppo- " ſer, and the Duke of Buckingham their Pro- " moter. The firſt oppoſing them upon no worſe " Principle than a Zeal to the eſtabliſh'd Church,

*A.D.*1668 " as the moſt effectual Bulwark againſt Popery; " and the other appearing in their Intereſt upon " no better Account than a ſtrong Affection to the " univerſal Liberty of Opinion and Practice." If this had been the only fooliſh Reflection in that Hiſtory, we wou'd have had Pity on it for its Folly, and have left it undiſturb'd where we found it; but it is ſo much againſt common Senſe, that one cou'd not well paſs it by. Do People under Oppreſſion refuſe Relief, unleſs it comes from a Principle of Conſcience? Do People in Want enquire if the Hands are clean that relieve them? But which ſtill is moſt eligible as a Patron, a Man of wicked Principles, or a Man of no Principles? There is no greater Wickedneſs than Oppreſſion and Cruelty, and without Principles, a Perſon may be ſo well natur'd as to wiſh well to his Neighbour, and encline to do good for the meer Pleaſure of doing it. Read the learned and judicious Dr. Calamy upon this: I ſhou'd think, if ſuch Conſiderations as theſe are here brought in, the Church will have no great Cauſe to boaſt, who was help'd to her ſtrongeſt Laws againſt the poor Nonconformiſts by thoſe who, it appear'd plainly afterwards, were carrying on a Popiſh Intereſt: And yet, when they ſuffer'd under thoſe Laws, they were willing to accept Relief from any Hand, as knowing that whatever Principle they might be of who appear'd for them, there was too much of an implacable Spirit in ſuch as were againſt them.

Compleat Hiſtory wrong.

Echard takes much Delight in repeating Sir William Temple's Deſcription of Presbyterian Virtue, 'Tis peaking and formal; as for peaking, it is no more Engliſh in Language than in Sentiment; and as to formal, one may have a very good Conception of it in Sir William's Memoirs, which have as much Form and Affectation as the Memoirs of the moſt errant Frenchman. Presbyterian Virtue includes Piety, which with theſe Men renders every thing peaking in Morals.

About this time Mr. Baxter receiv'd a Letter from Dr. Manton, intimating he had been told by Sir John Baber, that the Lord Keeper Bridgman deſir'd to confer with them Two about a Comprehenſion and Toleration. When thoſe two Divines waited on the Lord Keeper, he told them, he had ſent for them to think of a Way for their Reſtoration; to which End he had ſome Propoſals to offer them, which were a Comprehenſion for Presbyterians, and an Indulgence for Independents, and the reſt. Mr. Baxter propos'd, that not only the Presbyterians, but the Independents, and all ſound Chriſtians, might be taken into the Eſtabliſhment. The Lord Keeper ſaid, That was a Thing he wou'd not have; but a Comprehenſion for the Presbyterians, and an Indulgence for the reſt. The Lord Keeper's Propoſals were much the ſame as King Charles's Healing Declaration a few Months before the bitter Bartholomew Act, and were drawn up by Biſhop Wilkins; with whom, and Dr. Burton, the Lord Keeper's Chaplain, Mr. Baxter and Dr. Manton had Conference about the Propoſals, and ſome Additions to be made to them, as againſt Re-ordination, in Caſe of Comprehenſion: For Subſcription only to the Scriptures, and the Doctrinal Articles of the Church; for limiting the Power of Biſhops, Chancellors, &c. in Suſpending and Silencing; that Meetings for Religious Exerciſes might not be taken for Conventicles. But theſe Things wou'd not paſs, for which Biſhop Wilkins expreſs'd himſelf ſorry. Sir Matthew Hale drew up a Bill to be brought into the Houſe of Commons when the Parliament met, to the Purport of the above-mention'd Propoſals. And Biſhop Wilkins, a candid, ingenious, open-hearted Man, acquainted Ward, Biſhop of Salisbury, the old Republican and Covenanter, with the whole Matter, hoping to have prevail'd for his Concurrence in it; inſtead of which, he ſo beſtirr'd himſelf and all his Friends, and made ſuch a Party againſt it, as that upon putting it to the Vote, it was carry'd, That no Man ſhou'd bring an Act of that Nature into the Houſe; which prevented all farther Motion of it.

*A.D.*1668 Hinder'd by Ward Bp. of Salisbury.

Comprehenſion for Diſſenters.

Dr. Tillotſon and Dr. Stillingfleet join'd heartily in this Comprehenſion Project. All the Earl of Clarendon's Party cry'd out againſt it, as an Undermining and Betraying of the Church (the Charm again!) The Cauſe of the Church is given up; 'tis unworthy the CHURCH to treat with Enemies. Biſhop Burnet proceeds, The Fears of POPERY, and the Progreſs that Atheiſm was making, alarm'd good and wiſe Men (What was this Orthodox Parliament then?) And they thought every thing that cou'd be done without Sin, ought to be done towards the Healing our Diviſions.

Echard, who takes care to bring ſome Falſity into almoſt every Fact which concerns Proteſtant Diſſenters, aſſures us, that Dr. Manton, Dr. Bates, &c. were a parcel of whiffling Fellows. If he has taken ſuch Liberty with Divines ſo infinitely ſuperior to him in all good Qualities, why am I ſo much upon my guard towards him, on account of his being an Eccleſiaſtick? There was nothing of Conſcience in all their Pretences. Here he uſurps the Prerogative of the Omniſcient, who can only know the Heart of Man. They had nothing but Tergiverſation and Cavils, falſe to a Prodigy. I have repeated what they had to ſay, the whole Matter was agreed upon, and the Act for it had been brought into Parliament, if Ward, and other ſuch Eccleſiaſticks, had not ſtir'd up a Party in the Houſe of Commons, who paſs'd a Vote againſt bringing of it in; A very extraordinary Vote! ſays my Lord of Sarum; and moſt of the Votes of this Parliament have hitherto been indeed very extraordinary.

However, the King, under the Influence of Miniſters who were for Moderation, ſhew'd an Inclination to favour the Nonconformiſts, and expreſs'd himſelf, that an Addreſs from them wou'd be accepted; which Addreſs met with ſome Oppoſition from thoſe Miniſters who cou'd not have Confidence in the Court. The Subſtance of it was to thank his Majeſty for his Clemency and Forbearance, which ſeem'd like a Banter to Perſons who knew both the King and the Addreſſors. However, Dr. Bates, Dr. Manton, Dr. Jacomb, and Mr. Ennis, preſented an Addreſs of Thanks, and were very graciouſly receiv'd. His Majeſty told them, He wou'd do his Utmoſt to get them comprehended in the Eſtabliſhment, and wou'd remove all Bars; for he cou'd wiſh that there had been no Bounds or Bars at all, but all had been Sea. He added, " They might have " had Liberty enough, but ſomething muſt be " done for publick Peace. However, they cou'd " not be ignorant that this was a Work of Diffi- " culty and Time to get it fully effected for their " Aſſurance. In the mean Time he wiſh'd they " wou'd uſe their Liberty temperately. He ſaid, " their Meetings were too numerous, and ſo, be- " ſides that they were againſt Law, gave Occa- " ſion to many clamourous People to come with " Complaints to him, as if their Deſign was " wholly to undermine the Church, and to ſay, " Sir, Theſe are they that you protect againſt the " Laws. The King then ſpoke of Farrington's " Preaching in the Play-houſe." The Miniſters told his Majeſty they all diſlik'd the Action. He inſtanc'd Mr. Baxter's drawing in all the Country round about him at Acton. Dr. Manton ſaid, " Mr. Baxter goes to the Publick, and preaches " in the Interval between Morning and Evening " Service,

That the firſt " Intendment was for the Benefit of his own Fa- " mily, and the great Company was not invited " by him, but intruded upon him; that it was " hard to exclude thoſe, who in Charity might " be ſuppos'd to come with a Thirſt after the " Means of Edification. He alledg'd the general " Neceſſity, and that Nonconformiſts were not all " of a Piece; and if People of unſober Princi- " ples in Religion were permitted to preach, a " Neceſſity lay upon them to take the like Liber- " ty; that thoſe who had invincible Scruples " againſt the Publick Way, may not be left as a " Prey to thoſe who might leave bad Impreſſions " upon them, which wou'd neither be ſo ſafe for " Religion nor the publick Peace." The King reply'd, That the Raffle of the People were not of ſuch Conſideration, they being apt to run after every new Teacher; but People of Quality might be entreated to forbear to meet, or at leaſt act in ſuch Multitudes, leſt the publick Scandal taken thereby, might obſtruct his Intention and Deſigns for their Good. His Majeſty ſeem'd well pleas'd when Dr. Manton ſuggeſted, " That their " Sobriety of Doctrine, and meddling only with " weighty Things, and remembrance of him in " their Prayers with Reſpect, preſerv'd an Eſteem " of his Perſon and Government in the Hearts of " his People; and that probably People of ano- " ther Humour might ſeaſon them with worſe " Infuſions." Here the Earl of Arlington, in whoſe Lodgings the King receiv'd the Divines, pluck'd him by the Coat, as deſiring him to note it. The Addreſs was conſider'd, and approv'd by the Cabinet Council; but the Miniſters did not make it publick, that they might not be thought to open the Door to a Toleration of Papiſts; and their Care not to give the leaſt ſhadow of Countenance to ſuch an Indulgence, was probably the main Reaſon that they had ſo little Benefit of one.

His Majeſty this Year took a Progreſs, accompany'd by the Duke of York, Prince Rupert, &c. from Newmarket, croſs the Country by Bagſhot, to Portſmouth; and thence again to Newmarket, Audley-End, Ipſwich, Harwich, and the Downs, where he view'd a Squadron of Ships bound for the Streights, commanded by Sir Thomas Allen, who in the Treaty he renew'd with the Algerines, added two or three Articles concerning Tangier, without which the Marine in this Reign wou'd have been ſeldom mention'd. Ambaſſadors were ſent to ſeveral Courts, as Sir William Godolphin to Spain, Sir Edward Sprague to Bruſſels, both Papiſts; the Earl of Carliſle to Stockholm, Mr. Ralph Montagu to Paris, Sir Daniel Harvey to Conſtantinople, Sir William Temple to the Hague. The Kingdom was now ſo infeſted with Robbers, that a Proclamation was publiſh'd the 23d of December, for apprehending Swiffnix, Madox, Daval, and twenty more, promiſing a Reward of twenty Pounds for each Man, to be paid by the Sheriffs of the Counties where they were taken. Monſieur Colbert, Ambaſſador of France at the Treaty of Aix, came to England in the ſame Quality, and negotiated a Treaty here of a quite contrary Tenor to thoſe of Breda and Aix la Chapelle. Sir John Vaughan, the great Mover in the Lord Clarendon's Impeachment, was made Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas; the Lord Viſcount Fitzharding dying, Sir Thomas Clifford was made Treaſurer of the Houſhold; the Duke of Monmouth Captain of the Horſe Guards, on the Reſignation of the Lord Brandon Gerrard; and Sir John Trevor Secretary of State, on the Reſignation of Sir William Morrice, who had 10,000 Pounds given him in lieu of it.

From the Treaty of Aix above-mention'd, to the ſecond Dutch War in this Reign, the French King and his Miniſters, us'd all their Arts to break the Triple League, which the three Powers, England, Sweden and Holland, were oblig'd in Honour and Intereſt to maintain; yet at the ſame Time France ſeem'd to have little Regard to the Friendſhip of England, not that ſhe was afraid of Enmity, but being ſure of the King, ſhe valu'd not the People. A.D.1669 The King's Friendſhip with France.

The Iſland of St. Chriſtophers, one of the Caribbees in America, was to be reſtor'd to the Engliſh, yet the French kept it two or three Years, and when they left it, deſtroy'd all the Plantations, plunder'd and carry'd away all that was portable, leaving it in a much worſe Condition than if it had never been planted. They interrupted the Trade of the Engliſh in thoſe Parts, aſſuming to themſelves the Sovereignty of the Seas there, not ſuffering any Ships but their own to ſail by or about thoſe Iſlands. Upon no other ground did they take Prizes, and confiſcate ſeveral Veſſels. Add to all this the great Duties they laid now upon our Merchandiſe in France, which was as bad as a Prohibition, while we continu'd to trade with them for ready Money, to the Value of a Million yearly loſs. And what was more miſchievous than all the reſt, were their continual Intrigues to poiſon the Counſels of England, and draw off the Court from the true Intereſts of the Nation; however, nor Court, nor Country were in ſuch high Eſteem with King Charles, and his Brother the Duke of York. The late War between England and Holland, gave the French King an Opportunity to encreaſe his Shipping and naval Stores as he did, in a ſcandalous Manner in Holland, by Means of De Wit, and in England, by Means of the French Faction here. In Holland he purchas'd twelve ſtout Men of War, and as many more great Merchant Men, which he converted to Men of War. Beſides this there was exported thence to France, within the Compaſs of two Years, 400,000 Pounds Weight of Powder, 500,000 Pounds Weight of Match, 200 Casks of Pitch and Tar, 40,000 Weight of Iron for Bullets, 6000 Hand-Granades, 2 Galliots, 13 Fly-Boats, 5 Pinks laden with Plank, Cordage, Maſts, Sails, &c. And that he was as well ſupply'd from England, is to be ſeen by our Exports to France, in this and the following Years.

Dr. Welwood gives us a very good Account of King Charles's contributing to the Greatneſs of the French at Sea. " Within theſe few Weeks, " ſays he, there has ſomething relating to that " Subject accidentally come to my Knowledge, " which, perhaps, a great Part of the World has " not been yet acquainted with. No body doubts " but King Charles II. underſtood Sea Affairs, " and the Art of Building Ships, as well almoſt " as any of his Subjects: And I have ſeen under " his own Hand ſeveral extraordinary Diſcoveries " and Experiments in that Matter, which ſpeaks " him to have been a Prince of great Abilities, " as in all other Things that might aggrandize " France and level England; ſo in this Art of " building Ships, King Charles was willing to " aſſiſt his intimate Ally, Lewis XIV. to the " utmoſt of his Power: In order thereto, he not " only faithfully communicated to the French " King, from Time to Time, all his own Obſer- " vations and Experiments, but likewiſe thoſe of " the moſt skilful Perſons about him in the Art. " Nay ſuch was that King's Zeal for France, and " his Care to acquaint the French King with Sea " Affairs, that I have lately ſeen the Doubles of " ſeveral Letters from King Charles to the French " King, about Implements, and new Diſcoveries " in building Ships of War, and at the Foot

Hiſtory of Peace with France.

A.D.1669 " of ſome of the Doubles of conſiderable Lengths, " written by King Charles himſelf to this Pur- " poſe, The Original with my own Hand, " ſent him ſuch a Day. Strange! That a Prince " ſo much in love with Eaſe, and who writes ſo " ill a Hand, cou'd be brought to write near a " Sheet of Paper at a Time, meerly to teach an " inveterate Enemy of the Engliſh Nation, a Way " to contend with him the Dominion of the " Seas, the brighteſt Jewel of his Crown. But " this is not all, King Charles's Love to the Peo- " ple of England, went farther yet, for there is " to be ſeen the Double of a Letter from him " to the French King, full of Inſtructions about " this ſame Subject, dated at a Time when he " pretended to concur with other Princes, in " obliging that King to make a Peace, &c.

Inſtead of ſuch Truths as theſe, the Archdeacon informs us, that Sir William Temple took daily Pains to ſtrengthen the Triple Alliance, which Monſieur Colbert, in England, took daily Pains to break in Pieces, and had much more Succeſs in his Endeavours, which was ſuſpected by all Miniſters who had the leaſt Inſight into Buſineſs; and the French Court did not ſtick to ſay, That England wou'd certainly fail the Dutch, and was already chang'd in the Courſe of thoſe Counſels they had taken with Sweden and Holland. Monſieur Puſendorf, the Swediſh Envoy at Paris, was told there, and he told De Wit as much, as he paſs'd thro' Holland, in his Way home. The Swede added, that Monſieur Turenne ſhew'd him a Letter from Monſieur Colbert, at the Court of England, wherein he gave an Account of the happy Succeſſes he had met with in his Negotiation there, of the good Diſpoſition of the Courtiers, and eſpecially thoſe of ſome of the chief Miniſters, with the Addition of theſe Words, And I have at laſt made them ſenſible of the whole Extent of his Majeſty's Liberality.

Prince of Tuſcany in England.

About the End of March, arriv'd in England Coſmo de Medicis, Prince of Tuſcany, in his Travels over Europe. The Earl of Pembroke entertain'd him magnificently at his Seat in Wiltſhire. At Brentford he was met and complemented in the King's Name, by the Lord Viſcount Mandeville. On his Arrival at London, he receiv'd Complements from the King, Queen, Duke and Dutcheſs, by Sir William Killegrew, the Earl of Peterborough, and Sir William Powel.

At the End of the Month, the King, the Duke, and Prince Rupert, accompany'd him to Newmarket, whence he went to Cambridge, and was complemented by the two Divinity Profeſſors, Dr. Gunning, and Dr. Pearſon, the young Noblemen and Magiſtrates attending them. Dr. Widdrington, the Univerſity Orator, entertain'd him with a publick Speech at the Gate, which no doubt had in it the uſual Spirit of Academical Orations, and as little Fuſtian and Affectation as is conſiſtent with the Nature of ſuch Harangues. The Prince of Tuſcany being conducted to the Regent Houſe, there was a Congregation held, Degrees in all Faculties created by the King's particular Command, and a Philoſophy Act was perform'd, to the ſingular Satisfaction of his Tuſcan Highneſs.

On the 3d of May, the Prince arriv'd at Oxford, and was waited on by Dr. Fell, the Vice-Chancellor, at his Lodgings in the Angel-Inn, which he preferr'd for Privacy, to the Lodgings offer'd him by the Doctor. Dr. South, the publick Orator, made a Speech to him in the Convocation-Houſe, where his Highneſs ſate in a Chair of State, on the right Hand of the Vice-Chancellor, but it is to be queſtion'd, whether South complemented his Highneſs the Prince of Tuſcany ſo well as he did his Highneſs Oliver Cromwel.

At Tu Dux pariter Terræ Domitorque profundi A.D.1669
Componunt Laudas cuncta Elementa tuas;
Cui Mens alta ſubeſt pelagoque profundior ipſo, Dr South's Cujus Fama ſonat, quam procul Unda ſonat. Panegyrick
Si Currum aſcendas domito pœne orbe triumphans, on Oliver.
In Currus, &c.

Captain at Land, and Conqu'or of the Main,
All Elements confeſs your glorious Reign;
Seas are leſs deep than your capacious Soul,
Your Fame ſounds far as ſounding Waters [rowl;
The Globe too weak for your triumphant [Pow'rs,
Bends with your Weight, and both the Poles [are Yours.

Tho' Dr. South's Latin Poetry is not much better than the Engliſh, it ſhews his good Will to Cromwel. To ſatisfy his Tuſcan Highneſs how Academical Affairs were diſpatch'd, his Phyſician John Bapt. Gornia, Doctor of Phyſick of Bononia, was incorporated and admitted to the ſame Degree. The Prince was then ſhewn the New Theatre, not quite finiſh'd, and the publick Library, where he had a View of thoſe Manuſcripts, &c. which it is ſo difficult for any one that wou'd make uſe of them, to obtain an uſeful View of. He heard a Lecture in Geometry read by Dr. Wallis, and what muſt be ſurprizingly edifying, ſome Diſputations in the School of Tongues. In the Muſick-School he was entertain'd with Vocal and Inſtrumental Muſick, and had an Opportunity to make a Compariſon between Ben. Rogers and Corelli. Echard enlarges on theſe Matters, as if there was ſomething in them, and ſure I cannot follow a better Example.

The Prince ſtaid in England about nine Weeks, and it is certain he was ſo well pleas'd with his Reception here, that when afterwards he became great Duke of Tuſcany, he receiv'd the Engliſh in his Court, after a more free and diſtinguiſhing Manner than any other Nation, and did as long as he liv'd, ſend Preſents of the fineſt Florence Wine, every Year to the Court, the chief Courtiers, and many other Perſons of Diſtinction in England.

Prince George of Denmark in England. Sheldon's Theatre open'd at Oxford.

About July, Prince George of Denmark, after a ſhort Tour in France, made a ſhort Tour in England. In the ſame Month, Sheldon's Theatre at Oxford was open'd, with a Speech by the publick Orator Dr. South; and ſeveral Panegyricks were pronounc'd by proper Orators, and if thoſe Orations had liv'd till now, they wou'd doubtleſs have been diſtinguiſh'd by fineneſs of Wit, and delicacy of Thought and Expreſſion, which diſtinguiſh the Panegyricks of that Theatre from all others. There was then a Dialogue in Poetry, which continu'd ſome Time, to the great awakening of the Audience. This was follow'd by another Oration, two Speeches in Poetry, a Diſcourſe in Favour of Learning, a ſhort Speech from the Muſick Gallery, uſhering in two Odes; after which was another Speech, and ſo a Concluſion. The Hiſtory of it is an Entertainment which nothing cou'd equal, but the Hearing of ſo many ſet Speeches in Proſe and Verſe, for they have generally ſo much Nature, Truth, Simplicity, Senſe, Spirit and Elegance in them, that they muſt needs be tranſporting.

Parliament.

When the Parliament met on the 19th of October, the King made a Speech to them, recommending the Payment of his Debts, and a Union with Scotland. The Lord Keeper Bridgeman recommended a Union between the two Houſes, and ſpoke of the Triple League, as the great Security of the Nation. The Commons, inſtead of taking the King and Keeper's Speeches into Conſide-

A.D.1669 Conſideration, enquired into Points of Privileges between the two Houſes, and the Diſpoſal of the publick Monies, and found one of their Members, who kept ſome of the publick Accounts, ſo blameable, that they expell'd him their Houſe. But then, to the great Comfort of Mr. Archdeacon, they thank'd his Majeſty for putting in Execution the Laws againſt Nonconformiſts, and paſs'd a Vote, That they will adhere to his Majeſty in the Maintenance of the Church, as it is religiouſly eſtabliſh'd by the Bartholomew Act, Five Mile Act, Conventicle Act, and all the other Stinging Acts. This is extreamly fooliſh, conſidering that the perſecuting Proteſtant Diſſenters was perſecuting their own Religion, if they were Proteſtants, and that the Proteſtant Intereſt is one in general, under whatever particular Denomination, of which this very Parliament was ſo ſenſible, that a Year or two after they, Nemine contradicente, voted a Bill to deliver Proteſtant Diſſenters from the Oppreſſion of thoſe very Laws, yet ſo long as the Spirit of Perſecution is ſo prevalent among them, ſo long does the Archdeacon never leave off his Encomiums on their Wiſdom and Piety. They flatten as that Spirit wears off, as what is falſe always will. There is ſomething ſtill more fooliſh to come; Information was given to the Houſe from General Monk, that old rank Republican and Independent, " Of the great Reſort of " dangerous and diſaffected Perſons to London, " and of the Meetings and Endeavours to di- " ſturb the publick Peace, and that he had, and " wou'd take Care, what he cou'd, to prevent " their Attempts to hear the Word of God, and " pray in private Aſſemblies." This Folly, which, falſe as it is, is next to Stupidity, was given into by the Majority of the Commons, who reſolv'd, That the Thanks of this Houſe be return'd to the Lord General, for his Care, &c. as aforeſaid. Why was he not thank'd for his Care in preſerving the Fleet by dividing it, and the Ships at Chatham, by ſinking them, after he had ſtood on the Shoar and ſeen eight or ten Firſt and Second Rate Men of War burnt and taken? This old Man has almoſt both Feet in the Grave, and yet he wants to be ſome body in the laudable Buſineſs of Perſecution.

Sir G. C. expell'd.

Monk's idle Meſſage.

He is thank'd for it.

Skinner's Caſe again The Houſe then reſum'd the Debates of the Difference between the two Houſes in Skinner's Caſe, and Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, Deputy-Governor of the Eaſt-India Company, having been fin'd 300 Pounds, and order'd into Cuſtody of Sir John Eyton, Uſher of the Black Rod, till 'twas paid, they voted the Proceedings againſt him to be contrary to, and a Subverſion of their Rights and Privileges, and that the Lords be deſir'd to vacate their Judgments againſt both him and the Eaſt-India Company. But while theſe Heats were encreaſing, the King by Commiſſion, December the 11th, prorogu'd the Parliament to the 14th of February.

It is worth Remark, that in the Biography of this Year, Echard, ſpeaking of Dr. George Bates, among other Eulogy, tells us he was Phyſician to Charles I. and to Oliver Cromwel, whom, as he inſinuates, he poiſon'd, which is, however falſe, as much as he intended it in the Doctor's Praiſe, he gave him a ſure Doſe. Thus he commends him for an Act, which, had it been true, he ought to have been hang'd for, Bates having no Commiſſion that warranted him to murder the Protector. He tells us alſo of the Death of the Queen-Mother Henrietta Maria in France, and that her Heart was put in a Veſſel of Silver, and that her Body was carry'd by Friars and Prieſts with Tapers, and that the Lord Montague, who by the way was only Montague the Prieſt, her Almoner, attended the Corpſe with a noble Retinue, and that ſhe was a great Queen. General Ludlow ſpeaks of it thus; " About this " Time Henrietta Maria, Queen-Mother of " England, and Aunt to the preſent King of " France, having been formerly an active Inſtru- " ment in contriving and fomenting the long and " bloody Civil War in England, and encouraging " the barbarous Maſſacre of the Proteſtants in " Ireland, and more lately from a Spirit of Re- " venge and Malice, a principal Adviſer of the " Cruelties acted in England upon the Alteration " of the Government, dy'd at Paris. Her Di- " ſtemper at firſt ſeem'd not to be dangerous; but " upon taking ſomething preſcrib'd by the Phy- " ſicians to procure Sleep, the Potion operated " in ſuch a Manner that ſhe wak'd no more. She " receiv'd 60,000 Pounds a Year from England, " ſo ſhe had had about 600,000 Pounds ſince her Son " was call'd in, and yet left many and great Debts " unpaid: She conſtantly favour'd the Deſigns " for aſſaſſinating the Engliſh Refugees in Swit- " zerland and elſewhere." It is as well worth remembring as the reſt that Caſſimir, the abdicated King of Poland, the French King, and a great Number of Princes and Princeſſes, attended at her Funeral.

Queen-Mother's Death.

On the 3d of January dy'd George Monk, 1670. whom the King had made a Duke, giving him Monk's the Title of Albemarle, which had been held by Death. ſeveral Princes of the Blood. Echard tells us, he was a Perſon diſtinguiſh'd by the Bleſſing of Heaven, tho' he knew that the ſudden Incident of the Reſtoration was accompliſh'd by repeated Perjury, and the Breach of the moſt ſolemn and ſacred Promiſes and Engagements. He was a wonderful Inſtrument in reſtoring Happineſs to a Nation over-run with Miſery. You have ſeen what a Reſtorer he was, and what was the Happineſs. He preſerv'd himſelf in the Eſteem of the Court, and the Affections of the People, which is as great a Falſhood as ever Monk himſelf was guilty of; for neither the King eſteem'd, nor the People lov'd him long before his Death. Biſhop Burnet aſſures us, He became ſo uſeleſs, p. 98. that little perſonal Regard cou'd be paid him. Directly contrary to which, not only Echard, but the Compleat Hiſtorian aſſerts, that He all along preſerv'd himſelf in the Eſteem of the Court. My Lord of Sarum adds, The King deſpis'd him. The Compleat Writer applauds his Sincerity and Judgment, which were in Truth well match'd. And both theſe Compleat Writers muſt certainly flatter his Character ſo enormouſly, on account of his giving ſuch Proofs of his Sincerity, as Swearing and Forſwearing the Covenant, his joining with and perſecuting the Presbyterians, his renouncing King Charles II. and his bringing of him in. His Character appears ſufficiently in his and Cha- Actions; ſo I ſhall ſay no more of him, only that racter. King Charles was at a great Expence in his Burial, and gave his Son moſt of his Places, together with his Garter. He was a Man of leſs Merit than his Father, and dying without Iſſue, all thoſe dear-bought Honours, together with the Name of Monk, in this Line at leaſt, periſh'd in 30 Years Time.

We muſt not forget, that by the Beginning of this Year the City of London was rebuilt with more Space and Splendor than has been before ſeen in England. The Act of Parliament beforemention'd for rebuilding it was drawn by Sir London Matthew Hale, with ſo true Judgment and Fore- rebuilt. ſight, that the whole City was rais'd out of its Aſhes without any Suits of Law, which, if that Bill had not prevented them, wou'd have brought a ſecond Charge on the City, not much leſs than the Fire it ſelf had been. And upon that, to the Amazement of all Europe, London was in

A.D. 1670 four Years Time rebuilt with ſo much Beauty and Magnificence, that thoſe who ſaw it in both States, before and after the Fire, cou'd not reflect on it without wondring where the Wealth cou'd be found to bear ſo vaſt a Loſs, as was made by the Fire, and ſo prodigious an Expence as was laid out in the Re-building. This good and great Work was very much forwarded by Sir William Turner in his Mayoralty, 1669. He never diſturb'd the Nonconformiſts during all that Time: He ſo little regarded his own Gain, and ſought the Common-good, and puniſh'd Vice, that no Lord Mayor was ever more honour'd and belov'd, inſomuch that at the End of his Year they choſe him again, and wou'd have heard of no other, but that he abſolutely refus'd, partly as being an unuſual Thing, and partly becauſe of a Meſſage from his Superiors, who were diſpleas'd with his moderate and peaceable Temper.

Sir William Turner a good Magiſtrate.

Lord Roos's Divorce.

About this Time an Accident happen'd, which made the Diſcouſe of the Divorce the common Subject of Converſation. The Lord Roos, afterwards Earl of Rutland, brought Proofs of Adultery againſt his Wife, and obtain'd a Sentence of Divorce in the Spiritual Court, which amounting only to a Separation from Bed and Board, he mov'd for a Bill to diſſolve the Bond, and enable him to marry another Wife. The Duke and all his Party apprehended the Conſequences of a Parliamentary Divorce; ſo they oppos'd this with great Heat, and almoſt all the Biſhops were of that Side, only Dr. Coſens, Biſhop of Durham, and Dr. Wilkins, Biſhop of Cheſter, were for it. The King was as earneſt in ſetting it on, as the Duke was in oppoſing it. The Zeal which the two Brothers expreſs'd on that Occaſion, mov'd all People to conclude, that they had a particular Concern in the Matter. The Bill paſs'd, and upon that Precedent ſome mov'd the King to order a Bill to be brought in to divorce him from the Queen. But the Duke of Buckingham propos'd another Way to rid the King of her. He ſaid he wou'd ſteal her, and ſend her to a Plantation, where ſhe ſhou'd be well and carefully look'd to, but never heard of any more; ſo it ſhou'd be given out ſhe had deſerted, and upon that it wou'd fall in with ſome Principles to carry an Act of Divorce. The King wou'd not hear of it, ſaying, 'Twas wicked to make a poor Lady miſerable only becauſe ſhe was his Wife, and had had no Children by him, which was not her Fault. As if indeed he did not make her miſerable enough by living in a conſtant Courſe of Adultery with a Company of Concubines, who were no more conſtant to him than he was to his Queen. But this Year Care was taken to procure him a new Miſtreſs, whoſe Head ſhou'd be as full of Politicks as her Heart was of Pleaſure, and being a French Woman, and conſequently devoted to the French Intereſt, ſhe was to draw him into it by the Witchery of her Perſon and Paſſion.

King earneſt for it.

Dutcheſs of Portſmouth.

Penſion Parliament.

I have more than once ſpoken very meanly of this Parliament, and I refer to the Reader, whether they cou'd have been guided by any thing but an irregular mercenary Spirit. Biſhop Burnet informs us, The Houſe of Commons loſt all Reſpect in the Nation: And again, It was thought the King cou'd never have been prevail'd on to part with a Parliament ſo much practis'd upon, and where every Man's Price was known; for as a Man roſe in his Credit in the Houſe, he rais'd his Price, and expected to be treated accordingly. Such was the Aſſembly, who paſs'd the Bartholomew Act, the Five Mile Act, the Conventicle Act, and another Act, of which more preſently.

Notwithſtanding the Committee of Brook-houſe had been brow-beaten by the Council, they ſtill went on with their Enquiries, and of the prodigious Sums that had been given ſince the Dutch War, they cou'd find but 800,000 Pounds brought to Account, and that, ſays Biſhop Burnet, in moſt ſhameful Terms; but, as has been hinted, a good Part of it was diſtributed among the Members who made the Majority, which carry'd Mr. Echard's Bills for the Safety and Honour of the Church. The Biſhop proceeds, The chief Men who promoted the Brook-houſe Enquiries were taken off, as the Word then was for corrupting Members. But by thoſe Enquiries the Careleſsneſs and Luxury of the Court came to be ſo much expos'd, that the King's Temper was much ſharpen'd upon it. All the Flatterers about him magnify'd Foreign Governments, where the Princes were abſolute, particularly that in France. Many to pleaſe him ſaid, it was a very eaſy thing to ſhake off the Reſtraints of Law, if the King wou'd but ſet about it. The Crown of Denmark was elective and ſubject to a Senate, and yet was in one Day, without any viſible Force, chang'd to both Hereditary and Abſolute. The King lov'd the Project, but according to my Lord of Sarum, reſolv'd to keep all things within himſelf, 'till it grew clearer, and his Affairs were made eaſier; ſo he went balancing one Party with another, to get Money of the Parliament, under the Pretence of the Triple League, which was the wooden Leg he us'd to beg with, 'till he broke it. Money Bills paſs'd eaſily in the Houſe of Commons, but met with Oppoſition in the Houſe of Lords, who began to complain that Money Bills came on ſo thick, that it was ſaid, There was no End of their giving: End ſignifying Purpoſe as well as Meaſure: This paſs'd as a ſevere Jeſt. At that Time Sir John Coventry, a leading Member of the Country Party in the Houſe of Commons, made a groſs Reflection on the King's Amours. He was one of thoſe who ſtruggled much againſt giving Money. The common Method is, after thoſe who oppoſe ſuch Bills fail in the main Vote, the next Thing they endeavour is to lay the Money on Funds that will be unacceptable, and will prove deficient. So theſe Men propos'd the Laying a Tax on the Play-Houſes, which according to the Biſhop, were in ſo difficult a Time, become Neſts of Proſtitution. The Stage was defil'd beyond all Example, Dryden, the greater Maſter of Dramatick Poeſy, which Saying ſhews his Lordſhip to be no great Judge of it, was a Monſter of Immodeſty and Impurity of all Sorts. This was oppos'd by the Court; it was ſaid, the Players were the King's Servants, and a Part of his Pleaſure. Coventry ask'd, Whether the King's Pleaſure lay among the Men, or the Women that acted? This was carry'd with great Indignation to the Court. "Twas "ſaid, this was the firſt Time that the King "was Perſonally reflected on; if it was paſs'd "over, more of the ſame Kind would follow, "and it would grow a Faſhion to talk ſo?" What then? Was it not known that the King had two Stage Harlots, Nell Gwin, and Moll Davis in keeping, beſides all the other Female Fry, and muſt not the People, as the only Loſers, have leave to ſpeak? The Biſhop proceeds, It was therefore thought fit to take ſuch ſevere Notice of this, that no body ſhou'd dare to talk at that rate for the future. The Duke of York told one, he ſaid all he cou'd to the King, to divert him from the Reſolution he had taken, which was to ſend ſome of the Guards, and watch in the Streets where Sir John lodg'd, and leave a Mark upon him. Sir Thomas Sandys, Charles Obrian, Eſq; Michael Reeves, Money ſquander'd.

King's Temper ſour'd.

Love's arbitrary Power.

Coventry Act.

Play-houſes lewd.

A.D.1670 " Reeves, Simon Parry, and ſome others, went " thither, and as Coventry was going home, they " drew about him, he ſtood up to a Wall, ſnatch'd " the Flambeaux out of his Servant William " Wilkes's Hands, and with that in one Hand, " and his Sword in the other, he defended him- " ſelf ſo well, that he got more Credit by it " than by all the Actions of his Life. He wounded " ſome of them, but was ſoon diſarm'd, and then " the Ruffians cut his Noſe to the Bone, to teach " him to remember what Reſpect he ow'd to the " King, as the Villains ſaid in doing their Vil- " lainy." Let the Reader judge what Reſpect cou'd be due to a King, who was capable of ſuch an unkingly Action! Sir John Coventry's Wound was ſo well ſew'd up, that the Scar was ſcarce diſcernible; but the vile Attempt put even this Houſe of Commons in a furious Uproar. The Ruffians fled, and a Bill of Baniſhment paſs'd againſt them, with a Clauſe in it, that it ſhou'd not be in the King's Power to pardon them, as alſo to make it Death to maim any Perſon maliciouſly.

Notwithſtanding the Dialogue between the King and Dr. Manton, when the before-mention'd Addreſs was preſented, the King has upon his Hands another ſort of Buſineſs, which is to get another Act of Parliament paſs'd againſt his Proteſtant Subjects, who worſhipp'd God in any other Manner, than he and the perſecuting Biſhops thought fit. The Parliament began their Meeting on the 14th of February, to which Day they had been prorogu'd, and the King, as uſual, made them a Speech concerning the ſecuring the Well-being of the Church, and after what has been ſaid of the Committee of Brook-houſe, and their Enquiries from the Authority of the Biſhop of Salisbury, it wou'd be ſurprizing to the Reader to ſee what follows, if he had not met with ſo much of this King's Character before; That no Miſrepreſentation or Miſtakes touching the Expences of the laſt War may remain with you, I think fit to let you know, that I have fully inform'd my ſelf in that Matter, and do affirm to you, that no Part of thoſe Monies that you gave to me has been diverted to other Uſes. Which, if it had not been ſaid by a King, wou'd have been too groſs for Remark. He put them in Mind of Supplies and of the Union with Scotland, purſuant to a Declaration of the Parliament of that Kingdom, impowering Commiſſioners to conclude it. The Lord Keeper Bridgeman ſpoke to the ſame Purpoſe. But the Houſe beginning with a Debate of the conteſted Caſe of Skinner, and the King doubting it wou'd hinder the Supplies, interpos'd in the Affair, and made up the Matter between the two Houſes, by adviſing the vacating of all that had paſs'd concerning it, which both Houſes agreed to; and then with new Delight Echard informs us, That Information had been given of the Dangers of unlawful Meetings, and the Houſe of Commons were rous'd by new Complaints, and had receiv'd Information of a dangerous Conventicle in the Weſt. It wou'd be very ridiculous, if it was not very wicked. He adds, It was obſervable, that all the Laws againſt the Diſſenters were made more upon Civil and Political than upon Moral or Religious Accounts: Wherein he ſpeaks a very great Truth, when he intended a very great Falſhood.

Parliament.

The Perſecution of Proteſtant Diſſenters, and all the Acts made for it, were, it is true, irreligious and immoral, but that the Plots and Rebellions of the Presbyterians made thoſe Acts neceſſary for the publick Peace, is as falſe as ever any thing was that came from the Father of Falſhood, better known by the Name of the Father of Lies. The Preamble to this ſinful Act does not juſtify him, nor his Brother Hiſtorian in their Account of it. See the Subſtance of it, which they repeat as a Treaſure in their Hiſtories; " If any Perſon upwards of ſixteen ſhou'd " be preſent at any Aſſembly, Conventicle, or " Meeting, under Colour or Pretence of any Ex- " erciſe of Religion, Mind the Mocking, and, as Biſhop Burnet ſays, the Lying to God and Man. Under Colour or Pretence, Theſe Men knew, and were fully convinc'd, that thoſe Aſſemblies were for the true Exerciſes of religious Worſhip, " in any other Manner than according " to the Liturgy and Practice of the Church of " England, where there was five Perſons or " more, beſides thoſe of the ſaid Houſhold; in " ſuch Caſe the Offenders were to pay five Shil- " lings for the firſt Offence, and ten Shillings " for the ſecond; and the Preachers and Teach- " ers in any ſuch Meetings were to forfeit twenty " Pounds for the firſt Offence, and forty for the " ſecond Offence. And thoſe who knowingly " ſuffer'd any ſuch Conventicle in their Houſes, " Barns, Yards, &c. were to forfeit twenty " Pounds." I muſt own, I was very glad to meet with this Act, for having conceiv'd a juſt Indignation againſt the former Cruelties of this Aſſembly, I was glad the Majority that paſs'd them into a Law had ſo expos'd themſelves by ſuch a bare-fac'd Defiance of all Chriſtian Virtues, that within a Year or two they were reduc'd to a Neceſſity of owning the Shame of it, of bluſhing at what they had been doing, and of endeavouring to atone for it by undoing it, and paſſing an Act for the Eaſe of thoſe Diſſenters whom they had made thus uneaſy. The King ſollicited the paſſing of this Bill in the Houſe of Lords. Biſhop Wilkins, well ſatisfy'd that all the pretended Danger from the religious Aſſemblies of Proteſtants, were forg'd, argu'd long againſt the Bill in the Houſe of Lords. Echard argues long for it in his Chronicle. Biſhop Burnet tells us, " The King was " much for having of it paſs, and ſpoke to Wil- " kins not to oppoſe it." The pious Biſhop anſwer'd, I think it an ill thing both in Conſcience and Policy. If ill in Conſcience it was a Sin: And therefore, both as I am an Engliſhman and a Biſhop, I am bound to oppoſe it. The King then deſir'd him not to come to the Houſe of Lords while it depended. The Biſhop anſwer'd, By the Law and Conſtitution of England, and by your Majeſty's Favour, I have a Right to debate and vote, and I am neither afraid nor aſham'd to own my Opinion in this Matter, and to act purſuant to it. Neither is the Archdeacon afraid or aſham'd to own his Opinion directly oppoſite to this reverend and learned Father of the Church, whoſe Judgment in this, or any other Affair, will weigh more with ſober Perſons than that of all the perſecuting Biſhops put together. Not long after this notable Bill was made the Law of the Land, the Houſe of Commons dropp'd the Committee of Brook-houſe, and all Enquiries into the publick Accounts vaniſh'd and came to nothing; for having taken the King's Hint to provide thus for the Well-being of the Church, they left it to his Majeſty to provide for their own Well-being, and to Chance, to diſpoſe of the publick Affairs.

A.D.1670

A ſevere Act againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters.

The King ſollicits that Act.

Oppos'd by Bp. Wilkins.

We muſt not omit, that in this Year the Prince of Orange made his two Uncles, the King, and Duke of York, a Viſit. His chief Buſineſs was to ſee how the King intended to pay the great Debt, which had been contracted by his Father, on his Account, and alſo to try what Offices the King wou'd do, in order to his Advancement to the Stadtholderſhip. The King treated him very civilly; he aſſur'd him he wou'd pay the Debt, but did not lay down any Method of doing it. He gave him good Words only, and try'd the Prince Prince of Orange in England.

A.D.1670 in Point of Religion. He ſpoke of all the Proteſtants, as of a FACTIOUS Body broken among themſelves, ever ſince they had broken off from the main Body, and wiſh'd he wou'd take more Pains and look into thoſe Things better, and not to be led by his DUTCH Block-heads. His Highneſs told all this to Monſieur Zuyleſtein, his natural Uncle. They were both amaz'd at it, and wonder'd how the King cou'd truſt ſo great a Secret to ſo young a Perſon, the Prince not being twenty. His Highneſs told Biſhop Burnet, he never ſpoke of this to any other Perſon, 'till after the King's Death, but he carry'd it always in his own Mind, and cou'd not hinder himſelf from judging of all the King's Intentions after that, from the Diſcovery he had then made of his Sentiments: Nor did he upon his not complying with that Propoſition, expect any real Aſſiſtance from the King, but general Interceſſion, which ſignify'd nothing, and that was all he obtain'd, tho' otherwiſe he was civilly treated, conſidering the King had juſt concluded a Treaty with France, in the Proſecution of which, nothing but the miraculous Providence of God preſerv'd him from periſhing.

The King wou'd have him turn Papiſt.

I cou'd very eaſily prove that the French Jeſuit Orlean's Revolutions, is as falſe a Hiſtory as the Archdeacon's, who tells us, the Jeſuit's ſhort Account of the Cabal is more material than moſt of the Engliſh Pamphlets and Secret Hiſtories. He refers to my Secret Hiſtory of Europe, which I ſhall never be aſham'd to own, and, if it were worth while, cou'd prove it to be more authentick than the beſt Authorities he has made uſe of. The Introduction to his Account out of Orleans is the Reverſe of the Truth. The Republican Spirit was inſenſibly creeping into Parliament again, was the laſt Act againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters, juſt paſs'd by them, a Proof of their creeping into Commonwealth Principles? The Cabal was ſo term'd from the Initial Letters of the Names of the five Lords who compos'd it, Clifford, Aſhley-Cooper, Buckingham, Arlington, Lauderdale, who were Men of great Capacity, but little Virtue, and having got the King into their Hands, they reſolv'd to keep him, by giving into all Meaſures that pleas'd any of his Paſſions, of which the moſt flagrant Inſtance was their humouring him in the ſecond Dutch War, which was now beginning to be projected.

The Cabal.

The ingenious Mr. Archdeacon attack'd my Secret Hiſtory again, for ſuggeſting that the Dutcheſs of Orleans came to viſit her Brother, King Charles, at Dover, on very ill Errands. His Accounts are ſome ſcandalous, ſome uncertain, &c. The Reader will ſee preſently what a fine Judge he is of Scandal and Truth. The Hiſtory of Cornelius and John de Wit, is not a ſecret One, and yet we there read, "If the King of Sweden was
Vol. II. p. 344. "not dazled with French Gold, it gain'd more "on the King of England, by the Perſwaſions "of the Dutcheſs of Orleans, his Siſter, ſupported by Monſieur Colbert, the French Ambaſſador, who made the King believe what he Dutcheſs of Orleans at Dover. "wou'd. A hundred thouſand Piſtols were remitted to that Miniſter, which he laid out to "Advantage to engage thoſe who had the greateſt "Intereſt in the King. The Lords of the Cabal "had moſt of the Money; they were known to "be the moſt mortal Enemies of the united Pro"vinces, and Charles II. King of Great-Britain "contented with the Name of King, left the Go"vernment to them, and ſeem'd to have no other "Inclination but what thoſe baſe Miniſters in"ſpir'd him with. His moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's "Bounty had all the Effect that cou'd be ex"pected. This wicked Miniſtry, who betray'd "their Country, and wou'd have betray'd their "Maſter, if they cou'd have got by it, pretended "to give Credit to what the Miniſter of France A.D.1670 "told them of the Inſtances the States, both by "Letters, and their Ambaſſadors had made to "the French King, to treat of an Alliance with "them, that they might jointly attack England: "Accordingly the Cabal were perpetually repreſenting to King Charles, that he ought no more "to have any thing to do with a Republick that "had vow'd his Deſtruction." It is not to be doubted but this imaginary Proceeding of the States made a very ſtrong Impreſſion on the King's Mind: Thus far the French Author, who ſeems not to know King Charles ſo well as he did his Miniſters; for there was no need of animating him much to a Rapture, which none of them was ſo deſirous of as himſelf. The Author of L'Hiſtoire de Corneille, and Jean De Wit, beforemention'd, puts the following Speech into the Mouth of the Cabal, "Your Majeſty runs no "Riſk: Theſe Republicans have made themſelves odious to all the Princes of Europe; "there's not one who will oppoſe you in this "Undertaking; the moſt Powerful will be ſatisfy'd with being Spectators of the War, and "with Pleaſure ſee the Pride of that Commonwealth that has brav'd ſo many Crown'd "Heads, humbled. Spain will be ſo far from "aſſiſting them, ſhe will rejoice in the Mis-fortune of a Nation whom ſhe ſtill looks upon "as her rebellious Subjects. Tho' the Emperor "ſhould be willing to defend the United Provinces, he dares not undertake it in this difficult Poſture of Affairs, the Ottoman Empire "arming ſo mightily as it does, and the Revolt "of his Subjects in Hungary, will cut him out "Work enough of his own, and hinder his thinking of others. The Court of France by their "Money, and the Jealouſy they'll take Care to "maintain between the two Northern Crowns, "will engage them to ſtand neuter. The War "between the Turks and the Poles, will prevent "the Elector of Brandenburg aſſiſting them; nay, "who does not know but he might be glad of "this Opportunity to recover the Towns in the "Dutchy of Cleves, which the States have ſo "long kept from him? The Elector of Cologne, "and the Biſhop of Munſter, deſire nothing more "than to enter thoſe Provinces with their Armies; will they be in a Condition to reſiſt ſo "many Enemies, attacking them on all Sides, "eſpecially at a Time when Faction reigns ſo "much among them? The King of England "ſuffer'd himſelf to be ſeduc'd by theſe and the "like Conſiderations; however, he would not ſign "the private Treaties with France 'till he had "receiv'd the Money which was promis'd him, "amounting to Six Millions, beſides 300,000 "Crowns a Month to be paid him during the "War." Abbot Primi, whoſe Maſter Monſieur Colbert was more in the Secret than the Engliſh Secretary himſelf, gives a good Account of this Matter. As for the King of England he was exceedingly perplex'd; there was need of Money to carry on the Deſign, and that ſecretly too, he cou'd raiſe none at home without calling a Parliament, and that cou'd not be done without acquainting all Europe with his Intentions. There was alſo great Fear of Oppoſition, both from the Miſunderſtandings which in that tumultuous Aſſembly do for the moſt Part ariſe between the two Houſes, and from the Intrigues of the Hollanders; for which Reaſon, the King of France furniſh'd him with ſuch Sums of Money as were ſufficient to equip a conſiderable Fleet, and he adviſ'd the King of England, the better to conceal their Agreements, to keep a fair Correſpendence outwardly with the Dutch, to appear firm to the Triple League, and to declare that he ſet out a

Fleet

A.D.1670 Fleet for no other Reaſon but becauſe his Neighbours, and eſpecially the French, who made great Preparations in all their Ports upon the Ocean, ſtrengthen'd themſelves ſo very conſiderably by Sea.

p. 579. The Judicious Acherley lets us farther into thoſe baſe Intrigues: "The Scheme which King "Charles propos'd, and ſent to the French King, "was, That France ſhou'd aſſiſt him firſt to ſubdue England, and introduce Popery, and after that the Proteſtant States of Holland: But France ſent the Dutcheſs of Orleans in May, 1670, to meet her Brother, King Charles, with a Counter Scheme, viz. Firſt to conquer Holland by invading it with joint Forces by Sea and Land, and to make a Partition, allotting Zealand, and the Sea Coaſts to King Charles, and the Inland Countries to France; inſinuating, that after Succeſs in that, the reſt wou'd be an eaſy Work, and France wou'd pay King Charles 350,000 Pounds per Annum during the War; and ſhe did pay 700,000 Pounds for the two firſt Years.

This is the Account which the ſincere Echard calls uncertain. He adds, there are no real Proofs; and in the next Page owns, that Abbot Primi tells us, "Henrietta Maria, Dutcheſs of Orleans, "a Princeſs whoſe Wit and Capacity was equal "to her Beauty, concluded the Treaty at Dover, "when ſhe made that myſterious Voyage." I ſuppoſe he was in Pain for fear any ſaucy Reader ſhou'd miſtake what is ſaid in the Secret Hiſtory to reflect on the Virtue of this Lady. All that I have to ſay is, that ſhe muſt needs be a Lady of more than ordinary Virtue, who took ſo much Care of her Brother, as to ſupply him with a new Miſtreſs out of her Train, Madam Queroualle, an inchanting Lady, ſays the Reverend Hiſtorian; and her Buſineſs became a Princeſs who lov'd the Country ſhe ow'd her Nativity to, by making uſe of her Charms and Intrigues to enſlave it to the King of Slaves, Lewis XIV. For after Holland was conquer'd, How long cou'd England

p. 138. 215. 279. have preſerv'd her Liberty? Biſhop Parker, that Renegado Independent and Cromwelian, who afterwards was the moſt celebrated Champion for Sheldon's Church of England, till he was driven out of the Field by Mr. Marvel, acknowledges, That the Triple-League was baſely broken; that King Charles II. united the Knot, and that the Breach was a deadly Sin againſt the Laws of Nature and Nations. That was the doing of that moſt Virtuous Princeſs the Dutcheſs of Orleans; yet to ſay ſhe cou'd be guilty of a deadly Sin, is not only very indecorous, but, ſays Mr. Archdeacon, ſevere and ſcandalous. As to other Things, in which Gallantry is concern'd, I will touch upon them as little as may be, that I may not offend the Archdeacon: But Biſhop Burnet aſſures us, The King of France made Love to her, and if ſhe reſented it, 'twas when ſhe ſaw it was only a Pretence to cover his Addreſſes to Madamoiſelle De la Valiere, one of her Maids; that King Charles was ſo much charm'd with his Siſter at Dover, that every Thing ſhe propos'd, and every Favour ſhe ask'd, was granted, the King cou'd deny her nothing; ſhe propos'd an Alliance for the Conqueſt of Holland. The King had a Mind to have begun at Home. The Conqueſt of England, to uſe Mr. Acherley's Words, was look'd upon as ſecure, eaſy, and ſpeedy; and the Conſtitution and Form of Government in England was in Imagination ſubverted, and the Parliament maſter'd. Good God! What a Conſpiracy was here againſt the Religion and Liberties of the poor innocent People of England. This is no Sham Plot, and never was a more ruinous one hatch'd in the Infernal Divan. The Dutcheſs of Orleans diverted his Beginning with the Conqueſt of his own Subjects, not out of Compaſſion to them, but becauſe ſuch a Deſign wou'd alarm all his People, and perhaps ſend them with their Wealth and Trade to Holland; which by ſuch an Acceſſion wou'd grow ſtronger, as he wou'd grow weaker: So ſhe propos'd that he ſhou'd begin with Holland. A Prince capable of ſuch Counſels to deſtroy his own Subjects, and in order to it, to deſtroy his Neighbours who had highly oblig'd him, is a proper Subject for the Eulogy of thoſe Hiſtorians only, who were perpetually flattering him while he was paſſing the Acts for Perſecution. Abbot Primi's Book, wherein the Secret of this accurs'd Treaty is laid open, was read by Biſhop Burnet at Paris. The Lord Preſton, who ſome Years after was condemn'd for High Treaſon, was then the King's Ambaſſador in France, and knowing how great a Prejudice the publiſhing this wou'd be to his Maſter's Affairs, he complain'd of it. The Book was upon that ſuppreſs'd, and the Writer put in the Baſtile for a few Days; but he had drawn it out of the Papers of Monſieur Le Tellier's Office; ſo, ſays my Lord of Sarum, There is little Reaſon to doubt of the Truth of the Thing. But Echard very dogmatically ſays, 'Tis very uncertain; though he informs us, that Monſieur Colbert paid Primi a Penſion for collecting theſe Memoirs. I have many other Proofs of this Felonious Treaty with France, but I think here are enough, and ſhall not enlarge upon it farther, but refer to my other Account of it. See Hiſtory of Europe.

A.D.167° Madam's Journey was very fatal to her, and I know not how it comes about, Echard himſelf does not deny but that her Husband, the Duke of Orleans, conceiv'd an unaccountable Jealouſy of her Conduct at Dover; whereas the Reverend Hiſtorian had told us, Joy, Mirth and Pleaſure reign'd without Abatement or Intermiſſion; Love and Gallantry were intermix'd with Comedies, Masks, Muſick, Banquetings, and all kind of Diverſions. The Duke of Orleans, ſays Biſhop Burnet, had heard ſuch things of her Behaviour, that it was ſaid he order'd a great Doſe of Sublimate to be given her in a Glaſs of Succoury Water; and he then informs us of ſome of her amorous Intrigues, as with the Marquis des Vardes, wherein ſhe went ſo far as to tell Madam de Soiſſons, whom des Vardes had an Amour with, She was her Rival; nay, her Favour to the Count de Treville was ſo great, that in the Agony ſhe cry'd out, Adieu Treville! Theſe are ſome of the ſevere ſcandalous Things. That ſhe was poiſon'd, appears plainly by the late Duke of Montagu's Letters, who was then Ambaſſador in France, as in that of the 30th of June. Madam, on Sunday the 29th Inſtant, being at St. Clou with a great deal of Company, about Five of the Clock in the Afternoon call'd for a Glaſs of Chicory Water, that was preſcrib'd her to drink, ſhe having for two or three Days after Bathing found herſelf indiſpos'd; ſhe had no ſooner drank this, but ſhe cry'd out, I am dead, fell into Madam Maſcbourg's Arms, and deſir'd to be put to Bed, and have a Confeſſor: She continu'd in the greateſt Tortures imaginable till Three o'Clock in the Morning, when ſhe dy'd. In that of the 6th of July the Ambaſſador writes, I ſuppoſe by this time you may have with you the Mareſchal de Bellefonds, who, beſides his Condolance, will endeavour, I believe, to diſabuſe our Court of Madam's being poiſon'd; which having ſo good an Authority as her own ſaying it ſeveral times, makes the Report much more credited: But to me in particular, when I ask'd her ſeveral times whether ſhe thought herſelf poiſon'd, ſhe wou'd anſwer nothing; I believe, being willing to ſpare the Addition of ſo great a Trouble to the King our Maſter, which was the Reaſon why in my firſt Letter I made no mention of it. The King and the Miniſters here ſeem extreamly Dutcheſs of Orleans poiſon'd. Mr. Monday's Letter about it.

King Charles conſpir'd againſt the Conſtitution of England.

A.D.1670 treamly afflicted with the Loſs of Madam, and I do not doubt but they are, for they hop'd, upon her Conſideration, to bring the King our Maſter to condeſcend to Things, and enter into a Friendſhip with this Crown ſtricter, perhaps, than they think he will now ſhe's no more. But the Ambaſſador was at that time none of the Court Confidents. He knew not how many Millions in Hand was to be paid his Maſter, enough to comfort him for more than the Loſs of a Siſter, that of his Honour, and the Love of his People. What was begun, continues he, or what was intended, I will not preſume to ſearch into, ſince your Lordſhip does not think fit to communicate the leaſt Part of it to me, but I cannot help knowing the Town-Talk: All I deſire to know, my Lord, is, that whilſt I am here, I may know what Language to hold in Converſation with the other Miniſters, that I may not be ridiculous with the Character I have upon me. P. S. Monſieur complains extreamly of the King our Maſter, for having a Confidence with Madam, and treating Things with her without his knowledge. Whoever has a Mind to ſee more of this poiſoning Affair, will find enough of it in the Memoirs of Mademoiſelle de Fayette, and the Secret Hiſtory of Europe.

King's Secret League with France.

Monſieur De Wit, Penſionary of Holland, was one of the firſt who diſcover'd the Secret League between France and England; but he cou'd hardly be brought to believe the King of England wou'd venture to break the Triple-Alliance, of which the Engliſh were ſo fond. He did not then know what Reſource the King had, and as far as his Politicks cou'd direct him, he thought the Parliament wou'd never give him Money to act againſt a League, which they offer'd to ſupply him to maintain; and having it always in his Head, that the King of England wou'd one time or other inſiſt upon reſtoring the Prince of Orange to the Stadtholderſhip, he ſeem'd reſolv'd to put every thing to venture, rather than ſubmit to what he thought wou'd ruin his Credit and Intereſt in his Republick: For Sir William Temple was beginning to prepare the Way for the Breach of the Triple-League, by making Demands of new Satisfaction for Damages in the Eaſt-Indies, and at Suriman, though he knew not what was intended by our Court's being ſo impetuous in thoſe Demands.

But the Dutcheſs of Orleans's Arrival at Dover alarm'd De Wit, and made him haſten away Van Beuningen to England, who had declar'd for the Prince of Orange's Advancement. He found immediately that the Court thought no more of the Triple-League; the Miniſtry, through Corruption or Ignorance, was gain'd to the French Side: Clifford and Arlington had not Complacency enough for the Dutch to diſſemble it. Sir Orlando Bridgeman, then Lord Keeper, was of another Opinion, ſo were Prince Rupert, the Duke of Ormond, and Sir John Trevor, Secretary of State, who were all remov'd from the Committee of Foreign Affairs, to make room for ſuch as wou'd give themſelves entirely up to the Management of France.

Cabinet-Council chang'd.

The Cabal.

As to the Characters of the Cabal, they are as well known as if they had liv'd in our own Time. We may ſee what was to be expected from Arlington, by one of the Articles in the Earl of Briſtol's Charge againſt the Earl of Clarendon, whom he accuſes, for ſaying on the Removal of Secretary Nicholas, to make room for Bennet, now Earl of Arlington, That his Majeſty had given 10,000 Pounds to remove a zealous Proteſtant, that he might bring into that Place a conceal'd Papiſt. Every one has heard of Clifford's abandonning his Poſt to own himſelf a Papiſt, and of the ſcandalous Life and Morals of Lauderdale; Buckingham's various Character is well deſcrib'd by Dryden in his Abſolom and Achitophel; and Aſhley's troubleſome and unſettled Humour, will add no great Reputation to that Miniſtry, who were Men of more Parts than Principles, and of more Ability than Virtue: However, the two latter atton'd for their evil Counſels, by their ſteady Adherence to the Cauſe of Liberty afterwards. A.D.1670

There was all the Reaſon in the World for our Court to have kept firm to the Triple-League, which wou'd not only have preſerv'd the Netherlands, but have hinder'd the future Power of Lewis XIV. and made King Charles Arbiter of the Affairs of Europe. But the King and his Courtiers were inſenſible of every good Sentiment; neither Intereſt nor Reſentment cou'd touch them, or elſe, after ſo much Expreſſion of brotherly Love and Tenderneſs to the Dutcheſs of Orleans, at the Interview of Dover, her ſudden Death wou'd have had other Effects in England.

Duke of Buckingham ſent to France.

Notwithſtanding, the Duke of Buckingham was diſpatch'd to France, to return Monſieur de Bellefond's Complement, and purſue his Negotiations; yet ſo well did the Court of England diſſemble, that they diſſipated all Monſieur Van Beuningen's Fears, and made him look on the Voyages of the Mareſchal and Duke as pure Ceremonies only. The Ambaſſador writing to Holland it was his Opinion, "That as far as com" mon Appearance wou'd go, he had all the Rea-
" ſon that cou'd be to believe that nothing had " been treated by the Mareſchal or the Duke,
" nor was ever intended to the Prejudice of King
" Charles's Alliance with the Dutch.

De Wit jealous of it.

However, Monſieur De Witt's Jealouſies were not cur'd, he declar'd to Sir William Temple, "He had obſerv'd a Coldneſs in all our Negotia-
" tions ever ſince Madam's Journey into Eng" land, and upon the late Journey of the Duke
" of Buckingham to Paris, which he cou'd not " think was pour voir le Pais, ou *apprendre la
" Langue*, to ſee the Country, or learn the Lan" guage. He deſir'd Sir William to tell him what " he cou'd make of all this laid together; for on
" the one Side there were Circumſtances enough
" to awaken a ſuſpicious Man, and on the other " Side he cou'd never think it poſſible for any " Nation or Court itſelf to quit ſo certain a Point
" of Intereſt, and ſo great a Point of Honour, as
" muſt be forfeited by our breaking our Alliance
" with them. He added, His Majeſty had en-
" gag'd the States in thoſe common Meaſures,
" and even prevail'd with them to make a Sacri" fice of the antient Kindneſs and Alliance the " States had always before with France, to the " Conſiderations of the preſent Danger, from the " Greatneſs of that Crown to the reſt of *Chri-
" ſtendom*; though they might have had what
" Terms they pleas'd from her for the dividing
" of Flanders." True it was, King Charles, put upon it by the Clamours of his Subjects, had engag'd the Dutch in the Triple-League, and drawn on them the Diſpleaſure of France, to which he was now about to join himſelf for the Deſtruction of their Republick. Sir William Temple was not let into the Secret, and cou'd only anſwer the Penſionary, "He confeſs'd he was apt to make
" many of thoſe Reflections himſelf had done,
" but cou'd not believe it poſſible for any Crown
" ever to enter into Councils ſo deſtructive to their " Honour and Safety. But if ſuch Things ſhou'd
" happen, he deſir'd Monſieur De Witt to re-
" member what he told him upon the Scruple
" he had made in truſting our Court in the Ne" gotiations of the Triple-Alliance, *of his Maje-
" ſty's and the Miniſters good Reſolutions. He con-* tinu'd,

A.D.1670 tinu'd, " I cannot believe it poſſible for them to " change in a Point of ſo evident Intereſt, and " which will be ſo underſtood by the whole Na- " tion. However, I can anſwer for no body be- " ſides myſelf; but this I will aſſure you, that " if ever ſuch a thing ſhou'd happen, I will ne- " ver have any Part in it; which, he ſaid, he had " told the King as well as him, and wou'd make " it good." The Ambaſſador needed not to have taken that Precaution: The Miniſtry knew he was not a Man to be ſent on their wicked Errands, and it was one of their firſt Steps towards the War, to re-call him. In the mean Time, that upright Miniſter Arlington, was doing his beſt to deceive Van Beuningen, and the other Foreign Ambaſſadors concern'd in the Support of the Triple-League: What a Face he put upon our Court's cloſe Correſpondence with France, will appear by a Paſſage in a Letter of his to Sir William Godolphin in Spain. " Monſieur Van Beuningen " was with me Yeſterday, being full of theſe " Apprehenſions, and inferring poſitively from " them, that the Peace wou'd be immediately " broken. I told him I cou'd not believe it, be- " cauſe the King our Maſter had all the moral " Aſſurances that can be receiv'd from his moſt " Chriſtian Majeſty, that he will inviolably keep " the Peace of Aix la Chapelle." The Reader is deſir'd to obſerve that this was written two Months after Madam had been at Dover, where, as ſhe herſelf told Mr. Montague, afterwards Duke, She had perſuaded her Brother, King Charles, to join with France againſt Holland; and long after Colbert's Treaty was concluded. Wou'd one think it was poſſible for Gentlemen to be guilty of ſuch double Dealing and Perfidy? Arlington proceeds, In the Confidence of which (of keeping the Treaty of Aix, which they had agreed to break) we live in a perfect good Underſtanding with that Court, with France, whoſe Ambition we have agreed to ſerve at the risk of the Religion and Liberties of England. Again, " Such Civilities paſs between the two Kings, as " give great Uneaſineſs to Monſieur Van Beu- " ningen, particularly by his Majeſty's ſending " the Duke of Buckingham to requite the Com- " plement brought hither by the Mareſchal de " Bellefonds."

Sir Will. Temple's Saying to De Wit.

Perfidy of the Engliſh Court.

Arlington and Clifford were in the Depth of this ruinous Intrigue, Buckingham and Aſhley not admitted ſo far into it, and Lauderdale was a Tool to be us'd or laid by at Pleaſure, being eaſily contented with the Share he had of the Gallant Miniſtry, in which he was Prime, while Clifford was at the Head of the Political. The latter being a ſtanch Papiſt, cou'd not but bear mortal Hatred to the Dutch, as may be ſeen by what paſs'd between him and Sir William Temple, upon Sir William's Return from Holland. He made him ſtay an Hour and half for his firſt Audience, and when he enter'd into Diſcourſe with him, after much Anger expreſs'd againſt the Hollanders, and the Ambaſſador's ſtrenuous Vindication of his Negotiations, Sir William gives this Account of it himſelf, in a Letter to his Father, " Being, I confeſs, a little heated, after ſo " long and unpleaſant a Converſation, as well as " he, I ask'd him, in the Name of God, What " he thought a Man cou'd do more?" Upon this, in a great Rage he anſwer'd me, I will tell you what a Man may do more, and what you ought to do more, which is, to let the King and all the World know, how baſely and unworthily the States have us'd him, and to declare publickly how their Miniſters are a Company of Rogues and Raſcals, and not fit for his Majeſty, or any other Prince, to have any thing to do with. Pray mind! This Rogue and Raſcal is the Language of a Prime Miniſter, and ſpoken of another Prime Miniſter; but that this Language is not ſo uncourtly, as is generally conceiv'd, let us have recourſe to the Example of Kings and Princes: Sir Thomas Armſtrong came Poſt from Paris as ſoon as Madam was poiſon'd, to acquaint King Charles with it. The King wept, and expreſs'd himſelf very paſſionately againſt Monſieur, ſaying, He is a Raſcal: But Prithee, Tom, don't ſpeak of it. Theſe Indecorums are more outragious than any the Treachery and Villainy of the Enemies of the Reform'd Religion and Engliſh Liberties have been able to extort from me, tho' Reſentment and Indignation may have ſuffer'd ſome warm Expreſſions to have eſcap'd me.

Rogue and Raſcal Court Language in this Reign.

When the Peace was actually broken, and the French King had invaded the United Provinces, the Governor of the Spaniſh Netherlands having aſſiſted the Dutch, Clifford undertook to have the Governor check'd, and to get a ſtop put to the Succours for the future, by a Letter to Sir William Godolphin at Madrid. " There are now at " leaſt 10 or 12,000 Men, Horſe and Foot, of " theirs, in the Holland Service and Garriſons, " which is contrary to their Treaty made with " us; and tho' they may ſend Auxiliaries not- " withſtanding any Treaties they have made with " France, yet to ſend ſuch Numbers is ſo pro- " voking, that it will be a Wonder if the moſt " Chriſtian King doth not march with his Ar- " my to Bruſſels, and the World will juſtify him " in it.

Theſe Proceedings of France and England cou'd not probably have had the deſir'd Effect, had Sweden continu'd firm in her Alliances with Holland. To debauch that Court, Mr. Coventry was diſpatch'd away Ambaſſador to Stockholm; and he did not find it a very difficult Work to take off the Edge of their Zeal for the Preſervation of the Liberties of Europe. 'Twas not likely indeed that the Swedes wou'd be anxious for others Liberties, who had made their Monarch a Preſent of their own. Ever ſince the Irruption of Guſtavus Adolphus into Germany, and the great Subſidies France paid to Sweden, the Miniſters there have been ſo us'd to touch French Gold, that their Party in Sweden was far from being inconſiderable.

The Duke of Buckingham's Reception at the Court of France was calculated to the Vanity and Profuſion of his Temper; all was Shew and Pleaſure, and he behav'd as one who underſtood Gallantry as well as the moſt Gallant of that ſplendid Court. Having once open'd a Ball with a Lady of the firſt Rank, which was perform'd by him with wonderful Gaiety and Addreſs, the Ladies were very curious in viewing a Diamond Hatband he wore, and ſome of 'em, out of Envy, cry'd, They were counterfeit. When he had done Dancing, he twiſted the Hatband round his Finger, and flung the Diamonds among the Ladies, ſaying, See, Ladies, if they are true or no. The Secret League between the two Kings of England and France was thus confirm'd, and the French Army was order'd to break up, and march toward the new Conqueſts. The Dutch Ambaſſador at Paris demanded of Mr. de Lionne, Secretary of State, Whether that Army was to be employ'd againſt his Maſters? Lionne aſſur'd him, If thoſe Troops were employ'd at all, the Storm wou'd fall far enough from their Territories. The Fraud is uppermoſt ſtill in all their Words and Actions. This Army, under Crequi, enter'd Lorraine, ſeiz'd that Dutchy, and was within half an Hour of ſurprizing the Duke, for no other Reaſon, but his offering to be a Party in the Triple-League; and when that Duke's Miniſter complain'd of it at our Court, he was told, The preſent Parliament. However, on the 24th of October the Parliament met, and the King having made a very ſhort Speech, refer'd them to the Lord Keeper Bridgeman, who was directed to ſay, among other Things, Since the Cloſe of the late War, his Majeſty hath made ſeveral Leagues to his own HONOUR, and of infinite Advantage to the Nation. One known by the Name of the Triple-League; wherein his Majeſty, the Crown of Sweden, and the States of the United Provinces, are engag'd to preſerve the Treaty of Aix la Chapelle, concerning a Peace between the two warring Princes; which Peace produc'd that Effect, that it quench'd the Fire that was ready to have ſet all Chriſtendom in a Flame; and beſides other great Benefits by it, which ſhe ſtill enjoys, gave Opportunity to tranſmit thoſe Forces againſt the Infidels, which wou'd otherwiſe have been embru'd in Chriſtian Blood. Another between his Majeſty and the ſaid States, for a mutual Aſſiſtance, with a certain Number of Men and Ships, in caſe of Invaſion by any others. Prodigious! All theſe Treaties, upon which the King values himſelf ſo much by his Keeper, are not only every one of them broken, but a new one fraudulently and clandeſtinely made to deſtroy thoſe very States, and ſet Chriſtendom in a Flame. The Keeper told them, that ſince France and Holland were fitting out Fleets, 'twas neceſſary the King of England ſhou'd do ſo too, and demanded 800,000 Pounds for that Expence, which this giving Parliament readily gave his Majeſty; and with that Money he put himſelf in a Condition to break thoſe Treaties for the Maintenance of which it was given him.

Duke of Monmouth. In the beginning of the Summer, James Duke of Monmouth, the King's eldeſt Son, by Mrs. Lucy Walters, or Barlow, of Pembrokeſhire, was admitted into the Privy-Council. He was born at Rotterdam, April 9, 1649, at the Time when Echard ſays, the King was as eminent for Continence, as he was for Incontinence afterwards. The Queen Mother, it ſeems, lik'd him not the worſe for his being the Baſtard Son of her Son, but took particular Care of his Education, under Thomas Roſs, Eſq; at Paris. At twelve Years old he was brought to England, and was created Duke of Orkney in Scotland, and Duke of Monmouth ſome time after. His Beauty and fine Mien gain'd the Love of the whole Court; his Father was ſo fond of him, that it created Jealouſy in the Duke of York. In 1665, he was marry'd to the Lady Anne, Daughter and Heir to Francis Earl of Buccleugh, generally eſteem'd the greateſt Beauty and Fortune in the three Kingdoms. He was made Captain of the Horſe Guards, Lord Lieutenant of the Eaſt Riding of Yorkſhire, Governor of Hull, and afterwards General of all the Land Forces.

Blood's Plot to ſteal the Duke of Ormond. In December this Year, there was diſcover'd a horrid and bloody Plot, no ſham one, contriv'd by Captain Blood of Ireland, who, ſays Echard, had been in a Plot there to make himſelf Lord Lieutenant of that Kingdom; and the Compleat Hiſtorian ſays, Blood's Deſign was to force the Duke to ſign ſome Writings to ſurrender an Eſtate he had forfeited by Rebellion in Ireland, and that he was a deſperate Villain. Mr. Baxter tells us, He had been a Soldier in the old King's Army againſt the Parliament. The other Plotters were Richard Hallowell of Frying-pan Alley in Petticoat-lane without Biſhopſgate (I am ſo particular, becauſe it ſhews how well the Compleat Hiſtorian, from whom I take it, underſtands the Dignity and Majeſty of Hiſtory) Thomas Allen, Thomas Hunt, and Ralph Alexander. The Plot was to ſteal the Duke of Ormond, and hang him at Tyburn, in Revenge of ſome Plotters whom the Duke had hung in Ireland. They way-laid him as he was going to Dunkirk-Houſe, in Piccadilly, in the Night, and Blood taking him out of his Coach, by the Help of Alexander, mounted him on Horſeback behind his eldeſt Son, afterwards Lieutenant General Blood. The Duke was carry'd as far as Devonſhire-Houſe before Help got to him; and then he flung himſelf off the Horſe, the Perſon to whom he was ty'd falling with him. By which time the Duke's Porter, and other Aſſiſtance coming up, the Fellow diſengag'd himſelf, mounted, and rode off with the reſt of the Plotters. The Compleat Hiſtorian adds to this Piece of Hiſtory two Conſecrations, that of Dr. Creighton, Biſhop of Bath and Wells, a virulent Preacher, and that of Shadwel Church; as you may ſee there more at large. A.D.1670

There was a ſtupid worthleſs Mechanick, one Starling, who had got himſelf in to the Chair in the City of London; he was Mayor the Year before, and join'd with the Archbiſhop's Nephew, Sir Joſeph Sheldon, and one Sir Andrew King, an obſcure Knight, in ſending two eminent and worthy Citizens, Mr. Jekyl, and Mr. Hayes, to Goal, for endeavouring to ſave ſome poor Citizens from Priſon, who were in danger of it, by being found worſhipping God according to Scripture and their own Conſciences. Echard calls their offering a Crown or two to the Conſtables, for letting the Proteſtant Diſſenters go about their Buſineſs, an Attempt to bribe the Magiſtrates. The Parliament, who, ſays Biſhop Burnet, had loſt the Reſpect of the People, ſtood by Starling and Sheldon, againſt whom Mr. Hayes and Mr. Jekyl had brought their Action for falſe Impriſonment, and Voted the Commitment of thoſe Gentlemen, to be for the Preſervation of the King; which is as much Nonſenſe as a Majority of Wrong-heads cou'd be guilty of. Both the Compleat Hiſtorians take Notice of the great Favour done Seth Ward, Biſhop of Sarum, by making him Chancellor of the Garter, as ſome Biſhops of that See had been formerly; but I muſt remember that Covenanting Presbyterian, Independent Republican, and Cromwelian, for ſomething elſe, which I find in Baxter's Life. "This Year Salisbury Dioceſe "was more fiercely driven on to Conformity by "Dr. Seth Ward, their Biſhop, than any Place "elſe, or than all the Biſhops in England beſides "did in theirs. Many Hundreds were perſecuted "by him with great Induſtry, and among others, "that learned, humble, holy Gentleman, Tho"mas Grove, Eſq; an antient Parliament Man, "of as great Sincerity and Integrity as almoſt "any Man I ever knew. He ſtood it out a while "in a Law Suit, but was overthrown, and fain "to forſake his Country, as many Hundreds more "are quickly like to do." Mr. Grove's Nephew, Dr. Robert Grove, was afterwards the learned and pious Biſhop of Chicheſter.

About the ſame time Dr. Manton was ſent to the common Goal for preaching the Goſpel in his own Houſe, and was kept in the Gate-houſe ſix Months.

Such was the State of Religion, and ſuch the ſad State of the Publick Affairs: The moſt Honourable and Safe Leagues were breaking, the moſt Sober and Religious Proteſtants in the Nation perſecuting, and Popery and Slavery make very quick Approaches; but the Wicked will not always proſper.

Before we proceed farther in the Preparations of a new War, we muſt look into the Affairs of Scotland and Ireland. 1671.

The Papiſts in Ireland had conceiv'd ſuch Hopes of the Eſtabliſhment of their Religion, that they cou'd not conceal them from the Proteſtants.

A.D.1671 teſtants. 'Twas very remarkable, that in the Year 1668, Peter Talbot, Brother to Tyrconnel, and Titular Archbiſhop of Dublin, landing from Ireland. England at a Place call'd the Skeriſh, within 12 Miles of that City, and being very hoſpitably entertain'd by one Captain Coddington, with whom he lodg'd one Night, Talbot the next Morning took him aſide, and after the moſt affectionate Expreſſion of Kindneſs, ask'd him what Title he had to that Eſtate? For he obſerv'd he had expended conſiderably upon its Improvement. Coddington anſwer'd, 'Twas an old Eſtate belonging to the Earl of Thomond. Talbot reply'd, That's nothing; it belongs to the Church, and will all be taken away; therefore I adviſe you, lay out no more Money upon it, but get what you can and deſert it. All which was offer'd upon ſtrong Injunctions of the moſt inviolable Secrecy.

The Duke of Ormond was then Lord Lieutenant, and nothing advantageous to their Intereſts cou'd be manag'd while he continu'd in that Poſt, which occaſion'd ſeveral Conſultations at Court about his Removal. It had been too palpable for the Popiſh Party to have appear'd in it; wherefore an Intrigue was then form'd of renewing the antient Animoſities between him and the Duke of Buckingham. This was reduc'd to Act, and the Effect was proportionable to the Deſign. Being recall'd, he left his Son, the Earl of Oſſory, to command in his Abſence; and no ſooner was it known at Dublin that he was remov'd, than the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of Dublin, the Provoſt of the College, the Dean of Chriſt-Church, and many of the principal Citizens and Clergy, waited on the Earl of Oſſory, to acknowledge the Benefits they enjoy'd under the good Government of his Father. The next thing to be conſider'd was, who ſhou'd ſucceed him, which was a Matter that requir'd a very nice and critical Management. They pitch'd upon the Lord Roberts, A. D. 1669, as a Perſon who had formerly been diſappointed of that Station, which begetting a Prejudice in him, and meeting with a vindictive Spirit, whoſe Temper they knew to be ſuch, wou'd procure him invidiouſly to inſpect into, or elſe to create Faults in the Government of the Duke of Ormond, which was the End of the Contrivance, and of his Advancement, as knowing that his Uneaſineſs to thoſe of that Kingdom wou'd ſerve to prepare a fair Reception for the Lord Berkley, a Man of whoſe Inclinations to their Intereſt the Popiſh Party had the moſt convincing Aſſurances.

Some Years before the Lord Roberts was made Lord Lieutenant, the Marquis of Antrim was accus'd of being Actor in the Iriſh Maſſacre, and as ſuch, his Eſtate was to be forfeited. Theſe Articles being prov'd againſt him: 1. He was in the Conſpiracy to ſurprize the Caſtle of Dublin with Macguire, Macmahon, who were hang'd, &c. 2. He afterwards join'd the Rebels, particularly Renny O-Moor. 3. He enter'd into the Popiſh Conſpiracy before the Year 1643. 4. He conſtantly adher'd to the Nuntio's Party. 5 He ſate from Time to Time in the Council of Kilkenny. 6. He ſign'd the execrable Oath of Aſſociation. 7. He acted as Lieutenant General by Commiſſion from that Council. 8. He declar'd he had join'd with Owen Roe, and Neal in oppoſing the Peace made by the Lord Ormond. Theſe Proofs taken in Ireland were tranſmitted to King Charles II. who ſent back a Letter to the Lord Lieutenant, then the Duke of Ormond, to clear Antrim; in which Letter 'tis alledg'd, That the Marquis of Antrim was innocent from any Malice or Rebellious Purpoſe againſt the Crown, and that his Tranſactions with the Iriſh Rebels were by the Inſtruction of the King his Father, and for his Service; that his Royal Father was well pleas'd with what the Marquis had done, and approv'd the ſame; and that he, Charles II. cou'd not in Juſtice deny him this Teſtimony; that what he did by way of correſponding with the Iriſh, was in order to the Service of his Royal Father, and warranted by his Inſtructions. This Letter was dated from Whitehall July the 10th, 1663, and enter'd at the Signet Office July the 13th following. " Upon " this, ſays Mr. Baxter, the Parliament's old " Adherents grew more confident than ever of " the Righteouſneſs of their Wars. And the " very Deſtroyers of the King, whom the firſt " Parliamentarians call'd Rebels, did preſume " alſo to juſtify their Cauſe, and ſaid, That the " Law of Nature did warrant them." It ſtopp'd not here. The Lord Viſcount Maſſareen, a zealous Proteſtant, ſtill proſecuted Antrim's Cauſe, and carry'd it ſo far, that the Marquis was forc'd to produce in the Houſe of Commons of England a Letter of King Charles I. by which he gave him Order for his taking up Arms againſt the Engliſh Proteſtants in Ireland; which being read even in this Giving and Taking Houſe, put all the Members into a Silence.

had King Charles I. Commiſſion.

Dr. Calamy very juſtly complains of the foul Mouths that broke out againſt him for mentioning this Paſſage of the Marquis of Antrim after Mr. Baxter, tho' it had been told by ſeveral Writers long before Mr. Baxter's Life came out, as by the Author of Murther will out, by Lieutenant General Ludlow, &c. Indeed it bears hard on the Memory of Charles the Firſt, and proves, beyond Contradiction, that his Martyrdom cou'd not be for the Proteſtant Religion, againſt which he commiſſion'd an Iriſh Maſſacrer to take Arms. I never thought that King gave a formal Commiſſion to the Iriſh Papiſts to cut the Throats of the Engliſh Proteſtants: But I always thought, and always ſhall think, that if a Commiſſion to take Arms is given, or even countenanc'd, and the Conſequence of that Commiſſion is a Maſſacre, that the Power who gave it, or countenanc'd it, is as much acceſſary to the Maſſacre as ever Perſon was acceſſary to a Murder, in which there's no Difference in Guilt and Puniſhment between the Acceſſary and the Principal.

Vol. III. p. 115.

A ſad Accident.

Soon after the Lord Robert's Arrival at Dublin a very unfortunate Accident happen'd there. Moſt of the Nobility and Gentry being at the Theatre in Dublin to ſee Ben. Johnſon's Bartholomew Fair acted, the upper Galleries on a ſudden fell all down, and the People out of them into the Pit and lower Boxes. The Lord Lieutenant and his Lady were in the King's Box, or what ſerves inſtead of it, in that Play-houſe, but they both eſcap'd the Danger, part of the Box where they were remaining firm, and ſo reſiſting the Fall from above, only his two Sons were found quite bury'd under the Timber. The younger had receiv'd but little Hurt, but the eldeſt was taken up dead to all Appearance; he was preſently let Blood and recover'd. Many of the Audience were dangerouſly hurt, and ſeven or eight kill'd out-right. If, like the Compleat Hiſtorian, we cou'd ſuffer our Paſſion to cry out a Judgment on every extraordinary Incident, one might ask why ſhou'd not this be imputed ſuch, when the Buffoonry of the Stage was play'd againſt the Purity of Divine Worſhip; for the ſober religious Puritan was the Jeſt of the Farce, and a proper Cant put into his Mouth to adapt it to the Times, the lewdeſt that ever were known in a Country where Profeſſion was made of any Religion at all. Lord Roberts remain'd Lord Lieutenant but about ſix Months, and then the

Lord

A.D.1671 Lord Berkley was ſent over in the ſame Station. He arriv'd April the 2d, 1670. Richard Talbot, Brother to Peter, and the Duke of York's Favourite, went from Court to Ireland ſoon after, where, pretending to retire and live private, he was ſtill engag'd in all the ſecret Counſels with Sir Ellis Leighton, as great a Sinner as his holy Brother, the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, was a Saint, Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant Berkley.

It was now pretended, that when the King was in Exile, he had oblig'd himſelf to the French King to reſtore the Iriſh to their Religion and Eſtates; and leſt a Neglect of this ſhou'd occaſion a Breach with France, which the King under his new Engagement durſt not admit a Thought of, ſomething therefore muſt be done to ſatisfy his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty; ſo it was order'd, notwithſtanding the Law, to prefer Iriſh Papiſts to the Commiſſion of the Peace, in this Year 1671. But they behav'd ſo partially and inſolently, that they became odious to ſober Men of their own Party.

The next Year an Attempt was made to regulate Corporations. The Lord Berkley acting, as he was directed, by the Duke of York, or his Agents the Talbots, the Lord Lieutenant was impower'd to do it by an Act of the laſt Parliament there. This was manag'd with ſuch Secrecy, that none were made acquainted with it till a Draft of it was drawn and brought ready to the Council Board. The next Day an Order was ſent to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of Dublin to call a Common Council, to turn them out and make a new Government in the City. This Berkley and the Privy-Council well underſtood wou'd make a Diſturbance, which they were deſirous ſo to improve among the Citizens, as to render the Proteſtants diſaffected. To this End they labour'd induſtriouſly to irritate and provoke them, as the Lord Berkley had done the Year before, when a Number of Boys got up in a Tumult to pull down a Bridge, which was erecting contrary to the Deſire of the City. The Lord Mayor and Conſtables having ſuppreſs'd them, the Lord Lieutenant order'd Soldiers, as they were carrying them to Priſon, to diſcharge ſeveral Shots among the Boys, by which ſeveral of them were kill'd.

The Aldermen of Dublin gave ready Obedience to the Order, tho' they fear'd the Bottom of the Deſign; and this Compliance put the Lord Lieutenant on new Meaſures; for the moſt conſiderable Aldermen had been noted for keeping Papiſts from the Freedom of the City, and while they were in Power no Popiſh Deſign cou'd ſucceed; wherefore the next Work was to prepoſſeſs the Populace with a Prejudice againſt the Aldermen, repreſenting them as the Authors and Contrivers of this new Model, tho', as it was afterwards prov'd upon an Hearing before the Earl of Eſſex and Council, when he was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, they never heard one Word of that Model till the Order was brought to them upon Toleſey, with a Command to put it in Execution. About the ſame Time, 1672, came over to Dublin a Perſon who aſſum'd ſeveral Names, ſometimes Payne, ſometimes Nevill, the ſame Man who was committed to Newgate a few Years after for ſome High Miſdemeanor relating to Coleman and the Popiſh Plot. This Nevill was ſent to Ireland by Coleman, Secretary to the Duke of York, to act as he ſhou'd receive Inſtructions from himſelf and the chief Papiſts of England. He kept himſelf cloſe at firſt, but at laſt was receiv'd into the Caſtle, and appear'd as Under-Secretary to Sir Ellis Leighton. His Buſineſs was to infuſe into the Citizens of Dublin an Opinion of the Treachery of their Recorder Sir William Davis; and to make the Pretext the more plauſible, he had Inſtructions to add, that the Recorder and the Lord Primate, then Lord Chancellor, counſell'd the Lord Berkley to enact thoſe Laws for aboliſhing the antient Government of the City, and further inſinuating, that this was done at the Deſire, Inſtigation, and Contrivance of the chief Aldermen. The impious Suggeſtion being not only artfully ſpread, but alſo too eaſily credited by the Citizens, they were induc'd to pitch upon Nevill as their moſt proper Agent, and in order to this advanc'd Money, which they preſented to Sir Ellis Leighton, who, together with Nevill, brought the then Lord Mayor Totty, with the Sheriffs, to the Lord Lieutenant, who publickly declar'd the Relation above, and promis'd to recal his Order. Upon which he ſummon'd a Council, but the unravelling of the Buſineſs diſcover'd a Popiſt Intrigue, which occaſion'd their not agreeing with the Lord Berkley. A.D.1671

However, a Conſultation was held by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs with Colonel Talbot his Brother, the Titular Archbiſhop of Dublin, as alſo with Sir Nicholas Plunket, the Pope's Knight, at Talbot's Houſe, three Miles from Dublin, where it was reſolv'd, that the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs ſhou'd call a general Aſſembly of the City, and by an Act of that Aſſembly turn out the Recorder, and all the Aldermen and Common-Council-Men, who oppos'd the Popiſh Party. But when the Aſſembly met, all the four and twenty Aldermen were unanimous, and without them no Act cou'd paſs; upon which they ſent to the Lord Lieutenant for further Inſtructions, keeping the Aſſembly ſhut up till the Anſwer came from him, which was, that one of the Sheriffs, and ſeveral of the Commons, ſhou'd deliver a Petition to the Aldermens Court to turn out Sir William Davis and ſeven of the chief Aldermen. One of the Sheriffs, aſham'd of theſe treacherous Proceedings, diſcover'd the ſecret Contrivance: Popery promoted. And thus the Aldermen had ſome Time to be on their Guard againſt it; and they defended themſelves ſo well when the Matter came to be debated, that the adverſe Party obtain'd only the Suffrages of two indigent Aldermen; but then the Lord Mayor, who was corrupted by Leighton and Payne, call'd a private Aſſembly, at which not one of the ſeven Aldermen were preſent. The Commons were call'd into the Aldermen's Court, and there, in a tumultuous and irregular Manner, the ſeven chief Aldermen were turn'd out, and ſeven of the Rabble put in their Places; Leighton was alſo made Recorder, ſeveral Papiſts were brought into the Common-Council. Talbot, the Titular Archbiſhop of Dublin, borrowed rich Hangings, Silver Candleſticks, Plate, and other Utenſils of the Lord Lieutenant to uſe at High Maſs, which Leighton got to be ſent with this Complement, That he hop'd to have High Maſs at Chriſt-Church at Chriſtmas.

In Berkley's Time the Papiſts in Ireland became ſo inſolent, that Richard and Peter Talbot were look'd upon as a kind of Favourites at the Caſtle, and a horrid Conſpiracy was on Foot to maſſacre the Proteſtants, which was diſcover'd by the Babling of a Prieſt, who was come from abroad to forward that bleſſed Work, as they were pleas'd to call it. Suſpicion was taken by Croſſes of Straw, which the Prieſts had order'd the Papiſts to fix over their Doors, as a Token of Diſtinction to ſave them when the Proteſtants were deſtroy'd. The Prieſt was ſought after, but he was convey'd away, and the Government gave no Encouragement to any Enquiry into the Plot, or after the Plotters. The Men who were outed, ſent

A.D.1671 ſent Sir William Davis, the outed Recorder, to London, to lay the State of their Caſe before the Miniſtry, which when the Earl of Shafsbury had heard, he ſwore the Lord Lieutenant was mad, and about a Month after the Earl of Eſſex was appointed to ſucceed Berkley in that Station. The latter went Ambaſſador to France, where he behav'd ſo poorly, that he was ſaid to have loſt his Wits, if ever he had any. The Earl of Eſſex, ſome Time before this, being at Paris, in his Way to England from the Waters of Bourbon, the Queen-Mother, then living, ſent for him, and told him there were Agents from Ireland, who deſir'd Money and Arms of the French King as alſo ſome Officers, and they wou'd put that Kingdom into his Hand. But, ſays Biſhop Burnet, the French King had greater Things in View. However, this is no ſmall Proof of the traiterous Deſigns of the Iriſh Papiſts againſt their King and Country, for they were not as yet let into the Secret of King Charles's Religion.

We muſt in the next Place caſt an Eye upon Scotland. Scotland, which we left after the Tumult at Pentland-Hill. The Executions which follow'd it are too bloody and barbarous for a Chriſtian Hiſtory. Archbiſhop Sharp was the moſt Sharp's Inſolence and Baſeneſs. deeply concern'd in them, inſomuch that after he had receiv'd a Letter from the King to ſtop his Hand, he ſuffer'd ten Men to be put to Death before he paid Obedience to it. His Majeſty having receiv'd Information of the ill State of Affairs in Scotland by the Earls of Tweedale and Kincardin, who went to London on Purpoſe, was diſpleas'd at Sharp's Tyranny and Cruelty, and order'd the Lord Rothes to write to that proud and hated Prelate to ſtay within his Dioceſs, and come no more to Edinburgh. Upon this he was ſtruck with ſo deep a Melancholy, that, to uſe the Lord of Sarum's Words, he ſhew'd as much Abjectedneſs under the ſlight Diſgrace, as he had ſhewn Inſolence before, when he had more Favour. He preſided in the laſt Convention, but Duke Hamilton was appointed to preſide in the next, A. D. 1667. Sharp had been order'd to look after the Education of the young Marquis of Huntly, and ſee that he was not bred a Papiſt; for the Strength of Popery in Scotland lay in his Family. Sharp car'd not for that; the Earl of Rothes's Miſtreſs was related to Huntly, and a good Catholick herſelf, ſo he let Huntly's Mother breed him as ſhe pleas'd; and Biſhop He favours Popery and Lewdneſs. Burnet adds, The Intereſt which Popery had in Scotland was believ'd to be chiefly owing to Sharp's Compliance with the Earl of Rothes's Amours, which cou'd not but be very much for the Credit of the Cauſe he had eſpous'd at the Expence of his Oaths and his Conſcience. That eminent Prelate, his Grace, ſays Echard of him; and the Biſhop of Sarum does not ſcruple to ſtile the very ſame Man Infamous. The Lord Rothes, Sharp's Patron, ſent Colonel Drummond with a Meſſage to the King, repreſenting the Neceſſity of putting to Death all thoſe who wou'd not renounce the Covenant. Such an Order was ſent, but with it a Letter, commanding the Execution of it to be forborn, unleſs there was expreſs Command for it from Court; ſo it ſerv'd only to make Rothes, Sharp, and their Party ſtill more odious. Burnet, Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, got into the Management upon Sharp's leaving it; but he drove ſo furiouſly, that even Sharp was thought a more moderate Counſellor, and accordingly recall'd to the Council-Board, and Burnet alſo grew ſomewhat tamer. The Biſhops, ſays my Lord of Salisbury, ſeem only concern'd for their Authority and Revenues, and took no Care of regulating Worſhip and Diſcipline, which I never did, nor ever ſhall wonder at. Authority Scotch Biſhops take no Care of Religion. and Revenues are of the Kingdom of the World in which we live; Religion and Piety are of the Kingdom of Chriſt, which is too remote to have any Attraction on worldly Minds. A.D.1671

All this while Lord Lauderdale kept himſelf pretty much in the good Opinion of the Presbyterians; but about eight Years after the Reſtoration he ſuffer'd himſelf to be govern'd by the Counteſs of Dyſert, Wife of Sir Lionel Talmaſh of Suffolk, with whom he had ſo familiar Commerce in her Husband's Time, that it gave Occaſion to Cenſure. This Woman had Beauty, Wit, and ſome Learning; but, as Biſhop Burnet tells us, wou'd ſtick at nothing to compaſs her Ends. When Lauderdale was a Priſoner after Worceſter Fight, ſhe ſav'd his Life by her In- Dutcheſs of Lauderdale great with Cromwel. trigues with Cromwel, which was not a little taken Notice of. The Biſhop adds, He was certainly fond of her, and ſhe took Care to entertain him in it, till he, finding what was ſaid upon it, broke it off. She liv'd after the Reſtoration ſo much with Lauderdale, that his Wife left the Kingdom, went to Paris, and dy'd there. After which he marry'd Lady Dyſert, and deliver'd himſelf up to all her Humours and Paſſions; by which Means he fell out with all his beſt Friends, and among others with the Presbyterians, who paid him more than ordinary Reſpect in Hopes to keep him, if not theirs, at leaſt their Friends. Lord Tweedale had the Commiſſion for Scotland after Lord Rothes; and to expoſe the latter, Turner the Dragoon was queſtion'd for his Cruelties, which provok'd the People to riſe about Dumfries. It was expected Turner wou'd produce his Warrants, and that then Rothes wou'd appear to have been chiefly concern'd in it; but he ſunk them, and his Commiſſion being taken from him, wou'd not produce any Vouchers to pleaſe his Enemies. The wiſe and virtuous Sir Robert Murray was Aſſiſtant to the Earl of Tweedale in the Government, and paſſing through the Weſt of Scotland to endeavour to compoſe Matters a little, he found out the Source of all the Evils which had there happen'd. The Epiſcopal Clergy in that Country were, as he told the Biſhop of Salisbury, a Set of Men ſo ignorant Ignorant Clergy. and ſo ſcandalous, that it was not poſſible to ſupport them, unleſs the greateſt Part of them cou'd be turn'd out, and better Men put in their Places. The Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, Burnet, had put them all in, and they were ſo link'd together, that none of them cou'd be got to concur in getting Proofs of Crimes brought againſt their Brethren. How do the Compleat Hiſtorians rejoyce at the obtruding of Epiſcopacy in Scotland! and theſe are, you ſee, the ſweet Effects of it. Sir Robert Murray propos'd a Method to purge the Church of ſuch Scandals to it, by erecting a Court, conſiſting of Clergy and Laity, to examine into the Complaints of the People againſt their Curates. Burnet of Glaſgow roar'd againſt this as an Encroachment on his Authority; and his Clergy cry'd out, They were undone. Indeed Sir Robert Murray's Project was too pious to ſucceed in ſuch impious Times. The Lord Tweedale prevail'd on the holy Leighton to go to London, where he repreſented to the King the Madneſs of the Adminiſtration of Church Affairs in Scotland under Sharp, and the Archdeacon's other Scotch Biſhops. A Treaty of an Accommodation was propos'd with the Presbyterians, but came to nothing. Oppreſſion had wrought the rigid Presbyterians into Phrenzy, and they were not ſoon to be brought into a treating Temper. The more ſober Part of them were not averſe to it; but ſo many Difficulties were ſtarted, that this Propoſal, like all other good Propoſals in theſe bad Times, had no Effect. In the Year 1668,

A.D. 1671 Sharp the Archbiſhop, who was as much hated as it is poſſible for a Man to be, was ſhot at in a Coach in Edinburgh Street; but the Bullet was intercepted by the Arm of the Biſhop of Orkney, who was then getting into Sharp's Coach. Echard aſſerts, That the Man who ſhot off the Piſtol was a Conventicle Preacher. Biſhop Burnet ſays, he was ſhot at by a Man, but does not ſay he was a Preacher, or a Presbyterian, tho' 'tis very likely he was a Conventicler, as that modeſt, ingenious Hiſtorian terms the Proteſtant Diſſenters, and for the Sake of this Billingſgate, does he affirm a Falſhood, for my Lord of Sarum intimates, that the Man, Mitchel, whom Echard names, was a p. 413. Shop-keeper. Sharp was as much frighted as a wicked Man and a Coward cou'd be. Mitchel made off, and was not diſcover'd 'till ſix Years after, and how that happen'd is worth knowing, there being a Series of Villainies in the Beginning and End of this Buſineſs, which is not eaſily to be met with in any other Hiſtory. I take it from the Biſhop of Salisbury.

Sharp guilty of a Series of Villainies.

" Sharp had obſerv'd a Man that kept a Shop " at his Door, who look'd very narrowly on him " always as he paſs'd by, and he fancy'd he was " the Man that had ſhot at him ſix Years be- " fore; ſo he order'd him to be taken up and ex- " amin'd. It was found he had two Piſtols by " him, that were deeply charg'd, which encreas'd " the Suſpicion, yet the Man deny'd all. But " Sharp got a Friend of his to go to him, and " deal with him to make a full Confeſſion, and " Sharp made ſolemn Promiſes that he wou'd " procure his Pardon. Mitchel's Friend an- " ſwer'd, he hop'd he did not intend to make " uſe of him to trapan a Man to his Ruin." Now, Reader, fix thy Eyes upon this Sharp, and ſee him in the higheſt Act of Devotion, telling the moſt execrable Falſity that ever came from Man's Lips. " Sharp, with lifted up Hands, promis'd " by the Living God, that no Hurt ſhould come " to the Man. The Perſon went to the Priſoner, " who offer'd to tell all, if a Promiſe was made " in the King's Name; upon which Lauderdale, " then the King's Commiſſioner, impower'd the " Lord Halton his Brother, the Lord Rothes and " Primroſe to promiſe him his Life, which was " done, and the Priſoner Mitchel, kneeling im- " mediately down, confeſs'd the Fact. There was " but one Perſon privy to it, and he was then " dead. Echard inſinuates that all the Presby- " terians were privy to it." Sharp was troubled to ſee ſo ſmall a Diſcovery, and the Man was ſent Priſoner to the Baſs, to be kept there for Life; however, he was ſometime after brought into the Juſticiary Court, upon an Indictment for this Crime, to which it was expected he wou'd plead Guilty, " But the Judge, as he went up the " Stairs, paſſing by the Priſoner, ſaid to him, " Confeſs nothing, unleſs you are ſure of your " Limbs as well as your Life. Upon this Hint, " he refus'd to confeſs, which being reported to " the Council, an Act was paſs'd, that ſince he " had retracted his Confeſſion, they likewiſe re- " call'd the Promiſe of Pardon. Sharp would " have his Life, Lauderdale gave Way to it, and " he was brought to Edinburgh, in order to his " Trial. All were amaz'd at the Proceeding, " Primroſe took a Copy of the Act of Council " for Mitchel's Pardon, and then going to Lau- " derdale, told him, many thought there had been Lauder- dale's Falſhood. " a Promiſe of Life given: Lauderdale deny'd " it ſtiffly; Primroſe deſir'd the Council Regi- " ſter might be look'd into, to ſee if there was " any Act for it." Lauderdale ſaid, he was ſure it was not poſſible. Lockhart, Uncle of Carnworth, pleaded for Mitchel with ſuch Force and Eloquence, as amaz'd the Audience, but it was over-rul'd. Then the Promiſe of Pardon was in- A.D. 1671 ſiſted on; the Perſon who went to Mitchel, gave Evidence of that Promiſe from Sharp, which Sharp, who had ſworn his Promiſe by the Living God, flatly deny'd. The Duke of Lauderdale, the Earl of Rothes, and the Lord Halton, deny'd alſo that there was any Promiſe of Pardon; at which, all preſent, were ſtruck with Aſtoniſhment. Lockhart demanded a Copy of the Council Act, which was regiſter'd. Duke of Lauderdale, who was in the Court, only as a Witneſs, and ſo had no Right to ſpeak, ſtood up and ſaid, I and theſe other noble Perſons, are not brought hither to be accus'd of Perjury, the Books of Scot's Council are the King's Secrets, and no Court ſhall Privy have the Peruſing of them. So Mitchel was caſt Counſellors and condemn'd. perjur'd.

Sharp ſworn.

As ſoon as the Court broke up, the Lords of the Council ſearch'd the Regiſter, and to their Shame, found the Act for Pardon enter'd there, and ſign'd by Lord Rothes, as Preſident of the Council, whoſe poor Excuſe was, that he ſign'd any thing the Clerk put in the Book, upon whom it was then intended to throw it; but he, to clear himſelf, ſearches among his Papers, and found the Draught of the Act in Nisbit, the King's Advocate's Hand. Nisbit being rich, a ſevere Fine was determin'd to be laid upon him; but he examin'd the Minutes of the Council Book, and ſpoke to all who were then at the Board, of whom nine happen'd to be in Edinburgh, who were ready to depoſe upon Oath, that when the Council order'd this Act to be drawn, the Clerk of the Council deſir'd the Help of the King's Advocate, which he gave him, and his Draught was approv'd by the Council, yet Lauderdale ſtill ſtood to it. Lord Kincardin ſent a Biſhop to him before the Trial, deſiring him to conſider better of the Matter, and not deny a Thing upon Oath, which he, Kincardin, had under both his own, and his Brother Halten's Hand, nay the very Letters wherein he deſir'd that a Pardon might be ask'd of the King for Mitchel, purſuant to the Promiſe that had been given him. This made ſome Impreſſion on him, and he was willing to grant a Reprieve, but Sharp ſaid, That was to expoſe him to any Man who wou'd attempt to murder him. Then ſaid Duke Lauderdale in an Lauder- impious jeſting Way, Let Mitchel glorify God in dale per- the Graſs Market, where he was hang'd; which jur'd and Action, and all that were concern'd in it, were impious. look'd at by all People with Horror. Biſhop Burnet adds, It was ſuch a Complication of Treachery, Perjury and Cruelty, as the like had not perhaps been known, and I cannot think that all the Conciergeries and Chatelets in the World, cou'd furniſh ſuch a Set of Men as dipp'd their Hands, and their very Souls in the Blood of this Man. Remember Echard's Lord Primate, his Grace is at the Head of them. Lauderdale's Chaplain, Hicks, a Conventicle Preacher, after he was turn'd out of the Deanery of Worceſter, publiſh'd a falſe and partial Account of this Matter, ſays my Lord Sarum, to juſtify his Maſter, but his Lordſhip's Account was ſent him by Primroſe, and every Page ſign'd by the Clerk of the Court. To return to the Scot's Hiſtory where we left off. Sharp, after this Attempt againſt him, was ſent for to Court, and well receiv'd by the King, whoſe moderate Meaſures then taken up, he ſeem'd to approve, and when he return'd to Scotland, he mov'd in Council, that an Indulgence might be granted to ſome of the Kirk Miniſters, who wou'd oblige themſelves not to ſpeak or preach againſt Epiſcopacy, &c. but it had no great, or rather a very ill Effect; for the ſtrict Covenanters objected, that if they bound themſelves againſt the Covenant, by which they renounc'd Epiſco-

A D. 1671 pacy, the Sin was their own; if the King bound them, they had ſtill Liberty left to refuſe Obedience, and undergo the Puniſhment.

Illegal Government. The Militia of Scotland, conſiſting of 2000 Horſe, and 16,000 Foot, were arm'd, train'd and caſt into Independent Regiments, under ſuch Orders as they receiv'd from the Council Board; all which was againſt Law.

Mention has been made of the Scheme for a Union of the two Kingdoms, for which Scots Commiſſioners were appointed, but it went no farther. About Forty Miniſters receiv'd Licenſes to preach, on the Conditions therein mention'd, but thoſe Miniſters who cou'd not comply, look'd on them, as in a Schiſm which divided the Presbyterian Intereſt. The indulg'd Presbyterians, and the Cameronians, who wou'd not be indulg'd on the Terms of Suſpending the Covenant, carrying their Prejudices as far as Excommunication.

Tyranny enacted. The Scots Parliament, in the Year 1669, paſs'd an Act to aſſert the King's Supremacy in ſo high a Strain, that it might have been ſtretch'd to every thing. Biſhop Leighton was againſt it, ſo were many of the beſt Epiſcopal Clergy, as Nairn, Charteris, &c. By another Act, they ſettled the Militia, declaring they ſhou'd march into any of the King's Dominions, as his Majeſty ſhould think neceſſary, and now having enſlav'd both Church and State, Lauderdale brag'd of his Merit in it, and told the King in a Letter, All Scotland is now in your Power. Notwithſtanding the Talk ever now and then of Moderation, Indulgence, Comprehenſion and Union, in the very next Seſſion of the Scots Parliament, the Severities againſt the Kirk were encreas'd. Lauderdale, with his own Hand, put in a Word in the new Act that cover'd Papiſts, the Fines being to be laid only on ſuch of the Reform'd Religion as went not to the Church.

Field Meetings made Treaſon. All Field Meetings were declar'd Treaſonable and Capital in the Preacher. The Landlords on whoſe Grounds they were held, were to be ſeverely fin'd, and all who were at them, to be be puniſh'd Arbitrarily. Half of the Parliament abhorr'd this Act, and the King himſelf ſaid, He wou'd never have paſs'd it, had he known it before-hand. In this miſerable State we muſt leave Scotland, but ſhall hardly find any other Part of the Britiſh Dominions in a better.

The Parliament of England. At laſt the Parliament of England cou'd ſee what every one elſe had ſeen long before them, and in March, preſented an Addreſs to the King, ſetting forth the Cauſes of the Growth of Popery, the great Number of Prieſts and Jeſuits frequenting the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, their Chapels and Convents in other Cities and Towns in England, their Schools, Books and Catechiſms, their enjoying beneficial Places, other Perſons acting in Truſt for them, &c. They then propos'd Againſt Papiſts. Remedies againſt theſe growing Miſchiefs, a Proclamation to baniſh all Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, a vigorous Execution of the Laws againſt Recuſants, a Check to be given to the great Reſort of the Engliſh to the Popiſh Chapels of Foreign Miniſters, not to admit them to any Employment, Civil and Military; an Order to apprehend one Plunket, who goes under the Name of Primate of Ireland, and one Peter Talbot, who takes on him the Name of Archbiſhop of Dublin. The Lords boggled a little at this Addreſs, when it was firſt ſent up to them, but came into it afterwards, and join'd with the Commons in preſenting it. His Majeſty after a gracious Anſwer, told them, he wou'd make a Difference between thoſe who had newly chang'd their Religion, and thoſe who had ſerv'd his Father and himſelf in the late Wars. It goes againſt the Grain to do any thing that gives good Catholicks Offence. However, a Proclamation did come out againſt Papiſts, and I wonder the Parliament ſhould ſo gravely mention ſuch a Thing, when not one Proclamation againſt them had been effectually executed, ſince this Royal Houſe reign'd in England. Dearly did they buy what was ſo little worth, the gracious Anſwer to the Addreſs againſt Papiſts, by a Subſidy Bill, an Exciſe Bill, a Law Bill, a Bill for Impoſition on foreign Commodities. Againſt the Subſidy Bill, the old Lord Lucas ſtood up, and made an honeſt old Engliſh Speech on the 22d of February, which being printed and publiſh'd, was order'd by the Miniſtry to be burnt by the Hands of the common Hang-man. This Speech being at large in the State Tracts, and Echard, I ſhall refer to it, only take what was ſaid upon it, at the Time it was burnt, out of anothor Author, " All true Engliſh Men were griev'd and aſtoniſh'd at the " Burning of it, but I dare affirm this barba- " rous Uſage did ſo little diſcourage my Lord " Lucas from doing his Duty, that he wou'd " have ſubmitted himſelf to the ſame Fate, if " his Death might have prevented theſe ap- " proaching Calamities, which have ſince been " ſo fatally deſtructive to this poor Kingdom; " but God has taken him from an ungrateful " Generation, and from the Evil to come, and " left us to lament the Loſs of ſo worthy a " Patriot. Who ſhall ſhew his Majeſty thoſe " dreadful Precipices, whereon French Fraud and " Popiſh Malice have plac'd us, from whence they " daily expect not only to ſee him fall, but to " daſh himſelf in Pieces? Who ſhall tell the Houſe " of Peers by what generous Steps their Anceſtors " aſcended to thoſe immortal Titles of Honour and " Renown? Who ſhall tell the Houſe of Com- " mons of their profuſe and laviſh Squandring " the Wealth and Liberties of this now weak " and periſhing, but once mighty, and invinci- " ble People?" He intends the Felicities of this felicitous Reign, which the Compleat Hiſtorian ſo dwells upon. The Exciſe Bill, the Law Bill, and the Subſidy Bill, only were computed at two Millions and an half. The ſtanding Revenue of the Crown was two Millions yearly; yet all this, and more, wou'd not pay for the Fleet one Summer, and anſwer the numberleſs prodigal Calls of the Court. The Duke of York too had 24,000 Pounds a Year given him this Seſſion, inſtead of the Wine Licenſes. The Bill for laying Impoſts on certain Foreign Commodities, paſs'd the Houſe of Commons, notwithſtanding the Oppoſition that was made to it by the London Merchants, who follow'd it to the Lords, and petition'd them againſt it, ſhewing the Inequality and Diſproportion of the Rates, and that it wou'd be an irreparable Prejudice to the Engliſh Plantations; upon which the Lords thought it abſolutely neceſſary to make ſome Alterations in the Bill, and ſent it back to the Commons, with their Reaſons for thoſe Alterations, which the Commons wou'd by no Means admit of, and it occaſion'd a long Controverſy, about the Right or no Right of the Lords to alter Money Bills; in which the Commons had ſo far the better of the Argument, that the King was forc'd to put an End to the Seſſion, as the ſureſt Way to cut the Knot which the Lords had ty'd; and on the 22d of April his Majeſty prorogu'd the Parliament to the 16th of the next April, almoſt a whole Year; after which it was prorogu'd again, and made a Receſs of twenty-one Months.

Lord Lucas's Speech burnt.

The King a Parliament Solicitor. In this Seſſion the noble Earl of Clare made a notable Speech on the King's coming ſo frequently to the Houſe of Peers, and ſitting without his Robes, to influence the moſt honourable Members of that Houſe, which was done ſometimes with ſo much Indecency,

A.D.1671 Indecency, that his Majeſty wou'd not ſtick to ſollicit for or againſt Bills, as one Lord does another.

On the 31ſt of March dy'd the Dutcheſs of York, after a long Indiſpoſition, in the 34th Year of her Age. She was interr'd in the Vault of Mary Queen of Scots, in Henry the VIIth's Chapel, in Weſtminſter-Abbey. It was obſerv'd that ſhe had not receiv'd the Sacrament in fourteen Months before the Time of her Deceaſe, and that ſhe was upon all Occaſions for excuſing the Errors which the Church of Rome was charg'd with, giving them the beſt Colours they were capable of. An unmarry'd Clergy was a common Topick with her. Biſhop Morley was her Father Confeſſor, ſhe having practis'd ſecret Confeſſion from the Time ſhe was twelve Years of Age. When Biſhop Morley preſs'd her to receive the Sacrament, ſhe pretended ill Health or Buſineſs, proteſting ſhe had no Scruples with relation to her Religion. Blandford, then Biſhop of Worceſter, was her Confeſſor after Morley was ſent from Court: She ſolemnly engag'd to Morley, that if ever ſhe had any Scruples, ſhe wou'd let him know them; and he proteſted to Biſhop Burnet, that to her Death ſhe never own'd to him ſhe had any Scruples, though ſhe was for ſome Days entertain'd by him at Farnham, after the Date of the Paper which was publiſh'd in her Name.

Biſhop Burnet writes, "All this paſs'd between Morley and me, upon the Duke's ſhewing me that Paper, all writ in her own Hand, which was afterwards publiſh'd by Maimbourg. He wou'd not let me take a Copy of it, but gave me Leave to read it, of which I gave Morley an Account immediately; and he concluded that that unhappy Princeſs had been prevail'd on to give Falſhoods under her Hand, and to pretend that what was contain'd in that Paper, were the Grounds of her Converſion. When ſhe was in the Agony of Death, Blandford was ſent for, but before he came, the Queen was come, and ſat by her. Blandford was ſo modeſt and humble, that he had not Preſence of Mind enough to begin Prayers, which probably wou'd have driven the Queen out of the Room: But that not being done, ſhe pretended Kindneſs, and wou'd not leave her. He happen'd to ſay, "I hope you continue ſtill in the Truth: Upon which ſhe ask'd, What is Truth? And then her Agony encreaſing, ſhe repeated the Word Truth, Truth, Truth, often; and, continues the Right Reverend Hiſtorian, in a few Minutes after ſhe dy'd, very little belov'd or lamented."

Dutcheſs of York dies, very little belov'd or lamented.

The long Letter her Father, the Earl of Clarendon, wrote her, when he heard of her wavering in her Religion, came not till after her Death. The Duke of York abjur'd the Proteſtant Religion about the ſame Time, and in that ſhew'd he had a little more Conſcience than his Brother, and was aſham'd, or afraid, of mocking God any longer.

Blood ſteals the Crown.

On the 9th of May, Major Blood, with two more, his Son, and one Perrot, attempted to ſteal the Crown, and Crown Jewels, in the Tower. Blood pretended Friendſhip to the Keeper, ſuddenly Gag'd the old Man, and when he cry'd out, ſtruck him on the Head, but wou'd not kill him, and ſo went off with the Crown. As ſoon as he and the two others were gone, the Keeper's Son comes in, ungags his Father, runs out after them, crying, Treaſon! Murder! Which giving the Alarm to the Warders and Centinels, Blood, his Son, and Perrot, were taken, and the Crown recover'd. It was a little batter'd, and ſome Stones miſſing, but they alſo were found, and brought back to the Tower. Blood diſguis'd himſelf in a Parſon's Gown, which gave occaſion to a Rhime which is too well known to be repeated here, tho' one may be provok'd to it, by the Eccleſiaſticks repreſenting Blood and his Company as ſo many Murtherers; for if they wou'd have knock'd the Keeper, Edwards, on the Head, they had infallibly carry'd the Crown away. 'Tis a long Hiſtory in Echard, from a notable Manuſcript of Sir Gilbert Talbot's, which being a Treaſure among ſo much Poverty, I will rob his Work of no more, but ſay what is not there. Blood was brought to the King, and expected Death; but he ſpoke ſo boldly, that, as my Author has it, all admir'd him. He told the King, Many of his Subjects were diſoblig'd, and that he himſelf was one, who took himſelf to be in a State of Hoſtility, and had not taken the Crown as a Thief, but as an Enemy, thinking that lawful which was lawful in a War; and that he cou'd many a time have had the King in his Power, but that he thought his Life was better for them than his Death, leſt a worſe ſucceed him; and that the Number of reſolute Men diſoblig'd was ſo great, that if his own Life was taken away, it wou'd be reveng'd. What a Myſtery does Echard make of the King's pardoning Blood, and his Accomplices? Why 'tis plain they were all frighted at Court, and thought it ſafer to bribe him than hang him: So, according to Echard, he had 500 Pounds a Year ſettled upon him in Ireland; but he wou'd not tell us 'twas in Conſideration of an Eſtate which had before been taken from him by the Duke of Ormond. For Blood told the King farther, "That "he intended no Harm to the Perſon of the Duke "of Ormond, but becauſe he had taken his Eſtate "from him, he wou'd have forc'd him to re"ſtore the Value in Money; and that he never "robb'd nor ſhed Blood, which if he wou'd have "done, he cou'd eaſily have kill'd Ormond, and "eaſily have carry'd away the Crown. My Author concludes thus, "In a Word, he ſo behav'd "himſelf, that the King did not only releaſe and "pardon him, but admitted him frequently to "his Preſence: Some ſay, becauſe his Gallantry took much with him, having been a Sol"dier of his Fathers." The Archdeacon, as honeſtly and ingeniouſly as one might expect from him, calls this Blood the Arch-Villain, and tells us, he pretended great Intereſt and Sway among the Diſſenters; and that the Cauſe of his engaging in a Plot to murder the King, was for his Majeſty's Severity over the Conſciences of the GODLY, in ſuppreſſing the Freedom of their Religious Aſſemblies. Though ſuch Wickedneſs as this meets not its Reward in this World, it will not fail of it in the next; and 'tis Pity ſuch a Thought as that had not reſtrain'd the Author. For to inſinuate that the Presbyterians were in Conſpiracy with Blood, not only to ſteal the Duke of Ormond, and the Crown, but to aſſaſſinate the King, adds Malignity to Uncharitableneſs, and is what I am really aſham'd to meet with in Engliſh Hiſtory. There is however ſome excellent Memoirs in his Annals of this Year, as theſe.

Solemnities.

Before the King undertook the War, he thought fit to celebrate ſome great Solemnities relating to the Garter, at his Palace of Windſor, where noble Preparations were made; and on the 23d of April, being the Feaſt of St. George, the King of Sweden was inſtall'd Knight of the Order by his Proxy the Earl of Carliſle, and the Elector of Saxony, by his Proxy the Earl of Winchelſea; and the Arms of the following defunct Knights were hung up, William Earl of Salisbury, Thomas Earl of Berkſhire, Algernon Earl of Northumberland, Thomas Earl of Southampton, Montagu Earl

A.D.1671 Earl of Lindſey, Edward Earl of Mancheſter, George Duke of Albemarle. Monk's Garter was given to Chriſtopher his Son, though Objections were made to the Genealogy in Weſtminſter-Hall about twenty Years after. The Feaſt being over, the King went to Portſmouth and the Iſle of Wight; from thence by Sea to Plymouth; thence back by Exeter and Wilton to Windſor and Whitehall; from thence again to Newmarket, Euſton-Hall, Yarmouth, and the City of Norwich, where he Knighted the Author of Religio Medici, Dr. Thomas Brown; thence to Sir John Hobart's at Blecking, Sir Robert Paſton's at Oxney; to Newmarket and Cambridge, where he Knighted Charles Cæſar, Son to Sir Henry Cæſar; thence back to Newmarket and London, where, on the Lord Mayor's Day, he and the Court were feaſted in the City; and he conferr'd the Honour of Knighthood on Jonathan Dawes and Robert Clayton, Eſquires, then Sheriffs: One of them, Sir Robert Clayton, treated the ſame Company in his Shrivalty; when the Duke of Buckingham, to whom Clayton was Scrivener, and who underſtood Gallantry as well as any Courtier in Chriſtendom, miſſing his Majeſty, made ſuch a Diſcovery as is fit for no Hiſtory but what is intended to be Secret.

Echard enlarges on theſe Solemnities, Journies, and Feaſtings, which are unworthy Hiſtorical Remembrance. If any thing of that Hand is met with in good Hiſtorians, it refers to great Princes and Conquerors, of whoſe Actions the curious Reader wou'd let not the leaſt eſcape him; but the Curioſity ceaſes when one finds nothing elſe of more Importance; and if a Prince does not appear concern'd for the Welfare of his People, none of them can have much Concern for his Pleaſures and Paſtimes. I can't help remembring
p. 285. what the Compleat Hiſtorian calls the State of Religion this Year.

Walter, Lord Biſhop of Oxford, was, on the 10th of June, at St. Mary Savoy, in the Preſence of all the Biſhops in Town, tranſlated to the See of Worceſter, and did Homage to his Majeſty in the uſual Forms, on June the 18th.

On June the 27th, for the Hiſtorian is extreamly exact in the Dates of theſe Religious Matters, Dr. Nathaniel Crew, Son to the Lord Crew, and Clerk of the Cloſet to his Majeſty, Biſhop elect of Oxford, and Dr. Thomas Wood, late Dean of Litchfield, Biſhop elect of Coventry and Litchfield, receiv'd their Confirmation at St. Mary Savoy; and on Sunday, July the 2d, were ſolemnly Conſecrated in the Chapel at Lambeth, by his Grace the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, aſſiſted by the Biſhops of London, Ely, Lincoln, Worceſter, and Rocheſter.

On Sunday, October the 1ſt, Dr. Henry Bridgeman, Dean of Cheſter, was in the Choir of that Cathedral Church conſecrated Biſhop of Sodor and Man, by the Lord Biſhop of Cheſter, as Subſtitute of his Grace the Archbiſhop of York, aſſiſted by the Biſhops of Bangor, St. Aſaph, and Clougher, in the Preſence of many Perſons of great Quality, who were afterwards very nobly entertain'd by the new Biſhop.

On February the 12th, upon the Vacancy of the Biſhoprick of Durham, upon the Death of Dr. John Coſens, Lord Biſhop and Count Palatine (this is what the Compleat Hiſtorian terms the State of Religion) his Majeſty was pleas'd to conſtitute Sir Gilbert Gerard, Knight and Baronet, to be High Sheriff of the ſame; as likewiſe to appoint Sir Francis Goodrick to be Temporal Chancellor, &c. There is more of this Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory in the ſame Paragraph, but I am not much edify'd by this; and fearing the Reader ſhou'd make the like Complaint, I have done with it. This will ſerve to ſhew what theſe Men underſtand by the State of Religion. The ſame Hiſtorian ſpeaking of the perſecuted Diſſenters, ſays, "They ſhou'd not have complain'd of Per- Compleat
"ſecution, without confeſſing the true Reaſons Hiſtory
"of it;" and then he continues eight or ten falſe.
Lines with true Reaſons, which has in them as much Falſity in Fact and Argument, as they cou'd well contain. I will quote him at large, that I may not be thought to have done him Injuſtice; and here let me obſerve, that when I animadverted on Echard's Hiſtory of England, my Deſign was at firſt to have taken in alſo the Compleat Hiſtory, with which I was well acquainted, having had a conſiderable Hand in the Publication of both of them, and having made my Objections to both with ſome Warmth before they were publiſh'd, as is well known to the Proprietors; but the Compleat Hiſtory was ſo incompleat, ſo immethodical, ſo mean in Matter and Stile, that I cou'd not think it worth Animadverſion, and I am drawn into ſo much of it now, by this Church Hiſtory: That concerning the Diſſenters follows immediately that concerning the State of Religion, and is thus; "The Laws had im-
"poſ'd moderate Penalties upon the Diſſenters:
"The two Houſes were expreſs for the Executi-
"on of thoſe Laws; the Biſhops and Clergy
"were ſincerely zealous in it, but the King and
"the Miniſtry were for ſtopping the legal Pro"ceedings againſt them, and were in the Secret
"of diſpenſing with the Laws Eccleſiaſtical and "Civil, for the ſake of indulging the Papiſts and
"the Nonconformiſts. This encouraged the Diſ-
"ſenters to defy the Laws, to which they wou'd
"moſt of them have ſubmitted, if they had found
"a ſteady and impartial Execution of them; and
"this again provok'd the honeſt Juſtices and Ma-
"giſtrates to bear the more hard upon them,
"when they ſaw them ſo bold in deſpiſing and
"evading the Juſtice of the Nation." There it is! the Page 286— and one may defy the moſt Bookiſh Man in Great Britain to match it. Dr. Calamy preſerves a Chriſtian Temper on this Occaſion, which it wou'd be happy for me, and all Men, if we cou'd imitate, and be calm amidſt ſuch a Tempeſt of Abuſe and Railing. He, ſays the Doctor, our excellent Hiſtorian, affirms the Laws impoſ'd but moderate Penalties upon Diſſenters, and that they defy'd the Juſtice of the Nation; which ſpeaking of them as a Body, and in general, as this compleat charitable Writer does, is notoriouſly falſe. Yet all that the Doctor adds upon it, is, He in effect juſtifies the Severities againſt them, and if this yields him Comfort upon a cool Reflection, I am far from envying him his Satisfaction. I begin with the moderate Penalties, and ſhall make uſe of an Author who wrote on the ſame Side with Atterbury, Sacheverel, &c. in Harley's Time, I mean the Review, he muſt have no other Name in Hiſtory; and in his Preface to Delaune's Plea, he has this Paſſage: I am ſorry to ſay Mr. Delaune is one of the 8000 Diſſenters that periſh'd in Priſon in the Days of that merciful Prince King Charles the Second, and that meerly for diſſenting from the Church in Points, which they cou'd give ſuch Reaſons for, as this Plea aſſigns; and for no other Cauſe were ſtifled (I had almoſt ſaid murder'd) in Goals, for their Religion, in the Days of theſe Gentlemens Power who pretend to abhor Perſecution. I ſhall in the next Place produce the Plea itſelf, where it ſpeaks of theſe Penalties, and the defying of the Juſtice of the Nation. "As p. 45.
"for the ſevere Penalties inflicted on Diſſenters,
"as Seditious and Riotous, for their aſſembling
"together to worſhip God, as though they there-
"by infring'd the Law, and violated the publick

A.D. 1671 " Peace, and for which they have within theſe " three Years ſuffer'd in their Eſtates and Trades " at leaſt two Millions, which by the way is twice as much as all the Biſhops Lands in England are worth at 20 Years Purchaſe, " contrary to the true " Intent and Meaning of thoſe Statutes, if the " Maxim of the Law be true, that the Intention Diſſenters great Suf-ferings. " makes the legal Treſpaſs, both as to Treaſon, " Felony, Murder, Riot, 23 Years Experience " evidences their quiet and peaceable Behaviour, " and that they have been as far from Sedition " and Riot, as the Law defines, as any in the " Nation." He then gives the Definition of a Riot out of the great Lawyer Lambert. I have a Cloud of Witneſſes againſt the Compleat Hiſtorian, which I am ready to produce, when it is thought neceſſary; but theſe two Evidences are, I think, ſufficient. He confeſſes the Biſhops and Biſhops and Clergy Perſecutors Clergy were zealous in perſecuting Proteſtant Diſſenters; but he ſhou'd have done Juſtice to thoſe Biſhops and Clergy who abhorr'd it; as Biſhop Wilkins, Biſhop Reynolds, Dr. Tillotſon, Dr. Whitchcot, Dr. Patrick, Dr. Grove, Dr. Fowler, &c. And it muſt here be remember'd, that in the Times of Whitgift, Bancroft and Laud, and now in Sheldon's Perſecution, the moſt pious, learned, wiſe and reverend Fathers, the Biſhops, and the moſt pious, wiſe and learned Divines of the Church of England, declar'd againſt theſe Unchriſtian like Severities, were always for Moderation, and as exemplary for Prudence, Temper and Charity, as for their Abilities, Learning and Piety; for which they have always been belov'd and eſteem'd as the Pillars and Glory of the Reformation. The Compleat Hiſtorian begs the Queſtion, and aſſerts, that if the Diſſenters had been perſecuted more, they wou'd have all come in. Does he mean, If they had periſh'd all, there had been none left to diſſent? And he commends the Juſtices of Peace, who hal'd the Reform'd Miniſters out of their Pulpits; ſuch as Philips, Sheldon, Steward, Starling, &c. for their Honeſty in ſo doing, tho' it is well known, that the Juſtices, Informers, Conſtables, and all Officers, who buſy'd themſelves in that infamous Buſineſs, were the moſt lewd, debauch'd, inſolent, deſpicable Wretches, pick'd out for doing Work which a truly honeſt Man wou'd have dy'd before he wou'd have conſented to. As to his Biſhops and Clergy, we will ſee an Account of them in Biſhop Burnet's Memoirs. " The King Bp. Burnet's Account of them. " himſelf was highly offended at the Behaviour " of the Biſhops: He took Occaſion to vent it at " the Council-Board. Upon the Complaints that " were made of ſome Diſorders, and of ſome " Conventicles," He ſaid, The Clergy were chiefly to blame for them; for if they had liv'd well, we might have read our ſelves blind before we ſhou'd have found they liv'd ill in ſuch Hiſtories as the Compleat one and Echard's. If they had gone about their Pariſhes and taken Pains to convince the Nonconformiſts, the Nation might by this Time have been well ſettled; but they thought of nothing but to get good Benefices, and to keep a good Table. Again, His Majeſty is ſtill ſpeaking, If the Clergy had done their Part, it had been an eaſy Thing to run down the Diſſenters; but they will do nothing, and will have me do every thing; and moſt of them do worſe than if they did nothing. I have a Chaplain who is a very honeſt Man, but a very great Blockhead, to whom I gave a Living in Suffolk, which was full of that ſort of People. He went about among them from Houſe to Houſe, tho' I can't imagine what he cou'd ſay to them, for he was a very ſilly Fellow; but I believe his Nonſenſe ſuited their Nonſenſe, for he brought them all to Church, and in Reward of his Diligence, I gave him a Biſhoprick in Ireland. This Chaplain one may ſuppoſe to be a pious, ſober Man, which explain'd according to this King's Way of living and thinking, muſt be Nonſenſe, and that Meeting with the Sobriety and Piety of the Suffolk Proteſtants, which was their Nonſenſe alſo, might produce the Harmony his Majeſty ſpeaks of. A.D. 1671

The Compleat Hiſtorian knew, at leaſt one ought to believe his Knowledge went ſo far, that the perſecuting Acts, the Laws Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, as he ſtiles them, were the Laws of a Set of Mercenary Penſioners, and ſo much againſt natural Juſtice, that the ſame Parliament vacated them, one only excepted, which, many think, deſerv'd vacating as much as the reſt, by their Bill for the Eaſe of Diſſenters. I do not reckon this a Digreſſion, as long as it is, becauſe my Deſign in this Undertaking was not ſo much to tell the Facts, as to tell the Cauſes and Intent of them, and to ſhew what Meaſures and what Inſtruments were made uſe of in theſe Reigns to deſtroy the true reform'd Religion, and the Liberty of the Subject, in theſe Nations. Among thoſe Inſtruments we ſhall find none more active than the perſecuting Biſhops and Clergy, whoſe Zeal is ſo highly recommended to us by the Author of the Compleat Hiſtory.

We have mention'd Mr. Coventry's Negotiation in Sweden. Sir George Downing was ſent to Holland to ſupply Sir William Temple's Place. The Lord Arlington ſtil'd him his Rough Hand, for his Manners were as rude as thoſe of an Iroquois, in whoſe Neighbourhood he was bred, and had all the Brutality without the Simplicity of thoſe American Savages. His Arrival at the Hague was the ſure Preſage of a Storm: He fell Downing ſent to bully the States. a bullying the States immediately about ſomething or nothing, as his thick Scull work'd him. He was to demand Satisfaction for Damages ſuſtain'd by the Eaſt-India Company ſince the Treaty of Breda. A Committee of that Com- Coke, 199. pany was ſent for to Whitehall to warrant that Demand by a Complaint; but they gave it under their Hands, that ſince the Treaty of Breda they knew none. The next Demand was Satisfaction for detaining the Engliſh Planters at Surinam. The Dutch reply'd, that thoſe Planters might go if they wou'd; but they knew not where elſe to get a Livelihood. A third Demand was Satisfaction The King's weak Demand of the Dutch. for certain Droll Pieces, as the King and Nell Gwin, Moll Davis and his Majeſty, a Purſe without a Penny in it, and the like; which the States General knew no more of, than Queen Anne did of the Printſeller's mounting her on a Dray-Horſe in a Half-Penny Picture. But the chief Demand of all was about the Honour of the Flag; for you muſt know, that the Royal Houſe of Stuart piqu'd themſelves in a marvellous Manner on their Standing up for the Honour of the Nation. This however wou'd have been made up in a Minute's Conference, if the King had not been ſet upon breaking the Treaty of Breda, the Triple League, and the Treaty of Aix; all which the French King had bought of him for 700,000 Pounds, to be paid to Mr. Chiſfinch for his Britanick Majeſty's Uſe. The Particular of the Flag is a very merry Incident, The merry Incident of the Flag. and is told by Sir William Temple in the following Letter to his Father Sir John Temple: " In " July the Dutch Fleet was floating in the " Channel, to ſhew, I ſuppoſe, that they were in " Condition to meet any of thoſe Dangers they " began to ſuſpect from the Motion of France, " and from our late Conduct. When the Captain " of the Yatch that was order'd to convey my " Wife over, took his Leave at Court, he had " publick Orders given him, if he came in Sight " of the Dutch Fleet, he ſhou'd ſail thro' them,

A.D.1671 " and ſhoot at thoſe Ships that were next him, " till he made them ſtrike Sail, or till they ſhot " at him again, and then purſue his Courſe. " He paſs'd, it ſeems, into Holland without ſee- " ing them; but as he return'd he met the Fleet, " and ſailing up to them, made ſeveral Shot at " thoſe near him; upon which they ſeem'd at " leaſt not to know what he meant, and to be- " lieve he might be in ſome Diſtreſs: And the " Admiral ſent a Boat a-board him to enquire. " The Captain told them he had been ſent to " bring back the Engliſh Ambaſſadreſs with her " Family from Holland, and had Orders to make " the Dutch Fleet ſtrike wherever he met with " them in the Channel. Upon this Meſſage by " the Boat, Vice-Admiral Ghent came a-board " the Yacht upon a Complement to my Wife, " which he perform'd very handſomely, and " afterwards deſir'd to ſpeak with the Captain, " of whom he enquir'd the Reaſon of his ſhoot- " ing, and receiving the ſame Anſwer which " had been given to the firſt Boat, He ſaid it " was a Point they had receiv'd no Order in " from their Maſters, and did not know how that " Affair was agreed been his Majeſty and the " States; but tho' it were ſettled, yet the Captain " cou'd not pretend the Fleet and Admiral ſhou'd " ſhrike to a Yacht, which was but a Pleaſure- " Boat, or at leaſt ſerv'd only for Paſſage, and " cou'd not paſs for one of the King's Men of War. " The Captain reply'd, He had his Orders, and " was bound to follow them. After Van Ghent " was gone, the Captain, perplex'd enough, " came to my Wife, and deſir'd to know what " ſhe pleas'd he ſhou'd do in that Caſe, which " ſhe ſaw he did not like very well, and wou'd " be glad to get out of by her Help. She told " him he knew his Orders beſt, and what he " was to do upon them, which ſhe left to him " to follow as he thought fit, without any Re- " gard to her and her Children. He purſu'd " his Courſe, and landed her ſafe; after which " ſhe went to Court, and was very well receiv'd, " and much commended for her Part in what " had paſs'd; and at Night Sir Lionel Jenkins " was ſent to take her Information in Form " upon the whole Matter of Fact. When I went " next to the King's Levee, he began to ſpeak " of my Wife's Carriage at Sea, and to commend " it as much as he blam'd the Captain's, and " ſaid ſhe had ſhew'd more Courage than he." Which I do not underſtand. Wherein did the Captain ſhew want of Courage, in not Fighting his Cockboat againſt the Dutch Admiral and 100 Sail of Men of War? " The King falling upon " the Dutch Inſolence, Sir William Temple ſaid, " That however Matters went, it muſt be con- " feſs'd that there was ſome Merit in his Fa- " mily, ſince he had made the Alliance with " Holland, and his Wife was like to have the " Honour of making the War. The King ſmil'd " as well as he, and it turn'd off the Diſcourſe to " ſomething elſe." Thus was Chriſtendom to be made a Scene of Slaughter and Blood out of Frolick in one Prince, and Ambition in another. The French King was not at much Trouble to draw up his Declaration of War; he only told the World he was diſſatisfy'd with the Dutch, and among other Things about Pictures too, probably that of his beloved Concubine, Madam Monteſpan, whom I have ſeen in a Dutch Print ſtraddling the Globe in a very indecent Poſture, aſſiſting Lewis to cut his Way through it. But many of the Perſons then living liv'd long enough to ſee his Prime Miniſter begging a Peace in their Maſter's Name, in a Corner of one of the Provinces which he had already conquer'd in Imagination.

A.D.1672 Secret League with France to enſlave England.

The Secret League between King Lewis and King Charles is as well atteſted as any Hiſtorical Event in ſeveral Authentick Memoirs; but the Obligation of it is beſt ſet forth in a Paper found in the Earl of Tyrconnel's Cloſet; which Paper is mention'd by his Grace Dr. King, Lord Archbiſhop of Dublin, in a Thankſgiving Sermon before the Lords Juſtices of Ireland, preach'd in St. Patrick's Church in Dublin upon the Reduction of that Kingdom. It bears Date the 1ſt of July, this Year 1671, and by it both Kings, Charles and Lewis, oblige themſelves to ſuppreſs the Inſolency of the Dutch, to eſtabliſh Popery in England, and make the King abſolute Maſter of his Subjects. My Lord Archbiſhop produces another Proof of it; the Count d'Avaux's Memorial to the States before the Revolution; as alſo a Letter written by Maloony, the Popiſh Biſhop of Killaloo in Ireland, to a Correſpondent of his, wherein he ſtates this to be the Deſign of the French King, and expreſſes great Anger, that ſome Trimmers about the King, then James, did diſown any ſuch Treaty with his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty. The learned Acherly writes of it thus: As to the Conſequences of the BREACH of the Triple League, " In regard that ſecret End of " that Breach, and of the Alliance with France " to ſubdue Holland, was to make King Charles " abſolute Maſter of the Parliament, the pleaſing " Acquiſition was in immediate View, by the " ſure Conqueſt of Holland; it was therefore fit " for the King to exerciſe, and he did exerciſe " ſome Acts of arbitrary Power, in order to inure " the People to bear the Form of his intended " new Government, which he experimented " thus;

Diſpenſing Power. He diſpens'd with all Penal Laws againſt Non-conformiſts.

139. Bp. Parker calls the King Robber. He ſhut up the Exchequer; and to uſe Biſhop Parker's own Words, He turn'd it into a Place of Robbery.

Exchequer ſhut up. He caus'd Writs to be ſent out for Elections of Members, to fill up vacant Places in the Houſe of Commons in the laſt Interval of Parliament, &c.

1672. On the 2d of January the King declar'd in Council, " That ſeeing all the neighbouring Pow- " ers and States were making great Preparations " for War both by Sea and Land, he, for the " Safety and Government of his People, look'd " upon himſelf as oblig'd to make ſuch Prepara- " tions as might be proportionable for the Pro- " tection both of the one and the other, and to " that End had given Orders for fitting and " preparing a very conſiderable Fleet againſt " next Spring; and conſidering the great Charges " that muſt attend ſuch Preparations, and not " finding any Poſſibility to defray ſuch unuſual " Expences by the uſual Ways and Means of " borrowing Money, by reaſon his Revenues " were ſo anticipated and engag'd, he was there- " fore neceſſitated, contrary to his own Inclina- " tions, upon theſe Emergencies, and for the " publick Safety, to cauſe a Stop at preſent to " be made of the Payment of any Monies now " being, or to be brought into his Exchequer, for " the Space of one Year, ending the laſt Day of " December next, unto any Perſon whatſoever, " excepting only ſuch Payments as ſhall grow due " upon Orders on the Subſidy, according to the " Act of Parliament, and Orders and Securities " upon the Fee-Farm Rents, but Payment of In- " tereſt to be duly made in the mean Time at " 6 per Cent. At the ſame Time the King de- " clar'd, that no Perſon whatſoever ſhall be de- " frauded of any thing that is juſtly due to him, " nor ſhall this Reſtraint continue longer than " the aforeſaid laſt Day of December.

The

A.D.1672 The Sum ſtopp'd by this Declaration was 1,400,000 Pounds; the Reſtraint was never taken off, and the Creditors were defrauded of every Farthing, which is an additional Proof to others given before, of his Majeſty's being, as he ſaid, a King of his Word. Mr. Baxter, who had 1000 Pounds in the Exchequer when it was ſhut up, tells us, The Murmur and Complaint in the City was very great, that their Eſtates ſhou'd be, as they call'd it, ſo ſurpriz'd, and the rather, becauſe they took a Year to be Perpetuity, and the Stop to be a Loſs of all, ſeeing Wars uſe to encreaſe Neceſſities, and not to ſupply them.

How this Matter came about was not known, till the Publication of the Third Volume of the Secret Hiſtory. I took that Account out of a Manuſcript, written by Sir Joſeph Tyley, the ſame whoſe Name is in the Proclamation about the pretended Presbyterian Plot at the latter End of this Reign. He went to Holland, came back to England with the Duke of Monmouth, made his Eſcape after Sedgmore Fight, return'd to Holland, and from thence came back again to England with the Prince of Orange, was choſen Citizen in Parliament for Exeter, in Oppoſition to Sir Edward Seymour in the Year 1695, and was ſoon after Knighted by King William. He had great Acquaintance with the leading Men of the Country Party in this and the following Reign, till his Death, which I ſpeak for the Credit of his Memoirs, wherein I found as follows;

His Majeſty, in a private Meeting with the Cabal, declar'd, If any one of them cou'd adviſe a Method how to raiſe 1,500,000 Pounds without a Parliament, he ſhou'd have the White Staff. The next Day the Lord Aſhley told Sir Thomas Clifford in Confidence, There was a Way to ſupply the King immediately with ſuch a Sum, but that it was hazardous to be put in Practice, and might draw with it a Train of ill Conſequences, by enflaming both the Parliament and People. Sir Thomas was impatient to know the Secret; he was bold and daring, entirely in the French and Popiſh Intereſt, pleas'd with every thing that might render the King uneaſy with Parliaments, to engage him the cloſer with France and Rome, which made him eager to know my Lord Aſhley's Project. He ply'd my Lord with Viſits, and having one Night drank him to a Pitch, he inſenſibly led him into a Converſation of the King's Neceſſities; and Lord Aſhley being warm, dropp'd the important Secret. Sir Thomas took the Hint immediately, left my Lord as ſoon as he handſomely cou'd, went directly to Whitehall, and without going to Bed attended till the King roſe, fell on his Knees, and demanded the White Staff, according to his Promiſe. His Majeſty reply'd, God's-fiſh! I'll be as good as my Word, if you can find the Money. Then Sir Thomas told him, If you will ſhut up the Exchequer, you may be ſure of 1,500,000 Pounds. The King, who was as quick as any of his Miniſters, and had a Conſcience of pretty much the ſame Turn, gave into it preſently, and Sir Thomas Clifford was made Lord High Treaſurer, and a Peer. Lord Aſhley was ſenſibly touch'd at being thus circumvented by Lord Clifford; but the Thing was done, and he put the beſt Face he cou'd on it, ſaying, Clifford has plough'd with my Heifer.

Clifford too hard for Aſhley.

He is made Lord Treaſurer.

The Propoſal for ſhutting up the Exchequer was made in Council by Sir Thomas Clifford, who ſaid, The King muſt have Money to carry on the War againſt Holland, in which his Honour was engag'd, that he knew no other Means at preſent than ſhutting up the Exchequer; and he deſir'd none wou'd ſpeak againſt it, without propoſing ſome Method more certain and expeditious: To which there was no Reply. So the Exchequer was ſhut up by Force of the Prerogative, to the Surprize of the whole Kingdom, attended with the Tears and Lamentations of the many unfortunate Families concern'd in it, who found themſelves ruin'd in a Moment. A.D.1672 Thouſands of People ruin'd in a Moment.

The Earl of Arlington writing to the Earl of Sunderland, then Ambaſſador in Spain, ſpeaks of it thus; His Majeſty has reſolv'd this Week in Council to reſume his Aſſignations; a Courtly Term for what Biſhop Parker calls Robbery, and poſſeſs himſelf with all his current Revenue; which was not his, but the Merchants, Bankers, and other Mens, who had lent their Money to him, poſtponing their Debts for a Twelve Month, and paying only 6 per Cent. of what thereof was taken up at Intereſt. This hath made a great Outcry in the City, and meeting with ill Humours, not to ſubmit patiently to the Oppreſſion and Tyranny of an ill Government is an ill Humour with them, hath begot a great deal of angry Diſcourſe; but we hope, when thoſe who have lent the Bankers Money, ſhall reflect better upon it, and ſee their Principle and Intereſt better ſecur'd. The Effrontery and Inſolence! They never had a Penny of the Money from the Stuart Line, and it was better ſecur'd, was it not, in the King's Word, than the Law of the Land? That they will appeaſe themſelves, and have no Cauſe to apprehend thoſe ill Conſequences they have foretold upon it: All which the Man that ſays it knew very well wou'd happen. He tells his Correſpondent, the Money will be all paid in a Twelve Month, which is not all paid to this Day. He adds, His Majeſty having Yeſterday conven'd the Bankers before him at the Treaſury, after many kind and confident Aſſurances given them, not one of which was ever perform'd, that he wou'd punctually ſatisfy his Debt to them, either out of what the Parliament ſhou'd give in the next Seſſion, or out of his own Revenue, which was appropriated to more gallant Uſes, he told them, what follows is as merry as Abſurdity can make a Thing, he requir'd of them, that without Delay they take off the Stop they had made of paying the Merchants their current Caſh, which lay depoſited in their Hands, not to be lent to his Occaſions, or for Intereſt, but for the Security of keeping it, becauſe indeed the Stop of this had occaſion'd great Clamour. The King keeps their Money from them, and then commands them to pay thoſe to whom they owe it. His Majeſty knew better what Goldſmiths receiv'd current Caſh for, than to think it was only to lock it up in an Iron Cheſt, and tell it out again to the Merchants and others as they wanted it.

Echard has made ſome Uſe of Sir Joſeph Tyley's Memoirs, and particularly where the Shutting up of the Exchequer is ſpoken of, which he alſo ſaw in the Secret Hiſtory, and alſo what follows, which is likewiſe to be ſeen in the State Tracts. The Treaſurer Clifford was the moſt deeply engag'd of any of the Miniſters in the Secret Alliance with France; and tho' the Archdeacon's, and the Compleat Hiſtorian's Rage againſt this Miniſtry, is very remarkable, yet it is not to be imputed to them as a Diſguſt for theſe ruinous Meaſures; not for ſhutting up the Exchequer, but for opening Proteſtant Meeting-Houſes; not for ſtopping Payments, but for ſtopping Perſecution, tho' the Miniſtry came into that upon different Views, as will be ſeen in its Courſe. Lord Clifford's View was well known to every body; he was a Papiſt, tho' he durſt not yet own it, he was zealous for Popery, and one who wou'd not ſtick at any thing to promote its Intereſts. It happen'd, while he had the Staff, that the King, the Duke of York, and himſelf, were ſhut up in a Room

A.D.1672 by themſelves, when Sir William Bucknall, a Commiſſioner of the Exciſe, came to ſpeak with the King, to whom he had free Acceſs, he frequently accommodating his Majeſty with Money. In Preſumption of his uſual Liberty, he went directly to the Room where he heard the King was, and hearing a Diſcourſe, had the Curioſity to get up cloſe to the Door, and hearken to it attentively, which he was excited to do by the King's ſpeaking with ſome Earneſtneſs, but he cou'd only hear broken and imperfect Expreſſions: The Duke ſpoke ſo low, he cou'd not underſtand what was ſaid, but Clifford ſpoke loud, as in Publick, anſwering the King in a very audible and articulate Manner, in theſe Words, Sir, If you are driven off upon Fears, you will never be ſafe, the Work will do, if you declare your ſelf with Reſolution, there is enough to ſtand by you; the King reply'd, this Name Popery will never be ſwallow'd by the People; which having ſaid, he ſtarted from his Seat, crying, ſomebody is at the Door. Clifford ran haſtily to it, and without ſpeaking a Word, fell furiouſly upon Sir William Bucknall, dragging him to a Pair of Stairs, from whence he kick'd him down, and ſoon after Sir William dy'd, which was not improbably, imputed to that Misfortune.

Clifford adviſes the ſetting up Popery.

Sir William Bucknall beaten by Clifford.

If we remember what is told us of the Conduct of Lauderdale, Rothes and others in the Murder of Mitchel at Edinburgh, and join it with the Conduct of the Court and Miniſtry at London, We muſt ſink into the Dregs of Language to find Words to expreſs our Sentiments; a Man is there murther'd, thouſands are here robb'd by a Conſpiracy of the Government, the Crimes of Malefactors receive a Sort of horrid Sanction by the Crimes of Miniſters. —— There is nothing in Hiſtory to compare to it.——

Prodigious Tyranny.

Mr. Marvel, in his Growth of Popery, ſets theſe Things in a good Light, which he was well able to do from his Knowledge of Men and Affairs, being an active Member of this Houſe of Commons. Having ſpoken of the Robbery at the Exchequer, he proceeds to the Attempt to rob the Dutch Smyrna Fleet. There remain'd nothing now but that the Conſpirators after this Exploit upon our own Country-men, ſhould manifeſt their Impartiality to Foreigners, and avoid on both Sides the Reproach of Injuſtice, by their Equality in the Diſtribution. They had now ſtarted the Diſpute about the Flag, upon the Occaſion of the Yatch, and begun the Diſpute of Surinam, and ſomewhat of Pictures and Medals, but they handled theſe Matters ſo nicely, as Men not leſs afraid of receiving all Satisfaction therein from the Hollanders, than of giving them any Umbrage of arming againſt them upon thoſe Pretences. The Dutch therefore not being conſcious to themſelves of any Provocation given to England, but of their Readineſs, if there had been any to repair it, and relying upon that Faith of Treaties and Alliances, which has been thought ſufficient Security, not only among Chriſtians, but even with Infidels, purſu'd their Traffick and Navigation thro' our Seas, and accordingly a great and rich Fleet of Merchant Men from Smyrna and Spain, were on there Voyage homeward, near the Iſle of Wight, &c. All the Excuſe Echard makes for this felonious Attempt againſt thoſe Merchant Ships, before a War declar'd, is, that the King was adviſ'd to it by the French, and brings Sir Holms into Action as if he had been a Hero, not a Felon, as if he was going to Fight, and not to Steal. The ſofteſt Term that can be us'd for that Incendiary, is Sea-Wolf that preys by ſtealth, and dives in Danger. However, it muſt be own'd that this Government knew what Tools were fit for their Work, and were never in want of any, to the Scandal of the Engliſh Honeſty and Reputation. I will again make uſe of Marvel. "The Dutch were under a ſmall Convoy of five or ſix of their Men of War; the "Smyrna Fleet was that, in Contemplation of "which, the Conſpirators had ſo long deferr'd "the War to plunder in Peace; the Wealth of "this was that, which by its Weight turn'd the "Ballance of all publick Juſtice and Honour. "With this Treaſure they imagin'd themſelves "in Stock for all the Wickedneſs of which they "were capable, and that they ſhould never after "this Addition ſtand in need again, or fear of "a Parliament; therefore they had with great "Stillneſs and Expedition, equipp'd early in the "Year, ſo many of the King's Ships, as might "without Jealouſy of the Numbers, yet be of "competent Strength for the intended Action;" but if any thing ſhou'd chance to be wanting, they thought it abundantly ſupply'd by the Virtue of the Commander, for Sir Robert Holms had with the like Number of Ships in the Year 1661, the very next Year after the States had ſquander'd away between two and three hundred thouſands Crowns, in entertaining the King and his Brothers, ſo timely commenc'd the firſt Hoſtility againſt Holland, ſeizing upon Cape de Verde, and other of the Dutch Forts, on the Coaſts of Guinea, in Time of Peace, and the whole new Netherlands, with great Succeſs, in Defence of which Conqueſts the Engliſh undertook in 1665, the firſt War againſt Holland. Clarendon, Monk, Nicholas, Turner, &c. were then chief Men in both Houſes of Parliament, active in the Perſecuting Bills, and becauſe they were ſo good Church Men, in the Opinion of the Compleat Hiſtorians, therefore do they belie all Hiſtory, and ſay as the Archdeacon does of De Ruyter, by taking Cape de Verde, and the Forts in Guinea, which the Engliſh Buccaneer Holms had before taken from the Dutch, in Time of Alliance and Friendſhip, He ingloriouſly began a Pyratick War under the ſacred Bands of Friendſhip and Alliance. And if ever Pyratick War was begun, it was now in the ſecond Pyratical Enterprize of Holms againſt the Dutch Streights, and Smyrna Fleets. Marvel proceeds, Holmes's Piracies.

Holmes in the firſt War, with a proportionable Squadron, ſignaliz'd himſelf by burning the Dutch Ships and Village of Brandaris at Schelling. Echard exults upon that Conqueſt, and in Amplification of Holmes's Glory, as he calls it, turns the Village into a City. But continues Marvel, That was unfortunately reveng'd upon us at Chatham, for theſe good Reaſons, Holmes was pitch'd upon, as the Perſon for underſtanding Experience, and Courage fitteſt for a Deſign of this Nature, and upon the 14th of March, as the Dutch ſail'd on to the Number of 72 Veſſels, near our Coaſt, he fell upon them with his accuſtom'd Bravery, and cou'd not have fail'd of giving a good Account of them, wou'd he have join'd Fortunes with Sir Edward Sprague, who was in ſight at the ſame Time with his Squadron, and Captain Legg was making all the Sail he cou'd towards him, to acquaint Sprague with the Deſign of falling upon the Dutch Merchant Men, but Holmes, who was his Admiral, call'd him back by a Gun, which gave Occaſion to various Speculations. The moſt probable is, that he thought himſelf ſure of Victory, and the Spoil. Sprague came then from Algiers, and had kept Company with the Dutch Fleet, 'till they advanc'd near the Iſle of Wight. By this Means Sprague knew nothing of the Secret, and the Dutch Convoy, and their Merchant Men did ſo beſtir themſelves, that Holmes, tho' he ſhifted his Ship, fell foul on his beſt Friends, and did all that was poſſible, Dutch Smyrna Fleet ſurpriz'd.

A.D.1672 unleſs he cou'd have multiply'd himſelf, was forc'd to give it over, and all the Prize that was gotten, ſuffic'd not to pay the Surgeons and Carpenters. Holmes was one of the Penſioners in this Parliament, and cou'd very eaſily prove, that he had never given one Vote in Favour of the Proteſtant Religion, or Engliſh Liberty, but a conſtant Vote for Archbiſhop Sheldon's ſtinging Acts, and therefore the Archdeacon does not let him come off quite ſo ſhamefully. He took one Man of War, and four Merchant Ships, one of which from Smyrna, wou'd pay more Carpenters and Surgeons, than his Fleet cou'd find Employment for. Two Days after was publiſh'd his Majeſty's Declaration of Indulgence, Declaration of Indulgence.

An Account of which Declaration, Echard might have taken out of Marvel, Baxter, Calamy, or even out of the Compleat Hiſtory of England, with good Authority; inſtead of which, he has Recourſe to the moſt Lying Memoirs that ever were publiſh'd, thoſe of Orleans, the French Jeſuit, and he introduces them with this notable Encomium, He ſeems to have had from King James a clearer Information of this Affair, than the common Engliſh Writers. I am ſure to have my Place among thoſe Common Writers in his marſhalling of us; but as never Hiſtory was more proſtituted to a Faction, than his own, and never Hiſtory ſtuff'd with ſuch pitiful Matter and idle Remarks, we may all comfort ourſelves with the Hopes, that the Diſgrace he has laid upon us, will laſt no longer than his Chronicle. It happens, I have by me a clearer Account, than his cleareſt Account from the French Prieſt, and mine is taken from one of the common Writers, Mr. Locke, that Gentleman had it from the Earl of Shaftsbury, who knew more of the Matter, even than King James, and is ſuppos'd to be the Des Maiz. Col. p. 67. & Seq.

Pen-man of the Declaration. Thus, Sir, ſays Mr. Locke, You have perhaps a better Account of the Declaration, than you can receive from any other Hand, and I cou'd have wiſh'd the Indulgence a longer Continuance, and a better Reception than it had, for the Biſhops Sheldon, Morley, Gunning, Wood, Sparrow, Henchman, Dolben, Ward, Blandford, Stern, Rainbow, I name them in full Belief that their Names ought never to be forgotten, took ſo great Offence at it, that they gave the Alarm of Popery thro' the whole Nation, and by their Emiſſaries the Clergy, who by the Contexture and Subordination of their Government, have the Advantage of a quick Diſpenſing of their Orders, and a ſudden and univerſal Inſinuation of whatever they pleaſe, rais'd ſuch a Cry, that thoſe good and ſober Men, who had really fear'd the Encreaſe and Countenance Popery had hitherto receiv'd, began to believe the Biſhops were in Earneſt, their Eyes open'd, and therefore join'd in heartily with them. The Lord-Shaftſbury for Toleration.

Lord Shaftsbury explaining the Advantages of this Declaration to Mr. Locke, has theſe Expreſſions; As to the Church, I conceive the Declaration is extreamly for their Intereſt; for the narrow Bottom they have plac'd themſelves upon, and the Meaſure they have proceeded by, ſo contrary to the Properties and Liberties of the Nation, muſt needs in a ſhort Time prove fatal to them, whereas this leads them into another Way to live peaceably with the diſſenting and differing Proteſtants, both at home and abroad. Such Politicks as theſe never enter'd into the Heads of Laud, Sheldon, Mortey, &c. Did they, or does Mr. Archdeacon believe that their Severities to Non-conformiſts, plac'd them on a Narrow Bottom, or that their Meaſures were againſt the Properties and Liberties of the Nation?

The Earl of Shaftsbury was a Promoter of the Toleration, but not the main Mover in it; Lord Clifford had more Intereſt at Court, and by means of the Duke of York, cou'd do much more with the King than Shaftsbury, whom neither the King nor the Duke lov'd. Baxter tells us, the Toleration was chiefly for the Papiſts Sakes, and one may be aſſur'd, that Clifford had the chief Hand in it. For when the Declaration was publiſh'd, the Proteſtant Diſſenters were ſo far from taking hold of it greedily, that it was a Queſtion among them, Whether it was adviſeable, either in Conſcience or Prudence for the Presbyterians to take Advantage from his Majeſty's Declaration? and a reverend Prelate in a Speech about the Occaſional Bill 1703, told the Lords, it was the Lord Clifford, who got a Motion to be made in Favour of the Non-conformiſts, hoping that wou'd have provok'd either the one Side or the other, and that either the Church Party might be offended with the Motion, or the Diſſenters with the refuſing it. But it was ſtopp'd by Alderman Love, one of the Citizens in Parliament for the City of London, who was a Diſſenter, and deſir'd that nothing with Relation to them might intervene to ſtop the Security the Nation and the Proteſtant Religion might have by the Teſt Act; and in this he was ſeconded by moſt of his Party, ſo that the Act was obtain'd in ſome Meaſure by their Aſſiſtance, and inſtead of the Earl of Shaftſbury's propoſing the Tolelation, as the Jeſuit Orleans very falſly affirms, the Lord Clifford propos'd it, as Mr. Locke informs us. This Dominion continu'd unto them until the Lord Clifford, a Man of a daring ambitious Spirit, made his Way to the chief Miniſtry of Affairs by other and far different Meaſures, and took the Opportunity of a War with Holland, the King was then engag'd in, to propoſe the Declaration of Indulgence, and the Earl of Shafsbury preſently clos'd with it. Echard had an idle Imagination, that becauſe King James told Orleans, what he tells us, therefore we wou'd, as he does, give implicite Faith to it. We have prov'd it to be diametrically oppoſite to the Truth, and yet this is what he fooliſhly and pragmatically calls a clear Account, not in the Common Writers.

Declaration of War with the Dutch.

Two Days after the Publication of the Indulgence came out, the Declaration of the War with Holland, grounded upon the notable Reaſon before-mention'd; the Flag, which the Dutch offer'd to yield up; the Surinam Planters, who ſtaid there becauſe they cou'd live no where elſe; the Pictures and Medals, which the States knew no more of than the Man in the Moon.

The moſt admirable Part of the Declaration was the winding it up. And whereas we are engag'd by a Treaty to ſupport the Peace made at Aix la Chapelle, we do finally declare, that notwithſtanding the Proſecution of this War, we will maintain the true Intent and Scope of the ſaid Treaty; which is as good wild Iriſh as ever was put into Print. Notwithſtanding I am going to cut your Throat, I am your moſt faithful and loving Friend. Again, and that in all Alliances which we have or ſhall make in the Progreſs of this War, we have and will take Care to preſerve the Ends thereof inviolable; which is as brazen a Bull as was that of Phalaris. He has made a Treaty with the French King to deſtroy the States, and take their Country from them; and yet according to this Declaration, he has taken care in that very Treaty, to preſerve the Peace of Aix la Chapelle inviolable. This Bundle of Nonſenſe is entire in Mr. Archdeacon's Collections.

The Dutch, who knew that the Bent of the Nation was againſt this Rupture, fed themſelves all along with Hopes that the Miniſtry durſt not take this bold Step; and when De Wit receiv'd a certain Account of it in a Letter from England,

A D.1672 he fell back upon his Chair almoſt in a Swoon; but preſently recovering himſelf, he encourag'd the States to make all neceſſary Preparations. It muſt be own'd, ſays Echard, the Dutch had been too inflexible in anſwering the Demands of the Engliſh, as to the Flag; which is as falſe as the reſt of his Chronicle. Marvel tells it thus: The pretended Cauſe was the not having vail'd the Bonnet to the Engliſh Yatch; though the Dutch had all along, both at Home and here, as carefully endeavour'd to give, as the Engliſh Miniſters to avoid, the receiving of all Satisfaction, or letting them underſtand what wou'd do it; nay, the Council Clock was on purpoſe ſet forward, leſt their utmoſt Compliance in the Flag at the Hour appointed, ſhou'd prevent the Declaration of War by ſome Minutes. Yet does Echard, with as much Preſumption as Gravity aſſert, It muſt be own'd the Dutch were too inflexible, &c. Another Pretence was intended, if the Intention had ſucceeded, Colonel Joyce, he who when Cornet took the King from Holmby, living in Holland, Orders were ſent to Downing to demand him; that if the States refus'd it, the Quarrel might be founded upon it, and if they granted it, the Common-wealth Party might be diſguſted: But the States were too wiſe to be caught by our Miniſters, they order'd a Warrant for ſeizing Joyce, and at the ſame time caus'd it to be intimated to the Officer, that he ſhou'd let him make his Eſcape. The States, in this Extremity, apply'd the beſt Remedy they had to their Diſeaſe, and preſented the Prince of Orange with the Command of their Armies, and with the Title of Admiral of the United Provinces, out of which he had been kept by the Intrigues of the Louveſtein Faction, whoſe Head was De Wit, from his Majority to the two and twentieth Year of his Age. About the ſame time, in April this Year, King Charles ſent 6000 choice Foot, under the Command of the Duke of Monmouth, into Flanders, to join the French Army, and aſſiſt in the intended Conqueſt of Holland.

Arbitrary Meaſures. Beſides the ſtretching of the Prerogative in the Exchequer Buſineſs, and the Toleration, the King ſuſpended two Acts of Parliament, the Act of Navigation, and the Act for Encouragement of Trade, the Cabal affecting thoſe Meaſures which ſerv'd to make his Majeſty a great King, as their Cant was, as if Power wou'd make a Prince Great, which was not of his own acquiring, and which he had no more Genius to maintain, than he had to acquire in an honourable Way.

The Archdeacon affirms, that to make himſelf popular, the King took Henry Marqueſs of Worceſter into his Privy Council; the ſame Marqueſs whom the People, by their Repreſentatives, ſome time after addreſs'd him to remove from his Counſels, and George Viſcount Hallifax, againſt whom was the like Addreſs, and Thomas Viſcount Falconbridge, Oliver's Son in Law, and Arthur Earl of Eſſex, the Lord Capel's Son, and Sir Thomas Osborn, afterwards Earl of Danby and Duke of Leeds, who ran the Gauntlet through two Parliamentary Impeachments. Sir Thomas Clifford was created Baron Clifford of Chudleigh, Henry Lord Arlington, Earl of Arlington, John Earl of Lauderdale, Duke of Lauderdale. The King alſo made ſeveral Knights of the Garter, as John Duke of Lauderdale, Henry Marqueſs of Worceſter, the Earl of St. Albans, the Earl of Bedford, the Earl of Arlington, and the Earl of Oſſory.

The Duke of York took upon him the agreeable Command of the Fleet: The Count d'Eſtreet, Vice-Admiral of France, commanded the White Squadron; and Montagu, Earl of Sandwich, the Blue Squadron; the Red being immediately under his Royal Highneſs. The War being as Inglorious as Unrighteous, I take no Pleaſure in the Detail of it, as Echard does, becauſe the Duke has the Command of it. I ſhall content my ſelf with Biſhop Burnet's Account of the Souldbay Fight. Fleets. A.D.1672

De Ruyter had the Glory of ſurpriſing the Engliſh Fleet, when they were thinking leſs of engaging the Enemy, than of an extravagant Preparation for the uſual Diſorders of the Twenty-ninth of May; a Feſtival which has produc'd as much Wickedneſs, as another Statute Holiday has Miſchief. Which Diſorders De Ruyter prevented, by engaging them the 28th of May, in one of the moſt obſtinate Sea-Fights that has happen'd in our Age; in which the French took more Care of themſelves than became gallant Men, unleſs they had Orders to look on, and leave the Engliſh and Dutch to fight it out, while they preſerv'd the Force of France entire. De Ruyter diſabled the Ship in which the Duke was, whom ſome blam'd for leaving his Ship too ſoon; but Mr. Archdeacon informs us, He left her with gread Intrepidity, very much like the French running away at Blenheim like Lions. Then, ſays Biſhop Burnet, the Duke's Perſonal Courage began firſt to be call'd in queſtion. One wou'd think theſe Hiſtory Writers affected Falſhood out of a meer Spirit of Oppoſition, or rather, out of meer Hatred to Truth. The Admiral of the Blue Squadron was burnt by a Fire-ſhip, after a long Engagement with a Dutch Ship, much inferior to her in Strength: In it the Earl of Sandwich periſh'd, with a great many about him, who wou'd not leave him, as he wou'd not leave his Ship, by a piece of obſtinate Courage, to which he was provok'd by an indecent Reflection the Duke made, on an Advice he had offer'd of drawing nearer the Shoar, and avoiding an Engagement; as if in that he took more Care of himſelf, than of the King's Honour. The Fight continu'd from eight in the Morning till Sun-ſet; and when it was over, the French, according to Ludlow, ſet Sail for Breſt, and the Engliſh retir'd into Port, leaving the Dutch Maſters at Sea; and according to Echard, The Dutch ſtood off, and the Duke ſailing after, got the Appearance of a Victory. He is never without a Laurel for that dear Popiſh Duke of his.

Of the Dutch were KILL'D,

The Admiral of Amſterdam, the Vice-Admiral of Zealand, Capt. Brakes, and three of Cornelius de Wit's Halberdiers near his Perſon. He had the joint Command of the Fleet with De Ruyter, and ſat on the Deck in a Chair, dreſs'd like a Magiſtrate, with a drawn Sword in his Hand, giving his Commands, with twelve Halberdiers about him for his Guard.

The

*A.D.*1672 The States of Holland well knowing that the Alliance between the Engliſh Court and the French was not at all pleaſing to the People of England, Dutch Declaration. publiſh'd a Declaration, to ſhew that they had been conſtrain'd to make War againſt the King, and his private Council, who had deſign'd and endeavour'd to deprive them of their Commerce and Liberty, and to render the Crown of England Abſolute and Independent. But that they were ready to conſent, that the People of England might trade freely, either with them or others, they diſcharg'd and ſet at Liberty ſuch Ships, Men, and Merchandize, belonging to the Engliſh Nation, as they had ſeiz'd in their Ports, in requital of the Attempt made by that Arch-Pirate Holmes, to ſurprize their Homeward bound Smyrna Fleet, before any Declaration of War had been publiſh'd againſt them. Theſe things oblig'd the King to promiſe Reſtitution of what had been unjuſtly taken from the Dutch before the Date of the ſaid Declaration; but whatever Advantages the Dutch might have by Sea, they were infinitely over-balanc'd by their Loſſes at Land.

French Conqueſts in Holland. Lewis XIV. having drawn together 120,000 effective Men, divided them into three Bodies; the Firſt conſiſting of 70,000, he took under his own peculiar Command; at the Head of the Second, which was of 40,000, he plac'd the Prince of Conde; and gave 10,000 more to the Count de Chamilly, to ſerve as a flying Camp. All theſe Forces directing their March towards Maeſtricht, a Council of War was held in the King's Quarters, and a Debate ariſing about beſieging that Place, it was adjudg'd to be an Enterprize ſo full of Hazard and Difficulty, by reaſon of the numerous Garriſon and good Fortifications about the Town, that they reſolv'd to turn their March towards the Rhine, where the Places were not in ſo good Condition; yet it was thought convenient to leave Chamilly near Tongeren, to prevent the Excurſion of the Garriſon of Maeſtricht, which was done. The two Armies, commanded by the King and Prince of Conde, march'd ſeveral Days without ſeeing an Enemy, except only about two hundred Men, who had entrench'd themſelves on the Side of the Rhine, and render'd themſelves Priſoners after little Reſiſtance: From thence the Prince of Conde was ſent to beſiege Weſel, whilſt the King beſieg'd Orſoy, and the Mareſchal Turenne, Burich. Theſe three Sieges being undertaken at the ſame time, caus'd a general Alarum; but when they ſaw that Orſoy had hardly held out twenty-four Hours, and Burich and Weſel not much longer, the Conſternation greatly encreas'd. The Governor of Weſel, which was accounted a ſtrong Place, was ſentenc'd to loſe his Head; but having Friends in the Government, the Executioner was order'd only to paſs the Sword over him. The Count D'Eſtrades was made Governor of Weſel; Reez, Emerick, Beavize, and Dedekom follow'd the Example; and an Iriſhman, who commanded in Rhynberg, deliver'd the Town without a Shot, and loſt his Head for his Cowardice. The French King reſolving to paſs the Rhine, was inform'd by a Dutch Traitor of a Place where the Water was low, and the Paſſage ſafe; which being try'd, and found to be true, this invincible Conqueror expreſs'd himſelf to rejoice greatly in that Opportunity to ſhew his Intrepidity. The Dutch Officer who was poſted there abandon'd his Poſt; but General Wurtz advancing, by command of the Prince of Orange, with a good Force to defend it, the French King rais'd Batteries, which ſo gall'd Wurtz's Troops, that they were forc'd to ſhelter themſelves in the They paſs the Rhine. Woods. Part of a French Regiment of Horſe paſs'd the River firſt, but was driven back into it again by Wurtz. The French being well ſeconded, they ſoon became ſtrong enough to make good their Ground, and put the Dutch Cavalry to flight. In this Paſſage the Duke of Longueville, the Prince of Conde's Nephew, was kill'd, and the Prince himſelf wounded by a Muſket Ball. This is the Paſſage of the Rhine, the Subject of ſo much French Poetry; wherein the French King makes a Figure equal to Alexander and Cæſar, or rather equal to both of them; as if all, ſays Biſhop Burnet, had been animated by his Preſence, though he was viewing it at a very ſafe Diſtance. After this the French took the Caſtle of Tolhuys, and laid a Bridge of Boats over the Rhine; which ſo terrify'd the Dutch, that they abandon'd all their Entrenchments. The King re-paſſing the Rhine, reſolv'd to paſs the Yſſel, and was not a little ſurpriz'd to find the Paſſage ſo eaſy. Having taken Doesbourg, Deputies arriv'd in his Camp from Utretcht, offering to deliver up their Town. The Duke of Orleans took Zutphen and Gueldre, and the King himſelf advanc'd to Utretcht, having ſent Rochefort, a Lieutenant-General, with ſome Troops before him, to take quiet Poſſeſſion of the Place. Here he receiv'd the Dutch Ambaſſadors, who were ſent to know upon what Terms he wou'd treat. In the mean Time the Dutch Loſſes. Mareſchal de Turenne poſſeſs'd himſelf of Arnheim, and the Fort of Knotſembourg and Nimeguen; upon this News the Dutch abandon'd Grave, and Turenne ſeiz'd Bommel, and the Sckinck Scans fell alſo into the Hands of the French. The Biſhop of Munſter took Droll and Daventer, and the Marqueſs de Rochefort made himſelf Maſter of Naerden, and other Places. A Hero of any other Make than that of Lewis XIV. wou'd have been aſham'd of ſuch eaſy Victories, and not have aſſum'd to himſelf the Title of Conqueror, when a Trumpeter wou'd have done the Buſineſs every whit as well with ſuch an Army, and againſt ſuch Enemies. He paid for it before he dy'd, and let him now have his Fill of Vainglory and Flattery. The French King's Succeſs, as my Lord of Salisbury obſerves, "was owing "rather to De Wit's Errors, than his own Con- "duct. There was ſo little Heart or Judgment "ſhewn in his Management of it, that when that "Year is ſet out, as it may well be, it will ap- "pear to be one of the leaſt Glorious of his Life; "tho' when ſeen in a falſe Light, it appears one "of the moſt Glorious in Hiſtory. The Conqueſt French "of the Netherlands, at that Time, might have King de- "been ſo eaſily compaſſed, that if his Underſtand- ficient in "ing and his Courage had not been equally de- Conduct at "fective, he cou'd not have miſcarry'd in it." The Utretcht. Biſhop adds other Inſtances of his Deficiency in both, which relate too little to the Hiſtory of the Stuarts to have a Place here.

We have mention'd the Arrival of the Dutch Deputies at Utretcht, who were humbly to implore his Majeſty to grant them a Treaty on his own Conditions, which, however, were ſo rigorous, that it made the Dutch deſperate; and Deſpair recover'd them out of the Diſtreſs into which they had been ſunk by Deceit and Cowardice. He demanded of them Maeſtritcht, Boiſleduc, Breda, and Bergen op Zoom, by the Advice of Monſieur Pompone; which certainly the States wou'd have comply'd with, but Louvois adviſ'd him to inſiſt upon an immenſe Sum of Money for the Charges of the War, and their giving the chief Church in every Town for the Exerciſe of the Popiſh Religion; that they ſhou'd put themſelves under the Protection of France, and every Year ſend an Ambaſſador with a Medal acknowledging it; and ſhou'd enter into no Treaties or Alliances but by the Directions of the French King. One of the Dutch Ambaſſadors ſwoon'd when he heard His Demands.

A.D.1672 thoſe extravagant Conditions which were made without any Concert with England, though Lockhart, the Engliſh Ambaſſador, was then in the French Court. The States ſent Dykevelt and Halewyn Ambaſſadors to England, to join with Boreel, who was ſtill at London, and of whom Biſhop Burnet tells a pleaſant Story, which ſhews the Simplicity of the Man. Some time before the Arrival of theſe Ambaſſadors, Boreel had Audience of the King, and in Diſcourſe about the War, his Majeſty took occaſion to upbraid the Dutch with their Uſage of him and his Brother in the Time of the Common-wealth and Cromwel. Boreel having no Guard on his Expreſſion, reply'd, Ha! Sire, c'eſt une autre choſe Cromwel eſtoit un grand Homme, & il ſe faiſoit craindre, & par Terre & par Mer. "Ah! Sir, that's quite "another thing, Cromwel was a great Man, and "made evey body afraid of him both by Sea and "Land. The King's Anſwer was, Je me feray craindre auſſi a mon bour; "I will alſo make them "afraid of me in my Turn." But as my Lord of Salisbury has it, He was ſcarce as good as his Word; and there was not a Prince nor Power in Europe, who was ever afraid of any one of the Kings of the Race of the Stuarts before the Revolution. The Dutch Ambaſſadors were ſent to Hampton-Court, and told the King they would not treat ſeparately, without his Ally, the French King. They met ſecretly with many in England, and inform'd themſelves by them of the State of the Nation. They gave Money liberally, and gain'd ſome in the chief Office to given them Intelligence, which the Court underſtanding, and that the Nation was much inflam'd, commanded them to go back, and ſent the Duke of Buckingham, and the Earl of Arlington to Utrecht, giving it out that they were to put a Stop to the Progreſs of the French in Holland. They were come as far as Muyden, and had the Keys of the Town deliver'd to them; but they flung them into the Ditch, as an inconſiderable Place, not knowing the Importance of it by the Command of the Water that cou'd drown all to Amſterdam. And when the Conſequence of the Place was underſtood, another Party was ſent to ſecure it. Theſe came too late, for the Prince of Orange had thrown two Battalions into it, and by that Means Amſterdam was preſerv'd, where all were trembling, and thought of nothing but Treating and Submitting. And this Check given the French, when the States had almoſt given over all Things for loſt, recover'd their Spirits ſo far, that they began to look about them, and think of defending themſelves to the Utmoſt. The Lord Hallifax was ſent to Holland, after Buckingham and Arlington; but he was not truſted with the whole Secret. The Dutch hearing their Ambaſſadors were coming from England without a Peace, ran together in great Numbers to Maesland Sluice, and reſolv'd to cut them in Pieces at their Landing, for they heard they were at the Brill; but as they were croſſing the Maes, a little Boat met them, and told them of their Danger, adviſing them to land at another Place, where Coaches were ſtaying to carry them to the Hague; ſo they miſs'd the Storm which broke out fatally the next Day againſt the two De Wits.

The De Wits murder'd.

John De Wit going Home one Night from the States, four Perſons ſet on him to murder him: He defended himſelf ſo well, that he got out of their Hands with ſome Wounds. One of them was taken, and condemn'd for it: All De Wit's Friends preſs'd him to ſave the Man's Life, but he thought ſuch an Attempt on a Perſon in his Poſt, was not to be pardon'd; though as to his own Part in the Matter, he very freely forgave him. The young Man confeſs'd his Crime, and repented of it, proteſting he was led to it by no other Conſideration, but that of Zeal for his Country and Religion; and he dy'd as in a Rapture of Devotion, which made great Impreſſions on the Spectators, and exaſperated them ſtill the more againſt the De Wits, Cornelius and John. At the ſame Time a Barber accus'd Cornelius, John De Wit's elder Brother, of a Practice on him, in order to his murdering the Prince of Orange: There were ſo many Improbabilities in his Story, which was ſupported by no Circumſtances, that it ſeem'd no way credible; yet Cornelius De Wit was put to the Torture on it, but ſtood firm to his Innocence. The Sentence was accommodated rather to the State of Affairs, than to the ſtrict Rules of Juſtice. In the mean Time, his Brother had reſign'd his Charge of Penſionary, and was made one of the Judges of the High Court. Cornelius De Wit was baniſh'd, which was intended to ſend him out of the Way, and not as a Puniſhment. The Barber went about the Hague, and told the Populace he had convicted the Grand Baily of Putten, ſuch was Cornelius De Wit's Title, and he was in Priſon under Condemnation. Upon which great Numbers ran thither, and John De Wit coming in his Coach to fetch him out, the Populace cry'd out, Now the two Traitors are together, they ſhall not eſcape. In the Inſtant, a falſe Report was ſpread among the People, that ſome thouſands of Boors were coming to plunder the Hague, by which Means the two Brothers were depriv'd of all Hopes of Safety; for upon this Report, the Guards that had been plac'd by the Council of State about the Priſon, for the Defence of the Priſoner, took Occaſion to draw off, and left them to the Mercy of the Rabble; who immediately broke open the Doors, and ruſh'd into the Chamber where the two Brothers were. John De Wit, who was ſitting on the Bed-ſide with a Book in his Hand, demanded of them, What they wou'd have? And receiving for Anſwer, You ſhall ſee if you will go down. He took his Brother by the Hand, and led him down into the Street, where they were no ſooner arriv'd, but the enrag'd Multitude fell upon them, and with a thouſand Wounds moſt barbarouſly murder'd them: Their Bodies were dragg'd about the Town, and torn to Pieces.

The Dutch judging by the plain Reaſon of our own Intereſt in their Preſervation, welcom'd the Duke of Buckingham, the Earl of Arlington, and the Lord Hallifax, as Perſons that were come to deliver them out of the deſperate Condition they were then in. "The common Belief in England "and Holland, ſays Sir William Temple, made "the Subject of their Embaſſy to be our Jealouſy "of the French Conqueſts going ſo faſt, while "ours were ſo lame, and great Hopes were rais'd "in Holland, that it was to ſtop their Courſe or "Extent; but theſe were ſoon daſh'd by the re-"turn of the Ambaſſadors, after having renew'd "and faſten'd the Meaſures formerly taken be-"tween the two Crowns. And the Ambaſſadors "were indeed content, as they paſs'd through "Holland, that the Firſt ſhou'd be thought; "which gave Occaſion for a good Repartee of "the Princeſs Dowager of Orange to the Duke "of Buckingham, who viſited her as he paſs'd "through the Hague; and talking much of their "being Hollanders, ſhe told him, That was more "than they ask'd, which was only that they ſhou'd "be good Engliſhmen. He anſwer'd, We are not "only ſo, but good Dutchmen too: Indeed we do "not uſe Holland like a Miſtreſs, but we love her "like a Wife. To which ſhe reply'd, Uraymentje croy que vous nous aymez comme vous aymez la vôtre: Truly, I believe you love Us as you "love Yours." Theſe Ambaſſadors had Confe-

Princeſs of Orange's Saying to the Duke of Buckingham.

A.D.1672 rences with the Deputies of the States, to whom they us'd all Expreſſions imaginable both of Kindneſs to Holland, and of Concernment and Trouble to ſee the French ſo far advanc'd. They gave the Dutch Miniſters to underſtand, they wou'd engage that the French King ſhou'd give up all his Conqueſts for Maeſtricht; or if he wou'd not, they were empower'd to enter into new Meaſures with the States, to prevent the Deſtruction of that Common-wealth. But they did not long keep in this Tone, for they had not been many Hours in the French Camp, which was not far off, before their Judgments were better inform'd by Golden Arguments: The Terror of the French King's Greatneſs vaniſh'd, and the firſt Meſſage they ſent the Prince of Orange was, That the States were to give Satisfaction to both Kings jointly, and that neither Crown cou'd or wou'd treat without it. The Satisfaction to the French King was, as we have ſeen, a Toleration of Popery, without which the Engliſh Ambaſſadors will enter into no Treaty with the Dutch; as alſo the Admiſſion of Papiſts into Offices, and Payment of Penſions to the Prieſts. The French King took little Notice of them at firſt, ſaying, The King of England might treat as he pleas'd, what I have got is my own; and what I ſhall get I will not reſtore without an Equivalent: At which the Ambaſſadors conceiv'd ſo much Indignation, that they talk'd of compromiſing Matters with the Dutch, till the Extent of the French King's Generoſity made them alter their Minds. Mr. Secretary Trevor, who was diſmiſs'd the Committee for foreign Affairs, becauſe he oppos'd the French Intereſt, wrote the following Queries, on Occaſion of the Plenipotentiaries being ſent to the French Camp.

Engliſh Ambaſſadors at the French Camp in Holland.

Secretary Trevor's Queries.

" I. Whether they were ſent only to promote " the French Conqueſts? and if not, how they " cou'd think it adviſeable by making the Peace " impoſſible to force the Dutch, as far as in them " lay, to caſt themſelves into the Arms of the " French King, and ſubmit themſelves to his " Domination?

" II. Whether they can deny they knew the " joint Propoſals tender'd to the Dutch ſhou'd " not be granted, ſince the French Demands " alone had been unanimouſly rejected? And " in that Caſe how agreeable was it to the " Intereſt of England, to make it impoſſible " for the Dutch to give his Majeſty any Satiſ- " faction?

" III. Whether they had not receiv'd, as well " from the Prince of Orange as from the States " Commiſſioners, all publick Aſſurances of the " infinite Deſire they had to ſee his Majeſty re- " turn to his former Amity with them, and of " their Readineſs to purchaſe it at any Rate that " the Condition they were in wou'd bear? If ſo, " how faithfully the Plenipotentiaries diſcharg'd " their Truſt in neglecting thoſe Offers, and en- " tring into a new Engagement, which was ſo " prejudicial to England?

" IV. How far thoſe that were join'd in Com- " miſſion with them did concur with them in " their Judgment; and whether all thoſe Conſi- " derations, with many others, were not repre- " ſented to them, and urg'd by ſome, who had " no other End but to ſerve their Maſter faith- " fully?

" V. Whether it was for that Reaſon they op- " pos'd ſo fiercely my Lord Viſcount Hallifax, " who came a Day or two after them, his ap- " pearing and acting jointly with them, tho' " commiſſionated in as full and as ample a Man- " ner as themſelves?

" VI. Who were thoſe, after my Lord Hallifax " cou'd be kept out no longer, who went private- " ly to the French Camp under ſeveral Pretences, " and had ſtill Negotiations of their own on " Foot? A.D.1672

" VII. Whether they had Orders to call the " French King the King of France, and to name " him ſtill before their Maſter, as well as to ſet " in the firſt Place, the French demands before " thoſe of his Majeſty; as all this was done in " the Copies of Agreement they had made, and " of both Kings Pretenſions, which they ſent to- " gether to the Prince of Orange by Sir Gabriel " Silvius?

" VIII. and Laſtly, How far their Inſtructions " will juſtify their ſtanding in Behalf of the " French upon a publick Exerciſe of the Roman " Catholick Religion in the United Provinces, " the Churches to be divided, and the Romiſh " Prieſts maintain'd out of the publick Reve- " nue?

Juſt before the French King came to Utrecht, which was in the Beginning of July, the Prince of Orange, notwithſtanding the obſtinate Oppoſition of the De Wits (for which the Populace made them pay dearly) was reſtor'd to the Power of Stadtholder, and a deſign'd Deſcent upon Holland, near the Hague or Harlem, was prevented by the miraculous Alteration of the Courſe of the Tide, which flow'd full twelve Hours later than it's natural Order, and giving Time to De Ruyter to come up with the Dutch Fleet, the Engliſh and French drew off. The variable Temper of the Duke of Buckingham appear'd on a very remarkable Occaſion while he was in Holland: The Prince of Orange arguing with him one Day upon the King's Conduct, as the moſt unaccountable Thing poſſible, he contributing ſo much to the Exaltation of France, which in Concluſion muſt prove fatal to himſelf, which he urg'd in ſeveral Particulars, the Duke ſwore he was in the Right, and offer'd to ſign a Peace immediately with the Prince. Lord Arlington ſeem'd amaz'd at his Raſhneſs; yet he perſiſted in it, and ſaid poſitively he wou'd do it. Upon which the Prince, not knowing what ſecret Powers he might have, order'd Articles to be drawn up and engroſs'd: But before that cou'd be done, Buckingham's Mind was chang'd. The Duke at parting preſs'd him much to put himſelf in the King's Hands, and aſſur'd him he wou'd take Care of his Affairs as of his own. The Prince cut him ſhort, ſaying, My Country has truſted me, and I will never deceive nor betray them for any baſe Ends of my own. The Duke anſwer'd, You are not to think any more of your Country, for it is loſt. If it ſhou'd weather out the Summer by reaſon of the Waters that have drown'd a great Part of it, the Winter's Froſt will lay them open. And he often repeated theſe Words, Do not you ſee it is loſt? The Prince's Anſwer has more of the Hero in it than whatever is boaſted of in Antiquity. I ſee it is indeed in great Danger; but there is a ſure Way never to ſee it loſt, and that is to die in the laſt Dyke. The French King having offer'd his Highneſs the Sovereignty of the Seven Provinces, to tempt him to abandon the Defence of them, he reply'd, I will never betray the Liberty of my Country which my Anceſtors have ſo long defended. And to one of his Servants, who expoſtulated this Matter with his Maſter, asking him, How he pretended to live after Holland was loſt? The Prince reply'd, I reſolve to live upon my Lands in Germany, and had rather paſs my Life in Hunting there, than ſell my Country or my Liberty to France at any Price. The Reader has the Hiſtory of the Stuarts before him. Did ever any Saying come from them ſo Grand, ſo Heroical as This? The Prince of Orange deſpis'd Power, unleſs to defend

Duke of Buckingham's variable Temper.

A fine Saying of the Prince of Orange.

A.D.1672 fend Liberty, and he was crown'd with Empire. The Stuartine Princes graſp'd at Power to enſlave their People, and we have ſeen, and ſhall ſee what was their Fate.

In the Beginning of July Henry Coventry, Eſq; was made Secretary of State in the Room of Sir John Trevor, lately deceas'd. His Merit is told by Coke; "At the Inſtance of the French King "Coventry was ſent to the Court of Sweden to "diſſolve the Triple League; which he did "ſo effectually, that that King not only ſtood "neuter in the Beginning of the War with the "Dutch, but in it join'd with the French againſt "the Confederates; and for this Buſineſs, which "put all Chriſtendom in a Flame, Coventry was "made Principal Secretary of State, and, it may "be, was preſented with his fine Ranger's Place "in Enfield-Chaſe too, and that perhaps with "thrice more from the French King; whereas "Sir William Temple, who was the principal In"ſtrument in the Peace at Nimeguen, loſt 2200 "Pounds by it, and his only Recompence was to "be Secretary of State in Coventry's Place, if Sir "William wou'd give him 10,000 Pounds for it."

Lord Shaftsbury Lord Chancellor In November the Earl of Shaftsbury was made Lord Chancellor, upon the Reſignation of Sir Orlando Bridgeman, and Thomas Lord Clifford Lord Treaſurer; and upon his Entring on that high Office, the Lord Chancellor made a remarkable Speech to him, as full of Flattery as Eloquence. As to other Promotions, there is a long Catalogue of them in the Compleat Hiſtory, copy'd very exactly out of the Gazette. In December the King, who had declar'd, that the Payments of the Exchequer ſhou'd be ſtopp'd only for a Year, did now declare, that they ſhou'd be ſtopp'd longer, and, as being a King of his Word, He did not doubt but all his loving Subjects had ſuch Truſt and Confidence in his Juſtice, that it will take away all Apprehenſions of their being in the leaſt defrauded of any thing that is juſtly due to them. They were however defrauded of every Penny of it. We ſhou'd not forget, that inſtead of a Medal to diſtinguiſh the Glories of this Year from thoſe of another in this glorious Reign, there were Farthings coin'd, having on one Side the King's Head, and about it Carolus à Carolo, and on the Reverſe the Figure of a Woman repreſenting Britain, with this Inſcription, Quatuor Maria Vindico, The Four Seas are mine. But theſe Words were ſoon after alter'd, on ſome Marine Succeſſes of the Dutch, and only Britannia circumſcrib'd in the Room.

Farthings with a Motto.

1673. Parliament. On the 4th of February the Parliament, which had been continu'd under ſeveral Prorogations to this Day, met, and the Place of Speaker of the Houſe of Commons being void by the Promotion of Sir Edward Turner the Speech-maker to be Chief Baron of the Exchequer, Sir Job Charlton, Serjeant at Law, was choſen Speaker, and approv'd by the King. At the ſame Time his Majeſty made a Speech, in which he told the two Houſes, that he had been forc'd to a moſt important, neceſſary and expenſive War. How he was forc'd to it, how important it was, how neceſſary, has been ſhewn already. He then mention'd his Declaration of Indulgence, and telling them he wou'd ſtick to it, gave another Occaſion to ſhew them how he ſtuck to his Royal Word: He aſſur'd them, The Forces he had rais'd were ſo far from being deſign'd to controul Law and Property, as was ſuggeſted, that he wiſh'd he had more Forces, and muſt raiſe more, for which he deſir'd Supplies, and promis'd to preſerve the true reform'd Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberty and Property of every Man in his Kingdom. Having referr'd himſelf to the Lord Chancellor for other Particulars, the Earl of Shaftsbury enlarg'd with great Bitterneſs upon the Cauſes of the War with the Dutch. But no Part of his Speech was more amazing than that where he ſaid Delenda eſt Carthago. It muſt be own'd, that the Chancellor gave into the Court Meaſures againſt his Sentiments and Principles, and was the firſt of the Cabal who grew weary of them, and oppos'd them. This Lord, in the Intervals of Parliament, had iſſued Writs for Elections of Members of the Lower Houſe, which the Commons complain'd of as an Infringement of their Privileges. The King left thoſe Elections to them, and they voted them all irregular, and expell'd the Members ſo choſen; upon which the Country Party got their Friends elected: The Penſioners cou'd not after that eaſily carry any thing, and there was a great Clamour againſt the Chancellor, wherein finding himſelf ill ſupported by the Court, he dexterouſly, tho' ſecretly, ſhifted Sides, and ſecur'd himſelf an Intereſt among thoſe that had been his Enemies. One of the moſt active Members of the Houſe of Commons, Sir Robert Howard, was for puſhing Matters to an Impeachment. The Lord Chancellor had good Intelligence of every Step taken againſt him, and knew well how to improve it. He was inform'd, that there was a great Club to be ſuch a Night at a certain Tavern near Charing-Croſs, where 70 or 80 Members of Parliament were to meet, and to come to a Determination on the Affair of the Impeachment. The Lord Chancellor employ'd a Friend of his to go to that Tavern and procure a Room next to that where the Meeting was to be. The Gentleman gave the Drawer a Guinea, and the Room was kept for him. At the Hour appointed the Earl went thither in a Hackney-Chair, and his Friend was there ready to ſhew him up into the Room he had taken. He then left him, and the Lord Chancellor heard Sir Robert talk to the Members of the intended Impeachment; and having ſatisfy'd himſelf of their Intention, he call'd for the Drawer, and bade him whiſper Sir Robert Howard, that a Gentleman wou'd ſpeak with him in the next Room; Sir Robert came immediately, and, to his great Surprize, found the Lord Chancellor, who receiv'd him with a very gay Countenance, and taking no Notice of what was concerting againſt him, told him, He was ſo much his Friend that he cou'd not help bringing him good News, which was, That the King had given him the Reverſion of the Auditor of the Exchequer's Place by his Recommendation, and if he cou'd ſerve him in any thing elſe then, or at any other Time, he ſhou'd always find him ready. Sir Robert agreeably pleas'd and ſurpriz'd with this good Office, unſought for, after having paid the Earl his Complements upon it, ſaid, I will very frankly own to you, my Lord, I have by no Means deſerv'd this Favour at your Hands; on the contrary, I am now the main Contriver and Actor in an Impeachment againſt you; but it is not too late to undo all that has been done, and if your Lordſhip will but have Patience to ſtay here but a quarter of an Hour, you ſhall hear how I will put an End to it. The Lord Chancellor thank'd him very graciouſly, and Sir Robert returning to his Company, renew'd the Diſcourſe againſt the Lord Chancellor with greater Vehemence than before, entring into the Particulars of the Charge, and aggravating them, to the great Mortification of the Earl: But at laſt he in the Cloſe made ample Amends for all, telling the Aſſembly, That truly the Crimes were of a high Nature and dangerous; but he did not ſee what Effect ſuch a Charge cou'd have without Proof; and he muſt own he had not heard any tolerable Proof for any one of the Articles; and for ſome of them not ſo much as common Fame.

A.D.1673

Sir Robert Howard bought off by Lord Shaftsbury.

King's Speech for them.

A.D.1673 That the Lord Chancellor was a Man of great Abilities and Intereſt, and as he wou'd ſoon diſcover the Weakneſs of the Charge againſt him, ſo he had Friends enough to have it rejected, and he did believe the Houſe of Commons wou'd never be brought to paſs it. The Members finding how it was like to go, and that Sir Robert had left them, went away one after another, without ſaying a Word, and Sir Robert Howard enjoy'd many Years, the Reward of his Management, the Office of Auditor.

The Parliament fell immediately upon the Declaration of Indulgence, and preſented two Addreſſes againſt it, which very much perplex'd the King and his Miniſters. The Compleat Hiſtorians are honeſt enough in obſerving the illegal Proceedings, in diſpenſing with the Laws of the Land, by arbitrary Power, and no doubt the Eaſe it gave the Diſſenters, made them the more quick-ſighted in it; but that the Addreſs againſt the Indulgence, had no Regard to them in particular, is plain, from this good Vote, on the 14th of February.

Reſolv'd Nemine Contradicente.

A Bill to eaſe Diſſenters. That a Bill be brought in for the Eaſe of his Majeſty's Subjects, who are Diſſenters in Matters of Religion, from the Church of England.

The Subſtance of this Bill was,

1. "That Eaſe ſhall be given to his Majeſty's "Proteſtant Subjects, diſſenting in Matters of "Religion, who ſhall ſubſcribe the Articles of "the Doctrine of the Church of England, and "ſhall take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy. 2. That the ſaid Proteſtant Subjects be "eas'd from all Pains and Penalties for not coming to Church. 3. That the Clauſe in the Aſſent and Conſent taken away. "late ACT OF UNIFORMITY, for declaring "the Aſſent and Conſent be taken away by "this Bill. 4. That the ſaid Proteſtant Subjects "be eas'd from all Pains and Penalties, for meeting together for Performance of any religious "Exerciſe. 5. That every Teacher ſhall give "Notice of the Place where he intends ſuch his "Meeting to the reſpective Quarter Seſſions, where "in open Court he ſhall firſt make ſuch Subſcription, and take ſuch Oaths as aforeſaid, and receive from thence a Certificate thereof, where "all ſuch Proceedings ſhall remain upon Record. "6. That any ſuch Teacher may exerciſe as aforeſaid, until the next reſpective Quarter Seſſion, "and no longer, in caſe he ſhall not firſt take "the Oaths, and make ſuch Subſcriptions before "two of the neighbouring Juſtices of the Peace, "and ſhall firſt give them Notice of the Place "of his intended Meeting, and take Certificate "thereof, under the ſaid Juſtices Hands, a Duplicate whereof they are to return into the next "Quarter Seſſions. 7. The Doors and Paſſages "of all Houſes and Places where the ſaid Diſſenters do meet, ſhall be always open and free "during the Time of ſuch Exerciſe. 8. That "if any Diſſenter refuſe to take Church-Wardens "Oaths, that then he ſhall find another fit Perſon, who is no Diſſenter, to execute that Office, "and ſhall pay for his Pains.

Dr. Calamy very juſtly obſerves, The Motion of the lower Houſe in this Affair, was therefore the more remarkable, becauſe it was the ſame Houſe of Commons, who ten Years before, ſo warmly voted the Contrary, and who made the Law of the Land, and the Laws of the Land, which the Archdeacon, and the Compleat Hiſtorian hang upon ſo much, and which now unmade them all, as far as they could unmake them. And becauſe I have more than once, ſaid what many think of the Bartholomew Act, I deſire the Reader to take Notice, that this very Houſe of Commons which paſs'd that Act, did now paſs an Act to take away the Aſſent and Conſent of that Act, and that it was the Senſe of the Nation, as well as the Senſe of thoſe that cou'd not comply with it, notwithſtanding Echard and others glory in it, as the Strength and Ornament of the Church. What do now ſignify the Earl of Clarendon's, Turner the Speaker's, and other Harangues on the Church Acts, as they call them? The Houſe of Commons have voted them all down, the ſame Houſe of Commons who voted them all up, and methinks thoſe who ſpoke ſo much for them, ſhould not be able to read their laſt Vote without bluſhing. A.D.1673 Uniformity Act weaken'd.

The Day after this Vote, Sir Job Charlton, the Speaker, was taken very ill, and on the 19th of February, Mr. Edward Seymour was choſen Speaker, by his Majeſty's Recommendation. Both Houſes of Parliament join'd in a very warm Addreſs, againſt the encouraging of Papiſts and Popery, and his Majeſty publiſh'd once more a Proclamation againſt Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits. We are all ſatisfy'd that his Majeſty was a Papiſt himſelf, and yet he ſays in his Proclamation, His Majeſty had ſeriouſly conſider'd of the ſaid Petition, and with much Contentment and Satisfaction did accept, and approve of the great Care of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament aſſembled, for the Preſervation of the true Religion eſtabliſh'd in this Kingdom; to which his Majeſty declares, as he hath always adher'd againſt all Temptations whatſoever, eſpecially when he adjur'd it at Fonterabia, ſo he will ſtill employ his utmoſt Care and Zeal in the Maintenance and Defence of it: And therefore ſtrictly charges and commands all Jeſuits and Romiſh Prieſts to depart the Kingdom, and the Laws to be put in due Execution, againſt all Popiſh Recuſants, or juſtly ſuſpected to be ſo, &c. The King had ſaid he wou'd ſtick to his Declaration of Indulgence; but as his Majeſty has not diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by keeping his Word, ſo we expect this will have the Fate of the reſt. The Parliament were for giving the Non-conformiſts a Legal Toleration, in order to the preventing an illegal one for the Future, and the Act for their Eaſe wou'd have paſs'd the Houſe of Lords, had they ſate long enough, as Mr. Locke tells us. They were convinc'd that ſuch a Toleration was needful, tho' ten Years before, they wou'd not yield to it on any Terms. Biſhop Burnet, in his Speech about the Occaſional Bill, freely aſcribes the Mildneſs of the Houſe of Commons towards the Diſſenters at this Time, to their Pleaſedneſs with their Carriage, in giving up the King's Declaration, which wrought ſo much on the Houſe, that was ſo zealous for the Church, that they order'd a Bill to be brought in for their Eaſe; but the Court lik'd their Carriage ſo little, that 'twas doubtleſs one Reaſon of the King's giving up the Declaration alſo, and breaking the Seal which was affix'd to it, with his own Hand. Sir Edward Seymour choſen Speaker. Proclamation againſt Papiſts. The King breaks the Seal affix'd to the Declaration of Indulgence.

The Houſe was not content with this, ſo a Bill was brought in to diſable all Papiſts from holding any Employment or Place at Court, requiring all Perſons in publick Truſt, to receive the Sacrament in a Pariſh Church, and to carry an atteſted Certificate of that, with Witneſſes, to prove it, into Chancery, or the County Seſſions, and there to make a Declaration, renouncing Tranſubſtantiation in full and poſitive Words. Great Pains were taken by the Court to divert this: They propos'd that ſome Regard might be had to Proteſtant Diſſenters, and that their Meetings might be allow'd. Mr. Love, before-mention'd, mov'd that an effectual Security might be found againſt Popery, and that nothing might interpoſe 'till that was done. When that was over, Teſt Act.

A.D.1673 the Diſſenters wou'd try to deſerve ſome Favour; but at preſent, they were willing to lie under the Severity of the Laws, rather than clog a more neceſſary Work with their Concerns. Tho' he was himſelf a Diſſenter, yet he wou'd not accept of Indulgence, if it muſt be in Conjunction with the Papiſts. Nay, the Earl of Briſtol in the Houſe of Lords, ſpoke for the Teſt Act, tho' a Papiſt, ſaying, I am a Catholick of the Church of Rome, but not a Catholick of the Court of Rome. The Commons who brought in the Bill, are the beſt Judges of the Temper of the Nation, and being ſenſible of what dangerous Effects a general Diſturbance of Mens Minds, in the Concernment of Religion, may produce, they have apply'd their Care to obviate by this Bill. A Bill in my Opinion, as full of Moderation towards Catholicks, as of Prudence and Security to the Religion of the State. I am none of thoſe Wherry-Men in Religion, who look one Way and row another: And tho' a Catholick, yet as a Member of a Proteſtant Parliament, my Advice cannot but go along with the Scope of the Bill, the preſent Circumſtances of Time and Affairs conſider'd. The Houſe of Commons was reſolv'd to give no Money 'till that Bill was paſs'd. The King had rais'd an Army of 20,000 Men, for a Deſcent upon Holland. Mareſchal Schomberg was the General, but Fitzgerald, an Iriſh Papiſt, Major General. The Duke of Buckingham and Lord Berkley advis'd the King to bring the Army to Town, and they wou'd take out of both Houſes, the Members that made the Oppoſition to the Court.

Earl of Briſtol, tho' a Papiſt, for the Teſt.

Dangerous Counſels.

Duke Lauderdale talk'd of bringing the Army from Scotland, 20,000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe, and ſeizing upon Newcaſtle, Clifford told the King, the People ſaw thro' all his Deſigns, and therefore he muſt reſolve to make himſelf Maſter at once, or be for ever ſubject to much Jealouſy and Contempt. The Earls of Shaftsbury and Arlington on the other Hand, preſs'd him to give the Parliament full Content, and undertook to procure him Money to carry on the War; which Opinion being ſupported by the Advice of Colbert, the French Ambaſſador, the King gave into it, paſs'd the Teſt Act, and the Parliament gave him 1,250,000 Pounds, but did not give it for carrying on the War, only to ſupply the King's Neceſſities. On the 29th of March the King paſs'd the Money Bill, the Teſt Act, and other Acts, and then the Parliament was prorogu'd to the 20th of October.

Duke of York weeps.

After the Seſſion was over, the Duke of York carry'd all his Commiſſions to the King, and wept as he deliver'd them up, but the King ſhew'd no Concern at all. Lord Clifford left the Treaſury, and was ſucceeded by Sir Thomas Osborn, at the Recommendation of Buckingham and Clifford.

Sir Thomas Osborn made Lord Treaſurer.

Biſhop Burnet writes of him, He was a Gentleman of Yorkſhire, whoſe Eſtate was much ſunk: He was a very plauſible Speaker, but too copious, and cou'd not eaſily make an End of his Diſcourſe. He had been always among the high Cavaliers, and miſſing Preferment, had oppos'd the Court much. He gave himſelf great Liberties in Diſcourſe, and did not ſeem to have any Regard to Truth, or ſo much as the Appearance of it. He put himſelf at the Head of the rigid Church-men, and labour'd to ſtretch the Prerogative beyond Law and Conſcience. He was made Earl of Danby, and continu'd in Favour longer than any Favourite of this Reign.

His Character.

Duke of York about a ſecond Marriage.

About this Time the Duke of York began to think of marrying. He firſt thought of Lady Bellaſis, Widow to the Lord Bellaſis's Son, and went ſo far in it, as to give her a Promiſe under his Hand to marry her, and ſhe being a Proteſtant, he ſent Coleman to her, to draw her over to Popery, but ſhe was not to be mov'd. Some of her Friends reproaching her for admitting the Duke ſo freely to ſee her, ſhe cou'd not bear it, but ſaid, I can ſhew that his Addreſſes to me are honourable. When Lord Bellaſis, her Father in Law, who was a zealous Papiſt, heard this, he who knew how intractable the Lady was in thoſe Matters, gave the whole Deſign of bringing in Popery for loſt, if that was not quickly broken off; ſo he pretending Zeal for the King and the Duke's Honour, went and told the King all that he had heard. The King ſent for the Duke, and ſaid to him, It is too much that you have play'd the Fool once, it is not to be born a ſecond Time, and at ſuch an Age. The Lady was alſo ſo threaten'd, that ſhe gave up the Promiſe, but kept an atteſted Copy of it. Then a Marriage was propos'd between the Duke and an Archdutcheſs of Inſpruch, but the Empreſs happening to die at that Time, the Emperor himſelf marry'd her. After that a Match was propos'd to the Duke of Modena's Daughter, but the Court of Rome wou'd not at firſt conſent to it, unleſs ſhe might have a publick Chappel, which the Court of England would not hearken to, and the Duke making, by Lockhart, a Propoſal to the Duke de Crequi's Daughter in France; the Pope deſirous that he ſhould rather marry an Italian than a French Woman, yielded to the Marriage, without a Chappel, and the Duke was marry'd to Mary d'Eſté by Proxy. The Earl of Peterborough brought her to England thro' France. Her Portion, about 200,000 Pounds, was paid by the French King, who adopted her a Daughter of France; but when he over-ran Italy, in the Year 1701, he demanded the Money of her Brother, the Duke of Modena, who was not able to pay him. It is ſaid, ſhe upbraided her Husband at the Inſtant ſhe heard of the Prince of Orange's Landing, thus; It is well known I had 400,000 Pounds to my Fortune; if it were poſſible, I were ſingle again, and had my Money, I would not marry any Prince in Chriſtendom. When the Houſe of Commons met next, tho' the Earl of Peterborough had brought the Lady as far as Paris in her Way to England, and tho' ſhe had been marry'd to the Duke by Proxy, they preſented an Addreſs to the King, to ſtop the Princeſs of Modena's coming to England, 'till ſhe ſhou'd change her Religion. Upon this the Duke mov'd the King to prorogue the Parliament for a Week, and a Commiſſion was order'd for it. The Duke went to the Houſe that Day, to preſs the Calling up the Commons, before they cou'd have Time to go on to Buſineſs. Some Peers were to be brought in. The Duke preſs'd the Lord Shaftsbury to put that off, and prorogue the Parliament. He ſaid coldly, There is no haſte, but the Commons made more haſte, and quickly came to a Vote for ſtopping the Marriage, which was ſuch an Affront to the Duke, that he never forgave Shaftſbury, who might have prevented it by a Prorogation. The Parliament preſented two Addreſſes againſt the Marriage, but the King's Anſwer was, His Honour was engag'd, and a Month after, November the 21ſt, the Princeſs of Modena arriv'd at Dover, where the Duke receiv'd her, and conſummated the Marriage; and not long before this arriv'd Madam de Querouaille, a French Papiſt, to be the King's Miſtreſs. Thus were both King and Duke in the Arms of two intriguing Ladies, entirely in the French Intereſt.

A.D.1673

Duke of York marries Mary d'Eſté.

Parliament oppoſe it.

In the mean while the Dutch were reduc'd to the laſt Extremities by the French Conqueſts, and it was propos'd in an Aſſembly of the States, to remove as many as cou'd, with their Families and Effects, to the Eaſt-Indies. In this Diſtreſs there ſeem'd to be no Soul in any Breaſt in Holland, but Prince of Orange animates the States.

A.D.1673 that of the Prince of Orange, who got the States to call an extraordinary Aſſembly, the moſt numerous that has been in this Age. He ſpoke to them near three Hours to the Amazement of all that heard him. He had got great Materials put into his Hands, of which he made very good Uſe. He firſt went thro' the French Propoſitions, and ſhew'd the Conſequence and the Effects that wou'd follow on them; that the accepting them wou'd be certain Ruin, and the very treating about them, wou'd diſtract and diſpirit their People: He therefore concluded, that the Entertaining a Thought of theſe, was the giving up their Country. If any cou'd hearken to ſuch a Motion, the Lovers of Religion and Liberty muſt go to the Indies, or to any other Country, where they might be free and ſafe. After he had gone thro' all this near an Hour, he in the next Place ſhew'd the Poſſibility of making a Stand, notwithſtanding the deſperate State to which their Affairs ſeem'd to be reduc'd. He ſet forth the Strength of their Allies, and told them England cou'd not hold out long without a Parliament, and they were well aſſur'd a Parliament wou'd draw the King to other Meaſures. He ſhew'd the Impoſſibility of the French holding out where they were, and that the Germans coming down to the lower Rhine, muſt make them leave thoſe Provinces as faſt as they came into them: In all which he ſhew'd he had a great Inſight into the French Affairs. He came at laſt to ſhew how it was poſſible to raiſe Taxes to anſwer ſuch a vaſt unavoidable Expence, and ſet before them a great Variety of Projects for raiſing Money. He concluded, that if they laid down this for a Foundation, That Religion and Liberty cou'd not be purchas'd at too dear a Rate; every Man among them, and every Miniſter in the Country ought to infuſe into all their People, that they muſt ſubmit to the preſent Extremity, and to very extraordinary Taxes: By this Means, as their People wou'd again take Heart, ſo their Enemies wou'd loſe theirs, who built their chief Hopes on that univerſal Dejection among them, which was but too viſible to all the World. Every one that was preſent ſeem'd amaz'd to hear ſo young a Man ſpeak to ſo many Things with ſo much Knowledge, and ſo true a Judgment: It rais'd his Character wonderfully, and contributed not a little to put new Life in a People almoſt dead with Fear, and diſpirited with ſo many Loſſes. They all reſolv'd to maintain their Liberty to the laſt, and if Things ſhou'd run to Extremities, then to carry what Wealth they cou'd with them to the Eaſt-Indies. The State of the Shipping capable of ſo long a Voyage was examin'd, and it was reckon'd they cou'd tranſport above 200,000 People thither.

French King's ill Conduct.

Yet all their Courage wou'd probably have ſerv'd them in little ſtead, if the French King cou'd have been prevail'd on to ſtay longer at Utretcht: But he made haſte to go back to Paris: Some ſaid it was the Effect of his Amours, and was haſten'd by ſome Quarrels among his Miſtreſſes; others thought he made haſte to receive the Flatteries which were preparing for him. He left a Garriſon in every Place he took, againſt Turenne's Advice, who was for diſmantling them, and keeping his Army ſtill about him. That General marching with Part of his Army into the Elector of Brandenburgh's Country, the other Part left with the King was ſo diminiſh'd, that he cou'd undertake no great Deſign, and though the Prince of Orange had not above 8000 Men about him, employ'd in keeping a Paſs near Woerden, yet no Attempt was made to force him from it. Another probable Reaſon of his returning back ſo ſoon, was a Suggeſtion of the deſperate Temper of the Dutch; and that they were capable of undertakng any Deſign, how black ſoever, rather than periſh. Some told him of Vaults under the Streets of Utretcht, where Gunpowder might be laid to blow him up as he went over them; and all theſe were obſerv'd to be avoided by him. He wou'd never lodge within the Town, and came but ſeldom to it. Upon one or other of theſe Motives he went back, and the Prince of Conde ſaid, I ſee he has not the Soul of a Conqueror; his Miniſters are the beſt Commis-Clerks, but the pooreſt Miniſters in the World; who have not Souls made for great Things, or capable of them. Had he left ſuch a Man as Turenne at Utrecht, it might have had ill Effects on the Reſolutions taken by the Dutch. But he left Luxemburgh, rather fit to command Banditti than Soldiers. Luxemburgh had no Regard to Articles, but made all People ſee what was to be expected when they ſhou'd come under ſuch a Yoke; which was then ſo intolerable a Burden, even while it ought to have been recommended to thoſe who were yet free, by a gentle Adminiſtration. This put the Dutch on thoſe obſtinate Reſolutions they had taken up: There is this Account of the French Barbarities in a modern Author: "Such were the Burnings and "Murders committed by the French in Holland; "where, as a Specimen of what the Cities might "expect, the Duke of Luxemburgh march'd to "Bodegrave and Swammerdam, putting Men, "Women, and Children to the Sword, and ma"king a Deluge of Blood in the Streets. In "the midſt of the lamentable Shrieks of thoſe "poor Wretches, Luxemburgh gave the Word of "Command, Plunder, Raviſh, Maſſacre, Kill; "which was executed without relenting. Theſe "Helliſh Outrages ſpread a Terror over the whole "Country, and in this Fright the Lords of Am"ſterdam aſſembling, deliberated whether they "ſhou'd or ſhou'd not ſend their Keys to the "French General." There were in the Aſſembly ſome ſo Cowardly as to argue for the Affirmative, till Monſieur Tulip, one of the Burgomaſters, a Man of an invincible Spirit, ran to the Window, and vow'd, if they did not lay aſide all Thoughts of ſubmitting to France, he wou'd call out to the People, who were crowding about the Stadthouſe, and have them torn to pieces; which put an End to the Diſpute. This Burgomaſter afterwards going the Night-round upon the Ramparts, a Centinel commanded him to Stand; he, to try the Vigilance and Fidelity of the Soldier, came forward in the Dark, without anſwering, upon which the Centinel fir'd, and ſhot him dead.

Burgomaſter Tulip's Bravery and Death.

The Emperor, Spain, and Brandenburgh, having enter'd into Alliance with the States of the United Provinces, the Prince of Orange got all his Forces together, and form'd the Siege of Naerden; but finding it was like to run to Length, and if he took the Place, it wou'd not clear the Country of the Enemy, ſo much as a Diverſion nearer France, he march'd away into Germany, join'd a Body of Imperialiſts, and laid down before Bonne, which the Elector of Cologne had put into the Hands of the French, to preſerve their Communication between France and Holland, and it open'd the Communication between Holland and Germany; which threw the French into almoſt as great a Conſternation as the Dutch were in before: But they recover'd out of it by the taking of Maeſtricht, where the Duke of Monmouth behav'd with ſo much Gallantry, that he was taken notice of, admir'd, and applauded; as was the Prince of Orange, ſometime after, for his Behaviour at the Battle of Seneffe, where he diſputed the Victory with the renown'd Prince of Conde; and had Prince of Orange makes a Diverſion in Germany.

A.D.1673 Souches, the Imperial General, behav'd as well, the French Army had been cut to Pieces, and an End put to the ambitious Projects of Lewis le Grand; for ſo he now affected to be call'd.

Sea Fights. During theſe Tranſactions, the Dutch Fleet gave Battle to the Engliſh and French, the 28th of May, near the Sands of Schonevelt, on the Borders of Zealand. Prince Rupert commanded the Engliſh Fleet, conſiſting of about 140 Sail, and De Ruyter, the Dutch, of about 120 Sail. The Fight began at 12 o'Clock at Noon, between Van Tromp and Sir Edward Sprague, and laſted till Night. The Dutch had the Advantage, but it was not worth boaſting of; they loſt Vice-Admiral Schram, and Rear-Admiral Vlugh: And on the Engliſh Side were kill'd Captain Fowles, Captain Werden, and Captain Finch. On the 4th of June was another Battle, wherein the Dutch had again the Advantage; and the Engliſh loſt Captain White, Commander of the Warſpight, and Captain Sadlington, Commander of the Crown. On the 11th of Auguſt was a third Battle, near the Mouth of the Texel, the Admirals on both Sides ſtill the ſame, and the ſame the Succeſs; what little Advantage there was being on the Dutch Side, though they loſt two Flag-Officers, De Liefde and Sweers. Of the Engliſh there fell Sir Edward Sprague, who was drown'd as he was ſhifting Ships, Sir William Reeves, and Captain Heywood; as alſo Captain Le Neve, and Captain Merryweather, two Captains of Foot; for there were 6000 Engliſh Soldiers a-board, under Mareſchal Schomberg, who were to make a Deſcent upon Holland, if they cou'd; and their not doing it, ſhew'd they had not been Superior at Sea. In the laſt Fight the French Squadron, commanded by D'Eſtrees, made a Tack to the Eaſtward, under Pretence of getting the Weather-Gage of the Dutch, and D'Eſtrees remain'd Spectator of it to the End of the Engagement. Monſieur Martel, Captain of a French Man of War, fought bravely, and was thrown into the Baſtile for it when he came Home. Theſe three little Succeſſes of the Dutch ſtrangely animated them, and diſcourag'd the Engliſh, who began to clamour loudly againſt the War with Holland, and the League with France; which diſpos'd our Court to hearken to the Mediation offer'd by Sweden, for a Treaty to be holden at Cologne, whither the King ſent his Ambaſſadors, the Earl of Sunderland, Sir Lionel Jenkins, and Sir Joſeph Williamſon: The two latter very heavy Negotiators; the firſt, a Miniſter of as great Abilities as any of that Age. But this Treaty was of ſhort Continuance; for the Emperor having order'd the Prince of Furſtenbergh, Dean and Plenipotentiary of Cologne, to be ſeiz'd on as a Traitor to the Empire, the French wou'd not treat till he was ſet at Liberty.

The French quit the Towns in Holland. In the mean while the French evacuated all the Places they had on the Rhine and Yſſel, Bon cutting off the Supplies that were expected from that Side, and a few Months after all the three Provinces were evacuated by them; which made the Elector of Cologne, and Biſhop of Munſter, ſtrike up a Peace with the States; and the Prince of Orange having taken Naerden, and made Amſterdam eaſy, the States General made him Hereditary Stadtholder, which none of his Illuſtrious Anceſtors had ever been. Colbert, the French Ambaſſador, was recall'd, as being too much led by the Earl of Arlington; and Monſieur de Ruvigny, the Lord Galway's Father, was ſent Ambaſſador to London in his Place; but though he was a Maſter of Intrigue, he cou'd not hinder the King's concluding a Peace with the Dutch, without which he cou'd have no Money.

Prince of Orange made Hereditary Stadtholder.

We have obſerv'd that the Lord Chancellor Shaftsbury ſtood in a very tottering Condition, and his Zeal for the Teſt Act was an unpardonable Crime; but what haſten'd his Fall, was a Speech he made in the Houſe of Lords laſt Seſſions of Parliament, on the following Occaſion. A.D.1673

Lord Shaftsbury too hard for Clifford Lord Clifford, when he was Treaſurer, had entertain'd a Project for a perpetual Fund, to render Parliaments uſeleſs, and had prepar'd a ſet Speech for introducing it. He read his Speech to the Earl of Shaftsbury, who deſir'd to hear it again, and upon the ſecond Reading, charg'd his Memory with the Subſtance of it. This gave him an Opportunity he had wiſh'd for, to be reveng'd of Clifford for ſtealing the White Staff from him by the Exchequer Buſineſs. Clifford made the intended Speech, the King and Duke of York being preſent in the Houſe to countenance the Deſign. The Country Lords, and thoſe who were not in the Secret, ſtar'd at one another; the whole Houſe at the End of the Speech remain'd in an aweful Silence, meditating the Fate of poor England; when my Lord Shaftsbury ſtood up, and anſwer'd his Speech from the Beginning to the End, ſhewing, "That his Propoſitions were extravagant, that what he aim'd at wou'd end in "Confuſion and the Ruin of the Government; "that it might, perhaps, ſend the Royal Family abroad again, to ſpend their Lives in Exile, "without Hopes of a Return;" which he ſpoke with ſo much Life and Spirit, that he confounded the Court-Counſels. While he was ſpeaking, the Duke, who was very angry with him, whiſper'd the King, What a Rogue you have of a Lord Chancellor! The King reply'd, Gods-fiſh, What a Fool you have of a Lord Treaſurer! The Debate ended in a Ruffle; Clifford narrowly eſcap'd being ſent to the Tower, and finding himſelf thus given up by the King, he declar'd, He wou'd ſerve no Prince who had not Courage to avow his Principles, and ſupport his Miniſters in the Execution of his Demands.

Shaftsbury Shaftsbury had made himſelf a new Enemy in the new Lord Treaſurer Osborn, who coming to take the Oaths as uſual in Chancery, the Lord Chancellor made a Speech to him, and among other Things ſaid, Kings are like Gods, they can make Choice of whom they pleaſe, yet in this they are like Men, they can only make Choice, but not render him they have choſen adequate to the Employment: You ought to remember that Parta tuere non minor eſt Virtus, and I wiſh you may long enjoy the Honour of your Place, and the King the Satisfaction of his Choice. The Lord Treaſurer thank'd the Lord Chancellor, but the next Day, when he had conſider'd the Terms in the Speech, he ſent to revoke his Thanks. offends Osborn.

Shaftsbury plac'd. In Michaelmas Term, the Earl of Shaftsbury was ſent for on a Sunday Morning to Court, as was alſo Sir Heneage Finch, Attorney General, to whom the Seal was promis'd. When my Lord came, he went with the King into his Cloſet, while the Popiſh Faction waited in Triumph to ſee him return without the Purſe. My Lord Shaftsbury being alone with the King, ſaid, Sir, I know you intend to give the Seals to the Attorney General, but I am ſure your Majeſty never deſign'd to diſmiſs me with Contempt. No, Godsfiſh, my Lord, reply'd the King, I will not do it with any ſuch Circumſtance as may look like an Affront. Then, Sir, ſays the Earl, I deſire your Majeſty will permit me to carry the Seals before you to Chapel, and ſend them afterwards from my own Houſe: To which his Majeſty, who wanted not good Nature on certain Occaſions, agreed. The Earl entertain'd the King with News, and other

A.D.1673 other diverting Stories, till the very Minute he was to go to Church, on purpoſe to amuſe the Courtiers, and his Succeſſor, whom he knew to be on the Rack, for fear the Earl ſhou'd prevail on the King to change his Mind. His Majeſty and my Lord came out of the Cloſet talking together, and ſmiling, and went to Church, which extreamly ſurpriz'd them all, who cou'd have no Opportunity to inform themſelves what was to be expected. Some ran immediately to tell the Duke all their Meaſures were broken, and the Attorney General was inconſolable. After Sermon, my Lord went Home with the Seals, and ſending them from his Houſe, that Evening the King gave them to the Attorney, who was hardly yet recover'd out of the Fright the Cloſet-Converſation had put him into. But before the Earl of Shaftsbury was remov'd, the Court permitted him to open the Seſſion of Parliament on the 20th of October with a Speech, wherein he endeavour'd to explain away the Malignity of the Expreſſion, Delenda eſt Carthago, which he had us'd in a former Speech, by referring it to the Louveſtein Faction, whom he now terms the Carthaginian Party in Holland. But this, ſays my Lord of Sarum, made him as ridiculous, as the other had made him odious.

Sir Heneage Finch made Lord Keeper.

Lords adviſe to ſend away the Duke of York.

About this Time the Duke of Ormond, the Earl of Arlington, the Earl of Shaftsbury, and Secretary Coventry, offer'd Advice to the King to ſend the Duke of York for ſome time from the Court, as a good Expedient for himſelf and the Duke. The King hearken'd ſo far to it, that he ſent them to move it to his Brother, who was highly incens'd at it, ſaying, I will obey all the King's Orders, but will look on thoſe as my Enemies who offer him ſuch Advices. And he never forgave this to any of them, no not to Coventry, for all his good Opinion of him, and the good Services Coventry had done the Popiſh and French Faction. Colonel Birch reflected on him in the Houſe of Commons, for being zealous, before he was Secretary, to grant the King a Supply to ſupport the Triple League, when at the ſame Time he knew the two Crowns, England and Sweden, had determin'd to diſſolve it. There was juſt Reaſon to believe the Charge was true, and Coventry ſitting near the Bar, roſe up in a Flame, and with great Aſſeverations deny'd it, ſaying, If an Angel that came from Heaven ſhou'd reproach him with it, he wou'd prevent his going back if 'twere in his Power.

He will not ſtir.

Secretary Coventry's Treachery.

This Year Sir Tobias Bridges took the Iſland of Tobago, in the Weſt-Indies, from the Dutch, and the latter took the Iſland of St. Helena from the Engliſh, but it was re-taken by Capt. Mundy.

On the 31ſt of October, the Houſe of Commons being in a Grand Committee, RESOLV'D, " That conſidering the preſent Condition of the " Nation, this Houſe will not take into further " Debate the Conſideration of any Aid or Supply, " or Charge upon the Subject, before the Time " of Payment of the laſt Aſſeſſment be expir'd, " except it ſhall appear that the Obſtinacy of the " Dutch ſhall render it neceſſary; nor before this " Kingdom be effectually ſecur'd from Popery " and Popiſh Counſellors, and the other preſent " Grievances be redreſs'd." They alſo Voted the Standing Army to be a Grievance, and prepar'd an Addreſs to his Majeſty, ſhewing, That the Standing Army was a Grievance and a Burthen to the Nation. They intended to preſent this Addreſs on the 4th of November, when the King unexpectedly came to the Houſe of Lords, and ſent the Uſher of the Black Rod to the Commons to command the Attendance of the Speaker, and that Houſe; but it happen'd that the Speaker and the Uſher met both at the Door of the Houſe of Commons, and the Speaker being within the Houſe, ſome of the Members ſuddenly ſhut the Door, and cry'd out, To the Chair, to the Chair; others cry'd, The Black Rod is at the Door: The Speaker Seymour was immediately hurry'd to the Chair, and then it was mov'd, 1. That our Alliance with France is a Grievance; 2. That the Evil Counſellors about the King are a Grievance; 3. That the Duke of Lauderdale is a Grievance, and not fit to be truſted or employed in any Office or Place of Truſt. Upon which there was a general Cry, To the Queſtion, to the Queſtion; but the Black Rod knocking earneſtly at the Door, Seymour, the Speaker, leap'd out of the Chair, and the Houſe roſe in great Confuſion. Being come to the Houſe of Peers, the King made a Speech to them, which ſhews that his Miniſters were as weak as his Enemies need wiſh: For the Nation now deteſted the Dutch War, and the Contrivers of it; yet he mentions it as if he had Hopes that they wou'd pay him for it, A Support againſt our only Competitor at Sea; and aſſures them that he (who is himſelf a Papiſt) will not be wanting to let all his Subjects ſee that no Care can be greater than his own, in the effectual ſuppreſſing of Popery. Then the Parliament was prorogu'd to the 7th of January.

Parliament Vote againſt giving Money.

Some time in this Seſſion, a Wooden Shoe, with ſome Beads, was laid in the Parliament-Houſe, near the Speaker's Chair; 'twas ſuch as the Peaſants wear in France. On one End were drawn the Fleurs de Lis, and on the other the Arms of England; between the two Arms was written, Utrum horum mavis accipe. The Houſe of Commons intended to keep a Day of Humiliation on account of the Growth of Popery, and ſolemnly to celebrate the 5th of November, the Anniverſary of the Powder Plot, Dr. Stillingfleet being deſir'd to preach before them; but the King prorogu'd the Parliament the Day before, Nov. 4.

A Junto.

The Cabal being broken, a Junto ſucceeded, conſiſting of Finch, Danby, Lauderdale, Arlington, and Coventry, whoſe Abilities were by no means equal to thoſe of the Cabal. Biſhop Burnet gives this Character of the Lord Keeper Finch; He had no ſort of Knowledge in Foreign Affairs, and yet he lov'd to talk of them perpetually, by which he expos'd himſelf to thoſe who underſtood them. He thought he was bound to juſtify the Court in all Debates in the Houſe of Lords, which he did with the Vehemency of a Pleader, rather than with the Solemnity of a Senator: He was long much admir'd for his Eloquence, but it was labour'd and affected, and he ſaw it as much deſpis'd before he dy'd. He was too eloquent on the Bench, in the Houſe of Lords, and in common Converſation, &c. It is Biſhop Burnet ſays it, and it behoves me to produce Authorities for my Characters now I draw ſo near Home; for no body will bear to hear any thing ſaid of a Perſon that belongs to them, but what is to his Praiſe, in which, as well as in a few other Things, we differ from the Spirit and Manners of the old Romans. From this Keeper's Adminiſtration one may expect a ſtricter Hand over the Nonconformiſts, as far as his Counſel and Authority cou'd go. As to the Chancery, he was a very good Judge, and highly to be commended for his Probity and Reſolution. Finch.

His Majeſty ſent for the two Chief Juſtices, and the Chief Baron, and commanded them to conſider of the moſt effectual Means for putting the Laws in Execution againſt Papiſts; and an Order was made that no Roman Catholick ſhou'd preſume to come into his Preſence, or to his Palace, or to the Place where his Court ſhall be; which

A.D.1673 which extended not however to his Miſtreſſes, who were moſt of them ſtanch Papiſts, and zealous for that Religion; particularly the Dutcheſſes of Cleveland and Portſmouth. The former, whoſe Luſt was inſatiable, to pleaſe the King, or ſome other Gallant, turn'd Papiſt; and William Pen the Quaker having the firſt News of it, went to Dr. Stillingfleet with it, to mortify him, as he ſaid to me, with the Loſs of ſo conſiderable a Member of the Church: But when he had told his News to the Doctor, Stillingfleet retorted, If the Church of Rome has got by her no more than the Church of England has loſt, the Matter is not much. This Woman was ſo infamous in her Amours, that ſhe made no Scruple of owning her Lovers; among whom was Goodman the Player, who ſo narrowly eſcap'd the Gallows ſome Years after; and the Fellow was ſo inſolent upon it, that one Night, when the Queen was at the Theatre, and the Curtain, as uſual, was immediately order'd to be drawn up, Goodman cry'd, Is my Dutcheſs come? and being anſwer'd, No, he ſwore terribly the Curtain ſhou'd not be drawn till the Dutcheſs came, which was at the Inſtant, and ſav'd the Affront to the Queen.

Dr. Stillingfleet's Saying of the Dutcheſs of Cleveland.

1674. On the 7th of January the Parliament met, and the King and Keeper made Speeches as uſual. Echard aſſures us upon his Word and Judgment, that the new Lord Keeper's Speeches were not only long, but eloquent: What ſort of Eloquence it was Biſhop Burnet knew, and told us. He made ſome fulſom Complements on the King, upon his being punctual to his Word, which the Reader by this Time is very well appris'd of: On his making the Laws the Meaſure of his Power, as by his diſpenſing with thoſe Laws: On his ſtrenuous Proceedings againſt the Papiſts, and forbidding them to come within his Palace, at the ſame time that his Lordſhip and all the World knew they were the moſt welcome there of any People. The reſt being Eloquence ſo pure and ſimple, ſo free from affected Flowers and Graces, ought not to be omitted, as Mr. Archdeacon obſerves; "Theſe "are not ſingle and tranſient Acts, but ſuch as "flow from Habits: Theſe are not Leaves and "Bloſſoms, but true, ſolid, and laſting Fruits. "Long, long, may that Royal Tree live and "flouriſh upon which theſe Fruits do grow." Habits and Fruits being all one in Logick, we proceed, "And yet his Majeſty's Indulgence to you "reſts not here; he gives you Leave to ſtudy and "contrive your own Aſſurance. The very Eſſence of Parliaments is the Preſervation of the Common-wealth; and the King gives them Leave to do what they neceſſarily muſt do as long as they are together; extreamly Gracious and Tender! Again, "You have free Leave to make any reaſonable "Propoſition, and his gracious Promiſe that he "will receive it: This is a Satisfaction equal to "all your Wiſhes. Now if ever your Joys are "full, there wants no more to the Improvement "of this Happineſs, but the Wiſdom of the Par-"liament to uſe the Advantage with due Mode-"ration. If therefore, upon Enquiry, you ſhall "think it needful to apply any other Remedies, "it is extreamly to be wiſh'd that thoſe Reme-"dies may be few, and withal, that they be gen-"tle and eaſy too; for the Sick periſh as often "by too many Remedies, as by none at all." By which Sophiſtical Argument the Uſe of all Phyſick is damn'd, becauſe ſometimes too many Remedies are us'd, therefore uſe none at all. Thus are the Commons treated like a Company of Quacks, who are in danger of preſcribing without Judgment, and more likely to Kill than to Cure. Again, "But none fall ſo fatally and ſo "finally as they who, being enter'd into ſome De-"grees of Convaleſcence, reſolve to recover it in "an Inſtant; and had rather make ſome great "Effort, or try ſome bold Experiment upon them-"ſelves, than obſerve the Methods, or attend "thoſe gradual Progreſſions which are neceſſary "to perfect that Health, and compleat that Re-"covery." If one had been ſo happy as to have known what is meant by this Metaphorical Doctorſhip, ſome Account might have been given of it: The Growth of Popery, and the Progreſs of the French Arms, were the Things chiefly complain'd of: Both of them had thoſe Progreſſions which threaten'd Convulſion and Diſſolution; but according to this Preſcription, the Phyſick muſt be gentle, eaſy, and ſlow: There muſt be no new Law againſt Papiſts, nor Proceedings againſt Evil Counſellors, nor Breach of the Alliance with France; they are bold Experiments, &c. I ſhall meddle with no more of theſe Speeches, and only hint theſe Things, to ſhew what Sincerity, as well as Elegance there are in them. The King told the Parliament, He had no Treaty with France, but what was and ſhou'd be made known. Madam's Journey to Dover, and Abbot Primi's Memoirs of Colbert's Negotiations, are, we ſuppoſe, the Proofs of it. Notwithſtanding this eloquent Harangue upon the King's Care of the Proteſtant Religion, the Houſe of Lords preſented an Addreſs, that Papiſts might be baniſh'd ten Miles from London, and a Proclamation was iſſu'd purſuant to it. Both Lords and Commons then join'd in an Addreſs for a General Faſt, wherein were very ſtrong Expreſſions againſt both the War and Popery. The King comply'd with this Addreſs, and the 4th of February was appointed for the Day of Humiliation. The Houſe of Commons Reſolv'd, "That they wou'd in the firſt Place "proceed to have their Grievances effectually re-"dreſs'd, the Proteſtant Religion, their Liber-"ties and Properties effectually ſecur'd, and to "ſuppreſs Popery, and remove all Perſons and "Counſellors popiſhly affected, or otherwiſe ob-"noxious or dangerous to the Government. They alſo order'd another Addreſs to his Majeſty, "That the Militia of London and Middleſex "may be in Readineſs at an Hour's Warning, and "the Militia of all other Counties of England at "a Day's Warning, for ſuppreſſing all tumultu-"ous Inſurrections which may be occaſion'd by "Papiſts, &c." The King's Anſwer was, He wou'd take a ſpecial Care, as well for the Preſervation of their Perſons, as of their Liberties and Properties. The King's extream Neceſſities obliging him to theſe Compliances with the Parliament, and his being too lukewarm in Matters of Religion, did about this Time very much diſguſt the Papiſts; and it is thought that Coleman now enter'd into the moſt criminal Part of his Correſpondence with the French Court; and from hence ſome date the Beginnings of the Popiſh Plot, though it is to be ſuppos'd that the Papiſts have not been without Plots ever ſince the Reformation.

A.D.1674

A Faſt.

Lord Keeper's Eloquence.

The Beginning of the Popiſh Plot.

The Houſe of Commons paſs'd a Vote, That the Princes of the Blood Royal ſhou'd all marry Proteſtants; they reſolv'd to fall on the Miniſtry, and began with the Duke of Lauderdale, againſt whom they voted an Addreſs to remove him from the King's Preſence and Council for ever. They went next upon the Duke of Buckingham; and it being mov'd, in his Name, that the Houſe wou'd hear him, he was admitted. The firſt Day of his being there, he fell into ſuch a Diſorder, that he pretended to be taken ill, and deſir'd to be admitted again, which was granted; and in his Speech next Day, he thank'd the Houſe for the Honour they had twice done him, eſpecially expreſſing himſelf ſo ill Yeſterday. He juſtify'd his own Deſigns, laying all the ill Counſels upon others,

Lauderdale addreſs'd againſt.

Duke of Buckingham's Speech to the Commons.

A.D.1674 others, chiefly on Lord Arlington; intimating plainly that the Root of all Errors was in the King and the Duke, and that there was a closer Intelligence between the Court of England and that of France, than King Charles had made known to his Parliament. When we were to consider what to do, we were to advise with the French Ambassador; Who was it that was so often lock'd up with the French Ambassador? My Spirit moves me to tell you, he said, Hunting is a good Diversion, but if a Man will hunt with a Brace of Lobsters, he will have but ill Sport; which he apply'd to Prince Rupert and Lord Arlington, in a Conversation with Bishop Burnet, but it was now understood to mean the King and his Brother. He was examin'd to several Interrogatories after his Speech; but he gave so little Satisfaction to the House, either in his Speech or his Answers, that they voted an Address to remove him from the King's Presence and Councils. Then they attack'd the Lord Arlington, who was also heard in the House, and spoke much better than was expected. He excus'd himself, without blackning the King; which had so good an Effect, that tho' he, as Secretary of State, was more expos'd than any other, by the many Warrants and Orders he sign'd, yet he was acquitted by a very small Majority. He had lately been very complaisant to the Nonconformists, and they in Gratitude did him what Service they cou'd in the Parliament, who were resolv'd to force the King to a Peace with the Dutch. He wou'd have done any thing, and parted with any Persons, if that wou'd have procur'd him Money for carrying on the War, but there was no Hope of it; so the Earl of Arlington press'd the Spanish Ambassador, the Marquis of Fresnoy, to procure an Order from his Court to their Ambassadors at the Hague, to excite the States and the Prince of Orange to get a Proposition of Peace set on Foot. And that it might have some Shew of a Peace both begg'd and bought, he propos'd that the States shou'd offer the King a Sum of Money, which shou'd be made over by him to the Prince for Payment of the Debt the King ow'd him. Ruvigny the French Ambassador press'd the King much to give this Parliament Satisfaction in Point of Religion. The King answer'd him, If it was not for my Brother's Folly, La Sottise de mon Frere, I wou'd get out of all my Difficulties.

Address'd against.

Arlington acquitted.

The King blames the Duke of York's Folly.

Sir William Temple was sent for to Court to negotiate the Peace with the Dutch. Lord Arlington told him, He wou'd not pretend to the Merit of having nam'd him on this Occasion, or whether the King or the Lord Treasurer did it first, but that the whole Committee of Council join'd in it. He concluded, Since a Peace was to be made, no other Person was so fit to make it; therefore the King, with many kind Expressions, gave Order to Sir William to prepare for his Journey to Holland, and the Secretary drew up his Instructions. However, he cou'd not make so much Haste, but the Dutch made more, and sent over Powers to Fresnoy, the Spanish Minister, to treat and conclude a Peace with the King; which Powers arriv'd three Days after the Junto had sent for Sir William Temple, who advis'd the putting off his Journey to Holland, and to begin the Treaty at London, as much more for his Majesty's Honour; to which the King agreed, adding, tho' Sir William does not treat the Peace at the Hague, he shall at London: And the whole Treaty was concluded at three Meetings between Fresnoy and Temple. The two Points of greatest Difficulty were the Flag, and the recalling the English Troops out of the French Service. The Flag had been given up in former Treaties, and the Dutch hesitating about it now, wou'd have had very ill Effects; so it was given up again, and it was stipulated, that the English Troops in the French Service shou'd wear out without any Recruits: Which Stipulation was so far from being observ'd by the King of England, that English Men were press'd to recruit them; and to these Troops does Sir William Temple, and the Germans too, ascribe the Glory of all the French Conquests in the Campaigns in which they serv'd; for those Troops, not only in Turennes's Life, but at his Death too, sav'd the whole French Army. Read Coke on this Article, "If this be as Sir William says, the King here-"by, instead of being a Protector, becomes a "Murderer of his Subjects, in permitting them "to kill one another on both Sides; for it is im-"possible the War shou'd be just on both Sides; "nor do I believe the like Precedent can be "shew'd, unless by the King's Grandfather, "James I.

A.D.1674 Bravery of the English in the French Service

Sir William Temple employ'd to conclude a Peace with the Dutch.

This hasty Peace, huddl'd up in less than four Days, between the 5th, 6th and 9th of February, wou'd not admit of the Establishment of a Marine Treaty and Regulation of the East-India Trade between the English and Dutch. By this Treaty that of Breda was confirm'd. The Dutch were to pay 800,000 Patacoons, and had made over to them the Islands of Amboyna and Pollerone, which they had ravish'd from the English, and by which they not only supply Europe, but India and Persia with Spice. Surinam was also confirm'd to them. The Arrears of 30,000 Pounds a Year for the Fishery were discharg'd, as were the Damages sustain'd by their Pyratical Capture of Sir Paul Pindar and Sir William Courton's Ships, the Bona Esperanza and Henry Bonaventure, valu'd at 150,000 Pounds. The Peace was sign'd at Lord Arlington's Office, and the King went immediately to the Withdrawing Room, where, seeing Monsieur Ruvigny, he took him aside and told him, He had been doing a Thing which went more to his Heart than the losing his Right-Hand: He had sign'd a Peace with the Dutch upon a Project brought him by the Spanish Ambassador. He saw nothing cou'd content the House of Commons, or draw Money from them: And Lord Arlington had press'd him so hard, that he stood out till he was weary of his Life. Ruvigny told him, "That what was "done cou'd not be help'd, but he wou'd let him "see how faithfully he wou'd serve him on this "Occasion. He doubted not his Master wou'd "submit all his Pretensions to him, and make "him the Arbiter and Mediator of the Peace." Which the King receiv'd with great Joy, and said it wou'd be the most acceptable Service that cou'd be done him. Upon all which Bishop Burnet reflects thus, "And so the King got out "of the War very little to his Honour, having "both engag'd in it upon unjust Grounds, and "manag'd it all along with ill Conduct and bad "Success;" as we read in Acherley, The Time for the French King's making King Charles absolute Master of his Parliament was respited till a more seasonable Opportunity.

Peace concluded on Terms dishonourable to the King.

The Dutch War unjust and ill manag'd.

The House of Commons continuing their Debates for keeping out Popery, order'd a severe Bill to be brought in with a new Test, renouncing Transubstantiation, &c. but they had not Time to pass it into a Law. The King had laid a Copy of the Project of Peace, brought by the Spanish Ambassador, before the Parliament; and the latter having thank'd him for it, they humbly advis'd him to proceed in it. On the Beginning of February they resolv'd, "That the Continu-"ance of any Standing Force in this Nation,

" other than the Militia, is a great Grievance " and Vexation to the People, and it is the " humble Petition and Addreſs of this Houſe to " his Majeſty, that he will immediately cauſe to " be disbanded that Part of them that were " rais'd ſince the 1ſt Day of January, 1663." They alſo addreſs'd againſt the Horſe-Guards, and gave ſeveral Reaſons for breaking them; among others was this, That the Life-Guard is a Place of Refuge and Retreat for Papiſts, and Men Popiſhly affected, and a School and Nurſery for Men of debauch'd and arbitrary Principles, and Favourers of the French Government, as it did too plainly appear in the Caſe of Sir John Coventry. On the 11th of February the King came to the Houſe, and made a Speech to both Houſes, wherein he acquainted them with his having made a Peace with the Dutch, a Speedy, Honourable, and Laſting Peace, and that he had given Orders for disbanding the Army, which they thank'd him for. But ſtill the Commons gave no Money, tho' the King again and again deſir'd ſome for building great Men of War; inſtead of which they appointed a Committee to inſpect the Laws lately made in Scotland, whereby an Army is authoriz'd to march into England or Ireland, and peruſe ſuch other Laws as do tend to the Breach of the Union of the two Nations. They likewiſe in a Grand Committee ſhortly after took into Conſideration the State and Condition of the Kingdom of Ireland, and Reſolv'd, " That a Committee be appointed to inſpect the " State and Condition of that Kingdom, and " more eſpecially to conſider of the State of Re- " ligion, and the Militia and the Forces of that " Kingdom, and examine the Matters of Fact " relating thereunto." Another Committee was appointed, " To inſpect the Laws, and to con- " ſider how the King may commit any Sub- " ject by his immediate Warrant, as the Law " now ſtands, and to report their Opinions. And " further, they were order'd to conſider how the " Law now ſtands touching the committing of " Perſons by the Council-Table, and to report " the ſame." Upon which Occaſion they brought in a particular Bill concerning Writs of Habeas Corpus; a Bill much for the Liberty of the Subject, which was read three Times, and paſs'd the Houſe of Commons. But theſe vigorous Proceedings allarm'd the Junto, and on the 24th of February the King coming to the Houſe of Peers, made ſtill new Proteſtations of his Care for the Security of the Proteſtant Religion, and then the Lord Keeper prorogu'd the Parliament to the 10th of November. Echard cloſes up theſe Tranſactions with a Reflection which lets us into the very Depths of his Politicks: " Here it is obſer- " vable, that in the laſt War, when the Engliſh " contended with all the Power of Holland and " France, they had greater Succeſs in their Bat- " tles than now, when they had join'd with the " Power of France againſt Holland alone." In the firſt War the French left the Dutch as they left the Engliſh in the ſecond; and both Engliſh and Dutch were rather the worſe than the better for ſuch falſe and unnatural Allies. A School-Boy cou'd have made a better Obſervation.

Habeas Corpus Act.

Sir William Temple ſent to act as Plenipotentiary Mediator.

We have mention'd Ruvigny's Saying to King Charles concerning his Mediation, which ſoon after was offer'd in Form to the Powers engag'd in the War. Sir William Temple was ſent Ambaſſador to the Hague and Bruſſels, to make that Offer to the States and the Governor of the Spaniſh Netherlands. What Opinion Spain and Holland had of King Charles's Sincerity with them, appears by a Paſſage in a Letter Sir William Temple wrote from Bruſſels, The Spaniards interpret very ill the Offers of his Majeſty's Mediation I made at the Hague, and believe it upon Concert with France, and to the End of inducing Holland to a ſeparate Peace from them. I cannot but reflect upon the ſtrange Difference I found in the Conſideration I left of his Majeſty in thoſe Countries, and what I meet now, which is grounded upon a Belief of his being too much in with France, which our Court took no great Pains to conceal; nay, one of the Junto being put to it how to anſwer ſome Objections made againſt their Conduct, with reſpect to the Partial Mediation for France, as againſt the Intereſt of England, was ſo weak and ſo impudent as to ſay, Faut il que tout ſe faſſe par Politique rien par Amitie, Muſt every thing be done out of Policy, and nothing for Friendſhip.

A.D.1674

The King not truſted abroad.

I ſhall not enter into the Detail of Sir William Temple's private Diſcourſe with the King before he went on the Embaſſy of Mediation; 'tis a Repetition of the ill Steps taken in Favour of Popery, France, and Arbitrary Power, only the latter Part of it will give us another Inſtance of his Majeſty's keeping his Word. " I never knew " but one Foreigner, ſaid Sir William, who un- " derſtood England well, and that was Monſieur " Gourville, who, when he was at Bruſſels the " firſt Dutch War, and heard the Parliament " grew weary of it, ſaid, The King has nothing " to do but to make Peace; adding, I have been " long enough in England, ſeen enough of the " Court, and People, and Parliament, to con- " clude, That a King of England, who will be " the MAN of his People, is the greateſt King " in the World; but if he will be ſomething more, " By - - - - - he is nothing at all. The King " heard Sir William very attentively, but ſeem'd " a little impatient at firſt; yet at laſt he de- " clar'd, Sir William had Reaſon, and ſo had " Gourville; and then laying his Hand upon Sir " William's, he added, And I will be the MAN " of my People; in which he came off, as when " he ſaid, He wou'd alſo make the World afraid " of him in his Turn.

Sir William Temple found but a cold Reception in Holland, and a colder in Flanders. Both the Prince of Orange and the Spaniards look'd on the King's Mediation as an Interruption to the Succeſs they expected by their Arms; and had there been a better Underſtanding amongſt the Confederate Generals, of whom Zouche the Imperial General left the Prince at the Siege of Audenard, that Mediation wou'd not have been ſo long in Being as it prov'd to be.

In May, this Year, came out a Proclamation of that Kind, which diſcovers the State of the Government; for when it is ſo bad that nothing good can be ſaid of it, 'tis convenient that nothing at all ſhou'd be ſaid. The Proclamation was chiefly to ſuppreſs a Report that the King intended to diſſolve the Parliament, whereas he only intended that they ſhou'd not ſit in a Twelve Month; then all Writing or Speaking any falſe News, or intermeddling with the Affairs of State or Government, or with the Perſons of any of his Majeſty's Counſellors or Miniſters, are prohibited in common and ordinary Diſcourſe. A Proclamation, with a Reward of Five Pounds, was publiſh'd for apprehending and tranſporting Prieſts and Jeſuits. The King din'd with Sir Robert Vyner, Lord Mayor, at Guild-hall, October the 29th, and accepted of the Freedom of the City out of the Chamberlain's Office, and a Copy of it was preſented to him by the Lord Mayor and Sir Thomas Player Chamberlain, on their Knees in the Banquetting-Houſe; which, according to my Author, was an unparelled Favour and Honour

A.D.1674 nour done the City by his Majeſty, beyond the Example of all his Progenitors. They made the ſame Preſent alſo to the Duke of York, and inſtead of a fine Deſcription of it, as in Eckard, Mr. Marvel celebrated it in a Poem, which alluding to the Apprentices taking out their Freedom, has this Stanza among others of the like Nature;

Marvel's Verſes on the King's ill Conduct.

He ne'er knew, not he, to ſerve or be free,
Tho' he has paſs'd thro' ſo many Adventures;
And e'er ſince he was Bound, that is, he was [Crown'd,
He has every Day broke his Indentures.

Monſieur Ruvigny, the French Ambaſſador, being a Proteſtant, the Duke of York and his Party look'd on him with an evil Eye, finding that their Deſigns were not the forwarder by the Preſence of ſuch a Miniſter: So they diſpatch'd Sir William Throgmorton ſecretly to Paris to have him recall'd; which was done, and Monſieur Courtin ſent to ſucceed him.

The Figure the King makes abroad.

This Miniſter was very induſtrious, and extended his Maſter's Liberality among the Engliſh Courtiers, while our late Confederates, to Day the Dutch, to Morrow the French, are cutting one anothers Throats, without our uſing any other Endeavours to part them, but crying out, Pray Gentlemen be quiet.

There is an Author which ſpeaks of King Charles's breaking the Triple Alliance in a Manner which ſets that fraudful and fatal Tranſaction in its true Light. It is Biſhop Parker, who was at this time writing againſt the Preſbyterians in England as furiouſly as the French were fighting againſt them in Holland. He tells us,

What Bp. Parker ſays of breaking the Triple League.

" To that Breach is to be attributed all the " Havock which ought at this Day to be lament-
" ed. That as ſoon as it was broken, the French
" King invaded every Place, attacking thoſe
" ſeparately whom he durſt not attack jointly;
" ſo that Europe was ſuddenly in a Conflagration;
" and firſt of all Holland was, as it were in an
" Inſtant, over-run as far as Amſterdam with a " great Slaughter.

p. 173. " This Proceeding oblig'd all the People of " Europe, from their ſeveral Habitations, far and " wide, except Britain, to defend themſelves
" againſt this overgrown Warrior; whence there
" was ſo vaſt a Deluge of Chriſtian Blood, as " never before happen'd in ſo ſhort a Time. The

The Charge is brought againſt King Charles II. by Dr. Samuel Parker, made Biſhop of Oxford by his Brother King James II. and it being ſo true in Fact and Conſequence, what can be ſaid to juſtify this Conduct? Indeed what Marvel adds in the ſame Poem is not more Satyrical than it is Juſt; A.D.1674

Sir Anthony Dean, Shipwright, ſent to France.

Soon after Peace was made with the Dutch, Sir Anthony Dean the King's chief Ship-Builder, was ſent to France with the Model of a Man of War, which he carry'd by Water to Roan; from whence it was convey'd by Land to Verſailles, and the French King had it launch'd in his great Pond in thoſe Gardens, where he came on Board, and had much Conference with Sir Anthony upon it. Several Carpenters, and vaſt Quantities of Naval Stores were alſo ſent to his Yards; inſomuch that Coke tells us, King Charles emptied his own Magazines to fill the French King's, who in Return, not only exorbitantly enlarg'd his Impoſitions on the Engliſh in their Trade to France, but let looſe his Privateers upon them, as if there had been no Peace, who plunder'd and murder'd Engliſh Merchants and Mariners, and made Prize of their Effects, block'd up our Harbours, and took our Ships out of their very Ports. If Complaints were made, they were baffled, except ſome Ships that were redeem'd by Sir Ellis Leighton, Secretary to the Lord Berkley, then Ambaſſador at Paris, who made a ſecond Prize of them. Indeed the French Court treated that of England, as Men treat thoſe that hang upon them. Sir William Lockhart, when he was Ambaſſador for King Charles, complain'd that his Buſineſs met not with ſuch Diſpatch as he was us'd to meet with in Cromwel's Time; but we may ſay as Boreel did, Ah! c'eſt une autre Choſe, Ah! that's another Thing; for certainly there was as much Difference between the two Genius's, as there is between Glory and Pleaſure. We will leave foreign Affairs this Year with Mr. Acherley's Account of them, during the Campaigns of 1674, and 1675.

In which " the Engliſh Forces, which King Charles ſent to " aſſiſt him, perform'd extraordinary Services, " and turn'd King Charles's Mediation at Ni- " meguen for a Peace, into a meer Amuſement, " whilſt the French King, with the under-hand " Aſſiſtance of King Charles, carried on his Mi- " litary Undertakings." And whilſt the Duke of York, and his Secretary Coleman, carried on a treaſonable Correſpondence with Ferrier, the French King's Confeſſor, to bring us under Popery and Tyranny, in which they went a good Way: Whilſt alſo Sheldon and his Brethren of the ſame Stamp, were labouring to cure the Engliſh Court of all Diſpoſitions to Moderation, and exciting them to renew the Perſecution againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters, which they had more at Heart than Religion and Liberty, ſo jealous were they of every thing that touch'd their Dignities, Powers and Revenues, Edward Coleman, Secretary to the Duke of York, having put himſelf at the Head of Affairs in England, for the Advancement of Popery, made Application for his Support to the French King, by his Confeſſor, and the Pope's Inter-nuncio at Paris, to whom he wrote ſeveral Letters, particularly one dated the 29th of June this Year, wherein he ſaid, " The Duke of York was very " ſenſible of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's Friend- " ſhip, and has done him all the good Offices he " is capable of; that he is of his Majeſty's Opi- " nion about recalling the Parliament, and thinks " it not to be uſeful, but very dangerous; that " the Houſe of Commons had a Deſign to leſſen " the Duke, and root out the Catholick Religion, " as much as is in their Power; That the Duke " doubts not but it is abſolutely neceſſary for " the Intereſt of his Majeſty, and for his own, " to hinder the Meeting of the Parliament. He " then deſires his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty to write " freely to his Britannick Majeſty, and make him " ſome generous Offers of his Purſe, if he will " diſſolve the Parliament, in which he ſhall be " aſſiſted in England." In another Letter, dated in September, 'tis ſaid, " The Duke will govern " himſelf according to the Advices he receives " from France, and will treat of nothing concern- " ing the Catholick Religion, with Monſieur Ru- " vigny, nor with any other but the French " King's Confeſſor. His moſt Chriſtian Maje- " ſty has made a very generous Offer of his " Purſe to the Duke, and his Aſſiſtance is at " preſent neceſſary to ſubdue entirely thoſe, who " being exaſperated againſt him as much as " againſt the Duke, and are angry with the Duke, " only becauſe he is unalterably addicted to the " Intereſt of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, will ex- " erciſe their Malice, and their Rage, with more " Brutality than ever." Thus, after preſſing for more Money, to give the Duke Credit, with his Brother the King, the Traitor Coleman adds, There will nothing more remain to be fear'd, by his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, but his Royal Highneſs will be able to diſſolve the Parliament with Eaſe, and afterwards in recompence of ſuch Aſſiſtance, will perform on his Part, all that his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty ſhall ask of him, and will proceed with Sincerity, upon the Word of a Prince, for the Intereſt of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty. The Reader cannot help obſerving, that here is the preſumptive Heir of the Crown in a horrid Conſpiracy with the moſt implacable, powerful and cruel Enemy of our Religion and Liberty, to deſtroy both; for he has promis'd to do whatever the French King ſhall bid him; yet when the beſt and wiſeſt Men of the Nation were for excluding him the Succeſſion four or five Years afterwards, how do the Compleat Hiſtori- ans thunder out their Anathemas againſt them! In his Letter of the 4th of the ſame Month, Coleman ſays, If the Treaſure of the Church is ever to be made uſe of, it ought to be now, for they can demand nothing which the Duke will not be capable to do, for the Pope's Friends, and without their Aid, he will run great Hazard of being loſt, both himſelf and his Aſſociates. In a Letter of the 4th of October, to the Inter-nuncio, Coleman writes, You agree with me, that Money is the only Means of bringing the King into the Duke's Intereſt, and of diſengaging him from the Parliament; yet forſooth, this Traitor muſt not be hang'd when he is call'd to an Account for this Treaſon. If it had been prov'd upon his Maſter, then a Subject, and there had been Juſtice and Spirit enough in the Nation to have made him accountable, much Argument, much Trouble, much Treaſure, and much Blood had been ſav'd. The Plot we ſee plainly was to put an End to Parliaments for ever, to eſtabliſh Popery, and lay this Nation at the Mercy of France. Again, You muſt alſo agree with me, that nothing can more promote the Intereſt of the Catholick Party, which is the principal Object of the Duke's Care and Affection, and of the Hatred of the Parliament, and which muſt hope or fear, according as the one or the other of them encreaſe in Power. ----- Nothing in the World is more certain, than that the King has a good Inclination towards the Duke and the Catholicks. Pray mind how often his Majeſty gave the Parliament Aſſurances of his Zeal and Care for the Proteſtant Religion, and wou'd join himſelf willingly and inſeparably to the Intereſts of his Royal Highneſs and the Catholicks, if he did not apprehend ſome Danger from ſuch an Union, which however he would not have Cauſe to fear, if he found their Intereſt, and conſequently their Power ſo far advanc'd above that of their Adverſaries, that they ſhould neither have the Power, nor the Boldneſs to conteſt any thing with them, which the King cou'd ſee in a very little Time. Here the Mask is taken quite off; if the Pope and the French King will aſſiſt the Duke of York as he deſires, the Parliament ſhall neither have the Power, nor the Boldneſs to contend any longer for their Religion and Liberties. Again, I am certain Money cou'd not fail of perſwading the King to it, and then the Traitor ſpeaks but too truly of him, For there is nothing it cannot make him do, tho' it were as much to his Prejudice as this we endeavour to perſwade him to, is to his Advantage. Theſe, and other Genuine Letters of Coleman's, are ſufficient Proofs of the Popiſh Plot in general, and the Objection that is made to it, on account of the King's being a Papiſt, is removed, if we conſider the Opinion the Papiſts had of him, that he wou'd do any thing for Money; that he car'd not what became of Religion, if he had Eaſe and Pleaſure; that every Parliament brought them into Peril of utter Ruin; if they wou'd open the Peoples Purſes, that the next Succeſſor was their own; and tho' his Morals were not very good, his Principles were Popiſh and Flaming. It is no wonder therefore that they conſented to take off one Popiſh Brother, from whoſe Indolence they expected nothing good to them, and to place another Popiſh Brother on the Throne, from whoſe Bigotry they expected every thing.

The King hearty for Popery.

Why the Papiſts plotted againſt him.

Echard tells us, that John Earl of Mulgrave, late Duke of Buckingham, was this Year made a Knight of the Garter, by the Favour of the Dutcheſs of Cleaveland, the Earls of Sunderland, Peterborough and Strafford, Privy Counſellors, the Earl of Arlington, Lord Chamberlain, Sir Joſeph Williamſon, Secretary of State, and the

A.D.1674 Duke of Monmouth, Chancellor of the Univerſity of Cambridge, who ſome Years after burnt his Picture, as a grateful Acknowledgment of the Honour he had done them.

Propoſals of the Diſſenters for a Union.

During the laſt Seſſion of Parliament, the Earl of Orrery deſir'd Mr. Baxter to draw up ſhort Propoſals of the Terms and Means which he thought wou'd ſatisfy the Non-conformiſts, ſo far as to unite all Proteſtants againſt Popery, profeſſing he had met with many great Men, who were much for it, particularly Sir Thomas Osborn, the new Lord Treaſurer, and Dr. Morley, Biſhop of Wincheſter, who vehemently preſs'd his Deſires of it. Dr. Fulwood and other Divines, had been with Mr. Baxter, to the like Purpoſe, teſtifying the Biſhop's Reſolution about it. Mr. Baxter told them all, that he wiſh'd they would tell Morley, he had done ſo much to the Contrary, and never any thing this Way, ſince his Profeſſions of this Sort; that 'till his real Endeavours convinc'd Men, it wou'd not be believ'd he was ſerious. However, Baxter drew up Propoſals as Lord Orrery deſir'd him, and that Lord return'd them with Biſhop Morley's Strictures, or Animadverſions; by which he made it appear fully, that all his Profeſſions for Abatement and Concord were, according to Mr. Baxter, deceitful Snares, and that no ſuch Thing at all was intended by him. The Reverend Miniſter laſt mention'd, anſwer'd his Animadverſions, as may be ſeen at large in his Life.

Biſhop Morley diſtruſted.

Part III. p. 100. & ſeq.

He oppoſes the Union.

The Biſhop began to ſhew how healing his Temper was by his firſt Stricture; that all Propoſals of Abatement was overthrowing or undermining Church Government; by which means he makes the Croſs in Baptiſm, Kneeling at the Sacrament, the Objections to the Office of Burial, &c. to concern Church Government. I do not repeat Mr. Baxter's Anſwers to the Biſhop's Animadverſions, for I do not think them worth the Pains he took about them. What the Biſhop ſays about God-Fathers and God-Mothers, muſt not be omitted, The Church in Favour to Infants appoints others, in caſe the Parent ſhould die, or neglect their Duty, to have a Paternal Care of them, in order to their Education, for the Performance of their Baptiſmal Covenant, and how well thoſe the Church appoints for that Duty perform it, is too well known to leave any Doubt of the Uſe, and even Neceſſity of ſuch Sureties. In another of his Strictures, he charges Mr. Baxter with aiming to ſet up Auricular Confeſſion, whereas he wou'd doubtleſs have as ſoon ſet up Bell and the Dragon in his Meeting-Houſe; but the Biſhop has no where ſhewn his Piety and Judgment, more than in his Eulogy on the Church Catechiſm, What is your Name, &c.

I know no need it hath of Mending, nor who are wiſe enough to mend it.

Mr. Baxter's Anſwer to this was ſhort and pithy, I am ſorry for it, but cannot help it. It wou'd bear no more. In a Debate about the Five Mile Act Oath next Year, the Lord Shaftſbury ſpeaking of the Catechiſm ſaid, I really think it may be mended, and durſt declare to your Lordſhips, it is not well that there is not a better made. Whoſe Judgment will the Reader take, Lord Shaftsbury's, or Biſhop Morley's? The Biſhop's will not be much recommended to him by his Definition of the Proteſtant Religion in that Debate. It is comprehended in the XXXIX Articles, the Common-Prayer, the Catechiſm, the Homilies, and the Canons. Is it reaſonable to expect one ſhou'd enter into Controverſy with ſuch Argumentators?

Des Maiz Col. p. 111.

Some time after this, a leading Man in the Houſe of Commons, drew up a Bill for Accommodation between Conformiſts and Non-conformiſts, to take off Oaths, Subſcriptions and Declarations, except the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and Subſcriptions to the Doctrine of the Church of England, according to the 13th of Elizabeth; but ſhewing it to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, he ſo manag'd Matters, that he broke the Deſign, yet that he might not ſeem to be for nothing of what he ſo oft pretended towards a peaceable Diſpoſition, he further'd an Act only to take off Aſſent and Conſent, and the Renunciation of the Covenant; but when other Biſhops were againſt, even this ſhew of Abatement, he told them openly in the Houſe, Had it been but to abate them a Ceremony, I wou'd not have ſpoken to it; but I knew they were bound to the ſame Things ſtill, by other Clauſes or Obligations, if theſe were repeal'd. It is to be hop'd he went not out of the World in Impenitence, for ſuch double Dealing with God and Man, wou'd then make one tremble to think of its Reward.

Morley breaks another Pacifick Deſign.

A double Dealer.

The King found the Diſſenters wou'd not play his Cards, and having it in his Power to be even with them, he ſummon'd the Biſhops to Court, to give him Advice what was to be done for ſecuring of Religion, and they after ſeveral Conſultations with the Lord Keeper, Osborn the Treaſurer, Sir Joſeph Williamſon the Secretary, and others of the Junto, adviſed him to recal his Licences, and put the Laws againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters in Execution; which was done by a Declaration and Proclamation, and many infamous Perſons were immediately ſet about the Work, ſome as Informers, ſome as Juſtices, &c. Yet Morley, and even Ward pretended ſtill to be ſenſible of the Danger of Popery, and very forward for Accommodation with the Non-conformiſts. They mov'd it to many, and at length Dr. Tillotſon and Dr. Stillingfleet deſir'd a Meeting with Dr. Bates, Dr. Manton, Mr. Pool, and Mr. Baxter, in order to it, ſaying, they had Encouragement of ſeveral Lords, Spiritual and Temporal. Theſe Divines met, and at laſt agreed on a Draught to be preſented to the Biſhops; which was no ſooner done, then there was an end of the Treaty, and inſtead of Accommodation, they were fallen upon by the Pulpit, Preſs, by Perſecution, Violence and Oppreſſion. There was now a new Party ſtruck up, conſiſting of the perſecuting Clergy and the old Cavaliers. The Church was preſently ſaid to be in Danger, and the Nation running back to Forty One, for which in Truth, there was not Spirit left in it. Forty One was a Bug-bear, made uſe of to frighten the Oppreſs'd; whereas we remember that the Parliament who brought in the King, in a moſt ſolemn Manner, juſtify'd the Proceedings in Forty One, and had not the Hearts of the People been cow'd with Calamities of all Kinds, they might have thunder'd out Forty One with no more Succeſs than Boys fling Squibs to terrify old Women and Children.

The Biſhops and Osborn adviſe to renew the Perſecution againſt Diſſenters.

Riſe of the Tories.

Mr. Locke, ſpeaking of the laſt Seſſion of Parliament, tells us, " The Biſhops continu'd their " Zeal againſt the Papiſts, and ſeem'd to carry " on, in joining with the Country Lords, many " excellent Votes in order to a Bill; but the Fa- " vour to Diſſenting Proteſtants was gone, and " they attempted a Bargain with the Country " Lords, with whom they then join'd, not to " promote any thing of that Nature. But the " whole Clergy were inſtructed to declare that " there was now no more Danger of the Papiſts. " The Fanatick, for ſo they call the Diſſenting " Proteſtant, is again become the only dange- " rous Enemy, and the Biſhops had found a " Scotch Lord, Lauderdale, and two new Mini- " ſters, or rather great Officers of England, " Finch and Osborn, who were deſperate and " raſh

Mr. Locke of Finch, Osborn and Lauderdale.

A.D.1674 " raſh enough to put their Maſter's Buſineſs upon ſo narrow and weak a Bottom: And that " old Covenanter Lauderdale is become the Patron of the Church, and has his Coach and " Table fill'd with Biſhops. The Keeper and " the Treaſurer are of a juſt Size to this Affair; " for it is a certain Rule with the Churchmen to " endure, as ſeldom as they can, in Buſineſs " Men abler than themſelves. But his Grace of " Scotland was leaſt to be excus'd of the three; " for having fallen from Presbytery, Proteſtant " Religion, and all Principles of publick Good " and private Friendſhip, he now betakes himſelf to a Set of Men, who never forgive any " Man the having been once in the Right; and " ſuch Men who wou'd do the worſt of Things " by the worſt of Means, enſlave their Country, " and betray them under the Mask of Religion, " which they have the publick Pay for, and the " Charge of, ſo ſeething the Kid in the Mother's " Milk. Our Stateſmen and Biſhops being now " as well agreed as in old Laud's Time, on the " ſame Principles, with the ſame Paſſion to attain their End; they in the firſt place give " Order to the Judges in all their Circuits, to " quicken the Execution of the Laws againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters." And they had got a Set of Judges fit for the Buſineſs they were pick'd out for; as Sir Francis North, made Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas; Sir Richard Rainſford, Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench; William Montague, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer; Sir William Scroggs, Juſtice of the Common-Pleas; Sir Thomas Jones, Juſtice of the King's-Bench, &c. for propagating this holy Cauſe, ſays Coke.

In what follows from Mr. Locke we ſhall ſee the Formation of the Tory Faction from the very Egg, and in what putrid Matter it was generated.

" A Commiſſion comes down, directed to the " principal Gentlemen of each County, to ſeize " the Eſtates of both Papiſts and Fanaticks, mention'd in a Liſt annex'd, wherein, by great " Misfortune or Skill, the Name of Papiſts, of " beſt Quality and Fortune, and ſo beſt known, " were miſtaken, and the Commiſſion render'd " ineffectual as to them. Beſides this, the great " Miniſters of State, Osborn, Lauderdale, &c. " did in their common Talk aſſure the Party, " that all the Places of Profit, Command and " Truſt ſhou'd only be given to the Old Cavalier. " No man that had ſerv'd or been of the contrary Party, ſhou'd be left in any of them. And " a Direction is iſſued to the great Miniſters before-mention'd, and ſix or ſeven of the Biſhops, " to meet at Lambeth-houſe, who were, like the " Lords of Articles in Scotland, to prepare their " compleat Model for the next Seſſion of Parliament." Of which we ſhall then hear enough; and in Expectation of dividing all the Places of Profit, Command and Truſt, the Old Cavalier and the Perſecuting Church-men ſtuck together againſt the Proteſtant Religion and Engliſh Liberty, till they fell into the Pit they had themſelves dug for others. Mr. Marvel, in his Growth of Popery, writes of it thus; The old Cavalier Party were told all was at Stake, Church and State; that the Nation was running again into Forty one; that this was the Time to refreſh their antient Merit, and receive the Recompence double of all their Loyalty; and that henceforward the Cavaliers ſhou'd have the Lottery of all the great or ſmall Places in the Kingdom, and not ſo much as Sir Joſeph Williamſon have a Share in it.

The Earl of Arlington finding the Keeper and Treaſurer were too many for him, and that he had no longer any Weight in the Junto, thought of ſupporting himſelf by a foreign Intereſt, and by gaining the Prince of Orange to recover the Ground he had loſt. He offer'd to go over to Holland with the Earl of Oſſory, who, as well as himſelf, had marry'd a Daughter of the Heer Beverwaerdt, one of the chief Nobles of the Province, who was in high Favour with the Prince, as theſe two Lords fancy'd, they ſhou'd be by Beverwaerdt's Means: They both carry'd their Ladies with them. His Highneſs had always a particular Affection to Lord Oſſory, who was a very gallant Man, and no Slave to the Court. The Earl of Arlington ſaid he wou'd go to the Bottom of every thing with the Prince, and did not doubt but he wou'd bring him into an entire Dependance on the King, and particularly diſpoſe him to a general Peace, upon which his Majeſty was much ſet; but not ſo much for the Security of the Netherlands and the United Provinces, as to oblige France, whoſe Pride had involv'd her in a War of prodigious Expence; and tho' ſhe was herſelf ſucceſsful, yet her Ally Sweden was like to loſe all the Dominions ſhe had in Germany, and the French King had no Way to prevent it but by a Peace. It was believ'd the Earl of Arlington had Leave to give the Prince Hope of marrying that Princeſs whom he afterwards marry'd, tho' the Duke of York declar'd he knew nothing of the Matter, but had heard that the Lord Arlington talk'd as if the managing that Affair was his chief Errand. Upon which the Duke ask'd the King if there was any thing in it, and his Majeſty aſſur'd him he had a poſitive Order not ſo much as to ſpeak of it. Contrary to this we read in Echard, That it was the Bent of the Lord Arlington to draw the Prince into Hopes, or Deſigns of a Match with the Duke of York's eldeſt Daughter, which his Highneſs took no more Notice of than to ſay, His Fortunes were not in a Condition for him to think of a Wife. Echard adds, That only the Lord Oſſory mention'd the Duke's Daughter, whereas Biſhop Burnet aſſures us, That whether he had a ſecret Order, or did it without Order, the Earl of Arlington certainly talk'd a great deal of it to the Prince as a Thing he might depend on, if he wou'd in all other Things be govern'd by the King.

We have ſpoken of Sir William Temple's being ſent Ambaſſador to Holland and the Netherlands upon Concluſion of the Dutch Peace, and of his being coldly receiv'd on Account of his Errand, which tended to a diſhonourable Peace with France on the Side of the Confederates, and if he cou'd not procure a general Peace, to bring the Dutch to a ſeparate one. The Prince wou'd not ſee him till the End of the Campaign, and he was not a little mortify'd at Alington's coming over; for that Lord had thrown him off, when himſelf went into the French Intereſt: And, ſays my Lord of Sarum, Temple was too proud to bear Contempt, or forget ſuch an Injury. He was a vain Man, much blown up in his own Conceit, which he ſhew'd too indecently on all Occaſions. But the ingenious Archdeacon cou'd not perceive any thing of that Kind, and has therefore copy'd him Word for Word; tho' it is very plain, that when Sir William Temple brings Lord Arlington into the Scene, 'tis to make him act an Under-Part, and be a Foil to his own Figure. The Prince certainly preferr'd Temple's Judgment and Honeſty to Arlington's Diſſimulation and Inconſtancy, and had a very mean Opinion of the Earl's Negotiations; which being treated

Prince of Orange cold to Temple.

A.D. 1675 of at large in Sir William Temple's Letters, I refer to them, where it appears, that the Prince of Orange, even while ſo young and ſo little practis'd in Affairs, had ſo clear and ſo juſt a View of them, that nothing cou'd miſguide him, and that the bad Proſpect he had from the ill Condition he was in, did not frighten him to accept of any mean Terms of Peace. His Fidelity to his Country and the publick Intereſt was ſo firm, that no private Conſiderations of his own cou'd biaſs him, or indeed be much conſider'd by him. Holland was in great Expectation, when they ſaw two ſuch Men as the Earls of Oſſory and Arlington come over together with Lord Latimer, the Treaſurer's eldeſt Son, who only made the Shew a little greater: But the Shew was all. When Arlington attempted to juſtify the Part the King had in the late War, his Highneſs anſwer'd him, as one who knew that Matter as well as himſelf, in a dry, ſullen, and uneaſy Manner. And as to the War he was then engag'd in, he ſaid all at once, The King may bring me out of it with Honour, if he pleaſes, and with Safety to Europe; if not, it muſt go on till the Fortunes of the Parties changing make Way for other Thoughts. Lord Arlington for ſome Days inſiſted vehemently on the Prince's diſmiſſing Du Moulin, who had diſcover'd the Secrets of his Office to him. The Prince at laſt comply'd in that, and ſent Du Moulin to the Plantations. As to all other Things, Arlington talk'd to his Highneſs in the Strain of a Governor, and ſeem'd to preſume too much on his Youth, and on his Want of Experience. But inſtead of gaining over the Prince, he loſt him ſo entirely, that all his Endeavours afterwards cou'd never beget any Confidence in him: So he came back, and reckoning this his laſt Eſſay, which ſucceeded ſo ill, he ever after that withdrew from all Buſineſs; but made himſelf eaſy to the King, who marry'd one of his natural Sons to his Daughter, and continu'd to be ſtill very kind to him. Echard tells us, That Talbot, afterwards Duke of Tyrconnel, interceeded with the King for him, which, if it was true, wou'd ſhew us at once what Arlington was, and what the King, Tyrconnel being the moſt bigotted and hated of all Iriſh Papiſts.

Parliament.

The Way being pav'd by a new Proclamation againſt Popiſh Prieſts, Father Huddleſton excepted, who gave the Conſecrated Wafer and Extream Unction to his Majeſty a little before he dy'd, both Houſes of Parliament met the 13th of April. They ſhou'd have met the 10th of November; but, as Coke tells us, The Inſtructions from France were not then ſufficiently ripen'd. His Majeſty made a Speech, wherein he reflected on thoſe who had reported that this Parliament ſhou'd meet no more. He told them He had done as much on his Part as was poſſible, to extinguiſh the Fears and Jealouſies of Popery. He is all the while himſelf a Papiſt, and will leave nothing undone, that may ſhew the World his Zeal to the Proteſtant Religion as it is eſtabliſh'd in the Church of England, from which he will never depart, tho', as his Brother publiſh'd after his Death, he was ſo zealous a Papiſt, that he wrote a Pamphlet in Defence of Popery, wherein he endeavour'd to prove the Neceſſity of a viſible Church and Guide, which cou'd be no other than the Church of Rome. Do theſe Men think there is Death, and after Death Judgment? That they muſt account at the great Day before a God that will not, that cannot be mock'd? And that the Word Church will there ſignify nothing, if the Society of the Pious, Virtuous, Charitable, and Faithful is not meant by it? Such Thoughts as theſe wou'd ſurely ſtrike them dead with Confuſion and Shame! The King recommended the Fleet to them, the old Wooden Leg made uſe of to beg with in thoſe Days, and left the reſt to the Lord Keeper, who has an admirable Expreſſion in his Speech, if it had not been plac'd juſt after others, which made it a Contradiction. Having ſpoken of his Majeſty's tranſcendant Zeal to the Proteſtant Religion, and at the ſame time of his reviving all the cruel Laws againſt Proteſtants diſſenting from the National Church, he tells the Parliament as true a Thing as ever was told them: When we conſider Religion in Parliament, we are ſuppos'd to conſider it as a Parliament ſhou'd do, and as a Parliament in all Ages have done. For as it works upon the Conſcience, as it is an inward Principle of the Divine Life, by which good Men do govern all their Actions, the State has nothing to do with it. 'Tis a Thing which belongs to another kind of Commiſſion than that by which we ſit here. He had juſt told them what the State had to do with the Conſciences of Proteſtant Diſſenters; and he has a Bill by him ready drawn, which made the State have to do with the Conſciences of Men of all Denominations in Religion. Beſides the Fleet, I do not find any thing elſe very remarkable in this Speech, unleſs this Quibble may be ſo reckon'd, You ſerve a Prince, in whoſe Stile Dei Gratia ſeems not to be written by a vulgar Pen, but by the Arm of Omnipotence it ſelf. To write with an Arm is not very much in Propriety of Speech; yet this is what Mr. Archdeacon calls Eloquence, tho' Dei Gratia is on the Rim of the French King Louis's, as well as on King Charles's Guinea's, and was, doubtleſs, written alike by a mortal Penman. The Parliament having thank'd the King for what he ſaid concerning his extraordinary Zeal to the Proteſtant Religion, as in the Church of England, proceeded to ſeveral vigorous Reſolves againſt Romiſh Prieſts; and then they fell again upon Duke Lauderdale, who had been acting the Tyrant with ſo much Infamy in Scotland, that many wonder'd at his getting into England again. Some of his Tyrannical Doings will be mention'd hereafter.

Dr. Gilbert Burnet, then Preacher at the Rolls, and Lecturer of St. Clements, was examin'd by the Houſe of Commons in Lauderdale's Caſe. The Doctor, afterwards Lord Biſhop of Salisbury, tells it thus in his Memoirs: "The Houſe of Commons fell upon Duke Lauderdale, and thoſe "who knew what had paſs'd between him and "me, mov'd that I ſhou'd be examin'd before a "Committee. I was brought before them; I told "them how I had been commanded out of Town: "But though that was Illegal, yet ſince it had "been let fall, it was not inſiſted upon. I was "next examin'd concerning the Deſign of Arming the Iriſh Papiſts. I ſaid, I, as well as others, "had heard him ſay, He wiſh'd the Presbyterians in Scotland wou'd rebel, that he might "bring over the IRISH Papiſts to cut their "Throats." The Man who ſaid this dy'd in his Bed, and one can't well ſay a worſe Thing of this Reign: A Gibbet had been too good for him, and yet he's continu'd at the Council-Board. Dr. Burnet proceeds, "I was next examin'd con"cerning the Deſigns of bringing the Scotiſh Ar"my into England. I deſir'd to be excus'd as to "what had paſs'd in private Converſation, to "which I thought I was not bound to anſwer, un"leſs it were High Treaſon. They preſs'd me "long, and I wou'd give them no Anſwer, ſo "they all concluded that I knew great Matters, "and reported this ſpecially to the Houſe. Up"on that I was ſent for, and brought before the "Houſe.

I ſtood upon it, as I had done at the " Committee, That nothing had paſs'd that was " Treaſon, and as to all other Things, I did not " think my ſelf bound to diſcover them. I ſaid " farther, I knew Duke Lauderdale was apt to " ſay Things in a Heat, which he did not intend " to do; and ſince he had us'd myſelf ſo ill, I " thought myſelf the more oblig'd not to ſay any " thing which look'd like Revenge, for what I " had met with from him. I was brought four " times to the Bar; at laſt I was told the Houſe " thought they had a Right to examine into eve- " ry thing that concern'd the Safety of the Na- " tion, as well as into Matters of Treaſon, and " they look'd on me as bound to ſatisfy them; " otherwiſe they wou'd make me feel the Weight " of their heavy Diſpleaſure, as one that con- " ceal'd what they thought was neceſſary to be " known: Upon this I yielded, and gave an Ac- " count of the Diſcourſe between Duke Lauder- " dale and me." That coming into England the firſt Saturday in September, 1673, I went to viſit the Duke of Lauderdale at his Lodgings in Whitehall, where the Duke and I diſcours'd of the Affairs of England and Scotland, and particularly of the Proceedings of Parliament, concerning the Declaration for ſuſpending Penal Laws in Matters Eccleſiaſtical. And being afterwards ask'd, Whether, if Scotland being call'd to aſſiſt the King, they wou'd aſſiſt him or not? I anſwer'd, I think they will not; but the Duke reply'd, I believe they will. Then asking me of the Affairs of Scotland, I anſwer'd, The People in Scotland, that are at ſuch a Diſtance, cannot imagine what to think of the King's Speech and Declaration. Whereunto the Duke reply'd, Hinc illæ Lachrymæ, and all have forſaken the King, but Lord Clifford and my ſelf. Upon this, and other Informations, the Parliament drew up a very warm Addreſs againſt Lauderdale; the King in his Anſwer pleaded the General Pardon for him: Upon which they reſolv'd upon another Addreſs againſt him, which prov'd abortive, as did their Proceedings againſt the Lord Treaſurer Danby, who coming into the Treaſury poor and inſolvent, cou'd not well avoid the Diſpleaſure of the Commons. They accus'd him for putting the Revenue into Confuſion, and a waſteful Way of Expence: For laying aſide the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whereby all Comptrolls are avoided: For Arreſting a Gentleman by a Secretary's Warrant, to prevent his being an Evidence in a Law-Suit, and procuring the ſaid Gentleman to be examin'd before the King, which induc'd him to ſpeak Things contrary to his Knowledge and Conſcience, that the Treaſurer's Son might be marry'd to an Heireſs: For receiving far greater Sums than had ever been iſſu'd out for ſecret Service, without Account, the King's Debts remaining unpaid, the Stores unfurniſh'd, and the Navy unrepair'd: For aſſuming the Management of the Iriſh Affairs, which ſhou'd paſs in Council, thereby to enable himſelf to convert great Sums of Money out of Ireland to his own Uſe: For procuring Gifts and Grants from the Crown, &c. The Corruption of this Treaſurer appear'd ſo fully afterwards, as leaves no room to doubt of this, though he had a Majority in the Houſe to clear him of theſe Articles when it was put to the Vote.

Osborn, Earl of Danby, his ill Practices as Treaſurer.

Addreſs to recall the Engliſh in the French Service.

Then the Parliament addreſs'd the King to recall his Subjects out of the French King's Service; but he anſwer'd, that he thought he cou'd not do it in Honour; however, he wou'd hinder any more going over to recruit the Engliſh Forces in the French Army. The Parliament not ſatisfy'd, prepar'd a ſecond Addreſs, with this Addition, That the Officers of the ſeveral Ports do take Care for hindering any more going over for that Service for the future. A.D.1675

The Grand Debate about the Teſt.

We have mention'd a Conclave to be held at Lambeth, of ſix or ſeven Biſhops, and the Chief Miniſters of State, who were to prepare fit Bills to paſs, for the ſtrengthning the new Party, to whom the King was reſolv'd to give himſelf, conſiſting of the High Epiſcopal Men, and the Cavaliers. And as the Fruit of their ſage and Chriſtian-like Counſels, an Act was preſented to the Houſe of Peers by the Earl of Lindſey, Lord Great Chamberlain, entitled, An Act to prevent the Damages which may ariſe from Perſons diſaffected to the preſent Government. People that do ill are always afraid of every thing, and a bad Government can no more help Diſaffection, than Fire can help Heat. Thence it is that ill Powers, and ill Miniſters, are for chaining up Peoples Conſciences with Oaths, at the ſame time that they bind their Hands and Feet with Iron: Thence it is that Edicts fly about againſt Writing or Speaking of State Affairs, and the like. By this monſtrous Bill, all Perſons enjoying any beneficial Office or Employment, Eccleſiaſtical, Civil, or Military, to which were added Privy-Counſellors and Members of Parliament, were under a Penalty to take this following Oath: I Gilbert Sheldon do declare, that it is not lawful upon any Pretence whatſoever to take up Arms againſt the King, and that I do abhor that Traiterous Poſition of taking Arms by his Authority, againſt his Perſon, or againſt thoſe that are commiſſion'd by him, in purſuance of ſuch Commiſſion: And I do ſwear, that I will not at any Time endeavour the Alteration of the Government, either in Church or State. So help me God. This execrable Oath had been in Part introduc'd in the Corporation Act, then in the Militia Act, and afterwards in full in the Five Mile Act againſt Diſſenting Teachers, ſays Echard, he will not call them Miniſters: But as his good Word is no Praiſe, his bad one is no Scandal. His Account of this Debate is taken from a Tract, entitled, A Letter from a Perſon of Quality. He did not know the Author of it, who was Mr. Locke, and therefore has treated it as a Pamphlet, which was at his Diſcretion. Let us ſee what the ingenious Monſieur Des Maizeaux ſays upon this: Mr. Echard, in his Hiſtory of England, hath tranſcrib'd ſeveral Paragraphs out of this Letter, though he never cites it, and ends his Account of the Debate thus: " The Debates " laſted ſixteen or ſeventeen Days, the Houſe, of- " ten ſitting till Nine at Night, and ſometimes " till Midnight, in the Concluſion of which the " Duke of Buckingham, as General of the Party, " and laſt in the Field, made a famous Speech, " conſiſting of eloquent, regular, and well plac'd " Nonſenſe, hoping that that might prevail when " nothing elſe would, and ſo brought Confuſion " into the Houſe; where, beſides the Unaccuracy of bringing into his Narrative, and making his own the Expreſſion which the Author of the Letter has us'd by way of Compliment or Encomium, and thereby miſrepreſenting the Matter, he affirms, that the Debate was put to an End by the Confuſion which the Duke of Buckingham's Speech brought into the Houſe; whereas it appears by the Letter itſelf, that no Confuſion was brought into the Houſe; but on the contrary, that after a ſhort Reply of the Earl of Winchelſea, the Queſtion was put regularly to the Vote, and carry'd as the Court and Biſhops wou'd have it.

Echard's Unaccuracy and want of Judgment.

I ſhall now make uſe of Mr. Locke's admirable Letter, and be the larger upon it, becauſe the Argument between Liberty and Slavery is there fully ſtated; and all the Efforts of good Engliſh-men to defend their dear Liberties, both Spiritual and

A.D.1675 Temporal, againſt Perſecution and Tyranny, are juſtify'd and recommended. Mr. Locke begins with telling us what Preparations were made for introducing this wicked Bill; and now comes this memorable Seſſion of April 13, 1675, than which never any came with more Expectation of the Court, or Dread and Apprehenſion of the Country. The Officers, Court Lords, and Biſhops were clearly the major Vote in the Houſe of Lords; and they aſſur'd themſelves to have the Houſe of Commons as much at their Diſpoſal, when they reckon'd the Number of the Courtiers, Officers, Penſioners, encreas'd by the Addition of the Church and Cavalier Party; beſides the Addreſs they had made to Men of the beſt Quality there, by hopes of Honour, great Employment, and ſuch Things as wou'd take. In a Word, the French King's Miniſters, who are the great Chapmen of the World, did not outdo ours at this Time; and yet the over-ruling Hand of God has blown upon their Politicks, and the Nation is eſcap'd this Seſſion, like a Bird out of the Snare of the Fowler.

Court-Biſhops for Tyranny,

Mr. Locke proceeds: In this Seſſion the Biſhops wholly laid aſide their Zeal againſt Popery; the Committee of the whole Houſe for Religion, which the Country Lords had caus'd to be ſet up again, by the Example of the former Seſſions, cou'd hardly get, at any Time, a Day appointed for their ſitting: And the main Thing deſign'd for a Bill voted in the former Seſſion, the marrying our Princes to none but Proteſtants, was rejected, and carry'd in the Negative, by the unanimous Votes of the Biſhops Bench. For, continues Mr. Locke, I muſt acquaint you that our great Prelates were ſo near an Infallibility, that they were always found in the Seſſion of one Mind in the Lords Houſe: Yet the Lay-Lords not underſtanding from how excellent a Principle this proceeded, commonly call'd them, for that Reaſon, the DEAD WEIGHT; and they really prov'd ſo in the following Buſineſs, the Teſt, we are about to treat of. It is but Juſtice to the Memory of that Dead Weight, to ſee and remember who they were that compos'd it.

call'd the Dead Weight.

Their Names.

Dr. Gilbert Sheldon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury; Dr. Iſaac Barrow, Biſhop of St. Aſaph; Dr. Humphry Lloyd, Biſhop of Bangor; Dr. Peter Mew, Biſhop of Bath and Wells; Dr. Guy Carlton, Biſhop of Briſtol; Dr. Peter Gunning, Biſhop of Chicheſter; Dr. Thomas Wood, Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield; Dr. Benjamin Lany, Biſhop of Ely; Dr. Anthony Sparrow, Biſhop of Exeter; Dr. John Prichard, Biſhop of Glouceſter; Dr. Herbert Croſts, Biſhop of Hereford; Dr. Francis Davies, Biſhop of Llandaff; Dr. William Fuller, Biſhop of Lincoln; Dr. Humphry Henchman, Biſhop of London; Dr. Henry Compton, Biſhop of Oxford; Dr. John Dolben, Biſhop of Peterborough; Dr. Seth Ward, Biſhop of Salisbury; Dr. George Morley, Biſhop of Wincheſter; Dr. Walter Blanford, Biſhop of Worceſter; Dr. Richard Sterne, Archbiſhop of York; Dr. Edward Rainbow, Biſhop of Carliſle; Dr. Nehemiah Crew, Biſhop of Durham. I mention no more of the then Reigning Prelates, for the reſt were truly Right Reverend Fathers of the Proteſtant Church of England; Biſhop Lucy, Biſhop Reynolds, Biſhop Pearſon, Prelates equally celebrated for Piety and Learning, whoſe Names are too precious to be enroll'd in the Liſt of the Dead Weight, of which they were not deem'd a Part.

The Teſt Act receiv'd its firſt Reading, and was appointed for the Second without much Oppoſition: At the ſecond Reading, the Lord Keeper Finch, and the Court Lords, recommended the Bill to the Houſe in ſet elaborate Speeches, the Keeper calling it, A moderate Security to the Church and State, and that no honeſt Man cou'd refuſe it; and whoſoever did, gave great Suſpicion of dangerous and Anti-monarchical Principles. The other Lords declaim'd very much upon the Rebellion of the late Times, the great Number of Fanaticks, the dangerous Principles of Rebellion ſtill remaining. The Earl of Shaftsbury, and ſome other Country Lords, earneſtly preſs'd that the Bill might be laid aſide, and that they might not be engag'd in the Debate of it; or elſe, that that Freedom they ſhou'd be forc'd to uſe in the neceſſary Defence of their Opinion, and the preſerving of their Laws, Rights, and Liberties, might not be miſconſtru'd. What they ſpoke, had ſo much Reaſon in it, that all the Lords who were at Liberty from Court Engagements, reſolv'd to oppoſe to the uttermoſt a Bill of ſo dangerous Conſequence. When it was carry'd by Numbers to go upon it, the following Lords enter'd their Proteſts againſt it, with their Reaſons for it. A.D.1675

Lords Proteſt againſt it.

" We whoſe Names are under-written, being " Peers of this Realm, do, according to our Rights, " and the antient Uſage of Parliaments, declare, " that the Queſtion having been put, Whether " the Bill, entitled, An Act to prevent, &c. doth " ſo far intrench upon the Privileges of this Houſe, " that it ought therefore to be caſt out, it being " reſolv'd in the Negative. We do humbly con- " ceive that any Bill which impoſeth an Oath " upon the Peers, with a Penalty, as this doth, " that upon Refuſal of that Oath, they ſhall be " made incapable of Sitting and Voting in this " Houſe. As it is a Thing unprecedented in for- " mer Times, ſo it is in our humble Opinion the " higheſt Invaſion of the Liberties and Privileges " of the Peerage that poſſibly may be, and moſt " deſtructive of the Freedom which they ought " to enjoy as Members of Parliament; becauſe " the Privileges of Sitting and Voting in a Par- " liament, is an Honour they have by Birth, and " a Right ſo inherent in them, and inſeparable " from them, as that nothing can take it away, " but what the Laws of the Land muſt withal " take away their Lives, and corrupt their Blood; " upon which Ground, we do here enter our Diſ- " ſent from that Vote, and our Proteſtation a- " gainſt it.

Notwithſtanding this, the great Officers and Biſhops call'd out for the Queſtion, of referring the Bill to a Committee, which the Country Lords oppos'd, in a Debate that laſted five Days, and then it was committed: Againſt which the following Proteſtation was enter'd.

Another.

The Queſtion being put, Whether the Bill, entitled, An Act to prevent the Dangers, &c. ſhou'd be committed, it being carry'd in the Affirmative; and though after ſeveral Day's Debates, we are in no manner ſatisfy'd, but ſtill apprehending that this Bill doth not only ſubvert the Privilege and Birth-right of the Peers, by impoſing an Oath upon them, with the Penalty of loſing their Places in Parliament; but alſo, as we humbly conceive, ſtrike at the very Root of Government, it being neceſſary to Governments to have Freedom of Votes and Debates, in thoſe who have Power to alter and make Laws; and beſides, the expreſs Words of the Bill obliging every Man to abjure all Endeavours to alter the Government in the Church, without Regard to any thing that Rules of Prudence in the Government,

A.D.1675 Government, or Chriſtian Compaſſion to Proteſtant Diſſenters, as the Neceſſity of Affairs at any Time ſhall or may require; upon theſe Conſiderations, we humbly think it to be of dangerous Conſequence to have any Bill of this Nature ſo much as committed, and do enter our Diſſent to that Vote, and Proteſtation againſt it.

Buckingham, Winton, Salisbury, Denbigh, Howard of Berks, Briſtol, Clarendon, Stamford, Shaftsbury, Wharton, Mohun, De la Mer.

The Court Lords and Biſhops fell furiouſly on the Proteſters, endeavouring not only to get ſevere Proceedings againſt their Perſons, but to take away the Liberty of Proteſting, with Reaſons, which Denzil Lord Holles defended with ſo great Ability and Learning, that all the oppoſite Party cou'd obtain by a Debate of ſeveral Hours, was a Vote, That the Reaſons given in the ſaid Proteſtation, did reflect on the Honour of the Houſe, and were of dangerous Conſequence. There happen'd ſomething in this Debate, ſo very much to the Honour of the Lord Holles, that I cannot paſs it by: For when it was at the Height, and the Proteſting Lords in danger of the Tower, he begg'd Leave of the Houſe to put his Name to that Proteſt, and take his Fortune with thoſe Lords; becauſe his Sickneſs had forc'd him out of the Houſe the Day before, and not being at the Queſtion, he cou'd not by the Rules of the Houſe ſign it. You ſee what Affection the Promoters of this Teſt had to their own and their Fellow-Subjects Liberties; what Spirit the Sticklers for the divine, indefeaſible, and unalienable Right of Princes, have always been animated by; how naturally ſuch Doctrines lead Men to every thing that is Slaviſh and Arbitrary: And had not the Fate of King James made it a Jeſt for Church-men to preach as they do, the ſame Sanction wou'd have been ſtill fix'd on them. One of the Biſhops then living, liv'd long enough not only to unſwear what was to be ſworn by this impious Oath, but actually to take Arms, not only againſt thoſe commiſſion'd by the King, but againſt the King himſelf. The Treaſurer Danby did not only unſwear what was by this impious Oath to be ſworn, but did actually take Arms againſt the King, againſt thoſe commiſſion'd by him, and give his Vote for Abdicating one King, and Crowning another, twelve or thirteen Years after he labour'd ſo much to have this Teſt impos'd upon the Nation. The Country Lords reſenting the Vote paſs'd againſt their Proteſtation, enter'd another in theſe Words:

Danby's Inconſiſtency.

" Whereas it is the undoubted Privilege of " each Peer in Parliament, when a Queſtion is " paſs'd contrary to his Vote and Judgment, to " enter his Proteſtation againſt it; and that in " purſuance thereof, the Bill, entitled, An Act " to prevent the Dangers, &c. being conceiv'd " by ſome Lords to be of ſo dangerous Nature, " as that it was not fit to receive the Countenance " of a Commitment, thoſe Lords did proteſt a- " gainſt the Commitment of the ſaid Bill; and " the Houſe having taken Exception at ſome Ex- " preſſions in their Proteſtation, thoſe Lords who " were preſent at the Debate, did all of them ſe- " verally and voluntarily declare, that they had " no Intention to reflect upon any Member, much " leſs upon the whole Houſe, which is humbly " conceiv'd was more than in Strictneſs did con- " ſiſt with that abſolute Freedom of proteſting, " which is inſeparable from every Member of " this Houſe, and was done by them meerly out " of their great Reſpect to the Houſe, and their " earneſt Deſire to give all Satisfaction concern- " ing themſelves, and the Clearneſs of their In- " tentions: Yet the Houſe not ſatisfy'd with this A.D.1675 " their Declaration, but proceeding to a Vote, " That the Reaſons given in the ſaid Proteſtation do reflect upon the Honour of the Houſe, and are of dangerous Conſequence. We whoſe Names " are under-written, conceiving our ſelves, and " the whole Houſe of Peers extreamly concern'd, " that this great Wound ſhou'd be given (as we " humbly apprehend, to ſo eſſential a Privilege " of the whole Peerage of this Realm, as that " of proteſting) do now, according to our un- " queſtionable Right, make uſe of the ſame Li- " berty to enter this our Diſſent from, and Pro- " teſtation againſt the ſaid Vote.

It is with Pleaſure we meet with ſo many Illuſtrious Names vigorouſly withſtanding a Bill contriv'd by the Biſhops againſt the Liberty of a Free People. It muſt give one a Horror of thoſe mad Proceedings in the Days of Anarchy, when an Aſſembly, full of ſo many noble Patriots as the Houſe of Peers, was voted Uſeleſs and Dangerous. The Uſe and Safety of them have eminently appear'd in later Times; and there is not a good Engliſh-man, who does not reflect with the deepeſt Senſe of Gratitude on the gallant Stand they have made, when more than once the Deſigns of ill Men had taken Effect without it, as in the Time of the laſt Treaſurer, the Utrecht Peace, &c. It cannot be ſaid, that theſe proteſting Lords were Schiſmaticks and Fanaticks, were the Lords Dorſet, Berks, Clarendon, Ailsbury, Hallifax, Briſtol, &c. charg'd with Schiſmatical or Antimonarchical Principles? Did they not carry the Prerogatives of the Church and Crown as high as the Higheſt? and only refus'd to ſacrifice their Underſtandings, and their Birth-rights to the Advancement of them. There ſeems to be no greater Complement to the Crown, than an unlimited Obedience; but that Complement is paid by thoſe who attack it in Eſſentials, and wou'd deprive it of its Eccleſiaſtical Supremacy, which ſhews us for what Reaſon it was, that an abſolute Dominion was ſo furiouſly preach'd up in King Charles's, King James, and the latter Part of Queen Anne's Reign, when the Miniſters were as bad as in the Reigns of thoſe Kings. That Dominion was not to center in the Prince only, but to be divided by the Prieſthood. If the Power of the Crown was allow'd to be boundleſs, the Church was at the ſame time declar'd to be Independant, and the Obedience of theſe Men is conſequently of no more Extent than they think fit, they being themſelves their own Judges, and, as they pretend, the State having no Right to bring them to Judgment.

Houſe of Peers great Patriots in the worſt of Times.

The Lords againſt the Bill, after it was committed to a Committee of the whole Houſe, obtain'd two previous Votes which much enervated it, " That no Oath ſhould be impos'd by any " Bill upon the Peers, with the Penalty, in Caſe " of Refuſal, to loſe their Places or Votes in " Parliament, or Liberty to debate therein." In this Debate it was urg'd, that the Penalty ſhou'd be a Præmunire, and the Duke of Buckingham laugh'd that out of the Houſe, by a Speech, to this Effect: He deſir'd their Lordſhips to conſider what a Præmunire was, which they were to be under, if they did not take the Oaths, tho' they were to keep their Seats in Parliament. By a Præmunire we are to be ſtripp'd of all we have, and as we go along the Streets, any body may take our

A.D. 1675 E. of Clarendon.

our Cloaths from us, ſaying, You are in a Præmunire. If any one in Compaſſion ſhould give a Lord a new Coat to cover his Nakedneſs, the next Man he meets, may take it away again, ſaying, You are in a Præmunire, and have right to nothing: However, the ſtripp'd Peer has his Seat in Parliament ſtill, and may ſit here without Waſtecoat or Breeches; which ſet the Houſe a laughing, and was the Occaſion of dropping that Penalty.

The other previous Vote was, "That there "ſhould be nothing in this Bill which ſhould "extend to deprive either of the Houſes of Par- "liament, or any of their Members, of their juſt "and antient Freedom and Privileges, of Debating "any Matter or Buſineſs, which ſhall be pro- "pos'd or debated in either of the ſaid Houſes, "or at any Conference or Committee of both, or "either of the ſaid Houſes of Parliament, touch- "ing the Repeal or Alteration of any old, or "preparing any new Laws, or the Redreſſing any "publick Grievance; but that the ſaid Members "of either of the ſaid Houſes, and the Aſſiſtants "of the Houſe of Peers, and every of them ſhall "have the ſaid Freedom of Speech, and all other "Privileges whatſoever they had before the ma- "king of this Act."—However, upon the Report from the Committee, a Vote paſs'd, That all Perſons who have, or ſhall have Right to ſit and vote, in either Houſe of Parliament, ſhall have the Oath impos'd upon them; againſt which the following Lords proteſted.

Bucks, Bedford, Winton, Salisbury, Berks, Bridgwater, Stamford, Clarendon, Denbigh, Dorſet, Shaftsbury, Wharton, Eure, De la Mer, Paget, Mohun.

It was obſerv'd by the Earl of Bolingbroke, a Man of great Abilities, and learned in the Laws, that tho' there was a Proviſo to preſerve the Freedom of Debates, yet the Oath remain'd notwithſtanding that Proviſo upon all Men that ſhall take it as a Prohibition, either by Speech or Writing, to endeavour any Alteration in Religion, Church or State, even upon the Members of both Houſes, otherwiſe than as they Speak and Vote in open Parliaments or Committees. This was ſeconded by my Lord De la Mer, and the Earl of Shaftsbury preſently drew up ſome Words for preſerving the ſame Rights, Privileges and Freedoms which Men then enjoy'd by Law. It was now that the Court Lords and Biſhops ſhew'd with the greateſt Plainneſs what they aim'd at, inſomuch that the Duke of Lauderdale, tho' under the Load of two Addreſſes, told the Committee, as did alſo the Lord Keeper Finch, and Lord Treaſurer Danby, they intended to PREVENT Caballing againſt the Government. A good Government fears no Caballing; nothing can be ſaid of it but what is good; and a bad one, ſuch as this was, cannot prevent it. He that's oppreſs'd will ſpeak, as he that's in Pain will moan. Several ſtrong Reaſons were urg'd againſt depriving People of their natural Right, the Uſe of their Tongue; the Laws had ſufficiently bound them already, they cou'd not ſpeak diſreſpectfully of the Government without Puniſhment, and now they cannot ſpeak it without Perjury. It is monſtrous to think that this Bill was carry'd thro' every Queſtion by Biſhops, without whom the Country Lords wou'd have been the Majority.

To prevent any more Proteſtations, the Houſe for the Future, reported not the Votes of the Committee, and Parts of the Bill as they paſs'd them, but took the ſame Order as is obſerv'd in other Bills, not to report to the Houſe, till they had gone thro' with it, and then to report all the Amendments together. The Bill being read, the Lord Halliſax ſpoke admirably againſt Oaths of any Kind. "That as there really was no Se- "curity to any State by Oaths, ſo alſo no private "Perſons, much leſs States-Men, wou'd ever or- "der his Affairs, as relying on it. No Man "wou'd ever ſleep with open Doors, or unlock'd "up Treaſure, ſhou'd all the Town be ſworn "not to rob: So that the Uſe of Multiplying "Oaths had been moſt commonly to exclude or "diſturb ſome honeſt conſcientious Men, who "would not have prejudic'd the Government." Cou'd not the Biſhops think of this, thoſe whoſe Function it was to direct Mens Conſciences right, cou'd they not forbear miſguiding or diſturbing them? His Lordſhip inſiſted, "That the Oath "impos'd by the Bill, contain'd three Clauſes, the "two former Aſſertory, and the laſt Promiſſary, "and that it was worthy the Conſideration of the "Biſhops, whether Aſſertory Oaths, which were "properly appointed to give Teſtimony of Mat- "ter of Fact, of which a Man is capable of "being aſſur'd by the Evidence of his Senſe, be "lawfully to be made uſe of, to confirm or in- "validate Doctrinal Propoſitions; and whether "that Legiſlative Power which impoſes ſuch an "Oath, doth not neceſſarily aſſume to itſelf In- "fallibility? And as for Promiſſary Oaths, it was "deſir'd that thoſe learned Prelates wou'd conſi- "der the Opinion of Grotius, de Jure Belli & "Pacis, who ſeems to make it plain that thoſe "kind of Oaths are forbidden by our Saviour; "and whether it wou'd not become the Fathers "of our Church, when they have well weigh'd "the Place he notes out of the New Teſtament, "to be more tender in multiplying Oaths, than "hitherto the great Men of the Church have "been." But whatever this Lord, and others, cou'd ſay to the contrary, the Biſhops, ſays Mr. Locke, carry'd the Point, and an Oath was order'd by the major Vote.

The next Part of the Debate was about Members of Parliament, &c. and the previous Votes were urg'd in their Behalf; but the Lord Keeper, who mov'd to have them inſerted, ſaid, with equal Reſolution and Eloquence, the Houſe was Maſter of their own Orders, and the Interpretation of them.

Debate of taking Arms.

When theſe Words, I A. B. do declare, that it is not lawful upon any Pretence whatſoever to take up Arms againſt the King, came to be conſider'd, the Lords againſt the Bill urg'd, that it might introduce a great Change of Government, to oblige all Men in great Truſt in England, to declare the exact Boundary and Extent of the Oath of Allegiance, and enforce ſome Things to be ſtated, that are much better involv'd in Generals. There is a Law of 25 Edward III. That Arms ſhall not be taken up againſt the King, and that it is Treaſon to do ſo, and it is a juſt and reaſonable Law, but it is an idle Queſtion at beſt, to ask whether Arms in any Caſe, can be taken up againſt a lawful Prince? becauſe it unneceſſarily brings in the Debate in every Man's Mind, how there can be a Diſtinction then left, between abſolute and bounded Monarchies, if Monarchs have only the Fear of God, and no Fear of Humane Reſiſtance to reſtrain them? The Arguments are of that Length, that I can only give the Reader a Hint of them; the Strength of them was ſuch, that the Court, and Court Lords took Care to have them burnt as ſoon as made publick.

The next Thing in the Debate was, that Part of the Teſt, from whence it took the Name of the Oath of Abhorrence. I do abhor that traiterous Poſition of taking Arms by his Authority, againſt his Perſon: To which it was objected, that the

A.D.1675 Poſition, as here laid down, is Univerſal, and yet in moſt Caſes, it is not to be abhorr'd by honeſt and wiſe Men. For there is but one Caſe, and that never likely to happen again, where this Poſition is like to be traiterous, and that is the Caſe of the Long Parliament, made Perpetual by the King's own Act, by which the Government was perfectly alter'd, and made inconſiſtent with it's ſelf. Then Inſtances were given, wherein this Poſition was ſo far from being Traiterous, that it was both neceſſary and a Duty: As in the two Caſes of Henry VI. of England and Charles VI. of France, who were both in the Hands of their Enemies, and not to have taken Arms againſt thoſe who aſſum'd their Authority, and had their Perſons for their Warrant, wou'd certainly have been a Breach of their Allegiance. In theſe and the like Caſes it was not pretended but that the ſtrict Letter of the Law might be otherwiſe conſtrued, and the old Biſhop of Wincheſter ſaid, That to take up Arms in ſuch Caſes is not againſt, but for the Perſon of the King. In which his Lordſhip did not ſeem to be entirely of the ſame Mind with the Lord Keeper, who, to teſtify his own Abhorrency, had this Expreſſion in a Speech of his, Away with that ill-meant Diſtinction between Natural and Political Capacities. To which Mr. Marvel thus replys, " He is too well " read to be ignorant that without that Diſtin- " ction there wou'd be no Law, nor Reaſon of " Law left in England. To which End it was, " and to put all out of Doubt that this Teſt re- " quires to declare Men's Abhorrency as of a " Traiterous Poſition, to take Arms againſt thoſe " that are commiſſion'd by him in Purſuance of " ſuch Commiſſion, and yet neither the Tenor " nor Rule of any ſuch Commiſſion ſpecify'd, " nor the Qualifications of thoſe that ſhall be " arm'd with ſuch Commiſſion expreſs'd or li- " mited. Never was ſo much Senſe contain'd " in ſo few Words. No Conveyancer cou'd in " more compendious or binding Terms have " drawn a Diſſettlement of the whole Birth-right " of England." This naturally brings me to the third Part of the Teſt, or againſt thoſe that are commiſſion'd by them. Upon this it was obſerv'd, That if any King hereafter ſhould, contrary to the Petition of Right, demand or levy Money by Privy-Seal or otherwiſe, and cauſe Soldiers to enter and diſtrain for ſuch illegal Taxes; in ſuch a Caſe any Man might defend his Houſe againſt them, and yet this is contrary to the Words of the Declaration made in this Teſt. The Lord Keeper ſaid, theſe were remote Inſtances. But a Man of as much Senſe, and much more Wit than the Lord Keeper, ſays the quite contrary. Theſe things, to uſe Marvel's Words, are no Nicieties or remote Conſiderations: And he was ſtill better told by the Earl of Shaftsbury, They will not hereafter prove ſo, when this Declaration has made the Practice of them juſtifiable. Here, according to Mr. Locke, the Mask was plainly pluck'd off, Arbitrary Government appear'd bare-fac'd, and a Standing Army was to be eſtabliſh'd by Act of Parliament. For it was ſaid by ſeveral of the Lords, That if whatever is by the King's Commiſſion be not oppos'd by the King's Authority, then a Standing Army is Law, whenever the King pleaſes; and yet the King's Commiſſion was never thought ſufficient to protect or juſtify any Man, where it is againſt his Authority, which is the Law. This allow'd, alters the whole Law of England in the moſt Eſſential and Fundamental Parts of it, and makes the whole Law of Property become Arbitrary and without Effect whenever the King pleaſes.

Againſt thoſe commiſſion'd by the King.

It is to be wiſh'd, that all good Engliſh-men A.D.1675 wou'd ſeriouſly conſider who were the Men, and what their Principles, that wou'd have reduc'd us to the Condition of the Swedes and Danes, to have depended on the Will of the Prince; and the worſt Princes are ever fond of ſuch Dependance upon them. One cannot have a better Notion of the fatal Conſequences which muſt have attended this Teſt, if it prevail'd, than by what Andrew Marvel writes of it; For as to the Commiſſion, if it be to take away any Man's Eſtate or his Life by Force, yet it is the King's Commiſſion. Or if the Perſon commiſſion'd be under never ſo many Diſabilities by Act of Parliament, yet his taking this Oath removes all thoſe Incapacities, or his Commiſſion makes it not diſputable. But if a Man ſtood upon his Defence, a good Judge for the Purpoſe, and good Judges, as we have ſeen, were provided, finding that the Poſition was Traiterous, will declare that, by this Law he is to be executed for Treaſon. As ſtrong as the Court Party and Biſhops were in the Houſe, ſuch was the Power of Truth, that they cou'd not carry this abominable Declaration, without adding againſt thoſe that are commiſſion'd by him according to Law in Time of Rebellion and War.

We come now to what will fully evidence the Deſigns of the Clergy by ſuch unwarrantable Complacency to the Court. The Church Government muſt not on any Account be alter'd no more than the State. I do ſwear, that I will not at any Time endeavour the Alteration of the Government in Church or State. Againſt which the Objection lay moſt plain and ſtrongat the firſt Entrance of the Oath; that there was no Care taken of the Doctrine, but only of the Diſcipline of the Church, which points out to one as much as with a Finger, what the Biſhops had then chiefly in View. The Papiſts need not ſcruple the taking this Oath, for Epiſcopacy remain'd in it's full Luſtre, tho' the Popiſh Religion was introduc'd. But the King's Supremacy is joſtled aſide by this Oath, and makes better Room for an Eccleſiaſtical one; inſomuch that the Party were forc'd immediately to have it thus worded, I will not endeavour to alter the Proteſtant Religion, or the Government of Church and State. And they valu'd themſelves ſo much on their Condeſcenſion in the Matter, that they now call'd their Teſt a Security for the Proteſtant Religion. Mr. Locke expreſſes himſelf thus on this Occaſion, But the Country Lords wonder'd at their Confidence in this, ſince they had never thought of it before, and had been by pure Shame compell'd to this Addition; for it was not unknown to them, that ſome of the Biſhops themſelves had told ſome Roman Catholick Lords of the Houſe, that Care had been taken that it might be ſuch an Oath as might not bear upon them. There was a great Struggle againſt the Words Endeavour to alter. The Earl of Shaftsbury ſaid, It is a far different Thing to believe, or to be fully perſuaded of the Truth of the Doctrine of our Church, and to ſwear never to endeavour to alter, which laſt muſt be utterly unlawful, unleſs you place an Infallibility in the Church or your ſelf; you being otherwiſe oblig'd to alter, whenever a clearer or better Light comes to you. And he deſir'd Leave to ask, Where are the Boundaries? or, Where ſhall we find how much is meant by the Proteſtant Religion? The Lord Keeper thinking he had got an Advantage, deſires it might not be told in Gath, nor publiſh'd in the Streets of Askelon, that a Lord of ſo great Parts and Eminence, and profeſſing himſelf for the Church of England, ſhou'd not know what is meant by the Proteſtant Religion: And I muſt desire that it may be told in Gath, and publiſh'd in the Streets of Askelon, that whatever the Lord Keeper might do, the Biſhop of Wincheſter did not know what is meant by the Proteſtant Religion, by his Definition of it, the Thirty-nine Articles, the Liturgy, the Catechiſm, the Homilies, and the Canons; there not being one Proteſtant Doctor of the Reform'd Church in all Chriſtendom, who wou'd have ſo interpreted it on the Continent. But the Earl of Shaftsbury, in his Reply, ſhew'd he knew more of the Matter than both the Biſhop and the Keeper.

Earl of Shaftsbury's Anſwer.

" I beg ſo much Charity of you to believe that " I know the Proteſtant Religion ſo well, and " am ſo confirm'd in it, that I hope I ſhou'd burn " for the Witneſs of it, if Providence ſhou'd call " me to it. But I may perhaps think ſome Things " not neceſſary which you account eſſential: Nay, " I may think ſome Things not true, or agree- " able to Scripture, which you may call Doctrines " of the Church. Beſides, when I am to ſwear " never to endeavour to alter, it is certainly ne- " ceſſary to know how far the Extent of this " Oath is; but ſince you have told me that the " Proteſtant Religion is in thoſe Five Tracts, I " have ſtill Power to ask, Whether you mean " thoſe whole Tracts were the Proteſtant Reli- " gion, or only that the Proteſtant Religion is " contain'd in all theſe, but that every Part of " theſe are not the Proteſtant Religion? If you " mean the former of theſe, then I am extream- " ly in the Dark to find the Doctrine of Predeſti- " nation in the ſeventeenth and eighteenth Arti- " cles, to be own'd by ſo few great Doctors of " the Church, and to find the nineteenth Article to " define the Church directly as the Independants " do. Beſides, the twentieth Article ſtating the " Authority of the Church, is very dark, and " either contradicts itſelf, or ſays nothing, or what " is contrary to the known Laws of the Land.

Objections to ſeveral of the xxxix Articles,

" Further, Several other Things in the thirty- " nine Articles have been preach'd and written " againſt by Men of great Favour, Power, and " Preferment in the Church.

" I humbly conceive the Liturgy is not ſo Sa- " cred, being made by Men the other Day, and " thought to be more differing from the Diſſent- " ing Proteſtants, and leſs eaſy to be comply'd " with, upon the Advantage of a Pretence well " known to us all, of making Abatements as might " the better invite them, inſtead of which, there's " ſcarce one Alteration but widens the Breach, " and no Ordination allow'd by it here (as it now " ſtands laſt Reform'd by the Act of Uniformity) " but what is Epiſcopal. So that a Popiſh Prieſt, " when converted, is capable of any Church Pre- " ferment, without Re-ordination; but a Prote- " ſtant Miniſter, not Epiſcopally Ordain'd, is re- " quir'd to be Re-ordain'd. As much as in us lies, " unchurching all the Foreign Proteſtants that " have not Biſhops, though the contrary was both " allow'd and practis'd from the Beginning of the " Reformation to the Time of that Act, and ſe- " veral Biſhops made of ſuch as were never or- " dain'd Prieſts by Biſhops; and I think, to en- " deavour to alter and reſtore the Liturgy to what " it was in Queen Elizabeth's Days, may con- " ſiſt with my being a very good Proteſtant. As " to the Catechiſm, I really think it may be amend- " ed, and dare declare to you, it is not well that " there is not a better made. For the Homilies, " I believe there may be a better Book made; " and Homily the third, of Repairing and keep- " ing Clean Churches, may be omitted. What is " yet ſtronger than all this, the Canons of our " Church are directly the old Popiſh Canons, " which are full in Force, and no other, as will " appear, if you turn to Stat. 25 Hen. VIII. cap. 10. " confirm'd and renew'd by 1 Eliz. where all " thoſe Canons are eſtabliſh'd, till an Alteration " ſhall be made by the King in purſuance of that " Act; which was attempted by Edward VI. " but not perfected, and let alone ever ſince, for " what Reaſon the Lords the Biſhops can beſt " tell; and it is very hard to be oblig'd by Oath " not to endeavour to alter either the Engliſh Com- " mon-Prayer, or the Canon of the Maſs.

A.D. 1675

The Reaſons of this Lord, and others, who ſpoke to the ſame Thing, were ſo cogent, that the Houſe ſeem'd convinc'd of the Neceſſity of an Expedient.

The Lord Wharton offer'd, as a Cure to the whole Oath, and what might make it paſs in all the Parts of it, to add theſe Words at the latter End, As the ſame is, or ſhall be eſtabliſh'd by Act of Parliament: But, ſays Mr. Locke, this was not endur'd at all. The Lord Grey of Rolleſtone offer'd another Expedient, which was the Addition of theſe Words, by Force or Fraud, and then it wou'd have run thus: I do ſwear not to endeavour by Force or Fraud to alter: This was alſo a Cure that wou'd have paſs'd the whole Oath, the Duke of York and Biſhop of Rocheſter both ſeconding it; but the Lord Treaſurer, who, ſays Mr. Locke, had privately before conſented to it, ſpeaking againſt it, gave the Word and Sign to that Party; and it being put to the Queſtion, the major Vote anſwer'd all Arguments. This Lord Treaſurer is the ſame who, when Sir Thomas Osborn, had been a main Inſtrument in rejecting this very Teſt at Oxford; but his Staff was ſo beneficial to his ſmall Fortunes, which ſtood in indiſpenſable Need of Recruits, that he abandon'd all his Sentiments of Liberty, and became the Tool of Arbitrary Power. The Conſpirators were ſo fluſh'd by their Majority, that without conſidering the Remainder of the Teſt, they wou'd have it put to the Queſtion entire; which was oppos'd by the Lord Mohun, and afterwards by as great Diſorder in the Houſe as ever had been ſeen there, proceeding, to uſe Mr. Locke's Words, from the Rage thoſe unreaſonable Practices had caus'd in the Country Lords, who ſtood up in a Body, and cry'd out, ADJOURN, ADJOURN, with ſo loud a continued Voice, that when Silence was obtain'd, Fear did what Reaſon cou'd not do, and put off the Queſtion for the whole Teſt.

Danby's Deceit.

Now comes the Conſideration of the latter Part of the Oath. The Lords againſt the Bill objected, That it was not agreeable to the King's Crown and Dignity, to have his Subjects ſworn to the Government of the Church equally as to himſelf; that it ought to be well underſtood before ſuch an Act paſs'd, what the Government of the Church was, and what the Boundaries; whether it derives no Power, nor Authority, nor the Exerciſe of any Power, Authority, or Function, but from the King, as Head of the Church, and from God, as through him all his other Officers do; otherwiſe there wou'd be Imperium in Imperio, and two diſtinct ſupream Powers, inconſiſtent with each other, in the ſame Place, and over the ſame Perſons. Mr. Locke tells us, The Biſhops alledg'd, that the Prieſthood, their Power and Authorities, were deriv'd immediately from God; but that the Licence of exerciſing that Authority and Power in any Country, is deriv'd from the Civil Magiſtrate. To which it was reply'd, That it was dangerous to ſecure by Oath and Act of Parliament thoſe in the Exerciſe of an Authority and Power in the King's Country, and over his Subjects, which being receiv'd from Chriſt himſelf, cannot be alter'd or limited by the King's Law; and that this was directly to ſet the Mitre above the Crown.

Homilies objected againſt.

It

A.D. 1675 It was further offer'd, that this Oath was the greateſt Attempt that had been made againſt the King's Supremacy ſince the Reformation. For the King in Parliament may alter, diminiſh, or enlarge, or take away any Biſhoprick: He may take away any Part of a Dioceſs, or a whole Dioceſs, and put them under Deans or other Perſons; for if this be not lawful, but that Epiſcopacy ſhou'd be Jure Divino, the maintaining the Government as it is now is unlawful; ſo that, at beſt, the Government wants Alteration that is ſo imperfectly ſettled.

The Lord Stafford, whoſe Fate afterwards is ſo well known, as great a Bigot as he was to Popery, though he had till now been for the Bill, yet ſuch was the Strength of the Reaſons againſt it, with reſpect to this Part of the Teſt, that he freely declar'd, There ought to be an Addition to it, for preſerving the Freedom of Debates in Parliament; which was alſo ſtrongly ſupported by the Earls of Bridgwater, Clarendon, Denbigh, and Ailesbury; and the oppoſite Party was in the End oblig'd to agree that the Oath ſhou'd run thus: I A. B. do ſwear, that I will not endeavour to alter the Proteſtant Religion, now by Law eſtabliſh'd in the Church of England; nor the Government of the Kingdom, in Church or State, as it is now by Law eſtabliſh'd. And a Proviſo for Freedom of Debates in Parliament was mention'd, which breaking the main Deſign of the Bill, it was from thence-forward manag'd with leſs Warmth by the Favourers of it. The Marqueſs of Wincheſter, before the finiſhing of the Oath, tender'd an additional one, which wou'd have been very ſerviceable to the Publick if it cou'd have paſs'd.

M. of Winton's Oath againſt Places and Penſions.

I A. B. do ſwear, that I will never by Threats, Injunctions, Promiſes, Advantages, or Invitation, by or from any Perſon whatſoever, nor from the Hopes or Proſpect of any Gift, Place, Office, or Benefit whatſoever, give my Vote other than according to my Opinion and Conſcience, as I ſhall be truly and really perſuaded upon the Debate of any Buſineſs in Parliament. So help me God. This was intended only to be taken by the Members of Both Houſes. To this the Lord Keeper ſeem'd very averſe, and declar'd it in a Speech that has ſo much Flattery in it, 'tis perfectly nauſeous. It is an uſeleſs Oath; for all Gifts, Places, and Offices, are likelieſt to come from the King; and no Member of Parliament in either Houſe can do too much for the King, or be too much of his Side; and Men may lawfully and worthily have in their Proſpect ſuch Offices or Benefits from him. When ſuch Doctrine as this was taught in ſo auguſt an Aſſembly, was it not wonderful that we preſerv'd our Liberties! But there was a noble Band of Peers who ſtood in the Breach, and defended their Birth-right with equal Reaſon and Courage. Theſe reply'd, "That Men had been, might, and "were likely to be, in either Houſe, too much "for the King, as they call'd it, and that who-"ever endeavour'd to give more Power to the "King than the Law and Conſtitution of the "Government had given, eſpecially if it tended "to the introducing an abſolute and arbitrary Go-"vernment, might juſtly be ſaid to do too much "for the King, and to be directed in his Judg-"ment by the Proſpect of Advantages and Re-"wards; though when it is conſider'd, that eve-"ry Deviation of the Crown towards abſolute "Power, leſſens the King in the Love and Af-"fection of his People, making him become leſs "in their Intereſt, a wiſe Prince will not think it a "Service done him." Which modeſt and juſt Reaſoning, ſhews what little need Truth has of any Authority but its own to ſupport it. The Debate having been ſpun on to this Length, the Court-Lords found it was in vain for them to contend with the Country-Lords, who had the Right and the Reaſon on their Side; ſo they reſolv'd to give up the Field of Argument, and rely on their major Vote, which the Duke of Buckingham endeavour'd to put off by a Speech made late at Night, conſiſting of eloquent and well-plac'd Nonſenſe. But the Earl of Winchelſea perceiving what he aim'd at, cry'd out, The Queſtion, the Queſtion; and, as Mr. Locke phraſes it, the major Vote, Ultima Ratio Senatuum & Conciliorum, carry'd it as the Court and Clergy wou'd have it. A.D. 1675

Lord Keeper's nauſeous Speech.

He is anſwer'd.

The Debate laſted ſeventeen whole Days, the Houſe during that Time ſat often till Midnight; but the Oppoſition this Bill met with, and a Diſpute about Privilege ariſing between the two Houſes, were the Occaſion that the Lords who were for the Bill took ſo little Care of it afterwards, that 'twas never reported from the Committee to the Houſe.

Never was there ſhewn, ſince the Reſtoration, ſuch a Spirit of Liberty as on this Occaſion: This Bill wou'd for ever have put an End to any in England. What is moſt inglorious to the Lords who call'd themſelves Proteſtants, and yet gave this Countenance to Deſpotick Power, is, that the very Roman Catholicks join'd heartily with the other Lords who ſo reſolutely defended their own and the People's Liberties. Beſides the Lord Stafford before-mention'd, the Lord Petre was warm againſt this Bill, and ſpoke often, as did the Lord Audley, and both are to be found among the Proteſting Lords; which occaſion'd this very juſt Obſervation of Mr. Locke, But thus much I ſhall ſay of the Roman Catholick Peers, That if they were ſafe in their Eſtates, and yet kept out of Office, their Votes in that Houſe wou'd not be the moſt unſafe to England of any Sort of Men in it. And I have the Honour to know a Roman Catholick Peer whom I have more than once heard ſpeak with Indignation of thoſe baſe Men, who wou'd ſacrifice the Intereſt and Glory of their Country to Party and Prejudice. I cannot cloſe this Matter, without remembring the Zeal of ſome other Lords, as indeed there was Reaſon for it, their All being at Stake. We find the Earls of Bedford, Devonſhire, Burlington, Stamford, the Lord Say and Sele, the Lord Paget, the Lord Viſcount Hereford, the Lord Viſcount Townſhend, diſtinguiſh'd themſelves on this Occaſion. The Earl of Carnarvon came out of the Country on purpoſe to give his Vote againſt this Bill. The Earl of Rutland, the Lord Sandys, the Lord Herbert of Cherbury, the Lord North, and the Lord Crew, ſent their Proxies. But to deliver all their Names to Poſterity in Records worthy their Merit, muſt be the Buſineſs of ſome immortal Pen; to which I ſhall be proud to be aſſiſting, by handing them to it as far as they have come to my Knowledge: For theſe that follow were not all, but their Weight and Number became ſo important a Cauſe.

Lords of the Country Party.

Duke of Buckingham, Marqueſs of Wincheſter, Earl of Rutland, Earl of Bedford, Earl of Dorſet, Earl of Salisbury, Earl of Devonſhire, Earl of Bridgwater, Earl of Bolingbroke, Earl of Berks, Earl of Briſtol, Earl of Carnarvon, Earl of Ailesbury, Earl of Denbigh, Earl of Stamford, Earl of Clarendon, Earl of Shaftsbury, Earl of Burlington, Lord Viſcount Hereford, Lord Viſcount Say and Sele, Lord Viſcount Townſhend, Lord Viſcount Stafford, Lord Viſcount Hallifax, Lord Audley, Lord Fitzwalter, Lord Wharton, Lord Eure, Lord Pagett, Lord Mohun,

A.D.1675 Mohun, Lord Sandys, Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Lord Grey of Rolleſtone, Lord North, Lord Crew, Lord Petre, Lord Holles, Lord De la Mer.

Fagg and Shirley's Caſe.

At the Cloſe of this famous Conteſt, there happen'd as warm a one between the two Houſes about Appeals, in the Caſe of Fagg and Shirley. The latter, Dr. Shirley, brought an Appeal in the Houſe of Lords from a Decree in Chancery, againſt Sir John Fagg, a Member of the Houſe of Commons, which that Houſe look'd upon as an open Infringement of their Privileges: Accordingly they order'd Dr. Shirley to be taken into Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms, and the firſt Account they heard of him, was, that their Warrant for taking the Doctor into Cuſtody, was forcibly taken from the Serjeant's Deputy by the Lord Mohun. The Commons demanded Juſtice againſt the Lord Mohun; the Lords juſtify'd him. The Commons voted againſt any Commoner's pleading at the Lord's Bar againſt any Member of their Houſe, and committed Serjeant Pemberton, Serjeant Peck, Sir John Churchil, and Mr. Porter, Council for Shirley, to the Cuſtody of their Serjeant, and Sir John Fagg to the Tower, for his Compliance with the Lords.

Shirley and Fagg's Caſe, the Church.

On this Occaſion the King ſummon'd both Houſes to attend him at Whitehall, and told them, he look'd on their Difference about Appeals, to be a malicious Deſign againſt the Church: For ever ſince the New Faction has been form'd, of the High Epiſcopal Men and the Old Cavaliers, they have taken upon them the Name of the Church. Whenever they have been in Danger, the Church has been in Danger; whenever they have flouriſh'd by Bartholomew Acts, Five Mile Acts, Schiſm Acts, Occaſional Acts, the Church has been flouriſhing. One wou'd think that Shirley and Fagg's Caſe had no more to do with the Church of England than with the Church of Geneva; but it is ſolemnly ſaid from the Throne. Biſhop Burnet ſeems to think the Caſe of the Appeal was no Deſign againſt the Church, but that it happen'd in Courſe, though it produc'd great Effects: For both Houſes ſtanding on their Privileges, and no likelihood appearing of any Accommodation, the King, June the 9th, prorogu'd the Parliament to the 13th of October. The Commons had voted 300,000 Pounds for building of Ships, but at the ſame time had reſolv'd to appropriate Tonnage and Poundage, amounting to 400,000 Pounds a Year, to the Uſe of the Navy, as it was firſt deſign'd, which was not at all to the good liking of the Court; who had rather loſe the other 300,000 Pounds, than admit of a Fund to be appropriated to the Navy, which they had appropriated ſo long to more gallant Uſes. Beſides, 'twas viſible enough that the Penſioners in the Houſe wou'd not be able to ſupport the Treaſurer Danby, and that a great Party had agreed to give no Money while the preſent Lord Treaſurer continu'd in his Office.

Penſioner's baſe Ground.

Echard enlarges on Sir William Temple's Negotiations concerning King Charles's Mediation; Nimeguen was named by Temple, to be the Place of Treaty: But Mareſchal de Turenne being kill'd this Year by a Cannon-Ball in a Skirmiſh, Triers taken by the Germans, and ſome other Advantages happening on the Side of the Confederates, the King writes immediately to Temple to induce the Prince of Orange to a Peace by a new Argument, the Greatneſs of the Houſe of Auſtria, which no doubt was dictated by the French Court. The Prince anſwer'd that Chimerical Argument with good Senſe: There is no Fear of that till they go beyond the Peace of the Pyrenees; whenever that ſhall happen, I ſhall be as good a French-man as I am now a Spaniard. An excellent Saying, if

An excellent Saying of the Prince of Orange.

Wiſdom had had any Weight in our Counſels. Temple tells us of Diſcourſe he had with the King about the Affairs abroad, in which there does not appear much Depth of Policy; and he muſt take Sir William to know leſs than he did of Men and Things, to think to impoſe what he ſaid as good Reaſon on a Miniſter of his Capacity and Experience. Some of the Leaders in both Houſes have a Mind to engage me in a War with France, which they ſhall not do for many Reaſons, and among the reſt, becauſe I am ſure if they did, they wou'd leave me in it, and make uſe of it to ruin my Miniſters. He knew they wou'd not leave him in it, if he was in earneſt, and did not miſapply the Money they gave him for the War, on his Women and extravagant Pleaſures. And as to his Miniſters, if they had ſerv'd him, given him faithful Counſel, and manag'd his Revenues as they ought to have done, he wou'd have parted with them as freely as with his Parliament. The true Reaſon, of which he ſaid not a Word, was, that he had a Penſion from the French King, and lov'd his Religion and Government, which by the private League between them were to be eſtabliſh'd in England. Biſhop Burnet tells us, He had round Sums of Money ſent him. The King deſir'd Sir William Temple to reconcile Arlington and Danby, which was no grateful Employment; for Arlington hated Temple as a Creature of Danby's, and his Endeavours were ineffectual.

A.D.1675

The King a French Penſioner.

There is very little Buſineſs done now in England, but what relates to the Parliament, which the Court was afraid of loſing, after they had been at ſuch Expence to keep them Staunch. Sir Harbottle Grimſton took Occaſion, on a Debate about Grievances, to ſay, That conſidering the Extent of Privilege, he look'd on a ſtanding Parliament as the greateſt Grievance of the Nation, ſo many Men being exempted from Juſtice, and from the Demands of their Creditors, for ſo long, and ſo indefinite a Time. Though this Motion was let fall, it was not forgot, as we ſhall ſee in the Sequel.

Popiſh Plot.

We have made ſome mention of the Popiſh Plot, as it was carry'd on by Coleman in Generals, before the Particulars broke out; and by his Letter to the Pope's Inter-nuntio of the 30th of Auguſt this Year, we find it thrives amain. "The Duke hath almoſt ſurmounted all the Difficulties which have oppos'd his Eſtabliſhment; the Face of Affairs are well chang'd: For we now paſſionately wiſh to ſee the coming on of the Parliament, which we have ſo much fear'd before; and while it was held doubtful whether it ought to meet or no, we employ'd all our Power to bring it on; which Point we have gain'd but within theſe few Days: And for my Part, I no ways doubt but that we ſhall receive as much Good by it, as we apprehend Ill, provided that the Duke fail not in the Execution of the good Reſolutions he hath taken."

Coleman's Letter to the Pope's Inter-nuntio,

In a long Letter to La Chaiſe, the French King's Confeſſor, he ſays thus: "I take our Caſe to be much the ſame as it was the laſt Seſſions; if we can advance the Duke's Intereſt one Step forward, we ſhall put him out of the Reach of all Chances for ever, and all wou'd come over to him, as the only ſteady Centre of our Government." It is from hence very plain that they look'd not on King Charles as a ſteady Centre; and being impatient to have a Prince on the Throne who was ſteady to them, 'tis not ſtrange that they reſolv'd to remove the unſteady One, to place him upon it, whoſe Steadineſs they were ſure of. He proceeds, "In order to this, we have two great Deſigns to attempt the next Seſſions: 1. That which we went about before, viz. To put and to La Chaiſe.

Why the Papiſts againſt the King.

A.D.1675 " put the Parliament upon making it their hum-
" ble Requeſt to the King, that the Fleet may be " put to his Royal Highneſs's Care. 2. To get " an Act for a general Liberty of Conſcience. If " we carry theſe two, or either of them, we ſhall
" in Effect do what we liſt afterwards.——There" fore if his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty wou'd ſtand
" by us a little in this Conjuncture, and help us
" to ſuch a Sum as 20,000 Pounds, which is no
" great Matter to venture upon ſuch an Under" taking as this, I wou'd be content to be ſacri-
" fic'd to the utmoſt Malice of my Enemies if I " did not ſucceed. I have propos'd this ſeveral
" Times to Monſieur Ruvigny, who ſeems al-

" a Proteſtant, whether he will be as zealous in " this Point as a Catholick wou'd be; becauſe our " prevailing in theſe things will give the great-
" eſt Blow to the Proteſtant Religion, that ever
" it receiv'd ſince its Birth.

Here Echard, after a Popiſh Author, aſſures us, there was not ſo much as a Snip of Paper diſcover'd againſt the Papiſts who ſuffer'd for the Plot. Coleman was one of them, and never did Traitor leave ſuch a Snip of Treaſon behind him. He writes for 20,000 Pounds, to enable him to deſtroy the Religion of his Country; and again, Ruvigny, perhaps, wou'd not be very glad to ſee it deſtroy'd, eſpecially when he believes there is another way of doing his Maſter's Buſineſs without it, which is by a Diſſolution of the Parliament. But I think our Caſe extreamly alter'd from what it was a Year ago, in relation to a Diſſolution; for then the Body of our governing Miniſters, all but the Earl of Arlington, was entirely united to the Duke, and wou'd have govern'd his Way, if they had been free from all Fear and Comptrol, as they wou'd have been, if the Parliament had been diſſolv'd. But having ſince then been engag'd in quite different Counſels, and embark'd themſelves and Intereſts upon other Bottoms, having declar'd themſelves againſt Popery, &c. to diſſolve the Parliament ſimply, and without any other Step made, will leave them to govern what way they liſt. Soon after, and a little before the Meeting of the Parliament, he ſent another Letter to the ſame Confeſſor, which when diſcover'd, made a mighty Impreſſion upon the Nation; and the more, becauſe he told him of writing after a Way inviſible to other People by the Juice of a Lemon. In which Letter he has theſe treaſonable Words; We have here a mighty Work upon our Hands, no leſs than the Converſion of three Kingdoms, and by that, perhaps, the ſubduing of a Peſtilent Hereſy. Not a Snip of Paper, ſays Mr. Archdeacon, which has domineer'd over a great Part of the Northern World a long Time. There were never ſuch Hopes of Succeſs ſince the Death of Queen Mary, as now in our Days; when God has given us a Prince who is become (may I ſay a Miracle) zealous of being the Author and Inſtrument of ſo glorious a Work; but the Oppoſition we are ſure to meet with, is alſo like to be great; ſo that it imports us to get all the Aid and Aſſiſtance we can; for the Harveſt is great, and the Labourers but few. If the Duke of York had a Share in this Treaſon, equal to what his Secretary vouches for him, what fine Proteſtants were thoſe, who after the Diſcovery of it, treated the Bill of Excluſion as Echard treats it, a Work of Sedition and Rebellion? The Prince to be excluded is in a Conſpiracy againſt the Religion of the Country he is to reign over, and zealous for its Deſtruction: Yet the Compleat Hiſtorians cannot bear to have his Heirſhip interrupted, tho' there was no other Way of ſaving the Church, of which they were Members, if not Miniſters.

His Treaſon.

On the 18th of October the Parliament met, and the King made a Speech to them, wherein he deſir'd they wou'd lay aſide, or poſtpone the Conteſt in Shirley and Fagg's Caſe, between the two Houſes: He recommended to them the Security of the Proteſtant Religion, himſelf ſtill a Papiſt, and the providing for the Anticipations of his Funds, and for Building of Ships, promiſing for the future to be a better Husband than he finds he has been, though we ſhall not find it in the future Accounts. There is ſo little Conſcience in the Length of the Keeper's Speech, that I ſhall leave it entire in Echard's Chronicle, who boaſts that he has crowded it in all, without Abridgment or Mutilation. He forgets not the King's unwearied Zeal for the Reform'd Religion, nor the Anticipations, nor the Building of Ships; but ſince, as the Reverend Hiſtorian informs us, Neither his Rhetorick, nor his Promiſes, avail'd much with the Houſe of Commons: We will ſee what they did. A.D.1675

They began with re-aſſuming ſuch publick Bills as they cou'd not compleat laſt Seſſion; as the Habeas Corpus Act, the Act againſt ſending Men Priſoners beyond Sea; another againſt raiſing Money without Conſent of Parliament; a fourth againſt Papiſts ſitting in either Houſe; another for ſpeedier convicting of Papiſts; another for recalling the King's Subjects out of the French Service. And as to the Supply, they proceeded in the former Method of the two Bills, one for raiſing 300,000 Pounds, and the other for appropriating Tonnage and Poundage for the Uſe of the Navy. In the Lord's Houſe there was a good Diſpoſition towards Things of publick Intereſt. But, ſays Mr. Marvel, 300,000 Pounds was ſo inſipid a Thing to thoſe that had been continually regal'd with Millions; and the Act of Appropriation, with ſome others, went ſo much againſt Stomach, that there wanted only an Opportunity to reject them, and that which was readieſt at Hand was the late Quarrel betwixt the Houſe of Lords and the Commons; which was reviv'd and carry'd on with more Heat than ever in the laſt Seſſion. In the Houſe of Commons the Debates ran high about the Supply; the Penſioners were for giving more than was propos'd, knowing that nothing cou'd come to them out of that 'Twas ſaid the King had not enough in his Hands to maintain the Government, and ſecure the Nation, tho' our Neutrality at that Time made Trade flow in upon us, ſo that the Cuſtoms roſe higher than ever. On the other Side 'twas ſaid, If Anticipations were once admitted as a Reaſon for a Supply, the Court wou'd never want that Reaſon. It was therefore fitter to examine by whoſe Means, and on what Deſigns thoſe Anticipations were made. At laſt the Queſtion was put, and the Vote being then ſtated, the previous Queſtion was alſo put, whether the main Queſtion ſhou'd be then put or not? The Votes happening to be equal, Sir Charles Harbord, Chairman of the Committe, gave it for putting the main Queſtion. But ſome of the Country Party coming in between the two Queſtions, the main Queſtion was loſt by two or three Votes, which made the Court very indifferent as to their ſitting. Sir Charles Harbord was much blam'd for his Raſhneſs. His Excuſe was, that it was the Duty of the Chair always to ſet Matters forward, and ſo he ought to have given it for putting the main Queſtion; and if there had been the ſame Equality, he ſaid He wou'd have given it for the Court. He was rich and covetous, and had known ſome of the Extent of the King's Liberality. His Son, Mr. William Harbord, Privy-Counſellor to King William, was talk'd of for a ſmart Repartee he Shirley and Fagg again.

A.D.1675 made to his Father in this Debate. Sir Charles had ſaid, The right Way to gain the King is to lay your Hands on your Purſes and deal roundly with him. His Son, Mr. William Harbord, ſaid, I ſecond the Motion; but I mean, we ſhou'd lay our Hands on our Purſes as I my ſelf do, holding his Pocket very faſt, and keeping it cloſe ſhut. The Earl of Danby was much diſappointed at this. The Court had try'd their whole Strength to keep off the Petition of Appeal, till they ſaw what might be expected from the Commons; and as ſoon as their grand Vote was loſt, the Lords went upon the Petition; and the Commons, as has been hinted, oppoſing them vigorouſly, it was viſible that the Parliament wou'd be quickly prorogu'd. Upon this it was propos'd in the Houſe of Lords to addreſs the King for Diſſolving the preſent Parliament. 'Twas evident the two Houſes cou'd no longer maintain the Correſpondence that was neceſſary; the Conteſt about the Appeal wou'd drop with this Parliament, but cou'd not while this laſted. It was ſaid a Standing Parliament chang'd the Conſtitution of England. The King did no more conſult with his People, nor know them. But he had now a Cabal of ſingle Perſons to deal with, &c. The Majority of the Temporal Lords were for it; but the Bench of Biſhops, ſays my Lord of Sarum, was againſt it, and ſo it was not carry'd, tho' the Duke of York voted for it, and we having before us

Mr. Harbord's Repartee to his Father.

A.D.1675

Lords preſent 34. Gave Proxies 16.—Total 50.

I cannot cloſe the Hiſtory of this Seſſion of Parliament without remembring Part of a Speech of the Earl of Shaftsbury's, about the Appeal; and a whole Speech of the Duke of Buckingham's, about a Toleration for Diſſenters. The Reader will in both find Strength of Reaſon, and Beauty of Stile, uncorrupted with the Paint of Affectation, as in the Lord Keeper's Harangues.

The firſt is the Beginning of the Earl of Shaftsbury's Speech, the 20th of October.

My Lords,

" Our All is at Stake, and therefore you muſt give me Leave to ſpeak freely before we part with it. My Lord Biſhop of Salisbury is of Opinion, That we ſhou'd rather appoint a Day to conſider what to do upon the Petition of Appeal, than to appoint a Day of Hearing: And my Lord Keeper, for I may name them at a Committee of the whole Houſe, tells us in very eloquent and ſtudy'd Language, That he will propoſe us a Way leſs liable to Exception, and much leſs offenſive and ruinous to our own Privileges than that of appointing a Day of Hearing. And, I beſeech your Lordſhips, did not you, after all theſe fine Words, expect ſome admirable Propoſal? But it ended in this, That your Lordſhips ſhou'd appoint a Day, nay a very long Day, to conſider what you wou'd do in it. And my Lord hath undertaken to convince you, that this is your only Courſe by ſeveral undeniable Reaſons; the firſt of which is, That 'tis againſt your Judicature to hear this Cauſe, which is not proper before us, nor ought to be reliev'd by us. To this, my Lords, give me Leave to anſwer, That I did not expect from a Man profeſſing the Law, that after no Anſwer by Order of the Court was put in, and a Day had been appointed for hearing, which by ſome Accident was ſet aſide, and the Plaintiff moving for a ſecond Day to be aſſign'd, that even without Council on both Sides, the Court did enter into the Merits of the Cauſe; and if your Lordſhips ſhou'd do it here in a Cauſe attended with the Circumſtances this is, it wou'd not only be an apparent Injuſtice, but a plain Subterfuge, to avoid a Point you durſt not maintain. Earl of Shaftsbury's Speech.

The Speech is not too long to be inſerted without Mutilation; but this Year has already given too much Length to our Hiſtory. The Duke of Buckingham's is the more worth repeating; for that it is full of thoſe Sentiments of Piety and Charity, which wou'd have been more natural in the Biſhops, but they did not drop a Hint of that Kind in all this long Parliament.

My Lords,

There is a thing call'd Property (whatever ſome Men may think) that the People of England are fondeſt of. It is that they will never part with, and it is that his Majeſty in his Speech has promis'd to take particular Care of. This, my Lords, in my Opinion, can never be done without an Indulgence to all Proteſtant Diſſenters. It is certainly a very uneaſy kind of Life to any Man that has either Chriſtian Charity, Good Nature, or Humanity, to ſee his Fellow Subjects daily abus'd, diveſted of their Liberty and Birth-rights, and miſerably thrown out of their Poſſeſſions and Free-holds, only becauſe they cannot agree with others Duke of Buckingham's Speech for Toleration.

A.D.1675 others in the ſame Opinions and Niceties of Religion, which their Conſciences will not give them Leave to conſent to, and which even by the Conſent of thoſe who wou'd impoſe them, are no way neceſſary to Salvation.

But, my Lords, beſides this, and all that may be ſaid upon it, in order to the Improvement of our Trade, and the Encreaſe of the Wealth, Strength and Greatneſs of this Nation, which, with your Leave, I ſhall preſume to diſcourſe of at ſome other Time, there is, methinks, in this Notion of Perſecution, a very groſs Miſtake, both as to the Point of Government and Religion.

There is ſo, as to the Point of Government, becauſe it makes every Man's Safety depend upon the wrong Place, not upon the Governor, or a Man's living well towards the Civil Government eſtabliſh'd by Law, but upon his being tranſported with Zeal for every Opinion that is held by thoſe that have Power in the Church that is in Faſhion.

And I perceive it's a Miſtake in Religion, for that it is poſitively againſt the expreſs Doctrine and Example of Jeſus Chriſt: Nay, my Lords, as to our Proteſtant Religion, there is ſomething yet worſe; for we Proteſtants maintain, that none of theſe Opinions, which Chriſtians here differ about, are Infallible; therefore in us it is ſomewhat an unexcuſable Conception, that Men ought to be depriv'd of their Inheritance, and all their certain Conveniencies and Advantages of Life, becauſe they will not agree with us in our uncertain Opinions of Religion.

My humble Motion to your Lordſhips therefore is, That you will give me Leave to bring in a Bill of Indulgence to all Proteſtant DISSENTERS. I know very well, that every Peer of the Realm has a Right to bring into Parliament any Bill which he conceives to be uſeful to this Nation. But I thought it more reſpectful to your Lordſhips to ask your Leave for it before, and I cannot think that doing of it will be any Prejudice to the Bill, becauſe I am confident the Reaſon, the Prudence, and the Charitableneſs of it will be able to juſtify it to this Houſe and the whole World.

Accordingly the Houſe gave the Duke of Buckingham Leave to bring in a Bill ſix Days before the Parliament was prorogu'd to the 15th of February, 1677, almoſt a Year and three Months.

As we have taken Notice of ſome leading Members of the Houſe of Peers, who diſtinguiſh'd themſelves in the two laſt Seſſions of Parliament by their Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty, ſo ſhou'd we alſo remember ſome leading Members of the Houſe of Commons in the ſame Seſſions, as Sir Harbottle Grimſton, Lord Ruſſel, Lord Cavendiſh, Sir William Coventry, Col. Birch, Sir Thomas Littleton, Sir Thomas Lee, Mr. Powle, Mr. Waller, Mr. Vaughan, &c. who, by their good Senſe, Experience, Steadineſs and Courage, weather'd all the Tempeſts that were rais'd by the Intrigues of the Enemies to their Country, and ſate in that Houſe ſo long, that they at length became a Part of that Majority, which, before this Parliament was diſſolv'd, became as good Patriots as were in the ſucceeding Aſſemblies.

Members of the Houſe of Commons in the publick Intereſt.

About a Month after this Seſſions was over, the King having created Sir Heneage Finch Baron of Daventry, chang'd his Title of Lord Keeper into that of Lord High Chancellor of England. Some Time before this he appointed John Lord Berkley, Sir William Temple, and Sir Lionel Jenkins, to be his Ambaſſadors Plenipotentiaries at the Treaty of Nimeguen. In the Chriſtmas Holidays a Proclamation was publiſh'd againſt Coffee-houſes, as Places of Reſort for idle and diſaffected Perſons; but the Coffee-men giving 500 Pounds Bond not to ſuffer any Libels, that is, News to be read in their Houſes, they were permitted to ſell Coffee by Licence. The Miniſtry was not ſatisfy'd with this Care againſt ſeditious Libels, by which was underſtood every Pamphlet that did not flatter them; ſo a Proclamation was iſſu'd for the better Diſcovery of Libellers, with a Promiſe of 50 Pounds Reward for each Diſcovery. Mr. Locke's Account of the Debates about the Teſt of Abhorrence was one of the State Libels, againſt whom theſe Proclamations were intended. We muſt not omit that this Year his Majeſty was viſited by the Prince of Newburgh, attended with a Train of fifty Perſons of Quality and Servants.

A.D.1675 Proclamation againſt Coffee-houſes.

We ſhall borrow the Promotions this Year from Mr. Archdeacon, where they appear more ornamented; Giles Strangeways, Eſq; Chriſtopher Duke of Albemarle, and Dr. Compton were made Privy-Counſellors. Thomas Povey, Eſq; Maſter of Requeſts, in the Room of Sir Thomas Beverley, deceas'd. Sir Richard Bulſtrode, Reſident at Bruſſels. And this Year alſo, we read in the ſame Hiſtory, the two young Princeſſes, Lady Mary and Lady Anne, were confirm'd in the King's Chapel, to the great Joy and Satisfaction of all who had any Fears and Apprehenſions of Popery.

1676. In a Deſign of this Nature 'twas impoſſible to be ſo copious upon the Affairs of Scotland and Ireland, as the Gentlemen Natives of thoſe Kingdoms may expect. The Hiſtory of England, and of the Deſign form'd againſt the Religion, Rights and Liberties of Engliſh-men ſince the Stuartine Government, was the original Intention of this Work, and to take in what relates to Scotland and Ireland no farther than the Affairs there have Connection with thoſe in England, and with the Contrivances of the common Enemy to deſtroy the Conſtitution in Church and State, as eſtabliſh'd in the three Kingdoms.

Scotland. After the Executions for the Tumult at Pentland-Hill, in Scotland, were pretty well over, the King, ſays Biſhop Burnet, was more gentle than the Biſhops. Dalziel, who commanded the King's Forces, threaten'd to ſpit Men, and roaſt them: Some he kill'd in cold, or rather hot Blood; for he was drunk when he order'd one to be hang'd, becauſe he wou'd not tell where his Father was. When he heard of any who did not go to Church, he did not as the new Laws enjoin'd, ſet a Fine upon them, but he ſet as many Soldiers on them as ſhou'd eat them up in a Night. By this means all People were ſtruck with ſuch a Terror, that they came regularly to Church; and my Lord of Sarum tells us, The Clergy were ſo delighted with it, that they us'd to ſpeak of thoſe Times, as the Poets do of the Golden Age. They never interceeded for any Compaſſion to their People, nor did they take care to live more regularly, or to labour more carefully. They look'd on the Soldiery as their Patrons; they were ever in their Company, complying with their Exceſſes; and if they were not much wrong'd, they rather led them into them, than check'd them for them. Dalziel himſelf, and his Officers, were ſo diſguſted with them, that they encreas'd the Complaints, which had now more Credit from them, than from thoſe of the Country, who were look'd on as their Enemies. Things of ſo ſtrange a Pitch in Vice were told of them, that they ſeem'd ſcarce credible. What a fine Change the Scots Biſhops made ſince the Reſtoration in the Miniſtry of the Goſpel!

I mention

A.D.1676 I mention not the Treaty of Accommodation between the Epiſcopal and Presbyterian Parties in Scotland, in the Year 1669, becauſe it ſucceeded not; nor the Project of Union between the two Kingdoms, for the ſame Reaſon. The turning out of Burnet, Archbiſhop of Glaſcow, and putting the pious Leighton into his See, might have produc'd good Effects in that Part of Scotland, had the Kirk-men been ever ſo little diſpos'd to moderate Compliances; but they generally look'd upon themſelves as under the Obligation of the Covenant, from whence they cou'd not deviate without Sin; to which, whatever they had, 'tis plain their Opponents had no Regard; for ſuch a Crew was never thruſt into any Church or Temple, as the Scots Curates were, whom the Scots Biſhops brought along with them into that Proteſtant Church. But inſtead of the Comprehenſion, which holy Leighton deſir'd, there were ſtill ſeverer Acts paſs'd by the Government; and beſides the arbitrary Fines put on thoſe who did not come tohear thoſe vitious Curates, Converſions were made by Dragoons, in Imitation of the French King's military Miſſions. There was an Act paſs'd in the Year 1670, making all Field-Meetings Treaſon: Though half of the Parliament abhor'd the Act, yet ſo abject were they in their Submiſſions to the Duke of Lauderdale, who manag'd all things, that only the young Earl of Caſſilis voted in the Negative. Some Miniſters took out Licences from the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, to preach under the before-mention'd Reſtrictions; one of which was ſo contrary to the Principles of Presbytery, that the moſt zealous and religious Kirk-men cou'd not comply; and they, and their Paſtors, met to worſhip God in the Fields. The Presbyterians were for a while cajol'd, in order to bring them to accept of the pretended Indulgence granted by a diſpenſing Power in Scotland, as in England, but few were drawn in by it. Thoſe that refus'd the Licences were now call'd Whiggs, ſome ſay, from a Drink compos'd of Water and ſoure Milk, us'd by the meaner Sort of People; and were repreſented to his Majeſty as a Party who were not to be ſuffer'd in any Government, but ought to be rooted off from the Face of the Earth. They were look'd on as Rebels, and if they wou'd meet to worſhip God, it muſt be in a Body, and in Arms, their Enemies being every where ready to cut them to pieces. Their Field-Aſſemblies were the Field-Conventicles, ſo much rail'd at by ſuch as knew nothing of them; nor that they were only Religious Aſſemblies, hateful to none but Men of no Religion, or a Religion worſe than none, which every Religion is, that renounces Charity and Mercy. The People who thus met in the Fields, were now term'd Cameronians, from one Mr. Cameron, whom my Author calls a zealous Aſſertor of the Sovereignty of Conſcience over the Laws of Men: Words which have as much Truth in them as Spirit. Let us ſee what the ſame Author adds, "If the Perſecution was cruel "and furious before, it was now raging and un- "ſufferable, carry'd on with ſuch Madneſs, and "with ſuch an unſatisfy'd Thirſt of Blood, that "I believe none of the Heathen Perſecutions in "the Primitive Times cou'd go beyond it in all "its Parts. It is true, they did not immediately "torment the Body by Fire, by Racks, and a "vaſt variety of inſtrumental Torments; though "they had Cruelty enough that Way too, as in "thoſe dreadful Engines of Barbarity, the Boot "and the Thumbkins, than which a more exqui- "ſite Torture cou'd not eaſily be devis'd. But "they had Torments beyond the Cruelty of "Death, which they forc'd the poor perſecuted "Proteſtants to ſuffer, driving them from their "Dwellings into Mountains and Hills, into Dens, "Holes, and Caves of the Earth, attended with "unſufferable, inſupportable Hunger and Cold, "in a Climate the moſt unhoſpitable, and Places "moſt barren and empty of Suſtenance or Re- "lief of any in theſe Parts of the World." The Horror is already too ſtrong, and I cannot go through the reſt of it; but when I conſider by what Hands this Helliſh Work was done, I am aſtoniſh'd, beyond Conception, that any Chriſtian Senate ſhou'd have put it into their Power, or indeed have ſuffer'd ſuch a mercileſs Blood-thirſty Generation to have had a Being or Countenance within their Juriſdiction. I ſhall cloſe this Account of the barbarous Perſecution, in the Words of the former Hiſtorian: "I have talk'd with many ſo- "ber and judicious Perſons, who then liv'd in "that Part of the Country, and were Eye-wit- "neſſes to much of it. I find they all agree in "this, that many Thouſands of people periſh'd "under the violent Hands of theſe, beſides thoſe "that were kill'd under Pretence of being in Re- "bellion. One Reverend Miniſter aſſur'd me, that "taking in the People who dy'd in Priſons, and "in Baniſhment, they had an Account of above "18,000 Perſons, whoſe Blood theſe Perſecutors "have to account for, &c." By the before-mention'd Act, All Perſons of what Quality, Age, or Sex whatſoever, were oblig'd to anſwer upon Oath, and depoſe all they knew of Field Meetings, and to anſwer the Queſtions that ſhou'd be ask'd them upon Oath; which Queſtions, the Officers and Dragoons were authoriz'd to put to them, and to uſe them at Diſcretion, if they were not ſatisfy'd with the Anſwers that were given them; in Conſequence of which Power and Perſecution, all theſe Horrors were committed. As to the Conferences between Leighton on one Side, and Hutchinſon on the other, about Terms of Accommodation, mention'd at large by Biſhop Burnet, I do not enter into the Particulars of it, under Conviction, that tho' Leighton's Deſign was doubtleſs very honeſt, yet there was no Thought of accommodating Matters in the other Biſhops, who had the King's and the Commiſſioners Ear much more than Leighton. As to the Commiſſioner Lauderdale, he was ſuch a Compoſition of Lewdneſs, Tyranny, Corruption, Diſſimulation, and all Vices, that 'tis a Diſgrace to Hiſtory to have to do with him. We have ſeen what an Act he has paſs'd in Scotland, and yet before he went to Scotland, he ſignify'd to Mr. Baxter, that there was a Purpoſe of taking off the Oath of Canonical Obedience, and all Impoſitions of Conformity there, ſave only that it ſhou'd be neceſſary to ſit in Presbyteries and Synods with the Biſhops and Moderators. Lauderdale inform'd him, he had the King's Conſent to offer him what Place in Scotland he wou'd chooſe, either a Church or a Colledge in one of the Univerſities, or a Biſhoprick; but he excus'd himſelf on account of Indiſpoſition, and the Circumſtances of his Family. After Lauderdale was in Scotland, Sir Robert Murray, a Man of great Worth, Learning, and Honour, ſent Mr. Baxter the Frame of a Body of Church-Diſcipline for Scotland, and deſir'd his Animadverſions; which whoever will read in Baxter's Life at large, will not think Hutchinſon, and the zealous Presbyterians ſo much to blame, as the Biſhop of Salisbury repreſents them, in refuſing Leighton's Propoſitions, which are moſt of them conſider'd accidentally in thoſe Animadverſions. Some time after the paſſing of that Tyrannical Act againſt Field Meetings, Lauderdale return'd to London, where he ſtay'd till after the French Conqueſts in Holland; and when he came back to Edinburgh, he ſeem'd much lifted up with

Mr. Baxter again offer'd a Biſhoprick.

A.D.1676 with them, and talk'd of De Wit's Fate with ſo much Pleaſure, that it cou'd not be heard without Horror. He treated all People ſo ſcornfully, that his Behaviour was inſufferable. He carry'd his Dutcheſs in a ſort of Triumph about the Country with him, and he was every where receiv'd with as much Reſpect as if the King had been there in Perſon; which enrag'd the Nobility, and they made great Applications to Duke Hamilton to head a Party againſt him. His Wife behav'd as inſolently towards the Ladies and Gentlewomen, as he did towards the Lords and Gentlemen. He expected an Addreſs from the Preſbyterians for a Toleration, as it was in England in the Year 1672; but, ſays my Lord of Sarum, The Presbyterians underſtanding they were only to be made uſe of in order to the introducing of Popery, reſolv'd to be paſſive and ſilent. Upon this he broke out into Fury and Rage againſt them. The Biſhop adds, I viſited ſome of them in Priſon, and ſaw in them the blind Madneſs of ill grounded Zeal; which has as much Sophiſtry in it, as any of the Arguments us'd by Gunning, Morley, &c. If the Men were Mad, they were Mad, and conſequently blind with a Witneſs; if they were not Mad, but did really believe that the Solemn League and Covenant, which they had ſworn, oblig'd their Conſciences, and they cou'd not break it without Perjury, nor be perjur'd without endangering the Salvation of their Souls, there was no Blindneſs nor Madneſs in their Zeal, but a Sincerity and Warmth which may well enough paſs for Folly or Frenzy in Minds that gravitate eternally to the Centre of this World.

Biſhop Burnet anſwer'd.

Duke Lauderdale held a Parliament at Edinburgh in 1675, and Duke Hamilton, join'd by the Earls of Rothes, Tweedale, Argyle, and other Principal Lords, fell immediately upon Grievances, which ſtruck Lauderdale as one dead; and he declar'd in the Privy-Council, that he had Power, and was ready to redreſs all the Grievances complain'd of. In the mean time, he referr'd the Complaints to the Lords of the Articles, as the Words of an Act impower'd him to do. And thoſe Lords who were to prepare Things for the Parliament, being moſtly of the King's making, the Matter was kept in Suſpence by the Prerogative, though in Truth thoſe Lords were only a Committee of Parliament, to put Motions into the Form of Acts, the Parliament having ſtill an entire Authority to examine into the State of the Nation.

The Houſe of Commons in England fell upon Lauderdale for his evil Counſels, and enquir'd, as far as it concern'd the Safety of England, into his Conduct in Scotland. During theſe Enquiries, the King wrote to Duke Hamilton to come up to London; and when he and Lord Tweedale arriv'd at Court, they were ſo well receiv'd, that they hop'd to carry their Point againſt Lauderdale: But the King's Deſign in it was to make the Houſe of Commons believe he wou'd part with Lauderdale, if they wou'd give him Money, and employ thoſe other two Lords; in which they and the Scots Nation being diſappointed, it enrag'd a violent Party ſo much, that Propoſitions were offer'd for deſtroying Lauderdale and his Adherents, but it was rejected with Abhorrence. The Duke of Lauderdale ſtood his Ground at Court, notwithſtanding the Houſe of Commons addreſs'd againſt him. Biſhop Burnet informs us, that he ſet up himſelf as a Champion for the Church of England, though, as the Duke of York ſaid of him, He wou'd do any thing to ſave himſelf. He brought Sharp with him to London, who went about aſſuring all People, That the Party ſet up in Scotland againſt Lauderdale, was likewiſe ſet againſt the Church. Which, to uſe my Lord of Sarum's Words, was notoriouſly falſe; and I obſerve whenever that ſame Sharp is mention'd in his Lordſhip's Hiſtory, there is almoſt always ſomething coming very falſe and very wicked.

Sharp makes Lauderdale the Church.

A.D.1676 His Falſhood and Wickedneſs.

Lord Kincardin coming to Court, wou'd have given the King ſome further Light into Lauderdale's ill Government, but it was a String his Majeſty wou'd not ſuffer to be touch'd: That Flatterer having not only ſaid at the Council-Board, That his Edicts were Laws, but told the King, There was a Spirit of Rebellion that ran through all Sorts of People, and it muſt be ſubdu'd by Acts of Power, tho' neither legal nor juſt. The Man who ſaid it dy'd in his Bed. Lauderdale demanded of the King, that Kincardin ſhou'd be ſent Home: His Majeſty reply'd, He ſaw no Reaſon for it, and wou'd not do it. Upon which he goes to his Apartment, and fell into a Fit of Diſtraction, gather'd up all his Commiſſions and Papers, and was about carrying 'em to the King. But the Marqueſs of Athol went to his Majeſty, and told him, He had ſent Duke Lauderdale Home half mad, and begg'd his Majeſty to take Pity upon him: So the Earl of Kincardin was order'd down to Scotland. What a Genius for Government had this Monarch, who uſes a good Subject ill to humour a Sycophant loaden with the Curſes of all honeſt Men in the three Kingdoms?

Ireland.

Affairs in Ireland went not better than in England and Scotland: When the Source is corrupted, let the Stream divide itſelf into ever ſo many Branches, they will all participate of the original Corruption. That buſy Agent for the Iriſh Rebels, Richard Talbot, in 1671, deliver'd a Petition to the King for a Re-hearing of the former Judgments againſt the Papiſts, many of whom had been diſpoſſeſs'd of their Lands by the Act of Settlement; at which the Houſe of Commons in England taking Offence, Talbot's Agency and boaſted Intereſt prov'd very inſignificant.

We have mention'd the Earl of Eſſex's being appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, of whom we read thus in Biſhop Burnet's Memoirs. He cou'd never underſtand how he came to be rais'd to that Poſt, for he had never pretended to it; and he was a violent Enemy to Popery, not ſo much from any fix'd Principle in Religion, in which, ſays the Biſhop, he was too looſe, as becauſe he look'd on it as an Invaſion made on the Freedom of humane Nature. In his Government of Ireland he exceeded all that had gone before him, and is ſtill conſider'd as a Pattern to all that came after him. He ſtudy'd to underſtand exactly well the Conſtitution and Intereſt of the Nation: He read over all their Council-Books, and made large Abſtracts out of them to guide him, ſo as to advance every thing that had been at any time ſet on Foot for the Good of the Kingdom. He made ſeveral Volumes of Tables of the Eſtates and Perſons that were in every County and Town, and got true Characters of all that were capable to ſerve the Publick. He prefer'd Men always for their Merit, without any Application from themſelves; and watch'd over all about him, that there ſhou'd be no Bribes going among his Servants.

Earl of Eſſex's good Government.

The Revenue of Ireland was then in the Earl of Ranelagh's Management, one of the ableſt Men that Iſland had bred, capable of all Affairs, even in the midſt of a looſe Run of Pleaſure. He had undertaken to furniſh the King with Money for the building of Windſor, out of the Revenue of Ireland; and it was believ'd the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth had a great yearly Penſion out of his Office. By this Means Payments in Ireland were not regularly made, of which the Earl of Eſſex complain'd. The King wou'd not own however, how much he had of Lord Ranelagh, but preſs'd Lord Eſſex to paſs his Ac-

Earl of Ranelagh's Character.

A.D. 1676 compts. My Lord Eſſex reply'd, I cannot paſs 'em as Accompts; but if the King will forgive Lord Ranelagh, I will paſs a Diſcharge, but not an ill Accompt. His Majeſty was not pleas'd with this, nor with his Exactneſs in that Government, it reproach'd his own too much. It was not an uncommon Thing for this King to cheat himſelf, that is, take a ſmall Sum for his Privy-Purſe to defraud the Exchequer; for what was carry'd thither was not ſo eaſily to be manag'd as what he had in his Pocket. A Courtier being apply'd to by the Eaſt-India Company only to have a Word or two alter'd in their Charter, begg'd it of the King, repreſenting it as a ſmall Buſineſs, that he might get ſomething by it. His Majeſty ask'd him what he was to have for it. The Courtier reply'd, Ten thouſand Pounds. God's-fiſh, cry'd the King, 'tis too little; 'tis worth Twenty thouſand Pounds, Half mine, Half thine. The Buſineſs was done, and the Money divided accordingly. The Earl of Eſſex telling Biſhop Burnet a Story like it relating to Ireland, put me in Mind of this, which I had from a Perſon concern'd in it. Secretary Coventry told the Earl of Eſſex, that there was once a Plantation Cauſe at the Council-Board, which the King eſpous'd ſo openly, he was troubled to ſee it, and told him ſecretly, 'Twas a very bad Cauſe which he was ſupporting. The King anſwer'd him, But I have good Money for doing it.

King cheats himſelf.

Sir J. B.

About this Time 1675, there was a Propoſition made for farming the Revenue of Ireland. The Lord Danby ſeem'd ſometime to favour one Set of Men, who offer'd to farm it, but on a ſudden, he turn'd to another. The Secret of this broke out, and that he was to have great Advantages by the ſecond Propoſition. The Matter was brought to the Council Table, and ſome were examin'd upon Oath. Lord Widdrington confeſs'd he had made an Offer of a round Sum to Lord Danby, which was not accepted. Lord Halifax obſerv'd, that the Lord Treaſurer had rejected that Offer very mildly, but not ſo as to diſcourage a ſecond Attempt, adding, It would be ſomewhat ſtrange if a Man ſhou'd ask the Uſe of another Man's Wife, and if the other ſhou'd indeed refuſe it, but with great Civility. So far we have copy'd Biſhop Burnet's Memoirs. But in others we find that the Perſon employ'd in this Farm was one Thomas Sheridan, who having been bred in Trinity College in Dublin, and being in Deacon's Orders, left very fair Hopes of riſing in the Church to be Collector of Cork in Ireland. A Poſt procur'd him, as it was ſuppos'd, by a Popiſh Intereſt, as being a proper Station for him to receive Intelligence from abroad, which he cou'd eaſily hand about to the Iriſh Papiſts at home. The Farmers were then London Brewers, and being wealthy, moderate Citizens, were call'd the Fanatick Farmers, whoſe Time of Farm being expir'd, the Papiſts put in for it, by Lord Widdrington firſt, and afterwards by this Sheridan, who coming from Ireland juſt before the London Brewers Farm was out, fell in with Coleman, and by his Means with the Duke of York, and was ever after an active Tool for his Faction: However, he was not ſuffer'd to throw off the Mask at once. He continu'd in Appearance ſo good a Proteſtant, that he was thought a Presbyterian, and being not well enough known in London, Muſchamp, one of the old Farmers, and Sir J. S. another of them, and a greater Projector, had the Conduct of the Affair. Theſe apply'd to Sir William Petty, a Man of a large Eſtate in Ireland, and ſo willing to encreaſe it, that he was not over-nice in the Methods of doing it. Sir W. P. engaging in it, Sheridan acquainted the Duke and Coleman with it; and one Ryder, a young Man who had 20,000 Pounds of his own and his Siſter's Fortune, was drawn in to embrace it; ſo there was Money and Sir W. Petty's Credit ready for them to ſet the Project on Foot. The Earl of Eſſex had Intelligence from Court, and ſome Spies of the Popiſh Clergy in Ireland, that the Project of the Farm was only Part of the Deſign to get him remov'd; ſo he obtain'd Leave to come to Court, and left the Lord Primate and the Lord Granard Juſtices in his Abſence, and tho' the new Farmers carry'd their Scheme, yet he got ſo far into the good Graces of the Duke of York, to whom he made aſſiduous Court, that he was permitted to return Lord Lieutenant to Ireland, and very happily prevented the Machinations of the Iriſh taking Effect ſo ſoon as was intended. Theſe were ſome Incidents whoſe Springs appear not in the common Hiſtory, as Echard calls all Hiſtories but his own, which is, I muſt confeſs, the moſt uncommon one that ever was written by Hiſtoriographer; but in his and other ſuch Pieces one may find the Addreſs of the Parliament of England concerning the Grievances in Ireland about a Year after the Earl of Eſſex went over Lord Lieutenant; and it is not to be doubted but his Lordſhip, by his Friends in England, furniſh'd ſome of the Materials for it, which ſufficiently ſet forth the Contrivances of the Papiſts to introduce Tyranny and Popery in Ireland. It ſpecifies the great Calamities which had befallen the Proteſtants in that Kingdom from the Papiſts, profeſs'd Enemies to their Religion and the Engliſh Intereſt; how they abuſe his Majeſty's Clemency, and are become more inſolent and preſumptuous than formerly, to the apparent Danger of that Kingdom, and his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects there; the Conſequence of which may prove very fatal to England, if not timely prevented. In order to which the Parliament in all Humility preſent his Majeſty with theſe Petitions; "That "for eſtabliſhing and quieting the Poſſeſſions of "his Majeſty's Subjects in that Kingdom, his "Majeſty wou'd be pleas'd to maintain the Act "of Settlement, and Explanatory Act thereupon, "and to recal the Commiſſion of Enquiry into Iriſh "Affairs, bearing Date the 17th Day of January, "1671-2, as containing many new and extraordi-"nary Powers, not only to the Prejudice of par-"ticular Perſons, whoſe Eſtates and Titles are "thereby made liable to be queſtion'd, but in a "Manner to the Overthrow of the Act of Settle-"ment; and if purſu'd, may be the Occaſion of "great Charge and Attendance to many of your "Subjects in Ireland, and ſhake the Peace and "Security of the whole. 2. All the Anſwer to this very reaſonable Addreſs was, That he wou'd before the next Meeting of Parliament take ſuch effectual Care, that no Man ſhou'd have Reaſon to complain: Which was leaving Matters juſt as they were; and ſo we ſhall certainly find them, when we viſit that Kingdom again; and beſides all this, there was an Order ſent to the Lord Lieutenant in 1672, to diſpenſe with the Papiſts wearing Arms.

Such are the Happineſſes of the glorious Reign we are writing of; they are diſpens'd with ſo equal a Hand over the three Kingdoms, that it is indeed difficult to determine which was moſt happy.

In England very little is to be done by the Miniſtry this Year, and not much more abroad by her Ambaſſadors, Mediators at Nimeguen, where the Plenipotentiaries had Leiſure enough to amuſe themſelves with all Kinds of Diverſions; for none of the Parties ſeem'd very forward to treat. The Confederates were in Hopes to draw in the King of England, and thereby procure at leaſt better Terms of France; and the King of England was all the while in full Penſion from the French King, which he cou'd not live without as long as he liv'd without a Parliament, and both the Monarchs knew well enough how the Engliſh Nation were enclin'd. The Penſion was 1,200,000 Crowns a Year, of which 600,000 Crowns were paid down, and 600,000 Crowns by way of Donative; and in caſe of Rebellion, it was to be augmented to 12 Millions of Livres a Year; and 25 Millions of Livres were bid by the Court of France for the Princeſs Mary, the Duke's eldeſt Daughter. There was a Fund of 20 Millions aſſign'd by the French King for theſe three Kingdoms, out of which ſometimes the King, ſometimes the Duke, ſometimes the Miniſters, and ſometimes the Leaders of Parties, had Donatives, according as the French Ambaſſador and French Emiſaries repreſented the State of Affairs. Four, ſix and eight Millions of Livres have been yearly remitted from France to Scotland and Ireland. The French were fortunate, and cou'd the better afford to pay. Lewis XIV. began the Campaign in Perſon with the Siege of Conde, and finiſh'd it with that of Bouchain about the latter End of May. Thoſe two ſmall Towns having crown'd him with freſh Laurels, he haſten'd back to Paris, leaving the Command of his Army in the Netherlands to Mareſchal Schomberg, who took Aire, and march'd to the Relief of Maeſtrich, beſieg'd by the Prince of Orange, who not being join'd as he expected by the Forces of Munſter and Lunenburgh, and having a ſick Army before the Place, thought fit not to engage the Enemy at ſuch a Diſadvantage, and rais'd the Siege. About the Beginning of this Year the Dutcheſs of Mazarine arriv'd in England from Savoy, where ſhe had liv'd two or three Years with her Siſter, Wife of the Conſtable de Colonna, who had left her Husband, as the Dutcheſs of Mazarine had left hers. They were both Neeces to Cardinal Mazarine, Daughters of his Siſter Hieromina Mazarini Mancini, who was Aunt to Mary d'Eſté, Dutcheſs of York. King Charles wou'd feign have marry'd Hortenſia Mazarini Mancini, now Dutcheſs of Mazarine, when he was in Exile; but the Cardinal wou'd not hear of it, in ſuch Fear was he of Cromwel and the Common-wealth. The Marqueſs of Ormond made the Propoſal to the Cardinal while the King was turning Papiſt at Fonterabia; but Mazarine rejected it: Yet after the Reſtoration he wou'd have ſet a Marriage-Treaty on Foot, and prevail'd with the Queen-Mother of England to undertake it, under Pretence of congratulating her Son upon his being reſtor'd. She had a Commiſſion to offer him twenty Millions of Livres Portion with Hortenſia Mancini; but he was a King of three Kingdoms, and had Ladies enough at his Devotion. Monſieur St. Evremond mentions this Treaty in the Funeral Oration for Madame de Mazarine. When the latter arriv'd in England, ſhe was in the Zenith of her Charms, and the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth grown ſickly; by which Means Mazarine began to gain very much upon the King; but ſhe was far from being a prudent, or faithful Miſtreſs. The Prince of Monaco coming to the Court of England in the Bloom and Vigour of Youth, ſhe caſt her Eye upon him as much as he did upon her. Monſieur St. Evremond ſaw it immediately, and fearing ſhe might not only loſe the King, but the 4000 Pounds a Year Penſion he allow'd her, us'd all the Force of his Reaſon and Eloquence to diſſuade her from any Gallantry with the Prince of Monaco; which it ſeems was quite contrary to the Deſign of thoſe who were Inſtruments of bringing her into England, as we read in the Life of Monſieur de St. Evremond. The Duke of Buckingham put the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth upon King Charles II. to out the Dutcheſs of Cleaveland; and the preſent Miniſtry got over the Dutcheſs of Mazarine to out the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth. Let us ſee how the French Author runs in Engliſh: " I have already ſpoken of the " Power the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth had over " King Charles, whoſe natural Indolence, and his " Love of Women, deliver'd him up to his Mi- " ſtreſſes, and Madam de Portſmouth was the Fa- " vourite Miſtreſs; ſhe govern'd him as ſhe was " inſtructed by the Court of France. It is a French- man who writes thus, and who makes a better Judgment of this King and his Government, than all our Compleat Hiſtorians, who are ſo dazled with his Majeſty's Zeal for the Church, that they have no Eyes for his Vices and Weakneſſes. " The " King of England forgetting the true Intereſt of " his Kingdom, and even his own Intereſt, be- " came ſhamefully a Penſioner of Lewis XIV. " The Friends to Liberty were turn'd out of all " Employments, and excluded the Management " of Affairs, which put them upon ſeveral Con- " trivances to deliver their Country from ſuch an " infamous Bargain and Sale: All which not ſuc- " ceeding, they at laſt conſider'd that the only

A.D.1676 " Way wou'd be to diſgrace the Dutcheſs of " Portſmouth, and to put in her Place another " Woman, in whom they might confide. They " caſt their Eyes on the Dutcheſs of Mazarine, " who was ſuperior to Portſmouth both in Beau- " ty and Wit." It is to be ſuppos'd, that Monſieur St. Evremond had a Hand in the Contrivance, and that he was on that Account the more ſollicitous for her keeping her Ground at Court; but her Fondneſs for Monaco diſguſted the King, who took away her Penſion, which however was reſtor'd to her not long after, and her Houſe near St. James's was the Rendezvous of all the Men of Letters and Pleaſure to the Day of her Death. She brought over with her the celebrated Abbot de St. Real, whoſe Works are in ſuch Eſteem with the Ingenious.

This Digreſſion is the leſs Impertinent, for that it gives one a very good Idea of the Happineſs of our Church to have ſuch a Head, and of our Kingdom to have ſuch a King.

Sir William Temple complies with a French intereſt.

One may perceive, that as well verſs'd as Sir William Temple was in Negotiations, and as well as he was diſpos'd to the publick Intereſt, yet he gave up ſometimes his own Judgment to his Maſter's, or rather to his Maſter's Pleaſure, and was as forward in promoting a ſeparate Peace between France and Holland, as King Charles cou'd deſire. He went ſo far, as to tell the Prince of Orange, he knew not a Man in Holland, who was not of his Mind; Yes, reply'd his Highneſs, I am ſure I know One, and that is my Self, and I'll hinder it as long as I can, but if any thing ſhould happen to me, I know it would be done in two Days. Sir William Temple, who was as polite as able, maintain'd his Maſter's Character, and the Ceremonial, with great Punctilio and Elegance; but his Mediation was little heeded by the Confederates, who were too wiſe not to obſerve that King Charles waited for Opportunities, rather to do them ill Offices than good, or indeed equal Offices. Sir William urging the Neceſſity of a ſeparate Peace from the dilatory Proceedings of the Germans and Spaniards, the Prince of Orange ſaid, The Appearances are very ill for the next Campaign, but Campaigns do not always end as they begin, that Accidents may happen, which no Man can foreſee, and if we come to one fair Battel, none can anſwer for the Event. The Hero ſtill, and how unlike his Uncle does he talk? The King of England may make a Peace when he pleaſes, before it begins, but if he is ſo indifferent as to let that Seaſon paſs, for my Part, I am oblig'd to go on and take my Fortune. I this very Morning ſaw a poor old Man tugging alone in his little Boat, with his Oar againſt the Eddy of a Stream, upon a Canal, and when with the laſt Effort, he was juſt got up to the Place intended, the Force of the Eddy carry'd him quite back again, and thus three or four Times, while I ſaw him. This old Man's Buſineſs and mine are too like one another; however, we ought to do juſt as the old Man did, without knowing what will ſucceed, any more than what did in the poor Man's Caſe.

The Buſineſs of the Stuartine Princes, was generally done by Proclamations, which were minded or not minded, according as the Court were enclin'd: Two were at this Time publiſh'd, one againſt Engliſh Officers and Seamen entring into Foreign Services; another againſt the committing Acts of Hoſtility, under the Protection of the Engliſh Coaſts and Ports, in which the French were not only inſolent againſt the Dutch, with whom they were in War, but againſt the Engliſh themſelves, with whom they pretended to be in Peace, and it is ſuppoſed they endamag'd the Engliſh Merchants much more by their Captures, than the Amount of King Charles's Penſion came to, which was little conſider'd by him or his Miniſters, 'till at laſt a loud and general Clamour reach'd their Ears, and they were forc'd to do ſomething towards ſatisfying the injur'd People. French rob the Engliſh at Sea.

The Merchants of London preſented a Petition to the King and Council, in May this Year, concerning the Ships taken by French Privateers, wherein they complain'd, 1. That the Delay and Charge of proſecuting the Law in France, does commonly make the Owners become Loſers of half the Value, whenever they are moſt ſucceſsful. 2. That there's no Reparation ever gotten from Privateers for what they plunder and imbezzle, which makes them freely ſeize upon all they meet, and perpetually moleſt the Engliſh Navigation.

Upon Complaint of this Grievance in the French Court, the Method of Redreſs prov'd a new Oppreſſion; for Sir Ellis Leighton, Secretary to the Lord Berkley, the Engliſh Ambaſſador in the Court of France, being appointed to ſollicite there the Reſtitution of the Engliſh Ships, was as great a Villain as his Brother the Archbiſhop was a Saint, and behav'd ſo corruptly in his Negotiation, by receiving Bribes, and making Bargains for Reſtitutions, that the Engliſh Merchants were diſcourag'd in their Applications for Reparation of Damages. Being convicted of this Villainy, he was ſent for home and examin'd; 'twas intended to proſecute him, but he kept out of the Way, and the Search for him was not over diligent. When he was under Examination, he was ſo impudent as to ſay, He wonder'd how theſe Merchants dar'd to ſpeak any thing againſt the greateſt King in Europe, as the King of France was! The Council heard him with Indignation, and he was order'd to be committed when caught. The Merchants Petition being referr'd to the Lords Committee of Trade, they gave it as their Opinion, That his Majeſty had juſt Occaſion from the Injuries paſs'd, and thoſe which are now depending, and which do every Day encreaſe, to make a very ſerious Repreſentation of all unto his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, and not only preſs for ſome better Method of repairing the Grievances mention'd, but earneſtly to inſiſt on the Calling in of all Privateers, or elſe your Majeſty muſt do Right, and give Defence to your Subjects from all the Inſolencies which they ſo frequently meet. Sign'd by Finch, Angleſey, Bridgwater, Bath, Craven, H. Coventry, G. Carteret, J. Ernle.

The Ships and Cargoes were ſaid to be worth near a Million Sterling. I have a Liſt of the Ships and their Owners, as the St. John, John St. John Maſter, belonging to the Earl of Bolingbroke, the Sherrard of Boſton, to the Lord Sherrard, the Lady of Virginia, to Sir Arthur Ingram, the Oak to Sir John Frederick, &c. ſome of which were taken with this inſolent Circumſtance, Go tell your King of it.

Secretary Coventry was upon this order'd to tranſmit a Copy of the Report of the Lords Committees of Trade to the Engliſh Ambaſſador in France, and to attend the French Ambaſſador in England with it likewiſe, that the Evils complain'd of may be redreſs'd. Inſtead of which, Marvel tells us, the French Picaroons continu'd to murther, plunder and confiſcate Engliſh Merchants, their Ships and Cargoes, 'till the Time of the Parliaments ſitting, inſomuch that it was doubted whether the Miniſters were not Complices in the Matter: " And yet all this while, that " they made theſe intolerable and barbarous Pi- " racies and Depredations upon his Majeſty's " Subjects, they were from England more dili- " gently than ever ſupply'd with Recruits, and " thoſe that wou'd go voluntarily into the French " Service

A.D.1676 " Service were encourag'd, others that would not, " preſs'd, impriſon'd, and carry'd over by main " Force, and conſtrain'd; even as the Parliament " here was ready to ſit down, notwithſtanding all " their former frequent Applications to the Con- " trary; and his Majeſty's Magazines were daily " empty'd to furniſh the French with all Sorts of " Ammunition, &c." while the King was, by his Miniſters, acting the Part of Mediator between France and the Confederates.

Echard and the Compleat Hiſtorians remember how the King was allarm'd at the Growth of Popery, and order'd the Secretaries of State to let foreign Ambaſſadors know, that he will not have Maſs ſaid, nor Sermons preach'd in Engliſh in their Houſes or Chappels; which Farce was as often play'd, as there was a Game to play, but was the Subject of Ridicule to all ſober thinking People of whatever Denomination.

I muſt, for my Part, own, that every Thing in this Adminiſtration appears to me ſo baſe and diſhonourable, that I cannot with Pleaſure dwell on the Decorations of it, by Promotions and Preferments, but the Compleat Hiſtorian and Echard ſpeak of them, as if they had been the Reward of Merit and Virtue, in virtuous and worthy Times.

Dr. Blandford dying, Dr. James Fleetwood is made Biſhop of Worceſter. I will repeat the Compleat Hiſtorian's Words, that the Reader may ſee what Materials he picks up for his important Hiſtory.

" On Sunday the 29th of Auguſt, his Lord- " ſhip elect was conſecrated in St. Peter's Church " in Broadſtreet, London, by the Right Reverend " Father in God, John, Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter, " his Grace of Canterbury's Commiſſioner for that " Purpoſe, being aſſiſted by the Biſhops of Ely, " Chicheſter and Lincoln. And after the Perform- " ance and Solemnity, their Lordſhips, with ma- " ny of the Nobility, and other Perſons of Qua- " lity, were entertain'd at Drapers-Hall." Where will you meet with ſuch Paſſages in Thucydides, or Livy, and what a Fund of Curioſity muſt a Man have to be entertain'd with them?

On the Death of Dr. Henchman, Dr. Compton was made Biſhop of London, Dr. Fell, Biſhop of Oxford, and the two Sheriffs of London, John Peak and Thomas Stamp were Knighted. The King and Queen, the Duke and Dutcheſs of York, the Lady Mary, and Lady Ann, din'd at Guild-Hall on the Lord Mayor's Day; and Sir Edward Walker being dead, Sir Thomas Doleman was made Clerk of the Council, and the Biſhop of Durham, a Privy-Counſellor. I own my ſelf indebted for theſe Events, to Mr. Archdeacon and the Compleat Hiſtorian: To the latter, I owe what follows of the Caſe of the Diſſenters this Year, which for its Ingenuity and Truth deſerves Remembrance. " The Diſſenters had now ſome Advan- " tage of improving in popular Reputation, by " being generally averſe to the Meaſures con- " ducing to Popery, and the Grandeur of France, " and by falling in with thoſe Patriots in both " Houſes of Parliament, who ſeem'd moſt zea- " lous in the Love and Service of their Country." So far has the Truth prevail'd, and a Confeſſion of their Deſerts is extorted, but then comes, And yet their own Hiſtory has little to boaſt of, but the Proſecution of ſome of their Teachers, and a Story of Judgments upon ſome of the Informers. Never were two Monoſyllables guilty of ſo much Nonſenſe as his And yet. The Diſſenters boaſted not of their Love to their Country, to the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty, and yet they boaſted of being beggar'd and jail'd, which indeed was the very Boaſt of their Enemies, who jail'd them and beggar'd them, and yet here is intended, for ſome of that awkard Raillery which we meet with in Fable: 'Tis a Pretence to Mirth without Wit, and Hiſtory without Fact. He tells us then a Story of thirteen Biſhops, and Sir Nathaniel Hern, Sheriff of London, which he took from Baxter, where he might have learn'd better, if he had thought it poſſible for any one to teach him. He had ſeen in Baxter's Life, what a Crew of Raſcals and Scoundrels, Juſtices and Informers were ſet to work to ruin diſſenting Miniſters and People; ſuch Juſtices as Roſs of Brentford, Phillips, Archbiſhop Sheldon's Man, Starling, Sheldon, Davis of London, Parry, one of the Ruffians who ſlit Sir John Coventry's Noſe, made a Juſtice for this Drudgery, Grey, Sir Philip Matthews, &c. ſuch Informers as Keling, Marſhal and Strowd, Fellows poſſeſs'd with ſo many Devils, the Horrors of their Conſciences, that the Fate of the Swine would have been a Bleſſing to them; yet how tenderly does the Compleat Hiſtorian ſpeak of them?

On the 15th of February the Parliament met, and great were the Expectations of the People of all Religions and Parties. There had been a warm Argument without Doors, concerning the Validity of the intended Seſſion; ſome arguing that by the antient Laws of England, the Parliament was diſſolv'd by ſo long a Prorogation, as fifteen Months: This was argu'd within Doors, as ſoon as the Seſſion was open'd, which I ſhall give an Account of in Mr. Marvel's Words. 1677.

Debates about the Being of the Parliament.

" His Majeſty demanded of the Parliament, " in his Speech, a Supply for building of Ships, " and the further Continuance of the additional " Exciſe upon Beer and Ale, which was to expire " the 24th of June, 1677, and recommended ear- " neſtly a good Correſpondence between the two " Houſes, repreſenting their laſt Differences, as " the Reaſon of ſo long a Prorogation, to allay " them." After this, The Lord Chancellor, ſays Echard, made a long and eloquent Speech, the greateſt Part of which ſeems neceſſary to be remember'd; and knowing what a good Judge he is of ſuch Eloquence, and ſuch Neceſſity, I lay him and the Chancellor's Speech aſide, to ſee what Marvel writes of them both. " The Lord " Chancellor, as is uſual with him, ſpoil'd all " which the King had ſaid ſo well, with ſtrain- " ing to do it better; for indeed the Miſchances " of all the Seſſions, ſince he had the Seals, may " in great Part be aſcrib'd to his indiſcreet and " unlucky Eloquence, and had not the Lord " Treaſurer a far more effectual Way of Perſwa- " ſion with the Commons, who were in Pen- " ſion, there had been the ſame Danger of the ill " Succeſs of this Meeting, as of thoſe formerly." Each Houſe being now ſeated, the Caſe of this long Prorogation had taken Place ſo far without Doors, and was of that Conſequence to the Conſtitution of all Parliaments, and the Validity of all Proceedings in this Seſſion, that even the Commons, tho' much againſt their Wills, cou'd not paſs it by, but they handled it ſo tenderly, as if they were afraid to touch it.

Lord Chancellor Finch's Eloquence unlucky and indiſcreet.

The firſt Day, inſtead of the Queſtion whether the Parliament were by this unprecedented Prorogation indeed diſſolv'd, it was propos'd, ſomething ridiculouſly, ſays Marvel, whether this Prorogation were not an Adjournment? and this Debate too they adjourn'd till next Day, and from thence till a longer time, when thoſe who had propos'd it, before they would enter upon the Debate, ask'd, whether they might have Liberty? As if that had not been more than imply'd before, by adjourning the Debate, and as if Freedom of Speech was not a Conceſſion of Right, which the King grants at the firſt Opening of all Parliaments; but by this Faintneſs, they taught the Houſe to deny

A.D.1677 them it, and the Matter was wrapp'd up in a cleanly Queſtion, Whether their Grand Committees ſhou'd ſit? Which involving the Legitimacy of the Houſes ſitting, was carry'd in the Affirmative. But it went otherwiſe in the Lords Houſe, where the Duke of Buckingham argu'd by all the Laws of Parliament, and with great Strength of Reaſon, that this Prorogation was Null, and this Parliament conſequently diſſolv'd; offering to maintain it to all the Judges, and deſiring, as had been uſual in ſuch Caſes, but wou'd not here be admitted, that even They might give their Opinions. My Lord Fretchville cry'd out, To the Bar, the only Argument he was capable of expreſſing, which was oppos'd by the Earl of Salisbury, with the Height of Cecilian Courage and Reaſon, and the Duke of Buckingham's Propoſal aſſerted. Then Lord Arundel of Trerice cry'd out, To the Bar, but that was not minded; and the Courtiers of the Houſe of Commons brought up Advice every Moment, that the Matter was yet in Agitation among them; by which means the Earl of Shaftsbury had Opportunity to appear with ſuch extraordinary Vigour, both in what concern'd the Duke of Buckingham's Perſon, and his Propoſal, that as the Duke of Buckingham might have ſtood ſingle in any rational Conteſt, ſo the Earl of Shaftsbury was more properly another Principal. The Lord Chancellor, in anſwer, undertook to make the Prorogation look very formal, laying, ſays Marvel, the beſt Colours upon it, after his manner when Advocate, that the Cauſe wou'd bear. So that upon the Queſtion, it was carry'd for the Prorogation; and the Court-Lords being thus fluſh'd, but not ſatisfy'd with their Victory, fell upon their Adverſaries in cool Blood, queſtioning ſuch as they thought fit that ſame Night, and the next Morning ſentencing them; the Duke of Bucks, the Earl of Salisbury, the Earl of Shaftsbury, and the Lord Wharton, to be committed to the Tower during his Majeſty's and the Houſe's Pleaſure. The Duke of Buckingham finding how 'twas likely to go with them, ſlipp'd out of the Houſe while the Earl of Angleſey was arguing againſt committing them. The Houſe underſtanding he had withdrawn himſelf, were in a Rage, and intended to addreſs the King for a Proclamation againſt him; but the Duke knowing it was only a Tower Buſineſs for a Week or two, wou'd not give them ſo much Trouble, and the next Day appear'd in his Place. The Court-Lords immediately cry'd out, To the Bar. The Duke, who had the happieſt Way in the World to turn any thing ſerious into a Jeſt, and extricate himſelf out of Difficulties, roſe up, and ſaid, I beg your Lordſhips Pardon for retiring the Night before: You very well know the exact Oeconomy I keep in my Family, and perceiving your Lordſhips intended I ſhou'd be ſome time in another Place, I only went Home to ſet my Houſe in Order, and am now come to ſubmit myſelf to your Lordſhip's Pleaſure; which was to ſend him to the Tower after the other three Lords. I have been told that the Earl of Shaftsbury, who was jealous of the Duke of Buckingham's ſetting himſelf up for the Head of his Party, us'd to ſpeak ſlightly of him, as a Man that was inconſtant, giddy, and had his Head full of Whimſies, ſuitable to the Character of him in Abſolom and Achitophel; which the Duke was inform'd of, and reſented. It happen'd that the Earl of Salisbury, the Lord Wharton, and himſelf, were diſcharg'd on their Submiſſion, and only the Earl of Shaftsbury remain'd in the Tower. The Earl look'd out of Window as the Duke of Buckingham was taking Coach, and cry'd, What, my Lord, are you going to leave us? Ay, my Lord, ſays he, ſuch giddy-headed Fellows as I can never ſtay long in a Place.

A.D.1677

The ſending theſe Lords to the Tower was reckon'd a very raſh and unjuſtifiable Action. Lord Halliſax ſaid, If an idle Motion was made, and check'd at firſt, he that made it might be cenſur'd for it, tho' it was ſeldom, if ever, to be practis'd in a Free Council, where every Man was not bound to be wiſe, not to make an impertinent Motion. But when the Motion was entertain'd, and the Debate follow'd, and a Queſtion was put upon it, it was deſtructive to the Freedom of Publick Councils to call any one to account for it: They might with the ſame Juſtice call them to account for their Debates and Votes; ſo that no Man was ſafe, unleſs he cou'd know where the Majority wou'd be. Here wou'd be a Precedent to tip down ſo many Lords at a time, and garble the Houſe. as often as any Party ſhou'd have a Majority. Upon this the Houſe firſt order'd them to ask Pardon as Delinquents, which they refus'd. The Earl of Shaftsbury was the firſt who was call'd on, probably by the Management of the Lord Chancellor, who had ſucceeded him in the Chancery, with very unequal Merit, which naturally leads to Envy, and that to Injuſtice. King Charles himſelf had ſaid of Lord Shaftsbury, when he had the Seals, That he had a Chancellor who knew as much LAW as any of his Judges, and as much Divinity as any of his Biſhops; which was not the Lord Chancellor Finch's Character. The Earl of Shaftsbury deſir'd he might have his Servants to wait on him in the Tower, and the firſt he nam'd was his Cook, as had been concerted with the Duke of Bucks; but Lord Wharton was too grave for ſo ludicrous a thing, which the King highly reſented. Theſe Lords were much viſited in the Tower, and to put a Stop to it, they were made cloſe Priſoners, not to be viſited without Leave from the King, or the Houſe; and particular Obſervations were made of all who ask'd Leave, which was much cry'd out againſt. The three Lords that were diſcharg'd lay there ſome Months, and got out by petitioning the King. Lord Shaftsbury wou'd not petition, but mov'd for a Diſcharge in the King's-Bench. The Miniſtry was not ſo weak as not to know who were fit Tools for the Work they had to do, and every Bench of Judges, Biſhops, &c. were well ſupply'd with Perſons who were ready to do whatever the Court requir'd of them. Scroggs the Chief Juſtice, and his Brethren, ſaid, the Earl of Shaftsbury was committed by an Order of the Houſe of Lords, which was a ſuperior Court to them, and they cou'd not take Cognizance of the Matter. The Lord Treaſurer Danby cenſur'd this Motion highly, as done in Contempt of the Houſe of Lords, who were then under Prorogation: He threaten'd to make uſe of it againſt the Lord Shaftsbury next Seſſion of Parliament, yet he himſelf was afterwards forc'd to make the ſame Motion at the King's-Bench Bar, and complain'd of the Injuſtice of that Court, for refuſing to bail or diſcharge him; tho' in that they follow'd the Precedent, which at this Time was directed by himſelf.

King Charles's Saying in Praiſe of Lord Shaftsbury.

The Debate about the Diſſolution had the Effect in the Houſe of Commons which was foreſeen, for that Houſe was much enflam'd againſt Lord Shaftsbury and his Party; which being compos'd of moderate Church-men and Diſſenters, has very much reconcil'd the Compleat Hiſtorian to this Seſſion. The Commons voted 600,000 Pounds for building thirty Ships; however, a Clauſe was put in the Bill by the Country-Party, with Intent to loſe it, which was, that the Money ſhou'd be accounted for to them, in hopes the Lords wou'd alter that Clauſe, and make it accountable to both Houſes; which was done by

A.D.1677 the Peers, and Conferences held upon it. The Lords thought that ſince they paid a Share of the Tax, it was not reaſonable to exclude them from the Accompts. The Commons adher'd to their Clauſe, and the Bill was in great Danger of being loſt; but ſome of the Tools juſt mention'd, being ſet to work to prevail with the Majority of the Peers, they receded. The Parliament continu'd the additional Exciſe three Years longer, but things did not go ſo ſwimmingly to the End of the Seſſion; for the Progreſs of the French King's Arms in the Netherlands made ſuch an Impreſſion on the Parliament, that they wou'd not be contented without ſome Meaſures were taken by our Court to give a Check to them. Valenciennes being taken, and St. Omer in Danger, the Prince of Orange march'd thither, and too raſhly ventur'd a Battel with the Duke of Orleans. Some Regiments of Marines, on whom the Prince depended much, baſely ran away; yet the other Bodies fought ſo well, that he loſt not much, beſides the Honour of the Day. But St. Omer immediately capitulated, and Cambray ſoon after. Upon which Sir William Coventry open'd the Buſineſs in the Houſe of Commons, and ſhew'd the Danger of all the Spaniſh Netherlands falling under the Power of France, which muſt end in the Ruin of the United Provinces, if a timely Stop was not put to the French Conqueſts. He demonſtrated that the Intereſt of England made it neceſſary for the King to withdraw his Mediation, and enter into the Alliance againſt France. The whole Houſe went into this: Great Complaints were made of the Regiments the King kept in the French Army, and of the great Service that was done by them. 'Tis true, the King ſuffer'd the Dutch to make Levies, but there was another ſort of Encouragement given to the Levies for France, particularly in Scotland, where it look'd more like a Preſs than a Levy. They had not only the publick Goals given them to keep their Men in, but when the Goals were full, they had the Caſtle of Edinburgh aſſign'd them. Some of the Presbyterians taken at Meetings were deliver'd to the French Officers. The Spaniſh Ambaſſador complain'd of it, but the infamous Lauderdale kept up thoſe Levies, notwithſtanding a Proclamation to the contrary. The Presbyterians, and other Recruits, were haſten'd a-board before the Proclamation came down to Scotland; yet they were not ſail'd then, and the Proclamation was conceal'd till they were ſail'd: So apparently, ſays Biſhop Burnet, was the Kingdom in a French Management.

Scots Presbyterians ſent into the French Service.

The Houſe of Commons preſs'd the King, by repeated Addreſſes, to fall into the Intereſt of Europe, as well as into his own, which made him uneaſy; and he ſent them ſeveral angry Anſwers. For one muſt do this Juſtice to the Stuartine Princes, to obſerve, that though they were afraid to give any Foreigners an angry Word, they never wanted Courage to inſult their Parliaments. His Majeſty ſaid, Peace and War were undoubtedly Matters within his Prerogative, in which they ought not to meddle. Which is every whit as whimſical, as if when a Houſe is on Fire, and a Neighbour ſhou'd come to aſſiſt the Owner in putting of it out, he ſhou'd bid him Hold his Tongue and his Hand, the Houſe is his, and what has he to do with it? tho' his Neighbour is ſure to have the ſame Fate with his own. To talk of Prerogative, when the Enemy is at the Gates, argues as much want of Senſe as Decency: 'Tis my Prerogative to ruin my ſelf, if I think fit, and you too. And if the one cou'd have been done without the other, the Parliament wou'd have been in the wrong to have expos'd themſelves to ſuch ill Treatment for doing their Duty only. Biſhop Burnet tells us, "The King in common Diſcourſe remember'd A.D.1677 "often the Parliament's engaging his Father and "Grand-father in the Affairs of Germany, and "to break the Match with Spain, which prov'd "fatal to them; and he reſolv'd not to be ſerv'd "in ſuch a manner." We hear very much of this King's Wit, but the Proofs of it are ever in Jeſts and Repartees. Cou'd he think to palm ſuch Reaſoning on Men who knew Fact and Argument? The Parliament wou'd have engag'd his Grandfather in War with the Emperor, if they had found him ſincere in it, and had not ſquander'd away the Money they gave him for it on Minions and Flatterers. The Match with Spain was broken off only to make a worſe Match with France, and that was the Ruin of his Father. He durſt not tell the People that he was in Penſion, that he took the French King's Money, and if he fell out with him ſhou'd have no more. 'Tis honeſtly, though not very elegantly ſaid by a modern Author: "I cannot, my Lord, without ſome Relu- S. J.
"ctancy, think that a King, who for near twenty Years had had the greateſt Opportunity of "any of his Predeceſſors to make himſelf great "both at Home and Abroad, ſhou'd fall to ſo "abject a State, as to become a French Penſioner; which, without the Addition of any other "Crime, is more than enough eternally to blaſt "the Memory of an Engliſh Monarch.

The King demanded 600,000 Pounds more than the Commons had given him, to enable him to enter into Alliances, which they had all the Reaſon in the World to think he did not intend, but to ſpend that Money, as he had ſpent the immenſe Sums already given him. His Phraſe was, To enable him to ſpeak more effectually; but the Parliament very juſtly diſtruſted him, and the thing being unparliamentary, to give Money to maintain Alliances and Wars, before thoſe Alliances or Wars are made, the other 600,000 Pounds was deny'd; upon which he diſmiſs'd them for five Weeks. On the 22d of May the Parliament met again, and great Debates aroſe about the Averſion of the Miniſters to enter into Alliances againſt France; upon which the Parliament reſolv'd on a vigorous Addreſs, wherein they repreſented the Purſe and Power of France to be too great to be contended with by this Nation ſingly; neither cou'd the Dutch withſtand them, but both together might; and the Charges and Inconveniencies that wou'd fall on the Kingdom, if the Dutch, for want of timely Encouragement and Aſſiſtance ſhou'd make a ſeparate Peace, wou'd be inſupportable: And therefore they adviſ'd, and humbly pray'd his Majeſty, to enter into a League Offenſive and Defenſive with the Dutch, and with others, againſt France, for ſaving the Spaniſh Netherlands, as the only Means to defend Britain: Aſſuring him, That the Sequel of ſuch Alliance wou'd end in Safety, in regard his People were unanimous in the Cauſe; and they promis'd to ſupport thoſe Alliances with all their Power.

bal cou'd ſee Safety and not Danger from the Growth of the French Power; and purſuant to the Advice of the Cabal, the King in a Speech to the Commons told them, in a Stile that wou'd have better become the Plantagenets, Their Addreſs contain'd Things unfit for them to meddle with, for they entrenched on his undoubted Prerogative of making Peace and War; which had never, when the Sword was not drawn, been ſo dangerouſly invaded. The Word dangerouſly is extreamly proper, becauſe the Tenor of the Addreſs was to bring him and his People out of Danger. They did not content themſelves with deſiring him to enter into Leagues, but tell him what ſort of Leagues they muſt be, and with whom; and he was

A.D.1677 was very much hurt by it. A Traveller out of his Way, amid Darkneſs and Precipices, meets with a Perſon, who not only tells him he is out of his Way, but puts him into the right Path, and the Traveller ſays, Theſe are things unfit for you to meddle with; if I go out of the Way, and tumble down the Precipice, it is my Prerogative: Beſides, you might have told me I'm wrong, and deſir'd me to take care not to tumble, but what had you to do to ſet me right? Common Senſe is ſufficient to avoid ſuch falſe Reaſoning, and what follows only aggravates it. If I ſhou'd ſuffer that Fundamental Power of making War and Peace, to be ſo invaded, as to have the Manner and Circumſtances of Leagues preſcrib'd, no Prince or Potentate wou'd longer believe the Sovereignty of England reſts in the Crown; wherefore no Condition ſhall make me depart from ſo eſſential a Part of the Monarchy. Sovereignty, Crown, and Monarchy, make up the Reaſon of this Sentence: The Intereſt and Safety of England, and all Europe, the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberty of Nations, have no Weight in this Reaſoning. Let us read what the Learned Acherley writes upon it: "By the Fundamental Conſtitution of Parliament, and by the expreſs Words of the original Summons to it, they had a Right to enquire into the State of the Nation, and to adviſe the King what to do, what Wars to make, and what Alliances to enter into, in caſe thoſe Wars, and thoſe Alliances were neceſſary for the Defence of the Nation: For who cou'd be more proper to give Advice about that Defence, than thoſe who were to bear the Charges, and to ſuffer moſt for want of that Defence? And if this were not reaſonable, the Conſtitution and the Form of this Government were egregiouſly infirm and defective. Many Precedents might be produc'd to ſupport this Argument, As to the Sentiments of neighbouring Princes and Potentates, it was argu'd, That Reputation was the Life of Government, and Diſreputation the Bane of it; and that every Prince in Europe was well appriz'd, that the Acts of the King's Sovereignty, whether thoſe Acts were War or Peace, without the good-liking or Conſent of his Parliament, were half-form'd Things, without Sinews or Strength to defend this Nation's Friends, or offend it's Enemies." When we follow a learned Lawyer, we tread on ſure Ground; and the Court Sophiſtry, which like an Ignis Fatuus miſguides the Compleat Hiſtorians, appears naked and ſhameleſs. The Parliament was adjourn'd to the 16th of July, to give the French King a full Swing of Devaſtation and Ruin in Flanders. We ſhall prove in the Sequel, that King Charles was at this very Juncture chaffering, by his Miniſters in France, for more Money; and that one Reaſon given for it, was, That he had been abſolutely the Occaſion of the French King's Conqueſts in Flanders. There were two or three good Acts paſs'd before the Adjournment; as 1. The Act for preventing Frauds and Perjuries. 2. An Act for taking away the Writ de Heretico Comburendo, &c. And the Adjournment itſelf was a very extraordinary one; for upon his Majeſty's ſignifying his Pleaſure that it ſhou'd be ſo, Mr. Edward Seymour, afterwards Sir Edward, the Speaker, without the Conſent of the Houſe, or ſo much as putting the Queſtion, adjourn'd them; tho' Sir John Finch, the Chancellor's Uncle, was for the ſame thing impeach'd of High Treaſon in Parliament, 1640. So that if the Parliament was not diſſolv'd by the laſt Prorogation, it made it a Queſtion now, whether it was not diſſolv'd by their Separation, without Prorogation or legal Adjournment?

De Salinas, the Spaniſh Envoy in England, having heard that King Charles had call'd the Parliament a Company of Rogues, he took care to let ſome of the Members know it, it being on Account of the Addreſs they had preſented for an Alliance againſt France, which that Miniſter came to forward; and the King reſented his telling it ſo much, that he was order'd to depart the Kingdom. A Company of Rogues is not very courtly Language for the Repreſentatives of the Nation. I abhor Ribaldry as much as any Man, and I have never been provok'd to hard Names, but when I am ſpeaking of Criminals that deſerve Puniſhment rather by the Hangman than the Hiſtorian. A.D.1677 Echard.

At this Time Sir William Temple was ſent for into England, under the Notion of preferring him to be Secretary of State; but it was on Condition he laid down 10,000 Pounds for it, after ſo many Services, and after he had ſpent much of his own Fortune in his Embaſſies. The King diſcours'd him frequently about the general Peace, and the Prince of Orange's intended Journey into England, the latter of which his Majeſty did not at all deſire. He ſaid, The Parliament wou'd never be quiet or eaſy with him while the War laſted abroad; that they had got it into their Heads to draw him into it whether he wou'd or no; that they pretended Publick Ends, and Dangers from France, and there might be both meant by a great many honeſt Men amongſt them, but the Heats had been rais'd by ſome Factious Leaders, who thought more of themſelves than any thing elſe, and had a Mind to engage him in a War, and then leave him in it, unleſs they might have their Terms in removing and filling up Places, and he was very unwilling to be ſo much at their Mercy. That beſides, he ſaw the longer it continu'd, the worſe it wou'd be for the Confederates; and therefore he wou'd fain have the Prince make the Peace for them, if they wou'd not do it for themſelves; and if he and the Prince cou'd fall into the Terms of it, he was ſure it might be done. Sir William Temple repreſented the Inflexibility of the Prince in the Point of the Treaty, without the joint Concurrence and Satisfaction of all the Confederates; and if his Majeſty wou'd try another Hand in the Negotiation, Mr. Hyde was a very proper Perſon to be employ'd: To which the King conſented, and Mr. Hyde was diſpatch'd to his Highneſs, whom he found at the Camp, firm and reſolute againſt the Peace, on any other Conditions than in Concert with the Allies. Mr. Hyde ſent to Holland.

The Prince's Marriage with the Lady Mary, was ſo great a Bleſſing to theſe three Kingdoms, that 'tis no Wonder ſo many claim a Share of the Merit of it; which ſeems to be owing moſtly to the Earl of Danby, who had run himſelf ſo much into the ill Will of the People, that he ſaw his Ruin wou'd be inevitable, if he did not make his Peace by ſome very popular Action; and there were two Steps to be taken which cou'd not fail of appeaſing them; the one was a good Peace between France and the Confederates, the other the Marriage of the Princeſs Mary, the Duke's eldeſt Daughter, to the Prince of Orange. Sir William Temple was in great Confidence with Danby, and the latter gave Temple full Aſſurance that he might ſpeak of it to the Prince, without Fear of giving Offence either to the King or Duke. Great Offers were made to the latter, to draw him into the Alliance; and that of commanding the Confederate Army ſtagger'd him ſo much, that the French Emiſſaries were allarm'd: However, cautious Men were ſtill jealous of the Lord Treaſurer in theſe Matters. Some thought the Talk of an Alliance with Holland, in caſe France did not conclude a Peace before the next Campaign, Prince of Orange's Marriage with the Princeſs Mary.

A.D. 1677 was only an Artifice to draw Money from the Parliament for raiſing an Army; which when it was rais'd, might be ſold again to France for a greater Sum of Money, or made uſe of to maſter Parliaments, and the whole Nation. 'Twas whiſper'd that was the Scheme by which he maintain'd himſelf in the King and the Duke's Confidence, even when he declar'd himſelf an open Enemy to that which they were ſtill ſupporting; which he did with ſo little Decency, that at Archbiſhop Sancroft's Conſecration-Dinner, Sheldon being lately dead, he drank Confuſion to all who were not for a War with France; which not only lets us into the falſe Character of that Miniſter, but into the Cuſtom of Conſecration-Dinners in thoſe Days, ſo much boaſted of by the Compleat Hiſtorian. It was the Earl of Danby who got the Prince of Orange to ſend Bentinck to England, to ask the King Leave to come over at the End of the Campaign; with which the Court of France was not pleas'd, ſuſpecting a Deſign for the Marriage. But the King aſſur'd Barillon, who was ſent Ambaſſador from France chiefly on that Account, that there was not a Thought of it; and that the Prince of Orange had only a Mind to talk with him: As alſo, that he hop'd he ſhou'd bring him into ſuch Meaſures as wou'd produce a ſpeedy Peace.

Earl of Danby's great Share in it.

The Campaign ended unſucceſsfully to the Prince, who ſate down before Charleroy, but was forc'd to raiſe the Siege. When that was over, he came to England, and ſtay'd ſome Time here talking to his two Uncles about a Peace; but they cou'd not bring him to their Terms. He was a Man of Honour and Reſolution. He knew Men and Buſineſs; and there was no Likelihood of his two Uncles working on ſuch a Prince as he, who was more than a Match for both of them in Politicks, notwithſtanding they were almoſt as old again as their Nephew. After a fruitleſs Stay of ſome Weeks, he intended to go back without propoſing Marriage. He had no Mind to be deny'd; and he ſaw no Hope of ſucceeding, unleſs he wou'd enter more entirely into his Uncle's Meaſures. The King, who judg'd of the Prince by himſelf, thought his Nephew's Head and Heart wou'd have been ſet upon the young Lady, whom tho' his Highneſs lov'd and eſteem'd, yet he preferr'd his Honour to his Paſſion, a Sentiment which his Majeſty cou'd not be ſenſible of, and therefore treated with the Prince as with a young Man who wanted a Wife as much as he did a Miſtreſs, and wou'd be brought to any thing for a fair Bed-fellow. But the Prince's wiſe Conduct taught him another Leſſon. The Earl of Danby finding his Highneſs wou'd not be put off, and fearing to loſe the Merit of this Marriage, preſs'd him to ſtay two or three Days longer, and leave the Management of that Matter to him. So next Monday Morning, after he had taken Care by all his Creatures about the King to put him in a very good Humour, he came to his Majeſty and told him he had receiv'd Letters from all the beſt Friends he had in England, and ſhew'd a Bundle of them, in which he was pretty ſure the King wou'd not trouble himſelf to look, and they all agreed in the ſame Advice, that the Duke's Daughter be marry'd to the Prince of Orange, for they all believe he came over on that Account; and if he went away without her, no body wou'd doubt but that he had propos'd a Marriage, and had been deny'd; upon which the Parliament wou'd certainly make Addreſſes to the King for it; and if the Marriage was made upon that, his Majeſty wou'd loſe the Grace and Thanks of it: But if it was ſtill deny'd, even after the Addreſſes of both Houſes, it wou'd raiſe Jealouſies which might have very ill Conſequences; whereas, if the King did it of his own Motion, he wou'd have the Honour of it, and by ſo doing bring the Prince into a greater Dependance upon himſelf, and beget in the Nation ſuch a good Opinion of him, as wou'd lay a Foundation for a mutual Confidence. This he enforc'd with all the Topicks he cou'd think of. His Majeſty ſaid, The Prince has not ſo much as propos'd it. The Lord Danby reply'd, He has ſpoke of it only to me, becauſe he apprehended he ſhou'd not ſucceed in it. My Brother, reply'd his Majeſty, will never conſent to it. May be not, ſays Lord Danby, unleſs you take upon you to command it, and I think it is the Duke's Intereſt to have it done more than your Majeſty's. All People are now poſſeſs'd of his being a Papiſt, and are very apprehenſive of it; but if they ſee his Daughter given to one who is at the Head of the Proteſtant Party, it will very much ſoften thoſe Apprehenſions, when it appears that his Religion is only a perſonal Thing, not to be deriv'd to his Children after him. By which Diſcourſe the King was convinc'd, and ſent for the Duke, the Earl of Danby ſtaying ſtill with him. When the Duke came, the King ſaid, I have ſent for you to deſire you would conſent to a Thing, which I am ſure is as much for your Intereſt as for my Quiet and Satisfaction. The Duke, without asking what it was, reply'd, I will be always ready to comply with the King's Pleaſure in every thing. Upon which the King left it to the Lord Treaſurer to ſay over all he had ſaid on that Head to himſelf; at which the Duke ſeem'd much concern'd. But his Majeſty ſaying, I deſire it of you for my ſake as well as for your own, his Royal Highneſs conſented to it; ſo Lord Danby ſent immediately for the Prince, and in the King's Name order'd a Council to be ſummon'd. As ſoon as the Prince came, the King in a very obliging Manner ſaid to him, Nephew, It is not good for Man to be alone, I will give you a Help-meet for you, telling him he wou'd beſtow his Neece on him. And the Duke in as obliging a Manner, and with ſeeming Heartineſs, gave his Conſent. The King adding, Nephew, Remember Love and War do not agree very well together. This happy Agreement was made the 23d of October; and the News of the intended Marriage was ſoon ſpread in Court and City; all, except the French and Popiſh Faction, rejoyc'd mightily at it. Barillon was amaz'd: He flew to the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, and got her to ſend all her Creatures to deſire to ſpeak with the King. She wrote him ſeveral Billets to the ſame Purpoſe. But the Earl of Danby having taken Care to have a Council ſummon'd, took Care alſo that neither the King nor the Duke ſhou'd be ſpoke to till the Matter was declar'd at that Board. And when that was done the King preſented the Prince to the young Lady as the Perſon he deſign'd ſhou'd be her Husband. When Barillon ſaw it was gone ſo far, he ſent a Courier to the Court of France with the News; upon whoſe Arrival Mr. Montagu, afterwards Duke of Montagu, King Charles's Ambaſſador, was ſent for. When he came to Verſailles he ſaw the King the moſt mov'd that he had ever obſerv'd him to be. He ask'd him when the Marriage was to be made? Mr. Montagu underſtood not what he meant. Upon which the moſt Chriſtian King explain'd all to him. The Ambaſſador proteſted he knew nothing of the whole Matter. The King ſaid, I always believ'd the Journey wou'd end in that. And he ſeem'd to think the Court of England had now forſaken him, which made him the

A.D.1677 more generous in his Money Negotiations to prevent it. He ſpoke of the King's Part in it with Decency, but expoſtulated ſeverely on the Duke's Part, who had now given his Daughter to the greateſt Enemy he had in the World. Mr. Montagu had no Anſwer to make; but next Night he had a Courier with Letters from the King, the Duke, and the Prince, to the French King. The Prince wou'd have avoided this Piece of Courtſhip, but his Uncle oblig'd him to it, as a Civility due to Kindred and Blood. The King aſſur'd his Brother of France, he had made the Match with a Deſign to engage the Prince to be more tractable in the Treaty which was now going on at Nimeguen. The French King receiv'd theſe Letters civilly, but did not ſeem much ſatisfy'd with them. Mr. Montagu was call'd over ſoon after this to get new Inſtructions; and the Lord Treaſurer ask'd him how the French King receiv'd the News of the Marriage. He anſwer'd, As he wou'd have done the Loſs of an Army. He ſpoke very hardly of the Duke for conſenting to it, and not at leaſt acquainting him with it. The Earl of Danby reply'd, He wrong'd him, for the Duke did not know it an Hour before it was publiſh'd, and the King himſelf not above two Hours.

Lord Danby's Account of it different from Sir William Temple's.

This Account entirely differs from Sir William Temple's, who makes himſelf to be the ſole Agent in the Succeſs of this momentous Affair; whereas, according to this Account, which the Duke of Montagu told Biſhop Burnet, Sir William Temple was not preſent when the King was perſuaded to conſent to it, when the Duke was ſent for by the King, when the Prince came to them, and the Lord Treaſurer, and when the Princeſs was given to him. Lord Montagu was known to be no Friend of Lord Danby's; yet he does this Juſtice to him; and the Lord Danby, when Duke of Leeds, ſaid, He wou'd not ſuffer that Part of his Service to be buried in Oblivion. Had it not been for the perſonal Virtues and Graces of her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs, and for the Intereſt the Marriage gave the Prince of Orange in the Parliament and People of England, and the ſtrengthening of the Proteſtant Intereſt in Chriſtendom, the Princeſs's Portion cou'd not have tempted the Prince, it being but 40,000 Pounds, and the Jointure of the Dowager of Orange was 12 or 14,000 Pounds a Year. A Day or two after the Marriage was agreed on, the King and Queen, the Duke (the Dutcheſs lay in at that Time of the Duke of Cambridge) and the two Princeſſes his Daughters, ſaw the Lord Mayor's Shew, and afterwards din'd with him, then Sir Francis Chaplin, at Guild-hall. 'Twas about this Time, if not at this very Feaſt, that Sir Nicholas Butler the Quack Privy-Counſellor.

Sir Nicholas Butler a Quack, who had renounc'd Baptiſm in Oliver's Time, and was now a Court Spy, afterwards a Privy-Counſellor, came to the King and told him he had juſt diſcover'd a Conſpiracy againſt his Life, and that the Fanaticks, himſelf a Baptiſt, had reſolv'd to execute it on the Lord Mayor's Day, that they had prepar'd a Croſs-Bow for that Purpoſe, which had the Force of a Gun, and with it they intended to ſhoot him from Bow Steeple, as he ſtood in the Balcony at the Angel in Cheapſide to ſee the Pageants. Upon this Sir Robert Southwel, then one of the Clerks of the Council, was ſent to Bow Church early in the Morning to obſerve the Conſpirators, that on a Signal given they might be ſeiz'd. Sir Robert got up into the Church at the Place aſſign'd by Butler, and there attended till the Pageants were come into Cheapſide, when he perceiv'd a luſty, rugged Fellow preſs forward to look into the Street, with a Great-Coat on, and ſomething ſtrutting out under it. Sir Robert Southwel preſently concluded that was the Perſon he wanted; ſo he got near him, and with as little Suſpicion as might be endeavour'd to feel for the Croſs-Bow. The Man finding him fumbling about his Cloaths, ſtar'd at him; and if Sir Robert's Aſpect and Dreſs had not ſhewn him to be a Perſon of Quality, he fancy'd the Fellow wou'd have ſecur'd him for a Pick-Pocket. But at laſt Southwel ſpy'd the fatal Engine under his Coat. It ſeems the Man was a Carpenter, and had a great Rule ſtuck into his Girdle. It was about this Time alſo that the Court began to hearken to Whiſpers of dark Deſigns of the Diſſenters, as Echard calls them, tho', God knows, they had no other Deſign than to procure, if they cou'd, Friends enough in Parliament to repeal thoſe cruel and unnatural Laws that depriv'd them of their Liberty Spiritual and Temporal, the Birth-right of every good Engliſh-man and Proteſtant. We ſhall ſee hereafter what Tragedies thoſe Whiſpers produc'd. A.D.1677

The Prince of Orange marries the Princeſs Mary.

The Prince of Orange's Marriage with the Princeſs Mary was conſummated the 4th of November; and a few Days after the King, the Duke, the Prince, the Lord Treaſurer, and Sir William Temple, enter'd in Earneſt on the Debate of the Peace, the Terms of which were at laſt agreed upon, "That France ſhou'd reſtore to "the Emperor all that had been taken from him; "the Dutchy of Lorrain to the Duke; and all on "both Sides between France and Holland; and "to Spain the Towns of Aeth, Charleroy, Audenard, Courtray, Tournay, Conde, Valenciennes, "St. Guiſlain and Binch." Theſe Conditions were ſent to France by the Lord Duras, afterwards Earl of Feverſham; and the King aſſur'd his Highneſs, He wou'd never part from the leaſt Point of the Scheme, tho' even Echard is forc'd to own, That the Buſineſs came to be drawn out into ſo many Meſſages from England, and Returns from France, that it diminiſh'd into nothing. The Reader cannot forget that his Majeſty immediately after his breaking his Word with the Presbyterians, valu'd himſelf to his Parliament on his Sincerity, and that the Chancellor Hyde ſpoke very much of his being a King of his Word. Mr. Acherley aſſures us the Matter of the Scheme was ſpun out into dilatory Expoſtulations by Concert with Duras himſelf, who carry'd it over. Their Royal Highneſſes the Prince and Princeſs of Orange embark'd for Holland as ſoon as the Terms of the Peace were adjuſted.

When the Parliament met on the 16th of July, Secretary Coventry ſignify'd they ſhou'd be adjourn'd to the 3d of December, which Mr. Speaker Seymour did again by his own Authority: But before that the King iſſu'd out his Proclamation, that he expected not the Members Attendance. When the Houſe met the 3d of December, the Secretary deliver'd a Meſſage from the King, that they ſhou'd adjourn to the 15th of January, which Speaker Seymour did a third Time. The King thought himſelf pretty ſure of the Parliament's meeting him in a good Humour, upon the Marriage of his Neece to a Proteſtant Prince; and to be ſtill ſurer of it, he ſent Mr. Thynne to Holland with a Draught of a Je-june Alliance to be made with the States General, in order to compel France and Spain to fall in with the Scheme agreed upon, which he knew France wou'd never conſent to, nor did he ever intend to compel her, but was even continuing his Demands of Money from the French King for the Services he had done, and was to do him,

A.D.1678 as will be prov'd hereafter. Hyde was come from Nimeguen, where he was added to the Number of the Engliſh Plenipotentiaries Mediators, to wait on the Princeſs of Orange; and the Treaty Thynne brought over, was ſign'd the 16th of January.

1678. Having at the Cloſe of the laſt Year omitted the Promotions and Preferments, which are the darling Ornaments of our Compleat Hiſtories, I ſhall adorn mine out of Echard in the Beginning of this. His Grace Henry Duke of Newcaſtle, and Earl Danby Lord Treaſurer, were made Knights of the Garter in the Room of two Knights deceas'd, William Duke of Newcaſtle, and George Earl of Briſtol. The Duke of Ormond was again made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in the Room of the Earl of Eſſex, who, as the Archdeacon tells us with ſingular Satisfaction, began now to decline in the King's Favour, who had been long declining in that of the Publick. In the Beginning of January his Majeſty was pleas'd to make George Wharton, Eſq; a Baronet, and ſome Weeks before to confer the Honour of Knighthood on William Royſton and Thomas Beckford, Citizens of London. I muſt confeſs I do affect a Negligence of Chronology in ſuch Memoirs as theſe, which are to have no more Room than we can ſpare, and to take it where it happens.

Parliament. The Parliament met on the 15th of January, and by the King's Directions adjourn'd for thirteen Days, within which Time his Majeſty ſhou'd, as he intimated, have Matters of great Importance to impart to them. And when they met, he acquainted them with ordinary Matters touching the Prince's Marriage, and with the Alliance he had made with Holland againſt France. The Money-Treaty was then actually on Foot at Paris. He demanded Supplies to raiſe 30,000 Men, and for a Fleet of 90 Men of War, in order to declare and carry on a War vigorouſly againſt France. Sir William Coventry ſhew'd the great Inconvenience of raiſing a Land-Army, the Danger that might follow on it, the little Uſe cou'd be made of it, and the great Charge it muſt put the Nation to. He was for hiring Troops from the German Princes, and for aſſiſting the Dutch with Money. He mov'd to recall our Forces out of the French Service, and put them into the Dutch. He thought it did more properly belong to England to ſet out a great Fleet, and to cut off the French Trade every where, than to keep up a Land-Army; for the French were then very high in Manufactures and Commerce; their People were ingenious as well as induſtrious; they wrought hard, and liv'd low, ſo they ſold cheaper than others cou'd do; and it was found that we ſent very near a Million in Specie every Year for the Balance of our Trade with them. This is the Reign ſo much cry'd up for the Flouriſhing Trade! This is the Monarch ſo extoll'd for his Care of the Church and Commerce! But, ſays Biſhop Burnet, "The King had promis'd "ſo many Commiſſions to Men of Quality in "both Houſes, that it was carry'd for a Land-"Force.

Sir William Coventry's Speech about the French Trade.

The Commons believing now the King to be in Earneſt, addreſs'd him not to admit of any Treaty of Peace, whereby the French King ſhou'd be left in Poſſeſſion of any greater Dominion or Power than was left him by the Pyrenean Treaty, and to ſtop all Commerce with France. The latter he conſented to by a ſevere Act, prohibiting the Importation of French Manufactures or Growth for three Years, and to the next Seſſion of Parliament after that. This Prohibition was well look'd to for a Year; but the Court was too much French (to uſe Biſhop Burnet's Words) not to connive at the Breach of it afterwards. The Addreſs about the Terms of the Treaty try'd the Popiſh Cabal to the Quick, and the King, by a Meſſage in Writing ſent the 4th of February, reviv'd his Quarrels with the Commons about their meddling with Matters which were not fit for them, ſuch as the Security of their Religion, Liberties and Properties, and invading his Prerogative, to deſtroy them by a War or a Peace, as he thought fit, without taking their Advice in the Matter: He told them they had taken no Notice of his Speech when he adjourn'd them in May, but had added to their former ill Conduct new Invaſions of his Prerogatives, adding, That the Rights of making and managing War and Peace were his; and if they thought he wou'd depart from any Part of thoſe Rights, they were miſtaken. A Thread-bare Topick too much worn to deſerve further Obſervation. Whoever queſtion'd the Prerogative of making and managing Peace and War? And whoever doubted the Right of the Parliament to addreſs and adviſe in both Caſes as the Neceſſity of Affairs requir'd? Ackerly, after Biſhop Parker, informs us, The King threaten'd the Commons, if they would not grant the Money demanded, he would immediately relinquiſh the War. Upon which they paſs'd the Poll-Bill to raiſe one Million; but at the ſame Time, on the 14th of March, they prepar'd an Addreſs, to proclaim War againſt France inſtantly, and to diſmiſs the French Ambaſſador. Which Addreſs they ſent to the Lords for their Concurrence. But before the Addreſs cou'd be perfected in the Lord's Houſe, the Popiſh Cabal, ſays Ackerly, haſten'd the King to anticipate it, and to ſecure againſt all Events the Money-Bill, which he did by paſſing it on the 20th of March, and on that Day diſmiſs'd their Sitting for a Month. In this Manner, according to Biſhop Parker, the King at length, with much Ado, extorted from the Commons that Supply, which he had, without Effect, deſir'd for a whole Year together.

Trade with France prohibited.

p. 593.

In the Preamble of the before-mention'd Act of Prohibition, it was ſet forth that we were in actual War with France, which was accepted to as not true in Fact. But the Miniſtry, not very ſcrupulous as to the Truth of their Facts, affirm'd we were already engag'd ſo far with the Allies, that it was really a War, and that our Troops were recall'd from France. Secretary Coventry, one of the Miniſters, ſaid in ſome Heat, The King was engag'd, and he wou'd rather be guilty of the Murder of forty Men, than do any thing to retard the Progreſs of the War. An odd Expreſſion, which was often objected to him afterwards. It muſt not be forgot, that Echard tells us, the King prepar'd for this Seſſion of Parliament, by doing ſome terrible Things as well as popular, to ſhew his Authority as well as Clemency in ſuppreſſing Libels and ſeditious Diſcourſes, particularly Mr. Andrew Marvel's Growth of Popery, which is as full of Truth as the Addreſſes publiſh'd in his Majeſty's Gazette ſome Time after were full

A.D.1678 full of Falſhood. Another Thing omitted by me at the Opening of this Seſſion, was a Vote upon a Motion of the Lord Obrian, who had marry'd the Earl of Danby's Daughter, for 70,000 Pounds for a ſolemn Funeral of his late Majeſty King Charles I. whoſe Corpſe, by the Way, they never cou'd find, and to erect a Monument for the ſaid Prince of Glorious Memory: The ſaid Sum to be rais'd by a Two Month's Tax, to begin at the Expiration of the preſent Tax for erecting Men of War. The Archdeacon ſays, the Nation had ſtood oblig'd to do this for many Years; and the Bond is not yet cancell'd, for the Thing is not yet done.

Lord Obrian moves for a Monument for King Charles I.

A Poll being granted, the additional Cuſtoms continu'd, and 600,000 Pounds given for Land-Forces, an Army of 20,000 effective Men was rais'd and cloath'd in ſix Weeks Time. The Spaniſh Ambaſſador ſollicited to have a Body of them ſent immediately into Flanders, and offer'd to put Oſtend and Newport into the Hands of the Engliſh. But our Court were ever dilatory in all Engagements with the Confederates.

An Army of 20,000 Men rais'd in 6 Weeks.

At this Time the French King made a Step, which ſtruck Terror into the Dutch and Louvois, who was the Contriver of it, gain'd the Credit with him, which he maintain'd ſo long afterwards. He propos'd to him the taking of Ghent, which being ſo near the Dutch wou'd, he thought, immediately diſpoſe them to a ſeparate Peace; but how to accompliſh it did not appear very eaſy, without being obſerv'd, which wou'd have certainly oblig'd the King of England to have ſent Troops to re-inforce that Garriſon. Wherefore Louvois laid ſuch a Scheme of Marches and Counter-marches, as did amuſe all the Allies. Sometimes the Deſign ſeem'd to be on the Rhine, ſometimes on Luxemburgh. And while the Confederate Forces were ſent to defend thoſe Places where they apprehended the Deſign was laid, and none of the French Generals themſelves did apprehend what the true Deſign was, the French Army on a ſudden inveſts Ghent, which Town and Cittadel were quickly taken. This was Louvois's Maſter-piece. It had the Effect intended, and brought the Dutch to reſolve on a Peace. The French King might have taken Bruges, Oſtend and Newport; but he only took Ypres, for he had no Mind to provoke the Engliſh. He was ſure of his Point by the Fright this put the Hollanders into. The Engliſh were equally frighten'd, and the Duke of Monmouth was diſpatch'd away with ſome of the Guards to join their Army, while a large Detachment was preparing to follow them.

A fine Scheme of Louvois.

Engliſh Troops ſent to Flanders.

Echard tells us what Care was taken to prevent the Publiſhing of Pamphlets in Favour of the Reform'd Religion, and the Rights, Properties and Liberties of Engliſh Men, but he did not tell us that the moſt execrable Libeller, who ever ſold Lies and Scandal, Roger L'Eſtrange, was licens'd to break open Houſes and Cloſets on Suſpicion only of any ſuch good Pamphlet, and that the King's terrifying Speech about his Prerogative, was publiſh'd in the next News-Book that came out after the Parliament was adjourn'd, ſuch an equal Hand was carry'd in this juſt Adminiſtration.

On the 11th of April the Parliament met again, and adjourn'd to the Monday following; at which time, by the King's particular Appointment, they choſe a new Speaker in the Houſe of Commons. Sir Robert Sawyer, of whom Echard ſays the very Beſt he can, that he was one of the King's Council, learned, and a great Practicer in the Exchequer, but being troubled with the Stone, Mr. Edward Seymour was again re-inſtated in the Chair; and theſe Times, as we may perceive, being very godly, he informs us there was a ſtrict Faſt kept all over England. The Archdeacon ſeems to have found out the Lord Chancellor at laſt; for he brings his long Speech, as he calls it, into five or ſix Lines: The chief Thing in it was an Intimation of a Peace between the French King and the States; upon which the Commons voted, May the 4th, to give their humble Advice to his Majeſty, that he would forthwith enter into the preſent Alliance with the Confederates, and an actual War with France, and again, by a Majority of ſixteen Voices, that the late Leagues made with the States General of the United Provinces, are not purſuant to the Addreſſes of this Houſe, nor conſiſtent with the Good and Safety of the Kingdom. Rare Management! The King being diſoblig'd, cries Echard, return'd them this Anſwer, That having been acquainted with the Votes of the 4th Inſtant, his Majeſty is very much ſurpriz'd, both with the Matter and Manner of them, but if he had had Exceptions to neither, yet his Majeſty having ask'd the Advice of both the Houſes, doth not think fit to give any Anſwer to any thing of that Nature, 'till he hath the concurrent Advice of both Houſes. Mr. Archdeacon goes ſweetly on with ſuch Meſſages and Anſwers, as if there was no Harm ſaid or done, and he did, or perhaps cou'd not ſee, that if the Advice was good, the Anſwer ſhould have been ſo too, and that the King knew better than any Man, that the Lords would not have fail'd to have given their Concurrence. A.D.1678

The next Addreſs, May 11th, ſhew'd that the Penſioners in this Houſe, either wanted their Pay, or were weary, and aſham'd of voting always againſt their Conſciences, as the King was often told in a joking Way, and would laugh at what does not ſeem very laughable. The Commons humbly thank'd his Majeſty for demanding their Advice, which accordingly they had given, and beſought him to communicate to them his Reſolutions thereupon; and whereas they conceive that the Inconveniencies and Dangers which the Kingdom now lies under, might totally, or in a great Meaſure have been prevented, in caſe his Majeſty had accepted of the Advice by them given in their Addreſſes, that therefore he would be pleas'd to remove thoſe Counſellors who adviſ'd him to give thoſe Anſwers which he did to the ſaid Addreſſes, and in fine, that he would be pleas'd to remove the Duke of Lauderdale from his Preſence and Councils. Bravely ſaid! like Britons! like Proteſtants! and now at laſt, after eighteen Years inceſſant Apprehenſion, Anxiety, Perplexity, Perſecution, Danger, and almoſt Deſpair, we have an Engliſh Parliament, nay that very Parliament who paſs'd the Bartholomew Act, the Militia Act, the Corporation Act, the Five Mile Act, and that repeal'd the Triennial Act; that very Parliament is at laſt become Engliſh, and as long as they have ſate, the Nation were willing to keep them longer. The King's Anſwer was, En Maiſtre, I am ſurpriz'd at the Extravagancy of your Addreſs, and unwilling at preſent to give it ſuch a due Anſwer as it deſerves. Well ſaid, Mr. Archdeacon will ſay, if he ſays any thing, but he may very well apply to himſelf, with Reſpect to this Government, what a fine Wit ſaid of the Diſpenſary.

A bold Addreſs.

The Parliament at laſt Engliſh.

I view thee always with a Lover's Eye,
Thou haſt no Fault, or I no Fault can ſpy;
Thou art all Beauty, or all Blindneſs I.

It is not ſo with me, I never look'd upon it with the Eye of a Lover, I never ſaw any Charms, but eternally meet with Blemiſhes.

A.D.1678 His Majeſty, after his laſt excellent Speech, on the 13th of May, prorogu'd the Parliament to the 23d of May. We are told that what the King reſented moſt, was a Vote, at the Motion of Sir Thomas Clarges, Monk's Wife's Brother, that no Money ſhould be given, 'till Satisfaction was given in Matters of Religion. Echard, who does not know when Sir William Temple is good, and when he is not, copies him, and calls this an unlucky peeviſh Vote; whereas, both Sir William and he too, might have call'd it a crooked lean Vote. They had truſted the King ſo long, that they could truſt him no longer, without putting every thing that was dear to them to the Hazard. To deſire a little Security, is to be peeviſh to make a ſenſible Motion, and to carry it, is to be unlucky; what follows after Temple, is not more important. The King reproach'd Sir William with his popular Notions of War, and ask'd him, how he thought he cou'd truſt a Houſe of Commons to carry him through the War, if he ſhould engage; if Sir William cou'd not have thought how, he cou'd not think at all. He might have truſted them as Men are to be truſted to do a Thing; on the doing of which depend whatever is valuable to them in this Life, or whatever they believe of another. I repeat no more of his Copy after Temple, it being only equal to that Author, in the worſt Parts of his Writings, where they are affected and ſuperficial.

Sir Thomas Clarges's Motion againſt giving Money.

The Vote for the laſt Addreſs was ſo diſtaſteful, and indeed diſgraceful to the Court, that the Earl of Danby muſter'd his whole Army of Penſioners, to form a Majority on their Side; but he cou'd not accompliſh it, tho' in an Opinion that he had, he got the King to ſend a Meſſage, deſiring an additional Revenue of 300,000 Pounds a Year, during Life. This ſet the Houſe in a Flame. It was ſaid, Here's no Demand for a War, but for a Revenue, which would furniſh the King ſo well, that there would be no more need of Parliaments. The Court Party thought ſuch a Gift as this wou'd make them uſeleſs, ſo the Matter was rejected without a Diviſion. The Lord Treaſurer was much cenſur'd for this raſh Attempt, which too bare-facedly diſcover'd the Deſigns of the Court.

Raſh Counſel of Danby.

Biſhop Burnet informs us, that he at the ſame time order'd Mr. Montagu to treat with the Court of France for a Peace, in caſe they wou'd engage to pay the King 300,000 Pounds a Year for three Years; which when it came afterwards to be known, was generally believ'd to be a Deſign to keep up and model the Army now rais'd. The King reckon'd there wou'd be Money enough to pay them, till the Nation ſhou'd be brought under a military Government; which was the Intention of the Court, and fully proves the Conſpiracy of the Stuartine Princes againſt the Britiſh Conſtitution. It is confeſs'd by Jonathan Swift, D. D. who among ten thouſand Scandals publiſh'd by him in his Tales of Tubs, Gullivers, Profundities, &c. has given the World one Piece of Secret Hiſtory, for which they are much oblig'd to him; for it will teach them as much in Politicks, as his Tale of a Tub will corrupt them in Conſcience. It is quoted by Echard himſelf: " Swift acquaints us that France, in order to " break the Force of the Confederates, and elude " all juſt Conditions of a general Peace, reſolv'd " by any means to enter into ſeparate Meaſures " with Holland; to which End it was abſolutely " neceſſary to engage the good Offices of the King " of England, who was look'd upon as the Maſter of the Peace whenever he pleas'd (and ſo any Monarch of a Princely Genius wou'd have been in his Circumſtances) " The Bargain was A.D.1678 " ſtruck for three or four hundred thouſand " Pounds, What a Royal Houſe we had! But " when all was agreed, Monſieur Barillon, the " French Ambaſſador, told the King, that he had " Orders from his Maſter, before Payment, to add " a private Article, by which his Majeſty ſhou'd " be engag'd never to keep above 8000 Men of " ſtanding Troops in his three Kingdoms. This " unexpected Propoſal put the King in a Rage, " and made him ſay, Gods-fiſh, Does my Brother " of France think to ſerve me thus? Are all his " Promiſes to make me abſolute Maſter of my " Parliaments come to this? Or does he think that " a Thing to be done with 8000 Men?" There's the Proof; Jonathan Swift, Dean of St. Patrick's, gives Evidence, that King Charles II. was in a Secret League with King Lewis XIV. to enſlave the three Free Kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

His Deſign againſt the Conſtitution, prov'd by Jonathan Swift.

Sir William Temple, to whom Swift was Chaplain, tells us, that the Prince of Orange having ſent Van Lewen over to England, to ſift into the Intentions of our Court, by which the States wou'd be determin'd as to Peace or War. The Hollander told him, that notwithſtanding the general Diſpoſition to Peace in Holland, yet if the King wou'd immediately declare the War, he believ'd the States wou'd purſue it, and put a ſtop to the Treaty of Peace. Sir William Temple told the King of it, but the Opportunity was loſt. He ſhou'd have taken hold of it on the Return of the Lord Duras from France, before the Parliament had conceiv'd ſuch a Jealouſy of his Conduct. His Majeſty ſaw his Time was ſlip'd; but the Turn he gave it, was, Since the Dutch will have a Peace upon the French Terms, and France offers Money for my Conſent to what I can't help, I don't know why I ſhou'd not get the Money. Sir William Temple, and Archdeacon Echard, thinks this a witty Turn. I don't ſee any Appearance of Wit, but a Certainty of ſomething elſe, for which I have a Name if I durſt ſpeak it. He cou'd help the Peace if he wou'd, Van Lewen declar'd, The States wou'd ſtill go on with the War, if he wou'd immediately enter into it; that wou'd have help'd it. Indeed, there's generally thought to be a great deal of Wit in getting Money, and in that Senſe the Turn was extreamly witty. But when the Matter was blown, as it was not long after, the Lord Treaſurer became the moſt hated Miniſter that had ever been about the King. All People ſaid now, they ſaw the Secret of that high Favour he had been in, and the black Deſign he was contriving. At this Time Expreſſes went very frequently between England and France, and the State of Foreign Affairs vary'd every Poſt; ſo that it was viſible we were in a Secret Negotiation. Mr. Montagu, who was a Man of Pleaſure, had an Intrigue with the Dutcheſs of Cleveland, who was quite caſt off by the King, and was then at Paris. His Majeſty had order'd him to find out an Aſtrologer, of whom he had a good Opinion, for he had long before his Reſtoration foretold he ſhou'd enter London on the 29th of May: He was yet living, and Mr. Montagu found him out. He ſaw he was capable of being corrupted, ſo he reſolv'd to prompt him to ſend the King ſuch Hints as wou'd ſerve his own Ends; but he was ſo bewitch'd with the Dutcheſs of Cleveland, that he truſted her with the Secret; and ſhe growing jealous of a new Amour, took all the Ways ſhe cou'd think of to ruin him, reſerving this of the Aſtrologer for her laſt Shift, by which ſhe compaſs'd her Ends: For Mr. Montagu was entirely loſt upon it with the King, and coming over without

A mean Saying of the King's.

Mr. Montagu's Intrigue with the Dutcheſs of Cleveland in France.

A.D.1678 out being recall'd, the Earl of Sunderland was ſent Ambaſſador in his room.

All this while the Treaty went on at Nimeguen, Sir William Temple and Sir Lionel Jenkins being the Engliſh Plenipotentiaries there, and Mr. Hyde and Mr. Godolphin manag'd at the Hague. The States were reſolv'd to have a Peace, which the Prince of Orange did all he cou'd to hinder. De Wit's Party began to get Strength again, and infus'd a Jealouſy in all People, that the Prince intended to keep up the War for his own Ends. A Peace might be now had, by reſtoring all that belong'd to the States, and by a tolerable Barrier in Flanders. 'Tis true, the great Difficulty was concerning their Allies, the King of Denmark, and Elector of Brandenburgh, who had fallen on the Swede, and beaten him out of Germany, upon that King's declaring for France. No Peace cou'd be had unleſs the Swede was reſtor'd: The Princes, who had been quite exhauſted by that War, wou'd not conſent to this; but preſs'd the States to ſtick by them, who had ſtuck ſo faſt by the States in their Extremity. This was the Prince of Orange's conſtant Topick, How cou'd they expect any of their Allies wou'd adhere to them, if they now forſook ſuch faithful Friends? But nothing cou'd prevent it. It was given out in Holland, that no Dependance cou'd be made on England, that Court being ſo entirely in a French Intereſt, that they expected they wou'd, as they had once done, ſell them again to France. Which Report was believ'd to be ſpread by the French Miniſters themſelves, who, to come at their Ends, were apt enough to give up even thoſe that ſacrific'd every thing to them. It was ſaid the Court of France wou'd conſider both Denmark and Brandenburgh, and repay the Charge of the War againſt Sweden; which was thought to be a Deſign to force thoſe Princes into a Dependance upon France, who wou'd not continue thoſe Payments ſo much for paſt, as for future Services.

Prince of Orange beats Luxemburg at Mons.

In the mean time the French had block'd up Mons, and the Prince of Orange march'd thither to drive them from their Poſts. Luxemburgh commanded the French Army, and ſeem'd to be in full Expectation of a Peace when the Prince came and attack'd him on the 14th of Auguſt; and notwithſtanding the Advantage of his Situation, it appear'd how much the Dutch Army was now ſuperior to the French, for they beat them out of ſeveral Entrenchments. The Prince had no Order to ſtop, but knew however that the Peace was juſt upon a Concluſion, though it had not been yet formally intimated to him; which made it lawful for him to take all Advantages, and he was not apprehenſive of a new Embroilment, but rather wiſh'd it. The French Treaſure was ſo exhauſted, and their King ſo weary of the War, that no Notice was taken of the Buſineſs of Mons, where the Duke of Monmouth, who commanded a Body of 10,000 Engliſh, ſignaliz'd himſelf ſo much, that he acquir'd a great Character as a General and a Soldier. The Treaty of Nimeguen was concluded about the 20th of Auguſt, and ratify'd the 20th of September; but our Ambaſſadors Mediators had no better Part in it than that of Form and Title. The Miniſters of the Confederates took no more Notice of them than they were forc'd to: New Difficulties aroſe after the Concluſion of the Treaty, upon the French King's refuſing to evacuate Ghent, Aeth, Charleroy, Oudenard, Courtray, and Limburgh, the ſix Cities which were to be reſtor'd to Spain, till Reſtitution was made to Sweden of all that had been taken from her. Upon this the Engliſh ſtruck in again, and even the Duke of York declar'd in the Foreign Committee,

Duke of Monmouth ſignalizes himſelf.

That it was plain by this Step, that France was not ſincere in the Buſineſs of the Peace; that they aim'd at the Univerſal Monarchy, and none but the King cou'd hinder them from it, in the Poſture that Chriſtendom then ſtood. In this Diſpoſition Sir William Temple, who had been ſometime in England, was ſent to Holland with Van Lewen, and an Alliance was enter'd into with the Dutch, by a Treaty form'd in five or ſix Days; upon which the French evacuated the ſix Towns, and got Denmark and Brandenburgh into their Dependance, under Pretence of repaying the Charge of the War. A general Peace quickly follow'd, and there was no more Occaſion for our Troops beyond Seas. The French was ſo apprehenſive of them, that young Ruvigny, afterwards Earl of Galway, was ſent over to England to get the Army disbanded: And the Force of Money was ſo ſtrong, that he had Orders to offer ſix Millions of Livres, in caſe the Army was disbanded in Auguſt. Monſieur Ruvigny had ſuch an ill Opinion of the Deſigns of our Court, if the Army was kept up, that he inſiſted on fixing a Day for disbanding it; at which the Duke of York was very uneaſy, and the Army not being disbanded at the Time prefix'd, the French King ſav'd his Money. The Troops were brought into England, and kept up under Colour of wanting Money to pay them.

Dutch Miniſters brib'd.

The French King's Money did not only paſs in England about the Time of the Treaty of Nimeguen, it was current in Holland alſo; and tho' the Prince of Orange told Sir William Temple, He wou'd hinder the Peace as long as he cou'd, yet the Louveſtein Party, and many of their principal Men, puſh'd hard for it, and the Clamour ran high againſt prolonging the War; for which Mr. Montagu, then the Engliſh Ambaſſador in France, gives us this Reaſon: The King of France is in very good Humour, upon the Aſſurances, I believe, he has of having ſuch a Peace from the Dutch as he deſires; which has been manag'd under-hand by great Preſents to thoſe that are not Well-wiſhers to the Prince of Orange. The Penſioner Fagel ſurpriz'd an original Letter from Mr. Louvois to Mr. D'Eſtrades, in which he bids him tell thoſe of his Correſpondents in Holland, from whence the late Advices came, That in caſe they gave him no better, he wou'd certainly ſtop their Penſions; and he had daily good Advices thence. His Emiſſaries inſinuated to the People of the United Provinces, that ſince the Prince of Orange's Marriage, the King and Duke had drawn over the Prince to the Intereſt of France; and that there was a private Underſtanding between them, to the Danger of the Liberties of Holland, which at length had the Effect they deſir'd. It made the Dutch jealous of the Prince, deſtroy'd the Confidence in him which he deſerv'd, and prepar'd the Way for the Dutch to comply with the hard Terms impos'd upon them and their Confederates in the Treaty of Nimeguen. The Prince did all he cou'd, without making a Breach in the Conſtitution, to oppoſe that Peace; but as a very good Author informs us, The Conduct of King Charles had ſpread ſuch a Humour and Diffidence in the States, that it was not to be avoided. Their Allies loudly exclaim'd at the arbitrary Terms to which they were, as it were, commanded to ſubmit by LEWIS XIV. as a Conqueror. They cry'd out they were abandon'd and betray'd into ſo fatal a Conjuncture. Their Complaints avail'd no more than the Parliament's Addreſſes; the Peace was concluded, and France gain'd her Ends. Thus, continues the ſame Author, in ſix Months time it coſt the Kingdom a Million to procure ſuch a Peace

Sir W. T.

The ill Effects of the King's War with Holland.

A.D.1678 as the French deſir'd; and ſuch was the End of the fatal War begun by England and France, againſt the Dutch and their Confederates, in 1672, by which the FRENCH King diſſolv'd the Confederacy againſt him, extended his Dominions, ſeiz'd on great Tracts of Land, had Time given him to refreſh his Troops, and maintain great Part of them by his Conqueſts, to make a very conſiderable Addition to his Fleet, to ſettle a better Oeconomy in his Finances, and repleniſh it with Treaſure; the deplorable Effects of all which we have groan'd under ever ſince.

All Europe ſaw plainly that the King of England acted only as he was directed by the Counſels of France, and his Ambaſſadors at Nimeguen were look'd on rather as Ambaſſadors from an Ally. Sir William Temple was honeſt, and wou'd gladly have ſerv'd the Confederates if he cou'd. Sir Lionel Jenkins every one knew to be a Court Tool, of mean Parts, with much Pedantry, and good Staunch Principles of Religion and Government. There was an Acount of the Treaty of Nimeguen written in French, by Monſieur d'Avaux's Secretary, in which the two Britiſh Miniſters are thus ſpoken of: Sir William Temple, ſays the French-man, was too much a Friend to the Allies, and too little a Friend to us; nay, he cou'd not be brought to conſent to ſome things in our Favour, which the King his Maſter had allow'd him to do; but Sir Lionel Jenkins was a good Mediator.

Popiſh Plot.

Having diſpatch'd Foreign Affairs, we muſt review thoſe of England, where we are on the Brink of a Diſcovery which ſtruck the three Kingdoms with Terror and Amazement. The Papiſts had been all this while branching out Coleman's general Conſpiracy, and ſeveral Agents had receiv'd Inſtructions as to ſeveral Parts of it; but before any Particulars were known, they buzz'd about, that the Diſſenters were plotting againſt the Government, and the Presbyterians, who brought in the King, were going to turn him out again. John Claypole, Eſq; of Northamptonſhire, a Gentleman of a moſt mild, peaceable Diſpoſition, was pitch'd upon to be the Head of this Plot. He was accordingly apprehended, and hurry'd away to the Tower in June. His great Crime, in Appearance, being his having marry'd one of Oliver's Daughters, and the King, as we have remember'd, wou'd very gladly have marry'd another, if he cou'd have recover'd his Crown by it. Mr. Claypole had an Habeas Corpus to the King's-Bench, and was brought up in order to be bail'd, and produc'd Perſons of Worth to bail him; but Scroggs, lately made Chief Juſtice for that and other ſuch Jobs, ſet the Penalty of the Bail ſo high, that thoſe Perſons excus'd themſelves, and Mr. Claypole was remanded to the Tower. But the Term after, when the Conſpiracy againſt the Government appear'd to be the Deſign of the Papiſts, he was let go, and no further Enquiry was made on whoſe, or on what Evidence he was committed.

Sham Plot againſt the Presbyterians.

Suddenly diſcharg'd.

I am far from being viſionary, or over credulous: I cou'd as ſoon believe the Story of Mahomet and his Pigeon, as Echard's Tale of Oliver Cromwel and the Devil. I do not think we are juſtify'd in imputing to the Firſt Cauſe, what Second Cauſes may very naturally produce, which makes me very cautious in interpreting common Incidents as Judgments. I am not over fond of conjecturing as to the Springs and Wheels that move the State-Machine, and all Political Events, but I don't think 'tis wild gueſſing to ſuſpect that this Fanatical Plot was inventing, in order to throw the Popiſh Plot upon the Fanaticks, if it had been put in Execution. For in the Gunpowder Plot, there was ſuch a deviliſh Deſign, and another Northamptonſhire Gentleman, Mr. Pickering, a noted Puritan, was pitch'd upon to be the Head of, as is elſewhere mention'd. A.D.167?

In the mean time the Parliament met, on the 23d of May, and his Majeſty, in a ſhort Speech, deſir'd them to raiſe Money for maintaining or disbanding the Army, and gave them a Caution againſt tacking together ſeveral Matters in one Bill. Echard tells us, that the Lord Chancellor made a long Speech again; and truly a long one it was, and it had been well if that had been its only Fault: The Flattery is ſo fulſom, that there is nothing like it in the Harangues of the French Academicans on their Grand Monarch, who, however, had the Superficies of a Hero, and that's enough for Flatterers. The Engliſh Nation were now in the loweſt Degree of Reputation and Intereſt Abroad; the People at Home, unleſs we except the perſecuting Prelates, their Juſtices and Informers, were in the greateſt Anxiety, through their Fears of a French Government and Religion. Yet does the Lord Chancellor call upon the three Kingdoms, with all the Pomp of puffy Eloquence, to ſhew a Time, if they can, ſince the World began, and theſe Iſlands were firſt inhabited (The Phraſe is, Since this Nation was firſt inhabited, which bordering upon Nonſenſe, I made bold to correct; to inhabit a Nation, being in my humble Conception not ſo good as to inhabit an Iſland) Let them ſhew the Time, ſays his Lordſhip, when there were fewer Grievances, or leſs Cauſe of Complaint, than at this preſent Time: Nay, let them ſearch all Ages and Places, and tell us when and where there was ever found a happier People than we are at this Day, having the Purſe and Seal in our Poſſeſſion. He added ſomething about the Money, and againſt the Tack; he then bids them Embelliſh the Hiſtory of this Parliament, which had ſeveral Embelliſhments in his Predeceſſor Clarendon's Time. Lord Chancellor's ſulſom Speech.

The Peace was not then concluded at Nimeguen, and the Commons reſolv'd to ſupport the King, if he wou'd enter into a War with France; if not, to provide for the ſpeedy disbanding of the Army, which they voted the next Day, and on the 4th of June paſs'd a Vote for 200,000 Pounds, for disbanding the Army by the End of this preſent June, and 200,000 Pounds for the Expence of the Fleet. They continu'd the Time of Diſbanding till the latter End of July, and the King in a ſecond Speech, June the 18th, having told them that if they deſir'd he ſhou'd live in Quiet, they muſt add 300,000 Pounds a Year for Life to his Revenue, they gave a total Denial to it. Upon a Motion to give the King a Compenſation for what Cuſtoms he loſt by the Act of Prohibition, it paſs'd alſo in the Negative. Yeas 145, Noes 202. On the 15th of July, his Majeſty coming to the Houſe, paſs'd the Supply Bill, amounting to 619,000 Pounds, for disbanding the Army, for the Fleet, and Algiers, with which Government the King had been almoſt in continual War, theſe Pyrates having loſt the Terror they had of the Engliſh Maritime Power in the Time of Blake; and ſeveral other Bills, particularly the Act for burying in Woollen. Then the Lord Chancellor prorogu'd the Parliament to the firſt of Auguſt, but they met not till the 21ſt of October.

It was happy for England that the Papiſts were under Infatuation, blinded by Bigotry and Rage, which ſtirr'd them up to commit a moſt horrid Murder on the Perſon of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, Brother and Uncle to Meſſieurs Godfrey, late Merchants in London, and a zealous Juſtice of Peace againſt Papiſts, within the Liberties of Weſtminſter; Sir Edmundbury Godfrey murder'd.

A.D. 1678 Weſtminſter; for this bloody Attempt of theirs breaking out about the Time of the Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot, very much confirm'd People in the Belief of that damnable Conſpiracy. Echard, who has carefully ſtudy'd the moſt lying Libeller that ever wrote, Roger L'Eſtrange, endeavours in ſeveral Places of his Hiſtory to ridicule, though very aukardly, not only the Popiſh Plot, but the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, whom he calls that melancholly Gentleman, to intimate, that in his Melancholly he ſtabb'd himſelf. I will take the Liberty with L'Eſtrange which his Character juſtifies; There's no Decency towards a Villain, that had a hundred times deſerv'd the Gallows, which he was condemn'd to thirty Years before. The Lord L - - - - in a Speech in the Houſe of Peers, gives a lively Picture of this Scribler; who, without the leaſt Knoweldge of the Strength, Purity, and Elegance of Stile, was cry'd up, at our two famous Univerſities, as a Maſter of the Engliſh Tongue. He publiſh'd a Heap of Libels and Lampoons to rail away the Popiſh Plot, and Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's Murder, in Language which wou'd be a Shame to our Markets; and his Lordſhip takes this Notice of him.

Lord L - - Speech againſt L'Eſtrange.

I wou'd not have ſo much as a Popiſh Man nor a Popiſh Woman to remain here, not ſo much as a Popiſh Dog nor a Popiſh Bitch, nor ſo much as a Popiſh Cat that ſhou'd pur or mew about the King. We are in a Labyrinth of Evils, and muſt carefully endeavour to get out of them; and the greateſt Dangers of all amongſt us, are concerning Proteſtants; who notwithſtanding the many Evidences of the Plot, have been induſtrious to revile the King's Witneſſes; and ſuch a one is ROGER L'ESTRANGE, who now diſappears, being one of the greateſt VILLAINS upon Earth, a ROGUE beyond my Skill to delineate; who has been the Bugbear of the Proteſtant Religion, and traduc'd the King and Kingdom's Evidences by his notorious Scribling Writings, and has endeavour'd, as much as in him lay, to eclipſe the Glory of the Engliſh Nation. He is a dangerous rank Papiſt, prov'd by good and ſubſtantial Evidence; for which, ſince he has walk'd under another Diſguiſe, he deſerves of all Men to be HANG'D, and I believe I ſhall live to ſee that be his Fate. He has ſcandaliz'd ſeveral of the Nobility, and detracted from the Rights of his Majeſty's great Council, the Parliament: He is now fled from Juſtice, by which he confeſſes the Charge againſt him, and that ſhews him to be guilty. This wretched Fellow was made a Juſtice of Peace, to perſecute Proteſtant Diſſenters with his Power as well as with his Pen. He was afterwards dubb'd, and one of King James's Houſe of Commons, whom Echard ſo highly honours for their great Fortunes and Virtues. From his Invectives does that Hiſtorian take his Ribaldry againſt the Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot, as will be obſerv'd in the Sequel.

Calls him Villain and Rogue.

Biſhop Burnet informs us, that Dr. Tongue, a Clergy-man of the Church of England, brought the firſt Information of the Plot to him, on the 26th of September, and that he had always look'd upon him as a ſincere Man. Now let us ſee how he is characteris'd by Echard, to diſcredit the Conſpiracy he was about to diſcover. He had a Prolifick Brain, was of a reſtleſs humourous Temper, full of Variety of Projects, and ſcarce ever without a Pen in his Hand, and a Plot in his Head. The Wickedneſs of the Inſinuation is thus continu'd: He ſeem'd to entertain Titus Oates out of Charity, who then went by the Name of Ambroſe; and complaining that he knew not where to get Bread, the Doctor took him to his Houſe, gave him Cloaths, Lodging, and Diet, and told him he wou'd put him in a Way. Thus does he very honeſtly introduce his Diſcovery of the Plot, as if it was a Contrivance of Dr. Tongue's, who put Oates upon forming one out of his Converſation with Papiſts at St. Omers, and in London. For Oates, who had had his Education in the ſame Univerſity with Archdeacon Echard, and got a Living in Suſſex, turn'd Papiſt, and was initiated into the Romiſh Idolatrous Myſteries at Salamanca in Spain, and St. Omer in Flanders; but his Father having been an Anabaptiſt Teacher, afterwards Parſon of Haſtings in Suſſex, was the chief Reaſon that ſome did not give Credit to his Son's Evidence. I knew Oates, he was dull enough, and as impudent as dull, no more capable of forming the Plot, even as Echard has copied it, than of writing Paradiſe Loſt. The Deſign in general was by Fire and Sword, when all other Means fail'd, to ſubvert the eſtabliſh'd Government and Religion of theſe Kingdoms, and introduce Popery. The Pope, in a Congregation de Propaganda Fide, conſiſting of above three hundred Perſons, held about December, 1677, declar'd the King of England's Dominions to be Part of St. Peter's Patrimony, as forfeited to the Holy See for Hereſy, and ſo to be diſpos'd of as he ſhou'd think fit. Cardinal Howard, nominal Archbiſhop of Canterbury, was accordingly appointed Legate of England, to take Poſſeſſion of it in the Pope's Name; he was alſo to have 40,000 Crowns a Year Augmentation, for the Maintenance of his Legatine Authority.

Popiſh Biſhops in England

The Lay-Officers had all Commiſſions ſent them ready ſeal'd by Johannes Paulus de Oliva, Father-General of the Jeſuit's Society reſiding at Rome, who was to give Directions to the Provincial of the Jeſuits at London, how to proceed in this Affair. Pedro de Jeronimo de Corduba, Provincial of the Jeſuits in Spain, was to aſſiſt with Counſel and Money, and miſrepreſent the Actions of his Britannick Majeſty to the Spaniſh Court; which likewiſe was to be done by a Jeſuit, Confeſſor to the Emperor, in relation to England and that Court. The Correſpondence for France was carry'd on between Coleman and Father Terriers firſt, and afterwards Father La Chaiſe, Confeſſor to the French King. And that the Duke of York approv'd of, and even authoris'd that Correſpondence for deſtroying our Religion and Liberties, appears by his own Letter to La Chaiſe, beginning thus. The 2d of June laſt paſt, 1674, his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty offer'd me moſt generouſly his Friendſhip, and the uſe of his Purſe, againſt the Deſigns of my Enemies and his, and proteſted to me that his Intereſt and mine were ſo cloſely link'd together, that thoſe that oppos'd the one ſhou'd be look'd upon as Enemies to the other; and told me, it was his Opinion that that Parliament was neither in his Intereſt nor mine, &c. He referr'd himſelf for further Explanations to Sir William Throgmorton, who was ſent to France on purpoſe, and to Coleman.

Popiſh Lords and Gentlemen in the Plot.

The Duke of York in it.

The Conſpirators having their ſeveral Parts allotted them, Grove and Pickering were to ſhoot the King; Coniers and Anderton, two Monks, and four Iriſh Ruffians, to ſtab him; Sir George Wakeman, Grove and Pickering to ſhoot the King.

A.D. 1678 Wakeman, the Queen's Phyſician, to poiſon him; for it does not appear that the general Riſing was to be till after they had made away with the King, who, tho' a Papiſt, and their own, yet he had too little Religion to hazard his Crown, or even his Pleaſures, by haſtening on their Work, as they wou'd have had him. 5000 Pounds were enter'd in their Books as paid to Wakeman in part of 15,000 Pounds which he was to have for poiſoning the King. They were to make uſe of the Duke's Name and Intereſt, if he wou'd comply with theſe Conditions. " 1. To accept of the " three Kingdoms as a Gift from the Pope, and " hold them in Fee of him, and confirm their " Settlement of the Church and State. Next, " if he wou'd exterminate all Proteſtants, if he " wou'd pardon the Murderers of his Brother, the " Murderers of his People, and thoſe who ſhou'd " fire the remaining Part of the City and Suburbs. " 2. For that was the ſecond Particular of their " Work, to fire London and Weſtminſter, and the " adjacent Places, as alſo other the chief Cities " and Towns of England immediately on the " Killing of his Majeſty, and then lay the whole " Load both of the Murder and Firing on the " Presbyterians and Fanaticks, thereby provoking " the Epiſcopal Men to join with them and cut " them off, that ſo Proteſtants being weaken'd " by their own Feuds, they might have the bet- " ter Opportunity and eaſier Task to ſubdue them " all. 3. By a general Maſſacre; to which Pur- " poſe they are ſaid to have form'd an Army, " conſiſting of 50,000 Men, to be rais'd about " London, the Officers all reſolute Papiſts, and " for the moſt part French and Iriſh. Theſe " they gave out were enough to cut the Throats " of 100,000 Proteſtants, eſpecially being taken " upon a Surprize, when the Militia of London " were unprovided and undiſciplin'd, and the " Country generally diſarm'd. The Conſpirators " were beſides to have 10,000 French Soldiers " from Flanders, and 30,000 Pilgrims and Lay- " Brothers from Spain, to aſſiſt them. 4. In Ire- " land the Pope had made Talbot, the Titular " Archbiſhop of Dublin, his Legate, to take " Poſſeſſion for him of that Kingdom, whoſe " Brother was to be General of all the Forces " there, conſiſting of 70,000 Papiſts, beſides the " French Auxiliaries. There it was to be carry'd " on by a general Rebellion and Maſſacre of the " Proteſtants, as in 1641, which they call'd De- " monſtrating of their Zeal for the Catholick Faith. " Four Jeſuits undertook to aſſaſſinate the Duke " of Ormond, and the better to carry on the whole, " the Pope was to contribute 800,000 Crowns; " and the French had privately ſent over ſome " Supplies of Men and Arms, and were to fur- " niſh them with more as ſoon as they ſhou'd be " in Action, La Chaiſe having a great Influence " in promoting all theſe Tranſactions. Such, ſays Echard, was the Sum and Subſtance of this formidable Plot, of which all theſe, with many other Particulars, were formally and ſolemnly given in upon Oath, not at once, or all together, but at ſeveral Times, and by ſeveral Parcels, who ſeem'd to ſtart up exactly as the Stories met with Credit and Encouragement, and by their Oaths and Narratives for a while bore down all Oppoſition. Now comes the wiſe Reflections of this Wiſe One, ſpoken with an Air, as if it had been his own, and not borrow'd from L'Eſtrange, or the ſcandalous Writer of the Compendium. And yet after all the ſtricteſt and cooleſt Examinations, and after a full Length of Time, the Government could find very little Foundation to ſupport ſo vaſt a Fabrick, beſides downright Swearing and Aſſurance. Now he imitates their wretched Railery,

Wakeman to poiſon him.

and hooks in the Gunpowder Plot, to take its Share of his vile Mirth; not a Gun, not a Sword, not a Dagger, not a Flaſh of Powder, or a Dark-Lanthorn, to effect the ſtrange Villainy, and, exceping Coleman's Writing, not one Snip of an original Letter or Commiſſion. A.D. 1678

The King, who knew what a good Friend he had been to Popery, was not eaſily brought to take any Notice of this Popiſh Plot. Biſhop Burnet tells us, Dr. Tongue came to him the 26th of September, and told him of ſtrange Deſigns againſt the King's Perſon; which he acquainted Dr. Lloyd, afterwards Biſhop Lloyd with. The latter going to the Secretary's Office, found Tongue had been there making Diſcoveries; and on the 27th of September, Titus Oates was brought before the Council, having firſt ſworn to his Narrative of the Plot before Sir Edmundbury Godfrey. Kirby, a Chymiſt in the King's Laboratory, had been long acquainted with Tongue, as Tongue had been with Oates, and by Kirby's Means Tongue had Audience of the King himſelf, to whom he repeated moſt of the Paſſages above-mention'd. His Majeſty ſaid, he knew not what to make of it. However, he referr'd him to the Earl of Danby, who, according to my Lord of Sarum, handled the Matter too remiſsly. And the King himſelf, when all the Town was in a terrible Alarm at the Rumour of a Popiſh Plot, heeded it ſo little, that he went to the Horſe-Races at Newmarket. Oates deliver'd his Narrative to the Council, moſt of whom believ'd his Evidence ſo far, as to iſſue Warrants for apprehending ſeveral Plotters nam'd by him, as Sir George Wakeman, the Queen's Phyſician; Mr. Edward Coleman, Secretary to the Duke of York; Mr Langhorn, of the Inner-Temple; Thomas Whitebread, Provincial of the Jeſuits in England; John Gaven, William Ireland, Anthony Turner, William Marſhall, William Rumſey, James Corker, Thomas Pickering. I know not upon what Humour it was, that Biſhop Burnet makes Slight of this Plot; but I can never think he had any Reaſon for it, by Oates's calling Father La Chaiſe Father le Shee, in his Teſtimony concerning Coleman's treaſonable Correſpondence with the French King's Confeſſor, the Miſtake being very eaſy. Oates was a paſſionate, raſh, half-witted Fellow, and his want of Judgment might run him a little too far into Particulars: But that there was a treaſonable Plot in general, &c. that the Perſons he accus'd were particularly engag'd in it, there is no Room to queſtion. Oates, at the Opening of the Plot, referr'd himſelf to Coleman's Letters, which ſufficiently prov'd that he knew there were ſuch Letters, and Treaſon in them. The Court cou'd not help enquiring into this, but proceeded ſo ſlowly in it, that Coleman had Time enough to convey away all his Papers relating to the laſt two Years, when the Conſpiracy was branching and ripening. But his Servant Boatman being examin'd, depos'd, That he ſaw Coleman's Book of Entries for the two laſt Years but two Days before he was made Priſoner, and that he had uſually Letters every Poſt from beyond Sea. However, the Letters that were found, the Contents of which are in the preceding Pages, are ſufficient to prove him a Traitor, and to confirm one in an entire Belief of the Plot; and my Lord of Sarum obſerves, they gain'd Univerſal Credit. At the ſame Time a Packet of dangerous Letters were directed to Father Bedingfield, the Duke's Confeſſor at Windſor, which fully corroborated the traiterous Deſigns diſcover'd by Oates; but they were ſuſpected not to have been genuine by Bedingfield's ſhewing them himſelf, and declaring he knew not what they meant, nor whom they came from.

Oates comes in for an Evidence.

A.D.1678 Titus Oates going to Sir Edmundbury Godfrey to make Oath to his Narrative before he gave it to the Council, was a Diffidence of them, that they wou'd not proſecute it, and Sir Edmund was chid for meddling in the Matter, which ſo irritated the Papiſts and Conſpirators, that they reſolv'd to deſtroy him. Biſhop Burnet ſays, 'Tis certain Godfrey grew apprehenſive; for meeting me in the Street after ſome Diſcourſe of the preſent State of Affairs, he ſaid, I believe my ſelf ſhall be knock'd on the Head: Yet he took no Care of himſelf, and went about according to his own Maxim ſtill without a Servant; for he us'd to ſay, the Servants in London are corrupted by the Idleneſs and ill Company they fall into while they attend on their Maſters. Saturday the 12th of October, Sir Edmundbury Godfrey went abroad in the Morning, and was ſeen about One o'Clock near St. Clement's Church in the Strand, but was never ſeen any more. The execrable L'Eſtrange has endeavour'd to render the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey a Self-Murder, and collected ſome Lies injurious to that Gentleman's Character. One cou'd not expect better from a mercenary Scribler. But it is not excuſable in the Archdeacon to tell us, that Sir Edmund was a Favourer of the Papiſts; whereas Biſhop Burnet aſſures us, He was a zealous Proteſtant, and had kind Thoughts of the Diſſenters. He was a punctual Man in all his Ways, and therefore it was the more taken Notice of when he was miſſing. The Council ſate upon it, and were going to order a Search of all the Houſes about Town, but were diverted from it by many Stories that were brought them by the Duke of Norfolk. Sometimes it was ſaid he was indecently marry'd, and the Scene of the Places where it was reported to be, was often ſhifted, and the laſt Place he was ſeen at, being near Arundel-Houſe, it brought the Duke under Suſpicion; At length, on Thurſday the 17th of October 'twas given out that his Body was found in a Ditch near Pancras Church, with his Sword thruſt through it; but no Blood was on his Cloaths, or about him. His Shoes were clean, his Money was in his Pocket, but nothing was about his Neck, and a Mark an Inch broad was all round it, which ſhew'd he was ſtrangled. His Breaſt alſo was mark'd all over with Bruiſes, and his Neck broken. A Melancholy Man, as Echard calls him, cou'd not do all this to himſelf. Dr. Lloyd, Dr. Burnet, late Biſhops of Salisbury and Worceſter, ſaw the Body, and what follows of their Evidence gives one more than Suſpicion that Prieſts were concern'd in the Murder. There were many Drops of White Wax Lights on his Breeches, which he never us'd in his Houſe; and ſince only Perſons of Quality or Prieſts uſe thoſe Lights, this made all People conclude in whoſe Hands he muſt have been. 'Twas viſible he was firſt ſtrangled, then carry'd to that Place. The King was eaſily made believe that he was Hypocondriacal, and had ſtab'd himſelf; upon which Dr. Lloyd went and told him what he had ſeen. Nothing in the World cou'd have happen'd to give ſo much Credit to the Popiſh Plot as this horrid Murder of a worthy Magiſtrate, juſt as it was diſcover'd. Coke gives a pretty good Account of Sir Edmundbury's Aſſaſſination.

Sir Edmundbury Godfrey murder'd by Papiſts.

Duke of Norfolk ſuſpected.

The Body found.

Some Time before it Le Faire, Pritchard, and two or three Prieſts more, treated with one Bedloe to be aſſiſting in the taking him off. Bedloe promis'd to do it for a Sum of Money; but relenting, afterwards fail'd them, and came not at the Time appointed. Two Days after, October the 4th, he met Le Faire in Red-Lion-Court, and he charg'd him with being worſe than his Word. Bedloe made ſome Excuſes, and Le Faire ſeem'd to be ſatisfy'd, Bedloe promiſing to meet Le Faire at Somerſet-Houſe at 9 o'Clock that Night, where the Prieſt told him Sir Edmund was kill'd, and if he wou'd help carry him off, he ſhou'd ſtill have a good Part of the Sum agreed upon. Bedloe demanded to ſee the Body, which he did, and then they conſulted how to diſpoſe of it. Bedloe adviſ'd the ſinking it in the River with Weights; and while they were talking about it Prance comes in. He was a Silver-Smith, who work'd for the Prieſts in Somerſet-Houſe, and aſſiſted at the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey. His Neighbours obſerving he had abſented himſelf from his Houſe about the Time of the Aſſaſſination, repreſented it to ſome Members of Parliament as Matter of Suſpicion, upon which he was order'd to be ſeiz'd, and brought before the Houſe of Commons, who order'd Sir Richard Everard and Sir Charles Harbord to examine him. A.D.1678

In the mean while Bedloe goes to Briſtol, in order to ſhip himſelf for Ireland; but whether he was really troubled in Conſcience for concealing the Murder, or was ſet upon it in Hopes of a Reward for the Diſcovery, he ſurrender'd himſelf as an Evidence to the Mayor of Briſtol, John Lloyd, Eſq; who ſent him to London, where he was carry'd before a Committee of the Houſe of Lords to be examin'd. He there found Prance in the Lobby, whom he had never ſeen before, but at Somerſet-Houſe, and that by Candle-Light, and in a Wig, yet he knew him at Sight, and diſcover'd him, and upon Search the Wig was found about him; ſo Prance made a full Diſcovery of the Murder: And as Prance and Bedloe did not act in Concert, or indeed know one another, the Evidence is as clear as plain Truth can make it, tho' L'Eſtrange and Echard have very impotently endeavour'd to diſguiſe it with Grimace and Ridicule. The Murderers were Le Faire, Pritchard, Kelly and Fitzgerald, Popiſh Prieſts, Berry the Porter at Somerſet-Houſe, Green, Cuſhion-Man to the Queen's Chappel, Lawrence Hill, Servant to Dr. Godden, Treaſurer of the Chappel, Father Lewſon, Vernattis, &c. Notwithſtanding that, by the Evidence of two Biſhops it is prov'd, that Sir Edmundbury Godfrey was ſtrangled, and that Bedloe's Evidence is the ſtrongeſt Confirmation of Prance's, how awkard and ſhocking is the Archdeacon's poor Pretences to Wit, which is however borrow'd from other Pretenders! It was found exceeding uſeful to tack the Murder to the Plot, and make one a Part, or rather a Support of the other. They pitch'd upon Somerſet-Houſe, and adher'd at laſt to that as a Popiſh Palace, tho' two Miles from that where the Body was found. Suppoſe it had been ten Miles, when they had got the Body out of Town, they might drop it where they pleas'd, and think it ſafer two Miles off than two Quarters of a Mile. His whole Repreſentation is one continu'd Falſhood, larded with dull Jeſts not his own, for they wou'd then have been duller ſtill. I do not ſee the leaſt Reaſon in the World to doubt his being murder'd, and by Prieſts, or Perſons who trade in Wax-Lights; or that the Murderers were not the ſame whom Bedloe and Prance charg'd with it.

In the midſt of this Affright and Indignation the Parliament met the 21ſt of October. The King was hard put to it to tell what he had to ſay. He believ'd not a Word of the Plot, and the Generality of both Houſes believ'd every Word of it. He own'd he had been inform'd of a Deſign againſt his Perſon by Jeſuits, of which he ſhou'd forbear any Opinion, leſt he might ſeem to ſay too much or too little. But it was hazarding too much to tell them, as he did after, the French had impos'd ſuch a ſcandalous Peace

A.D.1678 on the Confederates with his Conniavnce, for which he had Money from France: That the Part he had in the Preſervation of his Neighbours, and the well ſecuring Flanders, was ſufficiently known. The Lord Chancellor made another long Speech, and mention'd the Plot, but not in the Stile of the Houſe of Commons, as we ſhall ſee preſently. Mr. Archdeacon, as well as the common Writers, informs us, that the King wou'd not have had the Plot brought into Parliament, but the Lord Danby wou'd do it, and no doubt it was to ingratiate himſelf with the People, who had a kind of Abhorrence for him, that he laid Oates's Informations before the Houſe of Peers the firſt Day of their Meeting. The King told him, Tho' you do not believe it, you ſhall find you have given the Parliament a Handle to ruin your ſelf, as well as to diſturb all my Affairs, and that you will live to repent it. The Politicks of which are to me incomprehenſible. He gave them no Handle to ruin him by laying the Popiſh Plot before them; the Handle was his chaffering with France for Money, to engage the King to abandon the Confederates. He might indeed repent afterwards of what he had done to make the Papiſts his Enemies, when he found that he cou'd not make the Proteſtants his Friends. Echard takes a great deal of Pains to prove that the King did not believe the Plot. I am apt to believe he durſt not believe it, and that the Papiſts knew too much of him for him to quarrel with them. But I have better Authority to be confirm'd in the Belief of it, than the King had to be confirm'd in the Disbelief, upon a Tavern Conteſt between Oates and Tongue about the Merit of the Diſcovery. My Authority is that of Archbiſhop Tillotſon, who had it from Langhorn's Wife, as zealous a Proteſtant as her Husband was a Papiſt, that before Oates had ſpoken a Word of Commiſſions, or had accus'd her Husband, ſhe engag'd her Son, a hot, indiſcreet Papiſt in Diſcourſe, on the Deſigns of the Catholicks; he ſaid, they were ſo well laid, it was impoſſible they cou'd miſcarry, and that his Father wou'd be one of the greateſt Men in England, for he had ſeen a Commiſſion from the Pope conſtituting him Advocate General: The very Commiſſion mention'd for Langhorn in Oates's Narrative. However, there are ſtill two other Evidences in Biſhop Burnet's Memoirs, two Snips of Paper, though the Archdeacon proteſts there was not one to corroborate Oates's Teſtimony. "Amongſt the Papers of the Jeſuits that were "ſeiz'd on when they were clapp'd up, two "Letters were found, which ſeem'd to confirm "all; one from Rome, which mention'd the "ſending over the Patents, of which 'twas ſaid "in the Letter, that they gueſs'd the Contents, "tho' their Patrons there carry'd their Matters "ſo ſecretly, that nothing was known but as "they thought fit. Another Letter was writ-"ten to a Jeſuit in the Country, citing him "to come to London by the 24th of April, "which was the Day on which Oates ſwore "they held their Conſult, and that fifty of "them had ſign'd the Reſolution of killing "the King, which was to be executed by "Grove and Pickering. In the End of that "Letter it was added, I need not enjoin Secrecy, "for the Nature of the Thing requires it.

Staley ſeiz'd.

Before any of the Conſpirators for the Plot came to Trial, one Staley, a Goldſmith in Covent-Garden, was taken on an Information given againſt him by Cartairs a Scots-man, who came to London to accuſe Duke Lauderdale of Maleadminiſtration in Scotland. Staley being at a Publick-Houſe in his Neighbourhood, and Cartairs in another Room of the ſame Houſe, he made Oath that he heard Staley ſay in French, The King is a Rogue, and perſecutes the People of God, and he himſelf would ſtab him if no body elſe would: Which Information happening about the Time of Bedloe's coming in with his Evidence, continu'd the Ferment the Nation was in againſt the Papiſts. Tongue, Oates and Bedloe were lodg'd and liberally maintain'd at the publick Charge, and Guards order'd to attend them for the Security of their Perſons. Both Houſes petition'd the King for a Day of General Faſt and Humiliation, to implore the Mercy and Protection of Almighty God to his Majeſty's Royal Perſon, and in him to all his Loyal Subjects; and it was appointed by Proclamation, and celebrated the 13th of November. The next Addreſs was for ordering all Papiſts to depart the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and Parts adjacent; another to forbid ſuſpicious Perſons the Court, and to ſet Guards of the Train'd-Bands in London, Weſtminſter and Southwark.

His Treaſon.

On the 24th of October Oates's Examination was taken in the Houſe of Peers by the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, who there ſeal'd twenty ſix Warrants againſt ſeveral Lords and others mention'd in that Examination. Upon which the Lord Powis, the Lord Stafford, the Lord Arundel of Wardour, the Lord Petre, the Lord Bellaſis, and Sir Henry Tichburne were taken into Cuſtody, and ſhortly after committed to the Tower, as were ſeveral others to Newgate; but the 31ſt of October the Houſe of Commons

That there is, and hath been a Damnable and Helliſh PLOT contriv'd and carry'd on by Popiſh Recuſants, for Aſſaſſinating and Murdering the King, for ſubverting the Government, and Rooting out and Deſtroying the Proteſtant Religion.

Votes.

To which Vote the Lords readily agreed, Nemine contradicente; but Echard, wiſer than the Lords and Commons of England, cou'd, after his moſt ſerious Conſideration, ſee no Foundation for it. The Lords deſir'd the Commons to ſit de Die in Diem, Forenoon and Afternoon, as their Lordſhips had reſolv'd to do, to conſider what is neceſſary for preventing imminent Dangers: And on the ſame Day the People were ſtrangely affected with the Sight of the Funeral of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey. The Solemnity procceded from Bridewel to St. Martin's in the Fields. Seventy two London Divines went in Proceſſion before the Corpſe, and above a Thouſand Perſons of Quality and principal Citizens follow'd after it. Dr. Lloyd, afterwards Biſhop of Worceſter, preach'd the Funeral Sermon. It went very much againſt the Grain; but the general Diſpoſition of the People oblig'd the King to iſſue out a Proclamation againſt the Papiſts, wherein he ſays, The Lords and Commons having taken into their ſerious Conſideration the bloody and traiterous Deſigns of Popiſh Recuſants againſt his Majeſty's Sacred Perſon and Government, therefore he commanded them to depart, &c.

Walter Herbert, Eſq; Secretary to Prince Rupert, a Member of the Houſe of Commons, mov'd in this, or the laſt Seſſion of Parliament, for an Act to repeal the Statute de Heretico comburendo. The Houſe immediately order'd ſuch a Bill to be brought in, and wonder'd that it had not been done before. It paſs'd

Nemine

A.D.1678 Nemine contradicente, and Herbert had the Thanks of the Houſe: But it met with Oppoſition from the Biſhops in the Houſe of Lords, not one of them voting for it, except the very learned and reverend Dr. Barlow, Biſhop of Lincoln.

The Lord Shaftsbury having upon his Submiſſion got out of the Tower, was very active in the Proſecution of the Plot, ſo were the Dukes of Monmouth and Buckingham, the Lord Halliſax, the Earl of Eſſex, and the leading Members of both Houſes. Many hard Things were ſaid againſt the Duke of York. The Danger of his Succeſſion was in every one's Mouth; but the Thought of Excluſion was not yet mature: The Commons debated an Addreſs to ſend him away from Court; but it was not determin'd.

While Examinations were going on, and Preparations were making for the Trial of the Priſoners, a Bill was brought into the Houſe of Commons, requiring all Members of either Houſe, and all ſuch as might come into the King's Court or Preſence, to take a Teſt againſt Popery; in which not only Tranſubſtantiation was renounc'd, but the Worſhip of the Virgin Mary and the Saints, as it was practis'd in the Church of Rome, was declar'd to be Idolatrous. This paſs'd in the Houſe of Commons without any Difficulty. But we are come now to a new Diſcovery, which is, that the perſecuting Prelates, who pretended to be ſuch good Churchmen, were really Romaniſts; for Gunning, Biſhop of Ely, maintain'd, That the Church of Rome was not Idolatrous. Dr. Barlow, the very learned and reverend Biſhop of Lincoln, anſwer'd him; and it has been the great Happineſs of the Church of England, that ſhe has never wanted learned and pious Biſhops to aſſert the Reformation, when the Bancrofts, the Lauds, the Sheldons, the Morleys, the Wards, the Gunnings, the Mews, the Kens wou'd have run her back to Popery. This is the Gunning who pretended to diſpute with Mr. Baxter; but inſtead of Reaſon and Argument, made uſe of Inſolence and Paſſion. Biſhop Burnet ſays the Lords did not much mind him; and Echard aſſures us, that the Charge againſt him of favouring Popery was falſe and malicious. My Lord of Sarum adds, Gunning declar'd he cou'd not take the Teſt with a good Conſcience; yet as ſoon as the Bill paſs'd he took it in the Crowd. Echard aſſures us he was a Man of exemplary Piety, and diffuſive Charity, and a great deal more in the ſame Strain, which is as much his own Picture as Gunning's. The Duke got a Proviſo to be put in the Bill for excepting himſelf: He ſpoke upon that Occaſion with great Earneſtneſs and Tears in his Eyes, ſaying, I am now to caſt my ſelf on your Favour in the greateſt Concern I can have in this World, and I ſolemnly proteſt, that whatever my Religion may be, it ſhall only be a private Thing between God and my own Soul, and that no Effect of it ſhou'd ever appear in the Government. This too is a Prince of his Word; and to make it good as ſoon as 'twas in his Power, he made Popiſh Privy-Counſellors, Generals and Admirals, Judges, Heads and Fellows of Colleges, and put the Government into the Hands of Papiſts. He ſpoke much of his Duty to the King, and of his Zeal for the Nation, which he ſhew'd ſufficiently in his Secret League with France. The Proviſo was carry'd for him by a few Voices only. This Bill being ſent back to the Houſe of Commons with Alterations, they paſs'd them, but not without great Difficulty; for Sir Jonathan Trelawny and Mr. Aſh being violently heated in the Debate, opprobrious Words paſs'd between them, which provok'd the Knight ſo much, that he gave Mr. Aſh a Box on the Ear, which Aſh return'd with a Slap over the Face, and both put their Hands to their Swords. Upon which the Houſe ſent Trelawny to the Tower, and the Speaker, by their Order, reprimanded Aſh. There was another Proviſo to except nine Ladies about the Queen; and ſhe ſaid ſhe wou'd have all the Ladies of that Religion caſt Lots who ſhou'd be comprehended: Only ſhe nam'd the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth as one whom ſhe wou'd not expoſe to the Uncertainty of a Lot, which was not thought very decent in her. A.D.1678

Biſhop Gunning for Popery.

On the 9th of November the King came to Parliament, and made a Speech to both Houſes, wherein he aſſur'd them he wou'd concur in any Bills for the Security of the Proteſtant Religion, which did not alter the Succeſſion; for which the Houſe of Commons thank'd him, and he thank'd them for their Thanks.

After this Echard tells us, the Credit of the Plot began to ſink, and then he brings Bedloe on the Stage, himſelf ſpeaking a Prologue for him to open his Character, A Fellow who went by a falſe Name, a Son of a Whore, a poor Foot-Boy (one of Lord Bellaſis's Livery-Men) a Jail-Bird for his Villainy, a Letter-Carrier, skilful in all the Arts of Cheating, to get Watches, Coats, Horſes, to bilk Vintners, a Liar, a Romancer, a wild Arab, who liv'd upon Prey, a notorious Impoſtor; in Sum, an admirable Second to help out Oates. The Stupidity of this Writer is equal to his Aſſurance: He cou'd not ſee that L'Eſtrange and the Papiſts had ſcrap'd together as much Scandal as their lewd Inventions cou'd produce, to beſpatter the King's Evidences, and turn their Plot into a Sham, ſo he carefully diſperſes the Filth they had heap'd up, and drudges in the ſame Dunghil his Predeceſſor Roger L'Eſtrange had labour'd in before. Did theſe Men ever hear of Perſons of Honour and Wiſdom, who engag'd in Conſpiracies to cut Throats, and deſtroy Religion and Goverment? How can you come at Villainy but by Villains? and in the moſt wicked Conſpiracies there are Degrees of Guilt in the Conſpirators. Oates and Bedloe might be at firſt taken in, by accompanying themſelves with the other Conſpirators, and the Hopes of ſharing their Fortunes; but being wicked Perſons, and having not ſo much Zeal for Popery as the reſt had upon finding themſelves neglected, the Hopes of Reward and Revenge did very naturally lead them to make the moſt of what they knew; and as they cou'd not counterfeit Coleman's Letters, nor the Jeſuits Letters before-mention'd, nor Mrs. Langhorn's Information, and all thoſe Letters agreeing with their Evidence, beſides a hundred other corroborating Circumſtances in their ſeveral Trials, there is enough to ſatisfy any reaſonable Man, that there was a Popiſh Plot, and that thoſe Men who ſuffer'd for it, were engag'd in it ſo far as to deſerve the Puniſhment they met with. Nothing is more fooliſh than the Objection theſe Libellers make to Oates's and Bedloe's Evidence, on account of their adding to it from Time to Time, as if in a hundred Conſultations. In a hundred ſeveral Places many Paſſages might be forgotten, which they might upon Recollection recover, eſpecially when the Memory is awaken'd by pertinent Interrogatories: But in ſhort, it was the King's Intereſt, and the Intereſt of all Papiſts and their Abettors, to have this Plot disbeliev'd; for if full Credit was given to it, and it had been fully trac'd to Echard's Character of Bedloe.

A.D.1678 it's Original, the Aſſaſſination Part had probably been faſten'd on Particulars; but the general Deſign to alter our Religion and Government by the Aſſiſtance of the French King, wou'd, it is to be fear'd, have been found out very near the Throne, which confirm'd the Saying of a witty Courtier, That the King knew more of the Plot than any of his Evidences.

The King knew of it.

Upon Bedloe's Examination before the Houſe of Lords, Warrants were iſſu'd for apprehending Coniers, a Benedictine Monk, Le Faire, Simmonds, Walſh, Pritchard, and others, as Perſons guilty of the DAMNABLE and HELLISH PLOT, the Terms made uſe of ſeriouſly by the Parliament, but by Echard with a Fleer, as if any thing cou'd be more Helliſh and Damnable than Application to the French King for Money to enable the Conſpirators to ſubvert the Conſtitution, and deſtroy our Religion and Liberties; which, if the Duke of York's Letter to La Chaiſe does not fully prove, Coleman's Letter to that Jeſuit does. Bedloe was exact in that Part of the Evidence relating to an Army from Spain under the Notion of Pilgrims, and the Parliament addreſs'd the King to recall Sir William Godolphin, his Ambaſſador at Madrid, who was accus'd of High-Treaſon, and that a Commiſſion might be iſſu'd to render the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy to all the King's and the Duke's Servants, and all Perſons of the Inns of Court. The Houſe of Commons had addreſs'd his Majeſty for baniſhing Papiſts ten Miles from London; but the Proclamation coming out without any ſuch Reſtriction, they preſented another Addreſs, wherein they ſay, That ſo great a Neglect would be a great Diſcouragement to this Kingdom, and Papiſts would from thence take Occaſion to ſay, That all our Fears were groundleſs. It is too great a Countenance to the dangerous Factions, which are already come to that Height, that it renders all Manner of Diſcouragement on that Side neceſſary: It is againſt the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, which, as they are preſerv'd and maintain'd by your Majeſty's Authority, ſo we aſſure our ſelves, you will not ſuffer them to be thus violated by your Family and Royal Preſence, upon the account of Popiſh Recuſants. A few Days after, November the 18th, the Houſe was inform'd, that there were ſeveral Commiſſions granted to Papiſts, and Warrants that they ſhou'd be muſter'd, notwithſtanding they had not taken the Oaths, and ſubſcrib'd the Declaration, as the Statute enjoins. Here's diſpenſing Power and Popery with a Witneſs! Theſe Commiſſions were counterſign'd by Sir Joſeph Williamſon, Secretary of State, whom, as a Member of their Houſe, they ſent to the Tower. But the King ſent for them to the Banquetting-Houſe, where he told them, Tho' you have committed my Servant without acquainting me, yet I intend to deal more freely with you, and acquaint you with my Intentions to releaſe my Secretary; which he did ſo haſtily, that he was releas'd before the Commons cou'd get an Addreſs againſt it drawn up and preſented, and then the Anſwer was, It came too late.

Commons Addreſs againſt Papiſts.

Diſpenſing Power and Popery.

Sir Joſeph Williamſon ſent to the Tower.

On the 25th of November the King made another Speech to the Parliament, to deſire a ſecond Supply for Disbanding the Army, he having, as he ſaid, ſpent the firſt in keeping it up for the Honour and Intereſt of the Nation, which had not been enough conſider'd in this Reign to be a Topick to beg Money upon. The Parliament immediately addreſs'd his Majeſty to recall his Troops from Flanders, and to disband all Forces rais'd ſince Michaelmas, 1677. A.D.1678

The Nation was now ſo much alarm'd, that all People furniſh'd themſelves with Arms, which heightned the Jealouſy of the Court. A Bill paſs'd in both Houſes, for raiſing all the Militia, and for keeping it together for ſix Weeks, a third Part being to ſerve a Fortnight, and ſo round. This Bill the King totally rejected, alledging, that it was to put the Militia out of his Power, which thing he wou'd not do, no not for an Hour; but if the Commons wou'd aſſiſt him with Money for that, he wou'd take Care to raiſe ſuch a Part of the Militia as ſhould ſecure the Peace of the Government, and his own Perſon. If Echard cou'd have found out a worſe Libeller than L'Eſtrange to diſcredit this Plot, he wou'd have made uſe of him, as he does of the Jeſuit Orleans, after whom he tells us, much Injuſtice was committed in the Proſecution of it. He then comes to the Trial of William Staley the Goldſmith, before ſpoken of, who was try'd before the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, the 21ſt of November; and Echard's own Account of it proves, that that Traitor had much Juſtice done him. The Witneſſes, William Carſtairs and Alexander Sutherland, poſitively ſwore the Words as ſpoken in this Manner. Staley was at an Eating-Houſe in Convent-Garden, with one Fromante a French-man, who ſaid in French, The King of England is a great Tormenter of the People of God. A Diſcourſe very natural, when ſo many good Catholicks were in Jail for Treaſon, Murder, &c. Staley anſwer'd, The King of England, furiouſly repeating the Words, is a grand Heretick, and the greateſt Rogue in the World; here's the Heart, ſtriking his Hand upon his Breaſt, and here's the Hand that will kill him myſelf. There was a third Witneſs, who ſwore he heard Staley ſpeak ſomething with great Earneſtneſs, and Captain Carſtairs told him at the Inſtant, that in Engliſh it was, He would kill the King. As ſlight as L'Eſtrange, Echard, and other Writers make of this Crime of Staley's, 'tis with me of the laſt Importance, for we ſhall find by the Blunders in Staley's Defence, that a King and Killing was talk'd of, and if ſo there, in a Cook's Shop, it was doubtleſs much more deliberated, and concerted in their Cabals, and dark Meetings. Staley own'd he was then there with Fromante, but deny'd he ſpoke the Words, affirming, they only ſpoke of the French King, and the Words ſworn by the Witneſſes in French, muſt ſignify, I will kill myſelf, rather than I will kill him myſelf. But to this the Court obſerv'd, "Firſt, that "the Witneſſes ſwore directly that it was the "King of England he ſpoke of, and nam'd "him twice, nor did he count the French King "a Heretick; and as to the Second, they ob- "ſerv'd that after he had given the King ſuch "ſcurrilous Names, it could not be Senſe to "ſay, He would kill himſelf." The Priſoner having little more to ſay, the Jury found him Guilty, without going from the Bar, and he was condemn'd to be hang'd, drawn and quarter'd. Dr. Lloyd viſited him after his Condemnation, and he was offer'd a Pardon, if he wou'd make Diſcoveries, which probably he cou'd not do in Particulars, and as for Generals, there was more than enough already diſcover'd. I wonder Biſhop Burnet took ſo much Pains as he ſaid he did, to ſave Staley, for if the two Scots-men were profligate Fellows, 'twas not likely the Engliſh-man would be drawn in by them to forſwear himſelf, and Staley confeſſing that King was ſpoken of, and Killing alſo, is ſuch a

A general Alarm.

He is condemn'd

A.D.1678 and executed. Corroboration of their Evidence, that there's no room left to doubt it. Staley was executed at Tyburn the 26th of November; he carry'd himſelf ſeriouſly and diſcreetly. His Majeſty gave his Quarters to his Friends, who bury'd them in Convent-Garden Church, after having caus'd Maſſes to be ſaid, and other Popiſh Ceremonies to be perform'd over the Quarters, which a great Number of Papiſts attended at the Funeral, and Information of it being given to the State, the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex, Sir Richard How and Sir John Chapman, were order'd to cauſe them to be taken up, and put on the City Gates.

Coleman try'd. The next Trial was that of Coleman, who was brought to the King's-Bench Bar the 27th of November. The Charge againſt him was, for conſpiring the Death of the King, and endeavouring to ſubvert the Government of England, and the Proteſtant Religion. To blacken the Proſecution, Echard opens the Evidence with Reflections on Dr. Oates and Capt. Bedloe, who both ſwore, that they had carry'd treaſonable Letters from Coleman to La Chaiſe. Such Letters were found upon the Priſoner, and given in Evidence alſo; they are mention'd in the preceding Pages. The Contents were to give the greateſt Blow to the Proteſtant Religion it ever had receiv'd, that they had a mighty Work, the Converſion of three Kingdoms upon their Hands, and the utter ſubduing a Peſtilent Hereſy; that the Oppoſition they ſhall meet with, requires them to get all Aid and Aſſiſtance. I think we need go no farther, tho' Echard, as weakly, and as wrongfully as one might expect from ſuch a Champion, for ſuch a Cauſe, endeavours to extenuate Coleman's Guilt, by ſaying, there was no mention in the Letters of making uſe of any Foreign Power beſides Money, the very Sinews of War, and that in one Letter, he demanded of the French King but 300,000 Pounds; he acknowledges he made other Demands in other Letters. Suppoſing that the Evidence of his Conſpiring the Death of the King, was not ſo clear as was pretended, that which was prov'd upon him, his Endeavour to deſtroy the Government and Religion of his Country, had as much Proof as a Man's own Inditing and Writing a Thing can give it. Echard hangs ſtill upon Oates and Bedloe's Raſhneſs in their Swearing, and after Coleman has own'd his Letters, would bring him off, by paſſing the Expreſſions in them, as extravagant only; but it was an Extravagance that would have brought Popery and Slavery upon us; and according to Dr. Welwood, Coleman's Letters alone, without any other concurring Evidence, are more than ſufficient to put the Matter out of Doubt, and the Jury, Men of ſo good a Character, that Coleman did not pretend to except againſt one of the whole Pannel, was ſo well ſatisfy'd with the Teſtimony that was given, that they brought him in Guilty, after a ſhort Deliberation. Echard catches the laſt Sayings of the Popiſh Traitors, as ſo many Reflections on the Juſtice of the Nation, in proſecuting this Plot, tho' he cou'd not but have heard that the Popiſh Prieſts have a Power to abſolve their Penitents from the Guilt of all Falſhood, and even Perjury, which is for the Good of their Church, and I wiſh no other Prieſts may not carry the Doctrine of Abſolution too far. Three of them, Cook, Snat and Collier, did ſo in King William's Reign, and abſolv'd an Aſſaſſin at the Gallows, who was in a Plot to murder that Prince. Echard tells us, that one of the laſt Things Coleman ſaid to the Lord Chief Juſtice, who ask'd if he had not laid aſide any Book or Paper? No, by the living God, reply'd Coleman; whereas his Man Boatman had ſworn, that his Book of Entries for the two laſt Years, was remov'd a Day or two before he was apprehended. After Sentence, many were ſent to Coleman from both Houſes, offering to interpoſe for his Pardon, if he would confeſs, but he ſtill proteſted his Innocence, and took great Care to vindicate his Maſter the Duke. He own'd he had himſelf receiv'd 2500 Guineas of the French Ambaſſador, to gain ſome Perſons to the Duke's Intereſt, but had kept them himſelf. Sir Thomas Littleton, and other Members of Parliament, were with him, not long before his Execution. He ſeem'd willing to be queſtion'd about the King, but Biſhop Burnet ſays, they did not think fit to do it, nor to report what he ſaid concerning it, which is a Hint that will occaſion great Speculation among ſpeculative Readers. It was then given out, that Coleman was kept from making Confeſſions, by Hopes the Duke of York ſent him of a Pardon; and that when he ſaw there was none like to come, he ſhou'd ſay, There is no Faith in Man; which I doubt not would have been true enough, if he had ſaid it: For as he kept Correſpondence with La Chaiſe, by Command of the Duke, and as the Duke refers La Chaiſe to him in his own Letter, one can make no Queſtion, but he was authoriz'd to ſay what he did, and whether the Duke of York would engage in ſuch a dangerous Correſpondence, without being ſure of his Brother's Approbation, let the Reader determine. He was executed at Tyburn the 3d of December, and ſuffer'd with great Devotion and Compoſedneſs. The King gave back his Eſtate to his Wife and Children, and his Quarters to be bury'd. I ſhall not enlarge upon Oates and Bedloe's Accuſation of the Queen, for I do not much give into it, having Occaſion to know more of that Princeſs than the common Writers, as the Archdeacon has it. For ſome of the laſt Words ſhe ſaid before her Death, at Lisbon, were, to an Engliſh Phyſician, from whom I had it, The Queen ſitting up in her Bed, call'd to him to hold her while ſhe ſaid ſoftly to this Effect, That when ſhe was in England, ſhe had been wrongfully charg'd with endeavouring to bring in Popery; that ſhe never had deſir'd any more Favour for thoſe of her own Religion, than was granted them by her Marriage Articles; that ſhe had never been a Promoter of the French Intereſt; on the Contrary, that it was one of her greateſt Griefs, at her going out of the World, to think that when ſhe was gone, the French Faction, in her Brother's Court, might do the Confederates ill Offices, for it was ſhe that had kept him firm to them.

The Converſation between King Charles and Dr. Burnet at this Juncture, is worth repeating entire. " I waited often on him all the Month " of December, he came to me to Chiffinchs's, " a Page of the Back-Stairs, and kept the " Time he had aſſign'd me to a Minute. He " was alone, and talk'd much, and very free " with me. Biſhop Burnet's Diſcourſe with the King.

The

A.D.1678 The King muſt not be a very good Judge of Deſign and Expreſſion, to think Oates's Narrative had a Word in it from the Pen of the Earl of Shaftsbury, that Rhapſody had its Growth among the Dregs of the People, as appears by the baſe Thoughts, and baſer Language, and there's a Rage in it, which borders pretty near upon Frenzy, the Effect of Oates and Tonge's Want of both Senſe and Judgment, but I'm apt to think they two had Helps in the Contrivance and Formation of the Narrative, which had they had more Judgment and Senſe, they would not have let paſs as it is. I may go ſo far as to believe a great Part of it is Invention, without giving any one Cauſe to ſuſpect the Whole; for as ſome Parts were prov'd by Coleman, and the Jeſuits Letters, ſo others which might have been prov'd further by the Letters and Papers that were ſunk, ſhould not be wholly condemn'd. Dr. Burnet's Converſation with his Majeſty continu'd thus.

" The King fancied there was a Deſign of " a Rebellion on Foot, I aſſur'd him I ſaw no " Appearances of it; I told him there was a " Report breaking out that he intended to le- " gitimate the Duke of Monmouth. He an- " ſwer'd quick, As well as I love him, I had " rather ſee him hang'd; yet he apprehended " a Rebellion not ſo much that he ſeem'd ill " pleas'd, that the Party who was ſo zealous " about the Plot, ſhould flatter themſelves with " great Imaginations, hoping that wou'd keep " them quiet, in a Dependance upon himſelf; " and he ſuffer'd the Duke of Monmouth to " uſe all Methods to make himſelf popular, " reckoning that he cou'd keep him in his " own Management. He was ſurpriz'd when I " told him Coleman had inſinuated, that he knew " of all their Foreign Negotiations, or at leaſt, " he ſeem'd ſo to me. I preſs'd him much to " oblige the Duke to enter into Conferences " with ſome of our Divines, and to be preſent " at them himſelf, which wou'd very much " clear him of Jealouſy, and might have a good " Effect on his Brother; at leaſt it would give " the World ſome Hopes, like what Henry IV. " of France, his Grand-father did, which kept " a Party firm to him for ſome time before he King Charles's mean Opinion of the Duke of York's Underſtanding. " chang'd; the King anſwer'd, My Brother " has neither Henry IV's Underſtanding, nor " his Conſcience; for he believ'd that King " was always indifferent as to thoſe Matters. " The King ſpoke much to me concerning " Oates's accuſing the Queen, and acquainted me " with the whole Progreſs of it. He ſaid ſhe " was a weak Woman, and had ſome diſagree- " able Humours, but was not capable of a wick- " ed Thing, and conſidering his Faultineſs to- " wards her in other Things, he thought it a " horrid Thing to abandon her. I told him " there was no Poſſibility of laying the Heat " that was now rais'd, but by changing his Danby univerſally odious. " Miniſtry; that the Earl of Danby was uni- " verſally odious, and there was a Deſign againſt " him, but I knew not the Particulars; he ſaid, " that lies at the Bottom.

An Addreſs againſt the Queen. On the ſame Day that Coleman was try'd, came out a Proclamation, purſuant to an Addreſs of the Houſe of Lords, declaring in theſe Words, " That if any Perſon or Perſons ſhall " before the 25th Day of December next, make " any further Diſcovery of the late horrid De- " ſign, &c. he ſhall for every ſuch Diſcovery, " receive the Reward of 200 Pounds;" and the Commons gave ſuch Credit to Oates and Bedloe's Accuſation of the Queen, that they addreſs'd his Majeſty to remove her, and all her Family, and all reputed Papiſts from Whitehall, A.D.1678 which was follow'd with another Addreſs, to have all Papiſts and reputed Papiſts, in all Parts of England, apprehended and ſecur'd. The King reſenting Oates's accuſing the Queen, order'd a ſtricter Guard upon him than ever, which occaſion'd the Commons to order another Addreſs, That Oates might be freed from his Reſtraint, attended by his own Servants, and a competent Allowance be appointed for his Maintenance, and on the 5th of December, they reſolv'd to impeach the Lord Arundel of Warder, Popiſh Lords impeach'd. the Lord Powis, the Lord Petre, Lord Bellaſis, Lord Viſcount Stafford, ſeverally of High-Treaſon; which ſeveral Impeachments were carry'd up to the Lords by ſeveral Members of the Houſe of Commons. Theſe Lords had two Days before been found guilty by ſpecial Indictments, to the ſame Purpoſe, by the Grand Jury of Middleſex, before ſpecial Commiſſioners ſitting at Weſtminſter, and had they been arraign'd and try'd, Oates and Bedloe's Evidence would have charg'd every one of them with Treaſon; but now for ſome Reaſons, thoſe Proceedings were wav'd, and it was thought more effectual to proceed by way of Impeachment before the Houſe of Lords.

On the 17th of December, William Ireland Ireland, and Thomas Pickering, both Prieſts, and John Pickering Grove, a Lay-Brother, were arraign'd at the and Grove Old-Bailey, together with Thomas Whitebread try'd. and John Fenwick, two Jeſuits: The three firſt were charg'd particularly with conſpiring the King's Death. Oates ſwore that the Murder of the King was reſolv'd on at the great Meeting, on the 24th of April, mention'd alſo in the Jeſuits Letter. This Meeting was at the White-Horſe in the Strand, Ireland was preſent at it; Pickering was to have 30,000 Maſſes, and Grove 1500 Pounds, to which Agreement Ireland conſented, and ſign'd it in Oates's Preſence, as did alſo Pickering and Grove. Oates depos'd further, that in Purſuance of this Reſolve, he ſaw Pickering and Grove walk ſeveral Times in the Park together, with ſcrew'd Piſtols, longer than ordinary ones, and ſhorter than Carabines; that they had Silver Bullets to ſhoot with, and Grove wou'd have had them champ'd, to render the Wound incurable. This Aſſaſſination Plot was prov'd with other Circumſtances by Bedloe's Evidence alſo, who ſwore that one Knight was to have kill'd the Earl of Great Lords to be murder'd. Shaftsbury, Pritchard the Duke of Buckingham, Oneal the Earl of Oſſory, Obrian the Duke of Ormond, &c. The three Aſſaſſins deny'd every Part of the Evidence againſt them, or that they had ſo much as any Knowledge of the King's Witneſſes. Ireland offer'd to prove by twenty Witneſſes, that he was in Staffordſhire and Cheſhire the whole Month of Auguſt and September, when it was ſworn he was in London; but Sarah Payne, formerly a Servant to Grove, ſwore that ſhe ſaw Mr. Ireland at a Scrivener's Door in Fetter-Lane, about the 12th or 13th of Auguſt; and whatever has been, or may be ſaid againſt Oates and Bedloe's Evidence, at the Trial of Ireland, Pickering and Grove, it is certain, the Witneſſes for the Priſoners had ſo little to ſay for them, that 'twas of no Service to them. The Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs's Speech againſt the Plotters. in ſuming up the Evidence to the Jury, had theſe remarkable Expreſſions. If they had not murder'd Kings, I would not ſay they would have done otrs, but when it hath been their Practice ſo to do, when they have debauch'd Mens Underſtandings, overturn'd all Morals, and deſtroy'd all Divinity, what ſhall I ſay of them?

A.D.1678 them? When their Humility is such, that they tread upon the Necks of Emperors, their Charity such as to kill Princes, and their Vows of Poverty, such as to covet Kingdoms, what shall I judge of them? When they have Licences to lye, and Indulgences for Falshood; nay, when they can make him a Saint, that dies in One, and then pray to it, as the Carpenter first makes an Image, and then worships it; and can they think to bring in that Wooden Religion of theirs amongst us in this Nation, what shall I think of them? What shall I say to them? What shall I do with them? They eat their God, they kill their King and Saint the Murtherer; they indulge all sorts of Sins, and no humane Bonds can hold them. Jefferies, Recorder of London, the greatest Butcher afterwards that ever was stain'd with Blood, made a long Speech when he pass'd Sentence upon them, and said in it, among other Flourishes of his, You must e'er long appear before the great Tribunal, where your Masses will not signify so many Groats to you, no not one Farthing. I must say, for the Sake of those silly People, whom you have impos'd upon with such Fallacies, that the Masses can no more save you from a future Damnation, than they do from a present Condemnation. In another Place he advis'd them not to relie upon their Masses, Tricks and Trumperies; and afterwards proceeded thus, I am sorry with all my Soul to hear a Lay-man should with so much Malice declare, That a Bullet, if round and smooth, was not safe enough to execute his Villainies by. But he must be sure not only to set his poysonous Invention on work about it, but he must add thereto his poysonous Teeth, for Fear, if the Bullet were smooth, it might light in some Part where the Wound might be cur'd. But such is the Height of some Mens Malice, that they will put all the Venom and Malice they can into their Actions. I am sure this was so horrid a Design, that nothing but a Conclave of Devils in Hell, or a College of such Jesuits as yours on Earth, could have thought upon it. In Conclusion, he sentenc'd them to be drawn, hang'd, and quarter'd: However, he deferr'd issuing a Warrant for Execution so long, that the House of Commons sent for him to give an Account why it was not done. He said he had as yet receiv'd no Order from the King, and no Order came till the 15th of January, when Ireland and Grove were hang'd at Tyburn; but Pickering was not executed till the 9th of May. They all deny'd the Fact to the last. We have spoken already, and shall still speak of the Validity of such Denials from Persons who depend more on the Priest's Absolution and the Prayers of the Church, than on Repentance, or Innocence, or the Merits of our Saviour. While the Popish Plot was under Prosecution, a great Design was laid to ruin the Earl of Danby, Lord Treasurer, who, to prevent it, laid another Design to ruin Mr. Montagu, late Ambassador in France, who was too cunning and too quick for him. Echard assures us, the French Ambassador and the Dutchess of Portsmouth join'd with the Lord Russel, the Duke of Monmouth, the Earls of Shafsbury and Essex, in the Design against Danby, which is as likely as many other Events of his. The Lord Russel caballing with the Dutchess of Portsmouth, Barillon the French Ambassador, with the Earl of Shaftsbury, and the late Earl of Galway with both Russel and Portsmouth. Let us see how it is represented by Bishop Burnet.

Danby being conscious of his criminal Correspondence with Montagu, then Ambassador in France, and fearing the Letter he had written him might be produc'd in Evidence against him, resolv'd to be before-hand, and accuse Montagu, but first to secure his own Letters. In order to this, the Court Tool, Jenkins, who was the Shadow of an Ambassador at Nimeguen, was directed to write over, that he understood Mr. Montagu had been engag'd in dangerous Practices with Con, the Pope's Nuntio at Paris, who was indeed the Pope's Agent there, a crafty covetous Fellow, who sold Montagu some Secrets which were worth his Money. Upon the Receipt of Jenkins's Letters, Orders were given for seizing Mr. Montagu's Papers; but as he had got himself chosen a Member of the House of Commons for the Borough of Northampton, to strengthen his Interest against the Treasurer, so he had foreseen the other's Design against him, and remov'd his most valuable Papers; among which were several Letters of Danby's about the Money Affair, the most scandalous that a King was ever concern'd in; and a King who wou'd sell his Subjects for a little French Gold, might very well make no Conscience of persecuting and oppressing them for Conscience sake, at the Instigation of Sheldon and such Bishops, who had a Party in the House of Commons that was ready to give him any thing, if he wou'd give them Laws against Protestant Dissenters. Montagu, says Bishop Burnet, understood the Arts of a Court too well to be caught by Danby, and had put the Box, with the Treasurer's Letters in them, in a safe Place. As soon as Orders were issu'd for seizing Montagu's Papers, his Majesty sent a Message to the House of Commons concerning Jenkins's Information against him, and that he had order'd his Papers to be seiz'd. The House did not much approve of those Orders, and desir'd to know, Whether the Information was upon Oath, and of what Nature the Offence was? Upon which Mr. Montagu sat silent, and a Debate ensu'd that lasted very long: At the End of it Mr. Montagu stood up, and said, He had a Box in which were some Papers of very great Importance; if the House thought fit, he wou'd send for them. Three of the Members were immediately appointed to fetch them; when it was come, he open'd it, and took out two Letters of the Lord Danby's, that contain'd Instructions to him to treat with the King of France for 300,000 Pounds a Year, for three Years, if a Peace succeeded, since it wou'd not be convenient for the King to meet a Parliament in all that Time; and he was charg'd to mention no Part of this to the Secretary of State. What ado did Echard make with the Kingdom's Happiness in having such a King, when he was passing the good Staunch Acts before-mention'd? And how did the two Chancellors, Hyde and Finch, cry up the Blessings he brought in with him to the English Nation? The Measure of them is now compleat, and our Parliaments fit or not fit, according as the Money comes from France. It was easy to foresee he wou'd prove such a King as this, from his Religion and Morals, and the People of England ow'd it all to trusting him at his Restoration. The first Letter which Montagu produc'd, was dated the 17th of January, 1677, and contains as follows. Yesterday young Ruvigny came to me, with Monsieur Barillon (having given me his Father's Letters the Day before) and discours'd much upon the Confidence the French King hath of the Firmness of Ours to him (This was at the very Instant when King Charles was earnestly pressing his Parliament to give him Money to act vigorously against him) and

Mr. Montagu produces his Letters about Money from France.

A.D.1678 and of the good Opinion his Maſter has of me; of his King's Reſolution to condeſcend to any thing that is not infamous to him, for the Satisfaction of our King. How certainly our King may depend upon all Aſſiſtance and Supplies from his Maſter, in caſe the Friendſhip be preſerv'd—— The main of their Drift was, to engage me to prevail with the Prince of Orange, as to the Town of Tournay. The King muſt come to ſome Declaration of his Mind to the Parliament when it meets. That which makes the Hopes of Peace leſs probable, is, that the Duke grows every Day leſs enclin'd to it, and has created a greater Indifferency in the King than I cou'd have imagin'd; which being added to the French King's Reſolutions not to part with Tournay, does, I confeſs, make me deſpair of any Accommodation. Nevertheleſs, I am aſſur'd that one principal Cauſe of this Adjournment for Thirteen Days, hath been to ſee if any Expedient for the Peace cou'd have been found in that Time; and the Effect of the Adjournment hath hitherto been, that no body will believe other than that the Peace is already concluded. The ſecond Letter produc'd by Mr. Montagu, was dated March 25, 1678, and it is worth noting, that this Letter was written four or five Days after the Parliament paſs'd the Poll Bill, to raiſe a Naval and Land Force for an actual War with the French King. In it were theſe Expreſſions; In caſe the Conditions of Peace ſhall be accepted, the King expects to have Six Millions of Livres a Year for three Years, from the Time that this Agreement ſhall be ſign'd betwixt his Majeſty and the King of France, becauſe it will probably be two or three Years before the Parliament will be in Humour to give him any Supplies after the making any Peace with France. For my Part, it is aſtoniſhing to think to what a Degree of ----- the Word is too foul to be nam'd, a King and Miniſtry muſt be come to, that cou'd look a Parliament in the Face, after ſuch a Diſcovery. A Secret League with a profeſs'd Enemy to their Religion and Liberties, which both King and Miniſters were ſworn to defend. How baſe, how deſpicable muſt it appear to brave, generous Minds! A Plantagenet wou'd ſooner have robb'd a Shrine, than have taken a Bribe of a Foreign Enemy againſt his own People. The French Ambaſſador here has always agreed to that Sum, but not for ſo long a Time. If you find the Peace will not be accepted, you are not to mention the Money at all; and all poſſible Care muſt be taken to have this whole Negotiation as private as is poſſible, for fear of giving Offence at Home. Honeſt Men are not afraid of giving Offence by their Actions, nor aſham'd of ſhewing them to the Sun: Poor England! That ever it ſhou'd have been thy Misfortune to fall into ſuch Hands. At the Bottom of this Letter are theſe Words, THIS LETTER WAS WRIT BY MY ORDER,

C. R.

Theſe Letters being read in the Houſe of Commons, Sir Francis Winnington, then Sollicitor General, fell ſeverely upon them. He ſaid, Here was a Miniſter, who going out of the Affairs of his own Province, was directing the King's Ambaſſadors, and excluding the Secretary of State, whoſe Office it was, from the Knowledge of it: For that alſo was in the laſt Letter, You muſt not ſay a Syllable to the Secretary. Here was the Faith of England, added Winnington, to our Allies, and our Intereſt likewiſe ſet to Sale for French Money, and that to keep off a Seſſion of Parliament. This was a Deſign to ſell the Nation, and ſubvert the Government, and is HIGH TREASON. It being my original Deſign to prove this upon the Stuartine Race, I have reaſon to deſire that the Teſtimony of King Charles's own Sollicitor here may be taken Notice of. A.D.1678

We'll ſee what the learned Lawyer writes on this Occaſion: It was argu'd in the Houſe of Commons, That now it was evident that there was a Secret League with France; that King Charles was to have Aſſiſtance and Supplies from thence againſt Some-body; which cou'd not be againſt Holland or Spain, and therefore it muſt be againſt his own People. And yet this Aſſiſtance or Supplies were not to be had but upon Condition, If the Friendſhip ſhou'd be preſerv'd. King Charles muſt either comply with whatſoever France impos'd, or break the Friendſhip. Again, Theſe Letters ſhew'd the Secret League ſubſiſted and was carrying on at the very Time when the Parliament was, on the 15*th of* January, 1677, directed to adjourn for thirteen Days, to be then acquainted with a Matter of great Importance: The meaning of which was, That the Expedient for the Peace was the ſettling the Price for it; for the Matter of great Importance, when it came out, was no more, but that his Majeſty had, on the 16th of January, 1677, made an Alliance with the Dutch againſt France. It was therefore agreed, That it was plain the Army of 20,000 Men, lately rais'd, was rais'd for ſome Purpoſe, but not to make War againſt France. That from theſe Letters might be collected, that there was ſome DARK Meaning in the King's deſiring a Continuance of theſe new rais'd Forces; and above all it was plain, that the Reaſons why his Majeſty refus'd to make Alliances and War againſt France, were to preſerve his Friendſhip with Lewis XIV. in hopes of Aſſiſtance and Supplies againſt Somebody. And upon the whole, the Alliance with the Dutch, and the late Speeches and Meſſages to the Parliament, touching the Defence of the Nation, cou'd proceed from no other Cauſe but Inſincerity; which proves, that the Britiſh State was under the Influence of Thoſe who were engag'd in an Intereſt againſt it. Acherley p. 597. A Secret League with the French King.

The Queſtion being put, after a Debate, Whether the Earl of Danby ſhou'd be Impeach'd of High Treaſon, it was carry'd by a Majority of above Seventy Voices, and the Impeachment was the next Day carry'd up to the Lords by Sir Henry Capel, Brother to the Earl of Eſſex, with a Deſire that the ſaid Thomas Earl of Danby might be ſequeſtred from Parliament, and forthwith committed to Cuſtody. But the Majority of the Lords were againſt committing him, till the Articles were exhibited, and Proof of them produc'd. Upon this it was viſible the Commons wou'd have complain'd that the Lords deny'd them Juſtice, ſo there was no making up the Matter; and on Monday the 30th of December, the King came to the Houſe and prorogu'd the Parliament till the 4th of February, but they never ſat more. Their Continuance from firſt to laſt, was ſeventeen Years, ſeven Months, and twenty-two Days. Earl of Danby impeach'd of High Treaſon. Parliament prorogu'd.

To imitate the Compleat Hiſtorians, I ſhou'd cloſe the Year with Honours and Preferments; but I ſhall abridge their Account for Reaſons before hinted.

Privy-Counſellors made this Year, George Lord Berkeley, James Earl of Salisbury, Henry Earl of Clarendon. James Earl of Arran, Duke Hamilton's Son was ſworn Gentleman of the Bed-chamber. Robert Earl of Sunderland bought Preferments.

A.D. 1678 the Secretary's Place of Sir Joſeph Williamſon; it had been promis'd to Sir William Temple, but he did not care to buy it. The Earl of Danby loſt the Treaſurer's Staff, and the Earl of Eſſex, Lawrence Hyde, Eſq; Sir John Ernle, Sir Edward Deering, and Sydney Godolphin, Eſq; were made Lords of the Treaſury.

Mr. Foulkes the Miniſter hang'd.

The Penitent Death of Mr. Robert Foulkes, a Shropſhire Miniſter, who was hang'd for murdering a Baſtard Child, ought always to be remember'd, as well as the Manner of it.

1679. When the Archdeacon comes to the Trials of the Murderers of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, his Account is one continu'd falſe Repreſentation in Favour of Prance, and the other Murderers. 'Tis no Matter that he has copy'd L'Eſtrange, or any ſuch villainous Libeller; he takes their Guilt upon himſelf, and is accountable for it to the Truth. He tells us, he deny'd the firſt Evidence he had given of Sir Edmundbury's Murder by Green, Berry, Hill, &c. before the King; and being oblig'd to tell us, that he afterwards recanted that Denial, he imputes it to the barbarous Uſage of him in Newgate, which he repreſents as a ſort of Torture, to force a new Confeſſion from him. He ſtood firm in his Denial, againſt all Terrors and Temptations, for about twelve Days, ſays Mr. Archdeacon. Biſhop Burnet ſays, As ſoon as he was carry'd back to Priſon, he ſent the Keeper of Newgate to the King, to tell him, that all he had ſworn was true, but that the Horror and Confuſion he was in put him on denying it. He aſſures us, Prance's Story was a ſtrange one: Biſhop Burnet, That it was a conſiſting Story, ſupported by collateral Proofs, as it will appear to be in a Paragraph or two; and the former's treating that Conſiſtency, as an extravagant incredible Piece of Forgery, calling the Aſſaſſins, the reputed Murtherers, deſerves other ſort of Correction than the Laſh of a Pen, as being a flagrant Affront on the Juſtice of the Nation, in the Puniſhment of thoſe Criminals, for whom he pleads as earneſtly, as if he had been fee'd for it. The following Account is taken from my Lord of Sarum.

Green, Berry, and Hill try'd for the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey.

On the 10th of February came on the Trial of Green, Berry, and Hill, for the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey; thus related by Prance, a Goldſmith, that wrought for the Queen's Chappel. This Prance having abſented himſelf from his Houſe two or three Days, about the Time when the Murder was committed, a Lodger in his Houſe calling it to mind, upon Bedloe's ſwearing he ſaw the Body in Somerſet-Houſe, fancy'd that it was the very Time in which he was from Home, and that he might be concern'd in it, though it appear'd afterwards that his Abſence was a Week before. On this Information he was ſeiz'd, and carry'd to Weſtminſter. Bedloe accidentally paſſing by, not knowing any thing concerning him, or whether he was a Papiſt or a Proteſtant, at firſt Sight charg'd ſome-body to ſeize on him, for he was not appriz'd that he was already in Cuſtody, atteſting that he was one of thoſe he ſaw about Godfrey's Body. Yet for ſome Days he deny'd every thing; however, at length he confeſs'd all as follows. Girald and Kelly, two Prieſts, drew him and three others into it: Green, who belong'd to the Queen's Chappel, Hill, who had ſerv'd Godden, the moſt celebrated Writer among the Papiſts, and Berry the Porter of Somerſet-Houſe. Theſe all, except Berry, had ſeveral Meetings, in which the Prieſts perſuaded them it was no Sin, but a meritorious Action, to diſpatch Godfrey, who had been a buſy Man in taking Depoſitions againſt them; and that the taking him off wou'd terrify others. Prance nam'd an Ale-houſe where they us'd to meet, and the People of that Houſe did confirm this of their meeting there. After they had reſolv'd on it, they follow'd Sir Edmund for ſeveral Days. The Morning before they kill'd him, Hill went to his Houſe, to ſee if he was yet gone out, and ſpoke to his Maid; but finding he was not at Home, they ſtay'd for his coming. This was confirm'd by the Maid, who, upon Hill's being taken up, went to Newgate, and in a Crowd of Priſoners diſtinguiſh'd him, crying, He's the Perſon who ask'd for my Maſter, the Morning before he was loſt. Prance gives in Evidence, that the Murderers met at ſuch an Ale-houſe, 'tis confirm'd by the Ale-houſe-keepers. Prance ſwears, that Hill enquir'd for Sir Edmundbury the Morning before he went out; 'tis confirm'd by the Maid, who knew not Hill but by his coming to enquire for her Maſter. Here is no Concert, and no Proof can be better circumſtantiated and confirm'd. Prance goes on, they dogg'd him into a Place near St. Clement's Church, where he was kept till Night; when Prance was appointed to wait at Somerſet-Houſe, and as Godfrey went by the Water-Gate, two of them pretended to be hot in a Quarrel, one run out to call a Magiſtrate, who preſs'd Sir Edmundbury to go in and part them, which he was not very ready to do, yet at laſt they prevail'd with him; then Green got behind him, and pull'd a Cravat about his Neck, drew him down to the Ground, and ſtrangled him. Upon that Girald wou'd have run him through, but the reſt diverted him from it, repreſenting the Danger of a Diſcovery by the Blood's being ſeen there. Upon which they carry'd his Body up to Godden's Room, who was then in France, and Hill kept the Key. Two Days after they remov'd it to a Room croſs the upper Court, and that not being found a convenient Place, they carry'd it back to Godden's Lodgings; from whence they reſolv'd to remove it by Night, in a Sedan, to the remote Parts of the Town, and fling it into ſome Ditch. On Wedneſday a Sedan was provided; and one of the Centinels ſwore he ſaw a Sedan brought in. Prance ſaid he was carry'd out, and Green having got a Horſe ready, he was laid upon his Back as ſoon as they got clear of the Town; and from thence convey'd, as he believ'd, to the Place where he was found. Prance added another Particular, that ſome Days after the Fact, thoſe who had been concern'd in it, and two others who were in the Secret, appointed to meet at Bow, where they talk'd much of this Matter; which was confirm'd by a Servant at that Houſe, who was coming in and out to them, and heard them often mention Godfrey's Name, upon which he ſtood at the Door out of Curioſity to hearken; but one of them came out, and threaten'd him for it. This full Evidence is what Echard makes Grimaces at, though it is hardly poſſible to get more Light in ſo dark and deviliſh a Buſineſs. He confeſs'd all this before he deny'd his Confeſſion to the King; he deny'd his Denial: He afterwards again deny'd his Confeſſion, and again deny'd his Denial to Dr. Lloyd, late Biſhop of Worceſter, to whom he confeſs'd this whole Matter again, and ſtood to his Confeſſion at the Trial of the Murderers; and he did it in ſuch a manner, that Biſhop Lloyd ſaid, It was not poſſible for him to doubt of Prance's Sincerity. And now let the Reader turn to that good Proteſtant, Echard's, Account of him.

A. D. 16-9.

I ſhall not repeat Bedloe's Evidence, there being no occaſion for it after Prance's, That and the others was more than ſufficient to convict the Aſſaſſins, who were ſentenc'd to be hang'd by the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs. There's an Expreſſion of his to the Jury upon their bringing them in guilty, which deſerves remembrance: Gentlemen, you have found the ſame Verdict that I would have found, if I had been one with you; and, if it were the laſt Word I were to ſpeak in this world, I ſhould have pronounced them guilty, At which Words the whole Aſſembly in Weſtminſter-Hall gave a great Shout of Applauſe. Hill and Green were hang'd at Tyburn on the 21ſt of February, and Berry a Week after. They all died hard, as the Cant is, and deny'd the Fact to the laſt, which Echard lays great Streſs upon. So ſhould I too, if their wicked Practices had not prov'd, that as they could do, ſo they could ſay any thing; and Berry's being an Apoſtate to Popery, and ſaying he was ſtill a Proteſtant in his Heart, does not at all mend the Matter. It behov'd the Papiſts and their Abettors, I mean the perſecuting Church-men, to do all that in them lay to prevent the belief of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's Murther, there being nothing in the world which ſo much ſupported the belief of the Popiſh Plot; and there were many lying Libels publiſh'd by L'Eſtrange, and others, to ridicule and vilify the Proſecution of the Plotters and the Murtherers: But the Characters of thoſe Scriblers are ſo profligate, that no Man of common Senſe, and common Honeſty, ever made uſe of them. My Lord Biſhop of Salisbury, in his Memoirs, argues very juſtly on the little Dependance that is to be made upon the Denials of Popiſh Malefactors, even with their laſt Breath, when Facts have been prov'd upon them. "The "viſible Evidences that appear'd, made all Peo- "ple conclude there was great plotting among "them. And it was generally believ'd, that the "Bulk of what was ſworn by the Witneſſes was "true, tho' they had by all appearance dreſs'd "it up with incredible Circumſtances. What "the Men of Learning knew concerning their "Principles, both of depoſing of Kings, and of "the Lawfulneſs of murthering them, when ſo "depos'd, made them eaſily conclude, that ſince "they ſaw the Duke was ſo entirely theirs, and "that the King was ſo little to be depended "upon, they might think the preſent Conjunc- "ture was not to be loſt: And ſince the Duke's "eldeſt Daughter was already out of their hands, "they might make the more haſte to ſet the "Duke on the Throne. The Tempers, as well "as the Morals of the Jeſuits, made it reaſon- "able to believe, that they were not apt to ne- "glect ſuch Advantages, nor to ſtick at any ſort "of Falſhood, in order to their own Defence. "The Doctrine of Probability, beſides many "other Maxims that are current amongſt them, "made many give little Credit to their Witneſ- "ſes, or to their moſt ſolemn Denials, even at "their Execution. Many things were brought "to ſhew, that by the caſuiſtical Divinity taught "amongſt them, and publiſh'd by them to the "World, there was no Practice ſo bad, but that "the Doctrines of Probability, and of ordering "the Intention, might juſtify it." Inſtead of this juſt Reaſoning, their Advocate Echard tells us, One of the Murderers ſaid, he was as innocent as the Child new-born, and all of them continually deny'd they had any knowledge of it. He ends his own Narrative with tacking Oates's and Bedloe's Bill of Charges to it and this Jeſt, Many Perſons have ſince thought that their Bills and their Narratives were equally credible: and he grounds this dull Raillery upon Oates's Sum total *l.*678: 12: 6.

which is ſo far from being incredible, that I myſelf, in one Cauſe only, was forc'd to expend near a Third of that Sum on account of the Publick, where there was not a third Part of the Number of Witneſſes, but the like Difficulty in getting them to ſpeak what they knew; and all the World knows what a hard Matter it is to get People, who are not willing to give Evidence, to ſwear to even the moſt notorious Truth. Echard takes particular notice of Oates's Perjury, in ſwearing Ireland to have been in London, when forty Witneſſes teſtify'd he was in Staffordſhire He would not tell us that Jenniſon, a Gentleman of good Family and Eſtate, obſerving that Ireland had defended himſelf againſt Oates chiefly by this, that he was in Staffordſhire from the beginning of Auguſt, till the 12th of September, and died, affirming this to be true, ſeem'd much ſurpriſed at it, and, as Biſhop Burnet informs us, turn'd Proteſtant upon it. For he ſaid, he ſaw him in London on the 19th of Auguſt; on which Day he fix'd upon this account, that he ſaw him the Day before he went down in the Stage-Coach to York, which was prov'd by the Entry-Books of the Coach to be the 20th of Auguſt. He affirm'd he was come to Town from Windſor; and going to ſee him, found him drawing off his Boots. Ireland ask'd him, What News? and in particular, How the King was attended at Windſor? Jenniſon anſwering, He walks about very careleſsly, with few about him. Then ſaid Ireland, It would be eaſy to take him off. To which Jenniſon reply'd, God forbid; and Ireland ſaid, I do not mean it can lawfully be done. Jenniſon produc'd one Smith, a Prieſt, who had alſo turn'd Proteſtant, and depos'd, He was told at Rome, that there was a Deſign to kill the King.

Jenniſon's Evidence confirms Oates's.

Beſides Jenniſon, came in one Dugdale, who had been the Lord Aſton's Bailiff, and liv'd in fair Reputation in the Country, and diſcover'd a Correſpondence that Evers, the Lord Aſton's Jeſuit, held with the Jeſuits in London, who had writ to Evers of the Deſign of killing the King, and deſir'd him to find out Men proper to execute it, whether they were Gentlemen or not. This he ſwore was writ plain in a Letter from Whitebread the Provincial, directed to himſelf, but he knew it was meant for Evers. Evers, and Gavan, another Jeſuit, preſs'd Dugdale to undertake it, promiſing he ſhould be canonized for it. Biſhop Burnet ſays he was a Man of Senſe and Temper, and behav'd himſelf decently, having ſomewhat in his Air and Deportment which diſpos'd People to believe him, Inſomuch that the King himſelf began to believe there was ſomething more than he knew of in the Plot, tho' Tom Killigrew ſaid, Your Majeſty knows more of it than any one elſe, and your Diſcovery of it will quickly ſatisfy your People. There was one Circumſtance which confirm'd Dugdale's Evidence: He had talk'd of a Juſtice of Peace in Weſtminſter, that was kill'd on the Tueſday after Godfrey was miſs'd; ſo that the News of this muſt have been writ from London on the Saturday-Night's Poſt. He did not think it a Secret, but talk'd of it as News in an Ale-houſe, and ſeveral Perſons ſwore they heard him tell it. He depos'd, he ſaw this in a Letter writ by Harcourt the Jeſuit to Evers, in which Godfrey was nam'd. He added, that the Duke of York ſent to Coleman, when he was in Newgate, to perſuade him to diſcover nothing, and deſired to know whether he had made any diſcovery of their Deſigns to any other Perſon; and Coleman ſending back anſwer, he had ſpoke of them to Godfrey, the Duke gave order to kill him. The Earl of Eſſex declar'd that Dugdale ſwore this at his firſt Examination; but ſince it was only hear-hear-ſay from Evers, and nothing in Law, it was not made a part of it, becauſe it would heighten the Fury againſt the Duke, and the King charg'd Dugdale not to ſpeak of it. This Dugdale, doubtleſs, was a Kinſman, as well as Country-man of the Herald Dugdale, whoſe View of the Troubles, tho' now waſte Paper, was thought by one of our Univerſities a valuable Preſent for the Queen.

The Fury of the People was ſo fierce againſt the Duke, that the King himſelf thought his abſence was the ſureſt way to allay it. The Duke did not care to ſtir. The Earl of Danby perſuaded the King to ſend him beyond Sea, that there might be no colour for ſuſpecting the Counſels were influenc'd by him. He urg'd to the Duke, that if the King, and the new Parliament that was to be, came to an Agreement, he might depend on the Promiſe his Majeſty would make to recall him immediately; and if they did not agree, no part of the Blame would be caſt on him. No matter for that, he ſtuck cloſe ſtill, and would not go, till the King told him poſitively, It is for both our ſervice, and muſt be done.

The Duke ſent abroad.

Before he went away, his Majeſty gave him all poſſible Satisfaction with relation to the Duke of Monmouth, who was become very popular, and his Creatures gave out, he was the King's lawful Son. Upon which, his Majeſty made a ſolemn Declaration in Council, and both ſign'd and ſwore it, that he was never marry'd, nor contracted to that Duke's Mother, nor to any other Woman, except to his preſent Queen.

King denies his Marriage with the Duke of Monmouth's Mother.

The Duke of York went firſt to Holland, and then to Bruſſels, where he was not very welcome, as appear'd by the Coldneſs of their Carriage towards him.

New Parliament call'd.

Upon the Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament, which was done by Proclamation the 24th of January, Writs were iſſued for calling a new one to meet the 6th of March following; and three or four Days after the Parliament was diſſolv'd, Roger Earl of Caſtlemain, Mr. Daniel Arthur of London, Merchant, and —— Sheldon Eſq; who had been taken up for the Popiſh-Plot, were diſcharg'd upon Bail. Papiſts flock'd to London from all parts of the Kingdom, and behav'd ſo inſolently, that the Government was obliged to command them to depart by another Proclamation; and by another, a Reward of 200 l. was promis'd to every new Diſcoverer of the Popiſh-Plot: the King and his Miniſters being reſolv'd to value themſelves to the new Parliament on their Zeal for ſuch Diſcoveries.

The Compleat Hiſtorian tells us, The Diſſenters knew how to make ſome Advantages of the Popiſh-Plot; that is, they fell in with thoſe that were for a vigorous Proſecution of it, and what was the Advantage they could make of it, more than they had a natural Right to, Liberty of Conſcience, and to be freed from thoſe ſtinging Laws, which Sheldon, Morley, and other ſuch Prelates procur'd againſt them? 'Tis a ſhame not only to Chriſtianity, but to Humanity, that ſuch Laws were ever made, and a ſhame it is to find Writers ſpeaking of them without Horror and Deteſtation. The Diſſenters did their utmoſt to get a good Proteſtant Parliament; and moderate Church-men joining in with them, ſuch a Parliament was choſen, as would have made England happy in any other Reign. They met the 6th of March, and the King told them what great Things he had already done, for preventing the Progreſs of the Popiſh-Plot; as the Excluſion of the Popiſh Lords from their Seats in Parliament, and the Execution of ſeveral Men upon the ſcore of the Plot, as well as the Murther of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey; but above all, that he had commanded his Brother from him, becauſe he would not leave malicious Men room to ſay, he had not remov'd all Cauſes which could be pretended to influence him toward Popiſh Counſels; and as he had not been ſlack in putting the preſent Laws in execution againſt Papiſts, ſo he was ready to join in making ſuch further Laws, as might be neceſſary for the ſecuring the Kingdom. He then demanded a Supply, and concluded with a Deſire to have this a Healing Parliament. The Lord Chancellor's Speech was long, and, if we could take Echard's Word for it, eloquent; but he thinks Length is Eloquence, tho' it muſt be confeſs'd, that this Speech of the Chancellor's, is the beſt he ever made, and the only one that cannot juſtly be called too long. I ſhall inſert part of it as a full Anſwer to all Echard's Inſinuations of the Forgery of the Plot: "We had need look about us, "for his Majeſty's Royal Perſon hath been in "danger, by a Conſpiracy againſt his ſacred Life, "maliciouſly contriv'd, and induſtriouſly carry'd "on by thoſe Seminary Prieſts and Jeſuits, and "their Adherents, who think themſelves under "ſome Obligations of Conſcience to effect it; "and having vow'd the Subverſion of the True "Religion amongſt us, find no way ſo likely to "compaſs it, as to wound us in the Head, and to "kill the Defender of the Faith. His Majeſty "wanted no ſufficient Evidence of his Zeal for "our Religion, (we muſt remember he was all "the while a Papiſt,) without this Teſtimony from his Enemies, who were about "to ſacrifice him for it: But it hath ever "been the Practice of thoſe Votaries, firſt to "murther the Fame of Princes, and then their "Perſons; firſt to ſlander them to their People, "as if they favour'd Papiſts, and then to aſſaſſinate them for being too zealous Proteſtants." His Majeſty is not only a zealous, but a too zealous Proteſtant. "And thus, by all the Ways "and Means which our Law calls Treaſon, and "their Divinity calls Merit and Martyrdom, "they are trying to ſet up the Dominion and the "Supremacy of the Pope; as if the Dignity of "the Triple Crown could never be ſufficiently "advanc'd, unleſs theſe three Kingdoms were "added unto him, and all brought back again "under that Yoke, which neither we nor our "Forefathers were able to bear."

A. D. 1679.

The Commons being to chuſe a Speaker, Col. Birch nam'd Mr. Seymour, who in the laſt Parliament had ſtruck in with ſuch Heat againſt Popery, that he was become popular. The Court named Sir Thomas Meers, but Mr. Seymour carry'd it by a great Majority. When he was next day preſented to the King, his Majeſty refus'd to confirm the Election. He ſaid, He had other Occaſions for him, which could not be diſpens'd with. Upon this, a long and warm Debate enſu'd, and ſeveral Members ſpoke: as,

Mr. Seymour choſen Speaker, rejected by the King.

Mr. Sacheverell.

It was never known that a Perſon ſhould be excepted againſt, and no Reaſon at all given. It is done on purpoſe to gratify ſome particular Perſon, for Mr. Seymour is a Man who perform'd the Service formerly without Complaint; and as he would not conſent to the Prejudice of one Hair of the Crown, or Prerogative, ſo he will not infringe the Liberty of the People, in parting with the leaſt of their juſt Rights.

Mr. Sacheverell's Speech upon it.

Mr. Williams.

This ſeems to be a Queſtion of Right; for above a hundred Years paſt, it has not been known that any Speaker preſented to the Kings or Queens of England, were ever excepted againſt, without ſome Reaſon given, or for ſome great Cauſe;

Mr. Williams's.

A. D. 1679.

Cauſe; and the Thing in itſelf of preſenting him to the King, is, I humbly conceive, but a bare Compliment. If we ſuffer this, we ſhall be put upon daily. Let us adjourn for the preſent.

Sir Thomas Clarges.

Sir Thomas Clarges's.

There were Parliaments long before there were Speakers choſen; and afterwards, for the Eaſe of the Houſe, among themſelves, they pitch'd upon a Speaker. Beſides, I can prove, not long ſince, that Parliaments have adjourn'd themſelves de Die in Diem, for fourteen Days together, without any Speaker among them, and the Clerk of the Houſe always put the Word for Adjournment. Gentlemen, all our Lives and Liberties are to be preſerv'd by this Houſe, and therefore we are to preſerve the Liberties of it.

Mr. Garraway.

Mr. Garraway's.

If you admit this, you would admit any thing. If Mr. Seymour be rejected from being Speaker, and no Reaſon given, pray who muſt chuſe the Speaker, the King or us? It's plain, not us. I remember, when Popham was Speaker, he was rejected; but the Reaſon was given, becauſe he had been wounded, and was ſickly; and another, for not being able to endure, by reaſon of Diſability of Body: but nothing of this can be objected againſt Mr. Seymour, he being an approv'd Perſon by his Majeſty the laſt Parliament.

Sir Thomas Lee.

Sir Thomas Lee's.

I cannot forget how we addreſs'd ourſelves to his Majeſty laſt Parliament, as fearing his Perſon to be in danger, by reaſon of the Plot; but we receiv'd no Anſwer at all in a whole Week, from Monday to Monday, when we were immediately prorogu'd unexpectedly, and immediately after diſſolv'd as unexpectedly; and, I ſuppoſe, the ſame Perſons that gave that Advice, gave this alſo. To except againſt a Speaker, without giving a Reaſon, is to do any thing that may ſet us together by the Ears, and then they have their deſign'd Ends; but I ſhall not conſent to part with the leaſt Right that belongs to my Country, for whom I am choſen a Repreſentative.

Col. Birch.

Col. Birch's

He that adviſ'd this, will readily adviſe more, I'll warrant you. This is only a Bone caſt amongſt us. I thought we could not have obliged his Majeſty more, than to pitch upon a Privy Counſellor, and one in ſo great Favour with his Majeſty, and in ſeveral great Places and Imployments under him: Beſides, yeſterday he was at Whitehall, after we had choſen him Speaker, to acquaint his Majeſty with it, and then his Majeſty was very well pleas'd with the Choice, and for the Truth of this I appeal to Mr. Seymour himſelf; but this ill Advice is given ſince by ſome, I fear, too near the King. I ſhall not touch upon Prerogative; but let's think of Adjournment at preſent

Mr. Powle.

M. Powle's

This is an ominous Thing to ſtumble at the Threſhold, before we are in the Houſe: but this Advice muſt proceed from ſome who are too near the King, and fearful we ſhould agree; but I hope there is no Man here, a Repreſentative of his Country, that is fearful of ſpeaking his Mind freely, in favour of thoſe whom he repreſents, nor yet afraid of being diſſolv'd, if it be to-morrow, for maintaining the Right of thoſe who chuſe them to ſit here for them. I will not invade Prerogative, neither will I conſent to the Infringement of the leaſt Liberty of my Country; but let us do nothing haſtily, but conſider Precedents, and adjourn ourſelves till to-morrow Nine a-clock. To which the whole Houſe agreed. A Temper was found at laſt; Seymour's Election was let fall, but the Point was ſettled, that the Right of Electing was in the Houſe, and that the Confirmation was a thing of courſe; after which, William Gregory Eſq; Sergeant at Law, was recommended to the Houſe by the Lord Ruſſel, and choſen Speaker. This Parliament began where the laſt left off, and appointed a Committee of Secrecy to take Informations, prepare Evidence, and draw up Articles againſt the impeach'd Lords in the Tower. They alſo ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe of Peers, to put them in mind of the Impeachment of High Treaſon exhibited again Thomas Earl of Danby, and to deſire that he may be committed to ſafe Cuſtody: Reſolving again, "That it "be referr'd to the Committee of Secrecy to "draw up further Articles againſt him." However, the Letters produc'd againſt the Earl, being written by the King's particular Command, and ſome private Papers being neceſſary for his Defence, which his Majeſty would not ſuffer to be made publick, he at laſt reſolved to adhere to the Benefit of the Pardon the King had granted him, and to keep himſelf out of the way as long as he could. His Conduct is much condemn'd by Biſhop Burnet, both as to Diſcretion and Probity. "When he was leaving the Trea- "ſury, he made great Advantage by ſeveral "Payments, which he got the King to order, "that were due upon ſuch ſlight Pretences, "that it was believ'd he had a large Share of "them to himſelf. He adviſ'd his Majeſty to "reject Seymour the Speaker; for which the "Houſe fell upon him immediately, and he "ſharpen'd them againſt him by it. Thoſe "who intended to ſerve him, ſaid, The Heat "that Diſpute had rais'd, which was wholly im- "puted to him, on account of a private Quarrel "he had with Seymour, had put it out of their "power to do it. He took out a Pardon under "the Great Seal. The Lord Chancellor durſt "not venture to paſs it; ſo the King order'd "the Seal to be put to the Pardon in his own "preſence. And thus, according to the Lord "Finch's Figure, when he was afterwards que- "ſtion'd about it, It did not paſs thro' the or- "dinary Methods of Production, but was an im- "mediate Effect of his Majeſty's Power of "creating." He alſo took out a Warrant to be Marquis of Carmarthen, which Title he took afterwards by Patent from King William. The King told the Parliament, the Earl of Danby had done nothing but by his Order, and therefore he had pardon'd him; and if there was any Defect in his Pardon, he would paſs it over and over again, till it ſhould be quite legal. But this was not a Parliament to be talk'd to at that rate; nor was he a Monarch of that high Character, as to give himſelf thoſe Airs.

A. D. 1679.

Earl of Danby's Impeachment.

His ill Conduct.

The King talks imperiouſly to the Parliament for him.

The Houſe of Commons had debated the Impeachment with great Warmth; and Mr. Powle particularly ſaid,

Mr. Speaker,

M. Powle's Speech againſt him.

I ſhould have been pleas'd to have heard ſomewhat omitted, needful to have been ſpoken unto from ſome other Member of this Houſe, rather than my ſelf; it is concerning the Earl of Danby, who ſtands impeach'd by the Commons of England of High Treaſon.

The Perſon to whom we owe the Dangers and Fears of the French King againſt us.

The Perſon to whom we owe the Threats and ſevere Anſwers to thoſe humble Addreſſes we made the laſt Seſſions of Parliament.

The Perſon to whom we owe the Ruin of this Nation, and exhauſting the King's Revenue.

The Perſon to whom we owe the Expence of 200000 Pounds and upwards, within a Year, unaccounted for.

The

A. D. 1679.

The King designs to enslave England.

The Person to whom we owe the raising of a standing Army, to be kept up by the Receipt of six Millions of Livres yearly, for three Years together, to enslave us and our Religion.

The Person to whom we owe the late Bone that was thrown in the Sitting of the last Parliament, to hinder the good Issue that might have come by their Proceedings who is now laying down his Staff, and making up his Accounts in the Treasury as he pleases, to enrich himself out of the Spoils of the People, and so depart.

My humble Motion is, that a Message be sent immediately to the Lords from the Commons of England, to desire their Lordships, that Thomas Earl of Danby be immediately committed to safe Custody, he being impeach'd by the Commons of England of High Treason. And the Lords voting he should be committed, he withdrew, and a Bill of Banishment past the House of Peers, and was sent down to the House of Commons, where Sir Francis Winnington fell upon it furiously; he said, "It was an Act to let all Mini-"sters see the worst Thing that could happen "to them, after they had been engag'd in the "blackest Designs, and had got great Rewards "of Wealth and Honour. All they could suf-"fer was, to be oblig'd to live beyond Sea." This set the House in a flame, and the Court, to quench it, offer'd a Bill to degrade the Earl of Danby from his Peerage, as well as to banish him, and to declare, that, for the future, no Pardon should be pleaded in Bar of an Impeachment: But the House was so exasperated against him, that nothing less than a Prosecution for High Treason would content them. They threw out the Bill of Banishment, and instead of it, order'd a Bill of Attainder to be brought in. The Earl of Essex had been made first Commissioner of the Treasury, and he and the Earl of Sunderland join'd with the Duke of Monmouth, to press the King to change his Counsels, and turn to another Method of Government. Who his Counsellors were, will be seen by the following Order.

May it please your Majesty,

"We have met and consider'd of the Questions "propos'd to us, and do hereby humbly return "our Opinions.

To the First we are of Opinion,

I. "That Foreigners, being Popish Recusants, "and exercising ordinary Trades, but no Mer-"chants, are not excus'd from taking the Oaths, "or finding Sureties.

II. To the Second, "That Foreigners, tho' "certified by Ambassadors to be their Servants, "except they are their menial Servants, are not "excus'd.

III. To the Third, "That Foreigners, tho' "settled House-keepers, being no Travellers or "Foreign Ministers Servants, are not excus'd.

IV. To the Fourth, "That the King's native "Subjects are not excused from taking the "Oaths, being menial Servants to Foreign Mi-"nisters.

V. To the Fifth, "We find no Law that ex-"cuses a Feme Covert, being a Papist, from ta-"king the Oaths, tho' her Husband be a Pro-"testant."

VI. To the Sixth, "That a Popish Recusant "having taken the Oaths, is not bound to find "new Sureties, unless upon a new Tender of the "Oaths he shall refuse to take them.

All which, with great Humility, we submit to your Majesty's Judgment.

One Reading a Lawyer, Sollicitor for the Popiſh Lords in the Tower, inſinuated himſelf into Bedloe's Confidence, and was much in his Company, always preſſing him before others to tell all he knew: He lent him Money very freely, which Bedloe often wanted to ſupport his Extravagancies; and he ſeem'd at firſt to deſign only to find out ſomewhat that ſhould deſtroy the Credit of his Teſtimony: But he ventur'd on other Practices, and offer'd him much Money, if he wou'd turn his Evidence againſt the Popiſh Lords into Hearſay, ſo that it ſhould not come home againſt them. Bedloe acquainted both Prince Rupert and the Earl of Eſſex with the whole Negociation, and plac'd two Witneſſes ſecretly in his Chamber, when Reading was to come to him; at which time, he drew him into Diſcourſes, which diſcover'd the whole Practice of that Corruption. Reading had got a Paper ready drawn, containing Inſtructions how he ſhould ſoften his Depoſitions, ſo as not to affect the Lords: With theſe Witneſſes, and this Paper, Bedloe charg'd Reading. The Witneſſes were Wiggins his Man, and one S—— a worthleſs Branch of a very worthy Family, who was ſome Years ago employ'd in a Villainous Affair againſt the Writer of this Hiſtory, and by a greater Villain than Bedloe. The whole Matter concerning Reading's Subornation was prov'd beyond Contradiction; and as this rais'd Bedloe's Credit, ſo it laid a heavy Load on the Popiſh Lords, of whom the Lord Stafford only offer'd 300 Pounds for this Service. The Proofs were plain againſt Reading, and he was put in the Pillory, where the Multitude ſufficiently pelted him.

The Conſpirators took another Way to deſtroy Oates's Evidence; one of the Earl of Danby's Servants ſwore that Oates made an abominable Attempt upon him, too foul for the Purity of Hiſtory. Another of them depos'd, that Oates's Servants told them many odious things of the King, which look'd like one that intended rather to ruin than to ſave him. Oates's Servants deny'd every Word of it, but faſten'd what was ſaid upon thoſe who had been with him, as a Practice of their's; for which they were pillory'd and pelted, as Reading had been: And to put things of a Sort together, as my Lord of Sarum does, tho' they happen'd not all at once, one Taſborough, who belong'd to the Duke of York, enter'd into a Correſpondence with Dugdale, who was courting a Kinſwoman of his. 'Twas propos'd that Dugdale ſhould ſign a Paper, retracting all he had formerly ſworn, and ſhould upon that go beyond Sea; for which he was promis'd in the Duke's Name a conſiderable Reward: He had written the Paper, as was deſir'd, but he was too cunning for Taſborough, and he prov'd his Practices upon him; for which Taſborough was fin'd, and put in the Pillory. Theſe Contrivances to corrupt the Witneſſes, carry'd on by the Duke of York's, and the Lord Treaſurer's Servants, and by the Popiſh impeach'd Lords Sollicitor, is ſufficient to convince any reaſonable Man, that they were all conſcious of the Validity of the Evidence, and endeavour'd to have it ſtifled by Subornation and Perjury.

The Bill to attaint the Earl of Danby having eaſily paſt the Houſe of Commons, was the Firſt of April ſent up to the Lords by Sir Robert Peyton, but had not ſo eaſy a Paſſage in that Houſe; there were no leſs than three Conferences upon it: The firſt and third manag'd for the Lords by the Earl of Angleſey, and other Lords; the ſecond by the Earl of Huntington, and other Peers; upon whoſe Report, their Lordſhips thought fit to paſs the Bill, and the Earl ſurrender'd himſelf: Upon which he was committed to the Tower, there being a Clauſe in the Bill, which allow'd him a Trial, if he ſurrender'd himſelf by a Time therein mention'd. The Earl, by Advice of the celebrated Lawyer Mr. Pollexfen, inſiſted upon his Pardon; for a Trial muſt have brought the French Money-Letters on the Stage, and what a Figure his Majeſty would then have made there, is eaſy to imagine.

Committed to the Tower.

Mention has been made of the King's Intention to change his Counſels, and Counſellors; which was chiefly owing to the Advice of Sir William Temple, as he repreſents it; but the Biſhop of Salisbury gives the Merit of it to the Duke of Monmouth, Earl of Eſſex, and Earl of Sunderland. Lord Halliſax told the Biſhop, the King would be very willing to have Lord Shaftesbury brought in; for he thought he was only angry in revenge, becauſe he was not employ'd: Sir William Temple tells us, he oppos'd it even with Paſſion; but his Majeſty would not only have him of the Council, but that he ſhould be Preſident of it. The old Council was all made up of Danby's Creatures; the new, of the chief Men of both Houſes of Parliament. This was carry'd with ſuch Secrecy, that it was not ſo much as ſuſpected, till the Day before it was done. The King was weary of the Vexation he had been long in, and deſir'd to be at eaſe: He would have done any thing at that time, as Biſhop Burnet obſerves, to put an end to the Plot, which loſt him what little Credit he had both at home and abroad: He was forc'd at home to diſſemble an extraordinary Zeal in the Proſecution of it, at the ſame time that he could not help ridiculing it upon all Occaſions; and his Friends abroad, who knew him to be as much a Papiſt, as a Man ſo much a Libertine in Principle and Practice could be, muſt be ſhock'd at his giving up ſo many good Catholicks, as were executed for that Conſpiracy.

On the 20th of April, the Privy Council were extraordinarily aſſembled, and the Lord Chan-

A Popular Step. This being one of the moſt popular Steps the King ever took, he went immediately to the Houſe of Lords, and ſending for the Commons, told them what he had done, which was not receiv'd with ſuch general Satisfaction, as might have been expected, becauſe they had no Confidence in the Doer. The Duke's Creatures were ſo excluded out of all Commiſſions, as well as out of the Council, that they gave both him and themſelves for loſt: Yet the King's Inflexibility in the Point of the Succeſſion, ſhews he was ſtill govern'd by his Brother's Maxims; to whoſe Counſels, it was not long before he gave himſelf up entirely. Many wiſe Men ſuſpected all that was doing; they ſaid the King was what he was before, no Change appear'd in him; and all this was only an Artifice to lay the Heat the Nation was in, to gain ſo many Members over to him, and draw Money from the Commons; in which, however, he had not the Succeſs he hop'd for. Biſhop Burnet ſays, "no Part of the Change "that was then made, was more acceptable than "that of the Judges; the Lord Danby had "brought in ſome ſad Creatures to thoſe impor-"tant Poſts, as Scroggs, North, Bertie, Wynd-"ham, Bramſtone, &c." but they were not all remov'd. "Sir William Jones had the new "modelling of the Bench; and he put in very "worthy Men in the room of thoſe ignorant "Judges that were now diſmiſs'd."

Suſpected.

Bad Judges.

We have mention'd the Change in the Admiralty: That Commiſſion was given to Sir Henry Capel, Sir Humphry Winch, Sir Thomas Meers, Daniel Finch, Edward Vaughan, and Edward Hales, Eſqs; A. D. 1679. Lords of the Admiralty.

On the 1ſt of May, the Commons reviv'd a Committee to conſider what Part of the Money given for disbanding the Army is yet undiſpos'd of, and remaining in the Exchequer; and a Week after, an Act paſt the Royal Aſſent, to raiſe 206462 l. for disbanding the Forces rais'd ſince the 29th of September 1677. and the Commiſſioners appointed to disband them were Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Sir Thomas Player, Col. Birch, and Col. Whitley.

On the 5th of May the Houſe of Commons reſolv'd, "That the Pardon pleaded by the Earl "of Danby, was illegal and void, and ought not "to be allow'd, in bar of the Impeachment of "the Commons of England;" which one would think a ſmall Portion of Underſtanding and Honeſty might have led People into; for then ſuch Impeachments, which are the greateſt Security they have for their Rights and Liberties, would be of no more Force than the Court pleas'd, and ill Miniſters might as eaſily procure a Pardon for the Crimes they committed, as they had procur'd the Power to commit them. The ſame Day the Speaker, with the Houſe, went up to the Lords Bar, and demanded Judgment againſt the Earl, who ſtood to his Plea of Pardon; and the Lords Petre, Bellaſis, Stafford, Arundel, and Powis, having given in their Anſwers to the Commons Impeachment, a Difference aroſe between the two Houſes, about the Biſhops being preſent at the Trials of theſe Lords. The Biſhops had ſtuck cloſe to the King and his Counſels, and his Majeſty was very deſirous to ſtick to them as his faſt Friends. Many of them had been promoted by Danby's Intereſt, and theſe were ſure to be a Part of the Dead Weight on all Occaſions, when Spiritual and Temporal Liberty was in queſtion. It was ſaid that tho the Biſhops had no Right to vote in the final Judgment; yet they might vote in all Preliminaries: In the Caſe of the Earl of Danby, the allowing or not allowing the Pardon to be good was but preliminary; and yet the whole Matter was concluded by it: which induc'd the Commons to inſiſt upon it, That the Biſhops ought not to have any Vote in any Proceedings upon Impeachments againſt the Lords in the Tower. The Lords voted that they had a Right to ſtay in Court in Capital Caſes, till the Court gave Judgment; which Vote was ſtrenuouſly oppos'd by the Earl of Shaftesbury, Earl of Eſſex, the Lord Hollis, and other Peers; and as ſtrenuouſly eſpous'd by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Roberts, &c.

Lord Hollis writes againſt Hunt.

There was one Thomas Hunt, Eſq; a doughty Author, who wrote for the Affirmative in this grand Queſtion; but in the Negative appear'd the Lord Hollis, aſſiſted by thoſe famous Antiquaries, William Pettyt, Eſq; of the Inner Temple; and Mr. Atwood, of Gray's Inn: but I have often thought how Titus, Timothy, and the Primitive Chriſtian Biſhops, would have taken it to have been put upon Trials in Caſes of Blood; and yet the Then Biſhops were very hard to be perſuaded to withdraw in ſuch a Caſe, which there is not one Layman in a thouſand, but would be glad to be excuſed from, it being a kind of Jury upon Life and Death. The Commons were not ſatisfy'd with their involuntary withdrawing, and leaving a Proteſt behind them, that it was their Right to aſſiſt in Trials of Blood; and reſolv'd on the 24th of May, that they would not proceed to the Trial of the Popiſh Lords, before Judgment be given on the Earl of Danby's Pardon. They alſo voted, that no Commoner ſhould plead the Validity of that Pardon at the Lords Bar; and upon this Difference between the two Houſes, his Majeſty three Days after prorogu'd them to the 24th of Auguſt, as well to ſcreen the five Popiſh impeach'd Lords, as the Earl of Danby. The Force of whoſe Proſecution, ſays the judicious Acherley, could not be avoided or baffled, but by reſorting to that inglorious Practice of diſperſing the Parliament, and deſerting the Courſe of Juſtice.

Biſhops cenſured.

The Biſhops Behaviour on this occaſion was much cenſur'd, and they loſt the Good-will of the People ſo generally, that they thought of ſecuring their Honour, Revenues, Powers, and Prerogatives, by aſſerting the unlimited Authority of the Sovereign, and the indiſpenſable Duty of the Subject in Paſſive Obedience. My Lord of Sarum acknowledges, the Biſhops were expoſed to the Popular Fury, and every where cenſur'd, as a Set of Men, that for their own Ends, and for every Punctilio that they pretended to, would expoſe the Nation, and the Proteſtant Religion to ruin. The greater part of the Clergy delivered themſelves up to much Heat and Indiſcretion, which was vented both in their Pulpits, and common Converſation, and moſt particularly at the Elections of Parliament-Men, which drew much Hatred and Cenſure upon them: They ſeem'd now to lay down all Fears and Apprehenſions of Popery; and nothing was ſo common in their Mouths, as the Year Forty-One; being ſo ignorant and ſtupid, as not to know, that the very Parliament that brought in the King, juſtify'd the Cauſe of the Forty-One Parliament, till the Force was put on them by the Soldiery, and that it was founded in Right and Reaſon. But indeed, the Stupidity and Ignorance of thoſe Pulpiteers, were equal to their Malice and Rage; Biſhop Burnet informs us, that they learn'd their Leſſons of the execrable L'Eſtrange, who corrupted them, and the vileſt Part of the People, with his Penny Papers; and out of this Corruption grew that odious Faction, call'd Tories, a Name given to the wildeſt of the Wild Iriſh.

Tories.

Moderate Churchmen, and Proteſtant Diſſenters, thought it high time to oppoſe thoſe dangerous Tenets, which inſenſibly led them to Popery and Slavery; and this they did with great Zeal in andout of Parliament; for which their lewd Adverſaries fix'd the Term Whig upon them, by way of Reproach, as being ſuch another Sort of Men, as the Cameronian Covenanters in Scotland: And from theſe Beginnings roſe at this time, the two Parties which have ſince divided the Nation.

Whigs.

Bill of Excluſion.

Before the Prorogation of the Parliament, the Bill of Excluſion was brought into the Houſe of Commons, as the only way to quiet Peoples Fears on account of the Duke's Succeſſion. The Leaders in both Houſes who were for it, had well conſider'd the Matter before this bold, but neceſſary Step, was agreed upon. The Earl of Shaftesbury's Project was for excluding him ſimply, and making the Succeſſion to go on as if he was dead, as the only Mean which was eaſy and ſafe both for the Crown and the People. This was nothing but the diſinheriting the next Heir; which certainly the King and Parliament might do, ſays the Biſhop of Salisbury, as well as any private Man might diſinherit his next Heir, if he had a mind to it. The King would not conſent to this. He had faithfully promis'd the Duke that he never would. And he thought if Acts of Excluſion were once begun, it would not be eaſy to ſtop them, but that upon any Diſcontent at the next Heir, they would be ſet a-foot. But the King's Thoughts ran upon every thing more than the Security of the Religion and Liberty of his Country. People will never be diſcontented at the next Heir, unleſs their Liberty and Religion are in the utmoſt danger, and then to ſet a-foot Excluſion, is both juſt and neceſſary. People are not ſo delighted with the Difficulties and Dangers in altering Succeſſions, as to run into it out of Humour or Wantonneſs. The truth is, King Charles hated the Conſtitution of England, as it is Free and Proteſtant, and did not care what became of it, as long as his Family was in the Saddle. The Earl of Eſſex, and the Lord Halliſax propos'd ſuch Limitations of the Duke's Authority, when the Crown ſhould devolve to him, as would diſable him from doing any Harm either to Church or State: Such as the taking out of his hands all Power in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, the Diſpoſal of the publick Money, with the Power of Peace and War: All theſe to be lodg'd in both Houſes of Parliament; and that whatever Parliament was in being, or the laſt that had been in being at the King's Death, ſhould meet without a new Summons; which, with other Limitations, was by the King's Command propos'd to the Parliament in a Speech of the Lord Finch's. The Lord Shaftesbury argu'd againſt it, as much more prejudicial to the Crown, than the Excluſion of one Heir; for this chang'd the whole Government, and ſet up a Democracy inſtead of a Monarchy. Biſhop Burnet obſerves, "That Lord Halliſax's arguing ſo much againſt "the Danger of turning the Monarchy to be "elective, was the more extraordinary in him, "becauſe he had made an Hereditary Monar-"chy the Subject of his Mirth; and had often ſaid, Who takes a Coach-man to drive him, becauſe his Father was a good Coachman? Yet he was now jealous of a ſmall Slip in the Succeſſion; but he at the ſame time ſtudy'd to infuſe into ſome a Zeal for a Commonwealth, of which, as appears by his Writings, he thought as favourably as a Man could do, who expected ſtill more Honours from the King; who, in good Reigns, is the Fountain of all Honour. Upon this Difference of Opinion, a Faction was quickly form'd in the new Council. The Lords Eſſex, Sunderland, and Halliſax, were for Limitations. The Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Ruſſel, and Mr. Powle, were for the Excluſion. Sir William Temple all this while trimm'd between both. He was probably in opinion for the Excluſion; but finding the King ſo inflexibly againſt it, he talk'd to him of Limitations only. The Duke was ſtruck almoſt dead when he heard the News at Bruſſels, that the Lord Chancellor had propos'd the Limitations to both Houſes of Parliament. My Lord of Sarum informs us, That he ſaw a Letter ter written by his Dutchess the next Day, wherein she wrote, That as for all the HIGH Things which were said by their Enemies, they look'd for them; but the Speech of the Lord Chancellor's was a Surprize, and a great Mortification to them. Their Apprehensions of that did not hang long upon them. The Exclusion became the popular Expedient. Accordingly, after much debating, a Bill was order'd for excluding the Duke of York. Indeed the Limitations seem'd to be, as was then said, Hedging in the Cuckow by the Wise Men of Gotham. Were not the Practices of the Stuartine Race too well known for them to be trusted again in the Bonds of Acts of Parliament? Had not all of those Princes broke thro' all such Obligations? Nay, had not this very King been limited by the Triennial Act, which Limitation he soon got over, and instead of three Years, kept his Parliament twice three times three Years? I do not repeat the Bishop of Salisbury's many Arguments for and against the Exclusion Bill, because we who have liv'd since, and have seen the want of that Exclusion make an Abdication Act necessary, after great Tyranny and Oppression, must detest or despise all Arguments against it; and for it, is to be added, every Argument that was for the Revolution. When the Question was put in the House for committing the Bill of Exclusion, the Yea's were 207, the No's 1285 but it went no farther that Session.

Before I proceed to the Inquiry into the State of the Pension Affair in the last Parliament, I must correct an Error in Bishop Burnet's Memoirs relating to the Bishops Votes in capital Cases. The reverend Author tells us, that Dr. Stillingfleet gave, upon this Occasion, a great Proof of his being able to make himself Master of any Argument which he undertook. If the Bishop of Salisbury ever read his Controversy with Mr. Locke, he could not but see he was not Master of that Argument; and we are told, his being baffled in it was one means of shortening his Days. In this Argument, he did not drive Lord Hollis off the Stage, as Bishop Burnet tells us; After the Lord Hollis and others had writ many Books about it, Stillingfleet publish'd a Treatise that discover'd more Skill: whereas that Lord wrote after Dr. Stillingfleet, whom he mentions in the Preface to his Considerations, in answer to the Doctor's grand Question.

Pensioners in the last Parliament.

In May the House of Commons inquired into the Affair of the Pensioners in the last Parliament, when they were passing the excellent Church Acts, so often mention'd. On which account it is, that Echard is not willing to think the following Journal of that House true.

Sir Richard Wiseman and Sir *John Copleston*e, were allow'd to keep Open-House at the foot of the Parliament Stairs. So numerous were these Hirelings in that Assembly, that if any Point was carry'd there on the Side of the Country, it was often but by the poor Majority of two or three Voices. An Instance of their Integrity and Uprightness, appears in Mr. Bertie's Case,

A. D. 1679.

Caſe, at a Committee of Elections between him and Mr. Trenchard: It being carry'd for Mr. Bertie, the Lord Obrian, who was related to the then Lord Treaſurer the Earl of Danby, came to him in triumph with the News, crying out, My Lord, we have carry'd the Day, and voted thirteen more than one-and-twenty. The Charges of the Election of the Penſioners were defray'd, that of Northampton amounting to 14000 l. They all knew their Pay-day, inſomuch that a great Officer was pleas'd to ſay, They came about him like ſo many Jackdaws for Cheeſe, at the End of every Seſſions. But many of theſe Penſioners, finding at laſt that all was at ſtake, and that whatever they had of their own, as well as whatever they had got out of the Court, was in danger of being made a Prey to the French and Papiſts, began to be reſty; and, tho' late, to attone for their paſt Errors, by their Zeal againſt both the Papiſts and the French. His Majeſty himſelf ask'd a lofty Weſt-Saxon, the Captain of the Band, What was the reaſon of this Revolt of ſome of the Troops? The Weſt-Saxon reply'd, They had been of late neglected, and the Beaſts only bellow'd for Fodder.

By the Records of the Exchequer, under the Article of Secret Service, it appears there was paid in three Years 294,916 l. 11 s. 4 d. in Mr. Bertie's Name, beſides 84,640 l. to be diſtributed by him in New-Year's Gifts, as he ſhould be privately directed.

On the 10th of May, both Houſes of Parliament addreſs'd the King, that for the Security of the City againſt the Deſigns of the Papiſts, the Militia be immediately rais'd. And the next Day being Sunday, the Commons reſolv'd, Nemine Contradicente, That in defence of the King's Perſon, and the Proteſtant Religion, this Houſe doth declare, That they will ſtand by his Majeſty with their Lives and Fortunes; and that if his Majeſty ſhould come by any violent Death, they will revenge it to the utmoſt upon the Papiſts. Which Vote was drawn up in form of an Addreſs, and preſented to the King; whoſe Anſwer was, Gentlemen, I thank you for your Zeal for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, and of my Perſon. And I aſſure you I ſhall do what in me lies, to ſecure the Proteſtant Religion, and am willing to do all ſuch Things as may tend to the Good and Benefit of my Subjects. Three Days after, Mr. Powle brought a Meſſage from him for Money for a Fleet, but the Commons put off the Debate of it, tho' they ſeem'd to have more Care of the King than he had of himſelf: For as Coke obſerves, He not only countenanc'd the Plotters, but ridicul'd the Plot. In his Speech at the opening of this Parliament, he told them, He had not been idle in diſcovering the Plot; and in the laſt, told Sir William Temple he was diſpleas'd with the Earl of Danby, for bringing it into Parliament againſt his abſolute Command. This is what the Archdeacon calls his fine Talent of Diſſimulation; which is as inconſiſtent with Honour, as Fraud is with Honeſty. But he did not ſo well diſſemble as not to be perceiv'd. Coke adds, Oliver's Profeſſions and Actions never appear'd ſo hypocritical and deceitful, as this King's. As to the Plot, the ſame Author proceeds; " It was prov'd " by a Cloud of Witneſſes, agreeing in the Man- " ner and Circumſtances of it; many of whom " had never ſeen one another before they gave " their Teſtimonies." Then he anſwers a threadbare Objection, much inſiſted upon by Mr. Echard, and not a little by Biſhop Burnet. Tho' they both ſeem to me to object ſuperciliouſly, becauſe they would not be thought credulous, and to have weak Minds, which are ſoon impos'd on. The Objection is, The Witneſſes were of ſuſpected Fame, and therefore no Credit ought to be given to them; which, according to Coke, will admit of a two-fold Anſwer.

Warm Vote againſt the Papiſts.

The King's Diſſimulation.

" Firſt, Truth is one, and conſiſts in entire " Parts; whereas Error and Falſhood are in- " finite; and therefore it had been impoſſible, " that Mowbray and Bolron, two of the Wit- " neſſes, who had never ſeen Oates and Bedloe, " two other Witneſſes, before they gave their " Teſtimonies; and Bedloe, who had never " known Mowbray, Bolron, nor Oates, ſhould " concur not only in the Deſign of killing the " King, but in the Manner, Place and Circum- " ſtances of it. The Evidence of the Plot juſtify'd.

" Secondly, Admit theſe Mens Evidences " might not have been credited in other Caſes; " but it is fit to diſtinguiſh Caſes Criminal " from Caſes Civil. In Civil Caſes, Men may " make Elections of what Witneſſes they pleaſe; " and it is their fault if they make not uſe of " Men of known Integrity and Repute, that " more Credit may be given to their Evidence; " and the End of Civil Actions and Contracts " is, that they may be known: but immoral " and wicked Actions are Deeds of Darkneſs, " and contriv'd ſo as that they may not be " known; and one never comes to the Know- " ledge of them, unleſs by accident, or from " the Conſpirators themſelves. Suppoſe one " Man only ſees a Murderer, or a Thief kill or " rob another, if his Teſtimony ſhall not be " taken, becauſe he is otherwiſe an ill Man, " multitudes of Murders and Thefts might paſs " unpuniſhed. Thus, if Cicero, when Fulvia " firſt diſcover'd Catiline's Conſpiracy to him, " had told her ſhe was a Whore, and no Cre- " dit was to be given to any thing ſhe ſaid, " Rome might have been in a flame as London " was, and all the Senators Throats might have " been cut.

" But admit no Credit could be given to any " or all theſe Mens Teſtimonies, who were all " Roman Catholicks, I would know what Ob- " jection could be againſt Mr. Jenniſon, a Gen- " tleman of Birth and Fortune, who gave no E- " vidence at Ireland's, Wakeman's, Pickering's " or Grove's Trials, and chang'd his Religion, " when he heard that Ireland, who was his Fa- " ther Confeſſor, at his Death, deny'd he was in " Town, but in Staffordſhire, when Oates and " Grove's Maid ſaid he was in London in Au- " guſt 1678; whereas he knew the contrary, " and depos'd, that in Auguſt 1678, when Ire- " land, at his Death, declar'd he was in Staf- " fordſhire, Ireland told Mr. Jenniſon in Lon- " don, when he was newly return'd from Wind- " ſor, how eaſily the King might be taken off, " and ask'd Mr. Jenniſon if he would be one of " them, who ſhould go to Windſor, and aſſiſt at " the taking off the King, proffering to remit " 200 Pounds. which Jenniſon ow'd Ireland, if " he would. Then Ireland ask'd if he knew any " ſtout Iriſh Men; Jenniſon anſwer'd, he knew " Capt. Lavalian, Mr Kerney, Brohal and " Wilſon. Ireland told him, he knew Lavalian " and Wilſon, and ask'd him again if he would " go with them, and aſſiſt them in taking off the " King. He then ſaid he was going to the Club, " where Mr. Coleman, Mr. Lavalian and Kerney " would be, and he wanted 80 Pounds, which " he deſir'd Jenniſon to return him. The latter " farther depoſed, That his Brother Mr. Tho- " mas Jenniſon, a Jeſuit, ſaid, If C. R. will " not be R. C. he ſhall not be long C. R. which " he interpreted to be, Si Carolus Rex non " eſſet Rex Catholicus, non diu foret Rex Ca- " rolus. If King Charles will not be a Catho- " lick

Mr. Jenniſon's Evidence.

A. D. 1679.

" lick King, he ſhall not be long King Charles ; " and that it was no great Sin to take him off. " Jenniſon deſiring a Commiſſion in the new-" rais'd Army, his Brother the Jeſuit told him, " he would procure him one from the Duke of " York ; and that there was another Army to be " rais'd after the King was kill'd. About this " time there was a general Rumour of a Page " being ſtabb'd upon a Couch in the Night at " Windſor. The King, who had been drinking " very hard, lay down upon it, wrapt up in his " Cloak ; but Prince Rupert coming to him, " with ſome difficulty prevail'd on him to go to " Bed. The King throws off his Cloak, which " a Page ſeeing on the Couch, wrapt himſelf up " in it, and lay down on the Couch, where 'tis " ſuppos'd he was ſtabb'd in miſtake for the " King, who had been dogg'd to that Place."

Being come to the Trials of more of the Plotters, I was willing to clear up the Evidence againſt them ſtill further ; and this of Jenniſon proves the Lye in Ireland's Mouth, even with his laſt Breath ; and that he propos'd the killing of the King to him in London, at the very time when, with his laſt Words, he declar'd he was in Staffordſhire. The Particulars of Jenniſon's Teſtimony have that Air of Nature and Truth, that 'tis impoſſible not to be convinc'd by them ; and as it confirms the Teſtimonies of Oates, Bedloe, Dugdale, &c. there is no room to ſuſpect Impoſture in the latter. What ſaid an ingenious Writer, contemporary with theſe Facts! Theſe and innumerable other Diſcouragements hath the Plot met with, which, being obſerv'd, together with the due Circumſtances of the Evidence, I think, no Man that is not in the whole or part of the Plot himſelf, can doubt the Truth of it. Indeed, at the firſt, many thought to caſt a Suſpicion upon what Oates and Bedloe inform'd, as being two Perſons of vicious Life and Converſation. But how ridiculous is this? As if ſuch Rogues would truſt ſuch a Villany with honeſt Men, or any but thoſe that had been as bad as themſelves ; you might as well expect a High-way-man ſhould go and acquaint my Lord Chief Juſtice, when and where he meant to commit the next Robbery. So that from the Nature of the Evidence, or Credit of the Informants, no Man can take exception againſt the Information of Dr. Oates, or Mr. Bedloe, or any of the reſt, to whom Mr. Jenniſon has lately given no ſmall Credit, in diſcovering the four Villains, that, as Mr. Oates had ſaid, were to have aſſaſſinated his Majeſty.

The King ſullen.

The King, upon the Prorogation of the Parliament, became ſullen and thoughtful. He found he had to do with People that could neither be manag'd nor frighten'd. From this time his Temper was obſerv'd to change very viſibly. He began to give hard Names to Things and Perſons, and the Plot hanging on him ſtill, he knew not how to meet his Parliament, without continuing the Proſecution of the Plotters ; ſo five of the Jeſuits that had been accus'd of it, were brought to their Trial : They were, Thomas Whitebread, their Provincial ; William Harcourt, the reputed Rector of London ; John Fenwick, their Procurator in England ; John Gawen and Anthony Turner, Men of great Gravity and Learning, ſays Echard. Oates repeated againſt them his former Evidence, and they prepar'd a great Defence againſt it. For ſixteen People came over from their Houſe at St. Omers, who teſtify'd, that Oates had ſtay'd among them all the while, from December 77, till June 78 ; ſo that he could not poſſibly be in London in the April between, at thoſe Conſultations, where it was reſolv'd to kill the King, as he had ſworn. This they remember'd the more particularly, becauſe he ſat at the Table by himſelf in the Refectory, which made his being there to be the more obſerv'd ; for as he was not mix'd with the Scholars, ſo neither was he admitted to the Jeſuit's Table. They ſaid he was among them every day, except one or two, in which he was in the Infirmary. They alſo teſtified, that ſome of thoſe, whom he ſwore came over with him into England, to the Grand Conſultation in April, ſtaid all that Summer in Flanders. This Evidence gives great Satisfaction to Mr. Archdeacon, who does not ſeem to be at all pleas'd with what follows. Oates produc'd ſeven or eight Perſons, who depos'd, that they ſaw him in England about the beginning of May, and that he being known formerly to them in a Clergyman's Habit, they had obſerv'd him ſo much the more, by reaſon of the Change in his Dreſs ; with one of theſe he had din'd. Echard adds the Teſtimony of an Iſlington Schoolmaſter to the ſame purpoſe, only becauſe he afterwards retracted it. 'Tho' then he ſpoke home, which no body elſe did, a notorious Falſity ; for the Perſon who ſwore Oates din'd with him, at the time the St. Omers Boys ſwore he din'd in Flanders, ſpoke home. But there was another Evidence that ſpoke ſtill more home, and that was an old Dominican Friar, who was ſtill of the Church and Order, and depos'd, that he ſaw him, and ſpoke frequently with him at that very time. By this, ſays Biſhop Burnet, the Credit of the St. Omers Scholars was quite blaſted. There was no reaſon to miſtruſt thoſe who had no Intereſt in the matter, and ſwore, that they ſaw Oates about that time ; whereas the Evidence given by the Scholars bred in the Jeſuits College, when it was to ſave the Lives of ſome of their Order, was liable to a very juſt Suſpicion. Oates, ſays Echard, produc'd one, and but one Witneſs, who did affirm, they ſaw Ireland in London, when he ſwore he was there ; but I can produce two Witneſſes, as Grove's Maid, and Mr. Jenniſon, both before mention'd. Bedloe ſwore the Plot for killing the King, and raiſing a Popiſh Army, againſt them all ; and Prance ſwore it againſt Harcourt. Dugdale gave in the Evidence before ſpoken of, the Letter from Whitebread to Evers about the Aſſaſſins hir'd to kill the King. He alſo mention'd the Letter he had receiv'd concerning Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's Murther, which the Lord Chief Juſtice took particular notice of, in ſumming up the Evidence, and when he ſpoke to the Priſoners : This will ſtick, I aſſure you, Sirs, upon all your Party. While this Gentleman's Blood lies upon you, it muſt be yet further told you, that in what you did do, you have given us a Specimen of what you would do. We have a Teſtimony, that, for promoting your Cauſe, you would not ſtick at the Proteſtants Blood. You began with Sir Edmundbury Godfrey ; but who knows where you would have made an end? It was this Man you kill'd in his Perſon, but in Effigy the whole Nation. It was in one Man's Blood your Hands were imbru'd ; but your Souls were dipt in the Blood of us all. This was a Handſel only of what was to follow ; and ſo long as we are convinc'd you kill'd him, we cannot but believe you would alſo kill the King. We cannot but believe you would make us all away, that ſtand in the way of your Religion. A Religion which, according to what it is, you would bring in upon us, by a Converſion of us with Blood, and by a Baptiſm with Fire. God keep the Land from one, and the City from the other. The Jury, after a ſhort Conſideration, brought all the five Priſoners in guilty. But Sentence was reſpited till the next day, June 14th.

A. D. 1679. Langhorn try'd.

When Richard Langhorn Eſq; Counſellor at Law, of the Temple, and a bigotted Papiſt, was brought to his Trial at the Old Bailey. Oates ſwore he ſaw a Letter of his to a Foreign Papiſt, where he had written with his own Hand, We have now a fair Opportunity to begin or give the Blow; that by order of Whitebread, he gave Mr. Langhorn an Account of the Reſolve at the Grand Conſult, April the 24th, to kill the King; and that Langhorn lifting up his Hands and Eyes, ſaid, God give you a good Succeſs. That he ſaw ſeveral Commiſſions in his Chambers, ſign'd by Johannes Paulus de Oliva, by virtue of a Brief from the Pope; as one to Lord Arundel, to be Lord Chancellor; to Lord Powis, to be Treaſurer; and to Langhorn himſelf, to be Advocate General; that he was diſguſted that G. Wakeman was not content with 10000 Pounds to poiſon the King. Bedloe ſwore that he brought Letters from Harcourt to Langhorn, ſpecifying, that the Lord Bellaſis, and the reſt concern'd, ſhould be ready, for that their Spaniſh Correſpondents had ſent ſome Iriſh diſbanded Soldiers to land at Milford, &c. Langhorn made uſe of the St. Omers Boys; but their Evidence ſeem'd to be ſo baffled, that it ſerv'd him in no ſtead; and the Jury having brought him in Guilty, he and the five Jeſuits receiv'd Sentence together, to be hang'd, drawn and quarter'd, at the pronouncing of which there was a very great Acclamation in the Hall. They all of them ſuffer'd at Tyburn, and went off like Ireland, denying the Facts prov'd againſt them with their laſt Breath; but their Denials made no Impreſſion on the People, the Belief being general, that they thought it lawful to utter the greateſt Falſhoods and Lyes in favour of their Religion and Cauſe.

Scroggs check'd.

The Court began to grow weary of indulging the zealous Proteſtants in the Proſecution of the Plot; and it was intimated to Scroggs, the Chief Juſtice, that he muſt abate of his Fury, if he hop'd for Favour; and we ſhall find he will change his Tone in the Trial of Sir George Wakeman, and turn his Rage againſt the Witneſſes, which he had hitherto very inhumanly employ'd againſt the Criminals.

Turns againſt the Evidence.

The Diviſion in the new Privy Council, made the King as uneaſy as the ill Humour of the Parliament. The Time of the Prorogation being almoſt expir'd, and Matters not very well prepar'd for their Meeting, moſt of the Lords of the Council were for putting off the Seſſion to October, and a Day was appointed for conſidering the Matter in full Council. The Earls of Sunderland, Eſſex, the Lord Halliſax, and Sir William Temple, were for diſſolving this Parliament, and calling a new one. The Duke of Monmouth, now in the height of his Glory and Intereſt, the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Lord Ruſſel, and Lord Cavendiſh, were for the Parliament's meeting; ſo was the Lord Chancellor Finch, and the firſt that ſpoke againſt the Diſſolution, in which he was powerfully ſeconded by the Earl of Shaftesbury, and even by the Marquis of Worceſter, the Earls of Arlington and Angleſey, who had not been conſulted with before hand, and knew nothing of the King's Intention, which being explain'd to them by Sir William Temple, 'twas carry'd, that the Parliament ſhould be diſſolv'd, and his Majeſty order'd the Chancellor to draw up a Proclamation for it, the 10th of July; in which alſo a new Parliament was ſummon'd to meet the 19th of October. But the Diſſolution gave general Diſguſt; and I do not ſee wherein Sir William Temple and his three Aſſociates, Eſſex, Sunderland and Halliſax, ſhew'd their Wiſdom or their Love to their Country, by putting the King upon it. What a ſenſeleſs Reflection have we in Echard, on the Zeal of the Proteſtant Party againſt Papiſts in the new Elections. The Leaders encreas'd the Noiſe of Popery, French Penſioners, and Arbitrary Government; as if Matters, ſo well known, and prov'd, were nothing but the Noiſe and Clamour of Faction. Had the King no Penſion from France? Had the Commons, who voted the perſecuting Acts, no Penſions from the King? Was not the late perpetual Prorogations and Diſſolutions of Parliaments, Arbitrary Government?

Parliament diſſolv'd.

A. D. 1679. A new one call'd.

Sir G. Wakeman's Trial.

The Trial of Sir George Wakeman, Phyſician to the Queen, William Marſhal and James Corker, two Benedictine Monks, and William Rumſey, a Lay-Brother of that Order, came on at the Old Baily, the 18th of July, before Scroggs Lord Chief Juſtice, and other Judges, who had been acquainted with the Diſpoſition of the Court in this Matter. Oates ſwore, That the Priſoner, in the Month of July 78. ſending a Letter to Aſhby the Jeſuit, of Inſtructions, how he ſhould order himſelf, before he went to and at the Bath, whither he was going, did afterwards in the ſame Letter write, The Queen will aſſiſt me to poiſon the King; which he knew to be his Hand-writing, becauſe, ſome two days after, he ſaw Sir George at Aſhby's Lodging, ſit in a writing Poſture, and then lay by his Pen, and roſe up, and going away, left behind him a written Paper wet with the Ink, being an Apothecary's Bill; and the Hand of this Paper, ſo left by Sir George, was the ſame with that of the forementioned Letter to Aſhby. He further ſwore, that he was to have 15000 Pounds for poiſoning the King; and that he ſaw a Receipt ſign'd by Wakeman, for 5000 Pounds, part of the 15000. And Bedloe depos'd, that he heard Harcourt and Wakeman treat about poiſoning the King, and ſaw Harcourt deliver Wakeman a Bill for 2000 Pounds, part of the 15000, ſaying, Sir George, this muſt be well follow'd, becauſe ſo much depends upon it: for if we ſhould miſs to kill him at Windſor, or you miſs in your way, we will do it at Newmarket. Echard owns, that as ſoon as Bedloe had given this Evidence, Wakeman ſaid privately to his Fellow Priſoners, There is my Buſineſs done. The Teſtimony given by Oates is very plain and poſitive; ſo is Bedloe's, nothing can be plainer; and the firſt Proof Wakeman produc'd againſt it, was as weak and trifling a one as ever was produc'd by Guilt, a piece of a Letter of Directions to Aſhby, wherein the Queen was not nam'd; and when Oates ſaid that was not the Letter he ſaw, Wakeman, ſays Echard, argued, how improbable it was, he ſhould write two Letters about the ſame Thing. Tho' nothing is more probable, than that a Phyſician might write two Letters about the ſame Thing to his Patient, at the latter's Importunity or Deſire to have ſome Particulars farther explain'd, or on ſome Alteration in the Diſtemper, or Miſcarriage of a former Letter, or that a Letter might be written on purpoſe to confront Oates's Evidence. As to Sir Philip Floyd's witneſſing, that Oates had, before the Council, declar'd the Letter about Wakeman's poiſoning the King, was from Whitebread to Fenwick; and that with Hands up-lifted, Oates ſhould ſay, God forbid I ſhould accuſe Sir George Wakeman, for I know nothing more of him: 'tis too Theatrical to be genuine; but if it were, every one knew that Oates had then paſt thro' a long fatiguing Examination, that his Spirits were quite ſpent. Coke tells us, Oates was then ſo tir'd, weak, and confounded with his other Evidence, that he was ſcarce able to ſtand; and his Head not being the moſt clear, at the beſt, it is not at all ſtrange, that it was then ſo con-confus'd, as to forget many Paſſages, which he recover'd upon Recollection. The truth is this: Scroggs was a lewd, inſolent, mercenary Wretch, who would not have been ſuffer'd on a Bench of Juſtice in better Times; and it is aſtoniſhing that he did ever let his Rage looſe againſt the Popiſh Aſſaſſins and Conſpirators. The Court permitted him at firſt to cajole the People; but as ſoon as he underſtood it was not pleaſing to the King, he endeavour'd to attone for the paſt, by his ſhameleſs Behaviour towards the Witneſſes for the future. Biſhop Burnet tells us, this wicked Judge was more valu'd for a Readineſs in Speaking, than either for Learning in his Profeſſion, or any moral Virtue. His Life was indecently ſcandalous, and his Fortunes were very low. He was rais'd by the Earl of Danby's Favour. And it was a melancholy thing to ſee ſo bad, ſo ignorant, ſo poor a Man rais'd up to that great Poſt. When he ſaw the King had an ill Opinion of the Plot, he grew cold in the Purſuit of it. He began to neglect and check the Witneſſes. This is the unjuſt Judge, whom Echard extols for his ſtrict Carriage, and a bragging Speech he made concerning Wakeman's Trial, upon the firſt day of Michaelmas Term; That he was neither afraid nor aſham'd of what he had done. And the Reverend Hiſtorian adds, Maſter Juſtice Jones, and Maſter Juſtice Dolben, appear'd as Compurgators of the Honeſty and Integrity of the Chief Juſtice. If there is one Miniſter or Magiſtrate viler than another, he does not fail to load him with Eulogy. Sir William Jones, the ſuppoſed Author of the juſt and modeſt Vindication of the two laſt Parliaments, and the greateſt Lawyer of his Time, ſays, not only Scroggs, but his Compurgators behav'd themſelves very unlike the ſame Men they were. Nor did they fear the Perverſion of Juſtice, but the Miſapplication of Mercy, &c. Wakeman and the Prieſts were by their nefarious Conduct acquitted; but Wakeman did not think fit to truſt again to his Innocence; for he fled out of England as ſoon as he got his Liberty. I have intimated elſewhere, that I believe People were miſtaken in their Cenſures of the Queen, with reſpect to the Popiſh Plot; but it is very natural to think, that the chief Plotters gave out they were countenanc'd by her, to engage and hearten others in the Plot. The Queen got a Man of great Quality to be ſent over Ambaſſador from Portugal, not knowing how much ſhe might ſtand in need of ſuch a Protection. For both Oates and Bedloe had depos'd at Wakeman's Trial, that they were told, ſhe was to aſſiſt him to poiſon the King. The Ambaſſador went the next day, with great State, to thank Scroggs, and probably to pay him for his good Offices in that Trial. The Biſhop of Salisbury writes of it; If he meant well by this Compliment, it was very unadviſedly done; for the Chief Juſtice was expos'd to much Cenſure by it.

Scroggs a wicked Judge.

An Incident or two of great Importance happening now in Scotland, we muſt review the Tranſactions in that Kingdom, and in Ireland, from the Time where we left off.

Scotland.

The Duke of Lauderdale had maſter'd all Oppoſition in Scotland ſo entirely, that there ſeem'd no room for the leaſt hope of Relief againſt the Tyranny of a Perſon univerſally hated and abhorr'd. The Field-Meetings encreas'd mightily. Men came to them arm'd, and great Numbers were out-law'd upon it. A Writ was iſſu'd, which was in the obſolete Laws, call'd Intercommuning, becauſe it made all who harbour'd ſuch Perſons, or did not ſeize them when they had it in their power, to be involv'd in the ſame Guilt. By this means many apprehending a ſevere Proſecution, left their Houſes, and went about in Bands, which the Privy Council pretended was a State of War.

A. D. 1679.

And upon an old Statute, which was almoſt quite forgotten, it was maintain'd, that the King had a Power to take any Caſtle, that lay convenient for his Forces, and put a Garriſon in it: Thus twelve Houſes were mark'd out, of which, two were the chief Dwelling-Houſes of two Peers: The reſt were the Houſes of Gentlemen, who had gone into the Party againſt Duke Lauderdale. And tho' theſe were Houſes of no ſtrength, and not at all properly ſituated for the ſuppreſſing of Field Meetings; yet they were taken, and Soldiers put in them, whom the Countries about were requir'd to furniſh with all Neceſſaries, which was againſt the expreſs Words of the Law, that had lately ſettled the Militia; and an Act of Tyranny, as enormous as ever was committed by Lewis XIV. Great Oppoſition was made to it; yet it was kept up above a Year, till the Houſes were quite ruin'd by the rude Soldiers; who underſtood, that the more Waſte they made, it would be the more acceptable. One Carſtairs, a looſe ſort of a Gentleman, propos'd to Sharp, Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, to go diſguis'd to the Field Meetings, and carry ſome Perſons with him, to witneſs againſt Preachers, and others whom they ſaw there. Among others, Carſtairs happen'd to ſee a noted Miniſter, one Mr. Kirkton, who was a very cautious Man, and had been very ſeldom at thoſe Meetings: Carſtairs ſeeing him afterwards in Edinburgh, pretended he had a Warrant, and would carry him to Gaol, unleſs he would give him Money, which Kirkton refuſing, Carſtairs offer'd Violence; and the famous Mr. Baillie, of Jerviſwood, Brother-in-Law to Kirkton, deliver'd the latter out of his hands; for which, the Privy Council fin'd Mr. Baillie 500 l. tho' Carſtairs had no Warrant to ſeize Kirkton. 'Tis true, he got one afterwards, and it was antedated, but he was aſham'd to ſhew it: Duke Hamilton, and Lord Kincardin were turn'd out of the Council, for oppoſing this Injuſtice. We have mention'd the cruel Proceedings againſt Mr. Mitchel for an Aſſault on Sharp, which ſo irritated a diſguſted People againſt him, that he might well be apprehenſive of ſome other ſuch Attempt; eſpecially conſidering, that the Proteſtants in Scotland were now labouring under greater Hardſhips than the Proteſtants in France.

Acts of Tyranny.

The Field Meetings continuing, and encreaſing, Duke Lauderdale threaten'd to extirpate them, and ruin the whole Country if a ſtop was not put to them; tho' the neighbouring Gentlemen repreſented to him, that the Covenanters diſpers'd themſelves quietly to their ſeveral Habitations, after Praying and Preaching were over, ſo they ſaid there was no harm done; which not ſatisfying Lauderdale, a new Motion was ſet on foot in the Weſtern Parts of Scotland: All Landlords were requir'd to enter into Bonds for themſelves, their Wives, Children, Servants, Tenants, and all that liv'd upon their Eſtates; that they ſhould not go to the Field Meetings, nor harbour any vagrant Teachers, or any intercommun'd Perſons. This was generally refus'd by them, as a thing they could not perform; they could not be anſwerable for their Servants, much leſs their Tenants; and if any of their Tenants, or Servants, did, tho' out of ſpite, and to do them a miſchief, get into ſuch an Aſſembly, their Bond would be forfeited. Upon which, Lauderdale wrote to the King, that the Country was in a State of Rebellion, and that it was neceſſary to proceed to Hoſtilities. Accordingly all the Forces then in Scotland were ſent into the Weſt Country, with ſome Cannon, as if they were going on ſome dangerous Expedition: Letters were written to the Lords in the Highlands, to ſend all the Strength they could, to aſſiſt the King's Army. The Marquis of Athol, never backward in any ſuch righteous Cauſe, ſent 2400 Men; the Earl of Braidalbin, 1700; and others ſo many, that 8000 Highlanders were brought into the Country; and, as my Lord of Sarum informs us, let looſe upon free Quarter. Here was an Army, but no Enemy appear'd. The Highlanders were very unruly, and ſtole and robb'd every where. The Gentlemen of the Country were requir'd to deliver up their Arms, and to keep no Horſe above four Pounds Price. The Gentlemen look'd on, and would do nothing, which put Lauderdale into ſuch a Frenzy, that at the Council-Table He, that old rank Presbyterian Covenanter, made bare his Arms above his Elbow, and ſwore by Jehovah, he would make them enter into thoſe Bonds. Duke Hamilton, and others, who were vex'd to ſee ſuch Waſte made on their Eſtates, eſpecially in Plowing-Time, went to Edinburgh, to try if it was poſſible to mollify him: But a Proclamation was iſſued out, requiring all the Inhabitants of thoſe Countries to go to their Houſes, to be aſſiſtant to the King's Hoſt; and to obey ſuch Orders, as ſhould be ſent them: And by another Proclamation, all Men were forbidden to go out of the Kingdom, without Leave from the Council, who were only Tools to the Monſter that was at the Head of them. Biſhop Burnet writes, Theſe things ſeem'd done to force a Rebellion, which they thought would be ſoon quaſh'd; and give a Colour to keep up a ſtanding Army, which Duke Lauderdale's Party depended on ſo much, that they began to divide in their Hopes the confiſcated Eſtates among them: So that on Valentine's Day, inſtead of drawing Miſtreſſes, they drew Eſtates; and great Joy appear'd in their Looks, upon a falſe Alarm that was brought them of an Inſurrection; and they were as much dejected, when they knew it was falſe.

Lauderdale's Tyranny.

To force a Rebellion.

Theſe Ruffians and Robbers are all this while pretending Zeal for Epiſcopacy, and that they will extirpate the Presbyterians, if they cannot extirpate Presbytery. Can a Sett of Villains without Morals, without Principles ſacred or civil, have any Regard to Religion? The Brutality of the perſecuting Pagans equals not that of Lauderdale. The arbitrary Acts of the Governments of Morocco, or Moſcow, come not up to thoſe in Scotland in the Reign of Charles the II^d^, and in the Miniſtry of that loath'd Wretch Lauderdale, who is uſing all his damnable Arts, to drive the Scotch Proteſtants into Rebellion, that he might afterwards murder and plunder them. Biſhop Burnet ſays, "It was happy for the publick "Peace, that the People were univerſally poſ- "ſeſs'd with this Opinion; for when they ſaw a "Rebellion was deſir'd, they bore the preſent "Oppreſſion more quietly, than perhaps they "would have done." The next Project of Lauderdale's to force a Rebellion, was the putting in ſuit an old obſolete Writ, call'd Law Borough, becauſe us'd chiefly in Boroughs, by which all who were ſerv'd with it, were oblig'd to give Sureties for the good Behaviour, not only of themſelves, but of their Families. Duke Hamilton, who had notice that it was deſign'd to ſerve it upon him, took with him about twelve Noblemen, and fifty Gentlemen of Quality, and went to London to complain of all this; which, ſays the Biſhop, look'd like French, or rather like Turkiſh Government. Lauderdale being alarm'd at it, diſmiſs'd the Highlanders, after they had waſted the Weſt of Scotland above two Months; but he was more afraid than he needed have been, for the King took all his arbitrary Acts upon himſelf, by refuſing to ſee Duke Hamilton, and the Scots Noblemen; and he was ſo delighted with Lauderdale's Management, that tho' he believ'd he was crazy, he would not diſown him. My Lord Biſhop adds, All People ſaid, that by the Management in SCOTLAND, it appear'd what was the Spirit of the Government, and what would be done in England, as ſoon as the Deſigns of the Court were brought to a greater Perfection. He obſerves further, that the Lord Chancellor Finch oppos'd the Scots Noblemen and Gentlemen, when they were allow'd a Hearing before the Council. And Lauderdale, in their abſence, on a ſudden ſummon'd a Convention of the Eſtates, among whom, by Corruption, he got a great Majority; who gave Money for maintaining a greater Force, and wrote a Letter to the King, not only juſtifying, but magnifying Duke Lauderdale's Government; ſo baſe and ſo abject a Thing, that it brought the whole Nation under great Contempt!

A. D. 1679.

Upon the Diſcovery of the Popiſh-Plot in England, the Diſgrace of the Earl of Danby, and the Removal of the Duke of York, who were Lauderdale's chief Supporters, the Scots Lords and Gentlemen renew'd their Complaints againſt him, and were allow'd a Hearing by the King; and it was prov'd, that his giving free Quarter to the Soldiers and Highlanders in the Weſt of Scotland, was againſt the whole Conſtitution and expreſs Laws of the Kingdom. The Earls of Eſſex and Halliſax, who were at the hearing, told Biſhop Burnet, That every thing was made out fully; and Mr. May ſaid, he asking the King in a familiar way, What do you think now of your Lauderdale? His Majeſty anſwer'd, They have objected many damn'd Things he has done againſt them, but there is nothing objected that is againſt my Service. My Lord of Sarum reflects thus upon it: "Such are the Notions that many "Kings drink in, by which they ſet up an In- "tereſt for themſelves, in oppoſition to the In- "tereſt of the People. And as ſoon as the Peo- "ple obſerve that, which they will do ſooner or "later, they will then naturally mind their own "Intereſt, and ſet it up as much in oppoſition to "the Prince. And in this Conteſt, the People "will grow always too hard for the Prince."

In the mean time, all the Year 1677 and 1678, Lauderdale's Tyranny continu'd to provoke the People to Action, which they carefully avoided; but whenever they held their Field-Meetings, they had always a Party of 30, 40, 50 or 60 young Men, who were Scouts, to obſerve the Enemy, and give notice to the Aſſembly to ſeparate; or, in caſe of ſurprize, to make Reſiſtance while the old Men, Women, and Children got off: And this Bravery of theirs for ſome time gave a Check to the Fury of the Prelates and their Inſtruments, ſuch as Graham Laird of Claverhouſe, afterwards Viſcount Dundee, who died by the Sword at the Battle of Gillicranky in King William's Reign, when it was hop'd by all good Men, that he had been reſerv'd for the Halter: his Hands having been ſo often ſtain'd with the Blood of Innocents, that it is ſaid he kill'd above 100 Men in cold Blood, making it his buſineſs to purſue poor Proteſtants with a Crew of Dragoons and Highlanders. Theſe military Executions ſo exaſperated ſome reſolute Men among the Covenanters, that they reſolv'd to take vengeance on one of their chief Perſecutors, the Laird of ——— a cruel bloody Man, who a few days before had butcher'd ſeveral of their Brethren in Fife. The Cameronians had not then thought of the Archbiſhop of St. Andrew's, who hap-happen'd to be paſſing on the Road in his Coach as the five Covenanters were looking after this Laird: Whom miſſing, they reſolv'd that Sharp the Archbiſhop ſhould not eſcape them. So they rode after him, and coming up to his Coach, quickly ſtopp'd it, diſarm'd his Servants, and gave him notice of their Reſolutions; letting him know his Offences, his Apoſtacy, Perjury, Pride, Cruelty and Injuſtice, and exhorting him to make confeſſion of his Guilt, to repent heartily of the Wickedneſs of his Life, and the innocent Blood he had ſhed, the Time being come that he was to die for the ſame.

It was ſome time before they could convince him they were in earneſt, and he ſeem'd to ſmile at what they ſaid about the Wickedneſs of his Life. His Daughter alſo, who was with him in the Coach, rail'd at them with much foul Language: But they caus'd her to come out of the Coach, and let him know that his Moments were very few; that they would wait for him yet a little while, and admoniſh'd him not to trifle with his Soul, but to call upon God for Mercy. After which, ſeeing them indeed in earneſt, he began to beg for Life. But they ſoon gave him to underſtand, they were not to be put by their Purpoſe, and that there was no Mercy to be ſhewn to him who had ſhewn no Mercy Upon which he began to think of Death; but inſtead of putting up Prayers to God, as his own Heart directed him, he pull'd a little Prayer-Book out of his Pocket, and was about to read over ſome Words to himſelf; at which thoſe extempore Cameronians conceiv'd ſuch Indignation, that they were all ready to fire at him. However, they waited yet a little longer, and call'd again upon him to commend his Soul to God's Mercy, for that he ſhould immediately die; and accordingly they immediately fir'd upon him with their Piſtols; and to rid him of Life with as little Torture as might be, they ran him thro' alſo with their Swords, the 3d of May. Echard's Account of this Incident, is a String of Falſities. He tells us, the Cameronians enquired after the Archbiſhop in a Village, whereas they met him accidentally on a Moor; that there were twelve Horſemen with Piſtols, whereas there were but five; that they wounded the Poſtillion, and ſhot or hamſtring'd the Coach-Horſes; that they call'd him Dog, and, which I believe they might, Apoſtate, Betrayer of the Godly, Perſecutor of Chriſt's Church: All which was literally true. That his Daughter came out of the Coach, and upon her Knees movingly begg'd her Father's Life; inſtead of which, ſhe treated them with provoking Language, and came not out of the Coach till they caus'd her to do it; That the Reverence of his Perſon, and his compos'd Carriage ſurpriz'd them.

I am weary of repeating ſo many Untruths in favour of a Prelate, who, tho' he did not deſerve to die by theſe Hands, deſerv'd to die by the Hands of the Hangman, for his barbarous and deceitful dealing with Mr. Mitchel before-mention'd; and we may remember a Saying of Biſhop Burnet's on that occaſion, What Sharp did then to preſerve himſelf from ſuch Practices, was probably that which both in the juſt Judgment of God, and the enflam'd Fury of Men, brought him two Years after to ſuch a diſmal End. Echard introduces this Story with ſetting forth what an Influence the Earl of Shaftesbury's Speech in the Houſe of Lords at Weſtminſter, had on the depreſs'd Party in Scotland, inſinuating, that the Impreſſion it made on the Minds of the Scots Presbyterians, produc'd ſuch a terrible Effect, and he introduces his Account of the enſuing Tumult with a Falſity ſtill more notorious; for he aſſures us, Mr. Huckſton of Rathbillet, who join'd the Cameronians upon Loudon-Hill about a Month after, was one of thoſe that ſhot the Archbiſhop. Now Huckſton was the only Man among them who endeavour'd to diſſuade thoſe that were looking after the Laird of —— from meddling with Sharp; and when he could not prevail with them, he rode off, and would have no hand in it, as our Author informs us, who takes his Account from one of the Perſons concern'd in that Buſineſs. From the ſame Author, I ſhall borrow the Story of the Bothwell-Brig War, which Echard makes ſo formidable, and offers it as another Effect of the Lord Shaftesbury's Speech; being ſo blind as not to ſee that the Scribler who made that Inſinuation before him, did it to blacken that Lord, who had but too much reaſon to complain in his Speech, We have a little Siſter, &c. of the tyrannical Government in Scotland, and the Inſolence of the Papiſts in Ireland.

A. D. 1679.

Mem. of Scotl. p. 209.

Ib. 195.

There was a very great Meeting of the perſecuted People in the Fields near Loudon-Hill, where, by report, many Thouſands met together. Their Intention was to have had the Communion, and to have made it a Day both of Humiliation and Rejoicing; a Day of Humiliation for the Apoſtacy of their Brethren, and for the Sins of the Land: And a Day of ſolemn Joy, for the Liberty of, and Affection of the People to, the Service and Worſhip of God.

As it was a very great Meeting, ſo the Number of Men was greater that were in Arms for their Defence, than was uſual on other and ordinary Occaſions, there being about 200 Men with Fire-Arms prepar'd for, and reſolv'd to do their Parts with the Enemy, if they came, as was threaten'd, to diſturb them.

Claverhouſe, afterwards Dundee, having Information of this Aſſembly, prepared alſo to attack them, boaſting what havock he would make of the Cameronians on that occaſion. It ſeems he ſaid I hear they have ſome Fire-Men among them; but if they offer to make one Shot at my Men, I will ſave the Council and Courts of Juſtice the trouble of proſecuting my Priſoners with the Formality of the Law, for I will immediately hang up every one of them that falls into my hand, tho' I take 500 of them. It was confidently reported, that ſome of the Soldiers of his own Troops gave private notice of this, and of the Meaſures he had taken for aſſaulting the Meeting For tho', generally ſpeaking, the Soldiers were as barbarous and cruel as their Officers could deſire, yet it was often found they were leſs ſo than their Officers. However it was, the poor perſecuted Proteſtants had receiv'd Information, that Claverhouſe, with 300 Dragoons, was reſolv'd to ſurround the Meeting, and put them all to the Sword. This Account came not to them till after they were aſſembled, and their Worſhip was actually begun. Upon which, the Men who had the Guard of the Meeting, far from being ſurpriz'd, conſulted what they ſhould do, whether they ſhould diſperſe for that time, and appoint another Meeting at another Place and Time, or what Courſe they ſhould take.

The Covenanters attack'd.

They had not many Hours to deliberate, much leſs to put in execution what they ſhould reſolve. But, in a word, it was concluded the People ſhould be deſir'd to ſit ſtill, and compoſe themſelves, whatever ſhould happen, leaving the Event to Providence, and the good Pleaſure of God, and that they ſhould ſend for Help to all the neighbouring Places.

Thus we ſee how execrably falſe is the Archdeacon's Relation of this Meeting. He boldly affirms, that upon the arrival of the Lord Shaftes- bury's Speech, and the Commons Addreſs againſt Lauderdale, the Dread of Puniſhment for the Murther of ſo illuſtrious a Perſon as the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews his Grace, a Privy-Counſellor, and in hopes of Aſſiſtance from England, they came on the 29th of May and proclaim'd the Covenant at Ragland, burnt ſeveral Acts of Parliament made ſince the RESTORATION, which ſhould have been burnt indeed by other Hands, fix'd a Rebellious Declaration to the Market-Croſs, and attempted the like at Glaſgow, but were prevented by ſome of the King's Forces. On Sunday the 1ſt of June, they rendezvous'd upon Loudon-Hill. Thus does he make them commit ſeveral rebellious Acts before the great Meeting on Loudon-Hill; where, in the defence of the natural Liberty, which every Soul has to worſhip God Almighty as his Conſcience directs, they did rebel, as far as reſiſting a barbarous Butcher of innocent religious People is Rebellion. The Covenanters had 250 Men well arm'd at their firſt Muſter, and by the Aſſiſtance that came in to them, they made 400. The Aſſembly was great, and the People ſat all on the Ground upon the ſide of a ſteep Hill, the Miniſter preaching to them from a little Tent near the bottom of the Hill. The bloody Claverhouſe, with his Dragoons, came on with great Fury, and not expecting Reſiſtance, kept no Scouts before him: When on a ſudden they were challeng'd and bid ſtand, by an Out-Guard of the Perſecuted; who, finding them come on, fired at them, and retreated to the main Body. But the Dragoons were a ſecond time ſurpriz'd, when they advanced to that Body, and found it large and advantageouſly poſted. The firſt Line of whom fir'd a Volly of Shot upon them, killing and wounding 16 or 17 Men, with ſome Horſes.

This brought them to halt, and prepare for a Battle: but finding a large Ditch caſt up in the front of the Perſecuted, with a low, old, ruin'd Wall, which ſerv'd them as a Parapet, from whence they fir'd with more ſecurity, the Dragoons ſtood but two or three Fires, and retreated, having loſt about 30 Men. In this Action, Mr. Cleeland, a young Gentleman, who, 18 Years after, was Lieutenant-Colonel to the Earl of Angus's Regiment, and diſtinguiſh'd himſelf in ſeveral gallant Actions; laid hands on the Bridle of Claverhouſe's Horſe, and had certainly taken him Priſoner, if he had been well ſeconded. The Defeat of the Dragoons, made the Perſecuted terrible to the Council at Edinburgh; and had they continu'd to have acted on the Defenſive only, it was thought they would in time have ruin'd all the Troops of their Perſecutors: But their puſhing things to extremity, ruin'd them.

The Council at Edinburgh ſent the Earl of Linlithgow againſt them, with a Force much greater than was neceſſary to diſperſe that Company of raw undiſciplin'd Men. However, Linlithgow did not venture to engage them; and ſome impute his Retreat to an Underſtanding he had with Lauderdale, who was willing that the Cameronians ſhould increaſe in number, not only to have the more Blood and Confiſcations, but that their Deſperation might juſtify the Violences he had committed. Echard aſſures us, all Things were ripe for an Inſurrection. Which is ſo falſe, that Biſhop Burnet aſſures us, It appear'd there were no Deſigns form'd for a Rebellion, ſince none came into it but thoſe deſperate inter-communed Men, who were hunted from their Houſes. The Perſecuted publiſh'd a ſort of Manifeſto, complaining of the Oppreſſions they lay under, aſſerting the Obligation of the Covenant, and demanding a free Parliament. Mr. Archdeacon informs us, that their Manifeſto was in a Stile as barbarous as if it had been drawn up by a Hottentot; for that it imperiouſly commanded the Magiſtrates to turn out all the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Curates, with their Bairns, &c. When the News of this Inſurrection came to England, the King was for ſuppreſſing it immediately by Forces from England, under the Command of the Duke of Monmouth. The Earl of Eſſex, the Lord Halliſax, and thoſe of the Council who hated Shaftesbury, were jealous of Monmouth's Greatneſs, as he was that Lord's Friend: but the Neceſſity of the Affair requiring diſpatch, they were all forc'd to fall in with his Majeſty's Opinion, and ſend away the Duke of Monmouth to Scotland with ſuch Troops as were ready, but they could not follow him faſt enough to be in that Service; for the Duke ſetting out from London the 20th of June, rode three hundred Miles on that Day and the two next, and on the 23d put himſelf at the Head of the Earl of Linlithgow's and other Forces in Scotland, attack'd the Cameronians at Bothwell-Bridge, while they were irreſolute, and conſulting whether to yield or defend themſelves, and entirely defeated them, killing about 400, and taking 1200 Priſoners. The reſt eſcap'd, and diſpers'd themſelves as well as they could; nor were the Perſecutors at all ſatisfy'd with the Duke of Monmouth's Conduct, who refus'd, at their requeſt, to let the poor People be purſu'd and maſſacreed by the Dragoons. If ever Men in the world had Right to Reſiſtance, it was the Right of theſe Cameronians, whom the King had given up to the brutal Rage of that deteſted Apoſtate and Tyrant Lauderdale: and the Slaughter and Execution of theſe Perſecuted Proteſtants, was as much a Maſſacre as thoſe in France and Ireland, with regard to the Cruelty and Injuſtice. Lauderdale's Faction complain'd againſt the Duke of Monmouth to the Court of England, for giving a check to the Dragoons in the intended Butchery.

A. D. 1679.

Duke of Monmouth ſent againſt the Cameronians.

Routs them at Bothwell-Bridge.

It was believ'd that the King, who found he could not manage His new Council as he had done the old one, and could not bear the Influence the Earl of Shaftesbury had upon it, ſent the Duke of Monmouth into Scotland with a double Proſpect, That he might deſtroy the Covenanters, and diſoblige their Friends in England, for they could not want Friends in a Free Proteſtant Nation: and that ſtill acting in concert with his Brother, tho' in a pretended Baniſhment, he was reſolv'd to take hold of the Complaints againſt Monmouth, to pick a Quarrel with him, and recall his Brother.

The King diſpleas'd with him.

After the Suppreſſion of the Inſurrection in Scotland, "The Perſecutors, to uſe the Words of my "Scots Author, gave themſelves a full ſwing in all "their bloody Meaſures, letting looſe the moſt "cruel and furious Agents of Tyranny, to execute "whatever their private Rage, as well as publick "could dictate to them. Under the pretence of "rooting out Rebellion, and of executing Juſtice, "they purſu'd the Innocent as well as the Guilty, "and put to death hundreds of People by all manner of Cruelties, and on the meaneſt Pretences "imaginable, nay, often without any pretences "at all, and that in the moſt barbarons manner." Mem. Ch. Scotl. 199, & ſeq.

I muſt continue the Memoirs of this Writer a Paragraph or two, for it will prove to us, that this Reign in Scotland, and under the execrable Lauderdale, was Nerone Neronior, more tyrannical than that of Nero; and that this Reign in England, under the Duke of York was not much better, will appear in the Sequel. "If I ſhould "take all verbal Relations that I have met with, "in converſing amongſt thoſe that were Eye-

"Wit-

A. D. 1679.

" Witneſſes of the Cruelties of that Time, it " would exceed, if we conſider the Smallneſs of " the Country, and Numbers of the People " concern'd; I ſay, it would exceed all that ever " was ſet down in any Hiſtory of all Perſecu- " tions, whether of Popiſh or Heathen Tyrants."

" The firſt Year after this Inſurrection, 1680, " was wholly taken up in ſearching after, and " purſuing thoſe who were actually in the Ar- " my, but had by the Miſmanagement, as they " call'd it, of the Duke of Monmouth, made " their Eſcape. For, by the way, their Deſire " was, that when the Body that defended Both- " well-Bridge was defeated, and the reſt began " to diſperſe, they ſhould have been all ſur- " rounded and cut in pieces, or purſu'd, and no " Quarter given them, till not a Man of them " had been left to carry News to Glaſgow of their " Defeat. And this having fail'd, they reſolv'd, " if poſſible, to find out every Man that had been " at Bothwell, and put them to death, where- " ever they found them, upon the very Spot.

" In order to this, they neither requir'd much " Evidence of the Fact, nor took the pains to " examine the Perſons themſelves. But if any " one told them, ſuch a Man, or ſuch Men had " been at Bothwell Bridge, they immediately " ſent Soldiers to their Houſes, who were to ask " them no Queſtions, but ſeize upon them, drag " them juſt out of the Doors, and ſhoot them " dead in a moment. How many poor inno- " cent Men, after proteſting in the moſt ſolemn " manner, That they had not been any way con- " cern'd in the Bothwell Affair, have they ſhot to " Death, with thoſe Proteſtations in their " Mouths; and when they have fallen on their " Knees, and begg'd for a Minute's time to " commend their Souls to God, have deny'd " them, and ſhot them kneeling, as they were " with that Requeſt in their Mouths!"

Theſe Tormentors and Butchers were the Men whom the Scots Prelates encourag'd in their ſanguinary Miſſions. Theſe were the Means made uſe of to make the Perſecuted renounce the Reform'd Religion, and profeſs themſelves Members of the Apoſtate Sharp's Church. The Heathens look'd on the primitive Chriſtians as impious in denying Adoration to their Deities. The Scots Covenanters were of the ſame Religion, with reſpect to Faith and Doctrine, but deny'd Adoration to the Prelates. Good God! what infinite Difference there is between the Caſe of the Heathens and Chriſtians, and that of the Biſhops and Presbyters! Yet did the Scots Biſhops patronize the Perſecution of their Countrymen, of the ſame Faith and Doctrine, in a manner more barbarous than the Heathen Perſecutions, purely becauſe they preferr'd the Diſcipline of Presbyters to Theirs. Where is there now ſuch a Religion in the World, that is not under the Papal Tyranny? Where are ſuch Tyrants and Tormentors to be met, ſince our glorious King William the Third, of Bleſſed and Immortal Memory, deliver'd us from them? I could take many Sheets out of my Scots Author on the ſame Subject; but I am both weary and aſham'd of it.

When the Duke of Monmouth return'd to London, he was receiv'd by the People with ſo much Joy, that the King's Jealouſy encreas'd daily; and at laſt he was prevail'd upon by the Earl of Eſſex, and the Earl of Halliſax, to recall his Brother from Bruſſels. The Duke of York talk'd of Monmouth's Expedition in Scotland, as a courting the People there, and their Friends in England, by his ſparing thoſe that were left alive. The King himſelf ſaid to his Son, If I had been there, we would not have had the trouble of Priſoners. Monmouth anſwer'd, I cannot kill Men in cold Blood, that's work only for Butchers. Duke Lauderdale's Creatures preſs'd the keeping the Army ſome time in that Country, with a deſign to have them eat it up: But the Duke of Monmouth ſent home the Militia, and put the Troops under Diſcipline, ſo that all the Country was ſenſible he had preſerv'd them from Ruin. He mov'd the King to grant an Indemnity for what was paſt, and a Liberty to hold Meetings under the King's Licence; but theſe ſoftening Meaſures fell with him, and Rage and Slaughter reign'd again under the Duke of York, to whom, ſome Months after, was given the Government of Scotland.

A. D. 1679. Duke of Monmouth's Saying to the King.

We left the Earl of Eſſex in the Government of Ireland, A. D. 1676, when Sheridan's new Farmers had got Poſſeſſion of the Revenue there. The Earl had a difficult Game to play. He had, as it is believ'd, made fair Promiſes of being kind to the Iriſh, and to ſtand by Sheridan's Farmers. To the firſt he gave good Words, and receiv'd them well at Court; but the Farmers beginning to make great Changes in their Officers, he thought fit to put a ſtop to it, otherwiſe all the Ports in that Kingdom would ſoon have been in the hands of Papiſts, which muſt have had very dangerous Conſequences; and the firſt Step he took towards it, was, to put the Lord Granard upon moving at the Council-Board, that Enquiry ſhould be made into the Farmers Securities, which Danby had paſt in England too eaſily. The Earl of Eſſex ſeem'd to oppoſe this Motion, and put off that Enquiry, of which he gave the Duke of York an Account, tho' he underhand encourag'd Complaints againſt them, which he declin'd hearing for a while; but at laſt, as if over-power'd by their Weight and Number, he ſent the Objections to the Farmers, who were all the Duke of York's Creatures, to the King, and a Commiſſion of Inſpection was iſſu'd. Some time after the Popiſh Plot broke out in England, upon which Sheridan, having ſpoken ſome Words in favour of his Friend Coleman, was ſent for to England, and examin'd at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons, where he had the Impudence to declare himſelf to be deſcended from the O Sheridans, ancient Kings of Ulſter; whereas his Father was a Biſhop's Turnſpit. He got himſelf out of that Affair by his Impudence and Cunning, neither of which he wanted. But the Earl of Eſſex loſt ſo far the Duke's Favour, that he ſoon after loſt his Government. The Earl of Burlington was nam'd for his Succeſſor, on condition, He who was rich, would lend the King Money; and Talbot was to manage this Affair, by means of the Earl of Orrery, who thought himſelf diſobliged by Lord Eſſex. The Earl of Burlington lik'd the Lieutenancy of Ireland very well; but he lik'd not to part with his Money for it. So the Lord Eſſex was continu'd a little longer.

Ireland.

Juſt before the breaking out of the Popiſh Plot, it was deſign'd, that the French King ſhould demand the Performance of the Articles he had made with King Charles the Second, in behalf of the Iriſh; and the King of England was to admit ſome French Forces to join thoſe Iriſh, which the Earl of Tyrone and the Lord Brittas were to raiſe, in order to make a Diverſion in Ireland, while the Conſpirators were at work in England: But the whole of the Intrigue was kept from the King. He knew only ſo much of it as referr'd to the French King's demanding the Promiſes made by him, when in Exile, in favour of the Iriſh. The Duke undertook to qualify the King, if any Diſcovery was made of the intended Inſurrection of the Iriſh. But ſome of

of them divulg'd it, and the King was hardly prevail'd on to believe it. Every one thought the Duke of Ormond the moſt proper Perſon for the Lieutenancy of Ireland, on account of his great Knowledge of the Country and People, and his great Intereſt in both. But this Duke having at laſt obſerv'd, that the King and his Brother were bent on ſubverting the Conſtitution both in Church and State, fell in heartily with thoſe who were for preſerving it, and had therefore been kept out of the Government of Ireland by the Duke of York's Intrigues againſt him, which he was now afraid to continue; and it being mov'd in Council, that the Duke of Ormond ſhould ſucceed the Earl of Eſſex, it was not oppos'd by any one; ſo he went over Lord-Lieutenant once more, and behav'd with great Prudence and Courage. For the Duke of York having prevail'd with the King to order the raiſing ſome Iriſh Forces, under the notion of Foreign Service, the Duke of Ormond would not let them have Arms, and ſo they were exercis'd with Sticks. Upon the Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot in England, they were all disbanded, and Orders came from England to the Lord-Lieutenant to diſarm the Papiſts; but they had ſuch timely notice of it by their Friends at Court, that there were not found 200 Arms in all Ireland: The Iriſh having a Contrivance to conceal their Arms by thruſting them into Bogs, filling the Barrels of their Guns with Butter, which prevents their taking any harm; and as for the Locks they can eaſily hide them. The Lord Brittas, and other Conſpirators, made their Eſcape; but the Earl of Tyrone was taken, and committed to the Gatehouſe Sheridan was ſeiz'd in London, and Talbot, afterwards Tyrconnel, in Ireland, where he was impriſon'd in the Caſtle of Dublin, together with his Brother the titular Archbiſhop, who died there.

The Earl of Orrery, at this time, obtain'd Leave of the King to fortify his Houſe Caſtle Martyr; he put a ſmall Gariſon into it, and maintain'd it at his own Charge, being apprehenſive of the like Deſigns in Ireland as in England; for he gave entire Credit to the Plot from the firſt Diſcovery of it, founding his Belief in his Experience of Popiſh Treachery and Cruelty. He writ to the Council, time after time, to have the Militia ſettled, but could not prevail till March 1679, and then thoſe that appear'd were not half arm'd. Some time before this, the Earl had notice, that the Papiſts and their Abettors had ſent the King Information, that the Proteſtant Diſſenters in Ireland were forming themſelves into a Body, in order to make a Diſturbance, becauſe the Plot was not duly proſecuted, and that the Earl knew of it: But he wrote to the Council in very pertinent Terms, that the Information was falſe and groundleſs, and he challeng'd any one to prove it, repreſenting how ready the Diſſenters of all Denominations, were to do as they were directed by the Government, of which thoſe in his Neighbourhood had given him Aſſurance. Upon this the Information was trac'd to the Informer, who, on ſtrict Examination, confeſs'd he was miſtaken; but 'twas ſeen by this, how the Papiſts were contriving to turn the Plot off from themſelves, and charge it upon the Diſſenters, as they were contriving to do in England; where the Diſcovery of the Meal-Tub by Dangerfield, prov'd that damnable Deſign beyond all queſtion.

Papiſts contrive to turn the Plot on the Diſſenters.

He depos'd before Sir Robert Clayton the Lord Mayor, October 31. That having been diſcharg'd out of Newgate, by means of Mrs. Cellier, a Popiſh Midwife, he was ſent for to the Tower, whither he went in diſguiſe, and after much Diſcourſe with my Lord Powis, he was carry'd into a Room where my Lord Arundel was, who having talk'd to him ſome time, ask'd him, If he would do any thing to make his Fortune; Dangerfield ſaid, Yes, I will do any thing. Well then, ſaid he, will you kill the King for a good Reward? You jeſt, Sir, ſays Dangerfield. Lord Arundel ask'd him again; he reply'd, Any body but the King and his Royal Brother. No, ſays my Lord, I don't mean ſo; but tell me, will you do it? The Man anſwer'd, No, without taking time to conſider on't. Then ſaid Lord Powis, No, no; come, come, my Lord Arundel does only this to try you: and pray, my Lord Arundel, continues Lord Powis, what will you give him to do ſo? 'Tis worth, ſaid Lord Arundel, two thouſand Pounds. No, no, ſays Lord Powis, you ſhall do that to my Lord Shaftesbury, and ſhall have 500 Pounds for your Reward. This Diſcovery of his is introduc'd, with ſome of Echard's Grimace, and pitiful Raillery on the Diſcoverer's Character; of which kind of Reflections enough has already been ſaid. That clear-headed Writer would have the Actors in theſe deviliſh Plots, to be Men of Integrity and Honour, that their Words might go as far as other Mens Oaths; when, as I have ſaid, it is impoſſible for Villany to be carry'd on and diſcover'd by any but Villains. Dangerfield, quoth he, appear'd to be as great a Cheat as Bedloe, tho' he had not the Fortune to draw as much Blood Could he go ſo far in this Story, without knowing the Reaſon why he drew it not? He was detected before his Plot was ripe, and his Evidence was afterwards brow-beaten and ridicul'd, becauſe the King and his Brother were in the Plot. The Wickedneſs of vilifying Dangerfield's Teſtimony about the Meal-Tub, is the more ſhocking becauſe no Plot was ever plainer, none ever better diſcover'd. Yet Echard tells us with a wry Mouth, This dark Intrigue came ſeaſonably for the ſupport of the Credit of the Grand Plot. The bare Relation of the Meal-Tub Plot is ſufficient to gain the Reader's Credit; and never was anything more diabolical contriv'd in an infernal Divan. I ſhall take it up where I ſet it down, the Offer of 500 Pounds to murder my Lord Shaftesbury, which Dangerfield promis'd to undertake. I make uſe of Echard's Abridgment of Dangerfield's Narrative, printed by order of the Houſe of Commons, to ſhew that, if he was capable of Conviction, the very telling it only would have convinc'd him of the Villany.

A. D. 1679. Dangerfield employ'd in it.

" Whereupon they told him of one Rigaut, a " Virginia Merchant, that would adviſe with him " about it, and ſecure him the Money; and the " next day, waiting on the Lord Caſtlemain, he " appear'd much enrag'd, ſaying, Why were you " ſo unwilling to do what you were taken out of " Priſon for? Whereupon he made haſte a- " way; but Mrs. Cellier excuſed his Lordſhip's " Paſſion at that time. Soon after he went to " meet Sir Robert Peyton at Gadbury's the " Aſtrologer, where Gadbury appear'd very an- " gry, becauſe he refus'd to kill the King; ad- " ding, That he had calculated his Nativity, and " found him a fit Perſon for that Enterprize, " and that he might come off with ſafety. Then " the Counteſs of Powis dictated to him Re- " marks of four Clubs in the Town, and Names " of ſeveral Perſons to be chief Officers and Com- " manders in an Inſurrection, which was intended " by the Presbyterians.

Danger-field with the Duke of York and the King.

" Dangerfield was introduc'd by the Lord Peterborough to the Duke of York, and acquainted " him with this Presbyterian Plot; the Duke " gave him twenty Guineas with his own Hand, " and brought him to the King, who order'd " him forty Pounds. About the ſame time, in " purſuance of the Lords Inſtructions, he went " twice to murder the Earl of Shaftesbury, arm'd " with a Dagger given him by Mrs. Cellier, pre- " tending Buſineſs from her and the Lady Powis; " but was both times prevented by People's co- " ming in, and his own guilty Fears; for which " the Counteſs call'd him Coward, and Mrs. Cel- " lier ſaid, She would go and let the World know, " that ſome of her Sex were more brave than " Men;" but ſhe could not meet with a fair Opportunity. Then Dangerfield put the treaſonable Letters, which the Lady Powis had dictated to him, directed to the chief Proteſtant Lords and Gentlemen, and the Liſt of the pretended Officers Civil and Military above-mention'd into a Bundle, which he deſign'd to drop in ſome proper Place, and then to have them found upon Search, and produc'd as a Proof to confirm the Information he had given the King and Duke, who very greedily ſwallow'd this Plot tho' they would not ſmell to the Popiſh one. Theſe Papers did Dangerfield carry to the Lodgings of Coll. Roderick Manſel in Axe-Yard, Weſtminſter; for which purpoſe, he had taken Lodgings in the ſame Houſe; having done this, he informed two Cuſtom-Houſe Officers, that there was Lace lodg'd in Manſel's Room, to the Value of 2000 Pounds, and put them upon ſearching for it, himſelf accompanying them. The Officers finding nothing, he bad them remove the Bed, and they would find ſomething, for he had pinn'd the Papers behind Manſel's Bed's Head; and himſelf firſt diſcovering them there, cry'd out, here is Treaſon; adding, the Papers muſt be carry'd to the Secretary of State: but the Cuſtom-Houſe Officers knowing their Duty better, carry'd them firſt to their Maſters, the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms, which Coll. Manſel hearing of, he immediately apply'd to that Board; and thoſe Gentlemen, like Men of Honour, order'd them to be deliver'd to the Colonel, whoſe next Work was to find out Dangerfield, who went then by the Name of Willoughby, and finding him four Days after at Mrs. Cellier's Houſe, he had him brought before the Council, who having taken a full Examination of this horrid Conſpiracy, made this Warrant for his Commitment. Theſe are in his Majeſty's Name to require you to take into Cuſtody the Perſon of Thomas Willoughby herewith ſent you, for forging of Letters importing High Treaſon, and fixing the ſame privately at Mr. Manſel's Chamber, to render him guilty thereof without Cauſe; and you are to keep him ſafe till he ſhall be delivered by due Courſe of Law; for which, this ſhall be your Warrant.

To the Keeper of Newgate, or his Deputy.

We are coming now to a new Proof of this Helliſh Contrivance, for Sir William Waller, a Juſtice of Peace, and a zealous Proteſtant, ſearching the Houſe of Mrs. Cellier, where Dangerfield was taken, found a Bundle of Papers, being Copies of the above-mention'd Letters and Liſt, in a Meal-Tub, where her Maid ſwore they were put by her Order. Here are ſeveral Snips of Paper for Mr. Archdeacon. Here's a Confirmation of Evidence, as ſtrong as that of Senſe can make it. Yet he calls it a dark Intrigue, a little Accident to keep up the Heat and Fervour too againſt the Popiſh Plot. Here's a Conſpiracy againſt the moſt noble Blood in England, carry'd on in concert with the Popiſh Lords in the Tower, yet they muſt not be ſuſpected of Conſpiring. What frontleſs Partiality is this! The Papiſts and Tories, for they are now tack'd together, had in view the Deſtruction of the whole Presbyterian Party in this curſed Contrivance. It was the firſt Plot call'd Presbyterian, tho' with their wonted Stupidity, they pick'd up a Parcel of Names, among whom there was not one Presbyterian, but the Lord Wharton.

Meal-Tub Plot.

The ſame Day that Dangerfield was ſent to Newgate, Mrs. Cellier was ſent thither alſo; and the former being afraid he ſhould be brought to an Acccount for the Guilt of the Libel and Liſt, confeſs'd the whole Intrigue to the Lord Mayor four days after. Cellier behav'd herſelf before the King and Council with all the Impudence imaginable. I ſhall not enter into the Detail of her Examination, but only take notice of one Paſſage, which ſeems to ſhew the Aſſurance of this Female Plotter, and the good Humour of the Prince that was preſent when ſhe was examin'd.

Mrs. Cellier's Impudence.

Adams was one of the Evidences againſt her.

Adams. Your bawdy Story I left out of the Depoſitions, I was aſham'd to ſpeak it.

King. What can ſhe ſpeak Bawdy too?

Adams. Yes indeed ſhe did.

Lord Chancellor. Ay, ſhe's fit for any thing.

Cellier. My Lord I never ſpoke an immodeſt Word in my Life; Mrs. Adams, tho' you contrive to take away my Life, do not take away my Honour. What did I ſay?

King. What did ſhe ſay, come tell us the Story.

Adams. She ſaid—ſhe ſaid—ſhe ſaid, that—— ſhe ſaid—that if ſhe did not loſe her Hands, ſhe could get Money as long as——

Adams made as if ſhe was aſham'd, and could not ſpeak ſuch Words.

Cell. I ſaid, if I did not loſe my Hands, I ſhould get Money as long as Men kiſs'd their Wives.

Adams. By the Oath I have taken, ſhe ſaid their Miſtreſſes too.

Cell. Did I ſo! Pray what elſe do they keep them for.

Ld Chanc. That was but witty.

King. 'Twas but her natural Practice.

'Tis obſervable, that tho' ſhe was ſeveral times examin'd by the Council, the King being preſent; yet his Majeſty did not in Perſon manage any Part of the Examination, but this relating to the Bawdy.

Upon Dangerfield's Diſcovery, the Earl of Caſtlemain was committed to the Tower, from whence he had been bail'd before, as having been charg'd only by Oates. Mr. Rigaut was ſent to Newgate; Gadbury, Fellow-Labourer with Roger L'Eſtrange, to the Gatehouſe; Lady Powis to the Tower, for High Treaſon, of which 'tis very evident ſhe was moſt guilty.

Some time before this, the King fell ſick at Windſor, and his Life began to be in danger, which occaſion'd a general Conſternation. The People, ſays Echard very prettily, looking upon any thing that ſhould happen ill to the King, as the End of the World. The Earls of Eſſex and Hallifax having mov'd his Majeſty to ſend for the Duke of York from Bruſſels, he immediately embark'd for England, and arriv'd at Windſor the ſecond of September, to the great Mortification of the Earl of Shaftesbury, and the Duke of Monmouth's Party, who were farther mortify'd, by that Duke's loſing his Place of Captain General, and the Earl of Shaftesbury that of Preſident of the Council. The Duke of York, on the King's Recovery return'd to Bruſſels; the Duke of Monmouth having before been order'd to paſs over to Holland. The Lord Ruſſel, the Lord Cavendiſh, Sir Henry Capel, and Mr. Powle, finding the King's Head and Heart were againſt popular Counſels, and being not willing to ſerve him againſt the Intereſt of their Country, went to him together, and deſir'd him to excuſe their Attendance any more upon him at Council. The King, who was weary of ſuch faithful Counſellors, and wanted ſuch as would promote his arbitrary Meaſures, reply'd, with all my Heart. The Earl of Eſſex quitted the Treaſury. Mr. Lawrence Hyde, and Mr. Sydney Godolphin, were ſworn of the Privy Council; Monk's Son, Chriſtopher Duke of Albemarle, as great a Soldier as Politician, was made Captain of the Life-Guard; the Earl of Radnor, Preſident of the Council; and Sir Stephen Fox, one of the Lords of the Treaſury.

Duke of York returns.

Duke of Monmouth diſgrac'd.

Changes at Court.

On Thurſday the 27th of November, the Duke of Monmouth return'd to London; and tho' it was Mid-night when he arriv'd, yet the Watch having ſpread the News of it, the City was preſently illuminated with Bonfires; and the Bells rang every where to expreſs the Citizens great Joy. The Duke of York, with his Dutcheſs, and his Daughter, the Lady Anne, went to Scotland, where he arriv'd the 4th of December; and govern'd that Kingdom in ſuch a manner, as encreas'd the Apprehenſions People had of his Succeſſion. The King would not ſee the Duke of Monmouth, becauſe he came home without leave, and requir'd him to go back again; for he was now quite gone over to the Popiſh Party, and had put himſelf into the worſt hands he could think of, his Brother, the Duke of York's, whoſe Emiſſaries had the Government of him, when he was not preſent to govern him himſelf. Some of Monmouth's Friends adviſ'd him to comply, but the Earl of Shaftesbury's Advice prevail'd; and that was to ſtay in England, and truſt to the Affections of the People; accordingly he went round many Parts of England, pretending it was for Hunting, and Horſe-Matches; many Thouſands coming together in moſt Places to ſee him, particularly in Somerſetſhire, where, when he came to Sir William Portman's, near Taunton, it was thought he had not many leſs than 20000 Men with him, moſt on horſeback; but this was a ſandy Foundation for him to build upon, eſpecially ſince his Architect, the Lord Shaftesbury, conſider'd nothing in the Counſels he gave him, but gratifying his own Ambition and Revenge. He ſet on foot Petitions for a Parliament, in order to the ſecuring the King's Perſon, and the Proteſtant Religion; and Multitudes in all Parts of the Nation ſet their Hands to thoſe Petitions, which were preſented to his Majeſty by Perſons of the beſt Quality. The Petition from London was ſubſcrib'd by above 20000 Hands. Sir Gilbert Gerrard, accompany'd with eight Gentlemen of Note, and ſeveral eminent Citizens, preſented a Petition from ſome Thouſands of his Majeſty's Subjects in London, Weſtminſter, and Parts adjacent, for the Sitting of the Parliament: In which Petition were theſe Expreſſions; There is a moſt damnable and helliſh Popiſh Plot, branched forth into the moſt horrid Villanies againſt his Majeſty's moſt ſacred Perſon, the Proteſtant Religion, and the well-eſtabliſh'd Government of this Realm; for which, ſeveral of the principal Conſpirators ſtand impeach'd by Parliament: Therefore in ſuch a time, when his Majeſty's Perſon, as alſo the Proteſtant Religion, and the Government of the Nation are in moſt imminent Danger, we moſt humbly and earneſtly pray, that the Parliament, which is prorogu'd until the 26th Day of January may then ſit to try the Offenders, and to redreſs all the moſt important Grievances, no otherwiſe to be redreſſed. The Roll of Names to this Petition was above 100 Yards in Length. To which the King return'd this Anſwer, I look upon myſelf to be the Head of the Government, and the only Judge of what is fit to be done in ſuch Caſes; and I will do what I think moſt for the Good of myſelf and my People. Then turning to Sir Gilbert, he ſaid, I did not expect to find one of your Name, and particularly you, in ſuch a thing, and I am ſorry for it; which Sir Gilbert Gerrard was not, but would have vindicated what he had done, if the King would have ſtaid to have heard him. The Wiltſhire Petition was deliver'd by the famous Thomas Thynne, Eſq; accompany'd by Sir Walter St. John, Grandfather to the late Lord Bolingbroke, and Sir Edward Hungerford. The King ask'd them, Whether they had their Directions from the Grand Jury. But what was a pack'd Grand Jury, ſuch as abhorr'd theſe Petitions, to ſuch Men as Mr. Thynne, Sir Walter St. John, and Sir Edward Hungerford? Mr. Thynne anſwer'd, no: The King preſently reply'd, what indeed I am aſhamed to repeat, conſidering to whom he ſpoke; Why ſay you then that you come from the County? You come from a Company of looſe People: Proteſtant Diſſenters, and ſober Churchmen. What do you take me to be? I know well enough, but I care not to tell it. What do you take yourſelves to be, I admire Gentlemen of your Eſtates ſhould animate People to Mutiny and Rebellion. You ſee, to petition the Stuartine Princes is to rebel. You would not take it well I ſhould meddle with your Affairs, and I deſire you would not meddle with mine, eſpecially with a Matter, which is ſo eſſential a Part of my Prerogative. How they do hang upon that Word, and upon all occaſions bring it in by the Head and Shoulders? His Majeſty's Anſwer to Sir Robert Barrington, Colonel Mildmay, and Mr. Honeywood, who preſented the Eſſex Petition, is ſtill worſe: I am extremely ſurpriz'd to ſee you meddle with Matters that ſo immediately concern the Crown and me, and that againſt the Senſe of the beſt and chiefeſt Men of the County; I believe ſome of you, who have ſign'd the Petition may mean well, but they are abus'd by thoſe who do not. I am not willing to call to mind Things paſt, yet I cannot but remember the Act of Oblivion, tho' not as ſome do; and thoſe who had ſtood in need of that Act, would do well not to take ſuch Courſes as might need another; I very well remember FORTY: and ſo, ſays Echard, he turn'd away; and indeed he might very well be willing to get out of the Hearing of an Anſwer. To the Gentlemen from the Juſtices of the Peace in Berkſhire, he ſaid, We will agree this Matter over a Cup of Ale, when we meet at Windſor; tho' I wonder my Neighbours will meddle with my Buſineſs: As if the Gentlemen of England had nothing to do in the Security of their Religion, Rights, Liberties, and Properties, which he was ſo far from taking care of, that he was an Enemy to their Religion; and

A. D. 1679. and as to their temporal Concerns, his ſecret Engagements with the French King, ſhew what was his Concern for them. The Petitions from York, Surry, &c. were ſign'd by many Thouſands of Freeholders. The King endeavour'd to put a ſtop to that from London, by ſending an Order to the Lord Mayor, December the 20th, not to ſuffer Perſons to go about to get Hands; but to ſeize them, and bring them before the Council-Board, where they were ſure to meet with good Uſage from Mr. Lawrence Hyde, the Marquis of Worceſter, and thoſe that kept their Places there, after the Proteſtant Lords were gone. Two days after, the King put forth a Proclamation againſt Petitioning, of which, we ſhall hear more hereafter; and another to declare his Intention to prorogue the Parliament, which ſeems to be done to ſpite the Petitioners; and it has been obſerv'd of the Stuartine Kings, that when the People have been very earneſt for, or againſt any thing, they always would be as earneſt againſt it, or for it. One cannot by their Actions think they did really know what the Duty of a King was, that a good Prince has in truth no ſeparate Intereſt of his own, and that the Intereſt of the People, is the Intereſt of the King. It is not in common Senſe to ſuppoſe that the well being of eight or ten Millions of Souls in this World, and the next, muſt depend on the Paſſion or Folly of one Perſon: Nor is it common Senſe to imagine, that People when they ſuffer have not a Right to complain, or to petition when they are aggriev'd. But the Stuartine Kings always treated their Subjects, as if they took them to be Fools as well as Slaves, tho' they had of all Princes that ever reign'd the leaſt Pretence to do ſo, from the Strength or Extent of their Genius; for I defy the greateſt Bigot to the Race to produce one wiſe ſtep in all their Hiſtory, which was not forced from them, I will not ſay by the Petitions, but by the Clamours of the People. North, Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, drew up the Proclamation againſt Petitioning, as contrary to the common and known Law of the Land, and tending to raiſe Rebellion. A Word theſe Kings and their Miniſters made uſe of to frighten the People, as Nurſes and old Women do of raw Head and bloody Bones to frighten Children.

A. D. 1680. WE have already mention'd the Petitions from ſeveral Cities and Counties for the Meeting of the Parliament, and the King's neglecting them; inſomuch, that on the 26th of January, the Day to which the Parliament was prorogu'd, he came to the Houſe of Lords, and ſending for the Commons, told both Houſes, that the Diſtractions and Jealouſies at home were of ſuch a nature, and ſo heighten'd and improv'd by the Malice and Induſtry of ill Men, that he is unalterably of opinion, that a longer Interval of Parliament will be abſolutely neceſſary; accordingly the Lord Chancellor, by his Command, prorogu'd the Parliament to the 15th of April: one of the fine Strokes in Politicks in this Reign. The People were in a general Ferment under the Apprehenſions of Popery. The Parliament's vigorous Reſolutions could only quiet their Minds. They earneſtly petition'd, and impatiently waited for a Seſſion. A longer Interval of Parliament is abſolutely neceſſary for compoſing and quieting of Men's Minds.

King prorogues the Parliament.

The Judges were well inſtructed, and the Popiſh Conſpirators might now venture to take their Trials. Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, an old Yorkſhire Knight, was arraign'd at the King's-Bench Bar in Weſtminſter-Hall, upon an Information of High Treaſon, in conſpiring the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the Government. The chief Evidence againſt him were Bolron, who had been Bailiff of his Colepits, and one Mowbray, who had belong'd to his Family, who both ſwore home; but Sir Thomas Hudſon, Foreman, and the reſt of a Yorkſhire Jury, clear'd him, giving more credit to the Priſoner than to the Witneſſes. A. D. 1680.

About the ſame time was try'd William Laud, of note only for his Name and his Crime, the tearing a Petition for the ſitting of the Parliament, as it was handing about for Subſcription; but the Jury would not find him guilty, nor his two Accomplices Whitfield and Smallbones: but they convicted Ben. Harris, the Publiſher of the Weekly Domeſtick Intelligence, for publiſhing the Appeal from the Country to the City; and the Court ſentenc'd him to be pillory'd, to pay 500 l. Fine, and be impriſon'd a Year. Francis Smith and Langley Curtis were alſo convicted of publiſhing a Pamphlet for the Country Party, as was Henry Care the Author.

However, the Duke of York did not think fit to ſtand it out againſt the Clamour of the People, but to abſent himſelf ſome time longer, under colour of the Commiſſion of Scotland, which Kingdom is highly recommended by him in a Speech he made to the Privy Council there, for a brave and loyal Nobility and Gentry, a regular Privy Council, for Judicatures fill'd with upright Judges; and for ſome other the like Bleſſings under his auſpicious Government, which the Scots cannot think of to this day without Terror and Trembling. He left Edinburgh in February, and there being no Parliament ſitting, he made uſe of the Interval to return to Court, where the King receiv'd him with the greater Tokens of Affection, for that he knew it would mortify the Proteſtants. We have juſt mention'd the Conviction of Bookſellers and others, for certain Pamphlets in Vindication of the Proteſtant Religion, and the People's Rights and Liberties, which began now to be openly attack'd, and to quaſh all Attempts in Defence of thoſe dear Liberties and Rights, and our moſt holy Religon, The Judges were directed to declare, That the King might prohibit the Printing and Publiſhing of all News-Books and Pamphlets; and preſently a Proclamation was iſſu'd, to ſuppreſs all Pamphlets and News-Books that had not the Royal Licence. There cannot be a ſurer Mark of an ill Government, than its being afraid of the Preſs: Honeſty fears no Slander, but Guilt ſtarts at a Whiſper.

The Preſs reſtrain'd.

Archdeacon Echard tells us, the very Counties that had addreſs'd for the Parliament's ſitting, grew aſham'd of what they had done, and ſent up Addreſſes of Abhorrence of thoſe Petitions. One as blind as himſelf might have ſeen that thoſe Counter-Petitions were extorted from thoſe Counties by Menaces, or that they were wheedled out of them by Fraud: for can any thing be more unnatural, than for a Free People to petition to be Slaves, to deſtroy the Fences of their Liberty, or make way for Tyranny to deſtroy them, which would be the natural Conſequence of the Subverſion of our Parliamentary Conſtitution. The Grand-Jury of Weſtminſter was very forward with their abhorring Petition, which was preſented by Withens the Lawyer, one of their Parliament Men. There came the like Petitions from Surrey, Eſſex, Middleſex, and Norfolk: Which laſt mention'd County ſent his Majeſty their humble Thanks for recalling the Duke from Flanders. His Majeſty knighted Withens, and ſeveral other Abhorrers were dubb'd, to encourage the Work all over England.

riage to the King; 'twas ſaid to be printed at Cologne, where the Author would have us believe the Marriage was conſummated; but it is a Heap of Falſities and Inconſiſtencies. The King's Amour with her was ſome Years before he was at Cologne, nay, at the very time that his Father was about to be try'd, condemn'd, and executed, the Duke being born at Rotterdam a few Months after. But it was now rumour'd, that Sir Gilbert Gerrard had Proofs of that Marriage in a Black Box, which, upon examination, he ſolemnly deny'd before the King and Council; and it is moſt certain, that Rumour was only rais'd to puzzle the Duke of York's Cauſe ſtill more, and encreaſe the Party of the Duke of Monmouth, tho' the Falſhood of it was the occaſion that it had quite contrary Effects. The King made three Declarations one after another, that he was never marry'd to any Woman but Queen Catherine; and conſidering how little Credit was given to this falſe Rumour, he ſeems to over-act in this Part to ſhew how unalterably he was attach'd to his Brother's and the Popiſh Intereſt. The Earl of Shaftesbury was thought to be at the bottom of this Rumour, tho' it is by no means worthy his great Genius for Politicks.

Rumour of the King's Marriage to the Duke of Monmouth's Mother.

The Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs makes uſe of this Interval of Parliament, to diſcharge the Popiſh Priſoners as faſt as they are brought before him. The Grand-Jury of Middleſex brought in the Bill againſt the Counteſs of Powis Ignoramus, and ſav'd him the Drudgery of bringing her off. Richard Tasborough Eſq; of Suffolk, was try'd for conſpiring the Death of the King; and after a long Hearing to no purpoſe, ſays Echard, he was acquitted. Sir Henry Tichbourne, Mr. Roper, and John Caryl Eſq; were bail'd, becauſe there was no Witneſs againſt them but Dr. Oates. And the Counteſs of Powis, Sir Robert Peyton, and one Bedingfield were abſolutely diſcharged of all Attendance; tho' as to the Counteſs, Fact is not capable of better Proof, than that ſhe ſet Dangerfield on the Diſcovery of Manſel's Preſbyterian Plot, that the Letters ſhe dictated were treaſonable, and that the Guilt and Puniſhment due to Forgery did of right belong to her. Mrs. Cellier was alſo acquitted on account of Dangerfield's being outlaw'd for Felony, and conſequently his Evidence was not good. But Dangerfield had a Pardon which render'd him rectus in Curia; and as impudent as Cellier was, ſhe never had the Impudence to deny the treaſonable Papers found in her Meal-Tub, Copies of thoſe that were found in Col. Manſel's Lodgings. Echard is her Advocate againſt Dangerfield, that Great and Infamous Criminal, ſays he: but what ſays Mr. Baxter of that very Dangerfield? He confeſs'd all, and was a ſtedfaſt Convert and Proteſtant. Is it neceſſarily once a Rogue and always a Rogue, as is ſaid of a Captain? But ſo much has been urg'd in vindication of ſuch Evidence, and that Villany cannot be otherwiſe evidenc'd than by Villains, that we ſhall ſay no more of it. This is a grateful Period of Time with Mr. Archdeacon. Others that were to be try'd about the Popiſh-Plot, were ſome bail'd, ſome abſolutely diſcharg'd; as Bedloe died at Briſtol the 20th of Auguſt; and the Lord Chief Juſtice North being then there in his Circuit, he viſited him before his Death; and with his laſt Words, Bedloe atteſted, That the Duke of York was engag'd in the Plot; That Anderton and Lodge, two Jeſuits at Rome, own'd to him the King was to be made away with, and that every Word he had ſworn againſt any of the Conſpirators was true, and rather leſs than more than the Truth. North took the Depoſition of this dying Man; yet Echard, who laid ſo great ſtreſs on the laſt Words of Green, Berry, Hill, and Staley, knows not how to ſpeak ſoftly of the dying Words of one harden'd by ſo many Years Villanies: and then to juſtify his uncharitable Cenſure, he remembers us of his changing and contradicting his Evidence. He had certainly no Occaſion, no Temptation to depoſe a Confirmation of all of it before a Judge, juſt as he was going out of the World. He had no Cauſe to credit by it, as the Papiſts had by denying the Crimes they were charg'd with. The Papiſts could be abſolv'd. Bedloe could have no Abſolution for his lying in the laſt Moment of his Life; yet ſo very tender is Mr. Archdeacon of the Popiſh Intereſt, that he will not ſpeak charitably, or indeed humanely of a Perſon who had born his Teſtimony againſt it.

Bedloe confirms all at his Death.

The Juries impannel'd by Raymond and Lewis, Sheriffs of London and Middleſex, had lately appear'd to be ſo much at the Direction of the Judges, that the Citizens of London reſolv'd to reſume their ancient Right; and inſtead of taking a Sheriff, becauſe the Lord-Mayor drank to a Man, to chuſe two ſubſtantial diſcreet Citizens to diſcharge that Office. The Court was alarm'd at this Proceeding, and inſtructed their Creatures to make a vigorous Oppoſition, that they might keep Juries ſtill in dependance upon them. The honeſt Citizens put up Slingsby Bethel Eſq; who wrote that excellent Treatiſe of the Intereſt of Princes, wherein is more good Policy, than in the Earl of Clarendon's three Folio's, and Alderman Henry Corniſh. The Election of theſe two Citizens was oppos'd by the Perſecuting Party, who demanded a Poll for Mr. Box and Mr. Nicholſon: and Echard pretends, the honeſt Livery-Men were forc'd to uſe Violence in procuring a Majority, tho' the Numbers for Bethel and Corniſh were really almoſt double to thoſe for Box and Nicholſon.

Duke of York indicted.

The Duke of York continuing to ſhew by all his Conduct abroad and at home, that he was the moſt obſtinate and inveterate Enemy of Liberty and Religion, ſeveral Perſons of the greateſt Eminence in the Kingdom for Birth, Quality, Fortune and Merit, preſented Reaſons for indicting him to the Grand-Jury of Middleſex, June 26, 1680. Two of which are as follow:

A. D. 1680.

" That there have been divers Letters read " in both Houſes of Parliament, and at the Se- " cret Committees of both Houſes, from ſeveral " Cardinals, and others of Rome; and alſo from " other Popiſh Biſhops and Agents of the Pope " in other foreign Parts, which do apparently " ſhew the great Correſpondencies between the " Duke of York and the Pope. And how the " Pope could not chooſe but weep for joy at the " reading ſome of the Duke's Letters, and what " great Satisfaction it was to the Pope to hear " the Duke was advanc'd to the Catholick Reli- " gion. That the Pope has granted Breves to " the Duke, ſent him Beads, ample Indulgen- " ces, with much more to this purpoſe. That " the whole Houſe of Commons have declar'd " him to be a Papiſt in their Votes, Sunday, " April 6, 1679."

Reſolved, Nemine Contradicente, That the Duke of York being a Papiſt, and the hopes of his coming ſuch to the Crown, has given the greateſt Countenance and Encouragement to the preſent Conſpiracy, and Deſigns of the Papiſts againſt the King and the Proteſtant Religion. What this Conſpiracy and Deſign is, will appear by a Declaration made by both Houſes of Parliament, March 25, 1679.

Reſolved, Nemine Contradicente, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament aſſembled, That they do declare that they are fully ſatisfy'd by the Proofs they have heard, that there now is, and for divers Years laſt paſt, hath been a horrid and treaſonable Plot and Conſpiracy contriv'd and carry'd on, by thoſe of the Popiſh Religion for the murthering of his Majeſty's ſacred Perſon, and for ſubverting the Proteſtant Religion, and the ancient well eſtabliſh'd Government of this Realm.

The Jury was ſent for up to the Court of Bing's-Bench, whilſt they were on this Indictment, and diſmiſs'd; ſo that nothing further was done upon it, excepting that the Jury receiv'd the Preſentment; and by diſmiſſing them, a very great Number of Indictments were diſcharg'd: A Thing ſcarcely to be parallel'd, ſays my Author; and of very ill Conſequence, not only to many private Perſons, but chiefly to the Publick. The Duke was gone again to Scotland to be out of the Parliament's way, tho' he ſate in the Houſe of Lords when the Parliament was prorogu'd from the 15th of April to the 17th of May, and from thence, by ſeveral Prorogations, to the 21ſt of October. This Preſentment was a terrible Mortification to him, and he and his Party muſt then have ſunk, had not the King his Brother been as much of his Religion as of his Blood, with reſpect to Faith and Principle, tho' not to Bigotry and Zeal. As ſoon as the Duke was departed for Scotland, the Party for the Excluſion Bill began to work all their Engines for accompliſhing it. The Chief of this Party were the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, who was to manage with the King and the Earl of Sunderland. Mr. Godolphin, Lord Halliſax, and others, were for Limitations; and with theſe the King join'd ſo heartily, that he would have agreed to any Limitations that ſhould leave the Title of King to the Duke, tho' it ſhould be little more than a mere Title: But he was poſitive and fix'd againſt the Excluſion. The Duke was obſtinate againſt all Limitations; and that was acting a ſincere Part, and letting the World ſee he was reſolv'd to be limited by nothing but his Will and Pleaſure. Mr. Hyde, and Sir Lionel Jenkins, lately made Secretary of State in the room of Mr. Coventry, were at the head of thoſe that oppos'd the Bill of Excluſion in the Houſe of Commons. About this time the Prince of Orange projected an Alliance againſt France, and moſt of the German Princes were diſpos'd to come into it. For the French had ſet up a new Court at Metz, in which many Princes were, under pretence of Dependencies, and ſome old forgot or forg'd Titles, adjudg'd to loſe their Territories, as belonging to the French Conqueſts. This, as my Lord of Sarum phraſes it, was a mean as well as perfidious Practice, in which the Court of France rais'd much more Jealouſy and Hatred againſt themſelves, than could be ever ballanc'd by ſuch ſmall Acceſſions as were adjudg'd by that Mock-Court. Had King Charles fallen in with this Diſpoſition of the German Princes, ſuch a Confederacy might have been form'd, as would have given a Check to the exorbitant Power of France. But he was deep in another dark Confederacy, to maſter his Parliaments by the help of French Money and French Forces, upon occaſion, which made him deaf to all Propoſals that were not conſiſtent with his Engagements with Lewis the XIVth, who, according to Acherley, " grew up " to a View of Univerſal Monarchy, to a Puiſ- " ſance able to reduce even England as well as " the Empire, Holland, &c. under an abſolute " Subjection, which could not afterwards be a- " voided, but by their uniting againſt that Po- " tentate in two long and bloody Wars; the one in " the Reign of King William III. and the other " in the Reign of Queen Anne, in which their " Liberty was put in doubt, their Wealth ex- " hauſted, and thoſe Nations involv'd in Debts " almoſt inſuperable." Theſe are the Bleſſings the two laſt Stuartine Kings entail'd on theſe Nations: Theſe the Legacy they left us. All which

A. D. 1680. which would have been prevented, and the Engliſh Liberties, and the Liberties of Europe, as well as the Proteſtant Religion, have been ſecur'd, by the Bill of Excluſion.

The Earl of Sunderland enter'd into a particular Confidence with the Prince of Orange, which he manag'd by his Uncle Mr. Sydney, afterwards Earl of Rumney, who was ſent Envoy to Holland. The Prince, according to Biſhop Burnet, was confident, that if England would have come heartily into a Confederacy againſt France, a ſtrong one might be form'd; but Van Beuning, who was then in England, wrote to the Town of Amſterdam, that they could not depend on the Faith or Aſſiſtance of England, for the Court was ſtill in the French Intereſt. He thought the Jealouſy between the Court and the Country Party then ſo high, that he did not believe it poſſible to heal Matters, ſo as to encourage the King to enter into any Alliance which might draw on a War. For the King ſeem'd to ſet that up for a Maxim, that his going into a War, was the putting himſelf into the hands of his Parliament, and was firmly reſolv'd againſt it, tho' not for Van Beuning's Reaſon, ſo much as in conſideration of his Secret League with that very Prince, who, at the ſame time, had in conception already ſubjected the Britiſh Empire. No body can think that, when he had reduc'd the Spaniſh Netherlands and Holland, he would have confin'd his Conqueſts to the Continent; and Lord Holles, who was Ambaſſador in France, thinks he intimated his intended Invaſion of England, when he ſaid once, I will bring my Men to a Place, where there are neither Gates nor Bars: And that Lord Holles did really believe he meant England, appears by this Expreſſion in his Letter to the before mention'd Van Beuning; The wiſeſt and greateſt Men are not always ſo guarded, but that in their Gayeties their future Intentions drop out of their Mouths; and wicked Men do not only expreſs their Natures in their wicked Sayings, by which Men may take Warning of them; but they live after their Deaths in thoſe Sayings, as King Charles the Second does in this; God would not damn him for taking a little pleaſure out of the way, which we have elſewhere mention'd after Biſhop Burnet. Lord Holles, in the ſame Letter, gives us a juſt Character of the Government of England, ſince it fell into the hands of the Stuarts. In former Times we had two grand Maxims in our Government; one was, That we ſhould always keep the Balance of Chriſtendom equal and ſteady, England only having the natural Advantage to do that; and this grew up with us from the Norman Conqueſt, for above 600 Years ſince. The other was, That we ſhould always make ourſelves the Head and Protection of the Proteſtant Intereſt, a Maxim that we took from the Reformation, and which we ſhew'd the World in Queen Elizabeth's Time. How we have kept to theſe two Maxims, our entring into a League to ſubvert and deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion, and to break the Bonds, and remove the Land-Marks of States and Kingdoms, will ſufficiently declare unto you. Such was the Circumſtances of the Engliſh, with reſpect to Foreign Affairs; and they are not more ſecure and honourable, with reſpect to Domeſtick; in which the rigid Clergy behav'd very indecently and unwarrantably, as that great Lawyer Sir John Hawles intimates; Many of the Clergy of the Church of England had been prevail'd with, to cry up the Popiſh as a Fanatick Plot. The Papiſts and the Church of England being, in the late Times, equally Sufferers, and oppreſs'd by the Fanaticks, they naturally grew to have a kindneſs for each other, and both join'd in hating the Fanaticks; and therefore pretended, at leaſt, that they did not believe any thing of the Popiſh Plot, but that that Report was given out by the Fanaticks, while they themſelves were deſigning ſomething againſt the Church of England. So far the Eccleſiaſtical Writer of the Compleat Hiſtory goes; but he ſinks what follows in Sir John Hawles's Remarks on Fitzharris's Trial. The Papiſts having ſo great a part of the Clergy of the Church of England ready to believe any thing of a Fanatick Plot which they ſhould forge; and obſerving, that that which gave Credit to the Popiſh Plot, was Writings, (not a Snip of Paper, ſays another Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorian) concurring with oral Teſtimony, which it did; mind how Echard and all of them endeavour to ridicule and baffle the Evidence: For very little of the Truth of the Popiſh Plot depended on the Credit of Oates, Bedloe, or any other Perſon. Mr. Archdeacon affirms, it all depended upon it, moſt of the Facts of that Deſign, when diſcover'd, proving themſelves. To inſtance in one, Oates diſcover'd Coleman had Intelligence with Le Chaiſe, of a Deſign on England, and that Coleman had Papers teſtifying as much; when thoſe Papers were ſeiz'd, and own'd by Coleman, and the purport of them was what Oates ſaid they were, it was not material whether Oates was a Man of Truth or not, the Papers without Oates's Evidence ſufficiently prov'd the Deſign. The Heads of the two reverend Hiſtorians were not clear enough to admit ſuch ſolid Reaſoning. Inſtead of this, one of them, an Archdeacon, writes with amazing Confidence, The Minds of the Parliament were fill'd and heated with the Fears and Apprehenſions of Popery, Plots and Conſpiracies. And now all ſorts of Plot-Diſcoverers apply'd themſelves with their Narratives and Relations, and never fail'd of proportionalle Encouragement. Dangerfield began with giving in his Information, which he treats as ludicrouſly, as if there had been much Mirth in a horrid Deſign againſt the Lives of the greateſt and worthieſt Men in the Kingdom. Sir John Hawles ſpeaks of it thus, "Dangerfield was made uſe of to leave "Papers in Col. Manſel's Lodgings, he being an "Acquaintance of my Lord Shaftesbury's, im- "porting a Plot; but that was ſo fooliſhly car- "ried on, and the then Attorney General, who "had the Examination of that Matter, not be- "ing qualify'd with the Aſſurance his Succeſſor "had, to carry on a Thing that had neither "Senſe nor Honeſty in it, made ſuch a ſcurvy "Report of the Matter to the King and Coun- "cil, that they were forc'd to vote Manſel in- "nocent." However, Mr. Archdeacon is in a very good humour, that Mrs. Cellier, an Accomplice with Dangerfield in that helliſh Contrivance, was clear'd, which ſo ſpirited that Bawd, that ſhe publiſh'd a Narrative in oppoſition to Dangerfield's, call'd, Malice Defeated; wherein ſhe ſcandalouſly reflected on ſeveral Perſons of Eminence and Worth, and did not ſpare ſome in Power; and being try'd for publiſhing this Libel, Juſtice overtook her, and ſhe was condemn'd to ſtand thrice in the Pillory, to pay 1000 Pounds Fine, and to be impriſon'd till all was perform'd, which, as to the Pillory part, was to the endangering her Life, the Populace pelting her without Mercy; and tho' ſhe richly deſerv'd a Gibbet, yet the Mob were not to be her Executioners. I leave Sir William Temple's Account of the Lord Eſſex's Impatience to be Lord Lieutenant of Ireland again; and Lord Shaftesbury's ſaying to him, My Lord, if you will come in to us, never trouble yourſelf, we will make make you Lieutenant, &c. in the place where Echard found them, being apprehenſive that we have not the whole Truth.

On the 20th of October, the Duke and Dutcheſs of York began their Journey to Scotland by Sea; the King accompanying them as low as Woolwich, and giving him, no doubt, all Aſſurances, that he would never conſent to alter the Succeſſion. Next day the Parliament met, after ſeveral Prorogations, when the King made a Speech to both Houſes, wherein, after the Benefits, which Chriſtendom as well as England may reap by the Alliances the King had made, he thought fit to renew all Aſſurance that can be deſir'd for Security of the Proteſtant Religion, which he is reſolv'd to maintain againſt the Conſpiracies of our Enemies. We all know the Prince who ſaid it, to be a Papiſt, and with what Conſcience could he ſay it? Coke is a little coarſe in his Expreſſion, but he's honeſt, and therefore I ſometimes make uſe of him; "Can any Man, "who reads the Tranſactions between the Pro- "rogation of the laſt Parliament, and the Meet- "ing of this, force a Belief of this?" And concur with any new Remedies which ſhall be propos'd, which may conſiſt with preſerving the Succeſſion of the Crown in its due and legal Courſe; "that is, Let the Wolf be Shepherd, and let "the Sheep make what Laws they pleaſe." Then the King recommends to them a ſtrict Inquiry into the Popiſh Plot, and that the Lords in the Tower be brought to a ſpeedy Trial, without which, he did not think himſelf or the Parliament ſafe. Coke upon this. "The conſtant "Vogue was, That the King diſſolv'd the two "laſt Parliaments, to preſerve the Lords in the "Tower from being brought to a Trial; and I "am ſure that you will ſoon hear that the King "did not believe his and the Nation's Safety did "conſiſt in the Trial of the Lords in the Tower." He told the Parliament, what danger Tangier was in, and what vaſt Expence he muſt be at to keep it. "And that the Commons, laſt Parlia- "ment, drew up an Act, to ſettle it upon the "Imperial Crown of England; and that they "who did adviſe the King to part with Tangier "to any Foreign Prince or State, or were in- "ſtrumental therein, ought to be accounted "Enemies to the King and Kingdom." Coke again, "What care the King took to keep it, "will ſoon appear, tho' 'twas ſaid the Parlia- "ment (I think it was out of the Chimney-Mo- "ney) gave him 40000 Pounds per Ann. to- "wards the Preſervation of it, to the Crown of "England." The King goes on, and ſays, That above all the Treaſure in the World, which he was ſure would give him greater Strength, both at home and abroad, than any Treaſure can do, is a perfect Union among ourſelves. Yet, ſays Coke, "he does not ſay wherein we ſhould unite. "Truth and Unity are one, and conſiſt in "entire Parts; but Falſhood and Diſcord are "infinite. What Truth or Unity could be in "the King's looſe and irregular Actions, ſo con- "founding, and every day varying from what "he had promis'd before? Or how is it poſſible "for the Nation to unite under Terms which "are inconſiſtible and impoſſible; viz. Unite "to preſerve the Conſtitutions of the King- "dom, and yet be at no Diſcord with the King, "who, they were morally certain, would make "it his Buſineſs to ſubvert them?" Here's enough of it, conſidering the Speech was ſo ill grounded, and the Art ſo little hid, that the Commons would not deign to debate one Paragraph. Nay, the Lord Chancellor was at ſo great a loſs how to give it any Flouriſhes, that he choſe rather to ſay nothing, but as his Majeſty commanded, directed them to proceed to the Choice of a Speaker, and they unanimouſly choſe William Williams, Eſq; of Gray's-Inn, Recorder of Cheſter; who being approv'd of by his Majeſty, the Houſe agreed upon an Addreſs, wherein they expreſs'd their Reſolution to purſue, with a ſtrict and impartial Inquiry, the execrable Popiſh-Plot; and fix Days after they proceeded to Votes about the before-mention'd Petitions.

"Reſolved, Nemine Contradicente, That it "is, and ever hath been the undoubted Right "of the Subjects of England, to petition the "King for the Calling and Sitting of Parlia- "ments, and redreſſing Grievances. Reſolved, "That to traduce ſuch Petitioning as a Viola- "tion of Duty, and to repreſent it to his Ma- "jeſty as tumultuary and ſeditious, is to betray "the Liberty of the Subject, and contributes "to the Deſign of ſubverting the ancient legal "Conſtitution of this Kingdom, and introdu- "cing arbitrary Power." They order'd a Committee the next day to inquire of all ſuch Perſons, as have offended againſt theſe Rights of the Subject.

Sir Francis Wythens expell'd.

And the next Day, October 28th, Sir Francis Wythens, Head Steward of Weſtminſter, and Citizen in Parliament for that City, being found guilty in particular, they voted him a Betrayer of the undoubted Rights of the Subjects of England, and order'd him to be expell'd the Houſe, having firſt receiv'd their Cenſure upon his Knees at the Bar, which he ſuffer'd with great Dejection, both of Look and Mind. The infamous Jefferies was next queſtion'd; he was Recorder of London, and the City petition'd the Houſe againſt him. A Committee being order'd, they paſs'd this Vote the 15th of November: Reſolved, "That this Committee is of opinion, that "by the Evidence given to this Committee, it "does appear, that Sir George Jefferies, Recor- "der of the City of London, by traducing and "obſtructing Petitioning for the Sitting of the "Parliament, hath betray'd the Rights of the "Subject;" to which the Houſe agreed, and 'twas order'd, That an humble Addreſs be made to his Majeſty, to remove him out of all publick Offices. They further order'd, that the Committee ſhould enquire into all ſuch Perſons as had been adviſing or promoting of the late Proclamation, ſtil'd, A Proclamation againſt tumultuous Petitioning. The Grand Juries of the Counties of Somerſet and Devon having expreſs'd their Abhorrence of ſuch Petitioning, the Houſe, on the 19th of November, order'd, that the two Foremen of the ſaid Juries, William Coleman Eſq; and Henry Walrond Eſq; ſhould be ſent for in cuſtody of the Sergeant at Arms; as were alſo Sir Giles Philips, Capt. William Caſtle, William Stawel Eſq; Mr. John Hutchinſon, Mr. Thomas Staples, and Sir Thomas Holt, Sergeant at Law. The next day they voted Thomas Herbert Eſq; of Monmouthſhire, to be ſent for in cuſtody for proſecuting John Arnold Eſq; Knight of that Shire at the Council-Table, for promoting Petitioning, and procuring Subſcriptions. Echard highly reſents theſe vigorous Proceedings, and eſpecially the keeping an Iriſh Man five Weeks in Priſon upon bare Suſpicion. This Iriſh Man is Thomas Sheridan before mention'd, whom he calls a Gentleman of a good Family; that the Injuſtice of the Parliament might be the more crying in this Gentleman's Caſe, who, in truth, was a notorious Villain, the Son of a Biſhop's Turnſpit, who had been bred up by Charity, and becoming a Deacon, was ſo zealous a Proteſtant, that Oliver, when he was in Ireland, order'd a Maintenance for himſelf and his three Sons, of whom whom one was this ſame Sheridan, whoſe Siſters were ſeen by my Author in Brogues and Kirchiefs, and the Family was of the Scologues, a ragged Crew of wild Iriſh. But this Man being an Agent for the Papiſts, and even for the very worſt ſort of Papiſts, is ſo civilly treated by Mr. Archdeacon, tho' the beſt Name his Countryman Tyrconnel could give him, was, Traytor, Cheat, Rogue. If one was to compliment ſuch a vile Fellow as this, methinks one ſhould be very careful not to ſay a falſe thing in his favour. We ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak further of theſe Parliamentary Proſecutions in the Sequel, and muſt now give a ſhort Account of the grand Debate about the Bill of Excluſion. The noble Patriot William Lord Ruſſel open'd it October the 26th, ſaying, It is my opinion, that the Life of the King, the Safety of the Nation, and the Proteſtant Religion, are in great danger from Popery; and that either the Parliament muſt ſuppreſs the Growth and Power thereof, or elſe Popery will ſoon deſtroy not only Parliaments, but all that is near and dear to Us. Wherefore I humbly move, that we may in the firſt place take into Conſideration how to ſuppreſs Popery, and prevent a Popiſh Succeſſor. His Lordſhip's Motion was ſeconded by the wiſe and honourable Sir Henry Capel, afterwards Lord Capel, who related, in a long Speech, How the Popiſh Party made it their Endeavours, by their diabolical Counſels, to weaken the Proteſtant Intereſt, in order to a general Deſtruction of it, by engaging us in a War againſt Holland; as alſo dividing our Fleet under Prince Rupert and General Monk, with a deſign to deſtroy them, as well as our Navy at Chatham. How when the City of London was burnt in 1666, thoſe who were taken in carrying on that wicked Act, were diſcharged without Trial. Pray call to mind what the Archdeacon ſaid directly contrary to this, that he had weigh'd all Circumſtances, and found that no mortal Man had any hand in it, but that it was the Judgment of Heaven. Sir Henry Capel's Speech is as good as it is long; but what follows is entirely omitted by the reverend Hiſtorian, and his Partiality in it is ſhameleſs. Sir Henry, ſpeaking of the Faction that obtain'd the Oxford Act, and ſome others againſt the Diſſenters, adds, Great Endeavours were us'd to have them executed ſeverely, in expectation that the Diſſenters would ſo be made weary of living quietly under them, and in the end be glad of a Toleration; but the Diſſenters deceiv'd them, and ſubmitted to the Laws, inſomuch, that in the Year 1670, till 1671, there was hardly a Conventicle to be heard of in England. Echard poſitively aſſerts, they had now their open Meetings more full and frequent. Sir H. C. again, And might never have been more, if that Party had not been afraid of a great Diſappointment thereby; wherefore, to revive our Diviſions, and to bring in, as they hop'd, their own Religion, they employ'd all their Force again to get a Toleration. I ſay, they did it, becauſe it cannot be imagin'd it could be from any Proteſtant Intereſt, both Church-men and Diſſenters publickly declaring their Deteſtation of it. I do not mention his and other Members Reaſons for the Excluſion, becauſe there was not one Reaſon againſt it; and that it is now the greateſt Nonſenſe in the World to argue againſt excluding a Prince, whom we abdicated eight Years after: For if the abdicating him, when he had been ſeveral Years in poſſeſſion of the Throne, was rightful and lawful, it was much more ſo to exclude him, before he poſſeſs'd it, he having ſhewn his Diſpoſition to do what he did, as evidently as if he had already done it; and 'twas apparent that he had enter'd into a Conſpiracy againſt the Religion, Rights and Liberties of the Engliſh Nation, long before the Parliament talk'd of an Excluſion, which being High Treaſon by our Laws, would have had worſe Effects had he been brought to a Trial while he was a Subject. What was his employing Coleman to correſpond with La Chaiſe about a Project for deſtroying the Peſtilent Hereſy? What his own Letter to La Chaiſe for Supplies from France? What his Endeavours to ſtifle the Popiſh Plot? What his Tampering with Dangerfield about a ſham Presbyterian Plot, and a great variety of other ſuch Offences, not ſo much as mention'd in the Arguments for excluding him? I ſhall only name the Gentlemen who ſpoke heartily and reaſonably for the Excluſion, as, Biſhop Burnet ſays of Jenkins, He neither ſpoke nor writ well, and all his Arguments were heard with Indignation. They may be read in Echard's Hiſtory, in which ſuch ſort of Speeches are carefully preſerv'd; and it was mov'd in ſome of them, that the Duke of York's Daughters might be nam'd in the Bill of Excluſion as the next in Succeſſion: But it was ſaid that was not neceſſary, for ſince the Duke was only perſonally diſabled, as if he had been actually dead, that carried the Succeſſion over to his Daughters. However, tho' they would not name the Duke's Daughters, yet they ſent ſuch Aſſurances to the Prince of Orange, that nothing thus propos'd could be to his prejudice, that he believ'd them, and declar'd his Deſire that the King would ſatisfy his Parliament. The States ſent over Memorials to the King, preſſing him to conſent to the Excluſion. The Prince did not openly appear in this. But it being manag'd by Fagel, it was underſtood that he approv'd of it, which created a Hatred in the Duke to him that was never remov'd. The Earl of Sunderland, by means of Mr. Sidney, brought the States into it, but it had no Effect.

Prince of Orange for the Excluſion, And the States.

Upon the firſt Debate of the Excluſion Bill this Seſſions, the Duke's Friends were not prepar'd to ſpeak for him, and when they ſpoke, their Arguments were extremely weak. Mr. Garraway was for having him heard, as if he could have ſpoke better for himſelf, than they did for him, or could vindicate the Charge brought againſt him by a Perſon of Quality, For making up the Match for the King, as foreſeeing the Queen would have no Children; for the Loſs of the Earl of Sandwich; for clearing of Perſons taken in the Fire of London; the Death of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, &c. as in Echard. for hearing him, and ſaid, he doubted the Act would not be binding to him, and to a great many Loyal Perſons, who, if they had oppos'd it when it had the Royal Aſſent, would have been REBELS; and I believe there is not a Perſon in England, now ſo weak as to doubt, whether there is a Subject in the three Kingdoms, whom an Act of Parliament will not bind. Mr. Edward Seymour ſpoke more nervouſly and politely, I have been ſhot at by Wind-guns, have we not great Experience of the Duke's Love for this Nation, in his Endeavours to deſtroy the Dutch, whoſe Intereſts are inſeparable from ours; in his inveterate Enmity to our Religion; in his Abhorrence of Engliſh Liberty, and the like? Can ſo indiſcreet an Attempt as the Alteration of the eſtabliſh'd Religion, be made by a Prince ſo abounding in Prudence and Wiſdom? It may be a ſufficient Anſwer to this Interrogatory, that the ſame Mr. Seymour ſome time after took Arms againſt him for attempting it. Mr. Seymour ſaid alſo, the Bill would not bind Ireland, as was experienc'd by the Bill for ſettling the Crown on King William and Queen Mary. Mr. F—— told the Houſe, He never heard of any Law, which made an Opinion in Religion a Cauſe to be diſpoſſeſs'd of Right. Did he never ſee or hear of any Man diſpoſſeſs'd of his Right for being a Presbyterian? Excellent Logick! Becauſe it may not be very equitable to diſpoſſeſs a Man of his Right for an Opinion in Religion; or in other Words, to take away a private Man's Eſtate, becauſe he is a Papiſt, ſince his Religion has no relation to any other Man's, or to any other Man's Liberty or Property; therefore it is not lawful to diſpoſſeſs a Prince of his Right of Succeſſion for his Opinion in Religion, tho' that Opinion brings every other Man's Religion into Danger, and his Principle is to ſubvert the Government, to which he pretends an Inheritance. One cannot imagine that ſuch doughty Arguments as theſe, would ſway much with a Houſe that was full of the ableſt Heads in the Kingdom. The Bill intitled, an Act to diſable the Duke of York to inherit the Imperial Crown of this Realm, was read the firſt time the 4th of November, and paſt by a great Majority about ten Days after, when it was ſent to the Houſe of Lords by William Lord Ruſſel, attended by the Lord Cavendiſh, Sir Henry Capel, and indeed by almoſt the whole Houſe of Commons. The Earls of Shaftesbury, Eſſex, and Sunderland, were zealous for it, but the Lord Halliſax deſerted the Country Party, and appear'd with equal Zeal againſt it. Upon the firſt Reading it was carry'd in the Affirmative for a ſecond by two Votes only, according to the Archdeacon. At the ſecond Reading it was ſtrenuouſly debated, the King being preſent all the time, to awe and influence the Members, ſo that on a Diviſion it was thrown out by a Majority of thirty-three Voices; the Tale ſtanding thus, No's 63. Yea's 30.

The Excluſion Bill ſent to the Lords.

Thrown out.

P. 482. Of the No's Biſhop Burnet tells us was the whole Biſhops Bench; and Philips ſays, all the Biſhops then preſent were for the Negative. Echard can't help falſifying Fact here too, by telling us, that we muſt except three of the Biſhops. The Houſe of Commons was inflam'd when they ſaw the Fate of their Bill, which Ib. Biſhop Burnet ſays was thrown out at the firſt Reading.

After the Bill was rejected, a noble Lord, one of the Minor Vote, ſpoke as follows.

My Lords,

" This noble Lord near me hath found fault " with that Precedent that he ſuppoſes I offer'd " your Lordſhips concerning the chargeable La- " dies at Court; but I remember no ſuch thing " I ſaid: but if I muſt ſpeak of them, I ſhall ſay, " as the Prophet did to King Saul, What means " the Bleating of this kind of Cattle; and I hope " the King will make me the ſame Anſwer, " That he preſerves them for Sacrifice. For there " muſt be, in plain Engliſh, my Lords, a Change; " we muſt neither have Popiſh Wife, nor Popiſh " Favourite, nor Popiſh Miſtreſs, nor Popiſh " Counſellor at Court."

A. D. 1680.

A Lord's bold Speech.

The laſt Paragraph of this Speech was extremely bold.

" However, we know who hears, and I am " glad of this, that you have dealt ſo honourably, and ſo clearly in the King's Preſence, " and in the King's Hearing, that he cannot ſay " he wants a right State of things; he hath it " before him, and may take Counſel as he thinks " fit."

While this Bill was in Debate in the Houſe of Commons, the King ſent them a Meſſage, offering them any Security, but that without which they could never be ſecure, as was found by woful Experience. By another Meſſage he demanded Supplies for the Defence of Tangier, beſieg'd by the King of Fez: Upon which, the Houſe reſolv'd upon a Remonſtrance, which was preſented to the King the 13th of November, and was very unacceptable to him, as containing ſeveral Particulars of Miſgovernment, and all the Grievances in his Reign, with relation to Popery.

Grievances.

" That Tangier had been ſeveral times under " the Command of Popiſh Governors, that the " Garriſon was made up of Popiſh Officers and " Iriſh Papiſts; that the bloody and reſtleſs Po- " piſh Party had found Protection from the " Laws made againſt them, and were become " able to influence Matters of State and Govern- " ment; that the Continuance and Prorogation " of Parliaments had been accommodated to " ſerve the Purpoſes of that Party; Money " rais'd upon the People to ſupply his Majeſty's " extraordinary Occaſions, had by the Preva- " lence of Popiſh Counſels been employ'd to " make War upon a Proteſtant State, and to ad- " vance and augment the dreadful Power of the " French King; that great Numbers of his Ma- " jeſty's Subjects were ſent into, and continu'd in " the Service of that King; and even the Mi- " niſters of England were made Inſtruments to " preſs the States of Holland to accept of a De- " mand from the French King of admitting " the publick Exerciſe of the Roman Catholick " Religion; that if ever any Command was given " for the Laws to be put in execution againſt the " Papiſts, even from thence they gain'd Advan- " tage, while the Edge of thoſe Laws were " turn'd againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters, and the " Papiſts eſcap'd in a manner untouch'd; that " the Teſt Act had little Effect; for the Pa- " piſts, either by Diſpenſations obtain'd from " Rome, ſubmitted to thoſe Teſts, and held " their Offices themſelves, or thoſe put in their " Places were ſo favourable to the ſame Intereſts, " that Popery itſelf had rather gain'd than loſt " ground ſince that Act."

King Charles the Second's Deſign to deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion and Engliſh Liberties.

And many other the like Articles, among which, the Proſecution of Henry Care was one, That becauſe a Pamphlet came forth Weekly, call'd, The Weekly Packet of Advice from Rome, expoſing Popery as ridiculous to the People as it deſerv'd, a new arbitrary Rule of Court was made in the King's Bench, rather like a Star-Chamber Court, in King Charles the Firſt's Reign, than a Court of Law, that the ſame ſhould not for the future be printed. You ſee the Tyranny of the arbitrary Courts ſuppreſs'd in the former Reign is reviv'd in this, and the Deſigns againſt againſt our Religion and Liberty carry'd on in the Stuartine Line; yet Sir Lionel Jenkins was ſo ſimple as to recommend the Duke of York to the Succeſſion purely becauſe he was Brother to King Charles II. and Son to King Charles I. The Remonſtrance, full of ſuch intolerable Grievances, had no better Effect than ſuch Remonſtrances were wont to have ſince this Royal Houſe began to rule theſe Realms, and the Careleſſneſs of the Government amidſt ſo much Diſquiet and Danger, could not but augment the Heat that was in the Houſe of Commons, who proceeded to the Trial of one of the Popiſh Lords, William Viſcount Stafford, who on the 30th of November was brought before the Peers, then ſitting for that purpoſe in Weſtminſter-Hall. The Lord Chancellor Finch was made Lord High Steward on this occaſion, and a Committee of the Houſe of Commons were the Managers againſt him. They open'd the Cauſe with great Copiouſneſs and Eloquence, they began with the Plot in general, and laid open the Malice, Wickedneſs and Horror of ſo dreadful, bloody, and helliſh a Deſign. They ſtrenuouſly inſiſted on the expreſs poſitive Oaths of the Witneſſes: Upon whom, ſays Echard, the credit of the Plot chiefly depended; falſe and ſtupid to a Prodigy! The learned Sollicitor General Sir John Hawles writes, very little of the Truth of the Popiſh Plot depended on the Credit of Oates, Bedloe, or any other Perſon.

Lord Stafford's Trial.

The Managers expatiated upon Coleman's Letters, and others, Echard aſſures us, there was not a Snip of Paper beſides thoſe Letters, clearly proving the Deſign and Activity of the Writers: They preſs'd home the execrable Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey charg'd upon the Papiſts, as well by the Oaths of Self-acknowledg'd Partners in the Fact, as by a Letter from London to Tickſhall, intimating this very Murder the third Day after 'twas committed. The Managers fully explain'd the Sham-Plots and Counter-Contrivances whereby the Papiſts would have ſuborn'd the King's Evidence, and turn'd all the Guilt upon his Majeſty's moſt loyal Subjects. They urg'd the firing of the City, the burning the Navy, &c. And produced Witneſſes to make the particular Charge againſt the Lord Stafford. Dugdale a Papiſt ſwore poſitively that the Lord Stafford was at a Meeting about the Beginning of September 1678, at Tickſhall in Staffordſhire with Lord Aſton and others, and did in his preſence give his full Conſent to take away the King's Life, and introduce the Popiſh Religion. That on the 20th or 21ſt of September in the Forenoon the Lord Stafford ſent for him to his Chamber whilſt he was dreſſing, and turning out his Servants, offer'd him 500 l. to take away the King's Life, ſaying, You ſhall have a free Pardon of all your Sins, and be ſainted; for the King has been excommunicated, and is likewiſe a Traytor and Rebel, and an Enemy to Jeſus Chriſt. Dr. Oates ſwore he ſaw ſeveral Letters, both in Spain and St. Omers ſign'd Stafford; wherein his Lordſhip aſſur'd the Jeſuits of his Fidelity and Zeal in promoting the Catholick Cauſe. That being in London in 1678, the Lord Stafford came to Father Fenwick's Chamber, and there in his Preſence receiv'd a Commiſſion from him to be Pay-Maſter-General of the Army: Upon which, his Lordſhip ſaid, I muſt of neceſſity go down into the Country, to take account how Affairs ſtand there; and do not doubt but at my return Grove ſhall do the Buſineſs; adding, he has deceiv'd us a great while, ſpeaking of the King, and we can bear no longer. The third Evidence was Turberville, to blacken whom, Echard ſays he was a profligate indigent Perſon. Turberville gave the Court an Account how he became indigent, he had diſoblig'd his Friends by leaving his Fryar's Habit at Doway; and thereupon going into France in the Year 75, where he got acquainted with the Lord Stafford at Paris, and his Lordſhip propos'd to him a way both to retrieve his Credit with his Friends, and make himſelf happy; which was, by taking away the Life of the King, who was an Heretick, and a Rebel againſt God Almighty. Much the ſame with what he ſaid to Dugdale; That when he took leave of him, his Lordſhip appointed him to meet him at London; but he ſoon after return'd into France, not being willing to undertake the Propoſal, and was diſcountenanc'd by his Friends, and reduc'd to Poverty. When afterwards this Wretch was ſuborn'd to ſwear againſt Colledge, Echard ſays not a word of his Indigence, or his being a Scoundrel. The beſt Defence made by the Lord Stafford, was his charging the three Witneſſes againſt him with Poverty, and his declaring in the Preſence of God and his Angels, that he was innocent. The Witneſſes to ſuch a Crime were not likely to be Men of great Fortunes. His Lordſhip would not have offer'd a rich Man 500 l. to kill the King, nor was it likely that any but profligate Perſons would be thought Workmen for ſuch Work.

A. D. 1680.

The Managers for the Commons brought new Proofs of the Plot in general. One Smith ſwore he had heard Diſcourſe at Rome of killing the King. An Iriſh Prieſt, who had been long in Spain, confirm'd many Particulars in Oates's Narrative, as we are told by my Lord of Sarum, and that the Lord Stafford ſaid little in his Defence: And as to the Credit of the Witneſſes, Sir William Jones made it very clear, that Dugdale and Turberville were good Evidences, and not at all diſcredited by any thing that was brought againſt them. The Trial was very auguſt, and continu'd five Days; and when Judgment was to be given, 55 Peers pronounced him Guilty, and 31 not Guilty. Of the latter, 'tis ſaid a noble Lord ſhould ſay aloud, Not Guilty, upon my Honour: And ſoftly to another, Guilty, upon my Conſcience. Which, if true, makes the Evidence to be very clear, and that the Archdeacon's vilifying it, ſhews more Zeal for the Cauſe than for the Truth. We read in Biſhop Burnet's Memoirs, "Four of the Howards, his Kinſ-
"men, condemn'd him. Lord Arundel, after"wards Duke of Norfolk, tho' in Enmity with "him, acquitted him. Duke Lauderdale con-
"demn'd him. So did the Earl of Nottingham
"and Earl of Angleſey. The Lord Halliſax ac"quitted him. The Lord Chancellor, when "he gave Judgment, made a Speech, in which "he committed one great Indecency: for he
"ſaid, Who can doubt any longer that London
"was burnt by Papiſts, tho' there was not one
"Word in the whole Trial relating to it?" Biſhop Burnet viſited him after his Condemnation at his Requeſt, and the Lord Stafford own'd to him, he could diſcover many things that were more material than any that were yet known, and for which the Duke would never forgive him: but upon his Examination before the Lords, he ſpoke only of the Endeavours of the Papiſts to get a Toleration, and that Lord Shaftesbury had undertaken to promote it. When he nam'd him, he was order'd to withdraw, and the Lords would hear no more from him. The Sentence againſt him being, that he ſhould be hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd, the two Sheriffs, Alderman Corniſh and Mr. Bethel, upon the King's changing the Execution to beheading, apply'd to the Parliament with theſe following Queries: 1. Whether the King, being neither Judge nor Party, can order the Execution? 2. Whether the Lords can award the Execution? 3. Whether the King can can diſpenſe with any Part of the Execution? 4. If the King can diſpenſe with ſome Part, why not All? Some were ſhock'd with theſe Queries, ſays Mr. Archdeacon; and Sir William Jones was for dropping them, leſt the Parliament's making any oppoſition might prevent the Execution of the Lord Stafford.

The Lord Stafford executed.

On the 29th of September, he was brought to a Scaffold on Tower-Hill, where he made a Speech; in which, among other things, he ſaid, I aver, upon my Death and Salvation, That I never ſpoke one Word either to Oates or Turberville; and for Dugdale, I never ſpoke to him but about ſome trivial Matters, and was never alone with him. The Biſhop of Salisbury writes, Many Proofs were brought that he was often in Lord Stafford's Company, of which many more Affidavits were made after that Lord's Death. Biſhop Burnet informs us, That Turberville, when he was dying, ſent for Mr. Hawes, Curate of St. Martin's, who found his Underſtanding and Memory no way affected by his Diſeaſe, and adviſ'd him to confeſs his Sins, and glorify God, tho' to his ſhame. Turberville, both in Diſcourſe, and when he receiv'd the Sacrament, proteſted that he had ſworn nothing but the Truth againſt Lord Stafford, and renounc'd the Mercies of God, and the Benefit of the Death of Chriſt, if he did not ſpeak the plain and naked Truth, without any Reſervation. Yet Echard hangs upon the Lord Stafford's denying he had ever ſeen Turberville. And ſo much has been ſaid of Popiſh Declarations of Innocence on the Scaffold, or at the Gallows, that there's no need of further Reflection upon it.

Comet.

I wonder the Reverend Hiſtorian omitted the Blazing Star, which appear'd about this time. The Star itſelf, as it was call'd, ſeem'd ſmall, but the Tail or Stream of Light was of great Magnitude. It ſeem'd not much above the Horizon when firſt diſcover'd, but every Night afterwards it appear'd higher and higher in the beginning of the Night, and conſequently ſetting later and later, its Luſtre and Extent gradually decay'd, till it was no more ſeen. The Archdeacon loſt a happy Occaſion to apply this Comet to the Death of Lord Stafford, which he treats as a ſort of Martyrdom for the Cauſe.

King's Speech.

On the 15th of December the King came to the Parliament, and made a Speech to both Houſes, wherein, as he takes notice he had done before, he promiſes to concur with them in any Remedies for ſecuring the Proteſtant Religion, which might conſiſt with preſerving the Succeſſion in its due and legal Courſe of Deſcent. The Commons, in a long Anſwer to this Speech on the 18th of December, tell him, "That no Interruption of "that Deſcent has been endeavour'd by them, "except only the Deſcent upon the Perſon of "the Duke of York; who, by the wicked Inſtru- "ments of the Church of Rome, has been mani- "feſtly perverted to their Religion; that his "Succeſſion is utterly inconſiſtent with the Safe- "ty of his Majeſty's Perſon, the Preſervation "of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Property, "Peace, and Welfare of his Proteſtant Sub- "jects." They alſo came to theſe Reſolutions upon it.

Votes againſt the Duke of York.

Reſolved, "That 'tis the Opinion of this "Houſe, that there is no Security or Safety for "the Proteſtant Religion, the King's Life, or "the well conſtituted and eſtabliſh'd Govern- "ment of this Kingdom, without paſſing a Bill "for diſabling James Duke of York to inherit "the Imperial Crown of England and Ireland: "And to rely upon any other Means or Reme- "dies without ſuch a Bill, is not only inſufficient, "but dangerous."

A. D. 1680.

The Houſe of Commons paſs'd a Vote, That all Anticipations on any Branches of the Revenue are againſt Law, and that whoſoever lent any Money upon thoſe Anticipations, were publick Enemies to the Kingdom: for they look on the Revenue as a publick Treaſure, that was to be kept clear of all Anticipations, and not as a private Eſtate that might be mortgag'd. They thought when all other Means of Supply, except by Parliament, were ſtopp'd, the King would certainly be brought to their Terms. They alſo paſs'd a Vote for an Aſſociation, copy'd from that in Queen Elizabeth's Time, for the revenging the King's Death upon all Papiſts, if he ſhould happen to be kill'd.

Aſſociation.

Dutcheſs of Portſmouth for the Bill of Excluſion.

I have mention'd the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth's falling in with the Majority of the Houſe of Commons for the Excluſion Bill; and I muſt explain the Myſtery of a French Papiſt's being againſt the Duke of York, who was a faſt Friend to Popery and France. It was propos'd to her, that if ſhe could bring the King to the Excluſion, and to ſome other popular Things, the Parliament would go next to prepare a Bill for ſecuring the King's Perſon, in which ſhould be a Clauſe, that the King might declare the Succeſſor to the Crown, as had been done in Henry the VIIIth's Time. This would very much raiſe the King's Authority, and would be no Breach with the Prince of Orange, but would rather oblige him to a greater Dependance on the King. And if ſuch an Act could be carry'd, ſhe might prevail on the King to declare her Son his Succeſſor. It was further ſuggeſted to her, that in order to the ſtrengthening her Son's Intereſt, ſhe might treat for a Match with the French King's natural Daughter. The Duke of Monmouth eaſily gave into this Scheme, as flattering himſelf that nobody would be preferr'd to him in the Succeſſion by his Father. Thus were the Duke of Monmouth and Dutcheſs of Portſmouth brought to an Agreement to carry on the Excluſion, tho' with different Views; and the Parliament engag'd in it with ſtill another View, the Princeſs of Orange's Succeſſion. The Dutcheſs not only acted heartily in this matter, but ſhe once drew the King to conſent to it, if he might have had 800000 Pounds for it, which was afterwards brought down to 600000 Pounds. But the Houſe of Commons were ſo jealous of the King, that the Managers durſt not move for giving Money, till the Bill of Excluſion was paſs'd, leſt they ſhould loſe their Credit, and his Majeſty would not truſt them. So near, ſays the Biſhop of Salisbury, was this Point brought to an Agreement, if the Duke of Montagu told me true. Welwood tells us, the French King outbid the Country Party in favour of the Duke of York, and by giving more Money, got the King to perſiſt in the Oppoſition he gave to the Bill. When it was thrown out of the Houſe of Lords, the King told his Brother, that the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth did all by his Order, that ſo ſhe might have Credit with the Party, and ſee into their Deſigns, which the Duke of York believing, or ſeeming to believe, he was eaſily reconcil'd with her.

The King bargains for the Excluſion Bill.

Limitations for the Popiſh Succeſſor.

The Lord Halliſax preſs'd the Houſe of Lords to go on the Limitations; and he began with one, That the Duke ſhould be oblig'd to live 500 Miles out of England, during the King's Life. The Earl of Eſſex mov'd, that an Aſſociation ſhould be enter'd into to maintain whatever Limitations ſhould be agreed upon, and that ſome cautionary Towns ſhould be put into the hands of the Aſſociators during the King's Life, to make them good after his Death, which the King look'd upon as a Depoſing of himſelf.

The

A. D. 1680. The Earl of Shaftesbury and his Party laugh'd at all Expedients, and those that were propos'd carry'd so many Difficulties with them, that the Necessity of the Exclusion was daily more apparent to People of the least Penetration and Foresight, who had any Concern for the Religion and Liberty of their Country.

Tho' the Commons could not carry that Bill, they endeavour'd to supply the loss of it with some vigorous Votes: As, 1. For a Bill to banish all Papists. 2. Another, For the more effectual securing of the Meetings and Sittings of Parliaments. 3. Another, For the Judges to hold their Places quam diu se bene gesserint. 4. Another, For uniting his Majesty's Protestant Subjects: And on a Debate of Freedom of Voting, and of the Corruption and Partiality occasion'd by Offices and Pensions, they Resolved, December the 30th, That no Member of this House shall accept of any Office or Place of Profit from the Crown, without the Leave of this House, nor any Promise of any such Office or Place of Profit, during such time as he shall continue a Member of the House.

Judges impeach'd. ON Wednesday the 5th of January, the Commons order'd an Impeachment against Sir Francis North, Lord Chief Justice of the Common-Pleas; Sir William Scroggs, Lord Chief Justice of the King's-Bench; Sir Thomas Jones, one of the Justices of the same Bench; and Sir Richard Weston, one of the Barons of the Exchequer. And it is a melancholy Reflection, that in the former Reign, and this, the Crown never wanted a Bench of Bishops and a Bench of Judges to promote the Designs which were form'd against the Reform'd Religion, and the Liberties of England. The Lawyers must know better, or they knew not the Law; and the Bishops know otherwise, or they knew not the Gospel. Sir Francis North's Crime was, That he, as appear'd by the Confession of the Attorney General before the House, was advising and assisting in drawing up, and passing the Proclamations against tumultuous Petitions. There were a great many Complaints against Sir William Scroggs, and Sir Thomas Jones, which occasion'd many Resolutions of the House, and Votes against them. One of those Complaints was, that when the Grand-Jury which serv'd for the Hundred of Offulston in the County of Middlesex, attended the King's-Bench with a Petition, which they desir'd the Court to present in their Name to his Majesty, for the Sitting of the Parliament, the Chief Justice Scroggs said he would dispatch them presently; that the Court took it ill to have a Petition offer'd to alter the King's Mind contrary to his Proclamation. Observe what sober Reasoning there is amongst them! 'Twas further urg'd against Scroggs, That when there were several Presentments against Papists, among which was the Bill against the Duke of York for not coming to Church, he and his Brother Judges discharg'd the Grand-Jury four Days before the End of the Term, which was never done before. The Parliament voted their doing it, Arbitrary, Illegal, and a High Misdemeanor, the 22d of November, several Days before the Impeachment was order'd. One of Baron Weston's great Crimes was, That in an extraordinary kind of Charge given the Assizes before at Kingston, he inveigh'd very much against Farel, Luther, Calvin and Zuinglius, condemning them as Authors of the Reformation, which was against their Princes Minds, and then adding to this purpose, Zuinglius set up his Fanaticisms, (the stupid Wretch mistakes Piety and Purity for the Dreams of distemper'd Brains,) and Calvin built on that blessed Foundation; and to speak truth, prodigious Impudence! All his Disciples are season'd with such a Sharpness, that it mostly concerns Magistrates to keep a strict Hand over them. Upon which, an ingenious Writer observes, "It was then the grand Ar- "tifice to represent All, who would not do "what the Courtiers then would have them, "as Fanaticks." Which Mr. Archdeacon has very happily endeavour'd to imitate. Weston proceeds, And now they are restless, amusing us with Fears, and nothing will serve them but a Parliament: For my part, I know no Representative of the Nation but the King. The last cited Author takes notice, None of his Kidney knew any other in those Days. Weston again, All Power centers in the King. 'Tis true, he does intrust it with his Ministers, but he is the sole Representative, and i'faith he has Wisdom enough to intrust it no more in these Men, who have given us such late Examples of their Wisdom and Faithfulness. Several Witnesses prov'd these Words upon him, some of whom put them immediately in writing: And it was Resolv'd, "That the said Expressions in the said Charge "given by the said Baron Weston, were a Scan- "dal to the Reformation, in Derogation of the "Rights and Privileges of Parliament, and ten- "ding to raise Discord between his Majesty and "his Subjects." What sort of Churchmen and Bishops there were in those Days, we may see by Speech made in the House of Commons, in the Debate of another Message from his Majesty the Day before these Proceedings. I remember before the last Session of Parliament, there was a Council held at Lambeth, and there hatch'd a Bill against Popery. It was for the breeding of Children of a Popish Successor, which admitted the Thing, and it was call'd a Bill against Popery, but we call'd it the Popish Bill. I am for the Church of England, but not for such Church-Men as the late Bishop of St. Asaph, who, on his Death-bed could hardly forbear declaring himself, which his Epitaph did, Ora pro Anima, Pray for the Soul, order'd to be written upon his Tomb.

Baron Weston and this Bishop shew us how our Church and Law-Benches were then fill'd: The former were the well known Dead Weight, the latter are well set out in their proper Colours by the following Speech in Parliament.

The two great Pillars of the Government are Parliaments and Juries. It is this gives us the Title of Free-born Englishmen: for my Notion of FREE-BORN ENGLISHMEN is this, that they are rul'd by Laws of their own making, and try'd by Men of the same Condition. The two great and undoubted Privileges of the People have been lately invaded by the Judges that now sit at Westminster. They have espous'd Proclamations against Law, they have discountenanc'd and oppos'd several legal Acts, that tended to the Sitting of this Honourable House; they have grasp'd the Legislative Power into their own hands, as in that Instance of Printing: the Parliament was considering that matter, but they in the Interim made their private Opinion to be Law, to supersede the Judgment of this House. They have discharg'd Juries on purpose to quell their Presentments, and shelter great Criminals from Justice; and when Juries have presented their Petitions for the sitting of the Parliament, they have in disdain thrown them at their feet, telling them, They would be no Messengers to carry such Petitions; and yet in a few days after, would have encourag'd all that would spit their Venom at the Constitution. They have serv'd an Ignorant and Arbitrary Faction, and been the Messengers of Abhorrences to the King. Rare Tools theſe, to do the Perſecuting Biſhops Work, and to harraſs and ruin Proteſtant Diſſenters; and it had been well, if they had not dipp'd their Hands deep in the Blood of Proteſtant Churchmen a Year or two after. Another worthy Member ſpoke thus:

Speech about the Miniſtry.

" His Majeſty is inclos'd by a ſort of Mini-
" ſters, who endeavour to deſtroy the Conſtitu-
" tion, and I hope to move againſt them before
" we riſe; and tho' we have loſt our Bill, we " have not loſt our Courage and Hearts."

Another, ſaid to be the Lord Ruſſel, on the Demand of Money for Tangier, by the Meſſage of the 4th of January, ſpoke as follows:

Lord Ruſſel's Speech againſt Popery and the Popiſh Duke.

I'll never be for giving of Money to promote Popery, and a Succeſſor a publick Enemy to the Kingdom, and a Slave to the Pope. While he has Eleven to Seven in Council, and Sixty-four to Thirty-one in the Houſe of Lords, we are not ſecure. If my own Father had been one of the Sixty-four, I ſhould have voted him an Enemy to the King and Kingdom; and if we cannot live Proteſtants, I hope we ſhall die ſo. It is thought this Speech was one of the Provocations that haſten'd the Murther of this excellent and beloved Patriot, as ſoon as the Court could get Sheriffs and Juries that were fit for ſuch Butchery.

Another Speech made the ſame Day, has ſomething in it very extraordinary, and diſcovers a Secret, which further explains the unwarrantable Correſpondences and Practices of the Miniſters at this Juncture.

Speech about Tangier and Popery.

I am of opinion that POPERY may be aim'd at by keeping Tangier, and our Councils are manag'd at Rome; from whence I ſaw a Letter from a Friend dated the 21*ſt of* October, the Day on which this Parliament met, with the Heads of the King's Speech in it, to this effect:
" That his Majeſty would command them not
" to meddle with the Succeſſion, that he would
" keep Tangier to draw on Expences."

Such was King Charles the IId's Government, ſuch his Miniſters, ſuch his Biſhops, ſuch his Judges, ſuch his Zeal for the Proteſtant Church of England, and ſuch his Affection to the Engliſh Liberty. To prevent the Ruin of which, as far as in them lay, the Parliament voted on January the 7th, " That his Majeſty in his laſt
" Meſſage having aſſur'd this Houſe of his Rea-
" dineſs to concur in all other means, but the al-
" tering the Courſe of Succeſſion; this Houſe
" doth declare, That until a Bill be likewiſe

" extream Hazard to the Proteſtant Religion,

Reſolved, " That all Perſons who advis'd his

" inſiſt upon an Opinion againſt the Bill for ex-

Againſt whom they order'd Addreſſes to be preſented to the King, to remove them from his Preſence and Councils. Biſhop Burnet tells us, Hyde ſpoke ſo vehemently to vindicate himſelf from the ſuſpicion of Popery, that he cry'd in his Speech; and Sir William Jones, upon the ſcore of old Friendſhip, got the Words relating to Popery to be ſtruck out of the Addreſs againſt him. The Commons alſo impeach'd that Eminent Orthodox Senator Mr. Edward Seymour, for Corruption and Male-Adminiſtration in the Office of Treaſurer of the Navy, and order'd an Addreſs to remove him from his Majeſty's Council and Preſence; but the Parliament was prorogu'd before they could get it preſented. Scroggs's Impeachment being ſent to the Lords, they rejected it, alledging the Charge againſt him amounted not to High-Treaſon, as 'twas laid in that Impeachment. This was carry'd chiefly by the Earl of Danby's Party, and in favour to him.

A. D. 1681.

The City of Briſtol never wanted a Party in the worſt of Times, to contribute as much as they could to what made them ſo bad as they were. One may gueſs at their Temper now, by their chuſing a Perſon of very ſmall Fame, Sir Robert Cann, to be their Repreſentative, who, however, made himſelf famous by his Crime and his Puniſhment. He was queſtion'd for ſaying, There was no Popiſh Plot, but a Presbyterian Plot, and the Expreſſion is the lively Image of his Capacity. The Houſe order'd him to receive their Cenſure upon his Knees at the Bar, to be expell'd, and committed to the Tower; and his Expulſion is ſaid to be in ſo homely a Phraſe as this from the Speaker, That the Houſe ſpew'd him out. Richard Thompſon, Parſon of St. Thomas's Church in Briſtol, a noiſy, inſolent, ignorant Prieſt, I take the more liberty with him becauſe I knew him, ſaid alſo in a Sermon preach'd in the Church of St. Thomas, 30th of January 1679, There is no Popiſh Plot, but a Presbyterian Plot. He was a great Stickler againſt Petitions for the Sitting of the Parliament. Being ſent for into cuſtody, he was brought on his Knees in the Houſe of Commons, and committed to Priſon. He was examin'd very ſtrictly, and gave the Houſe of Commons ſo little Satisfaction in his Anſwers, that they order'd an Impeachment againſt him, but diſcharg'd his Commitment on his giving Security to anſwer the Charge againſt him when call'd upon. His Majeſty, to ſhew how little he valu'd the Sentiments of the Repreſentatives of the Nation, ſoon after made this Richard Thompſon Dean of Briſtol; Laurence Hyde, Earl of Rocheſter; Earl of Halliſax, Marquis of Halliſax; and the Marquis of Worceſter, Duke of Beaufort. Nay, he ſo much affected to let the People ſee he acted in deſpight, that he advanc'd and favour'd every Man that had given offence to the Parliament, by betraying the Liberties of their Country. The Houſe Reſolv'd, " That whoſo-
" ever ſhall hereafter lend, or cauſe to be lent,
" by way of Advance, any Money upon the " Branches of the King's Revenue ariſing by
" Cuſtom, Exciſe, or Hearth-Money, ſhall be
" adjudg'd to hinder the Sitting of Parliaments,
" and ſhall be reſponſible for the ſame in Par" liament." And having notice that there would be a ſudden Prorogation to hinder their perfecting the good Bills that were paſſing, and the bringing their good Votes into Bills, they, on the 10th of January, reſolv'd, " That who-
" ſoever advis'd his Majeſty to prorogue this " Parliament to any other purpoſe, than in or" der to the paſſing of a Bill for the Excluſion
" of James Duke of York, is a Betrayer of the " King, the Proteſtant Religion, and of the " Kingdom of England, a Promoter of the

They alſo Reſolv'd, " That the Thanks of

A. D. 1681.

" teſtant Religion." In this the Houſe of Commons refer to two City Petitions; the one for the Sitting of the Parliament; the other, That the Parliament might ſit till Proteſtantiſm was ſecur'd. The Commons Reſolv'd, " That it is " the Opinion of this Houſe, that the Acts of " Parliament made in the Reign of Queen Eli- " zabeth and King James, againſt Popiſh Re- " cuſants, ought not to be extended againſt Pro- " teſtant Diſſenters. Reſolv'd, That it is the " Opinion of this Houſe, that the Proſecution " of Proteſtant Diſſenters upon the Penal Laws " is, at this time, grievous to the Subjects, " a weakening the Proteſtant Intereſt, an En- " couragement to Popery, and dangerous to the " Peace of the Kingdom." One would think this Vote was occaſion'd by an Apprehenſion of the Loſs of the Bill for uniting his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects, which was brought in and debated. In this Debate will be ſeen what ſolid Reaſons the Enemies to Proteſtant Diſſenters had, to juſtify their perſecuting them. There are a ſort of Men, ſaid one of the Members, who will neither be advis'd nor over-rul'd, but under the pretence of Conſcience, break violently through all Laws whatſoever, to the great Diſturbance both of Church and State; therefore I think it more convenient to have a Law for forcing the Diſſenters to yield to the Church, and not to force the Church to yield to them. Echard is aſham'd of the Man's Name, and well he may. If I could tell who he was, the Reader ſhould know it, that his Memory might receive the homage that's due to ſo much Merit. He ſays the Diſſenters will break every Act of Parliament in the Statute-Books, rather than they will go to Church; and tho' they might be baniſh'd, and in ſome caſes hang'd, by the Statute 35 Elizabeth, yet he is for making more Laws to force the Diſſenters to yield to the Common Prayer Book, to the Surplice, the Croſs in Baptiſm, to Godfathers and Godmothers, and to thirty or forty other ſuch Articles which he calls the Church, and which is the Charm my Lord Biſhop of Sarum ſpeaks of. Another Member, who had as much Senſe as the former, but not quite ſo much Courage, ſaid, I am afraid, if once the Government begin to yield to Diſſenters, it will be as in Forty One; when there were no Diſſenters in England but Papiſts and Enthuſiaſts. Nothing will ſerve but an utter Subverſion; he means, that to unite Proteſtants, is to ſubvert the Proteſtant Religion. The receiving of one thing will give occaſion for demanding more; and it will be impoſſible to give them any ſatisfaction, without laying all open, and running into confuſion. The Archdeacon printed all theſe Idiotiſms, after the poſſibility of it had been experimented between 40 and 50 Years, and the Diſſenters had receiv'd Satisfaction without the leaſt Confuſion imaginable. But the noble Cauſe is equal to the noble Defenders of it, who have generally been Men of the ſame ſize with theſe two worthy Senators for Capacity and Merit. Such Speeches as theſe could not be made without Anſwers in ſuch a Place as St. Stephen's Chapel. One worthy Member ſaid, Sir, this Bill is intended for the Preſervation of the Church, and I am of opinion it is the beſt Bill that can be made in order thereto; our Circumſtances conſider'd, I think this is a very good time to try whether the Diſſenters will be drawn with the Cords of Love or no, and the Bill will be very agreeable to that Chriſtian Charity, which our Church profeſſes; and I hope, that in the time of this imminent Danger, they will conſider their own Safety, and the Safety of the Proteſtant Religion, and not longer keep on foot the unhappy Diviſions among us, on which the Papiſts ground their Hopes: But rather ſeeing the Church ſo far condeſcend as to diſpenſe with the Surplice; a very great Condeſcenſion truly, conſidering what a handſome and neceſſary thing it is, the ſame Gentleman expects, They will ſubmit to the reſt that is enjoin'd by Law, that ſo we may unite againſt the common Enemy. Another Member ſaid, What real Love, Friendſhip, or Obedience can the Church expect from ſuch Perſons, as by the Execution of ſuch Laws, may be forc'd to come to Church? How can they be depended on, or the Church be ſtrengthen'd by them? You may prevent their Meetings, and force them either to come to Church, or pay Fines, or be impriſon'd; but you cannot expect that their Opinions or Affections ſhould be alter'd by ſuch Proceedings, without which the Church can never be the ſtronger. Hath the Oxford Act, or that of the 35th of Queen Elizabeth, or any other againſt the Diſſenters been executed in favour of the Church? Are not the Diſſenters as many, if not more than ever? Is there any thing more viſible, than that theſe Laws have been made uſe of to ſerve the Popiſh Intereſt, or as Engines rather for the State than the Church? When in the Year 1670, by the ſevere Execution of theſe Laws, all Meetings and Conventicles were prevented, and many Diſſenters came to Church, did not the Toleration happen thereupon? And if this Toleration had been intended for the Advantage of the Proteſtant Religion, why were not the Churchmen, or Diſſenters of any kind pleas'd with it? And if the Oxford Act, and other Laws againſt Diſſenters, were projected in favour of the Proteſtant Religion, it was ſtrange that they were ſo much promoted by Sir Thomas Clifford, Sir Solomon Swale, and Sir Roger Strickland, who have ſince all appear'd to be Papiſts?

Nay, Sir Thomas Clarges and Mr. Finch ſpoke for this Uniting Bill; and it is ſaid one of thoſe Gentlemen made the following Speech: Mr. Speaker, " I would not open my Mouth in fa- " vour of this Bill, if I thought it would any " ways prejudice the Church or Church-Go- " vernment; but I believe it may have a quite " contrary effect, and tend more for the Preſer- " vation and Safety of the Church and Church- " Government, than any Bill whatſoever that " could be contriv'd.

" The Presbyterians, Independents, and all " other Diſſenters, may be more in number than " the Papiſts, and may be willing enough to " have the Church Government alter'd, if not " deſtroy'd; yet, being they cannot have any " Succour from abroad, nor from the Govern- " ment here at home, I cannot ſee any great " danger of them. For it is not probable that " they ſhall ever have a King of their Opinion, " nor a Parliament by the Diſcovery they " made of their Strength in the laſt Elections; " for, according to the beſt Calculation I can " make, they could not bring in above one in " twenty; and therefore becauſe they have not

I cannot reconcile two reverend Hiſtorians on this Subject. The compleat one ſays, the Majority of the Houſe fell in heartily with this Bill; and Mr. Archdeacon thought it would not paſs, which is not at all conſiſtent with a Majority. 'Tis certain that it did not paſs, and that another Act did, entitul'd, An Act to repeal the Statute of 35 of Elizabeth, as far as it related to Proteſtant Diſſenters, againſt whom it had been ſeverely executed, tho' the reverend Hiſtorians own it was apparently made againſt Popiſh Recuſants. This charitable Bill was ſtrenuouſly oppos'd in the Houſe of Lords by the Biſhops. However, the Temporal Lords carry'd it againſt them. And on the day of Prorogation, January 10, it ought to have been offer'd to the King; but the Clerk of the Crown, by the King's particular Order, according to Biſhop Burnet, withdrew the Bill. His Lordſhip calls this Method indiſcreet; but as moſt of the Methods of this Government did, it deſerv'd a much harder Name; for it was very baſe to direct the ſtealing away an Act of Parliament, when there was not Courage enough to reject it, nor Honour enough to paſs it. All the future cruel tyrannical Proceedings againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters in the Spiritual and other Courts, was, in a great meaſure, ſupported by this vile Treachery, or rather Larceny. For had the repealing Act paſs'd, it had taken away the Edge of the Laws againſt them, of which this was the moſt keen, as extending to Death in ſome Caſes. The Commons having private notice, that they were to be prorogu'd, aſſembled early in the Morning, and before the Uſher of the Black Rod came in, they reſolv'd That it is the Opinion of this Houſe, that the Acts of Parliament made in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth and King James againſt Popiſh Recuſants, ought not to be extended againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters. After which the Houſe of Commons were ſent for up to the Lords, where his Majeſty gave the Royal Aſſent to an Act about Iriſh Cattle; and another about burying in Woollen. And then the Lord Chancellor prorogu'd the Parliament to the 20th of January, but it never ſat more.

Act of 35 Eliz. repeal'd.

Stolen.

Vote in favour of the Diſſenters.

The Biſhop of Salisbury, as moderate as he was in his Principles, cannot help remembring, that the Vote againſt executing the Penal Laws on Diſſenters, was thought a great Invaſion of the Legiſlature, when one Houſe pretended to ſuſpend the Execution of Laws, which was to act like Dictators in the State; and inſtead of being a Kindneſs to the Nonconformiſts, rais'd a new Storm againſt them over all the Nation, inſinuating they had brought the Storm on themſelves, by endeavouring to provide a Shelter. The Author of the Vindication of the two laſt Parliaments, ſuppos'd to be Sir William Jones, the greateſt Lawyer in England, ſpeaks of this Matter with much more Reaſon and Judgment, in theſe Words, Is it a ſuſpending an Act of Parliament, if the Houſe of Commons declare a Law to be grievous and dangerous in their Opinion, before they ſet about the Repeal of it? And is there any ground to doubt, but that a Bill would have paſs'd that Houſe purſuant to this Vote, had it not been prevented by a Diſſolution? Nor was there the leaſt Direction or Signification to the Judges, contrary to Biſhop Burnet's Inſinuation. They meant that Courts and Juries ſhould govern themſelves by the Opinion they now gave; ſuch Practices are laid to the Charge of the Court; and my Author adds, Judges ought not to break them in reverence to Votes, nor in reſpect to any Command from the King or Favourites; then we ſhould have no more Letters from Secretaries of State to Judges ſitting on the Bench; then we ſhould have no more Proclamations, like that of the 14*th of* October 1662, forbidding the Execution of the Laws concerning the High Ways; nor that of the 10*th of* May 1672, diſpenſing with divers Clauſes in the Acts of Parliament for Encreaſe of Shipping; nor any more Declarations, like that of the 15*th of* March 1672, ſuſpending the Penal Laws in Matters Eccleſiaſtical. Tho' the Judges are ſworn to execute all Laws, yet there is no Obligation upon any man to inform againſt another; and therefore, tho' the Miniſters prevented the Repeal of thoſe Laws, 'tis to be hop'd that this Vote will reſtrain Engliſhmen from proſecuting Proteſtants, when ſo wiſe and great a Body have declar'd the pernicious Effects of ſuch a Proſecution. 'Tis moſt true, that in England no Law is abrogated by Deſuetude, but 'tis no leſs true that there are many Laws ſtill unrepeal'd, which are never executed, nor can be, without publick Detriment. The Judges know of many ſuch dormant Laws, and yet they do not quicken the People to put them in execution, nor think themſelves guilty of Perjury, that they do not. Such are the Laws for wearing Caps, for keeping Lent, thoſe concerning Bows and Arrows, about Calves and Lambs, and many others. And thoſe who vex Men by Informations on ſuch antiquated Laws as the 35th Eliz. with reſpect to Diſſenters, have been ever look'd upon as infamous. What then were all the perſecuting Prelates, ſuch as Gunning, Ward, Mew &c. Hence it is that there are no Names remember'd with greater Deteſtation than thoſe of Empſon and Dudley, the whole Kingdom a hor'd them as Monſters, and they were puniſh'd as Traytors.

Votes for the Diſſenters juſtify'd.

Laws unrepeal'd not executed.

Three Days after the Prorogation of the Parliament, the Lord Mayor, Sir Patience Ward, with a Court o Common Council, order'd a Petition to be drawn up to be preſented to the King, praying, that the Parliament might ſit at the Day appointed, January 20th, in order to try the Popiſh Lords in the Tower, to carry on the Impeachment againſt L. C. J. Scroggs, and ſettle the Nation; which Petition was order'd to be deliver'd that Night by the Lord Mayor, attended by the new Recorder, George Treby Eſq; and certain Members of the Court of Aldermen and Common Council: But the King took no more notice of it, than he did of the other Petitions about the ſitting of Parliaments; on the contrary, he diſſolv'd them five Days after by Proclamation, in which he alſo decla'r'd his Intention to call another, to meet on the 21ſt of March at Oxford, in deſpight to the City of London. Againſt this ill-concerted Removal of the Parliament from the Metropolis of the Kingdom, to crowd them up in a Place which was equally inconvenient and diſagreeable to them, ſeveral noble Lords drew up a Petition, repreſening to his his Majeſty, " The many Misfortunes attending " the untimely Prorogations, Diſſolutions, and " Diſcontinuations of Parliaments of late, at a " time when the whole Nation was in imminent " Danger from Papiſts: And now at laſt, his " Majeſty had been prevail'd on to call another " Parliament at Oxford, where neither Lords nor " Commons could be in Safety; but would be " daily expos'd to the Sword of the Papiſts, and " their Adherents, of whom too many had crept " into his Majeſty's Guards. The Liberty of " ſpeaking according to their Conſciences would " be thereby deſtroy'd, and the Validity of their " Acts and Proceedings left diſputable. The " Straitneſs of the Place no ways admitted of " ſuch a Concourſe of Perſons as now follow'd " every Parliament, and the Witneſſes which " were neceſſary to give Evidence upon the Com- " mons Impeachment, were unable to bear the " Charges of ſuch a Journey, and unwilling " to truſt themſelves under the Protection of a " Parliament, that was itſelf evidently under the " Power of Guards and Soldiers." They ſay in the Cloſe, The Premiſes conſider'd, we your Majeſty's Petitioners, out of juſt Abhorrence of ſuch a dangerous and pernicious Counſel, which the Authors have not dar'd to avow, and the direful Apprehenſions of the Calamities and Miſeries that may enſue thereupon, do make it our moſt humble Prayer and Advice, that the Parliament may not ſit at a Place where it cannot be able to act with that Freedom which is neceſſary, and eſpecially to give unto their Acts and Proceedings that Authority which they ought to have among the People, and have ever had, unleſs impair'd by ſome Awe upon them, of which there wants not Precedents; and that your Majeſty would be graciouſly pleaſed to order it to ſit at Weſtminſter, it being the uſual Place, and where they may conſult with Safety and Freedom. And your Petitioners ſhall ever pray, &c.

Earl of Eſſex's Speech to the King againſt it.

" The Lords here preſent, together with di- " vers other Peers, taking notice that by your " late Proclamation your Majeſty had declar'd " an Intention of calling a Parliament at Oxford, " and obſerving from Hiſtory and Records how " unfortunate many Aſſemblies have been, when " call'd at a Place remote from the Capital City; " as particularly the Congreſs in Henry II's Time " at Clarendon; three ſeveral Parliaments at " Oxford in Henry III's Time, and at Coventry " in Henry VI's Time, with divers others, " which prov'd very fatal to thoſe Kings, and " have been follow'd with great Miſchief to " the whole Kingdom: And conſidering the pre- " ſent Poſture of Affairs, the many Jealouſies " and Diſcontents which are amongſt the People, " we have great cauſe to apprehend, that the " Conſequences of a Parliament now at Oxford, " may be as fatal to your Majeſty, and the Na- " tion, as thoſe others mention'd have been to " the then reigning Kings. And therefore we " do conceive that we cannot anſwer it to God, " to your Majeſty, or to the People, if we, being " Peers of the Realm, ſhould not, on ſo impor- " tant an Occaſion, humbly offer our Advice to " your Majeſty, that, if poſſible, your Ma- " jeſty may be prevail'd with to alter this, " as we apprehend, unſeaſonable Reſolution. " The Grounds and Reaſons of our Opinion are " contain'd in this our Petition, which we hum- " bly preſent to your Majeſty;" and which the King receiv'd with a Frown, as he knew well how to do when he was in an ill Humour; and his Majeſty's Face ſeem'd to be well made for it.

A. D. 1681.

A few Days before the King went to Oxford, Fitzharris, an Iriſh Papiſt, was taken up for framing a malicious treaſonable Libel againſt the King, and his whole Family: He had met with one Everard, who pretended to make Diſcoveries; but it was in general Terms, and he deſcended not to ſo many Particulars as the Witneſſes had done. Fitzharris and he had been acquainted in France, and on confidence of old Acquaintance, he ſhew'd him his Libel. He made an Appointment to come to Everard's Chamber, who thought he intended to trapan him, and plac'd Witneſſes to over-hear all that paſt. Fitzharris left the Libel with him all writ with his own Hand. Everard went with the Paper and his Evidence, and inform'd againſt Fitzharris, who upon that was committed to Newgate the 28th of February. And ſeeing the Proof againſt him was like to be full, he ſaid the Libel was drawn by Everard, and only copied by himſelf; but he had no ſort of Proof to ſupport this. Biſhop Burnet proceeds, " Corniſh the Sheriff " going to ſee him, Fitzharris deſir'd he would " bring him a Juſtice of Peace, for he could make " a great Diſcovery of the Plot, far beyond all " that was yet known. Corniſh, in the Simplici- " ty of his Heart, went and acquainted the King " with this, for which he was much blam'd; for " it was ſaid, by this means that Diſcovery might " have been ſtop'd. But his going firſt with it " to the Court prov'd afterwards a great Happi- " neſs to himſelf, and a great many others. The " Secretaries and ſome Privy Counſellors were " upon that ſent to examine Fitzharris, to whom " he gave a Relation of a Practice to kill the " King in which the Duke was concerned, " with many other Particulars, which were all a " Fiction. The Secretaries came to him a ſe- " cond time to examine him farther; he boldly " ſtood to all he had ſaid, and deſir'd that ſome " Juſtice of the City might be brought to him. " So Sir Robert Clayton and Sir George Treby " went to him; and he made the ſame pre- " tended Diſcovery to them over again, inſinua- " ting he was glad it was now in ſafe hands that " would not ſtifle it. The King was highly of- " fended at this, ſince it plainly ſhew'd a Diſ- " truſt of his Miniſters; and ſo Fitzharris was " remov'd to the Tower, which the Court re- " ſolv'd to make the Priſon for all Offenders till " there ſhould be Sheriffs choſen more at the " King's devotion; yet the Depoſition made to " Clayton and Treby was in all points the ſame " that he made to the Secretaries, ſo that there " was no colour for the Pretence afterward put " on this, as if they had practis'd on him." What then will the Reader ſay of the Honeſty and Conſcience of a reverend Hiſtorian, who affirms that they did practiſe on him. Sir Robert Clayton ask'd him what he could ſay to Godfrey's Murder; he anſwer'd, ſomething. Upon which Clayton reply'd, it may be you are in Confuſion, recollect yourſelf. Sir George Treby kept him three Hours, preſs'd him about Godfrey's Death, and declar'd, unleſs he could ſpeak to that Murder he could ſay nothing. Then ſaying ſomething he had heard from others, he ask'd him if he could ſay no more.

Fitzharris's Treaſon.

Echard's falſe Account of it.

A. D. 1681.

He reply'd, is not this enough to ſave my Life? am I not Rogue enough? Hereupon the Recorder, Sir George Treby, a vertuous and ſober, as well as learned and judicious Gentleman, ſwore God's Zounds! it is Mr. Archdeacon who ſays it, what were you ever but a Rogue? Then he enter'd upon the Heads of the Examination, and told him, All this would not ſave his Life, unleſs he would ſpeak to the Libel, which was a Court-Trick, and it was not for nothing that he had been ſo often ſeen at the Lady Portſmouth's. Biſhop Burnet ſays there was not the leaſt colour to pretend to ſuch tampering; Fitzharris's Libel tended to excite the People to Rebellion againſt the King, whom it repreſented as a Tyrant and a Papiſt, and the Duke of York to be ſtill worſe, if poſſible. Notwithſtanding the ill Succeſs of the Meal-Tub Plot, the Faction compos'd of Papiſts and Torics reſolv'd not to give over; and therefore in this ſecond Contrivance, fram'd to bring the Proteſtant Party, moderate Churchmen and Diſſenters, now call'd Whigs, into another Conſpiracy: For this treaſonable Libel was to be diſpers'd by the Penny-Poſt among the chief Proteſtant Lords and Gentlemen, whoſe Houſes and Perſons were then to be ſearch'd; and upon finding of the Libel they were to be apprehended, and proceeded againſt as Traytors. It is confeſs'd that the King gave Dangerfield Money before the Diſcovery of the Meal-Tub Treaſon, and now Everard ſwore poſitively, that the Court had a hand in it, and that the King had given Fitzharris Money. Sir William Waller, who was very active in diſcovering both Dangerfield's and Fitzharris's Treaſons, ſaid, when he acquainted the King with the apprehending of Fitzharris, his Majeſty told him, he had done the greateſt piece of Service he had ever done in his Life; but he was no ſooner gone, than two Gentlemen told him the King ſaid, he had broken his Meaſures, and he would have him taken off one way or other. Lord Conway, one of the Secretaries of State, own'd the giving of Fitzharris Money, but it was for ſome trifling Buſineſs; an Iriſh Papiſt to be cloſetted by the King, and to be rewarded by him, muſt needs be for a Trifle: Mrs. Wall, the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth's uſeful Handmaid, marry'd afterwards to Sir Theophilus Oglethorp, depos'd, that he had 250 l. at once given him for that trifling Buſineſs. Is it not a Wonder, ſays a modern Hiſtorian, that after the Detection of two ſuch monſtrous and horrid Deſigns, Dangerfield's and Fitzharris's, any one ſhould believe the Presbyterian Plot, which murder'd the greateſt Patriots in Britain, Lord Ruſſel, Col. Sidney, &c? It is very reaſonably ſuſpected, that the laſt mention'd Presbyterian Plot was a Branch of this of Fitzharris, and that the ſtifling the full Diſcovery of Fitzharris's made way for thoſe Murders. The great Lawyer, Sir John Hawles, ſeems to be of that Opinion: I am apt to think if that Matter had been thoroughly look'd into, ſome Perſons, afterwards Witneſſes in the Lord Ruſſel's, Col. Sidney's, and Mr. Hampden's Trials, had either never been produc'd, or had not been credited if produc'd; nor would my Lord of Eſſex's Throat have been cut, and my Lord Ruſſel and Col. Sydney might have worn their Heads on their Shoulders to this day. The Oxford Parliament were for looking into the Matter thoroughly, and we ſhall preſently ſee how they were prevented.

The King knew of it.

Lord Eſſex's Throat cut.

Now it was the Faction took into Pay the mercenary Pen of Heraclitus Ridens, who, ſays Echard, wrote in favour of the King and Court. It was a notable Paper, and fill'd with uncommon Wit and Humour, by which, as with a Rule, one may meaſure the Extent of his Underſtanding, and have a juſt Conception of the Delicacy of his Taſte, there having never been publiſh'd a more ſcurrilous and impudent Libel againſt the Proteſtant Religion, the Liberties of the Britiſh Nation, and all ſober Perſons and Things. The ſame was done by the Libeller's Fellow-Labourer, Roger L'Eſtrange, of whom a Poet, then living, thus ſung:

A. D. 1681.

When you return'd, you fell to work amain,
And took up your old ſcribling Trade again.
Some ſorry Scandal on Diſſenters thrown,
And viler Canting upon Forty-one;
You thought yourſelf the Buttreſs of the Crown.
Now for the Church of England you declare,
And wage with the Fanaticks furious War.
Tho' the two lewd Diurnals you diſpenſe,
Alike are void of Reaſon, Truth and Senſe.

Again,

While you at Sam's, like a grave Doctor ſate,
Teaching the Minor Clergy how to prate,
Who lick'd your Spittle up, and then came down,
And ſhed the naſty Drivel o'er the Town.

Which is a filthy, but a natural Image of what the Author would repreſent to us. For we read every where, that the Succeſs of Heraclitus Ridens and L'Eſtrange's Papers, was among the Minor Clergy, and no wonder the reverend Hiſtorian brags of it.

In the mean time the Elections went on all over England, and in moſt Places the former Members were re-elected, or others choſen that were of the ſame Principles, both as to Church and State. The Election for London was at Guildhall, February 4. and the Choice fell upon Sir Robert Clayton, Sir Tho. Player, Tho. Pilkington Eſq; and William Love Eſq; the ſame Members as in the laſt Parliament; but it is a general Miſtake, that there were few new Members in this Parliament; for there were near 220 new Members, tho' they were for the moſt part of the ſame Principles with the Majority of the laſt Parliament; and it ſhews what a diſpoſition the People were generally in all over the Kingdom, to preſerve their Religion and Liberties, tho' the Papiſts, the Minor Clergy above mention'd, the Court, their Creatures and Adherents, were then ſapping the Foundations of the Conſtitution of England, and would in time have utterly deſtroy'd it, had not the Genius of Liberty exerted itſelf at the Revolution. A Member of this Oxford Parliament, told a Perſon of Honour, from whom I had it, that there were 200 Members in that Houſe of Commons, which the King's Revenue could not bribe; and we ſhall preſently ſee how handſomely his Majeſty treated them. When the above mention'd four Citizens were choſen for London, a Paper was preſented to them in the Name of the Common Hall, containing a Return of their moſt hearty Thanks for their faithful and moſt unwearied Endeavours in the two laſt Parliaments, to ſearch into, and diſcover the Depth of the Plot, to preſerve his Majeſty's Royal Perſon, the Proteſtant Religion, and the well-eſtabliſh'd Government of this Realm, to ſecure the Meeting and Sitting of frequent Parliaments, to aſſert our undoubted Rights of Petitioning, to promote the long wiſh'd-for Union of his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects; to repeal the 35 Eliz. and the Corporation Act; and more eſpecially for their Endeavours in promoting the Bill of Excluſion of James Duke of York. In fine, they conclude, that being confidently aſſured, that they the ſaid Members for the City will never conſent to the granting any Money-Supply, till they have effectually ſecur'd us againſt Popery and Arbitrary Power, they they reſolve, by God's Aſſiſtance, to ſtand by their ſaid Members with their Lives and Fortunes.

The City thank the Earl of Eſſex and the other Lords.

After this, another Paper was preſented to the two Sheriffs, requeſting them in the Name of all the ſaid Citizens, then aſſembled in Common Hall, to return their grateful Acknowledgement to the Earl of Eſſex, and by him to the reſt of the Lords, who preſented the late Petition and Advice to his Majeſty.

The like Papers of Addreſs were preſented to the Members choſen for Counties, Cities and Boroughs; and ſo zealous were the Freeholders and Electors all over the Kingdom, that, contrary to the old Cuſtom of Parliament-Men treating the Country where they ſtood, now the Country in moſt Places treated them, or, at leaſt, every Man bore his own Charges.

I paſs over the Compliments paid to the King and Queen at their Arrival in Oxfordſhire, and at Oxford, by the Lord Norreys Lord Lieutenant of the County, who, a few Months after, very officiouſly aſſiſted at the Trial of poor Colledge, by Bowel Mayor of Oxford, and by the Vice-Chancellor Dr. Halton, Provoſt of Queen's; which the King, Queen, and Court, were ſo well pleas'd with, that Mr. Archdeacon Echard tells us 'twas publiſh'd in print, That this Univerſity is no leſs renown'd abroad as well as at home for its Loyalty and Duty to his Majeſty, than for its Learning and ſound Religion; the Nonſenſe of which is pretty remarkable. Does Salamanca and the Sorbonne, Geneva and Leyden, admire the Renown of the Univerſity of Oxford for Soundneſs of Religion? The Preſents they made the King and Queen were extreamly acceptable. To the King they gave a large Oxford Bible; to the Queen, the Cuts of the Hiſtory of the Univerſity. They came thither a Week before the Seſſion of Parliament open'd. Many Members of the Houſe of Commons, eſpecially thoſe of London, were attended with great Retinues, Friends, Dependents and Servants on horſeback, not being without Apprehenſions of ſome ill Deſign againſt them, by the King's perſiſting ſo obſtinately to have them meet in that City.

Parliament meet at Oxford.

On the 21ſt of March the Parliament met, the Houſe of Lords in the Gallery at the public Schools; the Houſe of Commons in the Convocation-Room; to both whom, the compleat Hiſtorian ſays, his Majeſty made a moſt gracious Speech, which began moſt graciouſly thus: My Lords and Gentlemen, "The unwar- "rantable Proceedings of the laſt Houſe of Com- "mons." As I obſerv'd in the Reign of King Charles I. that there ſeem'd to be a Fatality in all his Counſels, tending to Confuſion and Deſtruction, ſo in the Counſels of this King there is ſomething very much like it. For he and his Miniſters knew very well that this Parliament would be rather more than leſs zealous in thoſe very Proceedings, which he calls unwarrantable, than were the laſt. What a hopeful Beginning was this then! Biſhop Burnet takes notice, that he ſeverely reflected on the laſt Parliament. He propos'd Expedients inſtead of the Succeſſion Bill, and deſir'd Supplies for Tangier, and to ſupport his Alliances, tho' he could not but be ſenſible that they would not give him a Penny without the Excluſion-Bill, inſtead of which he propos'd, that the Adminiſtration of the Government ſhould remain in Proteſtant Hands. This was explain'd by Sir John Ernley and Sir Thomas Littleton, to be meant of a Prince Regent, with whom the regal Authority ſhould be lodg'd during the Duke's Life. But before that Debate was enter'd upon, the Houſe of Commons took up Buſineſs where the laſt Parliament left it; As a Bill againſt the Duke of York's Succeſſion, another to repeal the Act of 35 Eliz. Preparations were to be made for the Proſecution againſt the impeach'd Lords in the Tower; and an Inquiry into the Affair of Fitzharris. A Motion being made for printing the Votes, Sir Lionel Jenkins oppos'd it, as not conſiſtent with the Gravity of the Houſe, of which he was one of the graveſt Members in Dr. Littleton's Senſe of the word Grave. The major Vote paſt for printing. Another Motion was made, to inquire into the Miſcarriage of the laſt Bill, for repealing the Statute 35 of Elizabeth, which, ſaid the Mover, I look upon as a Breach of the Conſtitution of the Government. The Debate being adjourn'd to the next Day, March 25, a worthy Member mov'd, that, That for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, a Bill be brought in to prevent a Popiſh Succeſſor, in particular againſt James Duke of York; and that it be the ſame Bill which paſs'd the laſt Parliament. Sir Lionel Jenkins, who repreſented the Univerſity of Oxford, ſtood up, and ſaid, I muſt give my Negative to this Motion, and my Reaſon why I do ſo is, becauſe the King hath declar'd in his Speech, that as to the Point of altering the Succeſſion, he cannot depart from what he has ſo often declar'd, the King has given his Vote againſt it, and therefore I muſt do ſo too. This is one of Echard's brisk Speakers, and the Member who ſeconded him, ſpoke every whit as briskly. The King's Speech gives us a Latitude for Expedients, and therefore we ſhould not have the Bill any more put to the hazard of Rejection, but think of ſome Expedients. Broom Whorwood Eſq; who repreſented the City of Oxford, ſaid, They who adviſ'd the King's Speech, muſt anſwer for it. The Words of the Speech are, If any other way can be found out, &c. I think thoſe about the King have done enough to ruin him and us; but I would have the King ſee we are ſo far from putting him upon that ſtreſs, that we would help him out. I think that Speech they read to us, to have nothing of the King in it; he is a better Man, and a better Proteſtant, than to do it of himſelf, therefore I would not put on a Reſolution, as flat and as ſhort as that is in the King's Speech. The King has gone ſo far as this Reſolution comes to in his Declaration about Diſſenters formerly; and yet from the Reaſons from hence he was perſuaded to revoke it. If Perſons have been ſo prevalent, as to put the King upon this Speech, let me ſee thoſe Perſons ſo forward in bringing the King into a Thing, to help him out; if they do not, I hope the King will lay the blame at their doors, and not at ours. Yet ſuch was the Moderation of this great Aſſembly, notwithſtanding their juſt Zeal for the Security of their Religion, Rights and Properties, they agreed, That in order to pay his Majeſty all the Reſpect that might be, they would ſet apart a time to conſider of Expedients; and accordingly they appointed Saturday the 26th, for the Debate of them.

A. D. 1681.

Two Speeches againſt the Excluſion. P. 605.

Mr. Whorwood's Speech for it, and againſt the King's.

The next Day there was a Motion in the Houſe of Commons, which was much taken notice of for the novelty of it: 'Twas to return Thanks to thoſe Places, who had generouſly and without Expence choſen their Members; and the Members ſo freely elected, were order'd to ſend their particular Thanks to thoſe that choſe them. Then they proceeded to reſume yeſterday's Debate, upon the loſs of the Bill for the Repeal of the Act of the 35*th of* Elizabeth: Upon which, Sir Wil. Sir William Jones ſpoke thus: "This Matter Jones's "deſerves mature Conſideration, whether in Speech about the "reſpect of the loſs of the Bill, or the ſhaking ſtolen Bill, "the very Conſtitution of Parliament. The "Bill 35 Eliz.

Expedient.

A. D. 1681.

" Bill that is loſt is of great Moment, and of " great Service to the Country, and perhaps to " their Lives in the time of a Popiſh Succeſſor. " Thoſe Men that hinder'd the paſſing the Bill " had a proſpect of that, and if it be ſent up " again, we are like to meet with great Oppoſi- " tion. But be the Bill what it will, the Pre- " cedent is of the higheſt Conſequence. The " King has his Negative to all Bills, but I never " knew that the Clerk of the Parliament had " a Negative. No Man that knows Law or " Hiſtory but can tell, that to Bills grateful " and popular, the King gives his Conſent to " them: But if this way be found out, that Bills " ſhall be thrown by, it may be hereafter ſaid, " They were forgot and laid by, and we ſhall " never know whether the King would paſs them " or no." If this be ſuffer'd, 'tis in vain to ſpend time here, and 'tis a Scandal to the Engliſh Name, that a Law paſs'd by the Peers and Repreſentatives of the Nation ſhould be ſtolen out of the Houſe of Lords, and the Thief remain unpuniſh'd. Antiquity has no Parallel to this Baſeneſs, and the Theft is the more baſe and deteſtable, becauſe by that means many Thouſands of pious Proteſtants were ruin'd afterwards on the Pretence of the Statute 35 Eliz. which the Clerk of the Crown or Parliament ſtole away from among the Bills that were ready for the Royal Aſſent. The Houſe of Commons next read the Information concerning Fitzharris's Treaſon, a Preparation for the Presbyterian Plot; and a Member of former Parliaments reported, how that one Hubert confeſs'd he had fir'd the City of London; upon which the Houſe reſolv'd to examine him next Morning: but before the Houſe ſate, Hubert was hang'd to prevent it. It was alſo remember'd, that there had been a Deſign to try the Popiſh Lords in the Tower by Indictment, to prevent which, the Commons exhibited general Impeachments againſt them ſo ſucceſsfully, that the Lords were never try'd upon Indictments, and the Judges gave their Opinion that they could not. Upon which the Houſe order'd an Impeachment againſt Fitzharris, and Sir Lionel Jenkins to carry it up; which he at firſt refus'd, ſaying, The ſending me upon this Meſſage reflects upon my Maſter, and do what you will with me, I will not go. The Houſe took him immediately to task; and to prevent the ill Conſequences of their Reſentment, he ſubmitted to their Order, ſome ſay, weeping, and carry'd the Impeachment to the Houſe of Peers, who threw it out, Biſhop Burnet ſays, upon a Pretence which the Earl of Nottingham, Lord Chancellor, furniſh'd them with, that Edward III. had got ſome Commoners to be condemn'd by the Lords; of which, when the Houſe of Commons complain'd, an Order was made that no ſuch thing ſhould be done for the future. But the Biſhop proves his Earl to be in the wrong, for that related only to Proceedings at the King's Suit, and it could not be meant that an Impeachment from the Commons did not lie againſt a Commoner. The Houſe the next Day ran high in their Debates upon it. Sir Thomas Littleton ſaid, This was to have no further uſe of a Parliament, but to ſerve a Purpoſe. Another, Indictments were brought againſt the Lords in the Tower, yet that was no Impediment to their Impeachment in the Lords Houſe; and the laſt Day of the laſt Seſſions of Parliament, the Lords accepted an Impeachment againſt the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, and that this Denial of Juſtice by the Lords was greater than Scroggs's Denial of taking Preſentments from the Grand-Jury of Middleſex, by how much the Commons of Parliament are the great Inqueſt of the Nation. Another, This is a new Plot againſt the Proteſtants of which Fitzharris is accus'd; the Commons impeach him, and the Lords ſay, We will not hear it. If it were not for the Lords, Fitzharris might have diſcover'd all the Conſpiracy, and the Proteſtant Religion might have been ſav'd; wherefore I move that the denying this Impeachment, tends to the Subverſion of the Conſtitution of the Parliament, and of the Proteſtant Religion. Sir William Jones did not only exclaim againſt the other Houſe, but againſt the Biſhops in particular, declaring, They had no Right to vote in this Caſe. Serjeant Maynard cry'd, Our All is at ſtake; and if we muſt not proſecute, Holland and Flanders muſt ſubmit to the French, and they over-run all. Another ſpoke thus; This is a Confirmation of the Deſign to murther the King, and the Duke's conſenting to deſtroy his own Brother; and therefore I move, " That if any Judge, Juſtice, or " Jury proceed upon Fitzharris, and he be " found guilty, that the Houſe would declare " him and them guilty of his Murther, and Be- " trayers of the Rights of the Commons of Eng- " land." To which was added, upon the Motion of Sir William Jones, " Or that any inferior " Court ſhall proceed, &c." which was paſs'd. The reaſon of this Vote was, that if Fitzharris was try'd upon an Indictment, he muſt have been try'd ſingly upon the Fact, whether he were guilty or not of the contriving and diſperſing the Libel; whereas upon an Impeachment, the Commons might inquire into the whole Conſpiracy, which would moſt certainly have involv'd the Court in the Guilt of it; and it is certain they would not otherwiſe have precipitated his Trial in an inferior Court as they did, nor would they have directed their Creatures in the Houſe of Lords, among which were almoſt the whole Bench of Biſhops, to have oppos'd the Impeachment on purpoſe to hinder an Inquiry into that dark Myſtery of Iniquity, which not many Months after let out ſome of the beſt Blood in the Nation, which cry'd aloud for Vengeance on the Heads of thoſe that were concern'd, and the righteous Vengeance of Heaven moſt apparently and terribly purſu'd them.

Speech upon it.

Fitzharris's Impeachment thrown out by the Lords.

I have hinted that Sir John Ernley propos'd to the Houſe the Expedient of a Regency: Upon which Sir William Poultney ſaid, Conſider what is a Regency; I never heard of it, but of a Prince in poſſeſſion in Minority or Lunacy, and it has generally been very unfortunate: But to talk of a Regency in futuro, in Condition and Limitation of Time, I never heard of. This Expedient does not anſwer the King's Speech, nor your former Bill. They make the King but a Shadow, and they divide Perſon from Power, our Law will not endure it. The Perſon divided from the Power, both will be courted. The King leads you to conſider Expedients, but ſuch as will conſiſt with the Safety and Dignity of Monarchy. This muſt be two Kings at the ſame time, one by Law, and another by Right. The former Bill has been under Conſideration of all the People of England, and perhaps all the Proteſtants of Europe. All the Wits of Learned Men have made their Objections againſt it, yet notwithſtanding all People are ſtill of the ſame mind. And now we run upon the moſt miſhapen Thing, which it may be two or three Years before we underſtand it, and we may expect to have an Operation of it nobody knows when. Mr. H. C. ſpoke for Expedients; " If the Excluſion of the Duke be " the beſt way to preſerve Religion, this Houſe " cannot do it alone. If we cannot have that " beſt way, we are guilty to our Country if we " take none. If a Man be ſick, and ſo order'd " that

Sir Will. Poultney.

A. D. 1681. " that nothing muſt be taken but by Direction " of three Phyſicians, and two are for giving " him the Jeſuits Powder, and one againſt it, " and he thinks he does the Duty of his Profeſ- " ſion, but they all three not agreeing, muſt the " Patient take nothing? And we are but one " Part of the Legiſlative Power.——When Men " preſs ſo faſt, they may come late into their " Inn by tiring their Horſes. Let a grand Com- " mittee try Expedients, elſe 'tis not conſultare, " but dicere." Mr. J. S. ſaid, in anſwer to the Simile of the three Phyſicians, If the Caſe be ſuch, that the two, in the Judgment of the third, did offer nothing to the ſick Man but what was mortal, he ought not to venture upon his own Diſreputation in joining with them. Mr. T. B. ſaid, Expedients have been mov'd for already, as the Jeſuits Powder for an Ague, but our Diſeaſe is a Pleuriſy, and we muſt let blood. Sir William Jones and Sir Francis Winnington were unmoveably for the Bill of Excluſion; and againſt two ſuch Men, Mr. Archdeacon produces Mr. George Legg, who urg'd the Dangers of a Commonwealth, and told them a Story as much to the purpoſe, as if he had given them an Argument. " His Father being in Priſon in the " late Times, an eminent Man then in Power, " in Diſcourſe with him, ſaid, I have oblig'd you, " and if the King come in, as I believe he will, " then think of me. Look to yourſelves when " you are in the Saddle again; if once you di- " vide, adieu to Monarchy for ever." This muſt needs be ſome Man of Eminence, by his believing the King would come in again: He muſt believe alſo that Oliver would betray his Maſters the Republick; that he would refuſe to be King; That he would leave the Government to his Son Dick, and that his Son's Brethren and Uncles would turn him out of it; that the Army would reſtore the Parliament, and then pull them down again; that Monk would be too hard for Lambert and Fleetwood; that he would abjure all his Abjurations, intend to make himſelf Protector, but be put out of his Intentions by Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper; and when he could do nothing for himſelf, let in the King without making any Terms but for himſelf. Had any one of theſe Things not happen'd as it did, the King had died abroad, as his Brother the Duke of York did, and had had no better a Kingdom to leave behind him, than the Pretender is now in poſſeſſion of. One Senator compar'd Expedients to Cucumbers; which, after they were well dreſs'd, were to be thrown away. Another ſaid, It ſeems to me as if a Man that ſcorch'd his Shins at the Fire, inſtead of removing himſelf farther off, ſhould ſend for a Maſon to remove the Chimney back. If I am to leap over a River, I had rather have no Staff than a broken one. I ſee no Remedy to ſave Religion, unleſs excluding the Duke. So the Bill was order'd to be brought in on Monday Morning, the next Day of meeting, which was the 28th of March, when it was again read, and Mr. Secretary Jenkins ſtood up, ſays Mr. Archdeacon, and ſaid, (not elegantly or wiſely, but fearleſly,) what follows: No Bill was ever offer'd to the Parliament of the like nature, ſo much againſt the Juſtice of the Nation: It condemns a Man unheard, and by a Law made Ex poſt Facto. They excluded him after he had turn'd Papiſt. Would Mr. Secretary have had them exclude him before he turn'd Papiſt? Is it againſt the Juſtice of the Nation to provide for the Security of their Religion, Rights, Properties and Liberties? He fearleſly goes on, It is not only againſt the fundamental Juſtice, but againſt the Wiſdom of the Nation: None but Fools are for Self-Preſervation. Again, And will introduce a Change of Government. No great matter that, if it was for the better, and it could not well be for the worſe. If the Duke will try to cut this Law with his Sword, he would have had the ſame Succeſs as when he endeavour'd afterwards to cut the Abdicating Law with the Sword. If he overcome, he will have the ſame Power to ſet aſide all Laws, both for Religion and Property, as he attempted afterwards, without overcoming. The Power will be in the hands of the Conqueror, and certainly he will change the Government. It is againſt Religion, (the Popiſh one it was againſt) and the Oaths of the Nation. Here Mr. Secretary began to be not quite ſo fearleſs as at firſt, ſaying, Poſſibly I am too tedious, and not willingly heard: if the Bill be againſt the Religion oblig'd by Oaths, againſt the Government, and the Wiſdom of the Nation, I hope you will throw it out. Never did Man hope ſo, when he ſaw almoſt every body all round him impatient for the paſſing the Bill, and ſo little notice was taken of what he ſaid, that Mr. T. B. ſpoke thus: Mr. Secretary has mov'd to throw out the Bill, and deſir'd to be heard patiently, I find nobody ſeconds him, pray let him go on and ſecond himſelf. They had no doubt a very mean Opinion of him, or they would not have heard any thing ſo contemptuouſly ſaid of him, without taking ſome notice of it. The Bill was order'd a ſecond Reading; and as they were reſuming the Debate about Fitzharris, on a ſudden the Uſher of the Black-Rod commanded their Attendance in the Houſe of Lords; where the King told them, He perceiv'd there were great Heats between the Lords and Commons, and their Beginnings had been ſuch, as he could expect no good Succeſs of this Parliament, and therefore thought fit to diſſolve them; which the Lord Chancellor did accordingly, and King Charles never met a Parliament more.

Sir Lionel Jenkins's fearleſs Speech.

Parliament diſſolv'd.

Echard here begins a new Period, and he opens it with ſome idle Reflections, which are as much an Affront to common Senſe as the preſent Conſtitution, and it is amazing that he ſhould have the Confidence to make a Preſent of it to his late Majeſty. He tells the World he's about to treat of the King's Succeſs, after he had ſo raſhly diſſolv'd the Oxford Parliament with unuſual Courage. He ſet up a more independent Adminiſtration; he acted more like an abſolute Monarch; he reſolv'd to exert his Authority, and to get Supplies by other than Parliamentary Methods; he was tired out with endleſs Stories of the Plot; he grew more tricking and artful in his Proceedings; and having ſatiated himſelf with Blood, grew more ſanguinary in his Temper. This, and a great deal more of it, is what he calls his Majeſty's Succeſs in his Adminiſtration. The Ingenious Author of The Hiſtory of ſtanding Armies, deſcribes his Succeſs thus: " No " Man could be employ'd in Church or State, " till he had declar'd himſelf an open Enemy to " our Conſtitution, by aſſerting deſpotick Power " under that nonſenſical Phraſe of Paſſive Obe- " dience, which was more preach'd up than all the " Laws of God and Man. The Helliſh, Popiſh " Plot was ſtifled, prov'd ſince too true by fatal " Experience; and in the room of it Proteſtant " ones were forg'd, and Men trapann'd into o- " thers, as the Meal-Tub, Fitzharris, Ryehouſe, " Newmarket, and Black heath Plots; and by " theſe Pretences, and the help of pack'd Juries " and Judges, they butcher'd ſome of the beſt " Men in England." This is what the reverend Hiſtorian calls his Majeſty's Succeſs, and when he comes to thoſe very Butcheries, he gives his Verdict, and pronounces the bloody Sentence after thoſe Juries and Judges. The abovemention'd

Tory Government applauded by Echard.

ingenious Author proceeds; " They ſet immo-
" derate Fines upon others, gave probable Suſ-
" picion of cutting the Lord Eſſex's Throat; and " to finiſh our Deſtruction, they took away the " Charters, as faſt as they were able, of all the " Corporations in England that would not chuſe
" the Members that were preſcrib'd them."
How ſucceſsful was this bleſſed King in his Attempt to deſtroy the Conſtitution! But the Archdeacon, who is extreamly ignorant of the Cauſes and Springs of Action, and Counſels in theſe calamitous Times, miſtook King Charles's Succeſs for his Brother the Duke of York's: read the judicious Acherley. " The King declar'd, He would " live on his own Revenues, and never more
" trouble Parliaments, who had truſted him with " that Revenue. At this time commenc'd a
" new Æra, and an intire Alteration, in order
" to ſtrike at the Root, and over-turn the Con-
" ſtitution; for the King diſmiſs'd himſelf in a " manner from the Government, and delegated
" over the whole Adminiſtration into the hands
" of his Brother the Duke of York, who under" took to ſecure his own Succeſſion, without gi" ving the King any more Diſturbance; and the " careleſs King was glad of being eas'd of the " trouble, and to ſtand by as unconcern'd at his
" Brother's Management of the Government,
" contenting himſelf to be attended at his Levees
" and in his Walks like a Duke, whilſt the Duke
" was at his Levees and in his Walks attended like
" a King: inſomuch that from this time, A- " pril 1, 1681, during the reſt of King Charles's
" Reign, the Duke may be look'd upon as King
" in Potentia, except the Name. As ſoon as
" this was known, the Eagerneſs to exclude
" him chang'd into courting and magnifying
" of him, and into a manifeſt Coldneſs to" wards the King. You ſee what Succeſs he had, " all Applications were made to the " Duke for Preferments in Church and State,
" he made the Biſhops, and garbled the Judges,
" till he had made a Sett to his Mind; of whom,
" ſome of them acted more like furious Proſecu-
" tors than Judges."

P. 602.

The Duke's Tyranny.

I ſhall continue Echard's Succeſs ſtill farther, not only becauſe it proves the Weakneſs of his Underſtanding, or of his Integrity, but becauſe it alſo proves what I have all along intended, that the Stuartine Race were from the firſt to the laſt of them in a Conſpiracy againſt the Britiſh Conſtitution Eccleſiaſtical and Civil. Dr. Welwood writes thus of it: " The Charters of the " City of London and other Corporations ſtood
" in the way of an abſolute Government, and it
" was reſolv'd to break thro' this Barrier: in " order to which, Quo Warranto's were brought
" againſt them, and in progreſs of time, they " were either ſurrender'd or vacated by a Sett
" of Judges PICK'D out for that Purpoſe; and " it was reſolv'd thereby to make one of the " Eſtates of Parliament depend entirely upon
" the Will and Nomination of the Prince. While
" theſe Quo Warranto's were going on, whole
" Peals of Anathema were rung out againſt thoſe
" Patriots who had ſtood up for the Liberties of " their Country in the preceding Parliaments,
" and it was look'd upon as a Crime againſt the " State for any one to regret the approaching
" Fate of his Country; even the Holy Scrip-
" tures themſelves were made a Stale for Arbi- " trary Power. This was a Time never to be " forgotten, when Heaven itſelf was rank'd up-
" on our Enemies ſide by ſome that pretended " to expound its Will. In ſome places a new " kind of Funeral Harangues came in faſhion,
" our Laws, our Liberties, our Parliaments,
" our Native Rights were to be buried; but in-
" ſtead of dropping a Tear at their Funeral, ſul-
" ſome Panegyricks were made upon their Mur-
" therers, and Curſes denounc'd againſt thoſe
" that would have retriev'd them from Deſtruc-
" tion."

ſign to enſlave us, and all this laid together, P. 528.
ſays his Lordſhip, the whole look'd like an extra- vagant Fit of Madneſs; yet no Part of it was ſo unaccountable, as the high Strains to which the Univerſities, and moſt of the Clergy were carry'd. Univerſities againſt the Conſtitution.
We ſhall have too much occaſion to ſpeak of this boaſted Succeſs of King Charles in the following Pages.

The King left Oxford the ſame Day he diſ-ſolv'd the Parliament, with an apparent Affectation of Haſte, as if he thought he was in danger there, and it was to countenance a Deſign form'd to proſecute a Presbyterian Plot, tho' Fitzharris was to be hang'd for contriving it; and King Charles did indeed carry on that Proſecution with great Succeſs; for which, according to Echard, P. 624.
he gain'd more Authority and Reverence, and more Love and Affection than he had met with for ſeveral Years before, which he imputes chiefly to the Effects of a well-penn'd Declaration pub-liſh'd by him ſoon after he diſſolv'd the Oxford Parliament; but as he knows little of the well or ill-penning of any ſuch Piece, the Reader will not be prejudic'd by what he ſays againſt the Anſwer to it, which was firſt drawn up by Col. Al- gernon Sidney, then improv'd by the late Lord
Somers, and laſt of all corrected by the very eminent Sir William Jones; in a Treatiſe entitled,
A juſt and modeſt Vindication of the two laſt Par- The King's Declaration concerning the late Diſſolution,
liaments, of which mention has been made. E-
chard affirms, he began by Art and Smoothneſs.
Biſhop Burnet, He reckon'd up all the hard things that had been done by three Parliaments; as the Vote not to lend Money, that againſt proſecuting Diſſenters, &c. Tho' this Declaration is not quite ſo wordy as Lord Clarendon's and Lord Notting- ham's Speeches; yet it is too redundant to be inſerted intire, unleſs there had been more Sincери-ty in it. Enough of it will be ſeen by repeating a few Paragraphs of the Vindication, wherein there's more Law, Reaſon, and good Argument, Anſwer'd in the juſt and modeſt Vindication.
than in all the Harangues and Declarations that the Court-Party had publiſh'd ſince the Reſtora-
tion.

It prov'd, that by the Statutes of this Kingdom
Parliaments ſhould not be prorogu'd or diſſolv'd, till all the Petitions and Bills before them were anſwer'd and redreſs'd: That the Manner of diſ- ſolving the Oxford Parliament was unwarranted by the Precedent of former Times: That the King doth not act any conſiderable Act of Regal Power, till it be firſt debated and reſolv'd in Council, and the Peers at Oxford were ſo wholly ignorant of the Counſel, that they never thought of a Diſſolution till they heard it pronounc'd; yet the Dutcheſs of Mazarine publiſh'd the News at St. James's many Hours before it was done; for that not only the Diſſolution, but the ſubſequent Declaration were both coin'd in a French Mint, no body queſtions, and it will appear ſtill plainer, by what follows out of the Vindication.

" Tho' to the Diſhonour of our Country it ap" pears, that ſome Engliſhmen were concern'd in
" the unhappy Advice of breaking the two laſt
" Parliaments, and ſetting up this pretended De" fence of it; yet the Galliciſms which are found " in the Paper, ſhew the Writer to have been of " another Nation, or at leaſt to have had his " Thoughts ſo much taken up for the Intereſts of " France, (whilſt he was labouring this way to " heighten and perpetuate the Differences be" tween the King and the People) that he could " not

A. D. 1681.

" not expreſs himſelf in any other Idiom than " theirs; he would not otherwiſe have introduc'd " the King ſaying, That it was a Matter ex- " tremely ſenſible to us, a Form of Speech pecu- " liar to the French, and unknown to any other " Nation. The Reader who underſtands that " Language, will obſerve ſo many more of this " kind, as will give him juſt Cauſe to doubt " whether the whole Paper was not a Tranſla- " tion, and whether the Engliſh one, or that " which was publiſh'd in French was the Origi- " nal?

" Let us then no longer wonder that the Time " of diſſolving our Parliaments is known at Paris " ſooner than at London, ſince 'tis probable the " Reaſons now given for it, were formed there " too. The Declaration was not communicated " to the Privy-Council till Friday the 8th of A- " pril, when his Majeſty, according to the late " Method, did graciouſly declare to them his " Pleaſure, to ſet it forth without deſiring from " them any Advice in the Matter; but Monſieur " Barillon, the French Ambaſſador, did not only " read it to a Gentleman the 5th of April, but ad- " viſed with him about it, and demanded his Opi- " nion of it." Echard owns this, and ſinks what comes after, " Which his Excellency will the better " remember, becauſe of the great Liberty which " the Perſon took in ridiculing it to his Face." Here the Vindicator modeſtly exclaims, Good God! to what a Condition is this Kingdom reduc'd, when the Miniſters and Agents of the only Prince in the World, who can have Deſigns againſt us, or of whom we ought to be afraid, are not only made acquainted with the moſt ſecret Paſſages of State, but are made our chief Miniſters too, and have the principal Conduct of our Affairs! As fully as this Declaration is anſwer'd in the before-cited Vindication, which the Biſhop of Salisbury ſays was the beſt Paper that had been publiſh'd, writ with Spirit and true Judgment, Echard commends the Declaration as very popular. Sancroft, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, mov'd in Council that this French Memorial might be read in all Churches and Chappels; and the Minor Clergy executed the Order they receiv'd concerning it with ſingular Delectation. This Declaration rais'd over England a Humour of making Addreſſes to the King, returning him Thanks for it. There was an impartial Account of theſe Addreſſes publiſh'd at the Time when the Addreſſers were crowding to Court with them, and the Author ſets us right in the Matter: " Should any in the " Liſt of the late Thankſgivers be hereafter " found to have promoted Addreſſes with a " Proſpect of introducing either Tyranny or Po- " pery, the Names and Pretences of Law and " the Proteſtant Religion, which they have not " only flouriſh'd their Papers with, but made his " Majeſty's Promiſe of preſerving them the " Grounds of their Acknowledgments, and the " Foundation of the Tenders which they have " made of their Lives and Fortunes, will entail " an everlaſting Infamy upon them. The Num- " ber of the Subſcribers is not ſo conſiderable as " to bear any Proportion to thoſe that are againſt " them." L'Eſtrange call'd them the Thirty to One, " For tho' a few buſy People have made a " great Noiſe and Buz in ſeveral Places of the " Kingdom; yet all of them put together make " not ſo great a Number, as we have ſeen not long " ſince to one Petition for a Parliament; ſo that " it is matter of Wonder, that the Govern- " ment for its own Reputation hath not in ſome " publick way prohibited and forbid them, and " eſpecially when it finds that after all the Neg- " lect and Scorn which the Addreſſers are ex- " poſ'd unto for their Paucity and Fewneſs, yet " they have not the Diſcretion to forbear and de- " ſiſt." The compleat Hiſtorian confeſſes they were procur'd by Sollicitations from the Court, and their Sollicitations produc'd a Cartload of Folly, Stupidity, Fuſtian, Impudence and Impertinence, too well known to need expatiating upon it. It is not ſtrange that the Archdeacon flouriſhes on theſe Addreſſes, and particularly on that from Norwich, which he tells us reflected on the Exorbitancies of the late Houſe of Commons, who, if Sir William Jones, the Lord Somers and Col. Sidney knew what belong'd to ſuch things, committed no Exorbitancy. The Stuffmen of Norwich thank'd the King moſt ſolemnly for giving his two laſt Parliaments ſuch timely Diſſolutions. The Author of the impartial Account of Addreſſes, tells us, Moſt of the Clergy did not only intereſt themſelves in countenancing, but were Sticklers for them, of whom Lord Halifax ſaid pleaſantly, The Petitioners for a Parliament ſpit in the King's Face, but the Addreſſers ſpit in his Mouth. Tho the Papers that were extorted or procur'd by Artifice from Counties, Cities and Boroughs were equally dull and fulſome, bombaſt and impertinent; yet every Mortal that accompany'd them had the Honour to kiſs his Majeſty's Hand, and many of them were dubb'd, who had not wherewithal to pay the Fees of Knighthood.

Addreſſes.

Lord Halifax's witty Saying of them.

John Dryden is now brought into the Archdeacon's Hiſtory, for laſhing a Pamphlet concerning his Majeſty's Declaration in a Lampoon, wherein Mr. Bayes was pleas'd to ſay, The Commons may make Spaniels of the Lords, throw them a Man, and bid them go judge him, as we command a Dog to fetch and carry. He could not ſee that the Simile was Nonſenſe, but it was Impudence; and he has more than once miſtaken that for Wit. He then extols Heraclitus Ridens once more, and writes another Panegyrick on that Hireling L'Eſtrange, againſt whom were many Writers, when they could get any one to print their Writings, which was not eaſily to be done; inſomuch that it is ſaid, Andrew Marvel, who had more Wit than Dryden, L'Eſtrange, Heraclitus, and all of them, was forc'd to compoſe his own Pieces himſelf, and to work them off at a little Preſs, which he had contriv'd on purpoſe: For as another ſweet Effect of Tyranny and arbitrary Power, the Writers, Printers and Publiſhers on the Side of the Country were put down and ſilenc'd, and Francis Smith, one of them, thrown into Newgate; while L'Eſtrange was ſuffer'd to inſult the religious and wiſe Part of the Nation, to vilify the Reformation and the free Conſtitution of England, not only with Impunity, but with Reward, tho' there was really no more Wit than Truth in his Writings. In one of his Papers he propheſy'd indeed, as well he might, being let into the Secret of the intended Murders, if it ſhould pleaſe God, ſaid the prophane Hireling, to ſend us ſeaſonable Sheriffs, and fair play for our Money, there are ſet on foot ſo many Titles in competition for the Gallows, that it would be a hard matter to ſettle their Claims, and ſay who ſhould go firſt. What ſort of Men he thinks would make ſeaſonable Sheriffs we may diſcover by what he ſays elſewhere, Wilt thou ſet their Corniſh and Bethel, their Pilkington and Shute, againſt our North and Rich, our Daniel and Daſhwood? And in another place he ſays, A Citizen's Skull is but a thing to try the Temper of a Soldier's Sword upon.

L'Eſtrange's Impudence and Villainy.

This wretched Buffoonry does the Archdeacon miſtake for Wit, and honour it with his Applauſe, on account of the Cauſe he is engag'd in; he alſo highly extolls Dryden for his Abſalom and Achitophel, a lewd Satyr on the Lord Shaftesbury, and and other noble Patriots. He knew not that Dryden's Character, as a Poet, is wearing, and that he is valu'd only for his Verfification. I have repeated a Couplet or two of the Satyrs written by Mr. Marvel, and others of the Country Party, whofe Humour and Wit were infinitely fuperior to Echard's, Heraclitus, and Roger L'Eſtrange. Whoever has a mind to make the Compariſon, need only turn to the four Volumes of State Poems. If the Archdeacon had as juſt Conceptions of Perſons and Things as Biſhop Burnet, he would not have mention'd ſo lewd a Verſifyer as Dryden without Animadverſion. He was a Monſter of Immodeſty, ſays my Lord of Sarum, and a Monſter of Impurity of all ſorts. He fell upon the Church afterwards in his Hind and Panther, but the Reverend Hiſtorian forgives him for his falling upon the Presbyterians, when they were fallen upon by the Government, and the Prieſthood preach'd more againſt them than againſt Drunkards and Adulterers, who were forgotten in the Fury of their Zeal. The Pulpits were every where defil'd with Railing and Invectives, with Reproaches and Curſes. The Clergy, 'tis Biſhop Burnet who ſays it, ſtruck up to a higher Note with ſuch Zeal for the Duke's Succeſſion, as if a Popiſh King had been a Bleſſing from Heaven to be much long'd for by a Proteſtant Church. They likewiſe gave themſelves ſuch a Looſe againſt Nonconformiſts, as if nothing was ſo formidable as that Party; ſo that in all their Sermons Popery was quite forgot, and the Force of their Zeal was turn'd almoſt wholly againſt Diſſenters, who were now by Order from the Court to ſuffer Perſecution. There was alſo a great Change made in the Commiſſions all over England, none were left either on the Bench, or in the Militia, that did not with Zeal go into the Humour of the Court; and ſuch of the Clergy as would not engage in that Fury, which were not many, were cry'd out upon as Betrayers of the Church. I ſhall add other Inſtances of the Happineſs of the Times, upon which Roger and Heraclitus waſted ſo much Paper in dull Panegyricks, and Echard praiſes them for praiſing the Felicities of this felicitous Reign; I find them in the State Tracts. The Author is ſpeaking of the Tories, whoſe Tools I have juſt mention'd. "As to their original Riſe, 'tis certain they owe their being known in the World "to the horrid and execrable Deſigns of the two "late Kings to ſet up Arbitrary Power and Popery amongſt us. Then were all the Jails, "Brothels and Kennels rak'd for Villains of "fear'd Conſciences, and deſperate Fortunes. "Your Arl——ns, Cliff——ds, Oſ——ns were then "thought upon for Miniſters of State, and under them were bred ſuch a pack of Wretches "as the Court of Tiberius would have been aſham'd of. In the Law they were of the ſame "ſort with the Miniſtry. What Age can parallel their N——, their N—ths, their Jefferies, Scroggs, Rainsfords, Wrights, &c. and "their Under-Managers Graham and Burton. "Then as to the Pillars of what they then call'd "the Church of England, tho' ſo diſguis'd at "that time, that it was ſcarce known by its moſt "dutiful, moſt affectionate, and moſt pious "Children, I need ſay no more of them, than "that they were compos'd of Biſhops, and a "Clergy prefer'd by two Kings, who were about "to ſet up Popery and Tyranny, and therefore "were to chuſe ſuch Men into the Government of "the Church, as they thought would be moſt complying with thoſe Purpoſes, and whoſe Looſeneſs "of Morals might bring moſt Diſcredit upon the "Proteſtant Religion. And whoever remembers Mew, Parker, Cartwright, White, Watſon, &c. will, I think, be of the Opinion they were "not ill choſen for the Works they were to do." Dr. Welwood obſerves, About this time a certain Set of Men began a ſecond time to adopt into our Religion a Mahometan Principle, under the Names of Paſſive Obedience and Non-Reſiſtance, which, ſince the Time of that Impoſtor, who firſt broach'd it, has been the Means to enſlave a great part of the World. I could very much enlarge on this Subject, to prove that the tyrannical Proceedings of the Government in theſe bad Times, were much encourag'd by an immoral and illiterate Clergy, in hopes of Church-Preferments, which were liberally beſtow'd on them, while the learned, pious and orthodox Divines were neglected and deſpis'd for their Charity and Moderation; ſuch as Tillotſon, Patrick, Fowler, Kidder, Meriton, Hall, Lloyd, Teniſon, Grove, Williams, and many others, Fathers and Doctors of our Church, which, by God's Bleſſing, has never wanted religious and worthy Miniſters, to preach the Purity of the Chriſtian Faith in oppoſition to Superſtition and Perſecution; ſuch have been a very conſiderable Body of the Clergy ſince the Revolution, Men of Proteſtant and Engliſh Principles, who cannot be too much reſpected by Engliſh Men and Proteſtants.

Paſſive Obedience and Non-Reſiſtance a Turkiſh Principle.

I have been led into this Digreſſion by Echard's ridiculous Encomiums on two wretched Scriblers, Betrayers of our Religion and Liberties, after the Diſſolution of the Oxford Parliament. We have ſeen what honourable Times theſe were, and we muſt now ſee what Honours were diſtributed in them.

Laurence Hyde Eſq; Viſcount Hyde of Kennelworth, Baron of Wootton Baſſet.

Charles Duke of Richmond, Knight of the Garter.

Heneage Lord Finch, Lord Chancellor, Earl of Nottingham.

Sir Francis Pemberton, Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench, to give the better colour to Fitz-Harris's Trial; Pemberton being, till then, thought a Man of ſome Probity.

In Eaſter Term, a Bill of High Treaſon was preferr'd againſt him to the Grand Jury of Middleſex, Mr. Godfrey, Brother and Heir to Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, being Foreman. They heſitated as to receiving of it, becauſe he was impeach'd by the Commons; but the new Judge Pemberton and his Brother Judges remov'd that Heſitation, by declaring they might lawfully proceed. The Bill being found, Fitz-Harris pleaded the Impeachment, and that he could not be try'd by that Court. He had Counſel aſſign'd him, and conſidering who they were, he had the Advantage as to pleading; for Sir William Williams, Mr. Pollexfen, Sir Francis Winnington, and Mr. Wallop, had no hard Task to deal with Sir Robert Sawyer the Attorney-General, and Mr. Finch Solicitor-General; but the Court was determin'd, and notwithſtanding the ſtrong Arguments of Fitz-Harris's Counſel, and the weak Arguments of the King's, Pemberton, Jones and Raymond, gave their Opinion, that Fitz-Harris's Plea was inſufficient; but gave no Reaſons for it, which they ought to have done, as we are taught by the very learned Sir John Hawles in his Remarks on this Trial. Fitz-Harris then pleaded Not guilty; and having a Witneſs in Holland, he was not try'd till the 9th of June.

Very wickedly is this Trial introduc'd in the Hiſtory we have ſo often animadverted upon. The Whigs took great pains in the making of a Jury; whereas the pains was taken by the Attorney-General Sawyer, who excepted againſt ſeveral

Tho' in the Lord Ruſſel's Caſe the Court adjudg'd, that no Freehold was a good Challenge. The Proof of the Libel upon him was too plain to be conteſted, and Fitz-Harris ſaid he did it by order of his Superiors, the Lord Howard of Eſcrick joining with him in it. Nay, it was the general Report, that Lord Howard indited the Libel; but, as Biſhop Burnet ſays, it was too meanly drawn to come from that Lord. Echard owns the Tories were for hanging him, and to that end the new Judge and his Brother Judges ſumm'd up the Evidence unfairly, to uſe Sir John Hawles's own Words, and he was convicted and condemn'd. The Archdeacon, who is Counſel againſt Fitz-Harris, produces one of the King's Concubines, and her Woman Mrs. Wall too, as Witneſſes for the King, tho' call'd by the Priſoner. They deny'd what he chiefly wanted them to affirm, that they employ'd him in ſuch Buſineſs. Now Wall's Evidence was likely to be good, ſhe ſwore he was never admitted to the King; and the Lord Conway ſwore he did ſpeak with the King. Many other Hardſhips were put upon the Priſoner to take away his Life, and prevent the Diſcovery of the Contrivers of this Plot, among whom, no doubt, would have been found the Duke, if not the King; and even by the Confeſſion of Mr. Archdeacon, Mrs. Fitz-Harris did, ſeveral Years after, aver to a Perſon of Worth, That the Buſineſs of the Libel was a Court-Trick, and the King was privy to it: yet does he expatiate on what Fitz-Harris confeſs'd to Hawkins the Tower Chaplain, of a Deſign of the Proteſtant Party to ſeize the King; that they had 60000 Men at command, at a ſhort Warning. That the Biſhops and Clergy, good Men at that time, were to be ſeverely handled; that he and Haynes had ſeveral Meetings about it with the Lord Howard of Eſcrick, and a great deal more ſuch bare-fac'd Falſhood, which was put into the Mouth of this poor Wretch, and convey'd to the World by Hawkins, one of the meaneſt Creatures that ever wore a Caſſock; yet Echard doctors him up, and tells us, when he publiſh'd Fitz-Harris's Confeſſion, it was very ſurpriſing and provoking to thoſe that had ſo much endeavour'd to ſave his Life, Which Confeſſion, as Hawkins and he have worded it, is to me a convincing Proof, that the approaching Presbyterian Plot was founded on this of Fitz-Harris, or rather was only a Renewal of that very Plot which had been interrupted by Everard's Diſcovery. When an honeſt Man unwittingly falls into Error we pity him. But when a Man errs out of Malice we abhor him.

Now read what Biſhop Burnet writes of the pretended Confeſſion of Fitz-Harris to the Tower Chaplain, and then make a Judgment of the reverend Hiſtorian's Integrity and Capacity.

P. 504. " Hawkins, the Miniſter of the Tower took him,
" Fitz-Harris, into his Management, and pre-Parſon Hawkins tampering with Fitz-Harris. " vail'd with him, the vile Suborner! not " only to deny all his former Diſcovery, but
" to lay it on Sir Robert Clayton, Sir George Treby, Alderman Corniſh, and Sheriff Bethel,
" as a Subornation of theirs, tho' it was evi" dent that was impoſſible to be true." Pray turn to Mr. Echard's Hiſtory again, p. 631, 632, 633, and compare his Account of Fitz-Harris and his Confeſſion with my Lord of Sarum's, who proceeds, " Yet at the ſame time, when he con-
" feſs'd theſe Things to the Chaplain, he wrote
" Letters to his Wife, which I ſaw and read, in " which he told her how he was practis'd upon
" with hopes of Life. He charg'd her to ſwear falſely againſt none; and yet, before he was led to Execution, he ſign'd a new Paper, containing the former Charge of Subornation, and put it into Hawkins's hand. At Tyburn he referr'd all he had to ſay to that Paper, which was immediately publiſh'd; but the Falſhood of it was ſo very notorious, that tho' it ſhew'd what a ſort of Man Hawkins was, yet he was ſoon after rewarded for this with the Deanery of Chicheſter. But when the Court heard what Letters Fitz-Harris had writ to his Wife, they were confounded." On the contrary, Echard gives us to underſtand, that the World was ſurpris'd at the ſight of Fitz-Harris's Paper, which was the ſubject Matter of Diſcourſe amongſt all People for a conſiderable time after; ſweetly inſinuating, that People believ'd he was ſuborn'd by Sir Robert Clayton, Sir George Treby, &c. whereas we are inform'd by the Biſhop, " The Court ſtifled all further " Diſcourſe about him, and practis'd on Mrs. " Fitz-Harris, by the Promiſe of a Penſion, " ſo far, that ſhe deliver'd up her Husband's " Letters to them; but ſo many had ſeen them " before, that this baſe Practice turn'd much to " the Reproach of all their Proceedings."

P. 504. Made a Dean for it.

Fitz-Harris accus'd the Earl of Danby of being concern'd in the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey; but there was Inconſiſtency in his Evidence. His Wife and her Maid accus'd the Lord Howard of Eſcrick of the Contrivance of the Libel, and he was committed to the Tower the 12th of June. A Bill of Indictment was deliver'd againſt him to the Grand Jury of Edmonton Hundred, who, not ſatisfy'd with the two Womens Evidence, was about to indorſe it with an Ignoramus; but Ward, one of the Clerks of the Crown-Office, ſtole the Bill, for which they immediately deliver'd a Bill of Indictment againſt the ſaid Ward to Offulſton Grand Jury, for his high Miſdemeanor. The latter preſently found it, however, nothing more came of it.

Fitz-Harris being executed on the firſt of July, the Court no longer kept Meaſures with the Conſtitution, and a Scene of Tyranny and Blood was open'd to the Terror and Amazement of the whole Proteſtant World. They had no longer any Reſtraint upon them; They reſolv'd to ſave themſelves by the Deſtruction of all that oppos'd them; and Echard, who opens it, does it with this Flouriſh.

Fitz-Harris's Confeſſions to Hawkins, gave the King a fair Occaſion of ſearching after a new ſort of Plotters. What the Biſhop of Salisbury calls impoſſible, he calls fair. Warrants were iſſu'd out, continues he, againſt ſeveral Offenders, Rouſe, Haynes, White, and one Colledge, commonly call'd the Proteſtant Joyner, and eſpecially the Earl of Shaftesbury, who were all ſent to the Tower, Joyner and Earl, and all, for the greater Wonderment of the Matter. This was done two or three days after Fitz-Harris was hang'd, with whom ſuffer'd Oliver Plunket, the Iriſh Archbiſhop of Armagh. To condemn whom, ſays Echard, the Lord forgive him, ſeveral Witneſſes were encourag'd to come over from Ireland, who now wanting Money, and likewiſe their Pardons, were forc'd to work hard to obtain both, and they were ſoon found to be proper Inſtruments for different kinds of Services; and, true it is, the Court took them into Pay as ſoon as they had done Plunket's Buſineſs. Echard goes on, Tho' the Accuſation look'd Romantick, not to ſay malicious, yet the Witneſſes were ſo perfect, and poſitive, that the Jury found him guilty of High Treaſon, and he was condemn'd and executed. We have obſerv'd that Orleans's lying Libel is uſher'd into the World by the Archdeacon's Recommendation, with his Name to it; that Jeſuit affirms, Archbiſhop Plunket was put to death upon the falſe Imputations of the Enemies to his Religion; and his Recommender affirms, the Witneſſes againſt him were profeſs'd Papiſts. You ſee what Agreement there is among them, and how can it be otherwiſe? Truth only is one, Falſhood multiplies itſelf, and conſequently cannot always be the ſame. To expiate for the Execution of Plunket, the Proteſtant Plot is haſtily brought on the Stage, and Sacrifices ſet apart, to appeaſe the Manes of Whitebread, Fenwick, Ireland, Gavan, Plunket, &c. Martyrs to Idolatry and Tyranny. The Court ſingled out Colledge, ſays Mr. Archdeacon, a pragmatical, ſaucy Fellow, who ſung Songs againſt the King and his beſt Friends, as Scroggs and Jefferies, and North and Rich, and Sawyer and Hawkins. Colledge, 'tis true, had been more buſy in the Proſecution of the Popiſh Plot, than he needed to have been; and it was Puniſhment enough for him that he loſt ſo many Weeks Work by it. But Vengeance being to be taken for the Death of the Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, the Court reſolv'd to make the Experiment on this Man, whom they had devoted to Slaughter, in remembrance of his Zeal againſt the Lord Stafford. A Bill of High Treaſon againſt him was deliver'd to the Grand Jury of London, of which, ſays the reverend and modeſt Hiſtorian, one Wilmore was Foreman. I knew that one Wilmore of his, an honeſt Citizen, Confectioner in Cannon-ſtreet, whoſe Word would have paſt for Money and Evidence, where I queſtion whether the Perſon that inſults him would have had the like Succeſs. He and his Jury were prepar'd for ſuch Attacks, and at once threw out the Bill with an Ignoramus. We ſhall find, by and by, that they had good Reaſon ſo to do. Mr. Wilmore was, out of all courſe of Law, as the compleat Hiſtorian confeſſes, apprehended and examin'd before the Council, Auguſt 16, and ſent to the Tower. He was afterwards forc'd to fly to Holland, and return'd not till after King James was forc'd to fly to France. The Court, to follow their Blow, immediately hurry'd him away to Oxford, where a wicked Jury was indeed prepar'd for ſuch Attack, and very greedily took this poor Man's Blood upon them. Let us ſee who they were, who are to account for it at the grand Tribunal of eternal Judgment.

Is there any Title or Dignity, any Wealth or Revenue, that could make theſe Men eaſy under the Load of the Guilt of this Man's Murder, as the Legiſlature afterwards term'd it? Coke remembers one of the Judges in particular.

Vol. II. P. 103.

"The Chief of theſe was Sir Francis North, a "Man cut out to all Intents and Purpoſes for "ſuch Work; and, as if born to do it, his Fa- "ther was a Committee-Man in all the late "Troubles, againſt King Charles I. and his "Grandfather, one of the Seven who condemn'd "Archbiſhop Laud. 'Tis no matter who were "the other Judges, for North was the Mouth "of the Court." A. D. 1681.

The King's Counſel poſted away after Colledge to Oxford with their Iriſh Witneſſes, to prevail with the Grand Jury to find the Bill; inſomuch that the Bill being found, one of them boaſted at Court of his Service and cunning Management of the Matter. The ſame was done in Fitz Harris's Caſe, thoſe Mercenaries cajoling the Grand Jury for ſome hours in private.

The murdering Judges ſeem'd to act very graciouſly, in allowing the execrable Weſt to be Counſel for Colledge, and Mr. Aaron Smith Solicitor; but then, to prevent his being the better for it, as ſoon as the Bill was found againſt him, they diſpatch'd Muriel the Goaler, and Sewel the Meſſenger, to bring Colledge from the Caſtle to his Trial; and order'd thoſe Villains to take away his Papers from him, containing Minutes of Inſtructions from his Counſellor and Solicitor, which they did, and carry'd Colledge's Papers to the King's Counſel, which Sir John Hawles aſſerts was unjuſtifiable, and the firſt time that ever a Priſoner had the Inſtructions for his Defence taken away from him. Colledge finding his Life ſo beſet, ſaid, It was a horrid Conſpiracy, not only againſt his Life, but againſt all the Proteſtants in England; and Sir John adds, He prov'd a true Prophet. It ſeems there was Matter in his Papers for quaſhing the Indictment; and he hinted ſo much to the Court, as that the Indictment contain'd Crimes of a different Nature, as Treaſon and Miſdemeanor, which Solicitor-General Hawles ſays, ought not to be join'd in one Indictment. He was arraign'd at 12 a-clock, the 17th of Auguſt, and brought to his Trial two hours after; the Charge was for High Treaſon, for conſpiring to ſeize the King, which is evidently in conſequence of Fitz-Harris's pretended Plot, and ſpeaking certain treaſonable Words; for having Libels, Pictures, Silk-Armour, Pocket-Piſtols, Horſe-Piſtols, and a Sword, which Dugdale ſwore. Smith depos'd, that Colledge ſhew'd him the terrible Piſtols, ſaying, Theſe are the Things which will deſtroy the pitiful Guards of old Rowley. One Stephens ſwore to the Picture call'd the Raree-Show in Colledge's Chamber; and Haynes, that he ſaid the City had 100000 Men ready at an hour's Warning; and what is very extraordinary indeed, Mr. Maſters made Oath, that he juſtify'd the Proceedings in 1641, which this King's firſt Parliament juſtify'd. Sir William Jennings did himſelf the honour to bear falſe Witneſs alſo againſt him, that after boxing with one Fitzgerald, who made Colledge's Noſe bleed, he ſaid, He hop'd to ſee a great deal more Blood ſhed for the Cauſe. For the Priſoner, one Hickman witneſs'd, he heard Haynes ſwear, Damn him, he car'd not what he ſwore, nor whom he ſwore againſt, for it was his Trade to get Money by ſwearing. Mrs. Hall depos'd, She heard Haynes own he was employ'd to put a Plot upon the Diſſenters. Low witneſs'd, that he ſaid, The Parliament were a Company of Rogues, for not giving the King Money, but he would help the King to Money enough out of the Phanaticks Eſtates. As to Smith's Evidence, one Blake depos'd, that Smith told him, Haynes's Diſcovery was a Sham-Plot, a Meal-Tub Plot. Belron ſwore, ſwore, That Smith would have had him give Evidence againſt Sir John Brooks, that Sir John ſhould ſay there would be cutting of Throats at Oxford, and that there was a Conſult at Grantham, wherein it was reſolv'd, That it was better to ſeize the King than to let him go: That he would have had him to be a Witneſs againſt Colledge, and told him what he ſhould ſay, that they might not diſagree in their Evidence: That he heard Haynes ſay he knew nothing of a Preſbyterian Plot; but if he were to be an Evidence, he car'd not what he ſwore, but would ſwear any thing to get Money.

Mowbray depos'd, That Smith tempted him to be a Witneſs againſt Colledge, and was inquiſitive to know what Diſcourſe paſs'd betwixt him, my Lord Fairfax, Sir John Hewly, and Mr. Stern on the Road: And now out comes the whole Secret of the pretended Presbyterian Plot. Mowbray ſolemnly ſwore, that Smith ſaid, If the Parliament would not give the King Money, and ſtood on the Bill of Excluſion, it was Pretence enough to ſwear a Deſign to ſeize the King.

Everard ſwore, Smith told him he knew of no Presbyterian Plot, and ſaid Juſtice Warcup, to his eternal Infamy, would have perſuaded him to ſwear againſt ſome Lords a Presbyterian Plot, but he knew of none. Warcup was knighted for this Helliſh Subornation. He ſaid Haynes told him, Neceſſity had put him upon ſwearing contrary to what he had ſworn formerly. Mr. Parkhurſt and Mr. Symons depos'd, They had ſeen Arms at Colledge's in the Time of the laſt Parliament, ſo they could not be purchas'd for ſeizing the King at Oxford; and Yates ſwore Dugdale beſpoke a Piſtol of him, which he promis'd to give Colledge: Whom Yates commending as an honeſt Man, that ſtood up for the King and Government; Yes, ſays Dugdale, I believe he does, and I know nothing to the contrary. Several other Witneſſes gave the like Evidence againſt the forſworn Wretches, whom Sawyer and the King's Counſel had play'd off before. Others bore Teſtimony to Colledge's Honeſty and Conformity, that he was a good Churchman, and never went to a Conventicle that they knew of. Sir John Hawles proves the falſe ſwearing of every one of the Witneſſes againſt Colledge ſtill further than I have done, upbraids the Jury with giving a Verdict againſt their Conſciences, and the unrighteous Judges with commending them for it. Hawles tells us, North acted diſingenuouſly with the Priſoner, that he broke his Word with him in ſumming up the Evidence, that he ſumm'd it up unfairly, that he made a lame Excuſe for not minding the Jury of what Colledge's Witneſſes ſaid, ſaying, he refer'd it to their Memory: whereas, I dare ſay, 'tis Sir John Hawles who ſpeaks it, after about thirteen Hours Evidence, the Jury remember'd no more than that they were to find him guilty. Tho' this Villany, under colour of Juſtice, is not ſtamp'd with the Archdeacon's Authority ſo much as the Injuſtice he pretends was done the Popiſh Conſpirators, yet he can't help abuſing Colledge now he is under Condemnation. "His Execution was defer'd "fourteen Days, till the 31ſt of Auguſt; during "which time, in company he ſeem'd to be very "little concern'd, but often had terrible Agonies "when he was by himſelf," inſinuating the Horrors of a guilty Conſcience. Sir John Hawles tells us, One thing was very diſhoneſtly inſinuated, that he was a Papiſt, which was only to incenſe the Jury againſt him, and it had its effect: Whereas he declar'd at his Death, he died of the Church of England. Hawles gives us this account of it: The true reaſon of ſo long a Reprieve, was to ſee how the Nation would digeſt the matter, and whether the Man by the Terror of Death could be prevail'd upon to do an ill thing to ſave his Life, and become a Tool to deſtroy other Innocents; but when it was found that the People were quiet, and that he was not to be corrupted, his Execution was order'd: yet as a ſhow of Mercy, his Quarters were permitted to be bury'd: a Favour he ſlighted, ſaying, I care not whether I am eaten up by Flies or Worms. A like brave Saying of his was juſt after Sentence, When am I to be executed? Sir John Hawles proceeds, "The ſame favour was ſhewn "to Fitzharris; but the true Reaſon of both "was, that they had a mind that the Trials and "pretended Crimes for which Fitzharris and "Colledge were condemn'd, ſhould be forgotten, "which would not be ſo ſoon done, if their "Quarters were always expos'd to view. But "tho' all People were quiet, yet there was "great grumbling, and moſt honeſt Men were "afraid; and the Conſtancy of Colledge at his Execution was ſuch, that it made the moſt violent againſt him relent." Echard, who had the Confidence to dedicate his Book to his late Majeſty, terms the unjuſt Execution of this honeſt Man, ſo prov'd to be at his Trial, a juſt Judgment of Almighty God upon him, for his endeavouring to bring the Lord Stafford to Juſtice. And now, continues he, the King ſeem'd to enjoy himſelf more than in ſome Years before, by being daily complemented with ſeveral Spits in the Mouth, as Lord Halliſax call'd the Addreſſes, flowing in, cries the Archdeacon, from all Parts of his Kingdom, from Attorneys, Tapſters, Bailiffs, Curates, Militia Men, and the like Fry, as is ſhewn at large in the before-mention'd Impartial Account of theſe Addreſſes.

Now alſo was Dr. Oates turn'd out of Whitehall, and his Penſion taken from him. An Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion was granted to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of London, the Lord Halliſax, the Lord Hyde, and Mr. Edward Seymour, to diſpoſe of all Church Preferments, which belong'd to the King's immediate Patronage. And about ten Days after Colledge was hang'd, his Majeſty went to Newmarket, where he was ſoon attended by a numerous and ſolemn Appearance of the Univerſity of Cambridge, I take it from Mr. Archdeacon, at the head of which was the Vice-Chancellor Dr. Gower, Maſter of St. John's-College, who made a Speech to him; which being extreamly academical, I leave where I found it in his Hiſtory, and ſhall only inſert ſome of the Beaux Endroits in it: That the ſeditious Endeavours of unreaſonable Men had made it neceſſary to aſſert the antient Loyalty of the Engliſh Nation, and make the World ſenſible, that they, the Doctors, Maſters, and Scholars of Cambridge, do not degenerate from thoſe prime Glories of their Anceſtors, Love and Allegiance to our Prince, be what he will, and who he will. He then tells the King, that if it had not been for God's Providence, and his Majeſty's royal Care, in ſo ſeaſonably checking the arbitrary and inſolent Undertakings of factious and malicious Men, they would not have been content to vent the Venom of their Reproaches againſt thoſe good Univerſity Men, but would have plunder'd and ſequeſter'd them, would have violated their Chapels, rifled their Libraries, and empty'd their Colleges, as they did once. Then he tells his Majeſty what they will believe and maintain; which was, that when his Brother the Duke of York came to be King, He would not derive his Title from the People, but from God; that to God only he would be accountable, that it belongs not to Subjects either to create or cenſure, but to honour and obey their Sovereign. Then comes ſome ſome of that ſtaring Nonſenſe which endeavours to reconcile the Unalterable with the Revolutional Right, the Hereditary Right and the Abdication Right. Again, who comes to be our Sovereign by a fundamental hereditary Right of Succeſſion, which no Religion, no Law, no Fault or Forfeiture can alter or diminiſh. He ſaid a Truth after it, which makes ſome Atonement for this Falſhood: We bring no Names and Seals, no Lives and Fortunes, which are at all worth your Majeſty's acceptance. The King in anſwer to this Lofty Speech, ſaid, He would conſtantly own the Church of England. Did he not make his Word good by dying a Papiſt? Be aſſur'd of this, (ſays he,) for I will be as good as my word. On the 20th of September the King and Queen went to Cambridge; the Univerſity Orator Mr. Billers ſpoke in Latin to the King, who always ſpoke and wrote in Engliſh; but to the Queen in Engliſh, as ſuppoſing ſhe did not underſtand Latin, tho' ſhe never pray'd to God in any other Language. They preſented the King with a Proteſtant Bible. They might as decently have given it to the Dutcheſs of Cleveland, and the Queen with Dugdale's View of the late Troubles of England; a Preſent I ſhould not think too good for Mr. Archdeacon himſelf, if he would pleaſe to accept of it. He is very copious in his Deſcription of the Entertainment of the Royal Pair, and tells us it reſounded thro' the whole Kingdom. The judicious and learned Lawyer Mr. Acherley explains to us, the virtuous Motives that produc'd this Harangue from the Vice Chancellor of Cambridge.

" The Popiſh Cabal contriv'd and provided " Schemes for the Duke, to impoveriſh and in- " timidate all Oppoſers of his Intereſt. Some " of them were; To encourage and prefer ſuch of " the Clergy as would preach, and ſuch Writers
P. 604, 605. " as would enforce the Doctrines of Paſſive Obe- " dience without Reſerve, and unlimited Non- " Reſiſtance; which Preachers carried the Point " further, and in Imitation of the Preachers in Clergy preach againſt Liberty and Property. " the Reign of King Charles I. they made the " Pulpit a Bar, at which to plead againſt the " Liberty and Property of the Subject.

" To encourage ſatirical and fiery Writers to " feed, and even glut the World with printed " Papers, wherein were blacken'd the Principles " of thoſe Gentlemen, who in the Year 1640, " and 1641, found means to reſcue the Conſti- " tution and the National Freedom from Arbi- " trary Power, as the moſt profligate and deteſt- " able Tenets in nature."

Gower's Speech is the very Eſſence of theſe dangerous and deteſted Schemes. The Conſpiracy to take off the chief Proteſtant Lords and Gentlemen, being check'd by the honeſt Proceedings of the Sheriffs, the Court reſolv'd to uſe all their Arts and Strength to get the City of London into their hands, that ſuch Juries might be pack'd as had no reſtraint of Conſcience upon them, and whoſe Hearts were harden'd to go thro' the greateſt Butcheries without Remorſe. The ſober Part of the City would have ſet aſide Sir John Moor, an old canting Fanatick of ſo weak Parts, that even Jenkins could wheedle him out of his Religion and Principles; but he being the next Alderman to the Chair, and ſeveral Diſſenting Miniſters being ſo far impos'd upon by his hypocritical Pretences, as to get Votes for him in their Congregations, he had the Majority of Sir John Shorter, and Moor was ſo ſharpen'd by Oppoſition, that he abandon'd himſelf his former Religion and Principles to the Popiſh Faction. He began his betraying of the Cauſe of his Country with drinking to one Dudley North, a Merchant, Brother to the Chief Juſtice, to entitle him to be Sheriff, which occaſion'd a great Diſorder in the City, as will be ſeen in the Sequel; but as yet the Shrievalty was in good hands, and when a Bill of Indictment of High Treaſon was preferr'd againſt the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Court found they had precipitated the Matter, and that there was not a ſeaſonable Jury ready for them. That Lord, then call'd the Proteſtant Earl, was ſent to the Tower in July, and there continu'd till the 24th of November; and had every thing to fear from the implacable Malice, and the mercileſs Rage of his wicked Enemies, who had brib'd perjur'd Villains to ſwear Colledge out of his Life, and were now employing them in the like diabolical Work to ſwear the Earl of Shaftesbury out of his. The Biſhop of Salisbury ſays of the Miniſtry and Judges at this time, The Court intended to ſet the Witneſſes to ſwear againſt the Proteſtant Party, which was plainly MURDER in them, who believ'd them falſe Witneſſes, and yet made uſe of them to deſtroy others. Mr. Archdeacon vouches for them that they were true Witneſſes, and that the not believing them rous'd the Indignation, and rais'd the higheſt Reſentments of the greateſt P. 645. Part of the Nation. He could not have ſaid it without want of Senſe as well as Integrity. The Grand Jury impannel'd on this occaſion were Gentlemen of ſuch Note and Worth, that at the Names of them a whole Hoſt of his Abhorrers and Addreſſers vaniſh like Goblins at the Dawn of Day.

Iriſh Evidence.

How ſtupid as well as wicked muſt the Proſecutors be to bring ſuch Witneſſes as Dennis Macnamarra, Bernard Dennis, John Macnamarra, Edward Ivey, &c. before ſuch a Jury as this, Men of great Parts, great Virtue and Fortune, who could not but abhor the Evidence, and deteſt or deſpiſe the Proſecutors? If the Earl of Shaftesbury's Throat had been cut, as it is ſuſpected the Earl of Eſſex's was, it had been a Complement to Juſtice; but to attempt to murder a Man by forms of Law, and the Teſtimonies of perjur'd Criminals, was an Affront to it, which we ſhall hardly meet with in the worſt of Times, if ever there were worſe than theſe, the Reigns we are writing of, of which Coke ſays, and it is one of the beſt things he ever ſaid, For near eighty Years theſe three Kings of the Scottiſh Race had been P. 312. endeavouring to eſtabliſh an arbitrary tyrannical Government. Charles the Firſt exceeded his Father, and Charles II. imitates his; for as Charles I. did his illegal Acts by ſuch Judges as he could get, ſo Charles II. in the Executions of Fitzharris and Colledge, would have the colour of Juſtice by form of Law, for which there was no Law; This plainly leaves the Blood of thoſe Sacrifices on the Heads of the Court, the Judges, the Juries: Upon which the righteous Vengeance of Heaven has been, and will be pour'd to the third and fourth Generation.

Bad Reigns.

The Biſhop of Salisbury gives this Account of the Proceedings againſt the Earl of Shaftesbury:

" His

A. D. 1681.

" His Papers were ſeiz'd and ſearch'd; nothing " material was found among them, but a " Draught of an Aſſociation, which was neither " writ nor mark'd in any place with his hand." Echard avers there was ſomething material found beſides the Aſſociation, and that was a Book of the ſeveral Counties of England, rang'd in Alphabet, under the Heads of Worthy Men on the one ſide, and Men Worthy on the other. I leave it to the Reader to gueſs on which ſide his Lordſhip would have rang'd Mr. Archdeacon, who would have had this and the Aſſociation tack'd together to make High Treaſon of it. For he continues, It appear'd afterwards that under the Cypher of Men worthy was couch'd the Conceit of Men worthy to be hang'd; for which he would have had the Jury hang up the Earl of Shafteſbury. My Lord of Sarum tells us how the Earl came by this Aſſociation, and if ſo, there was nothing but the Alphabet left to hang him.

How the Earl came by the Aſſociation.

" When there was a Talk of an Aſſociation, as " there was in Parliament ſome Months before, " ſome had fram'd this Paper, and brought it to " him, of which he always profeſs'd, that he re" member'd nothing at all: So it is probable, " that, as is ordinary when any great Buſineſs is " before the Parliament, that zealous Men are at " the Doors with their ſeveral Draughts; this " was one of theſe, caſt careleſly by, and not " thought on by him, when he had ſent his more " valuable Papers out of the way. There was " likewiſe but one Witneſs that could ſwear to " its being found there. The Witneſſes againſt " the Earl were examin'd in open Court, con" trary to the uſual Cuſtom; they ſwore many " incredible things: The Draught of the Aſſocia" tion was alſo brought as a Proof of his Trea" ſon, tho' it was not laid in the Indictment, and " was prov'd only by one Witneſs." So the Jury return'd Ignoramus on the Bill, and the Sollicitors and Witneſſes would have had their Brains beaten out, had not the Proteſtant Sheriffs protected them, and been their Guard as far as the Savoy. Sir John Hawles gives many Reaſons, Arguments and Authorities to juſtify thoſe worthy Gentlemen in their juſt Verdict, to which I refer, and ſhall only repeat what my Lord of Sarum writes on this occaſion. " There was all " this Summer ſtrange practiſing with Witneſſes " to find more Matter againſt the Earl of Shafteſ" bury. Wilkinſon, a Priſoner for Debt, who " had been often with him, was dealt with to " accuſe him. The Court had found out two " Sollicitors to manage ſuch Matters, Burton and " Graham, who were indeed fitter Men to have " ſerv'd in a Court of Inquiſition, than in a legal " Government. It was known that Lord Shafteſ" bury was apt to talk very freely, and without " Diſcretion; ſo the two Sollicitors ſought out " all that had frequented his Company, and " tried what they could draw from them, and " they made great Promiſes to ſuch as by ſwear" ing boldly would deſerve them. In all this P. 507. " foul dealing the King himſelf was believ'd to " be the chief Director, and Lord Halliſax was " thought deep in it." Wilkinſon abovemention'd was tamper'd with, not only by the Lord P. 311. Conway Secretary of State, but Coke ſays by the King himſelf, by the Lord Chancellor, the Chief Juſtice Pemberton, and other Court Lords; and Wilkinſon having been promis'd Advancement, if he would ſwear againſt the Earl of Shafteſbury, he refus'd it, as having nothing to ſwear; the Lord Chancellor ſaid, There are two Sorts of Advancements, and you are like to come to your Trial before the Lord Shaftesbury: for which, no doubt he has been rewarded according to his Works.

Clear'd by an Ignoramus.

Burton and Graham great Villains.

The Court having given the Word for it, the Addreſſers, a very ragged Regiment, box'd about Ignoramus Juries and Aſſociations, in variety of dull, fulſome and inſolent Papers, which being below Contempt, cannot be worthy Remembrance. A. D. 1681.

Four Days after the Ignoramus Verdict, the Earl of Shaftesbury was bail'd out of the Tower, his Bail being the Lord Ruſſel, Mr. Montagu, afterwards Duke, Sir William Cowper, Father of the late Lord Chancellor Cowper, and Mr. Charlton. The Lord Howard of Eſcrick was alſo then bail'd, and the Court was ſo afraid of Rejoicings, that the Lord Mayor was order'd to take eſpecial Care that there ſhould be no Bonfires. However, the good People ſhew'd their Affection to the Earl and the Proteſtant Cauſe, by a Medal which was ſtruck, and on which Echard aſſures us Mr. Dryden made a very ingenious Poem; but as he's no better a Critick than he is an Hiſtorian, the Reader will not be miſled by his Judgment.

A. D. 1682.

THE Duke of York, who governs all, is made High Commiſſioner of Scotland, ſays Coke, where at this time he is contriving the Deſtruction of the noble Earl of Argyle, whilſt his Brother is doing that of my Lord Shaftesbury, and both act their Parts under the Veil of ſacred Juſtice; in which, ſays he, the Duke ſeems more ſucceſsful than his Brother. He refers to the intended Murder of my Lord Argyle, which is with him Succeſs; and the two Brothers will indeed be thus ſucceſsful till the Nation gets rid of them by Death and Abdication.

Scotland. P. 308.

The Duke had ſome Excuſe for exerciſing the Cruelty of his Nature by the raſh and frantick Proceedings of ſome enthuſiaſtick Cameronians, who inſiſted upon it, that the King by breaking the Covenant which he had thrice ſolemnly ſworn, had forfeited his Right to the Crown, which they were ſo bold as to declare in a Paper fix'd to the Croſs at Dumfries. The Guards were immediately hurry'd away to fall on theſe crazy Creatures, the Chief of whom was one Cameron, a Teacher among them, from whom they took their Name; and he making a vigorous Reſiſtance was kill'd. Two others of their Teachers and Chiefs, Cargil and Hackſtone, were taken. Hackſtone, when brought before the Council, would not own their Authority, nor make any Anſwer to their Queſtions; he was ſo low by reaſon of his Wounds, that it was thought he would die in the Queſtion, if tortur'd, ſo he was in a very ſummary way condemn'd to have both his Hands cut off, and then to be hang'd, which he ſuffer'd with a Conſtancy that amazed all People. He ſeem'd to be all the while in an Extaſy, and inſenſible of what was done to him. When his Hands were cut off, he ask'd like one unconcern'd, if his Feet muſt be cut off too? And he had ſo ſtrong a Heart, that notwithſtanding all the Loſs of Blood by his Wounds, and the cutting off his Hands; yet when he was hang'd up and his Heart cut out, it continu'd to palpitate for ſome time after it was on the Hangman's Knife. Cargil, and many others, Women as well as Men, were executed; and all ſuffer'd with ſo particular an Obſtinacy, that tho' the Duke of York ſent them the Offer of Pardon, if they would only ſay, God bleſs the King, they refus'd it with a kind of Scorn. One of the Women ſaid very calmly, I am ſure God will not bleſs him, and therefore I will not take God's Name in vain Another ſaid more ſullenly, I will not worſhip that Idol, nor acknowledge any other King but Chriſt; which ſhe muſt be ſuppoſed to ſay, on the ſcore of the King's pretended Forfeiture by the Breach of his Oath.

On the 28th of July laſt the Duke held a Parliament, and paſt an Act for the Security of the Proteſtant Religion. Echard is ſo very weak as to mention this ſeriouſly, tho Biſhop Burnet informs us, that it was not intended that this new Confirmation of old Statutes againſt Popery ſhould have any Effect. The next Act was for the unalterable Succeſſion of the Crown, which was only oppos'd by the Earl of Tweedale, and that not with reſpect to the Duke, but to the Queen of Spain, the King and Duke's Niece.

A Member of this Parliament accus'd the Lord Halton, Lauderdale's Brother, of Perjury, on account of Mitchel's Buſineſs before mention'd. Halton ſwore there was no Promiſe of Life made; Mitchel, and his Letters to Lord Kincardin then produc'd, prov'd that there was; but the Duke of York ſtifled the Proſecution. The ſame he did concerning a Conſpiracy againſt Lord Bargeny's Life, Witneſſes being ſuborn'd, as he could very plainly prove, to ſwear he was in the Bothwell-Bridge Buſineſs, tho he had many Proofs to the contrary, and no body believ'd he knew of it; but this alſo the Duke ſtifled, notwithſtanding Bargeny was Nephew to Duke Hamilton.

The Teſt Act.

The Teſt Act, which was brought into this Scots Parliament, was more rigid, and more exalted the Prerogative above the Laws, than the baffled Teſt in 1675 in England, and the Sermons and Addreſſes of the Popiſh Faction in that Kingdom did. The Account given of the Lord Argyle's ſuffering for it, is ſo falſe in Mr. Archdeacon's Hiſtory, that one would think he invented it, on purpoſe to exaſperate the whole Britiſh Nation againſt the moſt noble Houſe of Argyle, who have done and ſuffer'd as much for the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty, as any other honourable Family whatſoever in Great Britain. My Lord Argyle's main Objection to this vile Teſt, was the obligatory Part, not to endeavour any Alteration in the Government in Church and State. The Biſhops were very zealous for the paſſing of this Teſt; but ſeveral weighty Reaſons were given againſt it, as had been urg'd in the Parliament of England; however, it paſs'd, and the Earl of Argyle being requir'd to take it, did it with this Explanation, That he did not intend to bind himſelf up by it from doing any thing in his Station, for the amending of any thing in Church or State, ſo far as was conſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion, and the Duty of a good Subject; and he took that as a part of his Oath. Having ſaid this, he ſate down at the Council-Table, and went next day to the Treaſury-Chamber, where he was a Commiſſioner, and repeated the ſame Words. Some Enemies of his, and of his Religion and Principles, ſuggeſted to the Duke of York, who was very ſuſceptible of ſuch Suggeſtions, that great Advantage might be taken againſt him from thoſe Words; ſo at the Treaſury-Chamber he was deſir'd to write them down, and give them to the Clerk, which he did, and was immediately ſent Priſoner to Edinburgh Caſtle. The Reader has the full ſtate of the Caſe before him, and when he has ſeen how it is miſrepreſented by Dr. Sprat and Mr. Echard, he will have pity on them, if he has any Chriſtian Charity.

The Earl of Argyle explains the Teſt, and is impriſon'd.

Echard begins his Abuſe, with ſaying the Earl had, by many indirect Ways, attempted to hinder his Majeſty's Service. This is ſo falſe, that Biſhop Burnet aſſures us, Lord Argyle was of the Duke of Lauderdale's Party, of whom the King ſaid, that whatever Lauderdale had done againſt the Scots, it was all for his Service, as has been obſerv'd already. The next Falſity is, that Argyle himſelf put the very Clauſe into the Teſt, againſt which himſelf excepted; if he ſtole this from Sprat, one may have from thence an Idea of the Falſities in that Doctor's Hiſtory of the Rye-Houſe Plot. The two Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians add, The Earl travell'd about the Country, to inſinuate Prejudices againſt the Teſt, and diſpers'd his Explanation. Now 'tis evident that he had no time to do it, he writ it down in the Treaſury-Chamber, and was immediately clapt up in Priſon. The two reverend Hiſtorians, Dr. Sprat Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Mr. Echard Archdeacon of Stow, aſſert, That his Trial was according to the Laws of his Country; that it was full and equal; that he was found guilty of Treaſon by the Judges, and a Jury, not only of his Peers, but alſo ſeveral of them his own neareſt Relations. That ſoon after Judgment, tho' the King had no thought of taking his Life, yet he took the firſt Opportunity to make his Eſcape, not daring to venture on the King's Mercy; which will be found to be every Word falſe, by comparing it with what my Lord Biſhop of Sarum writes upon it: "Lockhart "pleaded three hours for him, and ſhew'd ſo "manifeſtly, that his Words had no ſort of Cri- "minouſneſs, much leſs of Treaſon in them, "that if his Cauſe had not been judged before "his Trial, no harm could have come to him." You remember Echard aſſerted the Trial to be fair and equal. The Biſhop again: "The "Court that was to judge the Point of Law, "conſiſted of a Juſtice General, the Juſtice "Clerk, and of five Judges. The Juſtice Ge- "neral does not vote, unleſs the Court is equal- "ly divided. One of the Judges was deaf, and "ſo old, that he could not fit all the while the "Trial laſted, but went home, and to Bed; the "other four were equally divided, ſo that the "old Judge was ſent for, and he turn'd it a- "gainſt Lord Argyle. The Jury was only to "find the Fact prov'd; but yet they were of- "ficious, and found it Treaſon. No Sentence "in our Age was more univerſally cry'd out on "than this. All People ſpoke of it, and of the "Duke that drove it on, with Horror." Now Sprat and Echard affirm it was a fair and equal Trial, and ſpeak of it, and of the Duke that drove it on, with infinite delight, and would make us believe there was no harm intended againſt him; but he was ſo guilty, that he durſt not truſt to the King's MERCY, but made his Eſcape. Biſhop Burnet ſpeaks quite otherwiſe; "Lord Argyle was made believe that the "Duke intended to proceed to Execution. Some "more of the Guards were order'd to come to "Edinburgh. Rooms were alſo fitted for him "in the common Goal, to which Peers uſe to "be remov'd a few days before their Execution. "And a Perſon of Quality affirm'd to him, on "his Honour, that he heard one, who was in "great Favour, ſay to the Duke, It muſt be "done. It is certain many of the Scottiſh No- "bility did believe it was intended he ſhould "die, and upon theſe Reaſons Lord Argyle "made his Eſcape. This buſineſs made the "Duke look'd upon as one that would prove a "terrible Maſter when All ſhould come into "his hands." You have heard how ſucceſsful the Duke was in Scotland, and muſt now hear a little more of it from my Lord of Sarum; "He had promis'd to redreſs all the Merchants "Grievances, with relation to Trade, to gain "their Concurrence in Parliament; but as ſoon "as that was over, all his Promiſes were for- "gotten; the Accuſations of Perjury were "ſtifled by him; and all the Complaints of the "great " great Abuſe Lord Halton was guilty of in the " Employments of the Coin, ended in turning " him out, and obliging him to compound for " his Pardon, by paying 20000 Pounds to two " of the Duke's Creatures; ſo that all the Re- " paration the Kingdom had for the Oppreſſion " of ſo many Years, and ſo many Acts of In- " juſtice, was, that two new Oppreſſors had a " ſhare of the Spoils, who went into the ſame " Track, or rather invented new Methods of " Oppreſſion. The Biſhops made their Court " to the Duke with ſo much Zeal, that they " wrote a Letter to the Archbiſhop of Canter- " bury, to be communicated to the reſt of the " Engliſh Biſhops, ſetting forth, in a very high " Strain, his Affection to the Church." Nay, ſo very high was the Strain, that the Duke of York, as much as he had been us'd to Flattery from thoſe Men, could not but deſpiſe it, 'twas ſo abject and indecent. He made Gordon, now Earl of Aberdeen, Chancellor, and Queensberry Lord Treaſurer; and having Leave given him to come to Court, he waited on the King at Newmarket, March 3d, and obtain'd the King's Permiſſion to live again at Court; but having left his Dutcheſs in Scotland big with Child, he return'd thither again in May. The Glouceſter Frigat that carry'd him, ſtruck on a Bank of Sand; the Duke got into a Boat, and, as we read in Biſhop Burnet's Hiſtory, took care of his Dogs and ſome unknown Perſons, who were taken from that earneſt Care of his to be his Prieſts. The Long-Boat went off with very few in her, tho' ſhe might have carry'd off above 80 more than ſhe did. One hundred and fifty Perſons periſh'd, ſome of them Men of great Quality: But the Duke took no notice of this cruel Neglect, which was laid chiefly to Legg's Charge. The Biſhop has been very much vilify'd for telling this Story by the Popiſh Faction and their Abettors, one of whom, Zachary Gray, charg'd him with Falſhood in it at the ſame time that himſelf publiſh'd a Libel full of the moſt impudent Falſhoods. I have ſince met with a further Proof of that cruel Neglect, I had it from a Man of Honour, who had it from one Flower, a Muſician, the only Man of the Duke's Band that could play on the Lute. He was one of thoſe whom the Duke left in the Ship, and jumping into the Sea, he ſwam after the Long-Boat; he ſunk twice, and when he roſe the third time, caught hold of a piece of the Wreck, which drove towards the Long-Boat; when he came near it, the Boat's Crew were going to knock him on the head, but the Duke cry'd out, Hold, take him in, he's a Fidler. However, he afterwards turn'd him out of his Band, becauſe he would not turn Papiſt. He was receiv'd into the Family of the Gentleman, from whom I receiv'd my Information, and declar'd to him, That the Duke of York took only his Dogs and his Prieſts aboard the Pinnace. Flower was reſtor'd to his Place after the Revolution.

The Duke in danger at Sea.

Ireland.

The Kingdom of Ireland liv'd in great Tranquillity under the Duke of Ormond, who began to be ſenſible of the King and the Duke's Intention to change the Government in Church and State, and ſet up Popery and Arbitrary Power. He was extreamly ſolicitous to ſettle the Militia of Ireland, and order'd their Watching equal with the Army. By his good Adminiſtration, the Engliſh Intereſt in Ireland became of greater Value than ever, inſomuch that an Iriſh Lord ſwore, He believ'd Jeſus Chriſt was a Proteſtant, for that nothing proſper'd on the ſide of the Catholicks, who, however, gave not over their Intrigues. Sheridan was with the Duke in Scotland, from whence he wrote over private Encouragement to the Popiſh Party, and kept them ſtill in heart. The Duke of Ormond endeavour'd to have a Parliament in Ireland, and ſucceeded ſo far, as to obtain a Grant, in purſuance of which, a Bill drawn by the Lord Lieutenant and Council, was ſent over to England: But the Duke of York's Intereſt obſtructed it, and 'tis ſuppos'd his firſt Journey from Scotland was to put a ſtop to the Duke of Ormond's Deſign; and the Iriſh were ſo confident he would do it before it was done, that they ſtuck not to affirm, they were well aſſur'd there would be no Parliament whilſt King Charles liv'd. Nay, they would frequently diſcourſe with that Liberty and Boldneſs, as if the Duke of York had been actually ſeated on the Throne, upon a preſumption he would ſpeedily aſcend it. Thus we ſee that the three Kingdoms were in the Duke's hands, ſome Years before the Scepter was his by the Death of his Brother, till when, and during his own dreaded Reign, the Proteſtants of England, Scotland and Ireland groan'd under the moſt intolerable Tyranny; the Inſtruments he made uſe of, being the moſt inſolent as well as the moſt infamous that could be pick'd out among the three Nations. Ireland had continu'd for two or three Years in much quiet, before and after the Duke went to Scotland, when, on a ſudden, a Stratagem was ſet on foot, laid as deep as Hell, ſays my Author, and yet ſeemingly for the Advantage of the Engliſh. In the Settlement of Ireland there were overplus or conceal'd Lands, ſaid to be in poſſeſſion of divers of the Engliſh, but in truth, much more in that of the Iriſh. Now to inſure the Titles of the Engliſh from future Diſcoveries, as was pretended, a Court of Grace was erected, where all that would come, had the Opportunity of putting in their Claims; and upon proving their Poſſeſſion, and compounding with the Commiſſioners for Payment of ſuch a Sum as they thought fit to impoſe upon them, they had new Patents granted them. This Policy had its intended Effect, many Perſons came in, and conſiderable Sums were rais'd: But this Court was ſoon found out to be a Snare to the Engliſh; the Deſign being to make a narrow Inſpection into all Mens Titles, and thereby diſcover what Advantage might be deriv'd from it. For by the Act of Settlement, all the forfeited Lands in Ireland were only veſted in the King, as a Truſtee, for the uſe of the Soldiers and Adventurers, and could be no way diſpos'd of, but according to the Intent of that Act; and the King's Patent could not alter it, as was pretended to be done by this Court of Grace, which was ſet up by the Duke of York's Intereſt, contrary to Law, and therefore his Faction did not appear in it openly, but tranſacted it by the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, who got a great deal of Money out of it by Fines.

Duke of York governs all.

The main Agent in it was one W——th, who, ſome time before bought a Judge's Place in the Exchequer for 800 Pounds. He call'd himſelf a Proteſtant; and to make this Poiſon go down the more eaſy, the Pill was gilded. Moſt of the Judges were made Commiſſioners, and had part of the Fines. The Lawyers and Attorneys got Money by the Court, and purchas'd Eſtates, to the ruin of the former Poſſeſſors. My Author adds, " In ſeveral Deſigns of the Papiſts, they " acted by Proteſtant Tools. No Man was to " paſs a Patent for Fair, Market, Mannor, &c. " without paſſing his Eſtate thro' this Court; " whereas by the Act of Settlement, all Per- " ſons had liberty, for the Improvement of the " Country, to paſs Patents for them, provided " they were not within three Miles one of an- " other. A ſad thing, continues he, that Eng-

" liſhmen and Proteſtants ſhould, by baſe and " unworthy Compliances, become ſuch ſervile " Inſtruments to the Advancement of the Po- " piſh Cauſe."

The Duke of Ormond perceiving, by the Tendency of theſe Affairs, that the Romiſh Deſign was agitated with great Earneſtneſs, he with much difficulty obtain'd leave to go for England in 1683. He left his Son the Earl of Arran Lord Deputy. Upon his Arrival at Court, he a ſecond time attempts a Parliament, but ineffectually; upon which he return'd to Ireland with a heavy Heart, as he himſelf declar'd to a Perſon of great Quality in that Kingdom. He had Inſtructions to regiment the Army, and to do ſome other things that were Preparatives to what follow'd ſoon after the Duke of York's Acceſſion to the Crown.

The Difficulties the Court of England met with, in taking off Proteſtant Lords and Gentlemen by Forms of Law, while there were honeſt Sheriffs and Juries, made them undertake the greateſt Invaſion of the People's Rights that ever had been heard of ſince the great Charter was ſign'd at Runimead. Echard is ſo ſimple as to own the King's Deſign, by bringing Quo Warranto's againſt the Charter of London, and the Charters of other Cities and corporate Towns all over the Kingdom. He reſolv'd to find Expedients againſt the London Juries, and to alter the Methods of electing Sheriffs. Till that was done, the Courſe of Juſtice was regular; but as ſoon as the Court had got Sheriffs and Juries to their mind, they ſet their Judges to work, who with ready Hand prepar'd the Knife to murder the noble Sacrifices which they offer'd to the Manes of the Popiſh Traytors, who were executed for the Popiſh Plot.

One Cradock, a pragmatical Mercer in Paternoſter-Row, was ſu'd in an Action of Scandalum Magnatum by the Earl of Shaftesbury; but the Judges refus'd to try the Cauſe by a London Jury, tho 'twas laid in London, and the Earl was not willing to truſt it to a pack'd Country Jury, ſuch as that of Kent, who found Mr. Wilmore, Foreman of Colledge's Ignoramus Jury, guilty of Kidnapping a Boy to Jamaica, without going from the Bar, ſays Echard; and adds, So much Difference there was between a Country and City Jury, between thoſe wealthy and worthy Citizens, who gave an Ignoramus to Lord Shaftesbury's Indictment, and a Parcel of Kentiſh Clowns, cull'd out of that County to do this Job for the Miniſtry. Echard had ſeen, or might have ſeen, what Sir John Hawles ſays of the impudent Injuſtice and Illegality of the Proceſs againſt Mr. Wilmore; and yet he beſtows ſuch Eulogy on the Yeomen of Kent, for finding him guilty about the End of May. He informs us the Judges reprimanded the Sheriffs for not returning the Writ de Homine Replegiando brought againſt Wilmore Elongatus eſt. Sir John Hawles, who knew more Law than all thoſe Mercenaries, ſays, the Sheriffs would have return'd on the Writ, that the Boy went abroad by his own Agreement and Conſent with Mr. Wilmore; and the Judges ſaid, if they did not return replegiando, they would lay the two Sheriffs by the Heels: and as to the Withernam the reverend Author mentions, probably without knowing what it means, Sir John tells us, It was not Law, and that Mr. Wilmore and the Nation had great Injuſtice done them; for it was quickly ſeen what the Miſchief of that Judgment was, and therefore it was endeavour'd to be reform'd by an Act of King and Council afterwards. I ſay firſt, it is lawful for a Maſter to covenant with a Servant to ſerve him beyond Sea. In the next place, it is lawful for a Maſter to ſend a Servant beyond Sea, according to ſuch Agreement; which he very learnedly proves to be according to Law, and adds, It is not an Argument for diſallowing the Sheriffs firſt Return, that the Perſon ſent beyond Sea was a Child not capable of making ſuch a Contract, tho' I believe if the matter were look'd into, he was of age ſo to do. Notwithſtanding all this found Law, and much more of it in Hawles's Remarks, does the Archdeacon intimate, Wilmore had been indicted in the City for the ſaid Crime of Boy-ſtealing; mark the Malice and Virulence! But the Grand-Jury there found the Bill Ignoramus; for which, and for clearing Mr. Harris the Bookſeller, whom the Court caus'd to be indicted for publiſhing a Treatiſe againſt Popery and Arbitrary Power, which Echard terms a ſcandalous Libel, he ſets forth the Neceſſity of the King's taking away Charters. But Sir John Hawles gives us the true Reaſon for it; which, if he lives to read, I am ſo tender to him, as to hope it will be with Shame and Confuſion, he having pleaded the Neceſſity and Juſtice of ſeizing the Rights and Privileges of Engliſhmen founded on theſe Charters. " Notwithſtanding all theſe Hard- " ſhips on Juries, ſays Sir John, the Court ſaw " plainly it was impoſſible to procure any Bills " of Indictment for High Treaſon, much leſs " any Perſon to be convicted on the like Evi- " dence, except in London, where are ſome of " the beſt, as well as the worſt Men in the Na- " tion; and even there it was not to be done, as " long as the Juries were ſenſible and honeſt " Men." Don't you remember how Mr. Archdeacon boaſted of the Difference between Kentiſh Men and Citizens of London? " And that " would be as long as the Election of Sheriffs " was in the Citizens; and to the honour of the " City it was ſeen, that they choſe only honeſt " Men to be Sheriffs, and that when they ſaw " the publick Safety depend on honeſt Officers, " tho' at other times they had rather pay a Fine " than undergo the Charges and Trouble of " that Office; yet at that time no Man legally " choſen refus'd to ſtand, tho' they were re- " proach'd and puniſh'd for it: and if Mr. Box " refus'd, it was becauſe he would not join with " North, who was impos'd upon the City; for " which reaſon, it was reſolv'd to take from the " City the Right of chuſing Sheriffs."

Mr. Wilmore's Caſe.

The Court could not help ſhewing their diſlike to the Choice laſt Year, when, as Sir John Hawles informs us, honeſt Men were choſen, inſomuch that Sir George Treby the Recorder, and the two Sheriffs, Mr. Pilkington and Mr. Shute, being ſent to invite the King to Dinner laſt Lord Mayor's Day, his Majeſty deſcended ſo low from his Imperial Character, as to ſay, Mr. Recorder, an Invitation from my Lord Mayor and the City is very acceptable to me; and to ſhew that it is ſo, notwithſtanding that it is brought me by Meſſengers that are ſo unwelcome to me as theſe two Sheriffs are, I accept it. If a private Gentleman had ſaid as much to other Gentlemen, coming with ſuch an Invitation, in his own Houſe, I queſtion whether well-bred People would not have taken it to be an Offence to Good-Manners.

I have but little Room or Inclination to dwell on ſmall Events, which are more Biographical than Hiſtorical; but I think I muſt remember, after the Compleat Hiſtorian, that his Majeſty made a Knight of John Knight Eſq; one of the Sheriffs of Briſtol, for his adherence to the Church, and of George Vernon Eſq; of Farnham. That he gave ſome Bucks to the London Prentices, who did alſo adhere to the Church, and iſſu'd an

A. D. 1682. an Order againſt a Dinner in the City, on account of certain Tickets given out by ſome Citizens that adher'd to the Conſtitution: That George Legg Eſq; Maſter of the Ordnance, was ſworn of the Privy-Council; and Sir Samuel Morland had the Benefit of an Engine, which, with the Strength of eight Men, would force the Water in a continual Stream, at the rate of above 60 Barrels an Hour, from the River of Thames to the top of Windſor-Caſtle, for which his Majeſty gave him a Medal with his own Royal Hand, and order'd him to be ſworn Maſter of the Mechanicks; tho' ſince the Diſcovery of the Fire-Engine, Sir Samuel's is not worth the Leather the Pipe was made of. His Majeſty knighted alſo Thomas Deerham Eſq; his Reſident with the great Duke of Tuſcany, and Chriſtopher Buckle Eſq; of Surrey. He made the Duke of Grafton, whom he order'd to be one of the Stewards at the City-Prentices Feaſt; Colonel of his Firſt Regiment of Foot-Guards. Sir George Carteret, eldeſt Son to Sir Philip Carteret, was created a Baron of England, by the Name of Baron Carteret of Hawnes, in the County of Bedford. And about the ſame time laſt Summer, his Highneſs the Prince of Orange viſited his Uncles in England, where he made a ſhort ſtay of a few Days only. Some time after, Sunday February 12, a barbarous Aſſaſſination was committed on the Perſon of Thomas Thynne Eſq; who paſſing the Pall-mall in his Coach, was ſet upon by three Men on Horſe-back; one of which diſcharg'd a Muſquetoon into the Coach, and mortally wounded him, four Bullets entering his Body. The Aſſaſſins were one Vratz, a German Captain; Borotski, a Polander; and John Sterne, who were ſet on by Count Coningſmark, a Rival of Mr. Thynne's in his Pretences to the Lady Elizabeth Piercy, Daughter and Heir to the great Earl of Northumberland; tho' no body had ſo good a Right to pretend to her as Mr. Thynne, who was her wedded, tho' not bedded Husband. To extenuate this barbarous Act, Mr. Archdeacon inſinuates, that Mr. Thynne, after he had refus'd two Challenges from Coningſmark, ſent ſix Men to France to aſſaſſinate that Count there, and that it was a Judgment upon Thynne for his treacherous Practices to another Lady; which he tells us out of the Scandalous Chronicle, much more ſcurrilous and falſe than any of our Secret Hiſtories.

Promotions, &c.

Mr. Thynne aſſaſſinated.

The Reader will not wonder at this groſs Partiality, when he is told that Mr. Thynne was zealous for the Proteſtant Intereſt, and the Bill of Excluſion; that he abhorr'd perſecuting Diſſenters, and on all occaſions aſſerted the Liberty of his Country.

Coningſmark ran away, and was taken in diſguiſe at Graveſend by Gibbons, a Servant of the Duke of Monmouth's, who, 'tis ſaid, was in the Coach when his Friend Mr. Thynne was ſhot, and to whoſe Friendſhip and Diligence was owing the quick Apprehenſion of the Aſſaſſins, who were try'd, condemn'd, and hang'd in the Pall-mall. Sterne and Borotski were very penitent; but Vratz ſaid at the Gallows, God has a greater Favour for Gentlemen, than to require Punctilio's of Humility at their hands; and it is abſurd to think, that ſo many thouſand Gentlemen in the World, that ſtood upon their Honour and Reputation ſo much as he, ſhould be for ever damn'd, becauſe they could not ſtoop to things that would ſpoil the Figure they made in the world. It is miraculous that a Man of ſuch religious Sentiments as theſe, and ſo good a Catholick, ſhould not come off as well as Coningſmark; who having rid the Court of an Oppoſer, Directions were given that the Judges ſhould be favourable; as Sir John Hawles aſſures us they were, and gives ſeveral Inſtances of it, cloſing his Remarks thus: Vratz being the next greateſt Offender, was honourably interr'd; and Sterne and Borotski, who were the leaſt Offenders in that Matter, were hang'd in Chains. It was ſomewhat like New-England Law, remember'd by Hudibras, of hanging an uſeleſs innocent Weaver for an uſeful guilty Cobler.

The Aſſaſſins hang'd.

Echard prints many of the Addreſſes that were preſented the King againſt the Aſſociation, Ignoramus's, &c. eſpecially one from the Artillery Company in Briſtol, who ſhew'd that they could write no better than they could fight. He then inſerts a Speech of Dr. Coya, Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge to the Duke of York, to which he tells us, his Royal Highneſs was pleaſed to return this Anſwer. I will ever ſtand by the Church of England as by Law eſtabliſh'd, which the Reverend Hiſtorian would have ſunk, if he had a true Notion of the Baſeneſs, as well as Sin of breaking a Man's Word. The Univerſity, in compliment to his Royal Highneſs, turn'd out their Chancellor the Duke of Monmouth, and choſe in his place Monk's Son Chriſtopher Duke of Albemarle, who was juſt as well qualify'd to be their Chancellor, as his Father was to be their Repreſentative in Parliament, if good Senſe and Learning were Qualifications neceſſary to protect or repreſent that moſt famous Nurſery. But by what follows, neither of them ſeem to be then of the Growth of that Place; for that venerable Body were ſo fooliſh or mad, as to burn the Duke of Monmouth's Picture, which not long before they had begg'd of his Grace. This ſhameleſs Act of Ingratitude was finely laſh'd in a Satyr written upon the Vice-Chancellor and Doctors, by George Stepney Eſq; who ſerv'd King William ſo long and ſo laudably in ſeveral foreign Negociations. It began thus:

Cambridge Loyalty.

They burn the Duke of Monmouth in Effigie.

Yes, fickle Cambridge, Perkins found this true,
Both from your Rabble, and your Doctors too;
With what Applauſe you once receiv'd his Grace,
And begg'd a Copy of his God like Face:
But when the ſage Vice-Chancellor was ſure
Th' Original in Limbo lay ſecure,
As greaſy as himſelf, he ſends a Lictor,
To vent his loyal Malice on the Picture.
The Beadle's Wife, &c.

The Duke of York before he return'd to Scotland, was adviſ'd by his Faction to aim at Popularity; and as one ſtep towards it, he din'd with the Artillery Company at Merchant-Taylors Hall, where his Hand was kiſs'd by great Numbers of Citizens, who crowded to have that Honour, and where-ever he went the Rabble were excited to make a Noiſe, as if he had been the People's Darling: But as his Courtſhip of them was awkward and affected, ſo their Acclamations were forc'd and unnatural. He had not one engaging Quality; he was haughty, ſullen, ſevere, tenacious of his Money, and careleſs of his Promiſes. But the Addreſſers ſet up an Idol, which they worſhip'd as the Prieſts of Baal did their God, to his Confuſion, and their own Deſtruction. The Duke of York ſtaid about a Fortnight only in Scotland, and then return'd by Sea to England with his Dutcheſs and the Princeſs Anne, his ſecond Daughter. Mr. Archdeacon waits upon him in all Progreſſes with as much Joy and Ceremony, as if he had been the Protector of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Champion of Engliſh Liberty; tho' he allows that he was the cauſe of future Severities and Irregularities, and would have put the King ſtill upon more of them, which once extorted this Rebuke from him; Brother, I am reſolv'd never to travel again, you may do ſo, if you pleaſe: and ſo he did, and never more ſaw his injur'd Country.

Diſſenters ſeverely handled.

It was now that the drunken Juſtices, and their Band Dogs the Informers were let looſe upon Proteſtant Diſſenters. The King, who pretended to be deſirous to keep his ſacred Word, given them at Breda for Liberty of Conſcience, now ſuffer'd his Brother to preſs the moſt rigorous Execution of the new Laws, and of the Statute 35 Eliz. againſt them, in defiance of the Votes of Parliament in their favour: Nay, ſeveral zealous Proteſtants, who had been moſt active againſt the Papiſts, were try'd by mercenary Judges, with pack'd Juries, upon Iriſh Evidence. Orders and Directions were ſent from the King and Council-Board to ſuppreſs all Meetings of Proteſtant Diſſenters, which was very officiouſly forwarded by the Middleſex Juſtices at Hickes's-Hall, by the Juſtices in Southwark, and ſome Aldermen of the City; ſuch as Pritchard, Raymond, Sheldon, Davies, &c. Many Miniſters were impriſon'd, and they and their Hearers impoveriſh'd by exorbitant Fines. The Reverend and Learned Mr Baxter was hal'd out of his Bed, ſick as he was, and had been thrown into Jail upon the Corporation Act, beſides a Warrant againſt him for 195 Pounds, had not that eminent Phyſician Dr Thomas Cox accidentally come by; and ſeeing him in the hands of Ruffians, forc'd him into his Houſe again, while he went to five Juſtices of the Peace and took his Oath, that Mr. Baxter could not go to Priſon, without danger of Death. However, the Juſtices would not favour him, till they had conſulted the King, who conſented that his Impriſonment ſhould for that time be forborn, that he might die at home. Mr. Baxter had been one of his firſt Chaplains after his Reſtoration, in which he was more inſtrumental than perhaps every one of the Biſhops, who ſo inſulted him at the Savoy Conference. The Ruffians executed their Warrant, diſtrain'd the Books and Goods in the Houſe, tho' he made it appear they were none of his, and they ſold even the Bed which he lay ſick upon. All which was done without his having the leaſt notice of any Accuſation, or receiving any Summons to appear and anſwer for himſelf, or ever ſeeing the Juſtices or Accuſers. He was afterwards in conſtant danger of new Seizures, and at laſt was forc'd to leave his Houſe, and retire into private Lodgings. Dr. Anneſley and ſeveral other Divines had their Goods diſtrain'd for latent Convictions. Others were impriſon'd upon the Corporation Act, while others were worry'd in the Spiritual Courts. Warrants were ſign'd for Diſtreſſes in one Pariſh only to the Value of 1400 Pounds, and one of them for 500 Pounds. The Reverend Mr. Vincent was try'd at Surrey Seſſions, upon the 35th of Eliz. and caſt. Two hundred Warrants were iſſu'd out for Diſtreſſes upon Uxbridge and the Neighbourhood. The pious and eminent Dr. Bates, one of the moſt learned and polite Writers of the Age, was diſtrain'd upon. The Jayls all over England were fill'd with the ſame ſort of Offenders for Conſcience ſake only. Here you might ſee a lewd Herd of Informers, probably with a roaring Juſtice at their Head, haling away religious conſcientious Perſons, Women as well as Men, to the common Priſon. There another Band of them loaden with the Plunder of their Houſes and Barns, and driving away their Cattle for not coming to Church, and for going to a Proteſtant Meeting. I have been an Eye-Witneſs of theſe impious and cruel Practices, and the Impreſſion is ſtill too ſtrong upon my Mind to tell even this little with Patience. Theſe are this King's Succeſſes, theſe his Triumphs, which produce ſuch Exultation in the Pulpit and out of it, in Sermons and Addreſſes; the latter were ſtuff'd with moſt hearty and humble Thanks for ſecuring a Popiſh Succeſſor to reign over our Proteſtant Church, for perſecuting and ruining our diſſenting Brethren, for eſtabliſhing Principles of Tyranny and Slavery, if Tyrants and Slaves are capable of Principles; and now, ſays Echard, his Majeſty rul'd with more Independency. He means nothing, if he does not mean with leſs Regard to that Religion, and thoſe Laws which he had ſworn to defend. One cannot queſtion but when the Duke of York came laſt from Scotland, the Reſolution was taken, not only to harraſs, oppreſs and ruin Proteſtant Diſſenters, but alſo to ſtrike ſuch Terror into Proteſtant Churchmen, as ſhould induce them to give up all their Rights and Privileges, for fear of giving Offence to the two Popiſh Brothers, the King and the Duke of York; but as that could not be done while there were honeſt Sheriffs, thoſe Princes reſolv'd at any rate to get others, ſuch as would not ſtick at any Butchery, which they ſhould be put upon; accordingly they pitch'd on Dudley North, of whom they were ſure, annd ventur'd to name Mr. Box, of whom they were not ſure. Theſe two Citizens they caus'd to be put up for Sheriffs of London and Middleſex, in oppoſition to two worthy and wealthy Merchants, Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois. Some time before the Election Sir John Moor drank to North at the Bridge-Houſe Feaſt, and by drinking to him, choſe him Sheriff according to ancient Cuſtom, ſays the honeſt Hiſtorian. Biſhop Burnet on the contrary tells us, "The Right was to be determin'd by the "Charter, which granted the Election of the "Sheriffs to the Citizens of London; and what-"ever Cuſtoms had crept in among them, the "Right ſtill lay where the Charter had lodg'd it, "among the Citizens; but the Court was re-"ſolv'd to carry this Point: The Common Hall "alledg'd, that the Right of chuſing both She-"riffs was in them; and the old Sheriffs put it "according to cuſtom to a Poll, and it was viſible "that the much greater Number was againſt the "Lord Mayor." Now tho' there was no manner of occaſion for unfair Dealing, by thoſe that had a viſible Majority; yet, ſays Echard, ſeveral Names of thoſe who poll'd for North and Box were refus'd to be enter'd, and ſeveral Names of thoſe that poll'd on the other ſide were enter'd, tho' the Perſons were not preſent. The Falſhood of this is not to be conceiv'd, but by imagining Contraries; and this Violence, continues he, occaſion'd the Mayor's adjourning the Court by Proclamation three Days to the 27th of June, which he had no Right to do; for as the Biſhop of Sarum tells us, "The Sheriffs were always under-"ſtood to be the Officers of that Court, ſo the "adjourning it belong'd to them; yet the "Mayor adjourn'd the Court, which the Sheriffs "ſaid he had no Power to do, and ſo went on "with their Poll." The Reader will obſerve that the Poll is carry'd on regularly, and without Diſturbance from any body but the Mayor. Echard's Repreſentation is directly contrary, the Lord Mayor was thrown down upon his Knees, and in great danger. My Lord of Sarum aſſures us, there was no Diſorder in the whole Progreſs of the Matter. When I charge the Archdeacon with Falſity, is there not a ſhorter Term for it in our Language? but the Purity and Delicacy of Hiſtory will not admit of it. The King, who had nothing at all to do in this Affair, takes it upon himſelf, and ſends for the Lord Mayor, Court of Aldermen and Sheriffs. I have fully related

A. D. 1682. related the Matter, and Echard ſays, the Matter being fully examin'd by King and Council, the two Sheriffs were committed to the Tower, by a Warrant ſign'd by twenty-four Privy Counſellors. Why did he not name them? why did he not let Poſterity know who were the Men that ſo baſely betray'd their Country, by ſacrificing the Rights and Privileges of its great and renown'd Metropolis, to the Reſentment of two ill-adviſed Princes, Enemies to our Religion and Liberty. The Council alſo order'd a Proſecution againſt Mr. Pilkington and Mr. Shute, the Sheriffs, and Alderman Corniſh, for the late enormous Riot. The Privy Councils at Moſcow and Morocco did not countenance Tyranny more daringly than thoſe twenty-four Counſellors did. There was no Riot at all, 'twas the Sheriffs Right to adjourn the Court: The Biſhop of Salisbury tells us, the Mayor's Party carried themſelves with great Inſolence, the Sheriffs with more Temper than could be expected from ſo great a Body, who thought their Rights invaded. Yet Mr. Archdeacon takes great Comfort in the illegal Impriſonment of thoſe two worthy Magiſtrates, and goes on with the Story as fairly as he began it. The Sheriffs being bail'd out of the Tower, met at the Common Hall the fifth of July, the Lord Mayor adjourn'd it to the ſeventh of July, and then further to the fourteenth of July, which, as we have ſeen, he had no Right to do: However the King interpos'd again, and ſent an Order of Council to the Lord Mayor, to ſtand by antient Cuſtoms, meaning the Mayor's chuſing the Sheriff by giving him a Cup of Sack: This Order being a Violation of their Charter, the Citizens after it was read, cry'd, read the Statute of 16 Car. I. Chap. x. againſt ſuch Orders of Council, which yet Mr. Archdeacon informs us was impertinent; and indeed Law was at this time Impertinence. So the Lord Mayor, continues he, declar'd Mr. North duely elected, and that he would poll for the other three; for in obedience to the illegal Order of Council, he ſtood by North, as having drunk to him. North was ſo hated on his own, and his Brother's account, that unleſs the Mayor could chuſe him by a Bumper, he was never like to be a Sheriff of London; but thoſe four and twenty Counſellors could not have pitch'd upon a Tool fitter for their cruel Purpoſes, and the Mayor ſtood to it that he was fairly choſen by himſelf, but poll'd again for Box, as the two Sheriffs did for Papillon and Dubois, and Mr. Echard affirms Box was duely elected by a Majority of Votes in the Mayor's Book, upon which, the good Man declar'd North and Box Sheriffs. Biſhop Burnet's Account is again contrary, The Mayor reſolv'd to take another Poll, to which none ſhould be admitted, but thoſe who were contented to vote only for one, and to approve his Nomination for the other; and it was reſolv'd that his Poll ſhould be that by which the Buſineſs ſhould be ſettled; and tho' the Sheriffs Poll exceeded his by many Hundreds, yet Order was given to return thoſe on the Mayor's Poll, and that they ſhould be ſworn. Mr. Box was too honeſt a Man to countenance ſuch Injuſtice and Violence, and refus'd to ſtand with North, who Sir John Hawles ſays, was impos'd on the City, and for that Reaſon Box refus'd to join with him; but they afterwards found out a ſort of a Woodmonger, or Timber-Man in Southwark, Peter Rich, who made no ſcruple of joining with North, or any one the Court pleas'd to couple him with. Now Echard again, as falſe as before, The Lord Mayor call'd a Common Hall on the 19th of September, and propos'd the electing another Sheriff in the room of Mr. Box; but the Party of the old Sheriffs inſiſted on their firſt Election, as they had good reaſon to do, it being legal and peaceable. Mr. Archdeacon affirms, The Lord Mayor being ſteady and reſolute went on in the Election, and by the Majority of his Party Peter Rich Eſq; was choſen; and to ſhew us how conſiderable a Perſon he was, he informs us he was a Lieutenant-Colonel of the Trained Bands. The Truth is, there was no Election at all. Moor the Mayor, without any Proclamation made as uſual, as we are told by Biſhop Burnet, took the Vote of one in a Corner near him, who nam'd Rich, which was applauded by about thirty more; upon this it was ſaid that Rich was choſen without any Contradiction, and ſo North and Rich were return'd and ſworn. Echard again, Whereupon the Lord Mayor return'd to his Houſe in Triumph, and Heraclitus totally laid down his ſatirical Pen after 18 Months uſe of it in a ſort of Triumph, tho' there hardly was ever a more wretched Scribler, and his Satyr was no better, either for Language or Wit, than you may every day hear from the Fiſhery at Billingſgate. I could very eaſily prove this, but I ſhall never be able to bring myſelf to make a Critique on the Wit and Humour of a Faction, who were ſuch Fools as to part with their Religion and Liberties for a few good Looks and good Words from the King and his Brother, or who rather, like Eſau, were ſelling their Birth-right for a Meſs of Pottage. Moor had not yet done all the Buſineſs the Court had cut out for him, Apoſtates and Renegades never think they can do enough to convince the World of their Apoſtacy, and Moor undertook to give them a Mayor as well as two Sheriffs, and in this Conteſt Mr. Archdeacon is no fairer than in the other: The Whig Party muſter'd all their Strength to chuſe a Lord Mayor; ſure it is, the Tory Party muſter'd a great deal more than their Strength. The Tories put up Sir William Pritchard, a Man of a mean Trade and Character, otherwiſe than as he was an Alderman, and very much bigotted to what Sir George Jefferies, and Sir Dudley North call'd the Church. The Whigs were for Sir Thomas Gould, or Alderman Corniſh. Mr. Echard is pleas'd to confeſs that theſe two had the Majority at the firſt Appearance; but upon a long Scrutiny, and thorough Examination, ſays he, it was found that a great Number had appear'd for them, who were not legally intitled to Voices. What follows has a pretty deal of Stupidity in it, for he caſts up the Voices himſelf.

A. D. 1682.

North and Rich illegally declar'd by the Mayor.

Sir William Pritchard illegally declar'd Mayor.

Sir William Pritchard	2138
Sir Thomas Gould	2124

So that his great Number is by his own Account reduced to 14, but even that too is ſhamefully falſe. My Lord of Sarum, " The Poll was " clos'd when the Court thought they had the " Majority; but upon caſting it up, it appear'd " they had loſt it, ſo they fell to canvaſs it, and " they made ſuch Exceptions to thoſe on the o- " ther ſide, that they diſcounted as many Voices " as gave them the Majority. This was alſo " manag'd in ſo groſs a manner, which Echard " calls a thorough Examination, that it was vi- " ſible the Court was reſolv'd to have the Go- " vernment of the City in their own Hands; but " becauſe they would not be at this Trouble, " nor run this Hazard every Year, it was reſolv'd " that the Charter of the City muſt either be gi- " ven up, or be adjudg'd to the King". Mr. Echard is inſenſible of theſe tyrannical Proceedings, and of the Deſigns the Court was carrying on by 'em, and with great Coldneſs and Indifference only tells us, a Quo Warranto was determin'd to iſſue againſt the City of London.

Acts of Tyranny.

The

A. D. 1682.

The Lord Mayor and the two Sheriffs being entirely to the good Liking of the Popiſh Faction, and the Court ſure of Juries, his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York preſents himſelf firſt on this terrible Stage, and brings an Action of Scandalum Magnatum againſt Alderman Pilkington for Words ſpoken by him, as if he had ſaid the Duke fir'd London. Tulſe and Hooker, two Aldermen, fully prov'd the Words, if you will believe Mr. Echard; but he conceals the Evidence of Sir Patience Ward, who was by when it was pretended the Words were ſaid, and depos'd, that to the beſt of his Remembrance Pilkington ſaid not thoſe Words, for which, becauſe the Jury found Pilkington guilty, they try'd Ward for Perjury, and ſuch another Jury convicting him of it, the Court intended to have put the late Lord Mayor in the Pillory had he not gone out of the way. Sawyer, the Attorney General, tho' as Biſhop Burnet ſays he was a dull Man, and truly there were the dulleſt Tools then ſet to work that ever ſcandaliz'd a Government, was as active as his Dulneſs would let him be in theſe Proſecutions, and in thoſe alſo that follow'd, which let out the nobleſt Blood in the Nation. Alderman Pilkington had refus'd to go to Whitehall with Moor and Pritchard, and Tulſe and Hooker, and the reſt of them that waited on the Duke with ſome nauſeous Compliments at his Return from Scotland, and he being now oblig'd to render himſelf a Priſoner in Diſcharge of his Bail, North got himſelf to be return'd Alderman of his Ward. The pack'd Jury, contrary to the Salvo Contenemento in Magna Charta, gave the Duke of York 100,000 l. Damages. The pleaſurable Part of the Hiſtory is, that the Duke liv'd long enough to account for theſe things, and to taſte of that Miſery which he brought upon others.

Alderman Pilkington fin'd againſt Law.

The Earl of Shaftesbury could not but foreſee that ſuch Doings about Sheriffs were to prepare for the Tragedies that the Court were bent upon acting, ſo he prudently remov'd to Holland, and reſided at Amſterdam, but did not long ſurvive his Removal, nor was it long before the ſage Lord Mayor Pritchard put out an Order againſt burning the Pope, and making Bonfires on Queen Elizabeth's Day. A Whig News-Paper, call'd the Weekly Intelligence was prohibited, and all Hawkers ſilenc'd. Ill Governments, like Hearkners, never hear Good of themſelves, and 'tis no wonder they are for ſtopping People's Mouths by all the ways they can think of, by Executions, Prohibitions, by Cruelty, Oppreſſion and Terror. The Foreign News admits of no Hiſtory. The Crown of England was in a degree of Contempt abroad not to be remember'd without Indignation, while at home it was terrible to all true Engliſhmen. However there were two new Ambaſſadors this Year from beyond Sea, one from the King of Fez, the other from the King of Bantam, and ſurely the Subjects of thoſe two Monarchs were not at that time leſs happy than the Subjects of the King of Britain.

Unjuſt Elections of Common Council-Men.

At the latter End of the Year the Popiſh Cabal employ'd all their Inſtruments, the illegal Lord Mayor, and the illegal Sheriffs, the Aldermen of that Faction, and others in the City, to get a Common Council of no more Honour than the Mayor and his Sheriffs. Biſhop Burnet informs us, much Injuſtice was complain'd of in many Wards of the City, both in the Poll, and in the Returns. In order to the diſabling of Diſſenters from voting, the Biſhop and Clergy were preſs'd by the Court to proſecute them in the Church Courts, that ſo they might excommunicate them, which ſome corrupt Lawyers thought would render them incapable to vote, tho' other Lawyers were very poſitively of another Opinion: However this Point was not carry'd, and the King was diſpleas'd; the Majority of the new Common-Council being as averſe to the Surrender of their Charter as the laſt was. My Lord Biſhop charges Sir Lionel Jenkins with indirect Practices in theſe Tranſactions, tho' his Capacity did not enable him to do as much Miſchief as he wou'd. His Lordſhip adds, that tho' he underſtood nothing, yet he had ſo much credit with the High Church Party, that he was of great uſe to the King and the Duke.

A. D. 1682.

When we liv'd in the Reigns after the Revolution, and ſaw the Streams of Honour running pure from the Fountain, when Patriots were preferr'd to high Stations and Titles, and the Favourites of the Kings and Queens were Favourites of the People, 'twas with wonderful Delight that they heard of Honours and Promotions; but I queſtion whether the Reader's Appetite will be ſo keen for the following Paragraph, copy'd from two Reverend Hiſtorians: As thus, out of Echard, " With a great Flood of " diſtinguiſhing Favours, cheap and acceptable, " at the beginning of December his Majeſty was " pleas'd to grant

" To Thomas Lord Windſor, Governor of the " Town and Garriſon of Kingſton upon Hull, " the Name and Stile of Earl of Plymouth.

" To Sir Thomas Thynne, the Name and Stile " of Baron Thynne of Warmiſter, and Viſcount " Weymouth.

" To Col. George Legg, the Name and Stile " of Baron of Dartmouth."

The Lord Townſhend was created Viſcount Townſhend; and Col. John Churchill, Lord Churchill of Aymouth in Scotland. The two laſt Names illuſtrious in our late Hiſtories.

The Lord Norreys was made Earl of Abington; Sir John Bennet, Lord Oſſulſton; Coniers Lord Darcy, Earl of Holderneſs; James Duke of Ormond in Ireland, a Duke of England; the Duke of Hamilton, a Knight of the Garter; the Earl of Arundel, Governor of Windſor-Caſtle.

Edward Viſcount Campden was created Earl of Gainsborough; George Earl of Hallifax, Marquis of Hallifax; and the Earl of Sunderland was reſtor'd to the Office of Secretary of State; Lord Conway was the other Secretary, as his Father had been before him, and ſo unfit for the Station, that King James was wont to ſay, he had a Secretary who could not write; nor had there ſince been an unfitter Perſon in that high Station, unleſs that dull one Sir Lionel Jenkins, or this Lord Conway, his Son, who was ſo ignorant, that his Province being the North, when one of the Foreign Miniſters talk'd to him of the Circles of Germany, it amaz'd him, he could not imagine what Circles had to do with Affairs of State. But he was a good Churchman, in the reverend Hiſtorian's Acceptation of the Word; and ſo alſo was Laurence Hyde, now Earl of Rocheſter, whoſe Probity may be gueſs'd at, by this Inſtance out of Biſhop Burnet: " Lord Halliſax and Lord Hyde fell to be in an " open War, and were both much hated, at " which I am not at all ſurpriz'd; Men can " never be belov'd by the Country whoſe Inte- " reſt they betray, by promoting Slavery and " Perſecution." Lord Halliſax charg'd Hyde of Bribery, He that will betray the Country, will ſurely betray the King, when he can get by it: " For having farm'd a Branch of the Reve- " nue much lower than had been proffer'd for it, " Lord Halliſax acquainted the King firſt with " it, and he deſir'd Lord Rocheſter himſelf to " ex-

Rocheſter's Probity.

A. D. 1682. " examine into it, he being inclin'd to think it " rather an Abuſe put upon him, than Cor- " ruption in himſelf; but he ſaw Lord Roche- " ſter was cold in the Matter, and, inſtead " of proſecuting any for it, protected all con- " cern'd in it." Lord Halifax laid the Complaint before the King in Council; and, to convince the King how ill a Bargain he had made, the Complainers offer'd, if he would break it, to give him 40000 Pounds more than he was to have for it from the Farmers. The Biſhop ſays again, Rocheſter was much hated, but the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth protected him, and he protected the High Church Party. He afterwards wrote a Prefatory Dedication to Clarendon's Hiſtory, ſo renown'd for its Veracity and Impartiality 1683.

A. D. 1683. ABout the beginning of this Year, Sir Francis North was made Lord-Keeper of the Great Seal, on the Death of the Earl of Nottingham, of whoſe Capacity Biſhop Burnet ſeems to have had as mean an Opinion as of North's Honeſty. " North had not the Virtues of his Predeceſſor, " but he had Parts far beyond him. They " were turn'd to Craft." A rare Man to make a Lord-Keeper! " So that whereas the former " ſeem'd to mean well, even when he did ill; " this North was believ'd to mean ill, even " when he did well." He had a deep hand in the Murder of Colledge; and now the ſacred Scale of Juſtice is put into it, and how he held it we may conjecture from this Inſtance. Mr. Robert Mayot of Oxford, a pious Churchman, who had devoted his Eſtate to charitable Uſes, gave, by his laſt Will, 600 l. to be diſtributed by Mr. Baxter to ſixty poor ejected Miniſters, adding, That he did it not becauſe they were Non-conformiſts but becauſe many ſuch were pious and poor. The mercenary Sawyer Attorney-General ſued for it in the Chancery, and North the Keeper gave it all to the King. It was paid into Chancery by North's Order, and it lay there till King William ſo happily aſcended the Throne, when the Commiſſioners of the Great Seal reſtor'd it to the Uſe for which it was intended by the Deceas'd; and Mr. Baxter diſpos'd of it accordingly. The Baſeneſs and Wickedneſs of this Attempt of Sawyer's are not to be parallel'd in Chriſtian Hiſtory.

Mr. Mayot's Will defeated.

Cal. 361.

The poor perſecuted Diſſenters were every where flying from, or ſuffering under the Rage of their Perſecutors. 'Twas bad enough in London, but worſe ſtill in the Country, where the moſt brutal Wretches were made Juſtices and Conſtables, purpoſely to carry on that wicked Work, which was the main Buſineſs of the Spiritual Courts, ſtill the Deteſtation of all ſober People. Many who were taken at Proteſtant Meetings, were convicted as Rioters, and fin'd 10 Pounds apiece, and ſome religious young Men and young Women were ſent to Bridewel, to beat Hemp with Whores and Thieves. And now, ſays Echard, the State of the Nation ſeem'd to have been in a more quiet and calm Condition than ever ſince the breaking out of the Popiſh Plot. The Whig Party being forc'd to give way to the Tory more apparently than for ſeveral Years before, the Struggles and Contrivances of the declining Party were either more feeble or more clandeſtine; inſinuating the damnable Sham-Plots that the Court were inventing to deſtroy the Nonconformiſts. The Duke of Monmouth and his Party were entring into ſecret and deſperate Methods; he will have his Share of the innocent and noble Blood that is about to be ſpilt. The Duke of Monmouth was, it is true, now very popular, he had the Eyes and Hearts of all good Proteſtants and good Engliſhmen; but he had not Genius enough to make the beſt Uſe of them. Mr. Archdeacon tells us, that his Race-Horſe winning the Prize in France, added to his Fame, as it did to Mr. Bernard Howard's, that his Coach was permitted to come within the Louvre; of ſo great Importance are his Incidents, when he is not abuſing Proteſtant Diſſenters, or printing nonſenſical Addreſſes, ſuch as that from the Middle-Temple, deliver'd by two Knights, as poor as ever were the old Knights Templers; Sir Thomas Montgomery, who went afterwards to Barbadoes, and Sir Humphry Mackworth, who was afterwards branded for a Cheat by a Vote of the Houſe of Commons. The King alſo made a Knight of Dudley North; and the Archdeacon tells us, the King dubb'd him in gratitude to the City, becauſe Sir John Moor was thank'd for his good Adminiſtration in impoſing North on them as a Sheriff by a ſhameleſs Trick, as Sir John Hawles calls it.

A Perſecution.

A. D. 1683.

The King having made the Earls of Huntington and Peterborough Privy-Counſellors, went to Newmarket, March the 16th, and ſix days after a terrible Fire ſuddenly broke out, which conſum'd about half of the Town. His Majeſty remov'd his Reſidence to another Houſe, but the Wind purſu'd him thither, conducted, ſays Echard, by an inviſible Power, and, in a moment, it became as untenantable as the other, which oblig'd the King and Court to return to London ſooner than they intended; and the Hiſtorian, with a foul Mouth and falſe Heart, adds, The providential Fire, thus do they blaſpheme in their Invectives, defeated and prevented a black Conſpiracy form'd againſt him and his Brother. Dr. Welwood writes of that and the other Sham-Plots about this time: " The ſhatter'd Remains " of Engliſh Liberty were then attack'd on eve- " ry ſide, and ſome of the nobleſt Blood in the " Nation was offer'd up a Sacrifice to the Manes " of Popiſh Martyrs; Swearing came into fa- " ſhion, and an Evidence-Office was erected in " Whitehall. But whereas the Witneſſes for the " Popiſh Plot were brow-beaten and diſcourag'd, " thoſe for the Proteſtant Plot were highly en- " courag'd; and, inſtead of Judges and Juries " that might boggle at half Evidence, as it fell " out in the Proſecution of the former, Care was " taken in this to pick out ſuch as ſhould ſtick " at nothing to ſerve a Turn." Mr. Coke explains this helliſh Impoſture ſtill further, " The " Court ſet three Plots on foot; The Rye-Plot, " to kill the King and the Duke as they came " from Newmarket. A Plot to ſeize the Guards; " and the Blackheath Plot. In all theſe Plots, " for ought I can find, the Fox is the Finder. " My Lord Howard and Rumſey in that of the " Guards; Lee and Goodenough in that of " Blackheath; Keeling and Weſt in that of Rye- " Houſe; Lee was ſet to trapan Rouſe and Ba- " ker in the Blackheath Plot: Rumbald, at " whoſe Houſe it is ſaid the Rye-Houſe Plot was " to be acted, upon his Death deny'd he ever " knew of any." And tho' Rumbald was a Proteſtant, and probably a Republican, his dying Words will certainly have more weight with the Reader than Mr. Echard's. Some time after the King's Return to London, Mr. Broom the Coroner arreſted the Lord Mayor Pritchard, North the pretended Sheriff, and ſome perſecuting Aldermen, and carry'd them Priſoners to Skinners-Hall, in an Action upon the Caſe, at the Suit of Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois, the legal Sheriffs of the City. But the Faction got one Fletcher, a Sergeant of the Poultry Compter, to arreſt Broom in an Action of 400 Pounds Debt upon Bond, and to carry him to Priſon; upon which, Pritchard, chard, North, and the Coroner's other Priſoners, went to their ſeveral Homes. The Common Council very formally diſclaim'd the Mayor's Arreſt, becauſe the Writ ran in the Name of the Citizens of London. They alſo turn'd Mr. Broom out of his Place. The Court took quick Vengeance againſt the Party that had thus inſulted their beſt Friends, and under pretence of a Riot, committed by the moſt ſober Citizens of London, which Riot was only a peaceable Poll for their Sheriffs, they caus'd an Information to be exhibited againſt

Who were fin'd in the above mention'd Sums, May the 8th. Echard vows and proteſts that the Lord Mayor's Right to adjourn the Common Hall, was fully prov'd; tho' my Lord of Sarum affirms the adjourning the Common Hall always belong'd to the Sheriffs; and that Riot was made out to the full, tho' his Lordſhip aſſerts, There was no Diſorder in the whole Progreſs of the Matter. Several of the injur'd Gentlemen were Proteſtant Diſſenters, which probably he thinks ſufficient for him to injure them again in his Hiſtory. And now, continues he, the City appear'd more loyal and obſequious. Loyalty to good Kings and Queens, ſuch as King William, Queen Mary, Queen Anne, King George, and his preſent Majeſty, is at once a Duty and a Pleaſure. But what is meant by Loyalty to ſuch Kings as Charles and James the Second, while they were breaking down all the Barriers of our Religion and Liberty? Do not they underſtand a tame Submiſſion to the Yoke of Slavery, Spiritual and Temporal, under which the miſerable People of England now heavily groan'd?

The reverend Hiſtorian informs us, that the Scaffolds in Weſtminſter-Hall were now a ken down, and a Statue of King Charles I. now ſet up at the Royal Exchange, with an Inſcription, which begins with a Quibble, Eikon Baſilike. But if the Statue was no more a Picture of the King than Eikon Baſilike, the Book written by Dr. Gauden was his Portraiture, that Nich is the worſt fill'd of any in the Exchange.

London Quo Warranto.

Mr. Acherley informs us, that the Duke of York, in purſuance of the Scheme laid down by the Popiſh Cabal, got a Quo Warranto brought againſt the City of London, whereby the King requir'd them to ſhew by what Right they claim'd to be a Corporation. The Breaches which the Attorney-General Sawyer, that hot, dull Man, as Biſhop Burnet calls him, aſſign'd as Cauſes to forfeit their Being as a Corporation were, that they had made an Addreſs to the King for the Sitting of the Parliament; and that they had rais'd the Rents of their Wharfs and Ware-houſes, which they had themſelves built. Had there been any Shame in Sawyer's or the Sollicitor-General's Faces, they could not have held up their Heads while ſuch Nonſenſe was reading, as a pretence to take away the Rights and Privileges of that Capital of the Britiſh Empire, and the great Emporium of the World. I ſhall not enter into the Detail of the Merits of the Cauſe. Sawyer and Finch pleaded as well as they could againſt thoſe very learned and eminent Lawyers Pollexfen and Treby, afterwards Lord Chief Juſtices of the King's-Bench and Common-Pleas. There needs but a ſmall Portion of Knowledge to ſatisfy one, that Engliſhmen may very lawfully petition the King for the Sitting of Parliaments; and that People may ſet what Rent they pleaſe on their Lands and Tenements. Sawyer's firſt Argument was falſe in fact, according to Mr. Acherley, That the City had impos'd Taxes by By-Laws; whereas the By-Law was not to impoſe new Taxes, but to reduce their antient and uncertain Tolls to a reaſonable Certainty. And when the particular Breaches came to be argu'd upon, Sawyer and Finch, according to Mr. Acherly, ſeem'd to fail; and Sir George Treby and Mr. Pollexfen prov'd, That the Tolls in the Markets for Stallage and other Conveniences, provided at the City's Charges, were due by Law. The judicious Lawyer obſerves, "It appear'd "afterwards that this pretence of a breach of "Truſt to make a Forfeiture was merely ſpe"cious; for, after the King had obtain'd Judg"ment againſt the City, his Majeſty himſelf, "by thoſe commiſſion'd under him, exacted and "collected the ſame Rates for the Tolls, which "the City had by their Act of Common-Council "aſcertain'd. When the Breach, touching the "City's Petition, came to be argu'd, the "King's Counſel ſeem'd to lay the whole Streſs "upon Clamour only, without any real Sub"ſtance." The Counſel for the City prov'd, That the Conſtitution and the Law of the Land had given Subjects a Right of petitioning, and of Acceſs to the ſupreme Governor, to repreſent to him their Grievances, which were the Dangers ariſing from the Popiſh Plot. The Facts recited in the Petition were unqueſtionably true, and even confeſs'd by the King's Counſel. Ach. p. 610. The Arguments for the City were, by Standers-by, deem'd a ſufficient Defence, but no Defence would be heard; and the Judges, without giving Reaſons, gave a Capital Judgment, That the City's Franchiſe ſhould be ſeiz'd into the King's hand. This Judgment was before agreed on, and it was admitted by all Sides to be the ſame thing as to diſſolve them. Accordingly the King acted, as if their Being was extinguiſh'd, for he nominated and appointed the Mayor, Sheriffs and Aldermen. But when the Rage and Oppreſſion of theſe Times were remov'd, continues the learned Lawyer, this unjuſt Seizure of the Charter was by Act of Parliament condemn'd as an illegal Proceeding, and made void, and conſequently Injuſtice, Cruelty and Folly were charg'd upon the Proſecution. The Proſecutors were Sawyer and Finch, and eſpecially upon that enormous Breach of the Conſtitution and the Law of the Land, whereby the Right of Petitioning was infring'd, and the Eſſence of the Legiſlature attempted. The Mayor, the Sheriffs, Tulſe and ſuch Aldermen, with ſome of the Common-Council, made a ſlaviſh Submiſſion to this tyrannical Judgment. And Echard, who has told this Story with much Satisfaction, tells us, The City was reſtor'd upon it; the King only reſerving to himſelf the Approbation of the Lord-Mayor, Sheriffs, Recorder, Common Sergeant, Town-Clerk, Coroner, Steward of Southwark, &c. The Citizens were now ſo corrupted by Court-Flattery, or intimidated by Court-Cruelty, that when it was put to the Vote in Common-Council to agree or not agree to the above mention'd Submiſſion, it was carry'd in the Affirmative by a ſmall Majority. Having diſpatch'd this Tale, he goes upon another every whit as unjuſt, but more bloody and terrible; for having ſecur'd Judges, Sheriffs and Juries, they bring their Hangman upon the Stage, and begin the Carnage, as Mr. Acherley very juſtly terms it. Yet Echard, with Front erect, and Heart harden'd againſt all Remorſe and Compaſſion for his bleeding Country, and her bleeding Patriots, opens the dreadful Scene with Applauſe, and introduces thoſe bloody Butcheries as ſolemnly, as if that innocent Blood, which cry'd long and aloud for Vengeance, and was at laſt aveng'd, had only been a Peace-offering to free and impartial Juſtice. He is ſo fooliſh as to own he takes his Information from what the Government printed of it: that is, he took the Vindication of the following Murders from the Murtherers themſelves. He adds, and from the Confeſſion of the Sufferers. Falſe to a Prodigy! For Rumbald declar'd at his death, that he never knew or heard of any Deſign to kill the King; nor was there the leaſt ſtep taken towards that Part of the Plot which was call'd Presbyterian, as an Inſtance of the King's Gratitude to thoſe that reſtor'd him, who were all Presbyterians, however they were as unlucky in this Sham-Plot, as in Dangerfield's, and pick'd out moſt of their Plotters among Churchmen; as the Duke of Monmouth, Earl of Shaftesbury, Earl of Eſſex, Lord Ruſſel, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Lord Howard, &c.

Ryehouſe Sham-Plot.

The Archdeacon copies the Romance written by Sprat, who wrote a tedious fulſome Panegyrick upon Cromwel, as did alſo South, but South's Conſcience could not go Sprat's Lengths; for when King Charles II. deſir'd him to write the Fable of the Ryehouſe-Plot, which his Majeſty call'd a Hiſtory, South, after he had read all the Papers the King had to ſhew him, refus'd the Work, ſaying, Thoſe Papers were all Copies, and no legal Proof, and unleſs his Majeſty had better Evidence, he would not meddle with it, as Dr. Prideaux late Dean of Norwich told a Gentleman of that City, from whom I had it. Sprat however undertook it, Evidence or no Evidence, and Echard has copied him in all the Variety of Untruths, from one end of the pretended Narrative to the other. And as in Dangerfield's Plot, the Roll of Generals and Officers was the moſt conſiderable Part, ſo here too is a Roll produc'd.

A. D. 1683.

Who, ſays the Reverend Hiſtorian, had undertaken to reform the Church and State: a ſtupid Jeſt of his, as if John Rouſe and the Lord Ruſſel, or William Hone and the Earl of Eſſex, could have enter'd into League for carrying on ſuch a wild Buſineſs. He would have us believe that the State, involv'd in the Confuſion and Guilt of ſo many Acts of Tyranny and Injuſtice, needed no Reform; and what a Compliment then has he made the Church by coupling them thus together? I do not doubt but thoſe Acts of Injuſtice and Tyranny occaſion'd much warm Diſcourſe, and perhaps ſome crude Schemes of Ways and Means to preſerve the Proteſtant Religion and Engliſh Liberty againſt the Invaſions of the King and his Brother; ſuch as the keeping up a publick Spirit, and ſecuring an Intereſt, if the King ſhould find himſelf under a Neceſſity of calling a Parliament: But that an Aſſaſſination and an Inſurrection were determin'd by the Lords, Gentlemen, and others before-mention'd in concert, is as incredible as that the Pretender owes his Birth to a Bribe, which the Dutcheſs of Modena gave our Lady of Loretto.

I am apt to believe, that the Biſhop of Saliſbury himſelf makes the moſt of this Plot in his Account of it; and it is laid thick upon the Earl of Shaftesbury, for whom his Lordſhip ſeems to have no good liking.

" The Lord Shaftesbury had been making " uſe of the Heat the City was in, during the " Conteſt about the Sheriffs, and thought they " might have created great Diſturbance; and " he believ'd the firſt appearance of the " leaſt Diſorder, would have prevail'd on the " King to yield every thing. The Duke of " Monmouth, who underſtood what a Rabble " was, and what Troops were, look'd on this as a " mad expoſing of themſelves."

See Echard: The Duke of Monmouth promis'd to riſe in ſome remote County, and give a Diverſion to the King's Troops.

The Biſhop again; " The Earl of Eſſex and " the Lord Ruſſel were of the Duke of Mon- " mouth's Mind; ſo Lord Shaftesbury ſeeing " they could not be engag'd into Action, flew " out againſt them." But their Friends made up the matter as well as they could; and to perfect the Reconciliation, the Duke of Monmouth conſented to meet Lord Shaftesbury at Mr. Shepherd's the Merchant's Houſe in Abchurch-Lane, now well known by the Name of Pontack's. The Night before this Appointment, Lord Ruſſel came to Town on the account of his Uncle's Illneſs. Echard ſays, 'twas on account of the riſing. The Duke of Monmouth went to Lord Ruſſel and told him of that Appointment, deſiring he would go thither with him; to which his Lordſhip conſented, the rather becauſe he intended to taſte ſome of that Merchant's Wine. At night they went with Lord Grey and Sir Thomas Armſtrong. When they came, they found none there but Rumſey and Ferguſon, two of Lord Shaftesbury's Tools, whom he employ'd. The Marquiſs of Wincheſter is not nam'd in the Biſhop's Hiſtory, or in Echard's and the common Writers: But he came to Shepherd's Houſe, and looking thro' the Key-hole, ſaw Rumſey there, ſo he went away again, and would not be ſeen with him. The Duke of Monmouth and the other Lords ſeeing no better Company than Ferguſon and Rumſey, reſolv'd to go back immediately. But Lord Ruſſel call'd for a Taſte of the Wines, and while they were bringing it up to him, Rumſey and Armſtrong fell into a Diſcourſe of ſurprizing the Guards, as a thing practicable, not expedient, and much leſs agreed upon: For when Rumſey endeavour'd to ſhew how it might be done, Armſtrong, who had commanded them, ſhew'd him his Miſtakes. Biſhop Burnet adds, This was no Conſultation about what was to be done, but only about what might have been done. Lord Ruſſel ſpoke nothing upon the Subject; but as ſoon as he had taſted his Wines, they went away. And here is the utmoſt Extent of the Presbyterian Plot: Which the Jeſuit Orleans ſays is told by Biſhop Sprat from authentick Memoirs; ſo that we find the Jeſuit and the Archdeacon's Hiſtories of it have the ſame Authority. I would enter into the Detail of Echard's Hiſtory, if there had been the leaſt ſhow of Truth, or even Probability in any Part of it: For tho' it is very probable that ſome of the inferior Perſons beforemention'd as Plotters, might at their Meetings have talk'd of Guards and Riſings, and ſeizing old Rowley, to oblige him to turn off the Duke of York, and ſave the Nation that Trouble; yet that the treaſonable Words Sprat, and Orleans and he ſpeak of, as expreſſing a Deſign to kill the two Brothers, were ſo ſpoken, is incredible beyond any boyiſh Romance, as that Rumbald ſhould bid Ferguſon conſecrate the Blunderbuſs with which he was to ſhoot them. We will riſe, tho' we have nothing to fight with but our Claws:

P. 679.

That the Lord Ruſſel and the Earl of Eſſex were to rob the Goldſmiths Shops in Lombard-ſtreet; that to murder the King, was to keep the Commandments; that the killing him, was too good for the Papiſts to be concern'd in it; and that theſe ſober Presbyterians, Independents and Baptiſts, as well as moderate and virtuous Churchmen, toaſted Confuſion to the King and his Brother over their Cups: With theſe abſurd, barefac'd and deviliſh Falſhoods are the Hiſtory of this Plot amplify'd and decorated. And all things being in a readineſs to begin the Carnage, the Perſons intended for Sacrifice being in hold, and the illegal Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen having prepar'd the way for it by a monſtrous Addreſs, Captain Thomas Walcot was brought to trial July 12th, before the Chief Juſtice Saunders. Mr. Echard is not aſham'd to name him, and other Judges. The Witneſſes againſt him were Rumſey, Keeling, Bourne, and Weſt. Among theſe, Weſt ſwore, That Walcot ask'd him whether he would have a Commiſſion under him, for he was to have a Regiment of Horſe. Rumſey ſwore, That Walcot was to attack the Guards, while others attack'd the King at Ryehouſe. Bourne depos'd, That Walcot propos'd to kill Keeling as well as the King, becauſe he had diſcover'd them. Walcot in his Defence flatly deny'd every word of the Ryehouſe-Plot. And tho' Echard tells us, that Jenkins had a Letter from Walcot, wherein he offer'd to make a further Diſcovery, Walcot alledg'd, that what he had promis'd to diſcover, he had only heard from Ferguſon. He confeſs'd he had been told of a Deſign amongſt ſeveral great Lords and Gentlemen, for aſſerting Liberties and Properties. The King's honeſt Counſel ſaid, it was High-Treaſon to hear talk of a Deſign to aſſert Liberties and Properties; and ſo the Jury in a very ſhort time brought him in guilty of High-Treaſon, he being one of the Perſons reſolv'd on before-hand, as Sir John Hawles obſerves.

Capt. Walcot try'd.

Convicted.

Hone try'd.

The ſame Day was try'd William Hone the Joiner. At this Tryal, Sir Nicholas Butler, the Anabaptiſt-Quack, made ſome time after a Privy-Counſellor, ſwore, Hone was the very Man who projected the taking off the King and Duke with Croſs-Bows from Bow-Steeple; of which he had given the King Information. This is the ſame Story we have already told. Sir Robert Southwel went to Bow-Steeple to find out the Plotter, and did indeed find a Rule under a Carpenter's Great-Coat, which he thought had been a Blunderbuſs; and groping for it under the Man's Coat, had like to have been taken up for a Pick-Pocket. And ſo the Caſe appear'd ſo plain, ſays Echard, that the Jury found him guilty of High-Treaſon, without going from the Bar.

A. D. 1683.

And convicted.

I muſt here pauſe a little, for the Remainder of this Day's bloody Work cannot but give one the Pain of a violent Struggle between Decency and Indignation. Hiſtory rejects all intemperate Thoughts and Expreſſions; but how can one ſee one of the moſt noble, moſt virtuous, moſt innocent, and moſt belov'd Lords that ever liv'd, brought a Priſoner before Judges too infamous to be remember'd, but that Remembrance with Horror is part of the Puniſhment of their Guilt; and it is with this View that I name the wretched Accomplices in this Murder.

The whole Management of this Trial was with much Art, according to Echard; which is falſe, for the impious Proſecutors deſy'd the very Forms of Law, and in the moſt daring Outrage againſt Juſtice, harangu'd and rail'd this Great, this Good Man to death. Sir John Hawles's Remarks on Lord Ruſſel's Trial, prove him to be as much murder'd, as Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was: The Reaſons and Proofs are as plain as Argument and Evidence can make a thing; but being of ſome length, I muſt refer to them, and repeat what that judicious Lawyer Mr. Acherley writes of it. "As to Lord Ruſſel, the Treaſon "charg'd on him was a Conſpiracy to compaſs "the death of the King; but the Proof of the "Overt-Fact of that Treaſon was, That Lord "Ruſſel walk'd in a Room in Shepherd's Houſe "taſting Wine, when treaſonable Diſcourſes and "Conſultations paſs'd at a Table in that Room "between two other Men, Rumſey and Ferguſon: But none of the Witneſſes could ſay, "That Lord Ruſſel did by any Overt-Fact, either in ſpeaking or conſenting to, or approving, or abetting thoſe Proceedings or Diſcourſes, or ſo much as that he heard what paſs'd, but only that he might hear. This Evidence "might have been ſufficient to prove Miſpriſion "of Treaſon, but not High-Treaſon; however "to reach this Great Man's Blood, in revenge "for his carrying up the Bill of Excluſion, the "Proſecutors Sawyer and Finch confounded the "very Species of Treaſons, and all Diſtinctions

" between High-Treaſon and Miſpriſion of Trea" ſon. And the Judges, who pretended to be of " Counſel for the Priſoner in Matters of Law,
" did not inform the Jury of that Diſtinction;
" and ſo this Great Man was, by a PACK'D
" Jury, compos'd of Tradeſmen, who had no
" Freeholds in London where this Lord was
" try'd, convicted, condemn'd by the Court, and
" by the King's Warrant executed." For which he will moſt certainly have his Reward, and ſo will all the perjur'd Accomplices in this moſt horrid Murder. The King ſaw the virtuous and lovely Lady Ruſſel weeping at his Feet, imploring but a ſhort Reprieve of a few Weeks for her condemn'd Lord, with dry Eyes and a ſtony Heart, tho' ſhe was the Daughter of the Earl of Southampton, the beſt Friend he ever had in his Life.

We muſt not omit an Accident which happen'd at the Lord Ruſſel's Trial, tho' I do not think the Jury was influenc'd by it, as is ſaid by ſome ſober Writers, as well as by Echard; which is, that News being brought to the Court that the Earl of Eſſex had cut his Throat in the Tower, the King's Counſel dwelt much upon it as a Proof of the Plot. I am ſatisfy'd the Judges and Jury were determin'd, and they matter'd not Proofs or Circumſtances to reach this Great Man's Blood. And as to the Earl of Eſſex's cutting his own Throat, 'tis an Inſult on People's Underſtandings to require belief of it, as the Archdeacon does, without any regard to his own. What Sir John Hawles ſays of the Murder of the Earl of Eſſex, is enough to ſatisfy any reaſonable Man. " My Lord of Eſſex was kill'd, or " to be kill'd that Morning. They were ſenſible
" the Evidence againſt my Lord Ruſſel was " very defective, and that Accident was to help
" it out, &c." Mr. Coke ſpeaks of it thus:
" Whether my Lord of Eſſex kill'd himſelf, or
" was to be kill'd, I muſt obſerve, the King
" and his Brother were both in the Tower when
" the Act was done; and immediately notice was
" ſent to the Old-Baily, that in the worſt ſenſe
" uſe might be made of it by the King's Coun-
" ſel Sawyer and Finch, againſt my Lord Ruſ-
" ſel. The Blaze of the Earl's having murder'd
" himſelf, had its deſign'd Effect upon my Lord
" Ruſſel's Trial. The next Step was to ſatiſ-
" fy the Nation the Earl murder'd himſelf;
" and to this purpoſe the Coroner's Inqueſt
" muſt neceſſarily ſit, and give their Verdict:
" But ſo the Buſineſs was order'd, that before
" the Jury was impannel'd, the Earl's Body was " taken out of the Cloſet, where 'twas pretend-
" ed he murder'd himſelf, and ſtrip'd of his " Clothes, which were carry'd away, and
" the Cloſet waſh'd; and when one of the " Jury inſiſted upon ſeeing my Lord's Clothes
" in which he died, the Coroner was ſent for
" into another Room; and upon his return told
" the Jury, it was my Lord's Body, not his " Clothes they were to ſit upon. The Jury be" ing inclin'd to make a ſtricter Inquiſition than " the Coroner would have them do, mov'd for " an Adjournment, to give my Lord's Relations
" notice, that if they had any thing to ſay on
" my Lord's behalf, they might do it." 'Twas anſwer'd, The King has ſent for the Inquiſition, and will not riſe from the Council-Board till it is brought. Let us add what the Biſhop of Saliſbury ſays of it, at leaſt as much of it as agrees with a Relation of this Matter by a Gentleman who examin'd the Boy and Girl very ſtrictly at the time when their Diſcovery was firſt talk'd of. He told me what the Biſhop tells us: A Boy and a Girl did report, that they heard great Crying in the Earl's Lodgings, and that they ſaw a bloody Razor flung out at Window, which was taken up by a Woman that came out of the Houſe where he was lodg'd. Theſe Children reported this confidently that very Day when they went to their ſeveral Homes, they were both about ten or twelve Years old. The Boy went backward and forward in his Story, ſometimes affirming it, and at other times denying it; but his Father had an Office in the Cuſtom-Houſe, ſo it was thought he prevail'd with him to deny it, but the Girl ſtood firmly to her Story. The Simplicity of the Children inclin'd many to believe it. And how could any one disbelieve it that heard them tell their Story after knowing to what wicked end the Murder was committed? We cloſe this Tragedy with the Account Foreigners give of it, L'on apoſta des Gens de neant pour etre temoins d'une Conſpiration Proteſtante qu'on forgea, pour laquelle my Lord Ruſſel, Col. Algernoon Sidney, & l'Alderman Corniſh, *furent executez, le Comte d'*Eſſex fut egorge a la Tour, &c. They ſuborn'd ſome of the Scum of the People to be Witneſſes of a Proteſtant Plot which they forg'd, and for which my Lord Ruſſel, Col. Sidney, and Alderman Corniſh were executed, and the Earl of Eſſex's Throat was cut. Echard, to clear the King and his Brother of this tragical Incident, ſays there gradually roſe many ſcandalous Reports, which is falſe; for the Story of the Boy and Girl did not riſe gradually. My Lord of Sarum aſſures us it roſe immediately, that very Day, as ſoon as the Children got home. As to the noble Family's not proſecuting the Matter, 'tis plain they could hope for no Succeſs againſt the Perſons concern'd in the Murder; if they were not too high for Proſecution, they were ſure to be protected, and the Family was not ſure of Evidence ſufficient to convict them, or of a Jury if they could have got Evidence; and to ſtir in ſuch a Buſineſs without being able to go thro' with it, would have been fatal to thoſe who already lay too much at the Mercy of a mercileſs Court.

Earl of Eſſex murder'd.

Mr. G.

The Lord Ruſſel was with great difficulty perſuaded to make a ſort of Submiſſion to the two Brothers, who were implacably ſet againſt him. He offer'd in caſe of Pardon to live abroad, and never more to concern himſelf in the Affairs of England; but they were both deaf as the Winds in a Tempeſt, and the Duke of York deſcended ſo low in his Revenge, as to deſire that this innocent Lord might be executed before his own Door in Bloomsbury Square, an Inſult the King himſelf could not conſent to. The brave and generous Lord Cavendiſh offer'd two ways to reſcue him, the one was to change Clothes with him, and to remain in Priſon, while my Lord Ruſſel made his Eſcape; the other was for a choice Party of Horſe to attack the Guard, as the Coach paſt by the Street turning into Smithfield; while another Party did the ſame on the Old Bailey Side, to take my Lord out, and mounting him on a Horſe, make off with him, which it was ſuppos'd the People would have facilitated. But Lord Ruſſel would hear of neither of them, nor by any means conſent that his Friends ſhould risk their own Lives to ſave his; but ſubmitting himſelf patiently to his Fate, he prepar'd to receive the dreadful Stroke with the Meekneſs as well as the Innocence of a Lamb. Biſhop Burnet attended him, after he was condemn'd, in Priſon, and afterwards to the Scaffold, and gives this Account of his Chriſtian and Heroical Behaviour. " The laſt Week of his Life he was ſhut
" up all the Mornings, as he himſelf deſired; a" bout Noon I came to him, and ſtaid with him
" till Night, all the while he expreſs'd a very
" Chriſtian Temper, without Sharpneſs or Re-

His Behaviour after Condemnation.

A. D. 1683.

" ſentment, Vanity or Affectation; his whole " Behaviour look'd like a Triumph over Death. " Upon ſome Occaſions, as at Table, or when " his Friends came to ſee him, he was decently " cheerful; I was by him when the Sheriffs " came to ſhew him the Warrant for his Execu- " tion; he read it with Indifference, and when " they were gone he told me, it was not decent " to be merry with ſuch a Matter, otherwiſe he " was near telling Rich (who, tho' he was now " of the other ſide, yet had been a Member of " the Houſe of Commons, and had voted for the " Excluſion) that they ſhould never ſit together " in that Houſe any more to vote for the Bill of " Excluſion. The Day before his Death he fell " a bleeding at the Noſe. Upon that he ſaid to " me pleaſantly, I ſhall not now let Blood to di- " vert this, that will be done to-morrow. At " Night it rain'd hard, and he ſaid, ſuch a Rain " to-morrow will ſpoil a great Show, which is a " dull thing in a rainy Day. He ſaid the Sins " of his Youth lay heavy upon him, but he hop'd " God had forgiven them, for he was ſure he had " forſaken them, and for many Years he had walk- " ed before God with a ſincere Heart. If in his " publick Actings he had committed Errors, they " were only the Errors of his Underſtanding, for " he had no private Ends, nor ill Deſigns of his " own in them. He was ſtill of Opinion that the " King was limited by Law, and that when he " broke thro' thoſe Limits, his Subjects might " defend themſelves, and reſtrain him; he " thought a violent Death was a very deſirable " way of ending one's Life; it was only to be " expoſed, to be a little gazed at, and to ſuffer " the Pain of one Minute, which he was confi- " dent was not equal to the Pain of drawing a " Tooth. He ſaid he felt none of thoſe Tranſ- " ports that ſome good People felt, but he had a " full Calm in his Mind, no Palpitation at " Heart, nor trembling at the Thoughts of " Death. He was much concern'd at the Cloud " that ſeem'd to be now over his Country, but " he hop'd his Death ſhould do more Service " than his Life could have done. Tillotſon was " oft with him the laſt Week. We thought Re- " ſiſtance in the Condition we were then in was " not lawful. He ſaid he had not Leiſure to en- " ter into Diſcourſes of Politicks, but he thought " a Government limited by Law was only a " Name, if the Subjects might not maintain " thoſe Limitations by Force, otherwiſe all " was at the Diſcretion of the Prince; that " was contrary to all the Notions he had liv'd in " of our Government, but he ſaid there was no- " thing among them but the Embrios of things " that were never like to have any Effect, and " that were now quite diſſolv'd." And there you have the Sum and Subſtance of the Presbyterian Plot.

A Scaffold being erected in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, the Lord Ruſſel was carry'd to the Place of Sacrifice, Saturday the 21ſt of July, attended by Dr. Tillotſon and Dr. Burnet, who aſſiſted him in his Devotions to the laſt Moment of Life. His Lordſhip declar'd there, in the Words of a dying Man, that he knew nothing of a Plot againſt the King's Perſon or Government. The ſame he atteſted in the Paper he left with the Sheriff, That he had never any Deſign of changing the Government, and would have ſuffer'd any Extremity rather than have conſented to any Deſign to take away the King's Life, that he dy'd innocent of the Crime he ſtood condemn'd for; and he repeated again, as I never had any Deſign againſt the King's Life, or the Life of any Man whatſoever, ſo I never was in any Contrivance of altering the Government. In the Letter he wrote to the King he proteſted he was innocent as to all Deſigns againſt his Perſon or Government. He ſaid on the Scaffold, he imputed his preſent Sufferings to his being earneſt for the Excluſion Bill. He forgave his Enemies, and charg'd his Friends to think of no Revenge, he concluded from the Heats that were in chooſing Sheriffs that Matter would end as it now did. How ſtupidly wicked muſt North and Rich look at that juſt Reproach! He added, I am not ſurpriz'd to find it fall upon myſelf, and wiſh it may end in me. Killing by Forms of Law is the worſt ſort of Murder. After theſe dying Words of ſuch an illuſtrious Martyr for the Proteſtant Religion, with what Indignation muſt the Reader find his ſincere Aſſertions term'd enormous Falſhoods, as Sprat wickedly calls them, in which he is faithfully copied by Echard, who adds, Moſt were ready to think 'twas drawn up with more Art than was agreeable to his Lordſhip's known Simplicity and Sincerity, therefore others were ſuſpected to have the wording of it. How do Echard and Sprat labour to murder his pious Memory, as their Judges and Jury murder'd his Perſon? Biſhop Burnet ſays of it, He was three days employ'd for ſome time in the Morning, to write out his Speech. He order'd four Copies to be made of it, all which he ſign'd; and Biſhop Burnet offered to take his Oath, that the Speech was penn'd by Lord Ruſſel, when he was afterwards examin'd before the King and Council. After Lord Ruſſel had deliver'd his Paper to the Sheriff, he pray'd by himſelf, then Dr. Tillotſon pray'd with him. After that he pray'd again by himſelf. He then undreſs'd, and laid his Head on the Block, without the leaſt Change of Countenance, and it was cut off at two Strokes.

And at the Place of Execution.

His laſt Paper.

I am in too much concern to reflect further on his Lordſhip's Sufferings; and I doubt not the Reader will do it ſufficiently, eſpecially on that impious Suggeſtion in the Archdeacon's Hiſtory, that his Death was a Judgment upon him for his thirſting after the Blood of others. The day before Lord Ruſſel was beheaded, Captain Walcot, Mr. Hone, and Mr. Rouſe, were hang'd, drawn and quarter'd at Tyburn, for the Plot. Biſhop Burnet ſays, Walcot, at his death, deny'd the whole Buſineſs of the Rye-houſe Plot, which proves it to be a deviliſh Invention of Weſt's; for Walcot, according to Echard, was to have been a chief Agent in it; and the Biſhop ſays, it made Weſt appear ſo black, the Court could make no more uſe of him. Hone was a ſort of Madman fitter for Bedlam than a Trial. Rouſe deny'd he was ever in any Deſign againſt the King's Life. Theſe Men dying as they did, continues the Biſhop, was ſuch a Diſgrace to the Witneſſes, that the Court ſaw it was not fit to make any further uſe of them. Echard affirms, that the belief of the Plot was now general, and that the Diſcovery of it ſhew'd the Neceſſity of Paſſive Obedience, which he ſays to juſtify that Maſs of Nonſenſe and Impudence heap'd together in the deteſtable Decree now made at Oxford, July 21, wherein that Univerſity declar'd Mr. Baxter and Mr. Jenkins to be impious and heretical; Dr. Owen and Mr. Samuel Johnſon to be blaſphemous and infamous, and Revolution Principles to be damnable Doctrines. Their Books were alſo to be burnt in the publick Court of the Schools; but their damnable Decree was burnt afterwards by the hands of the common Hangman. However, the reverend Hiſtorian extols it as an acceptable Preſent to the King, as well as the Cartloads of nonſenſical Addreſſes, with which his royal Ears were dinn'd; and, to add to the general Exultation, when there was not a ſenſi-

A. D. 1683. ble, ſober Proteſtant in the Kingdom, who did not weep over the ſad Condition it was in, the King publiſh'd a Declaration of the Conſpiracy, and, to mock God as well as the World, order'd a day of Thankſgiving for his Deliverance from the imaginary Danger he had been in. The Hiſtorian is ſo fooliſh, as to commend the Papiſts for ſinging Maſs, and having ſome extraordinary Idolatry on the Thankſgiving-Day. Upon the 28th of September, the Princeſs Anne was marry'd to George Prince of Denmark; and ſix days after the King ſeiz'd the Franchiſes of the City of London, and turn'd out the Lord-Mayor Sir William Pritchard, to turn him in again by his Commiſſion. Theſe other Changes were alſo made.

City Franchiſes ſeiz'd.

Sir George Treby Recorder, was turn'd out, and that ſenſeleſs Tool Sir Thomas Jenour put in. Sir Thomas Player, Chamberlain, was diſplac'd, and in his room was put one Aldworth.

The Lord-Mayor drank to Peter Daniel, and he was made Sheriff, being a Man of as mean Parts as Fortune. The other Sheriff was Sir Samuel Daſhwood, but a ſeaſonable Man. Sir Henry Tulſe had a Commiſſion from the King to be Lord-Mayor, as long as the King pleas'd. So that all Things, ſays Echard, ſeem'd now to be in a quiet eaſy Condition, only the Rabble fell upon the Dutch Ambaſſador's Coach, and dangerouſly wounded his Lady, probably becauſe ſhe was a Presbyterian. Echard thinks the Court was too dilatory in the Proſecution of the Plot; but Biſhop Burnet aſſures us, "Great "pains were taken to find out more Witneſſes. Par- "dons and Rewards were offer'd very freely; but "none came in, which made it evident nothing "was well laid or brought ſo near Execution as "the Witneſſes had depos'd; otherwiſe People "would have been crowding in for Pardons. "All People were apprehenſive of very black "Deſigns." Echard juſt now told us the Exultation was general, "when they ſaw Jef- "feries made Lord Chief Juſtice, who was "ſcandalouſly vicious, and was drunk every "day; beſides a Drunkenneſs of Fury in his "Temper, that look'd like Enthuſiaſm, he did "not conſider the Decencies of his Poſt. Jefferies a Scoundrel.

We muſt now ſay ſomething of the Duke of Monmouth, who had abſconded ever ſince the Proclamation for apprehending the accus'd Perſons, and deſign'd to engage in the Spaniſh Service. The Marquis of Hallifax ſeeing Matters run ſo much further than he apprehended, thought nothing would ſtop that ſo effectually, as the bringing the Duke of Monmouth again into Favour. The Duke wrote ſeveral Letters to the King, penn'd with an extraordinary Force, according to Biſhop Burnet. The Lord Hallifax drew them all. The King was mollify'd by them, and reſolv'd to forgive and forget every thing in caſe the Duke would confeſs the Plot, which he refus'd to do. The King promis'd that no uſe ſhould be made of it; but he inſiſted upon it, that the Duke ſhould tell the whole Truth of the Matter. Upon which Monmouth conſented to ſatisfy the King, and confeſs'd ſome things in general, the Embrio's, as Lord Ruſſel term'd them. The Duke of Monmouth could not be brought to make any other Submiſſion to the Duke of York than to ask his Pardon in the way of Compliment. Lord Hallifax preſs'd him earneſtly, upon his firſt Appearance, to be ſilent, and for a while to bear the Cenſures of the Town. The King ſpoke nothing of the Reconciliation to the Duke of York, till the day before it was to be done. He was much ſtruck with it; yet the Duke's Creatures in the Cabinet-Council mov'd that for Form-ſake Monmouth ſhould be for ſome days put in the Tower. The King cut that off, by ſaying he had promis'd to pardon him. The Duke of Monmouth, as was agreed, made an humble Confeſſion of his Offences in general Words to the King, and a Compliment to the Duke, begging that he would intercede with his Majeſty to pardon him. The King receiv'd the Duke of Monmouth with a Fondneſs, which confounded all the Duke's Party. He us'd him more tenderly than he had done formerly. The Duke of York put on an outward Appearance of being very well pleas'd with it. The King ſaid next day, that James, for ſo he call'd him, had confirm'd all that Howard had ſworn, which being carry'd to the Duke of Monmouth, he deny'd that he had ever ſaid any ſuch thing, adding, that Lord Howard was a Lyar and a Rogue, which his Friends reported about Town, and the next Gazette mention'd the King had pardon'd him, upon his confeſſing the late Plot. The Marquis of Hallifax preſs'd the Duke of Monmouth to paſs this over, and to impute it to the Importunity of his Enemies, and to the King's Eaſineſs, but he could not prevail. The Duke of Monmouth had too much Honour to countenance a pretended Confeſſion of a pretended Plot; yet he ſaid little till his Pardon was paſt, and then he openly deny'd he had made the Confeſſion mention'd in the Gazette, which was a plain Contradiction to what the King had ſaid. Some were brought by the Duke of York to the King, who confirm'd they had heard the Duke of Monmouth ſay, He had not confeſs'd the Plot. Upon which the King order'd him to give a Confeſſion of it under his hand. Lord Hallifax endeavour'd to perſuade him to it, and at laſt prevail'd with him to write a Letter to that purpoſe, which he carry'd to the King, and the King was ſatisfy'd. But the Duke of Monmouth reflecting on what he had done, thought it a baſe thing. Tho' this was no Evidence, yet he was apprehenſive it might have Influence on Juries, to make them believe every thing that might be ſworn by other Witneſſes, when, from his Confeſſion, they were poſſeſs'd with a general Belief of the Plot. So he went, full of Uneaſineſs to the King, and deſir'd he might have his Letter again in the Terms of an Agony like Deſpair. The King gave it back, but preſs'd him vehemently to comply with his Deſire; and, among other things, the Duke of Monmouth ſaid, the King us'd this Expreſſion, If you do not yield in this you will ruin me, plainly intimating, Without you confirm Howard's Evidence, I ſhall be charg'd charg'd with the Blood of the noble Perſons that have been, and will be murder'd upon it. The Duke of Monmouth remain'd firm; ſo the King forbad him the Court, and a few days after he went to Holland, where he appear'd publickly, and was treated by the Prince of Orange with a very particular Reſpect.

Reconcil'd to the King.

Baniſh'd.

We have mention'd that Prince's ſhort Tour into England after the Oxford Parliament. Biſhop Burnet tells us, He had then much private Diſcourſe with his Majeſty at Windſor. The King aſſur'd him he would keep Things quiet, and not give way to the Duke's Eagerneſs as long as he liv'd. He added, I am confident, whenever the Duke ſhall come to reign, he will be ſo reſtleſs and violent, that he cannot hold it four Years to an end. The King ſhew'd the Prince one of his Seals, and told him, that whatever he might write to him, if the Letter was not ſeal'd with that Seal, he was to look on it as only drawn from him by Importunity. The King wrote ſome terrible Letters againſt the Countenance he gave to the Duke of Monmouth, but they not being ſeal'd with that Seal, the Prince inferr'd the King had a mind he ſhould keep him about him, and uſe him well.

Col. Sidney try'd.

All things being prepar'd, ſays Echard, on the 21ſt of November came on the Trial of Col. Algernon Sidney, Brother to the late Earls of Leiceſter and Rumney. This noble Perſon was murder'd after the ſame manner as Lord Ruſſel had been, by Forms of Law. Sir John Hawles demonſtrates it in ſeveral Inſtances, and by ſeveral Arguments, to which I refer. But Mr. Acherley's Remarks being leſs known, I ſhall make uſe of them. The Murderers were as follow.

The Treaſon charg'd on Colonel Sidney, was for compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King; and the Overt-Fact of the Treaſon was, That Sidney did compoſe and write a Libel, wherein he aſſerted thus: The Power originally in the People of England is delegated to the Parliament. He, innuendo King Charles, is ſubject to the Law of God, as he is a Man; to the People that makes him a King, as he is a King, &c. The Indictment did not alledge one word of publiſhing the Libel. The Proof of it was made by one Witneſs only, who, by a Warrant from a Secretary of State, broke open Sidney's Study, and found there this Libel; and then as to his writing it, that could not be prov'd but by Similitude of Hands. Let us repeat Finch the Sollicitor's Argument after Acherley, becauſe it worry'd this Great Man to death, and brought the Guilt of his innocent Blood on the Head of the Pleader. The Sollicitor ſaid, "That the Matter of this Libel, and the writing of it, was an imagining how to compaſs the Death of King Charles II. and the writing it was an Overt-Fact of that Treaſon and that Scribere eſt Agere. He urg'd with Vehemence, That imagining the Death of the King is a Fact of the Mind, and is Treaſon even while that Fact remains covert in the Mind, altho' no ſuch Treaſon can be puniſh'd, becauſe there is no way to prove that Covert-Fact. But when once there is an Overt-Fact, that is, any thing that does manifeſt and prove that Covert-Fact of the Mind, the Law takes hold of it, and puniſhes it as High-Treaſon." What is there in the World that a Man can ſet ſuch a Value on, as to think it equivalent to the Guilt of ſuch a Speech? I might have ſaid to the Nonſenſe and Impudence; but a Perſon may be impudent and nonſenſical, without being criminal. And what Crime can be greater, than to murder Law as well as Reaſon, to take away the Life of a noble and virtuous Gentleman? And it is remarkable, that Finch, or Sawyer, or both of them ſhew'd they were very capable of Nonſenſe by the Paſſage they pick'd out of Sidney's Book, to put into their Indictment, which happen'd to have that Infirmity, tho' their Heads were not clear enough to find it out.

A. D. 1683.

Mr. Acherley tells us, as to that Clauſe which ſays, That a King is ſubject to the People that makes him a King, in as much as he is a King, Sidney inſiſted that the Clauſe was Nonſenſe; for to ſay that a People ſhould make a King, or ſupream Governor to govern them, and yet to ſay, That he muſt be ſubject to, or govern'd by them, was a ſenſeleſs Contradiction in itſelf, and of no force, and ought to be treated as ſuch.

Col. Sidney defended the firſt Sentence, That the Power originally in the People was delegated to the Parliament, with ſo much Strength of Reaſon and Eloquence, that none but a parcel of ſuch perjur'd mercenary Wretches, Judges, Counſel and Jury, could have heard him without Admiration and Conviction.

Col. Sidney defends the Conſtitution.

He ſaid, the Aſſertion was evident; for the Parliament conſiſted of the King, Lords, and Commons, and whatſoever Power was in the People, if they ever had any, was doubtleſs delegated to the Parliament; or however, if it were queſtionable, that Poſition was no more than what was written in the Law of England, for by the Statute 25 Henry VIII. cap. 21. it is declared, That this Nation is free from any Man's Laws but ſuch only as had been devis'd by the People, and orignally ordain'd and eſtabliſh'd by their Conſent; which Conſent of the People could not be given but by their Repreſentatives, to whom they had delegated their Power to give it in Parliament. And further, that this Poſition was prov'd by the common Form of Acts of Parliament, which runs thus: Be it enacted, or made a Law, by the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, by and with the Conſent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and by the Authority of the ſame, i. e. the ſame Parliament of which the King is a Part: for the word Authority naturally imports a derivative Power proceeding from ſome Original. And as to the Commons, their Authority is viſibly and literally deriv'd from their Conſtituents the People, who elect and impower them: For the original Writ of Summons, and the Law or Conſtitution, require the People to elect and impower their Repreſentatives to do ſuch things in Parliament, as ſhall be requiſite to be done touching the State of the Kingdom, and to pay them Fees for their Service. As to the King and the Lords, their Authority muſt therefore neceſſari-

y

A. D. 1683. rily be deriv'd from the ſame Conſtitution, and the Law of the Land: for to derive one Part of Joint-Authority from one Original, and another Part of that Joint-Authority from another Original, is not conceptible.

There is much more in Acherley of Col. Sidney's Defence, equally reaſonable and nervous, but it was thrown away on a proſtituted hireling Court, and a PACK'D Jury, as the Learned Lawyer terms them.

Col. Sidney's Book was an Anſwer to Filmer's Patriarcha; by which the latter aſſerted the Divine Right of Monarchy upon the eldeſt Son's ſucceeding to the Authority of the Father. Biſhop Burnet tells us, Filmer's Patriarcha was ſo poorly writ, that it was ſtrange Sidney beſtow'd ſo much pains in anſwering it. The only Witneſs againſt Sidney as to the Plot, was Lord Howard; and the Earl of Clare, the Earl of Angleſey, Dr. Burnet, Mr. Howard, and others depos'd, That the Lord Howard had told them, as he did with Aſſeverations, that he knew of no Plot: but he was poor, Col. Sidney us'd to lend him Money, and the Court having brib'd him to take a falſe Oath againſt his Benefactor, all Objections to his Evidence were over-born by the Court. Mr. Blake a Draper ſwore, That he having ask'd Howard when he was to have his Pardon, the latter reply'd, Not till the Drudgery of ſwearing is over. Howard came to Sidney's Houſe and aſſur'd his Servants, there was nothing againſt their Maſter, deſiring them to bring his Goods to his own Houſe; and Sidney ſhew'd how improbable it was, that Howard, who could not raiſe five Men, and had not five Shillings to pay them, a fit Tool for the Court to work with, ſhould be taken into ſuch Conſultations. The execrable Jefferies often interrupted Col. Sidney with Rudeneſs to put him in a Paſſion, to which he was ſubject. The Jury did the Buſineſs for which they were pack'd, and brought in the Colonel guilty. Four or five Days after he reciev'd Sentence of Death, and the ſhameleſs and worthleſs Withens, one of the Judges, gave him the Lye in open Court, which he bore patiently. Sidney ſent to the Lord Halliſax, who was his Nephew by Marriage, to ſhew a Paper he had drawn to the King. It contain'd the Hardſhips he had ſuffer'd, and an Appeal to his Majeſty: upon which that Monſter Jefferies ſaid, either Sidney muſt die, or I muſt die. His Execution was reſpited for three Weeks, the Trial being univerſally cry'd out on as a Piece of moſt enormous Injuſtice. When he ſaw the Warrant for his Execution, he expreſs'd no Concern at it. He told the Sheriffs Daniel and Daſhwood, who brought it, he would not expoſtulate upon any thing on his own account, for the World was now nothing to him; but he deſir'd they would conſider how guilty they were of his Blood, who had not return'd a Fair Jury, but one Pack'd, and as they were directed by the King's Sollicitor Finch. He added, I ſpeak this to you not for my own ſake, but for your ſake. At which, one of the Sheriffs burſt out into Tears, probably Daſhwood, for Daniel's Heart and Head were not capable of ſuch Emotions. He was brought to the Scaffold on Tower-Hill the 7th of December, and deliver'd the Sheriffs a written Paper. He excus'd his not ſpeaking, ſaying, This is an Age which makes Truth paſs for Treaſon. He pray'd that the Nation might be preſerv'd from Idolatry and Tyranny, and rejoic'd that he ſuffer'd for the Old Cauſe, in which he was ſo early engag'd. Echard ſays of it, It was ſo enthuſiaſtical and ſhocking, that his Death was much leſs pity'd and lamented. And Biſhop Burnet ſays, Theſe laſt Words furniſh'd much Matter to the Scriblers. His Lordſhip adds, He met Death with an Unconcernedneſs that became one who had ſet up Marcus Brutus for his Pattern. His Head was cut off at one Blow.

Col. Sidney condemn'd. Beheaded.

On the laſt Day of Michaelmas-Term, the Lord Brandon Gerrard, John Hampden Eſq; Mr. Booth, John Trenchard Eſq; Mr. Charlton, and Major Wildman, who had been impriſon'd for the Plot, were bail'd, there being but one Witneſs againſt them, but Mr. Hampden had Notice of Tryal next Term. The King's Counſel dropt the Treaſon, and he was then found guilty of a high Miſdemeanor, for which the Judges fin'd him 40000 Pounds. They alſo fin'd Laurence Braddon 2000 l. for endeavouring to find out the Earl of Eſſex's Murder; the Reverend Mr. Samuel Johnſon 500 Marks, for writing Julian the Apoſtate; and Sir Samuel Barnardiſton 10000 Pounds for being the Foreman of Shaftesbury's Jury, tho' the Pretence was for writing News into the Country, which the Court did not like. Sawyer, who, as Coke obſerves, took Money with both Hands, fiſh'd for theſe unjuſt Cauſes, and was never without a Jury to give him a Verdict. Fez and Turkey were deſirable Countries for Engliſhmen to dwell in at this Juncture, when the Learned Lawyer makes this Exclamation: Oh Conſtitution! into what a Degree of Contempt and Weakneſs, and into what an abject Degree of Slavery waſt thou and thy Conſtituents ſunk and fallen! as if thou hadſt no Exiſtence but what proceeded from one part of thy own Inſtitution, and that too dependent on his Will and Pleaſure, &c. Acherley.

Honours and Preferments might now be crowded into the end of this Year's Hiſtory, but that of the Houſe of Stuart was not written for ſuch Purpoſes. The Compleat Hiſtorian informs us, William Halford of Welham, and Edward Wigley of Scrapſoft in the County of Leiceſter, were knighted; the Lord-Keeper North made Baron Guildford; Prince George of Denmark, the Duke of Somerſet, and the Duke of Northumberland, Knights of the Garter; Charles Earl of Burford, Duke of St. Albans; and the following Lawyers, Sergeants at Law.

Tangier demoliſh'd.

About this time Tangier was demoliſh'd. The Lord Dartmouth was intruſted with that important Commiſſion. The Mole was now brought near to Perfection, and the Place had been all along cry'd up as the Key of the Mediterranean. The Portugal Ambaſſador offer'd a vaſt Sum, if the King would reſtore it to his Maſter; but King Charles did not think it would be paid, and he wanted the Money which it coſt to keep, that he might ſtave off the ſitting of a Parliament, which both King and the Duke were very much afraid of, notwithſtanding the ranting Compliments they receiv'd from the Addreſſers. The Engliſh were this Year driven out of Bantam in the Eaſt-Indies, and the King

A. D. 1683. caus'd the Company to be preſs'd to demand Satisfaction, but they were very ſlow in it, fearing the Court intended to make an ill uſe of it.

HAving paſs'd with the Reader thro' ſo many Fields of Blood, ſo many Scenes of Cruelty and Oppreſſion, one might hope for a a cleaner Road to the End of our Journey; but the Paths are ſtill the ſame, and if they are not quite ſo bloody, they are as difficult and dangerous. William Wright Eſq; one of the Aldermen of Oxford, having defended the Privileges of that City, when the brib'd Majority of that Corporation offer'd to deliver them up, was in April thrown into Jayl, and not let out under 30000 Pounds Bail. Mr. Langley Curtis the Publiſher was fin'd 500 Pounds, and order'd to ſtand in the Pillory, for printing a Pamphlet call'd the Lord Ruſſel's Ghoſt. Mr. Cawdron, Steward to the Earl of Clare, was fin'd 100 Pounds, and order'd to ſtand in the Pillory, for ſpeaking ſomething againſt this excellent Government. William Sacheverell Eſq; George Gregory Eſq; Charles Hutchinſon Eſq; all of Nottingham, and about 18 other Perſons, were found guilty of a Riot, for oppoſing the Surrender of the Charter of that Town. The Duke of York ſu'd John Dutton Colt Eſq; of Herefordſhire, in an Action of Scandalum Magnatum, for ſaying the Duke was a Papiſt, &c. and the Jury gave that bigotted Papiſt 100000 Pounds Damages. Samuel Packer, Depury to Richard Goodenough when he was Under-Sheriff of London and Middleſex, was fin'd 50 Marks, and order'd to ſtand in the Pillory, for publiſhing ſomething which Jefferies call'd a ſcandalous Libel. And Mr. Francis Smith before-mention'd, was fin'd 500 Pounds, and order'd to ſtand in the Pillory for publiſhing the Raree-Show. But theſe Proſecutions were little Amuſements to keep the Judges and Juries in play, till ſome more agreeable Buſineſs offer'd, and more Blood was to be ſpilt. In the two next Murders the Judges took it all upon themſelves, and would not give the Sheriffs the trouble to impannel Juries.

Tyrannical Acts.

The firſt whom they deliver'd to the Hangman, was Mr. James Holloway, Citizen and Linen-Draper of Briſtol; who being nam'd among the reſt of the Plotters, and knowing that little Mercy or Juſtice was to be expected from the Court and their Creatures, tranſported himſelf to the Leward-Iſlands, where he was ſeiz'd, and from thence ſent in Chains to England under an Outlawry for Treaſon. The Attorney-General offer'd him a Trial, if he deſir'd it; but he was prevail'd on by the hope of a Pardon, to ſubmit, and confeſs all he knew; which was, that he and two more had undertaken to manage a Deſign for ſeizing on Briſtol, but he ſaid they had never made any progreſs in it. He ſaid alſo at the Meetings at London, Rumſey and Weſt were often talking of Lopping, and he did not believe that above five Perſons approv'd of it. Echard very falſely avers, he confirm'd moſt of the Particulars that had been open'd at the Trials of the Perſons executed: For here he ſays, there were only three Perſons acquainted with the Riſing in the Weſt, and only five with the Ryehouſe-Plot, and even of thoſe five, Holloway names Rumbald and his Brother to be two: Whereas Biſhop Burnet informs us, Rumbald at his Death deny'd the Truth of that pretended Plot, tho' he own'd Weſt and Rumſey had talk'd of Lopping, but nothing was either laid, or ſo much as reſolv'd on. Holloway was thought by the Court not to have ſpoken all he knew, but the Man's Conſcience was not of their make, and he would not have ly'd before God to have ſav'd a thouſand Lives. My Lord of Sarum tells it thus: "So ſince what he had acknowledg'd "made himſelf guilty of enough to hang him, he "was executed, and died with a firm Conſtan-"cy. He ſhew'd great Preſence of Mind; he "obſerv'd the Partiality that was evident in "managing this Plot, different from what had "appear'd in managing the Popiſh Plot. The "ſame Men who were call'd Rogues when "they ſwore againſt Papiſts, were look'd on as "honeſt Men when they turn'd their Evidence "againſt Proteſtants. In all his Anſwers to the "Sheriffs Daniel and Daſhwood, who at the "Place of Execution troubled him with many "impertinent Queſtions, he anſwer'd them with "ſo much Life, and yet with ſo much Temper, "that it appear'd he was no ordinary Man. His "Speech was ſuppreſs'd for ſome Days, but it "broke out at laſt. In it he expreſs'd a deep "Senſe of Religion. His Prayer was an excel-"lent Compoſure. The Credit of the Rye-"Plot receiv'd a great Blow by his Confeſſion. "All that Diſcourſe about an Inſurrection, in "which the Day was ſaid to be ſet, appear'd "now to be a Fiction." Echard again very falſely affirms, he declar'd his Belief of the Plot, and that he was concern'd in it. Whereas he declar'd, they had never made any Progreſs in the Inſurrection, and that the Rye-Plot was only Talk, well deſcrib'd by Biſhop Burnet. So that it was plain, after all the ſtory they had made of the Plot, it had gone no farther, than that a Company of inconſiderable Perſons were framing Schemes among themſelves that were never like to come to any thing, and that Rumſey and Weſt had puſh'd on the Deſign of the Aſſaſſination, to which tho' few agreed, yet too many were ſo fooliſh as not to diſcover it.

A. D. 1684.

They are not yet ſatiated with Slaughter and Blood; as yet the Manes of Coleman, Green, Berry, Hill, Plunket, and the five Jeſuits are not appeas'd: And Sir Thomas Armſtrong being bought of the Scout at Leyden in Holland, by Sir Chudleigh King Charles's Envoy, was ſent to London, and executed June the 20th, ſome time after the Execution of Holloway, without the Formality of a Trial. And I can't but ſay, I am better pleas'd with this, than with any of the other Murders committed by Judges and Juries, becauſe the Law is not ſo much mock'd, tho' Juſtice is as much injur'd. Echard opens this tragical Scene with telling us, he was an ungovernable Gentleman, that the King had been very kind to him, and therefore he muſt expect no favour; that the Judges had nothing to do, but to appoint Execution. Which is falſe, if Sir John Hawles the Learned Sollicitor-General knew any thing of the matter. And he aſſures us, that no outlaw'd Perſon ever was deny'd his Trial; and it was the only Pretence to hang Sir Thomas Armſtrong, that he was outlaw'd for Treaſon. He ſays, It was Injuſtice to deny the Favour or Right of a Trial to Sir Thomas Armſtrong, which was never deny'd any Perſon before nor ſince; and if there was any doubt in the Caſe, as it cannot be deny'd there was, the Outlawry ought to have been wav'd. It was a vain and unjuſt Reaſon, and only intended to incenſe the King, aſſign'd by the Attorney Sawyer, that the Priſoner was one who was actually engag'd to go, upon the King's haſty coming to Town, to deſtroy him by the way; whereas the Priſoner offer'd to prove his Innocence in that and other Matters, and even that Objection againſt him was an Invention of the Attorney Sawyer for any thing appears, but that it was re-

Sir Thomas Armſtrong unjuſtly put to death.

A. D. 1684. reſolv'd to ſtop at nothing. Fitzharris and Colledge had hard Meaſure, and their Quarters were bury'd, but Sir Thomas Armſtrong*'s were expos'd, tho' the Proceedings againſt him were equally as unjuſtifiable as in the other two Caſes. Echard* places thoſe Quarters with particular Pleaſure, "His Head was ſet up on Weſtminſter-Hall between thoſe of Cromwell and Bradſhaw, one of his Quarters upon Temple-Bar, two others at Alderſgate and Aldgate, and the fourth was ſaid to be ſent down to Stafford, for which Town he had been a Burgeſs in Parliament." And becauſe the Reader may not think I accuſe the Popiſh Faction and their Abettors, when I obſerve that theſe Sacrifices were made to the Manes of the Prieſts and Jeſuits who ſuffer'd for Oates's Plot, ſee what Echard ſays on the Execution of Armſtrong: "He was executed on Friday the 20th of June, which was obſerv'd to be the ſame Day of the ſame Month, and the ſame Day of the Week, on which the five Jeſuits were executed in the ſame manner, at the ſame Place, juſt five Years before." Does not this inſinuate that his Death was an Effect of divine Vengeance for the Execution of the Popiſh Plotters? Sir Thomas aſſerted very poſitively, and upon his Death, That he never had any Deſign againſt the King's Life. What then did Sawyer deſerve for that falſe Suggeſtion mention'd by Hawles? The Archdeacon tells us how kind the King had been to Armſtrong, but would not tell us that Sir Thomas was Nephew by Marriage to the Earl of Clarendon, and that was Merit enough to entitle him to Juſtice.

Scotland. The Proceedings againſt Conventicles in Scotland were carry'd on by the Earl of Aberdeen Lord Chancellor, and the Duke of Queensbury Lord Treaſurer, with the utmoſt Severity, which drove the People into Church indeed, but out of Religion; for Biſhop Burnet informs us the Enemies to all Godlineſs obſerving the Ill-Nature on the one ſide, and the Timorouſneſs on the other, pleas'd themſelves in cenſuring them both, and by this means an impious atheiſtical Leaven began to corrupt moſt of the younger Sort, and the Beginnings of it were reckon'd from the Duke's Stay among them, and from his Court.

Duke of York corrupts Scotland.

One Home was condemn'd and executed for being at Bothwell-Bridge; the Evidence was his Kinſman, who ſwore falſely againſt him, and there was no other Witneſs; great Applications were made to the Duke of York for ſaving his Life, but, ſays Biſhop Burnet, he was not born under a pardoning Planet. Mr. Weir of Blakewood, Steward to the Marquis of Dowglaſs, was condemn'd to be hang'd for entertaining a Perſon who was only ſuſpected of having been at Bothwell-Bridge, but the Marquis obtain'd a Reprieve for him. The Tyranny was now become ſo intolerable in Scotland, that the Lord Cardroſs, and ſeveral Perſons of Quality, with great Numbers of other People of the Presbyterians reſolv'd to remove to Carolina, to which end Agents were ſent to London, to treat with the Patentees of that Colony, and thoſe Agents falling into Converſation with ſome Malecontents, ſeveral Scottiſh Gentlemen were brought into the Rye and the Presbyterian Plots, and clap'd up in Priſon, as the Earl of Tarras, who had marry'd the Dutcheſs of Monmouth's eldeſt Siſter, the eminent Mr. Baillie of Jerviſwood, and others. Mr. Baillie after twenty Months inhuman Treatment in Priſon, both in England and Scotland, was condemn'd and executed, when his blood-thirſty Proſecutors were afraid he would die under it. He deny'd any Plot againſt the King, Duke, or Government; and my Lord of Sarum ſays, The only Excuſe that was ever pretended for this infamous Proſecution was, that they were ſure he was guilty.

His Cruelty.

A. D. 1684.

The Duke of York's unparallel'd Cruelty.

What a Part the Duke of York acted in theſe Proſecutions, eſpecially when he was in Scotland, appears by what follows out of Burnet. "When any are ſtruck in the Boots it is done in the Preſence of the Council, and upon that occaſion almoſt all offer to run away, the Sight is ſo dreadful, that without an Order reſtraining ſuch a Number to ſtay, the Board would be forſaken; but the Duke while he had been in Scotland was ſo far from withdrawing, that he look'd on all the while with an unmov'd Indifference, and with an Attention, as if he had been to look on ſome curious Experiment; this gave a terrible Idea of him to all that obſerv'd it, as of a Man that had no Bowels nor Humanity in him." This is the Prince of whom Echard ſays, The Morning of his Reign ſeem'd every way to promiſe a ſerene and happy Seaſon.

Ireland. The Duke of Ormond kept things in pretty good Order in Ireland, but he could not hinder the Papiſts encreaſing in Strength and Intereſt, by the Countenance and Encouragement they had from the Court, as is thus related by Biſhop Burnet.

The Earl of Clancarty dying, left his Lady Guardian of his Children, it was one of the nobleſt and richeſt Families of the Iriſh Nation, which had always been Papiſts, but the Lady was a Proteſtant; and ſhe being afraid to truſt the Education of her Son to Ireland, tho' in Proteſtant Hands, conſidering the Danger he might be in from his Kindred of that Religion, brought him over to Oxford, and put him into the Hands of Dr. Fell Biſhop of Oxford, and Dean of Chriſt's-Church, where ſhe reckon'd he would be ſafe. Lord Clancarty had an Uncle Col. Maccarty, who both to pervert his Nephew, and make his own Court, got the King to write to the Biſhop of Oxford to let the young Lord come up, and ſee the Diverſions of the Town in the Chriſtmas Time, to which the Biſhop did too eaſily conſent: When he came to Town they marry'd him to one of the Lord Sunderland's Daughters, ſo he broke thro' all his Education, and ſoon after turn'd Papiſt. Dr. King, Archbiſhop of Dublin, informs us, that to ſhew the Sincerity of his Converſion he murder'd a Proteſtant Butcher at Mayallo, by toſſing him in a Blanket. My Lord of Sarum proceeds, "Thus the King ſuffer'd himſelf to be made an Inſtrument in one of the greateſt of Crimes, the taking an Infant out of the hand of a Guardian, and marrying him ſecretly, againſt which the Laws of all Nations have taken Care to provide very effectually."

King Charles acts againſt the Laws of all Nations.

At the latter end of this Reign the Earl of Rocheſter obtain'd by the Duke's means to be nam'd Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The King ſeem'd to be ſo uneaſy with him, that he was glad to ſend him away from the Court; and to mortify him, reſolv'd to put a General over the Army in Ireland, which us'd to be a Branch of the Lord Lieutenant's Commiſſion. Lord Rocheſter ſaid he could not be anſwerable for the Peace of the Kingdom, if the Army was not in a Dependance upon him, which had no Effect on the King, who ſeem'd to be the more pleas'd with it, becauſe it affected him ſo much. Col. Maccarty above-mention'd was to have a Regiment in the Iriſh Army, and Lord Halliſax expoſtulated that Matter with the King, who told Maccarty every word Lord Halliſax ſaid, and the Iriſhman expoſtulated the Matter with Halliſax; which ſufficiently proves the Countenance and En-

A. D. 1684. Encouragement the Iriſh Papiſts had from the King, and his Brother countenanc'd and encourag'd them much more, as we are inform'd by the late Archbiſhop of Dublin before-mention'd.

P. 22. We do not expect to find Matters mend in England, and if we ſtop'd here to conſider what a deſpicable Figure this once brave and renown'd Nation made in Europe at this time, it will require a good deal of Patience to preſerve Decency towards the two Princes that were the occaſion of it. If Foreign Affairs could have awaken'd the King, Biſhop Burnet ſays it, the French did enough this Summer in order to it, by bombarding and attacking the beautiful City of Genoa very unjuſtly and unreaſonably; ſuch an Aſſault that look'd liker the Violence of a Robber than the Attack of one that would obſerve Forms in his Conqueſts, ought to have provok'd all Princes, eſpecially ſuch as were powerful at Sea, to have join'd againſt a Prince, who by theſe Practices was become the common Enemy of Mankind; but we were now purſuing other Deſigns, from which it was reſolv'd that nothing from beyond Sea ſhould divert us.

French Kingwarr'd like a Robber.

However mean and contemptible we look'd abroad, the two Royal Brothers, for the Duke had now more of the Government than the King, were as terrible to the three Nations, as if they had conquer'd and enſlav'd them, which is hinted by the Archdeacon: The City of London ſeem'd in effect ſubdu'd, and was forc'd to ſubmit to the King's Pleaſure. Dr. Oates had been long in Diſgrace at Court, his Lodging, his Guard, and a great Part of his Penſion were taken from him, and on the tenth of May he was publickly arreſted at the Amſterdam Coffee-Houſe in an Action of Scandalum Magnatum, at the Suit of the Duke of York for calling him Traytor. He was hurry'd away to Wood-ſtreet Counter, and ſuffering Judgment to paſs by default in Trinity Term, the Jury gave the Duke 100,000 l. Damage. On May the ſixth a Trial was had at Guildhall before Jefferies, upon an Action brought by Sir William Pritchard late Lord Mayor of London againſt Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois for arreſting him, and another ſeaſonable Jury gave Pritchard 10,000 l. Damages. Mr. Elias Beſt was fin'd 1000 l. and order'd to ſtand thrice in the Pillory for ſpeaking againſt Popery and Arbitrary Power. Oates's two Men, Dalby and Nicholſon, were alſo convicted of ſpeaking ſomething like it, and puniſh'd accordingly. Mr. Butler of Northamptonſhire was proſecuted for preſenting and reading to the laſt Repreſentatives of that County, Michael Fleetwood Eſq; and John Park Eſq; an Addreſs from the Freeholders, for which he was fin'd 500 Marks; and to mingle ſome Blood with theſe pecuniary Puniſhments, two innocent Men, Mr. Roſwell a Presbyterian Miniſter, and Mr. Hayes a Banker were try'd for High Treaſon. Take the Account of Mr. Roſwell's Tryal from Dr. Calamy.

Tyrannical Acts.

On the 23d of September Mr. Thomas Roſwell, who was Miniſter of a diſſenting Congregation in Redriff was impriſon'd in the Gatehouſe at Weſtminſter by a Warrant from Jefferies for High Treaſon. A Bill was found againſt him at the Quarter Seſſions at Kingſton in Surrey, upon which he was arraign'd October the 15th, and try'd November the 18th following at the King's Bench Bar by a Surrey Jury, before Jefferies and three other Judges fit to ſit by him, Withens, Holloway, Walcot. The High Treaſon, as laid in the Indictment, and ſworn by the Witneſſes, was, that in a Sermon which he preach'd September the 14th he ſaid theſe Words, That the People, meaning the Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, make a flocking to our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, upon Pretence of healing the King's Evil, which he, meaning our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, could not do; but that we, meaning himſelf, and other traitorous Perſons, are Prieſts and Prophets, that by our Prayers can heal the Dolours and Griefs of the People. We, meaning the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, have had two wicked Kings, meaning the moſt ſerene Charles the Firſt, late King of England, and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, whom we can reſemble to no other Perſon but to the moſt wicked Jeroboam; and that if they, meaning the ſaid evil diſpoſed Perſons, then and there ſo as aforeſaid with him unlawfully aſſembled and gathered together, would ſtand to their Principles, he, meaning himſelf, did not fear but they, meaning himſelf and the ſaid evil diſpoſed Perſons, would overcome their Enemies, meaning our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King and his Subjects, as in former Times, with Rams Horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling. The Witneſſes were three Women, who ſwore to the Words as they ſtand without the Innuendo's; the Trial laſted about ſeven Hours, Mr. Roſwell made a moſt full and clear Defence of himſelf, very modeſtly, yet ſtrenuouſly vindicating his Innocence to the Satisfaction of thoſe that were preſent, and ſo as to gain the Applauſe of many Gentlemen of the Long Robe. Convicted. The Jury however, after they had been out about half an Hour, brought him in guilty. The Women who were the Witneſſes were infamous Perſons, laden with the Guilt of many Perjuries, which had been eaſily prov'd upon them all before the the Trial, could Juſtice have been had, but they were ſcreen'd by the Recorder Jenour, who was the Perſon that laid the whole Scheme of the Buſineſs, and patch'd up the Indictment in Terms ſuited to his known Abilities, ſays the Doctor very modeſtly. For it is no Breach of good Manners to ſay of ſuch a Tool, that none but ſuch a Blockhead could have drawn ſuch an Indictment, and none but a worſe Wretch ſtill would have proſecuted a Miniſter of the Goſpel even to Death upon ſuch a Charge, and ſuch Evidence. The Impudence of the Judges, Proſecutors, and Jury in this Caſe is without Example. There is not the leaſt Poſſibility in the World that the thing could be true. Mr. Roſwell propos'd at his Trial to put the whole upon this Iſſue, he would pronounce a Period as long as that which the Evidences had ſworn, with his uſual Tone of Voice with which he preached, and then leave it to them to repeat it if they could. Biſhop Burnet tells us, "As "for the Sermon in which the Witneſſes ſwore "he deliver'd thoſe Words, he ſhew'd what his "Text was, which the Witneſſes could not re- "member, as they remember'd nothing elſe in "his Sermon beſides the Words they had de- "poſ'd. That Text, and his Sermon upon it, "had no relation to any ſuch Matter, ſeveral "Witneſſes who heard the Sermon, and ſome "who writ it in Short-hand declar'd he ſaid no "ſuch Words, nor any thing to that Purpoſe; "he offer'd his own Notes to prove this further, "but no regard was had to them. The Wo- "men could not prove by any Circumſtance that "they were at his Meeting, or that any Perſon "ſaw them there on that Day; the Words they "ſwore againſt him were ſo groſs, that it was "not to be imagin'd that any Man in his Wits "would expreſs himſelf ſo, were he ever "ſo wickedly ſet before a mix'd Aſſembly; "yet the Blood-hound Jefferies urg'd the Mat- "ter with his ordinary Vehemence, he laid it "for a Foundation that all Preaching in Conven- "ticles

" ticles was Treaſon," my Lord of Sarum ſpeaks it, " and that this ought to diſpoſe the " Jury to believe any Evidence whatſoever up- " on that head." His Lordſhip adds, There was a ſhameful Rejoycing upon this. It was thought now Conventicles would be all ſuppreſs'd by it, ſince any Perſon, who would witneſs that treaſonable Words were deliver'd at them, would be believ'd, how improbable ſoever. Further, I ſet down all this Defence more particularly, that it may appear what a Spirit was in that Time, when a Verdict could be brought in upon ſuch Evidence, and againſt ſuch a Defence. This Affair, foul as it is, is ſlurr'd over by the compleat Hiſtorian and the Archdeacon. The former does not give us a hint of the Injuſtice of the Sentence; and the latter takes occaſion to extol his Majeſty's Grace in not ſuffering the Sentence to be executed, tho' in ſo doing he had committed Murder. Such of the Witneſſes as could be met with, were afterwards convicted of Perjury; and Smith the chief Witneſs was pillory'd before the Exchange. Sir John Talbot, who was preſent at the Trial, repreſented to King Charles the State of the Caſe, and the King order'd Jefferies to find an Evaſion, upon which Counſel was aſſign'd Mr. Roſwell, and Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Wallop and Mr. Bampfield pleaded to the Inſufficiency of the Indictment in Arreſt of Judgment; but the Matter was cut ſhorter by a Pardon. Jefferies, ſtill on a Blood-ſcent, caus'd one Mr. Hayes, a Banker in London, to be proſecuted for High Treaſon becauſe there was found a Letter writ by him in Armſtrong's Pocket, directed to another Name, which was ſuppos'd to be a feign'd one. 'Twas a Letter of Credit on Hayes's Correſpondent in Holland. Much pains was taken on Hayes, both by Perſuaſion and Threatning, to induce him to make Diſcoveries, the Court imagining there was a Joint Purſe to ſupply the Engliſh Refugees in Holland; and if they could know who were Monmouth's Friends, they would attaint them all, or at leaſt fine them all ſeverely. Hayes would or could confeſs nothing, ſo he was try'd for High-Treaſon, in abetting a Man that was out-law'd for it; he made a ſtrong Defence, as well he might do, Armſtrong's Name or Concern in the Credit no where appearing. He was a Banker, and examin'd into no Perſons Concerns that gave him Money for Credit or Bills. Jefferies, ſays Biſhop Burnet, preſs'd the Jury in his impetuous way, to find him guilty of High-Treaſon, for the King's Life and Safety depended upon it; ſo that if they did it not, they expos'd the King to a new Rye-Plot, with other Extravagancies with which his Fury prompted him; but a Jury of Merchants could not be wrought up to this Pitch, ſo he was acquitted, which mortify'd the Court a little; for they had reckon'd, that now Juries were only to be a Point of Form in a Trial, and that they were always to find Bills as they were directed.

Bad Times.

He is pardon'd.

Mr. Hayes try'd.

Acquitted.

About this time a young Gentleman happening to be in Company of two Gentlemen more, when a Quarrel roſe, Swords were drawn, and one kill'd; he and the other ſurviving Gentleman were indicted upon it, tho' 'twas not certain by whoſe hand the Deceas'd fell. But the young Gentleman being a Son of one of the Knights of Shires, who petition'd for a Parliament, he was threaten'd with the Rigour of the Law if he did not confeſs, and promis'd a Pardon if he did, ſo he pleaded guilty, and was condemn'd. Inſtead of a Pardon he was told he muſt pay 16000 l. or ſuffer Execution. Accordingly the Money was paid, 8000 Pounds to the King, and 8000 Pounds to two Favourite Ladies. Lord Biſhop of Sarum reflects upon it thus: " It is a very ill thing for Princes to ſuf- " fer themſelves to be prevail'd on by Importu- " nity, to pardon Blood which cries for Ven- " geance, a terrible Reflection for this Court and their Creatures! " Yet an Eaſineſs to Importu- " nity is a Feebleneſs of Good Nature, and ſo is " in itſelf leſs criminal; but it is a monſtrous per- " verting of Juſtice, and a deſtroying the chief " End of Government, which is the Preſerva- " tion of the People, when their Blood is ſet " to Sale, and that not as a Compenſation to the " Family of the Perſon murder'd, but to the " Prince himſelf, and ſome who are in favour " with him upon unworthy accounts."

A Baſe Act.

Tho' ſuch Cruelty was exercis'd towards the Proteſtants, there was found Clemency for the Papiſts and their Abettors. The Lord Petre, one of the Popiſh Lords impriſon'd in the Tower for the Popiſh Plot, died there, and the Lord Arundel of Warder, the Lord Bellaſis, and Lord Powis were let out upon Bail, as was alſo the Earl of Tyrone out of the Gate-houſe. None of the Judges, till Jefferies was preferr'd to the King's-Bench, would venture to bail them, even Saunders, otherwiſe Tool enough, refus'd it. But Jefferies made no difficulty, nor of diſcharging the Earl of Danby upon Bail. The Duke of Beaufort, and Earl of Peterborough, taking the Advantage of ſuch Judges and Juries, brought their Actions of Scandalum Magnatum againſt thoſe who had ſpoken ſome bold Truths of them, and had vaſt Sums given them for Damages.

Popiſh Lords bail'd.

William Williams Eſq; Speaker of the laſt two Parliaments, having licens'd the Votes, which had in them Matters of Scandal relating to ſome Lords, an Information was brought againſt him, and he upon it demurr'd to the Juriſdiction of the Court; but he was over-rul'd, and fin'd 10000 Pounds. This was drawn on by the Popiſh and Tory Faction, to cut off the Thoughts of another Parliament. The reverend Hiſtorians, the compleat one, and Echard, inform us, that Sir Lionel Jenkins, one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State, had long pray'd his Majeſty to permit him to reſign that Place, and that his Majeſty was at laſt pleas'd to grant it, tho' with much Unwillingneſs, becauſe of the great Satisfaction his Majeſty always had in his Services. This Man, who had really no Merit but his readineſs to do dirty Work, has the good Word of theſe Men, on account of his implacable Malice to Proteſtant Diſſenters, and Proteſtant Patriots. Biſhop Burnet ſpeaks of his being turn'd out, thus: " Jenkins had now " done all the Drudgery the Court had occaſion " for from him; and being capable to ſerve " them in nothing elſe, he was diſmiſs'd from " being Secretary, and Godolphin, one of the " Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, ſucceeded " him. The Earl of Rocheſter hoped to be " made Treaſurer, tho' the whole Court hated " him, and the Treaſury was therefore continu'd " in Commiſſion, notwithſtanding the Duke of " York and Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, like Patron, " like Patroneſs, were for giving the white Staff " to Rocheſter." Mr. Godolphin was made a Lord, and firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury. The Earl of Radnor was remov'd from his Place of Preſident of the Council, and Lord Rocheſter put in his Place, which being a Poſt ſuperior in Rank, but much inferior both in Advantage and Credit, Lord Hallifax ſaid, He had heard of many kick'd down Stairs, but never of any that was kick'd up Stairs before. The Earl of Middleton, Son to him who govern'd Scotland, was made made Secretary of State. Biſhop Burnet tells us, he had not much Religion, and truly much was not wanted, conſidering what Company he was to keep at Court, where even ſome of the Biſhops could not be ſaid to have any to ſpare. Sir Thomas Thynne and North the pretended Sheriff of London, were put into the Treaſury Commiſſion, and it was to ſecure a Seat for his Brother at that Board, that the Lord-Keeper North labour'd ſo hard to keep the white Staff from Rocheſter, whom Lord Hallifax oppos'd vigorouſly, inſomuch that he complain'd in Council, that there were many Raſures in the Treaſury-Books, out of which ſeveral Leaves were cut; and he mov'd the King to go to the Treaſury-Chamber, that the Books might be laid before him, and he might be Judge of the Matter upon ſight: ſo the King nam'd next Monday, and it was then expected that the Earl of Rocheſter would be turn'd out of all, if not ſent to the Tower. A Meſſage was diſpatch'd to Mr. May, a great Favourite of the King's, but a great Enemy to his Counſels, to come immediately from Windſor to London, that he might be there on the Monday, which it was expected would prove a critical Day; and it prov'd to be ſo indeed, tho' in a different way, as we ſhall obſerve in the Sequel.

And Complaint againſt him as to the Treaſury.

Among other Honours and Preferments, the compleat Hiſtorians tell us, The King, without any farther Scruple, made his good Brother Lord High Admiral of England, and reſtor'd him to his Seat at the Council-Table. The Earl of Murray and Earl of Middleton were alſo made Privy-Counſellors, and the following Perſons Knights.

Simon Taylor and John Turner Eſqs; two Aldermen of Lynn-Regis; Dr. Weatherley, Capt. John Clark of London, Mr. Edmund Warcup of Oxfordſhire, William Creagh and Henry Brabant of Newcaſtle upon Tine.

John Drummond Eſq; was made a Privy-Counſellor, and William Bridgman Philip Muſgrave Eſqs; Clerks of the Council, and Sir Robert Wright Sergeant at Law, one of the Barons of the Exchequer. Theſe things were not done all in one day, but all within the Year, and a Journal of them is exactly recorded in the compleat Hiſtory, being a Copy of the Gazette.

Biſhop Burnet tells us of ſome Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, as of the Tranſlation of Dr. Peter Mew, Biſhop of Bath and Wells, to Wincheſter, on the death of Dr. Morley. He adds, Biſhop Mew's Riſe and Character.

Mew had been a Captain during the Wars, and had been Middleton's Secretary, when he was ſent to command the Inſurrection, which the Highlanders attempted to make for the King in Scotland. After that he came into Orders, tho' he knew very little of Divinity, or of any other Learning, and was weak to a childiſh degree, yet Obſequiouſneſs and Zeal without Knowledge, and I might add, without Virtue, rais'd him, by ſeveral Steps, to this great See. I knew him, and could ſay a great deal more of him, but I do not think it is worth the while. His Succeſſor at Bath and Wells was Dr.

And Biſhop Ken.

Ken, of whom Dr. Burnet: "He was a Man of "an aſcetick Life, too hot and ſudden. He "had an edifying way of preaching, more apt "to move the Paſſions than to inſtruct. The "Papiſts hoped, that by him a great Progreſs "might be made in gaining, or at leaſt delu-"ding the Clergy;" who, in his own Dioceſe, idoliz'd him, without knowing any thing of this his true Character. Perſecution, the greateſt Fury that Hell ever produc'd, rag'd all this while againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters, and none more forward in promoting that inhuman Work, than the laſt mention'd Biſhop Ken and his Clergy. The Proſecution of the Diſſenters was carried very high that Year, ſays my Lord of Sarum: "They were not only proceeded a-"gainſt for going to Meetings, but for not go-"ing to Church, and for not receiving the Sa-"crament. The Laws made againſt Papiſts, "with reſpect to theſe Particulars, being now "apply'd to them." Some of the pious Miniſters ſunk under the Severity of their Perſecutors, and particularly Mr. Jenkins, who hazarded his Life for this King before the Reſtoration, did now die in Newgate but a few days before him. There alſo died Mr. Bampfield and Mr. Ralphſon, and the King himſelf follow'd ſoon after, to give an account of all theſe things at that Bar, where the whole Race of Mankind are accountable.

Perſecution.

Some ſhort time before the King's laſt Sickneſs and Death, there was certainly a Scheme forming by him, to make himſelf eaſy for the reſt of his Life, which he was over-heard to ſay by a Gentleman, who told it me. The King had given him two Spaniſh Plays, call'd Ne pudeſer, or It cannot be, for him to give them an Engliſh Caſt in one. Three Acts and more were finiſh'd, before the King was taken ill, and his Majeſty oblig'd the Author to bring it to him, Scene by Scene, as he wrote it. The Courtiers knowing what his Errand was at Whitehall, made his way eaſy to the King's Cabinet, to which he once approach'd ſo near, that he could hear the King ſay diſtinctly, Brother, you may travel if you will, I am reſolv'd to make myſelf eaſy for the reſt of my Life. At which Words the Door opening, the Author made off, and the Duke of York paſs'd haſtily by him as in a Paſſion. This Play is the famous Sir Courtly Nice, which the King highly approv'd of, only he ſaid it wanted a little more of what Collier calls Smut in his View of the Stage. The Poet told me this ſo often, and was ſo little given to romancing in ſuch things, that I ſee no reaſon to disbelieve him.

Mr. C.

The King's intended new Scheme.

The Biſhop of Salisbury gives us a hint of this Scheme. "There was at this time a new "Scheme form'd, that very probably would "for ever have broken the King and the "Duke; but how it was laid, was ſo great a "Secret, that it could not be penetrated. The "Duke of Monmouth came over ſecretly, and "tho' he did not ſee the King, yet he went "back very well pleas'd with his Journey. Mr. "May told Biſhop Burnet, He knew by the "King's way things were not quite ripe. That "with which they were to begin was, the ſend-"ing the Duke of York to Scotland. And it was "generally thought, that if the two Brothers "ſhould be once parted, they would never "meet again. The King ſpoke to the Duke "concerning his going to Scotland; he anſwer'd, "There's no occaſion for it. The King re-"ply'd, Either you muſt go, or I will go my-"ſelf thither. The King was obſerv'd to be "colder and more reſerv'd to the Duke than "ordinary; but what was ſtill under all this, "was a deep Secret."

The King had parted with ſo much of his Power to the Duke, that he had not enough left to recover it again, without the aſſiſtance of the Duke of Monmouth's Party, which, in oppoſition to the Papiſts, conſiſted of the beſt part of the Kingdom, tho' not many of them were diſpos'd to favour his Succeſſion. The Papiſts were in haſte to have a Popiſh King, who was bigotted to their Idolatry, and would put all to the Venture to re-eſtabliſh it. They ſaw plainly, if there was a Breach between the King and the the Duke, they had no other Hope left. Things could not be carry'd ſo ſecretly in a Court, where the Duke of York had ſo many Spies, but they muſt have ſome Knowledge of it; and if the Critical Day was ſet for the opening of the new Scheme, 'tis no wonder the King was taken ſick to death on that very day, as the Biſhop of Salisbury informs us; and from what he ſays of that Death, there is no room left to doubt that he was not poiſon'd, of which more when we have further prov'd, that King's Intention to recall the Duke of Monmouth; to prevent which, the Papiſts would, doubtleſs, have ſacrific'd what and whomſoever lay in their way. I impute this Reſolution of the King's to his Timorouſneſs and Indolence, as well as to his Underſtanding, which was much better than his Brother's. He knew that the Infatuation the Nation lay under by the Practices and Preachments of the minor Clergy, would vaniſh on the firſt Allarm they took againſt Popery, and when ever they rous'd out of the preſent Lethargy, brought on them by the Deluſion of Ken and ſuch Prelates, they would call for a ſtrict Reckoning for the noble and innocent Blood which had been ſpilt, and the Invaſions that had been made on the Conſtitution, and the Duke of York and his Emiſſaries would certainly be made to feel the Weight of an injur'd Peoples Diſpleaſure. This Foreſight, his Fears in conſequence of it, and his Love of Eaſe and Pleaſure, prevail'd over the little Religion he had, which was Popery, and made him reſolve to put his new Scheme in execution, and that made the Papiſts reſolve to put it out of his power. I think this is plain, but it will appear ſtill more plain by what follows.

P. 606.

King Charles's Motives to a Change.

When the Duke of Monmouth was taken after the Fight at Sedgemore, there was found about him a Pocket-Book, wherein were written ſeveral Paſſages concerning his laſt Reconciliation with the King, at the cloſe of it is an Account of the Deſign to recall him. I ſhall inſert the Letter entire.

Duke of Monmouth's Account of it.

" November 25, I render'd myſelf. At " night 29, the King, could not diſſemble his " Satisfaction, preſs'd my Hand, which I re- " member not he did before, except when I " return'd from the French Service. 29, the " King, acted his Part well, and I too. 39, the " Duke, and D. ſeem'd not ill pleas'd.

" 26 November, 29, the King, took me aſide, " and falling upon the Buſineſs of L. R. Lord " Ruſſel, ſaid he inclin'd to have ſaved him, but " was forc'd to it, otherwiſe he muſt have broke " with 39, the Duke; Bid me think no more " on't. Coming home L. told me he fear'd 39, " the Duke, began to ſmell out 29's Carriage to " me. That——ſaid to 39 that Morning, that " all that was done was but ſham.

" 27. Several told me of the Storm that was " brewing. Rumſey was with 39, and was ſeen " to come out crying, that he muſt accuſe a " Man he lov'd.

" December 19. A Letter from 29, bidding " me ſtay till I heard from him.

" January 5. I receiv'd a Letter from L. " mark'd by 29 in the Margin, to truſt entirely " to 10, and that in February I ſhould certain- " ly have Leave to return. That Matters were " concerted towards it, and that 39 had no Suſ- " picion notwithſtanding of my Reception " here.

" Feb. 3. A Letter from L. that my Buſineſs " was almoſt as well as done, but muſt be ſo " ſudden, as not to leave room for 39's Par- " ty to counterplot. That it is probable he " would chuſe Scotland rather than Flanders or " this Country, which was all one to 29.

" 16. The ſad News of his Death by L. " O cruel Fate!" A. D. 1684.

As it was almoſt impoſſible for the Duke's Party not to ſmell out this Deſign, ſo 'twas impoſſible for them to prevent it by any other way than the King's Death. And Sheffield, late Duke of Buckingham, gives one good ground to believe he was poiſon'd, at the end of his Character. " I would not ſay any thing " on ſo ſad a Subject, if I did not think that " Silence itſelf would in ſuch a Caſe ſignify too " much; and therefore as an impartial Wri- " ter, I am oblig'd to obſerve, that the moſt " knowing, and the moſt diſcerning of all his " Phyſicians, did not only believe him poiſon'd, " but thought himſelf ſo too for having declar'd " his Opinion a little too boldly."

Duke of Buckingham ſuppoſes the King was poiſon'd.

So does Dr. Short, a Papiſt.

The Dutcheſs of Portſmouth coming to England in the Year 1699, talk'd as if the King had been poiſon'd, as was affirm'd by Anthony Henly Eſq; of the Grange in Hampſhire, a Gentleman of great Honour and Wit, who had the following Relation from the Dutcheſs herſelf. " She " ſaid ſhe was always preſſing the King to make " both himſelf and his People eaſy, and to " come to a full Agreement with his Parlia- " ment; and he was come to a final Reſolu- " tion of ſending away his Brother, and calling " a Parliament, which was to be executed the " next day after he fell into that Fit of which " he died. She was let into the Secret, and " ſpoke of it to no Perſon but her Confeſſor. " But the Confeſſor, ſhe believ'd told it to " ſome, who ſeeing what was to follow, took " that wicked Courſe to prevent it" My Lord of Sarum reports, that ſome of the Dutcheſs's own Servants gave him the Poiſon, ſuppos'd to be convey'd in poiſon'd Snuff; for ſo many of the ſmall Veins of the Brain were burſt, that the Brain was in great Diſorder.

And the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth.

If any one has the curioſity to ſee what can be ſtarted in objection to ſuch Evidence, he will find the moſt made of it in Welwood's Memoirs, whoſe Reaſons have juſt ſo much Weight as an Ounce would have againſt a Pound, eſpecially after the additional Weight of our Evidence is put into the Poiſon-Scale.

The King's Sickneſs and Death.

On Sunday, the firſt of February, he eat little all day, and had an unquiet Night. In the Morning Doctor, afterwards Sir Edmund King, a Phyſician and Chymiſt, came, as he had been order'd, to wait on him. All the King's Diſcourſe to him was ſo broken, that he could not underſtand what he meant. And the Doctor concluded he was under ſome great Diſorder either in his Mind or in his Body: Amaz'd at this, he went out, and meeting with Lord Peterborough, told him the King was in a ſtrange Humour, for he did not ſpeak one word of Senſe. Lord Peterborough deſir'd he would go in again to the Bed-chamber, which he did, and he was ſcarce come in, when the King, who ſeem'd all the while to be in great Confuſion, fell down, all of a ſudden in a Fit like an Apoplexy; he look'd black, and his Eyes turn'd in his Head. The Phyſician, who had been formerly an eminent Surgeon, ſaid, It was impoſſible to ſave the King's Life, if one Minute was loſt, ſo he would rather venture on the Rigour of the Law, than leave the King to periſh. Accordingly he let him blood; the King came out of that Fit The Phyſicians approving of what Dr. King had done, the Council order'd him 1000 Pounds; but King James never took care to ſee it paid. Tho' the Fit was over, yet the Effects of it hung ſtill upon his Majeſty, and he was much oppreſs'd; and the Phyſicians apprehending another Fit, gave him over: The the Biſhops came to him, Archbiſhop Sancroft, the Biſhop of London, and Biſhop Ken, and all ſpoke to him as the occaſion requir'd, but he took no notice of that or them, which was imputed to an Inſenſibility, of which, ſays Biſhop Burnet, "Too viſible an Inſtance appear'd, ſince "Lady Portſmouth ſat in the Bed, taking care "of him, as a Wife of a Husband." Mr. Archdeacon aſſures us, the pious Nonjuring Biſhop Ken was ſo far from ſuffering the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth to ſit in the Bed, that he would not let her ſtay in the Room. He prevail'd with his Majeſty to have her remov'd. The pious Biſhop Ken again induc'd his Majeſty to ſend for her Majeſty, and he asking Pardon of her, had the Satisfaction of her particular Forgiveneſs. Biſhop Burnet affirms, He ſaid nothing of the Queen. On Thurſday a ſecond Fit return'd, and then the Phyſicians told the Duke, that the King was not like to live a day to an end; ſo Father Huddleſton was ſent for to do the Prieſt's Work in the Popiſh way. He gave the King the Hoſt, and the Wafer ſticking in his Throat, the Earl of Feverſham call'd for Water to waſh it down. Biſhop Ken preſs'd him to receive the Sacrament according to the Church of England; he made him no Anſwer. However, Ken gave him Abſolution: for which, ſays my Lord of Sarum, he was blam'd, ſince the King expreſs'd no ſenſe of Sorrow for his paſt Life. It was thought to be a Proſtitution of the Peace of the Church, to give it to one, who, after a Life led as the King's had been, ſeem'd harden'd againſt every thing that could be ſaid to him. Ken was alſo cenſur'd for another piece of Indecency, He preſented the Duke of Richmond, Lady Portſmouth's Son, to be bleſt by the King. Upon which ſome that were in the Room cry'd out, The King is our common Father, and they all kneel'd down for his Bleſſing, which he gave them. But in what a Condition he was to bleſs, or to be bleſs'd, appears by what Biſhop Burnet ſays: "He recommended Lady Portſmouth to the "Duke of York, over and over again. He ſaid "he had always lov'd her, and he lov'd her "now to the laſt, and beſought his Brother, in "as melting Words as he could fetch out, to be "very kind to her and to her Son. He recom-"mended his other Children to him, and con-"cluded, Let not poor Nelly ſtarve, meaning "Mrs. Gwyn." He continued in the Agony till Friday 11 a-clock in the Forenoon, Feb. 6, 1684-5, and then died, in the 54th Year of his Age, after he had reign'd 24 Years, 8 Months and 9 Days, reckoning from the Reſtauration; and from the Death of his Father, 56 Years and 8 Days.

Ken blam'd for abſolving him.

The King's Death.

The Biſhop of Salisbury adds, There were many apparent Inſtances of his being poiſon'd; for tho' the firſt Acceſs look'd like an Apoplexy, yet it was plain in the Progreſs of it, that it was no Apoplexy. "When his Body was open'd, "the Phyſicians who view'd it were, as it were "led by thoſe who might ſuſpect the Truth, "to look upon the Parts that were certainly "ſound. But both Lower and Needham, two "famous Phyſicians, told the Biſhop, they plain-"ly diſcern'd two or three blue Spots on the "out-ſide of the Stomach. Needham call'd twice "to have it open'd, but the Surgeons ſeem'd "not to hear him. And when he mov'd it the "ſecond time, he, as he told Biſhop Burnet, "heard Lower ſay to one that ſtood next to him, "Needham will undo us by calling thus to have "the Stomach open'd, for he may ſee they will "not do it. They were diverted to look on "ſomething elſe, and when they return'd to "look upon the Stomach, it was carry'd away,

"ſo that it was never view'd." Thus did Foreigners ſpeak of it, Ce fut dans ce temps que Charles mourut apres trois jours de maladie non ſans ſoupçon que l'on eut contribue a ſa mort. At that time dy'd Charles II. of a Sickneſs which held him three Days, not without ſuſpicion that his Death had been help'd forward. Echard after having ſeen ſome of theſe ſtrong Proofs, is ſo ſupercilious as to ſay, After the beſt and ſtricteſt Enquiries, we never could enter far enough into thoſe dark Receſſes, as to make any juſt Diſcovery. But our Inquiries have had better Succeſs, and no Fact can be better prov'd by Hiſtorical Evidence, than King Charles's being poiſon'd is in this. The Duke of Buckingham and Biſhop Burnet clear his Brother King James of the Guilt of it, which I cannot do; for tho' it is granted that he was not an Accomplice in the Murder of his Brother, yet he could not but know more than is ſaid here of his being poiſon'd; and his making no Inquiſition after his Brother's Blood, brings him in for a ſufficient Share of the Guilt of it, unleſs it can be imagin'd that he never heard of any of the Circumſtances here related, and of the Care which was taken, that the Phyſicians Lower and Needham ſhould not examine the ſuſpected Parts at the Diſſection; nor ever heard that Dr. Short, one of his own Religion, declar'd, not only that the late King was poiſon'd, but that he himſelf was alſo poiſon'd for declaring it. Echard and all of them expatiate on the general Sorrow for the Death of this King, and their Panegyricks follow him to the Grave, purely on account of his breaking his Oath with the Scots Presbyterians, in his abjuring the Covenant, and his breaking his Word and Promiſe with the Engliſh Presbyterians in the ſtinging Acts againſt them: For otherwiſe what good Quality had he to deſerve the Eulogies of Proteſtant Divines? As to the Earl of Mulgrave's, afterwards Duke of Buckingham, Character of him, I have a word or two to ſay to it preſently. Echard, who on all ſuch Occaſions runs away with the common Vogue, takes that Lord to be a great Wit, and a great Orator, as well as a great Man, and has therefore printed that Character: And I have nothing to object againſt his good Opinion of the Lord Mulgrave in this place, but I have ſome Objections to his Lordſhip's Characteriſticks, when I have obſerv'd after Mr. Acherley, why it was that the People were ſo ſorrowful at his Death: "The "immediate Proſpect of the Duke of York's "Succeſſion added to the King's Life a vaſt "Value, in regard his Life was believ'd to be "the only Barrier againſt the immediate En-"trance of Popery." Again; "And now the "time was come that King Charles muſt taſte "the Fruit of his own Incredulity, and the Na-"tion the Fruit of that Interruption he gave to "the Parliament's making Proviſion, and a De-"fence to preſerve to him his Life, and to the "Kingdom Safety from Popery and Slavery: "For the Popiſh-Plot was executed on him, "and he periſhed on the 6th of February 168$\frac{4}{5}$ "by violent Means, and Popery and Slavery "with his Succeſſor ruſhed in upon the Na-"tion.

Some Account of King Charles out of Acherley.

"It was wonderful, conſidering this King's "Breach of the Triple-Alliance, and his Treat-"ment of his Parliaments for ten Years toge-"ther, his artful and even obſtinate evading the "making neceſſary Alliances and Wars, and o-"ther Proviſions to defend the Nation againſt "the exceſſive Power of France and the juſt "Fears of Popery; I ſay, 'tis wonderful that "this Reign paſs'd without Tumults, and even

"a

A. D. 1684.

" a general Revolt." The Learned Lawyer might have added, and conſidering too his throwing 2 or 3000 pious worthy Miniſters out of their Churches into common Jayls, and his ſuffering the very Scum of his Kingdom Eccleſiaſticks and Layicks, to harraſs, oppreſs, and ruin the moſt ſober and induſtrious of his Subjects for Conſcience-ſake: And his cauſing the Lord Ruſſel, Colonel Sidney, and ſo many innocent Perſons to be murder'd under pretence of the Forms of Law; conſidering alſo his vicious Life and Converſation, his Contempt of all Religion, his Profuſion on ſome Occaſions, and his Sordidneſs on others: I ſay again, It is wonderful that his Reign paſs'd without Tumults, and even a general Revolt. Echard and the other Reverend and Compleat Hiſtorian repreſent this very Reign, as Halcyon Days, and a ſecond Golden Age.

Earl of Mulgrave's Character of King Charles II. examin'd.

The Earl of Mulgrave, afterwards Duke of Buckingham, begins his Character of King Charles with his Religion, which he thinks was Deiſm; and in praiſe of it adds, which is vulgarly, tho' unjuſtly, accounted none at all. This Opinion very much confirms that of his own Deiſm, expreſs'd in the Epitaph he wrote for himſelf. A Man who lives in defiance of all Chriſtian Principles, may well be reckon'd of any Religion rather than of the Chriſtian: and ſo far it may be juſtly ſaid King Charles was a Deiſt, as not being a true Chriſtian in his Practices; but moſt ſure it is, that he was a Papiſt: and that the Libertiniſm of Deiſm agreeing very well with Popery, his Lordſhip choſe rather to make him of his own Religion, than of his Brother the Duke of York's. Again, He threw himſelf into the Arms of a Roman Catholick Party, being tired out with the bold Oppoſitions in Parliament. We have prov'd and it is known that he was a Papiſt before the Reſtoration, and conſequently this fine Argument is left extremely naked. The Papiſts are ſo remarkable for their Loyalty, witneſs the Reigns of Henry VIII. Edward VI. Queen Elizabeth; Witneſs the Gun-Powder-Treaſon Plot in King James's Reign, the Rebellion in Ireland in the Reign of King Charles I. Father White's Vindication of Oliver Cromwel, &c. He was ſurely inclin'd to Juſtice; witneſs the many Inſtances which are given of it in the Adminiſtration of Scotland: Witneſs again the Deaths of the Lord Ruſſel, Colonel Sidney, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, &c. in England; but his Lordſhip's Reaſon for it is more merry than convincing. He ſhew'd his Love of Juſtice, by his Injuſtice to the Nation in ſticking ſo cloſe to his Brother's Succeſſion. I am weary of it, and ſhall only add that part of the Panegyrick, which one would take Lord Mulgrave to be the moſt competent Judge of, it relating to Wit: He was witty in all Converſations, and telling a Story ſo well, that not out of Flattery, but for the Pleaſure of hearing it, we uſed to ſeem ignorant of what he had repeated to us ten times before. P. 613. Quite contrary to this, Biſhop Burnet informs us, He went over his Stories ſo often and ſo copiouſly, that all thoſe who had been accuſtom'd to them grew weary of them, and when he enter'd on them they uſually withdrew. Nay, his Story-telling occaſion'd this Repartee from Wilmot Earl of Rocheſter; I wonder to ſee a Man have ſo good a Memory as to repeat the ſame Story without loſing the ſame Circumſtances, and yet not remember he had told it to the ſame Perſons the very Day before. Lord Mulgrave, He was of a merciful Diſpoſition. Biſhop Burnet, P. 612. He ſeem'd to have no Bowels, or Tenderneſs in his Nature. Enough ſure to ſhew what the Earl of Mulgrave's Character of him is, as finely as it is introduc'd by the Archdeacon, drawn by the ingenious Pen of the Earl of Mulgrave, a Perſon of ſufficient Skill and Acquaintance. One might be very pleaſant with both of them upon it, but it is not a place for it: I ſhall conclude all concerning this Prince with the Character given of him by the ſeveral Parties in England, copy'd from the Introduction to Lord Mulgrave's Character of him.

High-Church Character of him.

" The high-flown Churchmen did mightily
" admire him, Mr. Archdeacon knows whom the Author means perfectly well, " becauſe he re-
" ſtor'd them to their ancient Dignities, and " made them Lords Paramount to all other Par-

" their Lives, Reputations and Eſtates.

Whigs Character of him.

" The Whigs, tho' many of them had a Per-

" with his Adminiſtration, and generally enter-
" tain'd this Character of him: That he gave " himſelf up to all ſenſual Pleaſures without

" der'd away the ancient Revenues of the Crown,
" which were eſteem'd ſacred, and left ſuch a

" That he proſtituted his Majeſty, by being a

" berties of Europe. That he imbroil'd his own
" Subjects in inteſtine Feuds, and did ſo viciate
" all publick Offices both ſacred, civil, and mi-

" be hard to reform them. That he was un-
" grateful to the Nation for their Loyalty and the " incredible Sums which they pour'd upon him.
" That he leſſen'd the Reputation and Strength
" of the Kingdom, over-turn'd the Laws, and " invaded the Properties of his Subjects.

The Diſſenters Character of him.

" The Diſſenters again ſcarcely afford him one " good word, but attribute all the Corruption of " our Morals to the ill Conduct of his Reign
" and his own bad Example. They charge him

" with the greateſt Perjuries that ever were

" and Covenant, and his Declaration from Bre-

" the Proteſtant Intereſt in the Nation, by ſet-
" ting one Party of Proteſtants to deſtroy the " other, and expoſing all Piety and Seriouſneſs
" to Ridicule. They upbraid his Memory with " his Whoredoms, which has ſo much infected
" the Youth of the Nation, and is attended by
" ſuch diſmal Conſequences."

THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND, During the REIGN of King JAMES II.

A. D. 1685.

MR. Acrchdeacon begins this Reign with a very falſe flattering Character of the King, which is eaſily prov'd, by comparing it with Biſhop Burnet's, and it will be found to agree with the Biſhop's, as his Account of the King's being proclaim'd agrees with my Lord of Sarum's. Echard, The Proclamation was read and ſolemniz'd in all the moſt uſual Places in the City of London; all People began now to wipe their Eyes, and to dry up thoſe Tears they had ſo plentifully ſhed; and all Heats and Prejudices againſt the late Duke of York ſeem'd to have been loſt and ſwallow'd up amidſt the loud Acclamations of the People. Biſhop Burnet, "The Proclamation was a heavy So- "lemnity, few Tears were ſhed for the former, "nor were there any Shouts of Joy for the pre- "ſent King; a dead Silence follow'd it thro' "the Streets." The Archdeacon's Hiſtory of King James's Reign, is all much of a piece with this for Sincerity and Truth. When the Privy-Counſellors return'd from proclaiming him, he made a Speech to them, That he was reſolved to defend and maintain the Church of England, and to preſerve the Government in Church and State as eſtabliſh'd by Law: Which, ſays Echard, gave great Satisfaction. And, ſays Biſhop Burnet, "The Pulpits of England were full of it, and "of Thankſgivings for it. It was magnify'd as "a Security far greater than any that Laws could "give. The common Phraſe was, We have now the "Word of a King, and a Word never yet broken." He had broken his Word to God in abjuring the Proteſtant Religion, in which he was baptized and bred; yet Echard will have it, the ſtrict Obſervance of his Faith acquir'd him the Title of James the Juſt, the Beauty of which is only in the jingling of the Initials. I ſhall not dwell much on Matters in this Reign, the Remembrance of which I ſtill keep with Abhorrence. Hints only muſt do for Facts, that there may be the more room for Reflections.

King proclaim'd.

His Speech.

The King was proclaim'd at Edinburgh and Dublin, as he had been at London. All Officers were by Proclamation continu'd in their Offices: And then comes the Archdeacon's pompous Account of the Funeral of the late King, of which, and of his Corpſe, I beg leave to repeat ſome things after the Biſhop of Salisbury, to ſhew the Gratitude and Piety of James the Juſt. He did not lie in State, no Mournings were given, and the Expence of it was not equal to what an ordinary nary Nobleman's Funeral will riſe to. Many upon this ſaid, that he deſerv'd better from his Brother, than to be thus ungratefully treated.

King James ungrateful to him.

Fulſome Addreſſes were every Day, and almoſt every Hour of the Day, preſented to the new Monarch; two of them were very remarkable ones, that from the Middle Temple thank'd his Majeſty for taking the Cuſtoms contrary to Law, It was preſented by that upright Perſon Sir Humphry Mackworth, Son of Col. Mackworth, who ſhut the Gates of Shrewsbury againſt the late King, and Mr. Bartholomew Shower, Brother to Mr. John Shower, the noted diſſenting Miniſter.

He ſeizes the Cuſtoms.

Addreſſes.

The other moſt remarkable Addreſs came from the Univerſity of Oxford, who promis'd to obey the King without Limitations or Reſtrictions; but Thanks be to Heaven, they were not as good as their word. The King's Promiſe paſt for a thing ſo ſacred, that they were look'd on as ill bred who put in their Addreſs our Religion eſtabliſh'd by Law, which look'd like a Tie on the King to maintain it, whereas the Stile of the more courtly was to put all our Security upon the King's Promiſe. The Clergy of London added a Word to this in their Addreſs, Our Religion eſtabliſh'd by Law, dearer to us than our Lives. This had ſuch an Inſinuation in it as made it very unacceptable; ſome follow'd their Example, but this was mark'd to be remember'd againſt thoſe that had ſo menacing a Form.

The reverend Clergy of London began early to bear their Teſtimony againſt the Advances which Popery was making; but the Country Clergy of the minor Orders continu'd their Rage againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters, which made them blind to any Danger from the Papiſts. Soon after the late King's Death, the new King caus'd Huddleſton the Prieſt to declare and publiſh that his Brother King Charles dy'd a Papiſt, and had receiv'd the extreme Vunction, Euchariſt, and all the Popiſh Viaticums. There were alſo found in his ſtrong Box two Papers, which King James and the Duke of Ormond witneſs'd were the King's own Hand-writing. The noble Argument was to prove the Neceſſity of an infallible viſible Church-Guide, which could be no other than the Church of Rome, which is handled as merrily as in Mouſe Montagu's Anſwer to Bays's Hind and Panther, as for the Nonſenſe, tho' the Air is more grave and ſolemn: The King publiſh'd them himſelf, as if his pious Brother had written them by his own Study, tho' the Impoſture appear'd plainly by the Quotations out of Scripture, which Biſhop Burnet aſſures us he never read, but to make a Jeſt of it; all who knew him did without any ſort of doubting conclude that he never compos'd them. This is James the Juſt, who deals ſo treacherouſly with the Memory of his Brother; this is the King of his Word. The ſecond Sunday after he came to the Throne, he, to the Surprize of the whole Court, went openly to Maſs, and ſent Caryl to Reme with Letters to the Pope, but without a Character.

King Charles a Papiſt prov'd by King James.

The ſtrong Box.

The Earl of Rocheſter was made Lord Treaſurer. This is the ſame Earl of whom the Marquis of Hallifax complain'd, that there were Raſures and Leaves cut out in the Treaſury-Books when he was in that Employment, as Commiſſioner, before. The Earl of Clarendon his Brother was made Lord Privy Seal. The Biſhop adds, Rocheſter on his Advancement became ſo violent and boiſterous, that the whole Court join'd with the Queen, Mary of Modena, to ſupport the Earl of Sunderland as a proper Ballance to him; accordingly he was made Secretary of State, Lord Godolphin was made Lord Chamberlain to the Queen, the Marquis of Hallifax Preſident of the Council.

A. D. 1685.

Echard defiles his Hiſtory again with the Merit of this Knighthood, In Conſideration of his eminent and unſhaken Loyalty to the Crown in all Extremities, and as a Mark of ſingular Satisfaction his Majeſty has in his preſent, as well as paſt Services, with repeated Declarations of his royal Grace and Bounty towards him. The very Wretch this, of whom the Lord L—— ſaid in the Houſe of Peers, He's one of the greateſt Villains upon Earth, a Rogue beyond my Skill to delineate, he deſerves, of all Men, to be hang'd, and I believe I ſhall live to ſee that be his Fate. Indeed never Villain was ſo often ſo near the Gallows as he, and yet ſo often eſcap'd it.

S. H. Vol. III. p. 85.

One cannot without Mirth read what Echard tells us about this King and his Queen's Coronation on the Day of St. George for England, April 23. Of the Beauty of the Spectacle of a beautiful Queen, and of the Medals that were ſtruck upon the King's Victories and Trophies, and of the Crown's tottering on the King's Head; inſomuch, that the Honourable Henry Sidney Eſq; Brother to Col. Sidney, in whoſe Murder the Duke of York was ſo much concern'd, once kept it from falling off, ſaying, This is not the firſt time that our Family have ſupported the Crown. The Coronation Oath was now alter'd by Archbiſhop Sancroft, as it had been done by Archbiſhop Laud for this King's Father. I ſay it notwithſtanding I have Echard before me, who pretends to prove that Laud made no ſuch Alteration, and his Proof is that King Charles the Firſt refuted it, and that as to King James II. 'twas only an Aſperſion thrown upon him by Sir Robert Atkins, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, in an eloquent Speech he made to Sir William Aſhurſt, Lord Mayor of London, when he was in that Court; and then having put his own Credit into the Scale againſt the Lord Chief Baron, he makes this bold but ſenſeleſs Reflection, Only we may ſay thus much, that when a known Falſity, which by the way, is a known Truth, is join'd with a great Improbability, the latter may as well be ſuppos'd to be a Miſtake as the former is without Doubt and Queſtion. What a Head he has! becauſe the one Aſſertion is not true, ſuppoſing it as he aſſerts, therefore the other is falſe.

Coronation.

State-Tracts.

The Parliament met in Scotland the 28th of March, and I ſhall inſert a Paſſage or two of the King's Letter, to ſhew the Delicacy of Thought and Expreſſion. I am reſolv'd to maintain my Power in its greateſt Luſtre, that I may be the better enabled to defend your Religion againſt phanatical Contrivances, Murtherers, and Aſſaſſins. Whoever has a mind to ſee the Duke of Queensbury the Lord Commiſſioner's Speech, or the Lord Chancellor's the Earl of Perth, may find them in the Archdeacon's Book, as alſo the Parliament's Addreſs, promiſing to extirpate all Fanaticiſm: And an Act anent That all ſuch Perſons as being cited in Caſes of High Treaſon, Field or Houſe Conventicles, or Church Irregularities, ſhall refuſe to give Teſtimony, ſhall be liable to be puniſh'd, as guilty of thoſe Crimes reſpectively, ſpectively, in which they refus'd to be Witneſſes. Thus, ſays Echard, all things appear'd calm and quiet in Scotland.

An Hiſtorian muſt have more Temper than I boaſt of, to read the Archdeacon's Relation of Oates's Trial, without wiſhing him ſome Part of his Puniſhment; for tho' he was not butcher'd as Colledge was, yet the Infernal Cruelties that were unjuſtly inflicted on him, I am about to prove they were Unjuſt as well as Infernal, make a Man to reflect with Horror on a Writer that could ſpeak of them with Applauſe; and indeed it is very great Pity that other Notice has not, or cannot be taken of it. This Man, ſays he, who had been call'd a Doctor of Divinity, and the Saviour of the Nation, was now look'd upon as a vile wretched Cheat, his Conviction did ſenſibly ſtrike at the Credit of the Popiſh Plot; he was ty'd to a Cart, where he made hideous Bellowings, and ſwooned ſeveral Times with the Greatneſs of the Anguiſh; the ſecond Day he was not able to go or ſtand, he was then dragg'd upon a Sledge, where he became a diſmal Spectacle to the People. To this Echard adds ſomething which ſhews the great Delight he took in it, who could better judge of his Puniſhment than his Crimes. The infamous L'Eſtrange ſaid Oates was ſcandalouſly drunk, and that was the Reaſon he could not ſtand, and Echard copies him. I am ſure the Reader will have need of all his Patience on this occaſion. The Perjury pretended to be prov'd upon Oates was twofold, for ſwearing to the Conſult April the 24th, when the St. Omers Boys ſwore he was in their College; and again that Ireland was in Town between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt, whereas in Truth, quoth Echard, he was at that Time, and for ſeveral Days before and after in Staffordſhire. I have elſewhere prov'd this to be as falſe as ever any thing came from the Father of Falſhood, to which I muſt add another Proof, that Oates was in Town the 24th of April was prov'd by Sir Richard Barker, Mr. Walker a Miniſter, Mr. Page, Mr. Clay a Romiſh Prieſt, Mrs. Mayo, Sarah Ives, Mr. Smith, Oates's Schoolmaſter, and Butler, Sir Richard Barker's Coachman.

Coke, p. 328.

That Ireland was in Town between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt was ſworn by Sarah Payne; and Mr. Jeniſon hearing Ireland deny'd his being then in Town, when the other knew that he was, it ſo diſguſted him at a Religion that allow'd lying with a Man's laſt Words, that he who was before a Papiſt turn'd Proteſtant, and declar'd it upon Oath at Lord Stafford's Trial, which he confirm'd when he was dying. Of theſe Things, Hints have been already given, what follows is new Evidence.

P. 330. One Mr. Hinton, a Goldſmith in Lombard-ſtreet, was Ireland's Caſhier: and Mr. Hinton going out of Town between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt 1678. met Ireland at or about Barnet, coming from London, when Ireland told him he had extraordinary occaſion for Money, urging Hinton to go back with him; but Hinton ſaid his Man could do Ireland's Buſineſs as well as himſelf, and his Affairs would not permit him to go back. Mr. Coke ask'd Mr. Hinton the Truth of this, to which he evaded giving a direct Anſwer; but it is enter'd in Hinton's Caſh-Book, paid to Mr. Ireland's own Hands, whereas the other Entries are paid to his Order; and Mr. Hinton's Man offer'd to ſwear he paid thoſe Moneys to Ireland himſelf. Hinton afterwards failing, a Commiſſion of Bankrupt was ſued againſt him, and his Books of Account were deliver'd, and kept at Vernon's Coffee-Houſe behind the Exchange, where any one might have ſeen the Entry paid to Ireland himſelf. Mr. Coke adds, I am ſure Hinton was in Court to have teſtify'd this at Oates's Trial, but was terrify'd from it for fear of being undone.

A. D. 1685.

Echard, on the Evidence of Popiſh perjur'd Wretches, and contrary to all this, repeats again, He who was ſtil'd the Saviour of the Nation, was now treated as the moſt vile and profligate Impoſtor. The infamous Jefferies, carefully copied by him, told the Jury, There does not remain the leaſt Doubt but that Oates is the blackeſt and moſt perjur'd Villain that ever appear'd upon the Face of the Earth; he would have excepted himſelf, if his Impudence had not been equal to his Villainy. Sir John Holt, Sir Henry Pollexfen, Lords Chief Juſtices, Sir Robert Atkins Lord Chief Baron, with ſix Judges more, being all that were then in the Houſe of Lords, unanimouſly declar'd to their Lordſhips, May the 25th 1689. That the Judgments againſt Oates were contrary to Law and antient Practice, and therefore erroneous, and ought to be revers'd; inſtead of which, Echard tells us, The Lords could not be prevail'd on to blanch his Reputation, it is all the Wit he has, or reſtore him to the Capacity of being an Evidence; but he would not tell us that Lords for Oates.

The Duke of Bolton,
The Earl of Macclesfield,
The Earl of Bridgwater,
The Earl of Bolingbroke,
The Earl of Stamford,
The Earl of Bath,
The Earl of Oxford,
The Lord Wharton,
The Lord Grey,
The Lord Cornwallis,
The Lord Herbert,
The Lord Vaughan,
The Lord Eure,

were for blanching his Reputation, and among other Reaſons had theſe: "Becauſe the ſaid "Judgments are barbarouſly inhuman and un-"chriſtian, and there is no Precedent to war-"rant the Puniſhment of whipping, and com-"mitting to Priſon for Life, for the Crime of "Perjury, which yet were but one Part of the "Puniſhments inflicted upon him, becauſe the "principal Matters upon which theſe Indict-"ments were founded, were the Points objected "againſt Mr. Oates's Teſtimony in ſeveral "Trials, in which he was allow'd to be a good "and credible Witneſs, tho' teſtify'd againſt him "by moſt of the ſame Perſons who witneſs'd a-"gainſt him upon theſe two Indictments, &c."

Danger-field whip'd and murther'd.

In the Puniſhment of Mr. Thomas Dangerfield there was the ſame diabolical Cruelty as in Oates's Caſe; 'twas for writing and publiſhing that very Narrative, which was printed by Order of the Houſe of Commons. The Court will be brought to a Reckoning for theſe things before we have done with them, ſo we may ſpare Reflection. The compleat Hiſtorian, who was a greater Dignitary than even Mr. Archdeacon, writes thus of Dangerfield, In his Return from Tyburn towards Newgate after his whipping, being in a Coach he had reproachful Words given him by one Robert Francis, a virulent Papiſt, and was run by him into the Eye with a Tuck at the End of a Cane, of which he dy'd ſoon after. Francis hang'd for it.

'Tis true Francis was hang'd for it, but Echard does what he can to blanch his Reputation; inſtead of a virulent Papiſt, he atteſts, he was an obedient Son of the Church of England; inſtead of a Tuck at the End of a Cane, he ſays 'twas a ſmall Bambow, and a Stroak over the Eye; but he is forc'd to correct that, and own 'twas into the Eye, becauſe it affected his Brain. Biſhop Burnet calls Francis a brutal Student of the Law, inſtead of which the Archdeacon ſays, he led a quiet inoffenſive Life. 'Tis very plain that this Action was very grateful to him, or he would not have falſify'd the Story in favour of ſuch a Villain as Francis.

About

A. D. 1685. About the ſame time, the latter end of May, the pious, reverend, learned and eminent Mr. Richard Baxter was a brought to a Trial on an Information againſt him in the King's Bench before that deteſtable Monſter Jefferies, for whoſe Infamy there is nothing in the Dregs of Language too foul. He was thrown into Jail the 28th of February, and kept there till the 30th of May, when he was brought to the King's Bench Bar, accompany'd by Sir Henry Aſhurſt. His Counſel having before mov'd for Time, Jefferies cry'd out in a Fury, I will not give him a Minute's time more to ſave his Life. We have had to do with other ſorts of Perſons, but now we have a Saint to deal with, and I know how to deal with Saints as well as Sinners; yonder ſtands Oates in the Pillory, and he ſays he ſuffers for the Truth, and ſo ſays Baxter; but if Baxter did but ſtand on the other ſide of the Pillory with him, I would ſay two of the greateſt Rogues and Raſcals in the Kingdom ſtood there. The Cerberus! Jefferies no ſooner came into Court, than he ſate down with great Indignation in his Face. A ſhort Cauſe being call'd and try'd, the Clerk began to read the Title of another. You Blockhead you, cries Jefferies, the next Cauſe is between Richard Baxter and the King. The Paſſages mention'd in the Information were pick'd out of Mr. Baxter's Paraphraſe on the New Teſtament by Roger L'Eſtrange. And as we read in Dr. Calamy, a certain noted Clergyman put into the hands of his Enemies ſome Accuſations out of Romans 13, as againſt the King, to touch his Life, but no uſe was made of them. The great Charge was, that in theſe ſeveral Paſſages he reflected on the Prelates of the Church of England, and ſo was guilty of Sedition, &c. The King's Counſel open'd the Information at large, with its Aggravations. Mr. Wallop, Mr. Williams, Mr. Rotheram, Mr. Phipps, and Mr. Atwood were Mr. Baxter's Counſel, and had been feed by Sir Henry Aſhurſt. Mr. Wallop ſaid, " I conceive the Matter de" pending being a Point of Doctrine, it ought to " be refer'd to the Biſhop his Ordinary: But if " not, I humbly conceive the Doctrine is inno-
" cent and juſtifiable, ſetting aſide the Innuen-
" do's, for which there is no colour, there being
" no Antecedent to refer to; i. e. no Biſhop or " Clergy of the Church of England nam'd.
" The Book accus'd, i. e. the Comment on the " New Teſtament, contains many eternal Truths,
" but they who drew the Information are the " Libellers, in applying to the Prelates of the " Church of England thoſe ſevere things which " were written concerning ſome Prelates, who " deſerv'd the Characters which he gave. My " Lord, I humbly conceive the Biſhops Mr.
" Baxter ſpeaks of, as your Lordſhip, if you " have read Church-Hiſtory, muſt confeſs,
" were the Plagues of the Church and of the " World." Jefferies then interrupted him thus, Mr. Wallop, I obſerve you are in all theſe dirty Cauſes; and were it not for you, Gentlemen of the Long Robe, who ſhould have more Wit and Honeſty, that ſupport and hold up theſe factious Knaves by the Chin, we ſhould not be at the Paſs we are. " My Lord, ſays Mr. Wallop,
" I humbly conceive, that the Paſſages accus'd
" are natural Deductions from the Text." You humbly conceive, ſays Jefferies; and I humbly conceive, ſwear him, ſwear him. Mr. Wallop,
" Under Favour I am Counſel for the Defen" dant; and if I underſtand either Latin or
" Engliſh, the Information now brought againſt
" Mr. Baxter, upon ſuch a ſlight Ground, is a " greater Reflection upon the Church of Eng-
" land, than any thing contain'd in the Book
" he's accus'd for." Jefferies cut him ſhort,

Mr. Baxter's Trial.

Sometimes you humbly conceive, and ſometimes you are very poſitive: you talk of your Skill in Church-Hiſtory, and of your underſtanding Latin and Engliſh; I think I underſtand ſomething of them as well as you; but, in ſhort, muſt tell you, That if you don't underſtand your Duty better, I ſhall teach it you. Upon which Mr. Wallop ſat down. Mr. Rotheram urg'd, That if Mr. Baxter's Book had ſharp Reflections upon the Church of Rome by Name, but ſpake well of the Prelates of the Church of England, it was to be preſum'd, that the ſharp Reflections were intended only againſt the Prelates of the Church of Rome. Jefferies ſaid, Baxter is an Enemy to the Name and Thing, the Office and Perſons of Biſhops. Mr. Rotheram added, Mr. Baxter frequently attends Divine Service, goes to the Sacrament, and perſuades others to do ſo too, as is certainly and publickly known, and has in the very Book ſo charg'd, ſpoken very moderately and honourably of the Biſhops of the Church of England. Mr. Baxter ſpoke, My Lord, I have been ſo moderate, with reſpect to the Church of England, that I have incurr'd the Cenſure of many of the Diſſenters upon that account. Baxter for Biſhops, cries Jefferies, That's a merry Conceit indeed! Turn to it, turn to it. Mr. Rotheram turn'd to a Place, where 'tis ſaid, That great Reſpect is due to thoſe truly call'd to be Biſhops amongſt us, or to that purpoſe. Ay, ſays Jefferies, This is your Presbyterian Cant, truly call'd to be Biſhops; that is, himſelf and ſuch Raſcals call'd to be Biſhops of Kidderminſter, and other ſuch Places, Biſhops ſet apart by ſuch factious, ſniveling Presbyterians as himſelf. A Kidderminſter Biſhop he means, according to the Saying of a late learned Author, and every Pariſh ſhall maintain a Tithe-Pig Metropolitan. Mr. Baxter beginning to ſpeak again, Jefferies ſaid, " Richard,
" Richard, doſt thou think we'll hear thee
" poiſon the Court, &c. Richard, thou art
" an old Fellow, an old Knave; thou haſt
" written Books enough to load a Cart, every " one as full of Sedition, I might ſay of Trea-
" ſon, as an Egg is full of Meat. The dull Beaſt! " Hadſt thou been whipp'd out of thy " writing Trade forty Years ago, it had been " happy. Thou pretendeſt to be a Preacher of " the Goſpel of Peace; and thou haſt one foot
" in the Grave, 'tis time for thee to begin to " think what account thou intendeſt to give.
" But leave thee to thyſelf, and I ſee thou'lt go " on as thou haſt begun. I know thou haſt a " mighty Party, and I ſee a great many of the " Brotherhood in Corners waiting to ſee what " will become of their mighty Don, and a " Doctor of the Party, looking to Dr. Bates, at " your Elbow; but by the Grace of Almighty
" God, I'll cruſh you all." Mr. Rotheram ſitting down, Mr. Atwood began to ſhew, that not one of the Paſſages mention'd in the Information ought to be ſtrain'd to that Senſe, which was put upon them by the Innuendo's; they being natural when taken in a milder Senſe. Nor could any one of them be apply'd to the Prelates of the Church of England, without a very forc'd Conſtruction. To evidence this, he would have read ſome of the Texts; but Jefferies cry'd out, You ſhan't draw me into a Conventicle with your Annotations, nor your ſniveling Parſon neither. My Lord, ſays Atwood,
" I conceive this to be expreſsly within Roſwell's
" Caſe, lately before your Lordſhip." You conceive, cries Jefferies, you conceive amiſs. Mr. Atwood went on, " My Lord, that I may uſe
" the beſt Authority, permit me to repeat your " Lordſhip's own Words in that Caſe." No, you

A. D. 1685.

ſhan't, ſays Jefferies, you need not ſpeak, for you are an Author already, tho' you ſpeak and write impertinently. Says Atwood, "I can't help "that, my Lord, if my Talent be no better; "but it is my Duty to do my beſt for my Cli- "ent." Then Jefferies bellow'd againſt Atwood's Writings; and Atwood juſtify'd what he had written to be in Defence of the Engliſh Conſtitution, declaring he had never diſown'd any thing he had written. Jefferies, ſeveral times, order'd him to ſit down, but he ſtill went on, ſaying, "My Lord, I have a Matter of Law to "offer for my Client, &c. he cited ſeveral Caſes "wherein it had been adjudged, That Words "ought to be taken in the milder Senſe, and "not to be ſtrain'd by Innuendo's." Well, cries Jefferies, when he had done, you have had your Say. Mr. Williams and Mr. Phipps ſaid nothing, for they ſaw 'twas to no purpoſe. At length Mr. Baxter himſelf ſaid, "My Lord, I think I can "eaſily anſwer all that is laid to my Charge, "and I ſhall do it briefly; the Sum is contain'd "in theſe few Papers, to which I ſhall add a "little by Teſtimony." But he would not hear a Word, and proceeded to direct the Jury in a long railing Harangue, which would have been a Scandal to Whitechapel Court, where this Brute was once a bawling, ſtarving Petty-Fogger. 'Tis notoriouſly known, there has been a Deſign to ruin the King and the Nation, the old Game has been renew'd, and this has been the main Incendiary. He is as modeſt now as can be. But Time was, when no Man was ſo ready at, Bind your Kings in Chains, and your Nobles in Fetters of Iron; and to your Tents, O Iſrael. Gentlemen, for God's ſake, don't let us be gull'd twice in an Age, &c. He told the Jury in the Concluſion, That if they in their Conſciences believ'd he meant the Biſhops and Clergy of the Church of England, in the Paſſages which the Information referr'd to, they muſt find him guilty, and he could mean no Man elſe; if not, they muſt find him not guilty. When he had done, Mr. Baxter ſaid, Does your Lordſhip think any Jury will pretend to paſs a Verdict on me upon ſuch a Trial? I'll warrant you, Mr. Baxter, ſaid he, don't you trouble yourſelf about that. The Jury immediately laid their Heads together at the Bar, and found him guilty. As he was going away, Mr. Baxter told Jefferies, A Predeceſſor of yours had other Thoughts of me. Jefferies reply'd, There is not an honeſt Man in England but what takes you for a great Knave. He had ſubpœna'd ſeveral Clergymen, who were in Court, but were of no uſe to him thro' the Rage of the wicked unjuſt Judge. The Trial being over, Sir Henry Aſhurſt led Mr. Baxter thro' the Croud, and convey'd him away in his Coach. On the 29th of June Judgment was given againſt him to pay 500 Marks, and to lie in Goal till he paid it. Echard ſays, in excuſe of this Injuſtice and Violence, There were Reaſons and Provocations for it, to puniſh an innocent Man.

Mr. Baxter found guilty.

And fin'd 500 Marks

We have ſeen how Echard magnifies King James for being a King of his Word, James the Juſt. Was the following Inſtance out of Biſhop Burnet a Proof of it? Some days after his coming to the Crown, he promis'd the Queen and his Prieſts, that he would ſee his Concubine Mrs. Sidley no more: This juſt Monarch living in a Courſe of Adultery with Sir Charles Sidley's Daughter, whom he had debauch'd. Orders were ſent to Mrs. Sidley to leave her Lodgings in Whitehall, yet he ſtill continu'd a ſecret Commerce with her.

The King not a King of his Word.

A Parliament call'd

The King having ſummon'd a Parliament to meet the 19th of May, the Archdeacon introduces it with an account of the Elections, which is, to Aſtoniſhment, full of Falſhood. "Peo- "ples Minds were fill'd with Expectations and "Longings for the Meeting of the Parliament, "and the Fate of the Nation ſeem'd to depend "on that Aſſembly, which was to ſupport it "in this difficult Juncture. In order to this "grand Buſineſs, the Elections were generally "carry'd on and compleated with the moſt un- "common Coolneſs, Diſcretion and Unanimity; "and notwithſtanding the unjuſtifiable model- "ling ſo many Corporations ſince the laſt Par- "liament, there never was a Houſe of Commons "more able and more induſtrious in preſerving "the Happineſs of the King, the Nation and "the Church." 'Tis for the ſake of the laſt, directly contrary to Truth, he gives us this Account of the Elections. Now read Biſhop Burnet: "All Arts were us'd to manage Elec- "tions, ſo that the King ſhould have a Parlia- "ment to his mind. Complaints came up from "all the Parts of England of the Injuſtice and "Violence us'd in Elections, beyond what had "ever been practiſed in former Times; and "this was ſo univerſal over the whole Nation, "that no Corner of it was neglected. In the "new Charters that had been granted, the E- Irregularly choſen. "lection of the Members was taken out of the "hands of the Inhabitants, and reſtrain'd to the "Corporation-Men, all thoſe being left out, who "were not acceptable to the Court. In ſome "Boroughs they could not find a number of "Men to be depended on, ſo the neighbouring "Gentlemen were made the Corporation-Men; "and, in ſome of them, Perſons of other Coun- "ties, not ſo much as known in the Borough, "were nam'd. This was practis'd in the moſt "avow'd manner in Cornwal by the Earl of "Bath, who put the Officers of the Guards "Names in almoſt all the Charters of that Coun- "ty, which ſending up forty-four Members, they "were for the moſt part ſo choſen, that the "King was ſure of their Votes on all Occaſions. Echard again, "It conſiſted, for the moſt "part, of the richeſt and wiſeſt Men of the King- "dom." Biſhop Burnet again, "They were "neither Men of Parts nor Eſtates." Echard, "There were 55 of noble Families, 95 Baro- "nets, 96 Knights; the reſt were commonly "Gentlemen of the beſt Intereſt, Credit and "Knowledge in their Countries." Biſhop Burnet, "Having neither Riches nor Parts, there "was no hope left, either of working on their "Underſtandings, or of making them ſee their "Intereſt. This gave all thinking Men a me- "lancholy Proſpect. England now ſeem'd loſt, "unleſs ſome happy Accident ſhould ſave it. "All People ſaw the way for packing a Par- "liament." Further, as to Echard's carrying the Elections with uncommon Coolneſs, Diſcretion and Unanimity, ſee what as good a Churchman as himſelf, Sir Edward Seymour ſaid in a Speech about the Petitions. "The Complaints Not a true Repreſen- "of the Irregularities in Elections are ſo great, tative. "that many doubt whether this is a true Re- "preſentative of the Nation or not? And this Parliament, if they were worthy to be call'd a Parliament*, ſays Coke, being made to his hand, he might do and ſay to them what he pleas'd. Which he did, aſſuming the ſame Airs as a Boris, or an Abdelmelek would have done on the ſame occaſion, if there had ever been a Parliament at Morocco or Moſcow, and probably the Senators would have been juſt ſuch another Repreſentative. Sir John Trevor was choſen Speaker, the ſame who was afterwards expell'd the Houſe of Commons for Bribery. The King told them in his Speech, he had heard of Argyle's landing in Scotland, and that he would take care the Rebellion ſhould meet with the Reward it deſerv'd. The Commons thank'd the King for his moſt gracious Speech, and immediately order'd a Bill of his Revenue to be brought in by Mr. Finch, who diſtinguiſh'd himſelf at Lord Ruſſel's Trial by ſcribere eſt agere, and ſome People call'd him ſo ever after. This Money-Bill encreas'd the Revenue to above two Millions a Year, according to Echard, whoſe Informations were very imperfect. His Revenue was much more. The Cuſtoms alone were 800000 Pounds a Year, and the other Branches of his Revenue amounted to 1600000 Pounds a Year, which with his own Revenue as Duke of York, being 150000 Pounds per Ann. roſe the whole annual Receipt to 2550000 Pounds a Year, three times as much as ever any King of England had before Charles II. The Houſe of Lords order'd the Impeachments againſt the Earl of Tyrone, the Earl of Danby, the Earl of Powis, the Lord Arundel of Wardour, and the Lord Bellaſis, to be annull'd, four Lords only diſſenting, the Earls of Radnor, Angleſea, Clare and Stamford. There was alſo a Bill brought into the Houſe of Peers, to reverſe the Attainder of the Lord Stafford; againſt which the Earls of Angleſea and Radnor and other Peers proteſted, and gave ſo good Reaſons for it, that 'tis ſtrange it ſhould ever have paſt through that Houſe to the Houſe of Commons, as Echard tells us it did. But Biſhop Burnet informs us, It ſtuck with the Lords, and would not go down.

P. 640.

The Houſe of Commons, if, as Coke ſays, they deſerve to be ſo call'd, were readier to give Money than the King to ask it; and to make the moſt of ſuch an Aſſembly, the Courtiers projected many Laws to ruin all that oppos'd their Deſigns. The moſt important of theſe was, an Act declaring Treaſons during this Reign, by which Words were made to be Treaſon, and the Clauſe was ſo drawn, that any thing ſaid to diſparage the King's Perſon or Government, was made Treaſon, within which, every thing ſaid to the Diſhonour of the King's Religion, would have been comprehended, as Judges and Juries were then modell'd. This was chiefly oppos'd by Sergeant Maynard, who, in a very grave Speech, laid open the Inconvenience of making Words Treaſon, and what he ſaid made ſome Impreſſion. But it is thought, if the Duke of Monmouth's landing had not ſhorten'd the Seſſion, that and every thing elſe, which the Courtiers were projecting, would have paſs'd. Never was greater Harmony, ſays Echard, between the King and the People; never were more fair Promiſes on one ſide, nor greater Generoſity on the other. A ſlaviſh Submiſſion to the imperious Commands of an arbitrary Prince, he calls Harmony; a vile Profuſion of the Nation's Treaſure, without the leaſt Appearance of Neceſſity or Reaſon, he calls Generoſity; and all for the ſake of this odious Vote, May the 27th, That an humble Addreſs be preſented to his Majeſty, to deſire him to iſſue forth his Royal Proclamation, to cauſe the Penal Laws to be put in Execution againſt Diſſenters from the Church of England. As long as there is any ſuch Faction alive, ſo long are they ſure of his Applauſe, and this King will have his beſt Word. Let him do what he will with every one and every thing elſe, provided Perſecution has ſtill her Claws on Proteſtant Diſſenters. Biſhop Burnet ſaw what this fatal Agreement between King James and his pack'd Parliament would come to, and tells us, 'twas happy for England that they ſat no longer in the firſt Seſſions; for the King doing every thing to provoke a Proteſtant and Free Parliament, even this Parliament grew at laſt a little reſty.

A tyrannical Act offer'd.

But while they were in extaſy for the Bleſſings they expected from him, they gave him new Duties on Sugars and Tobacco, which he ſaid he would only make Trial of, and if he found them injurious to his Plantations, he would not take them; contrary to which, this King of his Word, had perpetual Complaints from the Plantations, that thoſe Duties would ruin them, yet he made uſe of that Money as long as he had a Penny of the publick Treaſure to receive. Of this I am my ſelf a Witneſs, and know as much of the Matter as any other Perſon can.

Earl of Argyle's Expedition in Scotland.

Having mention'd the Earl of Argyle's being in Scotland, I ſhall obſerve, that his Lordſhip had offer'd to join with any powerful Body that would appear in Scotland or England againſt the Tyranny of the Times, two Years before this, if he could be advanc'd 8000 Pounds, and 1000 Horſe were ſent to Scotland; but as all Motions of that kind were Embrio's, ſo nothing came of it; and King Charles II. met with his Death from thoſe very hands that murder'd his Proteſtant Subjects for conſpiring it, as was pretended.

A. D. 1685.

My Lord Argyle remain'd quiet in Friesland, and came not to reside at Amsterdam till after King James's Accession to the Throne, where he met with his Countrymen, who lay conceal'd there. The chief of them were the Lord Melvill, Sir Patrick Hume, and Sir John Cockran. A rich zealous Widow having furnish'd him with 10000 Pounds, he laid it out in Arms and Ammunition, which was dexterously manag'd by one that traded to Venice, as intended for the Service of that Republick. The Lord Argyle and Sir Patrick Hume had some difference about the Place of landing in Scotland, which was made up by the Duke of Monmouth, who would gladly have gone to Scotland with them; but the Earl of Argyle was willing to keep that Command himself, and that the Duke of Monmouth should make a Diversion in England, for which he had made no Preparations. On his Father's Death he retir'd to Brussels, the Prince of Orange supplying him with Money. Lord Grey, and Lady Henrietta Wentworth, who was desperately in Love with him, follow'd him thither. The Lady, as well as the Duke, fancy'd that he being marry'd to his Dutchess before he was of Age capable of a free Consent, the Marriage was null; so they liv'd together, and thought they did not break any Commandment. So apt is Passion to misguide Reason and Virtue! Major Wade and Ferguson press'd the Duke of Monmouth to land in England, so did Mr. Fletcher of Saltoune in Scotland, a Man of great Parts and Virtues; who not liking Lord Argyle's Scheme, resolved to run Fortunes with the Duke of Monmouth, who was flatter'd by the English Refugees, that all the West of England would be for him; which he was the more easily induc'd to believe, because when he was there in his Progress four or five Years before, Multitudes of People crowded from all Parts to welcome him, and follow'd him with Acclamations of Joy. His Counsellors reckon'd there would be no fighting, but that the Guards and others who adher'd to the King, would melt to nothing before him. They fancy'd the City of London would be in such a Disposition to revolt, that if he should land in the West, the King would be in great Perplexity. He could not have two Armies, and his fear of Tumults near his Person, would oblige him to keep such a Force about him, that he would not be able to send any against Monmouth: so they reckon'd he would have time to form an Army, and in a little while be in a Condition to seek out the King, and fight him on equal Terms. The Duke of Monmouth himself, and Mr. Fletcher thought they were in no Condition to make such an Attempt, for want of Money and Officers, and an Interest secur'd in the Country; but Lord Grey said Henry VII. landed with a smaller Number, and succeeded. Colonel Danvers gave them great Hopes of a Rising in or about London, and promis'd a Body of no less than 3000 Horse, and Horsemen were certainly engaged to be ready at an Hour's warning. Major Wade seem'd sure of Bristol; Mr. Dore of Limington, afterwards Col. Dore, was in the Secret, to act in those Parts either by rising or securing a Retreat upon occasion. All which Considerations turn'd the Duke's Head to those desperate Counsels, and pawning his Jewels, he bought Arms, which were put aboard a Ship freighted for Spain.

And the Duke of Monmouth's in England.

The Lord Argyle was first ready, and May 2d set sail from the Vlye in Holland with three small Ships, which arriv'd at Orkney in three Days. He sent out a Boat to get Intelligence, and to take Prisoners, which serv'd only to give Intelligence where he was himself; thence he sail'd round to the West Highlands, and landed at a Place call'd Dunstansnage, a Castle of his own, which he garrison'd. He found at his Landing that the early Notice the Council had of his Designs had spoil'd his whole Scheme, for they had summon'd all the Gentlemen of his Country to Edinburgh, yet he got near 3000 Men about him; and if with these he had immediately gone over to the Western Counties of Air and Renfrew, he might have given the Government much Trouble, but he linger'd too long, hoping still to have brought more of his Highlanders together; but all the Country being call'd out against him, he cross'd an Arm of the Sea, and landed in the Isle of Bute, where he waited still for the coming in of the Highlanders. His Lordship left his Arms in a Castle, with such a Guard as he could spare, but they were routed by a Party of the King's Forces, and with this the Bishop of Sarum says, he lost both Heart and Hopes. He gave every thing for gone, put himself into a Disguise, and had almost escap'd, but he was taken. A Body of Gentlemen that had follow'd him forc'd their Way thro' the Enemy; the rest, which was the greater Part, fell into his hands, as Sir John Cockran, Mr. John Ayloffe, and Mr. Richard Rumbald the Maltster; these two last were Englishmen, and yet rather chose to go with Argyle to Scotland, than with Monmouth to England. I believe out of some Resentment of the Duke's Behaviour on his Reconciliation with his Father, or because they thought Lord Argyle a Republican. The latter express'd even a cheerful Calm under all his Misfortunes, he justify'd all he had done, for he said he was unjustly attainted, which had dissolv'd his Allegiance, and therefore 'twas Justice to himself and his Family to endeavour to recover what was so wrongfully taken from him; he complain'd of the Duke of Monmouth much, for delaying his coming so long after him, and for assuming the Name of King, both which he said were contrary to their Agreement at parting. Thus, says Bishop Burnet, he died pitied by all, except Mr. Archdeacon Echard, who, as if he had been the Dispenser of the tremendous Judgments of the Almighty, pours down Vengeance upon him in this foolish as well as impious Observation; That the late Earl of Argyle was taken in the same Month of the Year, in the same Week of the Month, in the same Hour of the Day, and was carry'd thro' the same Gate with the Marquis of Montrose, to display the retaliating Justice of Heaven. Lord Argyle was beheaded the 30th of June.

Beheaded.

Colonel Ayloffe had a mind to prevent the Insolence and Barbarity of his Enemies, who, he was sure, would not spare him, tho' he was the Lord Chancellor Clarendon's Nephew. My Lord of Salisbury tells us, that having got a Penknife into his Hands, he gave himself several Stabs, and thinking he was certainly a dead Man, he cry'd out, Now I defy my Enemies. His Lordship proceeds:

Col. Ayloffe stabs himself.

" Rumbald was he that dwelt in Ryehouse, " where it was pretended the Plot was laid for " murdering the late King and present King." Echard affirms, it was not a pretended, but a true Plot. Rumbald deny'd the Truth of that Conspiracy at the Place of Execution; but said, He did not believe that God had made the greater Part of Mankind with Saddles on their Backs and Bridles in their Mouths, and some few booted and spurr'd to ride the rest.

Duke of Monmouth's Expedition.

The Buſineſs was over in Scotland before it began in England; for the Duke of Monmouth ſail'd not from Holland till the 24th of May, and met with ſuch bad Weather and Winds, that he was 19 Days at Sea. He had with him one Man of War, and two Tenders, aboard which were Arms for about 5000 Men, Horſe and Foot. He had alſo with him about 100 Officers and Gentlemen, and on the 11th of June he came into the Cobb at Lyme in Dorſetſhire. As ſoon as he and his Men were landed, he commanded Silence, fell upon his Knees, and implor'd the Protection of Heaven in a ſhort Prayer. Then drawing his Sword, he led his Men up into the Town, where he muſter'd his little Company, and ſet up his Standard. Being ask'd whom they were for, they declared for the Proteſtant Religion. The chief Perſons who accompany'd the Duke were, Ford Lord Grey, a German Count, Colonel Holmes, Colonel Matthews, Colonel Foulks, Sir Joſeph Tyley, Major Perrot, Major Wade, Captain Anneſley, Dr. Temple, Dr. Oliver, Dr. Gaylard, &c. The two Hewlings, Mr. Speak, Mr. Bettiſcomb, Mr. Jenkins, Col. Joſhua Churchill, and others came in to him after his Landing. He publiſh'd his Declaration, which was long, and ill penn'd, ſuppoſed to be drawn by Ferguſon. It charged the King with the burning of London, the Popiſh-Plot, Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's Murther, the Earl of Eſſex's Death, with poiſoning his Brother, and many more Crimes. It ſet forth, that the King's Religion made him incapable of the Crown, that three ſubſequent Houſes of Commons had voted his Excluſion. It further charg'd him with the taking away the old Charters, and all the tyrannical Acts of the laſt Reign. The Elections of the preſent Parliament were exclaim'd againſt, and the People appeal'd to when met in a free Parliament. This Declaration brought in great Numbers of the middling and ordinary ſort of People, who ſoon wanted more Arms than he had for them. Above 14000 Men tender'd their Service to him before he went from Lyme, and about 6000 of them were regimented, tho' not compleatly arm'd.

I do not think it is worth while to copy Echard's Account of the Parliament's Uſage of the Duke of Monmouth, as ſoon as the King had told them he was landed. The News was brought to London by Thorold Mayor of Lyme, and Doſſel a Cuſtom-Houſe Officer, who were both examin'd in the Houſe of Commons, who voted to ſtand by King James, and to attaint the Duke. The Bill was diſpatch'd in leſs than two Days by the Commons; and being ſent up to the Lords by Sir John Fenwick, who was afterwards executed for High-Treaſon, it was read in that Houſe three times in one Day. The Commons alſo addreſs'd the King to give 5000 Pounds to any one who would aſſaſſinate the Duke of Monmouth, which they call'd bringing of him dead or alive. And on a ſmall Hint from him, that this Tumult would put him to ſome Charge, they without heſitation gave him 400000 Pounds to beat Monmouth, who had not 400000 Pence in his military Cheſt. On the 2d of July, all the various Kinds of Money-Bills having been paſs'd, the Parliament was adjourn'd to the 4th of Auguſt.

A. D. 1685.

Echard, whoſe Manuſcripts are juſt ſuch Authenticks as that about Oliver Cromwel and the Devil, brags of one of Ferguſon's relating to the Duke of Monmouth's Proceedings in the Weſt; and he makes Ferguſon tell us, that one of the Duke's Followers, who accompany'd him from Holland, was kill'd ſoon after their landing by another, whom he does not name, who was alſo one of his Companions, and who indeed was Mr. Fletcher of Saltoune; but the Man he kill'd was one of Taunton, or the Neighbourhood, who brought a great Body of Men from thence to join the Duke. The manner of it was thus: The Duke deſign'd to give Fletcher the joint Command of the Horſe with the Lord Grey, who was order'd out towards Bridport with a ſelect Party of Foot to obſerve the Militia of Dorſetſhire. Fletcher not yet furniſh'd with a Horſe, took the Taunton Man's without asking him leave, he being not in the way, and Fletcher thought that all things were to be in common amongſt them which could advance the Service. When Fletcher return'd from the Enterprize he was ſent upon, the Owner of the Horſe, a rough ill-bred Man, reproach'd him in very injurious Terms for taking his Horſe without asking his leave. Mr. Fletcher, who was naturally haſty and paſſionate, bore this longer than could have been expected from one of his Temper; but the other perſiſting in giving him foul Language, and offering a Switch or a Cane, Saltoune diſcharg'd a Piſtol at him, and ſhot him dead. It was not poſſible for the Duke of Monmouth to keep Fletcher about him after this, without diſguſting and loſing the Country People, who were coming in a Body to demand Juſtice; ſo he adviſed him to go aboard a Ship that was bound for Spain. Ferguſon in Echard's Manuſcript ſays, The Gentleman kill'd the Man with a Piſtol he ſnatch'd into his Hand for no other end, but to preſerve himſelf from being caned by the Perſon whom he ſhot. Ferguſon makes this unhappy Accident to be after Lord Grey's Retreat from Bridport. Biſhop Burnet, who probably had the Adventure from Saltoune, makes it before it, when Grey was ſent out with a ſmall Party, and coming near ſome Militia, ran away at ſight of them, but his Men ſtood. Lord Grey brought a falſe Alarm, which was ſoon found to be ſo; for the Men whom he had abandon'd came back in good order, after a warm Skirmiſh with the Enemy, whom they forc'd into Bridport, and kill'd ſeveral of them; as Captain Courtney Crocker of Devonſhire, and Mr. Strangeways of Dorſetſhire. The Duke of Monmouth, after Grey's cowardly Behaviour, ſaying to Colonel Matthews, What ſhall I do with him? Matthews reply'd, There is not a General in Europe that would ask ſuch a Queſtion but yourſelf, intimating that the leaſt he deſerv'd, was to have had his Command taken from him.

Fletcher of Saltoune kills a Man.

Four days after he landed, the Duke march'd to Axminſter in Devonſhire, four Miles from Lyme. Chriſtopher Monk, Duke of Albemarle, Son of General Monk, and Dr. Clarges's Siſter, if the Evidence in the Trial of the Caſe between Bath and Montagu Temp. William III. was not true, had then with him about 4000 Militia Men of the County of Devon, and intended to quarter in the ſame Town that Night: But the Duke enter'd the Place before him with part of his Army, lin'd the Hedges, planted his four little Field-Pieces, and prepar'd for an Engagement, Monk being ſuperiour to him in number. Inſtead of which, Duke Chriſtopher march'd off in great Diſorder and Confuſion. It was a falſe ſtep that the Duke took, in not purſuing that Run-away; for he had certainly made himſelf Maſter of Exeter, and of moſt of the Arms of thoſe Militia Men, who were no Enemies to his Cauſe; but he was of opinion not to fight till his Men were a little better diſciplin'd.

A. D. 1685.

On the 18th of June he arriv'd at the great and populous Town of Taunton, where he was received with ſuch general Exultation, that one would have thought the People's Wits were flown away in the flights of their Joy. The Houſes and Doors were adorned with green Boughs, Herbs and Flowers, and there was hardly a Hat to be ſeen without a Green Bough, the Mark of Diſtinction uſed by the Duke's Men. The next day 20 young Gentlewomen, with Colours ready made at the Charge of the Townſmen, preſented them, ſays Echard, to his Grace with particular Solemnity. The Captain their Schoolmiſtreſs, went before them with a naked Sword in one hand, and a ſmall curious Bible in the other, which ſhe alſo preſented with a ſhort acceptable Speech. In anſwer to which, the Duke ſaid, with an Air of great Satisfaction, I come now into the Field with a Deſign to defend the Truths contain'd in that Book, and to ſeal it with my Blood, if there is occaſion for it. Here he was prevail'd with by evil Counſellors to aſſume the Title of King. I have been aſſured by Perſons who were with him, and in his Confidence, that he never thought of it till after he landed, and was put upon it by that Arch-Traytor and Villain Ferguſon, whoſe treaſonable Practices ſince may very well make us ſuſpect he was a Spy on him, and a ſecret Agent for the King. It is certain he had given his Word to the Earl of Argyle, Colonel Holmes and others, that he would pretend to no more than to act as General of the Forces that ſhould join him againſt James Duke of York. He renew'd this Promiſe at Lyme to Mr. Lark the Baptiſt Miniſter there, who took the Command of a Troop of his Horſe, and to the Republicans who came in to him, and who were the major Part of his Followers. The malicious Turn the Jeſuit Orleans gives the Prince of Orange's Zeal on this occaſion, ſhews us how much his Memoirs are the more authentick for their being given him by King James; which is, that the Duke of Monmouth having broken his Word with the Prince of Orange, and proclaim'd himſelf King, that Prince immediately diſpatch'd Mr. Bentinck to King James to offer him his Service, both with his Perſon and all his Forces. I deſire the Reader to remember that Orleans's Book is recommended by Echard, who ſays of him, he writes like a Man, true in Hiſtory. Orleans affirms the Duke of Monmouth had promis'd to inthrone the Prince of Orange; and upon his hearing the Duke had caus'd himſelf to be proclaim'd King, he diſpatch'd Bentinck, &c. Now the Duke was proclaim'd King at Taunton the 20th of June, according to Echard, and it was on the 20th of June that Bentinck had his Audience at Whitehall; ſo that it was impoſſible for the Prince of Orange to hear the Duke of Monmouth had proclaim'd himſelf King, till many Days after King James had refus'd to accept Aſſiſtance from his Son-in-law.

Duke of Monmouth proclaim'd King.

Ferguſon a Traytor.

The Jeſuit Orleans's lying Book recommended by Echard, Orl. p. 277, 280.

At Taunton the Duke (as King) publiſh'd three Proclamations, one treating King James as he had been treated by him, ſetting a Price on his Head. Another, declaring the Parliament of England a ſeditious Aſſembly. The third proclaim'd the Duke of Albemarle a Traytor. I have ſeen the Copy of a Summons he ſent that High-born Prince, as Durfey call'd him, to ſurrender; but Duke Chriſtopher defy'd his Summons, and wrote him a Letter, in which he told Monmouth, he had better have let his Rebellion alone.

A. D. 1685.

Here the Reverend Hiſtorian is ſo ſupercilious as to queſtion the Truth of what I have ſaid, in the Secret Hiſtory, of Monmouth's ſummoning the Lord Churchill, who lay at Chard with ſome regular Troops, Sir William Portman's Regiment of Somerſetſhire Militia, and a Regiment of Devonſhire Militia. Tho' he deſerves no ſuch Compliance from me, yet to gratify him, I here let him know, that Mr. Henry Evans the Meſſenger, whom probably he has heard of, was then at Chard on a Meſſage to Lord Churchill; that he ſaw the Duke's Summons, and Lord Churchill's making a Jeſt of it. This Lord harraſs'd the Duke's Army more than all the reſt of the King's Forces, which were indeed commanded by very ſorry Generals, as the Prince of Orange obſerv'd to King James by Mr. Bentinck.

What Wonders Albemarle perform'd with the Devonſhire Trainbands, have been ſeen already. The Duke of Beaufort commanded the Glouceſterſhire Militia at Briſtol. The Duke of Somerſet Part of the Militia of that County at Bath. The Earl of Pembroke the Wiltſhire Trainbands at Chippenham: but all thoſe Militia Men were no more to be depended on, than thoſe of Somerſetſhire, whoſe red and yellow Liveries were the Ornament of the Duke of Monmouth's Army. A Regiment of Somerſetſhire Militia advancing to join thoſe of Devon, and oppoſe the Duke of Monmouth's marching eaſtward, had no ſooner enter'd a narrow Lane in their way, than obſerving the Mouths of 2 or 3 hollow Trees unluckily pointed to their Front, they immediately turn'd tail, and fled every Man to his own Home, except ſuch as ſtaid for the Duke of Monmouth's coming, and then went in to him.

The Duke, after he was proclaim'd King at Taunton, march'd to Bridgwater, eight Miles diſtant. He had then with him the greateſt Number of Men that ever were for him together, near 6000 tolerably well arm'd. He was proclaim'd in this Town at the High Croſs by the Mayor Mr. Alexander Popham, and his Brethren in their Formalities. Here his Declaration was read, and the Inhabitants with a ſort of Emulation who ſhould do moſt, ſent all kinds of Proviſions to the Soldiery in a rude ſort of Camp in Caſtlefield near the Town, where ſix Regiments of Foot appear'd, diſtinguiſh'd by their Colours, and had the Face of an Army. He had then about 1000 Horſe, Mares, Geldings and Colts, a Life-Guard of 40 young Men well mounted and arm'd, and maintain'd at their own Charge. Out of his Horſe were pick'd two very good Troops, commanded by Captain Hewling, and Captain . . . . . The Duke's Quarters were in the Caſtle, where King Charles II. and King James II. at ſeveral times had alſo their Quarters. Here he rais'd more voluntary Contributions than in any other place, by the Management of Mr. Roger Hoar, Mr. William Coleman, and other Inhabitants, great Friends and great Sufferers for this Cauſe, a very unaccountable one indeed at that time. From hence the Duke march'd to Glaſtonbury, and thence to Wells, where he was again proclaim'd King, and his Declaration again read. He was now adviſ'd to take to Mendip-Hills, and march directly to Briſtol. I have a Contempt for the IF's in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and the Archdeacon's Hiſtory, becauſe theſe IF's are the Foundation of their noble Fabricks: But IF he had been prevail'd with by Maj. Wade, Mr. Row, and the Briſtol Men to have attack'd that

A. D. 1685. that City, the moſt important in England next to London, there is very great reaſon to believe he would have carry'd it; for there was a Conſpiracy form'd in the City to receive him, and on a falſe Alarm only of his approach, a Ship was ſet on fire in the River, to draw the Militia that way, while his Friends admitted him. Biſhop Burnet condemns his Conduct in neglecting Briſtol, where he would have found much Wealth, and have gain'd ſome Reputation. The Duke's Soldiers thinking ſome of the Cathedral Men at Wells a little too impertinent, were ſomewhat free with their Appurtenances, which I think was all the Damage done by them. It ſeems the Duke, while he was in Holland, had thoughts of poſſeſſing himſelf of Briſtol, or he would not have order'd a Veſſel, aboard which he had a good Quantity of Arms, to have ſail'd round Land up the Severn Channel to meet him there, which Veſſel was intercepted by one of the King's Men of War, Capt. Trevanion Commander. Another ill Step.

From Wells the Duke march'd towards Bath, came in ſight of, and ſummon'd it, but receiv'd an Anſwer of Defiance; ſo he halted at Cainſham, in the Road between Briſtol and Bath, as well to refreſh his Men, as to conſider what to do. Here his Men were alarm'd by a Party of the King's under the Lord Newburgh, who advanc'd to Cainſham-Bridge, and were receiv'd with ſo much Gallantry by Monmouth's Officers and Soldiers, that they retir'd with loſs, tho' they gave out that they had a Victory. From Cainſham the Duke, ſtill too diffident of Succeſs at Briſtol, wheel'd about to Philipſnorton, in expectation of Deſertion from the ſeveral Bodies of Militia of Glouceſterſhire, Wiltſhire, Hampſhire, and Berkſhire, who were certainly well inclin'd towards him; and I have heard ſome of their Officers declare, that they believ'd moſt of thoſe Trainbands would have gone in to him, if they had had an Opportunity; ſure I am, many of them wiſh'd him heartily well. At Philipſnorton his Forlorn was attack'd by the King's Troops under the Duke of Grafton, who advancing to a Lane where the Duke of Monmouth's Men had planted one of his Cannon, loſt ſeveral Troopers, and eſcap'd himſelf with difficulty. The Lord Newburgh was mortally wounded in this Action, as were ſeveral other Perſons of Diſtinction. From hence the Duke of Monmouth march'd to the large Town of Froom, where he was receiv'd with loud Acclamations of Applauſe and Joy univerſal and unaffected. Here alſo he was proclaim'd King, and receiv'd the unwelcome and unexpected News of the Defeat of the Earl of Argyle; a very great Balk to him, which gave a ſudden Damp to his Hopes, and put him upon another ill Step moſt fatal to his Enterprize: And that was to return to Bridgwater, and there expect the King's Forces, who haſten'd their March after him, and ſhut him up in that Town Saturday the 4th of July. Preparations, ſuch as they were, had been made by the Duke of Monmouth's Men, to ſtand the Enemy's Attack. One Silver, an Inhabitant of the Place, Brother to Captain Silver Maſter-Gunner of England, invented a Machine, which would diſcharge many Barrels of Muſquets at once. Theſe were to be play'd at ſeveral Paſſes inſtead of Cannon; but the Noiſe of great Guns, and the Terror of Bombs, ſoon oblig'd the Duke to concert other Methods: and a Council of War being held, it was reſolv'd to attack the King's Troops in their Camp on Weſton-Moor, three Miles from Bridgwater. Their Cavalry lay in Weſton, and their Artillery defended the Paſs in the direct Road to Bridgwater. Sunday about three a-clock in the Afternoon, the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Grey, and the chief Officers went up into the Tower of Bridgewater Church, to take a View of the King's Camp in the Moor by the help of Perſpective Glaſſes; and the Duke obſerving that Lord Dunbarton's Regiment of Foot Guards, which he had once been Colonel of, and by which he had been once extremely belov'd, were poſted on that Side of the Camp that was propos'd to be attack'd, he expreſs'd ſome Concern at it, ſaying, I know thoſe Men will fight, and if I had them I would not doubt of Succeſs. A. D. 1685.

The King's General the Earl of Feverſham, and the King's Soldiers were very remiſs, and the Country People, who heartily hated them, gave the Duke of Monmouth Information of it, who ſaid, We ſhall have no more to do, than to lock up the Stable-Doors, and ſeize the Troopers in their Beds. About ſeven a-clock the Drums beat in Bridgewater for a Rendezvous in the Caſtle-Field, and ſeveral Meetings were privately held, where the Officers went to Prayers for a Bleſſing on their Undertaking; ſome of them praying in red Coats and Jack-Boots, a Sight that had not been ſeen in England before ſince the Reſtoration. After the Army was put in a proper Diſpoſition, Orders were given for a March, without beat of Drum. About eleven a-clock at Night, I ſaw the Duke of Monmouth ride out, attended by his Life-Guard of Horſe; and tho' then but a Boy, obſerv'd an Alteration in his Look, which I did not like; for not being able to judge of the Goodneſs or Badneſs of his Cauſe, I ran down with the Stream, and was one of its Well-wiſhers. All his Soldiers were forbid to fire a Piſtol till they enter'd the Enemy's Camp. Their Guide Benjamin Newton, who promiſed to lead them thither a By-way, conducted them thro' Chedſey, to a Place where the Royne or Ditch, behind which the King's Troops were encamp'd, was fordable: And tho' Newton knew the Way, and every Inch of the Way, by Day or by Night, as well as it was poſſible for a Man to know it, and tho' he lov'd the Duke of Monmouth as well as it was poſſible for a Man to love him; yet ſuch was his Concern on that important Occaſion, that it confounded him, and he led the Monmouthians above the Ford: which otherwiſe would have open'd a Way for them into the Enemy's Camp, where the Soldiers were aſleep in their Tents, and might have been cut to pieces by the Scythemen, of which the Duke had 500, and the Terror of the Weapon added to the Slaughter and Horror of the Night, would have given the reſt of the Duke's Forces an eaſy Victory, as far as the Reaſon of a Thing can carry it without Experience. Captain Hucker of Taunton having receiv'd ſome Diſguſt, on account, as was ſaid, of the Duke's refuſing to make him Governour of that Town, tho' he could not ſpare him Men for a Garriſon, fir'd a Piſtol, while the Monmouthians were looking out for the Ford, which gave the Alarm to Dunbarton's Regiment, who put themſelves into as good Order as they could to receive their Enemies. Monmouth's Men got over the Ditch with ſome difficulty, fell furiouſly on the King's Forces, took two Pieces of Cannon, and turn'd them on Dunbarton's and other Troops, which put the latter into diſorder. The Alarm reach'd Weſton, where Feverſham was ſafe a-bed, and made not ſo much haſte into the Field, as to forget ſetting his Cravat-ſtring at a little paltry Looking-Glaſs in one of the Cottages. Monmouth's Men began the Engagement with a Volley of Shot and Shouts; and their firſt Fire ſo confounded their Enemies, Weſton Fight.

A. D. 1685.

that thoſe who were neareſt Weſton ran into the Town; thoſe who were in Weſton ran to Middleſey, and thro' that Place above a Mile from the Moor; ſo that had the Duke's Horſe, or even the two Troops he had ſent with Capt. Hewling to Minehead for Cannon, made any Oppoſition to the King's Cavalry, the Rout had been entire; for never did Infantry perform better than the Duke's did. Echard makes the Advantage the King's Horſe had over Monmouth's owing to the Activity of Oglethorp, a ſilly piece of Flattery on an inſolent Bravo, who had no other Advantage over them than what was owing to the badneſs of the Enemies Troops, commanded by the Lord Grey, who could not get the Horſe into a right Poſture for fighting, moſt of them would hardly ſtand fire, and thoſe conſequently diſorder'd the reſt; upon which Grey rode up to the Duke, crying, All is loſt, and it is time for you to ſhift for yourſelf. His Grace was then charging at the head of his Foot, with his wonted Gallantry, and the Stand they made was very extraordinary and promiſing, but his Carriages, with the Ammunition, drawing towards the Moor, met ſome of Grey's Horſe upon the ſcamper, and theſe telling the Carters the Duke's Army was routed, the latter drew away their Carriages with the Ammunition in them, and ſtopt not till they got to Ware and Axebridge, 12 Miles off, where they or the Country People plunder'd them. In the mean time the King's Forces rally'd, and Mew, Biſhop of Wincheſter, who was fitter for a Bombardier than a Biſhop, I knew him well, and can ſay a great deal more of him, but I omit it out of Veneration to his Order, very officiouſly put his Coach-horſes to the Artillery that was planted in the direct Road from Weſton to Bridgwater, and cauſing thoſe Guns to be drawn down againſt the Duke's Foot, the latter were gall'd by it extreamly, yet ſtill they ſtood their Ground, crying out, Ammunition, Ammunition, for the Lord's ſake Ammunition, which not coming, and the Duke and Grey being gone with the Horſe, the Foot fled after them, and the King's Horſe purſuing them, kill'd twice as many as were ſlain in the Fight. I was upon the Spot before the Dead were buried, and, young as I was, obſerv'd the Slain to be more on the King's Part than on the Duke's, as they were diſtinguiſh'd to the Perſon who carry'd me thither, by one of the King's Soldiers; that Perſon was a Papiſt, and I was therefore put under his Protection, and he acted very generouſly and kindly on that Occaſion. For after the Defeat, every body expected military Execution, except ſuch as were of the Popiſh and Tory Factions. About 4 a-clock Monday Morning, the Run-aways began to come into Bridgwater, and I ſaw many of them ſo wounded, that I wonder'd how they could reach ſo far; one Fellow, particularly, had ſcarce lain himſelf down on a Bulk, when he dy'd away of his Wounds. Not above 300 of the Duke's Men were kill'd in the Action, and about 400 of the King's. Of the Duke's, as many were taken Priſoners as the King's Officers could find Places to confine them in. The chief were, Col. Holmes, Major Perrot, Capt Madders of Crookern; one Williams, a Domeſtick of the Duke's who had his Maſter's Cloak, and 200 Guineas, and Captain Adlam, who had about 100 broad Pieces quilted in his Buffcoat. He was ſo mortally wounded, that he could not have ſurviv'd it; but Feverſham would not truſt to that, ſo he order'd him to be hang'd the next day, and he was the firſt whom he hung up in Chains on the Moor between Weſton and Bridgwater, where was a Range of Gibbets ſo decorated to a good length. The Duke of Monmouth, with about 30 Horſe, made off on the Gallop, and by 5 a-clock in the Morning was 20 Miles from the Moor. Dr. Oliver, late Phyſician of Greenwich Hoſpital, was one of his Company, and the beſt mounted of any of them. He rode up to the Duke, and ſaid, Sir, This is the fartheſt you can go, without throwing yourſelf into the hands of your Enemies, who are waiting for you all over the Country Eaſtward. No body has yet heard of our ill Succeſs in theſe Parts, let us turn off to the Sea Coaſt over-againſt Wales, ſeize one of the Paſſage-Boats at Uphill, and get over to the other ſide, where I know you have Friends, among whom you will be ſafe till you can retire elſewhere. I had this from the Doctor himſelf. The Duke inclin'd to hearken to him; but the Lord Grey check'd Oliver for offering to give ſuch fooliſh Advice, as he call'd it, and the Duke going away with him, God bleſs you, Sir, ſaid the Doctor, with Tears in his Eyes, I ſhall never ſee you more, ſo ſetting Spurs to his Horſe, he rode off to Briſtol, about 12 Miles from that Place, and coming there ſome time before News came of the Duke of Monmouth's Defeat, he found means to get into the City, and into a Friend's Houſe, who knew nothing of his having engag'd with the Duke, where he lay ſo long conceal'd, that he return'd to London in Company of Judge Jefferies's Clerk, to whom his Friend, who was a rank Tory, recommended him.

Dr. Oliver's Advice to the Duke of Monmouth.

The Duke of Monmouth's Fate afterwards, is too well known to need enlarging upon. The Lord Grey was taken at Holtbridge in Dorſetſhire, and the Duke of Monmouth at Ringwood, not far off, by ſome Troopers of Lord Lumley's Horſe. He made a Submiſſion to the King, who inſulted him in the Audience he gave him, at the Deſire of Queen Dowager. He repented afterwards that he had ſhewn ſuch Meanneſs, and prepar'd himſelf for Death with a Firmneſs of Soul worthy the Character of a Hero, which he had juſtly acquir'd. He was beheaded on Tower-Hill, the 15th of July, after 3 or 4 Strokes; The Executioner, who, it is ſaid, wiſh'd him well, once threw down the Ax, crying, I cannot do it. He was very much teaz'd at his Death by Turner Biſhop of Ely, and Ken Biſhop of Bath and Wells, who told him, He could not be a Proteſtant of the Church of England, unleſs he own'd the Doctrine of the Oxford Decree. Their Words were the Point of Non-reſiſtance; but that was not the only thing in which they did very ill, to uſe Biſhop Burnet's Words. Dr. Teniſon's manner of treating him was more Chriſtian-like and perſuaſive; he left thoſe Points, in which he ſaw he could not convince him, to his own Conſcience, and turn'd to other Things fit to be laid before a dying Man. The King refus'd to grant him a day longer on his earneſt Requeſt, tho' upon what acccount is not known. His laſt Words were, I repent of all my Sins in general, of the Blood ſpilt on my account, and I fear the ill Conſequence of my Enterprize. I die in the Faith of this, that God will work a Deliverance for his People, and then will be diſcover'd the great, horrid, and ſcarcely to be parallel'd Villanies our Enemies have been guilty of; adding, you ſee my Caſe is deſperate, yet know I die a MARTYR for the People; the very Words of his Grandfather King Charles the Firſt, at his Execution.

Duke of Monmouth taken and beheaded.

Duke's laſt Speech.

Biſhop Burnet informs us how the Lord Grey eſcap'd. "He had a great Eſtate, that by his "Death was to go to his Brother Ralph Grey

Lord Grey pardon'd.

" Grey Eſq; whom the Court look'd on with an ill " Eye, ſo they reſolv'd to preſerve him till he " ſhould be brought to compound for his Life. " The Earl of Rocheſter had 16000 Pounds of " him; others had ſmaller Shares." He was alſo oblig'd to tell all he knew; and the Lord Brandon Gerard, and Mr. John Hampden, were proſecuted on his Evidence.

Cruelties in the Weſt.

From the Character of this King, one might have expected every thing that was ſanguinary and cruel. The Biſhop writes, " The Army " was kept for ſome time in the Weſtern Coun- " ties, where both Officers and Soldiers liv'd " as in an Enemy's Country, and treated all who " were believ'd to be ill affected to the King, " with great Rudeneſs and Violence. Kirk, " who had commanded long in Tangier, was " become ſo ſavage by the Neighbourhood of " the Moors there, that ſome days after the " Battle he order'd ſeveral Priſoners to be " hang'd up at Taunton, without ſo much as " the Form of Law, he and his Company look- " ing on from an Entertainment they were at; " at every new Health another Priſoner was " hang'd up; and they were ſo brutal, that " obſerving the ſhaking of the Legs of thoſe " whom they had hang'd, it was ſaid among " them they were dancing, and upon that Mu- " ſick was call'd for. This was both ſo illegal " and inhuman, that it might have been ex- " pected ſome notice would have been taken of " it; but Kirk was only chid for it, and that " for Form-ſake only." Col. Foulks, who was with the Duke of Monmouth, and afterwards commanded a Regiment in King William's Service, upbraiding Kirk with his Cruelty, he proteſted his Commiſſion went further, and that he had put a Reſtraint on the Power and the Inſtructions which were given him; and tho' it is not to be attributed to his Humanity, but to his Avarice, 'tis certain many Perſons eſcap'd by his pretended Pardons, which he ſold for 20, 30, and 40 l. a piece; and tho' they were not good in Law, yet they gave thoſe that bought them time to ſettle their Affairs and get to London, Holland, and other Places of Shelter. One thing muſt be remember'd of this Kirk, which ſhews he was apprehenſive that King James would make ſuch an ill Uſe of his Victory, as to occaſion a more ſucceſsful Attempt againſt him in a few Years. For when he took Leave of a Gentleman, Mr. Harvey of the Caſtle in Bridgwater, who had been very civil to him, he ſhook him by the Hand, and ſaid, I believe it will not be long before I ſee you again; and by his Motions gave him to underſtand it would not be on the ſame ſide.

The Campaign was finiſh'd by Jefferies and four other Judges, ſupported by ſome Troops of Horſe, and theſe Judges were ſtill more cruel and mercileſs than Kirk, Oglethorp, or any of the Officers. Biſhop Burnet tells us, " Jeffe- " ries's Behaviour was beyond any thing that was " ever heard of in a civiliz'd Nation; he was " perpetually either drunk or in a Rage, liker " a Fury than the Zeal of a Judge. He re- " quir'd the Priſoners to plead guilty; and in " that caſe he gave them ſome hope of Favour " if they gave him no trouble; otherwiſe, he " told them, he would execute the Letter of " the Law upon them in its utmoſt Severity. " This made many plead guilty, who had a " great Defence to make in Law. But he ſhew'd " no Mercy, he order'd a great many to be " hang'd up immediately, without al owing " them a Minute's time to ſay their Prayers. " He hang'd in ſeveral Places about ſix hundred " Perſons. The Impieties with which he " treated them, and his Behaviour towards " ſome of the Nobility and Gentry that were " well affected, but came and pleaded in fa- " vour of ſome Priſoners, would have amaz'd " one if done by a Baſhaw in Turkey."

A. D. 1685.

Jefferies more cruel than a Turk.

Lord Ralph Stawel, tho' a ſtaunch Abhorrer, was ſo ſhock'd at the Report of his Cruelty and Brutality, that he would not ſee him, tho' then in the Zenith of his Grandeur; and Jefferies, in Reſentment, order'd Col. Bovet of Taunton to be hang'd at Cotholſtone, a Pariſh which belong'd to Lord Stawel, contrary to that Lord's good Liking, tho' Bovet had been one of the Sequeſtrators of that and other Eſtates of the Stawels.

Orleans's a Lying Book.

I have ſaid that the Jeſuit Orleans's Revolutions of England, notwithſtanding the Recommendation of Mr. Archdeacon Echard, is a Book full of Lyes, and I am about to give another Proof of it. The French Prieſt is ſpeaking of Jefferies's bloody Aſſizes, The King was inform'd of thoſe Diſorders too late; but as ſoon as it came to his Ears, he expreſs'd his Diſpleaſure, and tho' the Services perform'd by thoſe that were accus'd, prevail'd with him to ſpare them, he, as far as in him lay, made amends for their Injuſtice. The Father of Lyes never told a greater. Read my Lord of Sarum, " The King had a particular " Account of all Jefferies's Proceedings writ to " him every day. He took pleaſure to relate " them in the Drawing-Room to Foreign Mi- " niſters, and at his Table, calling it Jefferies's " Campaign, ſpeaking of all he had done in a " Style that neither became the Majeſty nor " the Mercifulneſs of a King. Dyckvelt was " at that time in England, one of the Ambaſ- " ſadors whom the States had ſent to congra- " gratulate the King's coming to the Crown. " He told me, that the King talk'd ſo often " of theſe Things in his hearing, that he won- " der'd to ſee him break out into thoſe Inde- " cencies; and, upon Jefferies's coming back, " he was created a Baron and Peer of England;" which is all the Amends King James made for his Injuſtice. Echard has inoculated this falſe Aſſertion of Orleans's into his own Hiſtory.

K. James's Cruelty.

I ſhall refer for the main of Jefferies's bloody Aſſizes to a Book ſo call'd, which, for the moſt part, is fairly tho' poorly writ. The Villain began his Villany, I beg the Reader to bear with this Language, when I am upon ſuch Subjects, at Wincheſter, where he try'd Mrs. Alicia Liſle, Widow of John Liſle Eſq; Commiſſioner of the Great Seal, ſo often already mention'd, whom the Cavaliers aſſaſſinated in Swiſſerland. Sunday Night, after the Action in Weſton Moor, Mr. Hicks, a diſſenting Miniſter, Brother to the Nonjuror Dr. Hicks, once Dean of Worceſter, came to Mrs. Liſle's Houſe in Hampſhire, with Mr. Nelthorpe in his Company. She knew Mr. Hicks, and treated him very civilly, not asking from whence he came; but Hicks told what brought him thither, for he and Nelthorpe had been with Monmouth, upon which ſhe went out of the Room immediately, and order'd her chief Servant to ſend an Information concerning them to the next Juſtice of Peace, and in the mean while to ſuffer them to make an Eſcape. But before this could be done, a Party came about the Houſe, and took both them and her for harbouring them. Jefferies reſolv'd to make a Sacrifice of her, and obtain'd of the King a Promiſe that he would not pardon her, which the King own'd to the Earl of Feverſham, when he, upon the Offer of 1000 Pounds if he could obtain her Pardon, went and begg'd it. No legal Proof was brought at her Trial, that ſhe knew they were Rebels. The Names of the Perſons found in her Houſe were in no Proclamation, ſo

Lady Liſle murder'd.

A. D. 1685.

there was no notice given her to beware of them. Jefferies affirm'd to the Jury upon his Honour, Monſtrum Horrendum! That the Perſons had confeſs'd they had been with the Duke of Monmouth. This was to turn Witneſs againſt her, after which he ought not to have judg'd in the Matter. And tho' it was inſiſted on as a Point of Law, that till the Perſons found in her Houſe were convicted, ſhe could not be found guilty, yet Jefferies charg'd the Jury in a moſt violent manner, to bring her in guilty. All the Audience was ſtrangely affected with ſo unuſual Behaviour in a Judge, only the Perſon moſt concern'd, the Lady herſelf, who was then paſt Seventy, was ſo little mov'd at it, that ſhe fell aſleep. The Jury brought her in Not Guilty; but the execrable Judge, in great Fury, ſent them out again, yet they brought her in a ſecond time Not Guilty. Then he ſeem'd, as in a Tranſport of Rage, threatning them with an Attaint of Treaſon. Thus, overcome with Fear, they at the third time brought her in Guilty. The King, he has had his Reward, ſhew'd no other Favour, but that he chang'd the Sentence from burning to beheading. She dy'd with great Conſtancy of Mind, and expreſs'd a Joy that ſhe ſuffer'd for an Act of Charity and Piety. The chief of the Priſoners, whom Jefferies butcher'd, were, Col. Holmes, Chriſtopher Bettiſcomb Eſq; Charles Speke Eſq; Mr. Benjamin Hewling, Mr. William Hewling, Col. Bovet, Capt. Madders, Col. Anneſley, Capt. Larke, Mr. Matthew Bragg, Capt. John Hucker. Mr. Roger Hoar is put down in the Liſt printed in the Bloody Aſſizes, but he was repriev'd a few hours before the time ſet for Execution, and was afterwards a Member of ſeveral Parliaments. Mr. Hicks the Miniſter was hang'd at Glaſtonbury; and Echard prints his Speech, becauſe he fancy'd there's a Word or two in it in favour of his darling Doctrine of Paſſive Obedience. It is not warrantable for any Subject to reſiſt lawful Sovereigns. Did he ever meet with a Mortal ſo ſtupid or ſo mad, as to think it lawful to reſiſt Princes governing by the Laws they had ſworn to maintain? Hicks the quondam Dean being ſpoken to in his Brother's behalf, ſaid, He would not ſpeak for a Fanatick, tho' he had been Chaplain to one of the greateſt Fanaticks in the World, Duke Lauderdale.

Mr. Hicks the Miniſter hang'd.

Before Jefferies had ſhut up his Slaughter-houſes in the Weſt, died the Lord-Keeper North, a crafty deſigning Man, ſays my Lord of Sarum: "He had no mind to part with the "Great Seal, yet he ſaw he could not hold it. "An Appeal againſt a Decree of his had been "brought before the Lords in the former Seſ-"ſions, and it was not only revers'd with many "ſevere Reflections on him that made it; but "the Earl of Nottingham, who hated him, "becauſe he had endeavour'd to detract from "his Father's Memory, had got together ſo "many Inſtances of his ill Adminiſtration of "Juſtice, that he expos'd him ſeverely for it; "and it was believ'd that gave the Criſis to the "Uneaſineſs and Diſtraction of Mind he was "labouring under." He languiſh'd for ſome time, and died deſpis'd and ill thought of by the whole Nation. The Seal was kept for Jefferies, and given to him at his Return from the Field of Blood and Bribery, for he glutted his Avarice as well as his Cruelty, taking between 14 and 15000 Pounds of Edmund Prideaux Eſq; of Ford-Abbey in Somerſetſhire, to ſtop a Proſecution, with which Money he bought a Manor, I think, in Leiceſterſhire; but be it where it will, 'tis no more in his Name, which dy'd with his Son, except as much of it as lives in the Infamy of the Father.

William Clowdeſley.	Thomas Pendleton.

Of theſe Kenſey the Sheriff, Rawlinſon the Foreman, and Clowdeſley, were Tavern-Men. Sir John Hawles has ſo learnedly ſet forth the Injuſtice and Cruelty of this Gentleman's Treatment, that I muſt refer to his Remarks, and add what Biſhop Burnet tells us of it. "Good-"enough, who had been Under-Sheriff of Lon-"don when Corniſh was Sheriff, offer'd to ſwear "againſt Corniſh, and that Rumſey had not "diſcover'd all he knew. So Rumſey, to ſave "himſelf, join'd with Goodenough to ſwear Cor-"niſh guilty of that for which the Lord Ruſſel "had ſuffer'd; and this was driven on ſo faſt, "that Corniſh was ſeiz'd on, try'd and executed "within the Week. If he had got a little time, "the Falſhood of the Evidence would have "been prov'd from Rumſey's former Diſpoſi-"tion, which appear'd ſo clearly ſoon after "Corniſh's Death, that his Eſtate was reſtor'd "to his Family, and the Witneſſes were lodg'd "in remote Priſons for their Lives. Mr. Cor-"niſh, at his Death, aſſerted his Innocence with "great Vehemence, and with ſome acrimony "complain'd of the Methods taken to deſtroy "him. Upon which it was given out, that he "died in a Fit of Fury: But Pen, the Quaker, "who ſaw the Execution, ſaid, that there ap-"pear'd nothing but a juſt Indignation that In-"nocence might very naturally give. He ad-"ded, the King was much to be pitied, who "was hurry'd into all this effuſion of Blood by "Jefferies's impetuous and cruel Temper." But what ſays my Lord of Sarum? If his own Inclinations had not been byaſs'd that way, and if his Prieſts had not thought it the Intereſt of their Party to let that BUTCHER looſe, by which ſo many Men that were like to oppoſe them, were put out of the way; it is not to be imagin'd there would have been ſuch a Run of barbarous Cruelty.

The King govern'd by Jeffe-ries.

K. James thirſts after Blood.

This Murder, in Defiance of eternal Juſtice, and the dreadful Vengeance of Heaven, does Echard impute to Corniſh's concerning himſelf ſo much about hanging inſtead of beheading the Lord Stafford. He will have it to be a Judgment, a Retaliation from Heaven. Pray God the dreadful Judgments he has call'd down on ſo many innocent Perſons, be not retaliated on his own Soul.

About

A. D. 1685.

Mrs. Gaunt try'd.

About the ſame time, Mrs. Elizabeth Gaunt, a Widow in or near Wapping, was brought to a Trial. Biſhop Burnet's Account of it is the beſt. She was a Baptiſt, who ſpent a great part of her time in Acts of Charity, viſiting the Jayls, and looking after the Poor of what Perſuaſion ſoever they were. One of Monmouth's Men, James Burton, found her out, and ſhe harbour'd him in her Houſe till ſhe might have an Opportunity to ſend him abroad. He went about in the Night, and having heard that the King ſhould ſay, He would ſooner pardon the Rebels than thoſe that harbour'd them, he, by an unheard of Baſeneſs, went and deliver'd himſelf, and accus'd her that harbour'd him. There was no Witneſs to prove that ſhe knew the Perſon ſhe harbour'd was a Rebel, but the Rebel himſelf; yet the Judge charg'd the Jury to bring her in guilty: which they did, and ſhe was condemn'd and burnt. She died with a Conſtancy even to a Chearfulneſs, which ſtruck all that ſaw it. She ſaid, Charity was a part of her Religion as well as Faith, and ſhe only fed an Enemy. So ſhe hoped ſhe had her Reward with him for whoſe ſake ſhe did this ſervice, how unworthy ſoever the Perſon was that made ſo ill a Return for it. She rejoic'd that God had honour'd her to be the firſt that ſuffer'd by Fire in this Reign, and that her Suffering was a Martyrdom for that Religion which was all Love. Mr. Pen told the Biſhop of Salisbury he ſaw her die. She laid the Straw about her for her burning ſpeedily, and behav'd herſelf in ſuch a manner, that all the Spectators melted into Tears. Such indeed was the Behaviour of all that ſuffer'd at this time. "Moſt of them, ac- "cording to Biſhop Burnet, expreſs'd ſuch a "calm Firmneſs at their Death, and ſuch a Zeal "for their Religion, which they believ'd was "then in danger, that it made great Impreſſions "on the Spectators." But is ſo far from making any Impreſſion on Echard, Their Behaviour was ſtrange, ſays he. I am not at all ſurpriz'd at it, that ſuch pious Sentiments as Mrs. Gaunt's are ſtrange things to him. Their Words in their dying Speeches were ſhocking to the King's Party. The Words of the murder'd innocent Perſons were ſhocking to their Murderers, very likely indeed!

Condemn'd and burnt.

Her laſt Words.

Mr. Fernly, Col. Ayloffe, and Mr. Nelthorp executed.

One Mr. John Fernly was hang'd at Tyburn for harbouring the ſame James Burton. Now alſo were hang'd, drawn and quarter'd, Colonel Ayloffe and Richard Nelthorp Eſq; before-mention'd; the latter before Gray's-Inn-Gate in Holborn, the former before the Temple-Gate in Fleet-ſtreet. All which bloody and barbarous Executions gave a general Horror, to uſe my Lord of Sarum's Words, to the Body of the Nation, and it let all People ſee what might be expected from a Reign that ſeem'd to delight in Blood. Some of the faireſt of the Tories began to relent a little, and to think they had truſted too much, and gone too far. The King had raiſed new Regiments, and given Commiſſions to Papiſts. 'Tis no matter for all this, "King "James's Affairs, according to the Archdeacon, "ſeem'd now in the greateſt Height and Splen- "dor, and to promiſe a firm and ſettled Feli- "city. The late dangerous Storms appeas'd, "&c."

A Proclamation was publiſh'd againſt George Speke Eſq; Francis Charlton Eſq; John Wildman Eſq; and John Trenchard Eſq; who all kept out of the way. John Speke Eſq; Son of George Speke of Whatlackington in the County of Somerſet, who had been with the Duke of Monmouth, made his eſcape beyond Sea, and ſpent this Reign of Tyranny in Travel. The Lord Brandon Gerrard was try'd for High-Treaſon at the King's-Bench Bar, convicted and condemned. John Hampden Eſq; expecting no Favour, ſays Echard, pleaded guilty. Says Biſhop Burnet, "He was told he muſt expect no "Favour, unleſs he would plead guilty; which "he did, and begg'd his Life with a Meanneſs "which gave his Spirits ſuch a Depreſſion and "Diſorder, that he could never quite maſter it, "and in concluſion hurry'd him on to cut his "own Throat."

A. D. 1685.

Lord Brandon Gerrard and Mr. Hampden condemn'd.

England is now an Aceldema, the Country for 60 Miles together, from Briſtol to Exeter, had a new and terrible ſort of Sign-Poſts and Signs, Gibbets, and Heads and Quarters of its ſlaughter'd Inhabitants. Every Soul was ſunk in Anguiſh and Terror, ſighing by day and by night for Deliverance, but ſhut out of all Hope by Deſpair.

The Miſery of England.

On the 9th of November the Parliament met, and the King made a Speech to them. He told them how happy his Forces had been in reducing a dangerous Rebellion, in which it had appear'd how weak and inſignificant the Militia was, and therefore he ſaw the Neceſſity of keeping up an Army for all their Security. He had put ſome in Commiſſion, of whoſe Loyalty he was well aſſur'd, and they had ſerv'd him ſo well, that he would not put that Affront on them and on himſelf to turn them out. Thus he fell upon the two moſt exceptionable Points, a Standing Army, and a Violation of the Teſt-Act. There were ſome Debates in the Houſe of Lords about thanking the King for his Speech. It was preſs'd by the Courtiers as a piece of Reſpect that was always paid. The Earl of Devonſhire ſaid, he was for giving Thanks, becauſe the King had ſpoken out ſo plainly. The Courtiers carry'd it, and the King was thank'd after a rate.

A Parliament.

Arbitrary Acts.

The Earl of Middleton mov'd in the Houſe of Commons for an Increaſe of Forces, which was warmly oppos'd by the Country Party. However, they voted a Supply, but rejected the Words towards the Support of the additional Forces, and order'd a Bill to be brought in to make the Militia uſeful. Yet the Spirit of Slavery prevail'd ſtill ſo much amongſt them, that they gave the King 700000 Pounds, hoping it would have made way for their Addreſs againſt his diſpenſing with the Laws in favour of Popiſh Officers. The King told them he did not expect it from them; but however they proceeded on their part, he would be ſteady in all his Promiſes, and be juſt to his Word. On the Report of the King's Anſwer, even this Houſe of Commons was ſtruck dumb with Indignation; Fear and Reſentment ſhut up every Mouth for a while: And when John Coke Eſq; Burgeſs for Derby, ſaid, He hop'd they were all true Engliſhmen, and not to be frighted out of their Duty by a few hard Words, he was immediately ſent to the Tower. When the Houſe of Lords began to debate the King's Speech, they were told, that by giving thanks for it, they had precluded themſelves from finding fault with any part of it. The Lords Halliſax, Nottingham, and Mordaunt oppos'd this; ſo did the Biſhop of London, who ſpoke often not only his own Senſe, but the Senſe of the whole Bench of Biſhops, who at laſt began to awake out of their Lethargy, to look about them, and ſee the Torrent of Popery and Slavery threatning to break in upon them. Jefferies began to argue with his rough manner, but he was ſoon taken down; it appearing, ſays Biſhop Burnet, "That how furiouſly ſoever he "rav'd on the Bench, yet where others might "ſpeak with him on equal Terms, he was a "very

Earl of Stamford petitions the Lords.

The Earl of Stamford, who had been committed to the Tower for High-Treaſon in July laſt, had been deny'd Pen, Ink, and Paper, petition'd the Lords that he might be heard in Parliament. He was brought to their Bar November the 17th, where he complain'd of his long and ſtrict Confinement. The Houſe of Peers order'd that he ſhould have Pen, Ink, and Paper, and be try'd in Weſtminſter-Hall the firſt of December; before which time the Parliament was prorogu'd, and the Earl accepted of the King's general Pardon. Lord Delamere preſenting the like Petition to that moſt Honourable Houſe, ſetting forth that he had lain a Priſoner in the Tower ever ſince the 26th of July for High-Treaſon, the Lords were told by Jefferies, that Preparations were making for the Trial of that Lord, and if he was not try'd accordingly, he might be bail'd. But try'd he was, and Jefferies was Lord High Steward on that Occaſion. There was one Witneſs only to prove he intended a Riſing in Cheſhire; and that Witneſs Saxon was ſo profligate a Raſcal, and ſo inconſiſtent in his Evidence, that the Lords acquitted the Lord Delamere, tho' it was believ'd there was ſomething true in the main of what he ſwore. Biſhop Burnet ſpeaks again of Mr. Finch the Sollicitor-General; " Purſuant " to the Doctrine he had maintain'd in former " Trials, he made a violent Declamation, to " prove that one Witneſs, with preſumption, " was ſufficient to convict one of High-Treaſon: " but it ſignify'd nothing, he had been con- " tinu'd in his Employment only to lay the Load " of this Judgment on him, and he acted his " part with his uſual Vehemence."

Lord Delamere try'd and acquitted.

Finch Sollicitor-General his Behaviour.

The Pardon before-mention'd had ſo many Exceptions and Intricacies in it, that it was hardly worth accepting, and ſeem'd rather deſign'd to betray People, than to ſave them. Among others was excepted John Webber Gent. the preſent Town-Clerk of Bridgwater, which I mention for that he is ſtill living, about 45 Years after, and tho' excepted, was very far from deſerving it for his Affection to the Duke of Monmouth or his Cauſe The Court was ſo unmerciful, that they exepted the poor Girls of Taunton, who gave Monmouth Colours, out of their pretended Pardon; and every one of them was forc'd to pay as much Money as would have been a good Portion to each, for particular Pardons. This Money, and a great deal more, was ſaid to be for the Maids of Honour; whoſe Agent Brent the Popiſh Lawyer, had an Under-Agent one Crane of Bridgwater, and 'tis ſuppos'd that both of them paid themſelves very bountifully out of the Money which was rais'd by this means; ſome Inſtances of which are within my Knowledge.

1686.

A. D. 1686. WE have mention'd the Prorogation of the Parliament in November laſt, and when it was to have met again, February 10th, 'twas prorogu'd to the 10th of May, then to the 22d of November, then to the 15th of February, and then to the 28th of April 1687; but they never met more, and it had been well for England, if they never had had a Being. The King reſolv'd to have no Parliament, till he could be ſure of a Majority to take off the Penal Laws and Teſt, that he might deſtroy the Church of England, and eſtabliſh a Tyranny over Men's Bodies and Souls. He could not accompliſh theſe things without getting the remainder of the Charters into his hands, and modelling Corporations; in which, he employ'd thoſe vile Wretches Brent, Graham, and Burton; which Graham, a ſtarving Pettyfogger of Clifford's-Inn, he impos'd as a Burgeſs on the Borough of Windſor, in Echard's Wiſe and Rich Parliament: which like a ſudden Storm blew over impetuouſly, made great waſte, and was no more heard of. While there was an Appearance of Courts of Juſtice, and the Forms of Law, there muſt be Judges; and to bring them to his Lure, the King cloſetted thoſe that then ſate in Weſtminſter-Hall, to bargain with them for their Seats, which they were to keep only on condition they would ſell him their Conſciences, and declare for his Power of diſpenſing with thoſe Laws of which they were the Diſpenſers. He began with Sir Thomas Jones, who, ſtain'd as he was with the Blood of Corniſh, could not bring himſelf to lye ſo all at once to God, the King, and the Kingdom, as to declare that the King's Will was the Law. Jones ſaid plainly, I cannot do it. The King reply'd, I will have twelve Judges of my Opinion. Jones reply'd, Poſſibly you may find twelve Judges of your Opinion, but you will ſcarce find twelve Lawyers to be ſo. His ill Succeſs with this and other Judges, made him turn out the Tools which he had hitherto work'd with, to take away the Lives and Properties of the beſt Men in the Kingdom, and put other Tools ſtill more wicked and more worthleſs in their Places; which was done againſt Eaſter-Term, April 21.

A Call of Sergeants.

Their Motto was Deus, Rex, Lex. The King before the Law.

The latter, Chriſtopher Milton, was an unworthy Brother of the great Poet John Milton. He ſtarv'd by his Practice, and to mend his Market, turn'd Papiſt. He was one of the dulleſt Fellows that ever appear'd with a Bar-Gown upon his Back in Weſtminſter-Hall. But being of the King's Religion, a Phraſe now us'd at Court and elſewhere, he was thought fit to be made a Knight and a Judge, as was ſoon after Richard Alibone of Gray's-Inn Eſq; And on July 17, the Earl of Powis, the Lord Arundel of Wardour, the Lord Bellaſis, the Lord Dover, and Richard Talbot, now made Earl of Tyrconnel, all rank Papiſts, were ſworn of the Privy-Council.

Evidence againſt Green, Berry, and Hill, who murder'd Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, was indicted for Perjury, having been perſuaded to plead guilty, and Sentence was formally paſs'd on him as againſt Oates, but it was never executed. This Farce over, the next Proſecution to the ſame Tendency was againſt Mr. Samuel Johnſon, who had the Courage to write an Addreſs to the Engliſh Proteſtants in King James's Army; for which he was try'd and condemn'd, as Prance had been, to be whipp'd from Newgate to Tyburn, and the Sentence was executed upon him with a Barbarity exceeding any thing we read of Pagan Tormentors. Such were the Effects of the King's Religion and his Temper. Crew Biſhop of Durham, Sprat Biſhop of Rocheſter, White Biſhop of Peterborough, perform'd the Drudgery of degrading this Reverend and Learned Divine; and Crew and Sprat drudg'd on as long as they hop'd to get, or to ſave themſelves by it.

Mr. Edward Whitaker was fin'd a thouſand Marks for juſtifying the Parliament of Forty-One, which was juſtify'd by the Parliament of 1660.

George Speke Eſq; before-mention'd, was fin'd two thouſand Marks for aſſiſting his Friend Mr. Trenchard, afterwards Secretary of State, in making his eſcape.

I ſhall not enlarge on the Arguments for and againſt the King's diſpenſing Power, which chang'd the Conſtitution from a limited to an unlimited Monarchy, from a Free Government to a Tyranny; for the Leſſon we learnt at the Revolution, and the reſtoring of the Conſtitution at that time, have made all Arguments for diſpenſing Power abſurd and ridiculous: but that the Reader may have one clear View of it in a few Words, I will ſtate the Caſe after Mr. Acherley.

The King's future Steps were gaz'd at as ſo many Emanations of his arbitrary Will, until the Meaſures of his Miſgovernment became full; for the King avowedly departed from the known Laws, and aſſumed a Power above them, making his Will his Law in Government.

He then ſpeaks of his making Father Petre and the Popiſh Lords Privy-Counſellors, and the Popiſh Lawyers Judges. To enable the Judges and Privy-Counſellors to execute thoſe Offices and Places, the King granted them Diſpenſations and Powers to break the Laws, which made them incapable to hold thoſe Places and Offices, and alſo incapacitated all Military as well as Civil Officers. The common Doctrine induſtriouſly ſpread at Court was, That the King's Power to diſpenſe with, i.e. to unmake and vary the Laws was Law, meaning the Imperial or Civil Law; for it muſt be own'd, that by that Law, in Countries where it preſides, the King is the ſole Legiſlator, and has in him the whole Power to make new Laws, and to alter old ones, there being no difference between the Power that makes the New, and the Power that alters the Old. The Law itſelf hath enacted the Incapacity of the Officer to hold and enjoy the Office, and the Penalty impos'd on the Perſon who preſum'd to hold or execute an Office, of which he was made incapable, contrary to this Law; therefore the Penalty is but part of the Law.

Wherefore to have this diſpenſing Power paſs for Law, King James did as the King his Father had before done in the Buſineſs of Ship-Money. Is not this another Proof of the Deſign of the Stuartine Princes to introduce Arbitrary Government, which is what I took upon me to prove?

Further, the King in the ſame manner irregularly and prepoſterouſly engag'd the Judges to prejudge the Caſe, and agree the Judgment, that the King might by Law diſpenſe with, that is, alter and unmake all the Penal Laws; which Opinion was ſubſcrib'd by all the twelve Judges, except Sir Thomas Street, one of the Judges of the Common-Pleas: And in order to eſtabliſh this Diſpenſing Power, as a ſtanding Rule of Law to bind all Men, a mock Cauſe was fram'd for one Godden a Coachman, againſt his Maſter Sir Edward Hales, a Popiſh Colonel, wherein Godden brought his Action of Debt upon the Teſt-Act, for the Penalty of 500 l. as a Forfeiture for the Colonel's holding his Office without qualifying himſelf by receiving the Sacrament. To which Action, Sir Edward pleaded the King's Diſpenſation under the Great Seal of England. Hales had deny'd his Apoſtacy to Dr. Burnet, and upon his now denying his Denial, the Doctor ſays, I was led from thence to ſee there was no Credit to be given to Papiſts, where their Church or Religion was concern'd. Further, "When Hales's Trial was to be brought on, the "Judges were ſecretly ask'd their Opinions, "and ſuch as were not clear to judge as the "Court directed were turn'd out; and upon "two or three Canvaſſings, the Half of them "were diſmiſs'd, and others of more pliable "and obedient Underſtandings were put in their "Places. Some of theſe, as Milton, and Allibone, "and Holloway, and Heath, &c. were weak and "ignorant to a Scandal." Even Sir Edward Herbert Chief Juſtice, was but an indifferent Lawyer. The Counſel for Godden the Coachman were feed on purpoſe to expoſe and betray his Cauſe. This is a moſt melancholy Conſideration, that Gentlemen of ſo generous and uſeful a Profeſſion ſhould be prevail'd with to ſacrifice their Learning, their Honour and Underſtanding to the Pleaſure of the Court. And tho' the Bench of Judges, and the Inns of Court, ſince the Revolution, have for the moſt part been fill'd with excellent and upright Judges, with able and worthy Counſellors; yet when I daily ſee ſome of the ſame Profeſſion affecting to diſtinguiſh themſelves in factious dirty Cauſes, I am not without Fears, that whenever a Miniſtry have bad Work to do, they will never want Inſtruments. After a few ſenſeleſs and cold Arguments on both ſides, Judgment was given for the Defendant Hales. Upon which Mr. Acherley writes thus: "The Wildneſs of "the Judges Poſitions for the King's Diſpenſing "Power need not be expos'd in worſe Colours "than the mercenary Reſolutions themſelves do "expoſe them: For if the giving this Judg-"ment, and the Reaſons on which it was foun-"ded, were not High-Treaſon, in endeavouring "to alter and ſubvert the fundamental Form "of this Government, which the Conſtitution "had made unalterable, then there never was "any ſuch Endeavour, nor can be, neither hath "Britain any Conſtitution or any Laws to be "ſubverted, but ſuch Laws only as depend on "the King's Will." And now after all Echard's Panegyricks on this King, his Royal Virtues and Qualites, does he at laſt drop him in ſome meaſure, and own, That by the Breath of a few of his mercenary Judges in effect, the Laws of England were baſely given up at once into the Power and Will of the King. A Truth which is extorted from him by his Reſentment of the King's putting a ſtop to all Perſecution of Diſſenters, and dealing a little roughly with the Church of England. Let not any one think I judge uncharitably, for I have prov'd, that from the beginning of that Perſecution to the end of it, it, he has been in a continual Rapture in Contemplation of the Bleſſings of the Government under King Charles and King James. But now the latter, tho' with a very ill Deſign, is about to do a very good Act, and take off the Perſecutors, who had been worrying the Proteſtant-Nonconformiſts, the King and Court have few good Words from him, and in him dwells the Spirit of his Party. He tells us the Clergy of the Church of England, who wrote againſt Popery, gain'd immortal Honour with their Pens, while the Proteſtant Diſſenters of all kinds appear'd to the World almoſt like unconcern'd Spectators. And Biſhop Burnet here miſrepreſents them alſo; The Clergy began generally to preach againſt Popery, which the Diſſenters did not. Dr. Nichols is as ſevere as Echard in this Charge againſt the Nonconformiſts, which is thus animadverted upon by Dr. Calamy. "It ſhould be conſider'd, that the Diſſenters had written againſt "the Romaniſts very freely before, and had the "leſs reaſon to do it at this time; that they "did not find their People ſo much in danger, "as many that were educated in the Church "of England; that both in City and Country "they preach'd with great Freedom againſt Po-"pery, which ſhew'd that if they wrote leſs a-"gainſt it than others, it did not ariſe from "Fear; that many of them thought it not ſo "proper to take this Work out of the hands of the "Divines of the Church of England, who not "only did it well, but who were in duty bound "to do the more in oppoſition to the common "Danger, becauſe they had done ſo much to "haſten and occaſion it; and who ſo viſibly im-"prov'd in Light, and in the Largeneſs of their "Notions, by being neceſſitated to ſupport ſome "Principles in theſe Debates, which they had "ſlighted before, and ſeem'd willing to diſcard." Again, "Several of the Diſſenters did at that "time attempt to publiſh ſome Tracts againſt "Popery, but met with Diſcouragement when "they ſent them to the Preſs, becauſe they "came from ſuch as were not of the Church of "England, who ſeem'd deſirous to engroſs "the Management of this Controverſy at this "time wholly to themſelves. This actually "was the caſe as to ſome Treatiſes then writ-"ten by Nonconformiſts. And it need not ſeem "ſtrange if this, being generally known, ſhould "hinder others from making the like Attempts."

Clergy defend the Church againſt Popery.

Diſſenters Reaſons for not writing.

Still perſecuted.

It muſt be remember'd that even when the common Enemy was threatning common Ruin, the Diſſenters were proſecuted in the wonted manner. Their Meetings were frequently diſturb'd both in City and Country. Fines were levy'd upon them. The Informers broke in upon Mr. Fleetwood, Sir John Hartop, and others at Stoke-Newington to levy Diſtreſſes 6 or 7000 l. upon them by virtue of the Stinging Acts. Many were excommunicated, and had Capias's iſſu'd out againſt them. Dr. Calamy does juſtice to the Church of England Clergy in the following Words: A noble Sett of Controverſial Writings were now publiſh'd by the Divines of the Church of England, againſt the Errors of the Church of Rome; and it muſt be own'd they ſignaliz'd themſelves, and gain'd immortal Honour by their Performances. It would be baſe and ungrateful not to do Homage to the Memory of thoſe illuſtrious Champions for the Proteſtant Religion, Tillotſon and Sharp, afterwards Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York; Patrick, Stillingfleet, Williams, afterwards Biſhops of Ely, Worceſter, and Chicheſter; Tenniſon, the late Archbiſhop of Canterbury: To the great Names of Sherlock, Clagget, Gee, Whitby; and tho' Atterbury deſerted the Proteſtant Cauſe afterwards, and lives now in Baniſhment, he at that time bore his Teſtimony againſt Popery; ſo did Hooper, late Biſhop of Bath and Wells; Aldrich, Dean of Chriſt-Church; Burnet, Biſhop of Saliſbury; Fowler of Glouceſter; and in a very particular manner, his Grace Dr. Wake, the preſent Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Theſe Reverend and Learned Fathers and Doctors of the Proteſtant Church of England were eſteem'd, belov'd, and reverenc'd at home and abroad, as the Bulwarks of the Proteſtant Religion, and their Names and Memories are ſtill precious in the Minds of all good Proteſtants and good Engliſhmen. Theſe Divines, and others of their Chriſtian and Charitable Principles and Practices, and their Adherents, are what we always do, and always ſhall underſtand to be the Church of England; and for thoſe who abuſe that Name, abetting Superſtition, Perſecution and Arbitrary Power, we never look upon them as true Sons of our Proteſtant Church, and have treated and ſhall treat them accordingly. Tho' Dr. South did before and after this behave with great Bitterneſs and Indecency towards our Proteſtant Brethren, and waſte many Jokes and Puns upon them in and out of the Pulpit, he now prov'd a good Churchman in the true Acceptation of the Word. He boldly oppos'd the Progreſs of Popery; and being offer'd the Biſhoprick of Cheſter, he refus'd to accept of it, when he underſtood it was expected he ſhould thank Father Petre for it, who recommended him to the King.

Dr. South a good Proteſtant.

Happy had it been for England, if the common Intereſt of Religion and Liberty had then ſo united the Hearts of both Churchmen and Diſſenters, that all odious Diſtinctions had been laid aſide for ever; and there had no other Emulation remain'd among us, but who ſhould be the beſt Chriſtians and the beſt Subjects to the Kings and Queens, King James's Succeſſors, who had a juſt Claim to our Active Obedience, and then Paſſive became Nonſenſe.

Mr. Acherley informs us, That King James exceeded the Proceedings of his Royal Father, by erecting a High Commiſſion-Court in April, but the Commiſſion was not open'd till Auguſt. This was in direct defiance of the Acts of Parliament by which that Power was aboliſh'd; and by that Commiſſion he brought the People under more Preſſures from this new-erected Court, than they had ſuffer'd under the old one before its Suppreſſion.

High Commiſſion-Court.

The Commiſſioners were,

George Lord Jefferies, Lord-Chancellor.

Laurence Hyde, Earl of Rocheſter, Lord-Treaſurer.

Robert Earl of Sunderland, Lord-Preſident of the Council.

Nathaniel Lord Biſhop of Durham.

Thomas Lord-Biſhop of Rocheſter.

John Earl of Mulgrave.

Sir Edward Herbert, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas.

Dr. Thomas Cartwright, Lord Biſhop of Cheſter.

Sir Robert Wright, Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench.

Sir Thomas Jenour, Recorder of London.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury was nam'd in the Commiſſion, but he refus'd to act. The Biſhop of Durham was lifted up with the Honour done him: His Name would now be recorded in Hiſtory. And it was ſuch a Conſideration that made Eroſtratus ſet fire to the Temple of Epheſus. Sprat, Biſhop of Rocheſter, was flatter'd with the Hopes of ſucceeding Dr.

Dolben

A. D. 1686. Dolben in the See of York. This was unqueſtionably an Attempt to ſubvert the Conſtitution of the Church of England, and to lay waſte all its Fences againſt Popery. For, according to Acherley, the King obſerving that the Proteſtant Clergy were at laſt rouzed, and courageouſly met and from the Pulpit engag'd the Torrent of Popery, his Majeſty ſent out his Order by way of a Letter, directed to the Biſhops, prohibiting the Clergy to preach on controverted Points of Religion, as his Predeceſſor and Pattern the Popiſh Queen Mary had done before. The King reſolv'd to proceed ſeverely againſt thoſe who offended againſt this Order; and the Storm fell firſt on Dr. Sharp, the learned and pious Rector of St. Giles, who receiv'd, one day, as he was coming out of the Pulpit, a Paper ſent him, as he believ'd, by a Prieſt, containing a ſort of Challenge upon ſome Points of Controverſy touch'd by him in ſome of his Sermons. Upon this he, not knowing to whom he ſhould ſend an Anſwer, preach'd an Anſwer to it in a Sermon. And after he had confuted it, he concluded, ſhewing how unreaſonable it was for Proteſtants to change their Religion on ſuch Grounds. This was carry'd to Court, and repreſented as a Reflection on the King for changing on thoſe Grounds. The Information as to the Words pretended to be ſpoken, was falſe; but without enquiring into that, the Earl of Sunderland ſent an Order to the Biſhop of London, in the King's Name, to ſuſpend Dr. Sharp immediately, and then to examine the Matter. The Biſhop ſaid, he had no power to proceed in ſuch a ſummary way: But if an Accuſation was regularly brought into his Court, he would proceed to ſuch a Cenſure as could be warranted by the Eccleſiaſtical Law; yet he would, in the mean time, do what was in his power, and deſire Sharp to abſtain from officiating, till the Matter ſhould be better underſtood. He wrote thus to Lord Sunderland, and ſent it by Dr. Sharp, who alſo behav'd with great Submiſſion, but it had no effect. The King being reſolv'd that the Biſhop of London ſhould be proceeded againſt, for not obeying his Orders, which, according to Law, could not be obey'd; he was cited to appear before the High Commiſſion-Court, and many Perſons of Quality accompany'd him, as Sir Francis Compton, Sir Thomas Clarges, Sir John Lowther of Lancaſhire, Sir John Nicholas, &c. which gave new Offence. Jefferies treated him in that brutal way that was now become natural to him. The Biſhop ſaid, Here was a new Court, of which he knew nothing, ſo he deſir'd a Copy of their Commiſſion. Jefferies cry'd, You may ſee it in every Coffee houſe. He had ſome days allow'd him to prepare for his Defence, in which time he ſecretly endeavour'd, by any decent Submiſſion, to have the Matter compromis'd; but that being in vain, he excepted to the Authority of the Court, as being not only founded on no Law, but contrary to the expreſs Words of the Statute that put down the High Commiſſion: but it was intimated, that if he ſhould inſiſt upon that, it would draw a much heavier Indignation on him. He then urg'd as before, that he could not cenſure Dr. Sharp without a Proceſs, than which nothing can be plainer, according to Law, Reaſon, and the conſtant Practice of Eccleſiaſtical Courts. However, Jefferies and his Brother Judges proceeded to Sentence of Suſpenſion; three of them were at firſt againſt it, the Earl of Rocheſter, the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Lord Chief Juſtice Herbert, ſo that the Sentence could not paſs, unleſs one of thoſe three were brought over. The King ſpoke of it roundly to the Earl of Rocheſter, who was ſo anxious about the Church's Danger, and ſo zealous for its Grandeur, Riches and Power, when he put the Dedication to his Father the Earl of Clarendon's Hiſtory: But now, ſays my Lord of Sarum, Seeing he muſt either concur in the Sentence, or part with the white Staff, he yielded; and my Lord of London was ſuſpended ex Officio. Nor were Crew Biſhop of Durham, Sprat Biſhop of Rocheſter, and White Biſhop of Peterborough, aſham'd to enter upon his Office. But Biſhop Burnet aſſures us, His Clergy, for all the Suſpenſion, were really more govern'd by the ſecret Intimations of his Pleaſure, than they had been by his Authority before. Having ſtruck this bold Stroke, the Court was willing to ſee how it would be born with before they ſtruck another; ſo Dr. Sharp was admitted to offer a general Petition, importing how ſorry he was to find himſelf under the King's Diſpleaſure, upon which, and a gentle Reprimand, he was ſuffer'd to return to the Exerciſe of his Function. Six Months after the Suſpenſion, in February the next Year, the Biſhop of London petition'd to have it taken off; but making no Acknowledgment of any Fault, it lay ſtill upon him tho' there were no further Proceedings in it.

Proceedings againſt Dr. Sharp.

And the Biſhop of London.

A. D. 1686.

He is ſuſpended.

An Accident happen'd at this time, which gave the Queen great Offence, and put the Prieſts much out of Countenance. The King continu'd to go ſtill to Mrs. Sidley, and ſhe gain'd ſo much on him, that at laſt ſhe prevail'd to be made Counteſs of Dorcheſter. As ſoon as the Queen heard of this, ſhe gave order to bring all the Prieſts that were admitted to a particular Confidence into her Cloſet, and when ſhe had them about her, ſhe ſent to deſire the King to come and ſpeak to her; when he came, he was ſurpriz'd to ſee ſuch a Company there, but much more when they fell all on their Knees before him; and the Queen broke out into a bitter Mourning for this new Honour, which they expected would be follow'd with the ſetting her up openly as Miſtreſs. The Queen was then in an ill Habit of Body, and had an Illneſs which, as was thought, would end in a Conſumption. It was believ'd her Sickneſs was of ſuch a nature, that it gave a melancholy Proſpect that, if ſhe ſhould live, ſhe could have no Children. The Prieſts told the King, a Blemiſh in his Life blaſted their Deſigns; and the more it appear'd, and the longer it continu'd, the more ineffectual all their Endeavours would prove. The King was mov'd, and out of Countenance for what he had done; but to quiet them all, he promiſed to ſee the Lady no more. He indeed ſent her to Ireland, but ſhe return'd after a ſhort Stay, and his ill Commerce with her was ſtill continu'd.

The King's Amours.

The Queen and her Prieſts mourn for it.

About this time Samuel Parker, already mention'd, was made Biſhop of Oxford; he had been ſo rigid a Fanatick, that he refus'd Conformity a good while after the Reſtauration. His Father was a thorow-pac'd Independent Republican and Sequeſtrator; and he himſelf, without one Epiſcopal Qualification, was a Scandal to that Holy Order. All the Biſhops of this King's making were of the ſame Merit, as if he intended to bring the Church into Diſgrace by the Characters of her Governors.

Parker Biſhop of Oxford.

The Diſpenſing Power being a Point gain'd, a Toleration was forthwith granted to all ſorts of Diſſenters, but the Papiſts had the chief Benefit of it, they being not only tolerated, but careſs'd, advanc'd and enrich'd. The free and open Exerciſe of their Religion was ſet up every where, and Jeſuits Schools and Seminaries erected, not only in London, but alſo in the moſt conſiderable Towns in the Kingdom. The Church

Church of England, ſays Echard, had now a precarious Title to the National Church, and began to ſee the impending Dangers, which ſo great a Part of that Body ſhut their Eyes againſt in the days of Abhorring and Addreſſing. Romiſh Candidates had already ſwallow'd up Eccleſiaſtical Preferments and Dignities in their Hopes and Expectations. Four Popiſh Biſhops were publickly conſecrated in the Royal Chapel, and diſpatch'd into the Country under the Title of Vicars Apoſtolical, to exerciſe their Epiſcopal Functions in their reſpective Dioceſſes. Monks and Fryars appear'd in their Habits at Whitehall and St. James's, and made no ſcruple to tell the Proteſtants, They hop'd, in a little time, to walk in Proceſſion thro' Cheapſide. A mighty Harveſt of new Converts was now expected; and that Labourers might not be wanting, whole Flocks of Prieſts and Regulars were ſent from beyond Sea to reap it. But what ſort of Miſſionaries they were, will be ſeen by this account of them in Biſhop Burnet's Hiſtory.

Popery flouriſhes.

The Ignorance of Popiſh Prieſts.

The Earl of Middleton had married into a Popiſh Family, and probably by that Intereſt had been preferr'd to be Secretary of State. He was a Man of Parts and Generoſity, but of looſe Principles in Religion. A Prieſt being ſent to inſtruct him, he began with Tranſubſtantiation, of which he ſaid he would convince him immediately, ſaying, You believe the Trinity. Middleton ſtopp'd him, and ſaid, Who told you ſo? At which he ſeem'd amaz'd. The Earl told him, he expected he ſhould convince him of his Belief, but not queſtion him of his own; with this the Prieſt was ſo diſorder'd, that he could proceed no farther.

Ridicul'd by the Earl of Middleton.

The Earl of Mulgrave Lord Chamberlain, was apt to comply in every thing that he thought might be acceptable; for he went with the King to Maſs, and kneel'd at it; and being look'd on as indifferent to all Religions, the Prieſts made an Attack on him. He heard them gravely arguing for Tranſubſtantiation, telling them he was willing to receive Inſtruction. He had taken much pains to bring himſelf to believe in God, who made the World, and all Men in it. But it muſt not be an ordinary Force of Argument that could make him believe, that Man was quits with God, and made God again. Kirk was alſo ſpoken to, to change his Religion, and reply'd briskly, I am already preengag'd, for I promis'd the King of Morocco, that if ever I chang'd my Religion, I would turn Mahometan. One day the King gave the Duke of Norfolk the Sword of State to carry before him to Chapel, and he ſtood at the door, upon which the King ſaid to him, My Lord, your Father would have gone further. To which the Duke anſwer'd, Your Majeſty's Father was the better Man, and he would not have gone ſo far.

Kirk's Repartee.

Duke of Norfolk's.

Earl of Salisbury turns.

The Earl of Salisbury was gain'd over by the King or his Prieſts; but his Character does no Credit to neither them nor their Religion, otherwiſe than as he was a Nobleman.

Earl of Rocheſter refuſes.

The Earl of Rocheſter had more pains taken with him, tho' all was to no purpoſe. The King himſelf ſpoke to him, and deſir'd he would ſuffer himſelf to be inſtructed in Religion. He anſwer'd, He was fully ſatisfy'd about it. But the King ſtill preſſing him to hear his Prieſts, he ſaid, he deſir'd then to have ſome of the Engliſh Clergy preſent, to which the King conſented, only he excepted to Dr. Tillotſon and Dr. Stillingfleet. Lord Rocheſter told him, He would take thoſe who ſhould happen to be in waiting, for the Forms of the Chapel were ſtill kept up, and Dr. Patrick and Dr. Jane were the Men.

A. D. 1686.

Biſhop Burnet tells us, his Ill-Willers had another Story. He had notice given him that he would ſhortly loſe the white Staff, upon which his Lady, who was then ſick, wrote to the Queen, and begg'd ſhe would honour her ſo far, as to come and let her have ſome Diſcourſe with her. The Queen came, and ſtaid above two hours. Lady Rocheſter complain'd of the ill Offices that were done them. The Queen ſaid, All the Proteſtants are now turning againſt us, and we know not how we can truſt any of them; upon which the Lady ſaid, My Lord is not ſo wedded to any Opinion, as not to be ready to be better inſtructed. And it was ſaid, that this gave the Riſe to the King's propoſing a Conference. The Earl deny'd he knew any thing of it: And his Lady died not long after. It was ſaid further, That the day before the Conference, he had an Advertiſement from a ſure hand, that nothing he could do would maintain him in his Place; and that the King had engag'd himſelf to put the Treaſury in Commiſſion, and bring ſome of the Popiſh Lords into it. The Popiſh Prieſts Gifford and Godden began the Conference; and when they had done, the Earl ſaid, If you have nothing ſtronger to urge, I will not trouble theſe learned Gentlemen to ſay any thing, for I am ſure I can anſwer all I have heard; and ſo he did, with much Life and Warmth, not without Scorn, ſaying, Are theſe Grounds to perſuade Men to change their Religion? This he urg'd over and over again with great Vehemence. The King ſeeing in what Temper he was, broke off the Conference, charging all that were preſent to ſay nothing of it: But he took from him the white Staff, allowing him 4000 Pounds a Year for Life; and beſides the 16000 Pounds out of Lord Grey's Eſtate, he had another Grant valu'd at 20000 Pounds. In the Treaſury were put John Lord Bellaſis, Sidney Lord Godolphin, Henry Lord Dover, Sir John Ernle Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Sir Stephen Fox. Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour was made Lord Privy-Seal in the room of the Earl of Clarendon, about the end of December. King James, who was more forward to reſtore Popery in England, than even the Pope himſelf would have had him to have been, ſends now a formal Embaſſy to Innocent XI. who did not approve of his Counſels, as being in an Intereſt, which he hated, that of France. The Perſon pitch'd on for this Embaſſy was Roger Palmer, whoſe Wife King Charles took away from him, and in exchange for her made him Earl of Caſtlemain. He was furniſh'd with moſt ſumptuous Equipage, and had a magnificent Train. His Inſtructions were to reconcile the Kingdoms of England, Scotland and Ireland to the Holy See. The Pope receiv'd this Ambaſſador, as one that ſaw farther than thoſe that ſent him. He and the Cardinals gave him a gave cold Reception, except Cardinal Howard, and thoſe of the French Faction. The Court of Rome were too refin'd Politicians to be impos'd on by Noiſe and Shew, and knew the World too well to expect great Matters from ſuch haſty ill-tim'd Advances. Caſtlemain met with nothing but Mortifications at Rome, which occaſion'd his making as ſhort a Stay as was poſſible. He had ſeveral Audiences of the Pope, but to little purpoſe; for whenever he began to talk of Buſineſs, the Pope was ſeaſonably attack'd with a Fit of Coughing, which broke off the Ambaſſador's Diſcourſe for that time. Theſe Audiences and Fits of Coughing continu'd from time to time, whilſt Caſtlemain continu'd at Rome, and were a Subject of Diverſion to all but the French Faction

At length he was advis'd to come to Threats, and to give out that he would be gone, ſince he could not have an opportunity to treat with his Holineſs about the Buſineſs he came for. Innocent was ſo little concern'd at the Ambaſſador's Reſentment, that when he was told of it, he anſwer'd with his ordinary Coldneſs, Well, let him go, and tell him, it were fit he riſe early in the Morning, that he may reſt himſelf at Noon; for in this Country 'tis dangerous travelling in the heat of the day. He could only obtain of the Pope two trifling Requeſts, which could hardly have been deny'd to an ordinary Courier; the one was, A Licence for the Mareſchal d'Humieres's Daughter to marry her Uncle; the other was, A Diſpenſation of the Jeſuits to Father Petre, to enjoy a Biſhoprick. The want of which was the reaſon that the Archbiſhoprick of York was kept vacant ſo long. Welwood is miſtaken here, for he alſo got a Cardinal's Cap for Rhinaldi of Eſte, the Queen's Uncle. The Engliſh Jeſuits at Rome were at a great Expence of Money, Flattery, Fuſtian and Painting to entertain the Engliſh Ambaſſador. I ſhall only repeat one Latin Diſtich, as a Sample of the reſt, and a Prophecy of the Succeſs of the Dutcheſs of Modena's Negotiation with the Lady of Loretto.

Caſtlemain's going to Rome was High-Treaſon by Law, and Jefferies himſelf was uneaſy at it. The Pope probably had the greater Diſliking to Caſtlemain, becauſe it was thought he was a Jeſuit, and Innocent hated that Order. He was unhappy in every Step of his Embaſſy. He diſputed with a nice ſort of Affectation every Punctilio of the Ceremonial. Welwood is alſo miſtaken as to the Coughing Fits; for Caſtlemain had an Audience of the Pope, after his Conferences with Cardinal Cibo, then Cardinal Patron, whom he preſs'd much to put an end to the Differences between Innocent XI. and Lewis XIV. in the Matter of the Franchiſes, that it might appear that the Pope had a due Regard to a King who had extirpated Hereſy, and to another King who was endeavouring to bring other Kingdoms into the Sheepfold. What muſt the World ſay, if two ſuch Kings, like whom, no Ages had produc'd any, ſhould be neglected and ill us'd at Rome for ſome Punctilio's? He added, That if theſe Matters were ſettled, and if the Pope would enter into Concert with them, they would ſet about the deſtroying Hereſy, and would begin with the Dutch, upon whom, he ſaid, they would fall without any Declaration of War, treating them as a Company of Rebels and Pirates, who had not a Right as Free-States and Princes have, to a formal Denunciation of War. Cibo was amaz'd at this, and gave notice of it to the Imperial Cardinals; they ſent it to the Emperor, and he ſignify'd it to the Prince of Orange, which, doubtleſs, put the States General and the Prince of Orange upon concerting Meaſures for their Preſervation. And it is ſaid that Mr. Sidney, afterwards Earl of Rumney, being then at Rome, was admitted to ſeveral Audiences in the Pope's Cloſet, when Caſtlemain could hardly procure one in the Hall of Audience. Sidney had no publick Character, but was entruſted by the Prince of Orange with ſome Secrets to be communicated to the Pope; and ſome People have fancy'd, that even the Revolution was one of them; but perhaps that's too viſionary. The Ambaſſador ſeeing his Remonſtrances to Cibo were ineffectual, demanded the above-mention'd Audience of his Holineſs, to whom he lamented the little Regard that was had to two ſuch great Kings. He reflected on the Pope, as ſhewing more Zeal about Temporal Concerns than Spiritual, which, he ſaid, gave great Scandal to all Chriſtendom. He concluded, that ſince he ſaw the Interceſſions made in his Maſter's Name were ſo little conſider'd, he would make haſte home. To which the Pope only ſaid, Lei e padrone, He might do as he pleas'd: But he ſent one after the Ambaſſador as he was withdrawing, to let him know how much he was offended with his Diſcourſes; that he receiv'd no ſuch Treatment from any Perſon; and that the Ambaſſador was to expect no other private Audience. Cardinal Howard did what he could to ſoften Matters; but Caſtlemain was ſo entirely in the hands of the Jeſuits, that he had little regard to any thing the Cardinal ſuggeſted to him.

Dutch to be deſtroy'd.

A. D. 1686.

Caſtlemain ſends the Pope.

In the mean time the King and his Prieſts were indefatigable in their Endeavours to make Converts, among whom 'tis reported the Earl of Sunderland was one; he certainly went aſſiduouſly to the Popiſh Chapel, and perform'd his Cringes with more than ordinary Ceremony; but I do not find he was formally reconcil'd, as the Cant then was; and Father Petre, after he had extoll'd the Earl's Obedience at a Meeting of the Jeſuits, added, It is neceſſary for him as yet to appear a Proteſtant, for weighty Reaſons of State. The King caus'd his Army to encamp this Summer on Hounſlow-Heath, where a Chapel was erected at his Head Quarters, and Maſs publickly ſaid there every day, but ſo few went to it, and thoſe few were treated by the reſt with ſo much Scorn, that it was not eaſy to bear it. 'Twas viſible ſuch an Army was not to be truſted in any Quarrel, in which Religion was concern'd, ſo a Reſolution was form'd to make Recruits in Ireland. This Standing Army conſiſted of 15000 Horſe, Foot and Dragoons, which number was increas'd afterwards; and beſides the few Popiſh Officers mention'd by Orleans, and copy'd by Echard, as Berwick, Dunbarton, Dover, Montgomery, Hamilton and Sackville, were commanded by Sarsfield, Lutterel, Gage, Peterborough, Carne, Butler, Wachop, Forbes, Mac Ellicut, Douglas and Bouchan, all Popiſh Officers, with many others of the ſame Stamp.

At this time a great Diſcovery was made of the Intentions of the Court by the Jeſuits of Liege, who, in a Letter they wrote to their Brethren at Friburgh in Switzerland, gave them a long Account of the Affairs of England. They told them the King was receiv'd into a Communication of the Merits of their Order; that he expreſs'd great Joy at his becoming a Son of the Society, and profeſs'd he was as much concern'd in all their Intereſts as in his own. He wiſh'd they could furniſh him with many Prieſts, to aſſiſt him in the Converſion of the Nation, which he was reſolv'd to bring about, or to die a MARTYR in endeavouring it; and that he would rather ſuffer Death for carrying on that Work, than live ever ſo long and happy without attempting it. He ſaid, he muſt make haſte in it, otherwiſe, if he ſhould die before he had accompliſhed it, he would leave them worſe than he found them. They added, among many Particulars, That when one of them kneel'd down to kiſs his Hand, he took him up, and ſaid, Since you are a Prieſt, I ought rather to kneel to you and kiſs your hand; and when another of them was lamenting that his next Heir was an Heretick, he ſaid, God would provide an Heir; another Fore-runner of the Pretender. The Jeſuits of Friburgh ſhew'd the Letter about; one of the Miniſters, on whom they were taking ſome pains, and of whom they had ſome hopes, had got a ſight of it, and obtain'd Leave to take a Copy of it, pretending he would make good uſe of it, and he ſent it to Mr. Heidegger, the famous Profeſſor of Divinity at Zurich, whoſe Son is the famous Profeſſor of Opera's and Maſquerades at London. Other Copies of it were ſent both from Geneva and Switzerland. One of theſe came to Dyckvelt the Dutch Ambaſſador, who told King James of it; and that his Prieſts were full of Deſigns and Hopes, which gave Jealouſies that could not be eaſily remov'd. The King read the Letter, and promis'd to let him ſee 'twas an Impoſture invented to make him more odious; but he never ſpoke of it to him afterwards, from whence Dyckvelt concluded the Letter was no Forgery.

The King being very intent upon having the Penal Laws and Teſts repeal'd, declar'd, that none ſhould ſerve him but thoſe who would vote for it. He ask'd the Marquis of Hallifax if he would do ſo, and the Marquis frankly reply'd, Never; adding, He thought the keeping up thoſe Laws was neceſſary even for the King's Service, ſince the Nation truſted ſo much to them, that the publick Quiet was chiefly preſerv'd by that means. The King ſaid, Tho' I will never forget paſt Services, yet ſince you cannot be prevail'd on in that particular, I am reſolv'd to have all of a piece; ſo he was turn'd out, and Lord Sunderland made Preſident of the Council, keeping ſtill his Place of Secretary of State.

King talks with Lord Hallifax about the Teſt.

When Archbiſhop Sancroft had receiv'd Articles from ſome Biſhops againſt Cartwright and Parker, two new nominated Prelates, he promis'd Dr. Lloyd, Biſhop of St. Aſaph, that he would not conſecrate them, till he had examin'd the Truth of the Articles; but being afraid of a Præmunire, he did it without ſuch Examination.

Maſſey a Papiſt made Dean of Chriſt-Church.

The Deanery of Chriſt Church in Oxford was given to one Maſſey, a new Convert, tho' he had neither the Gravity, the Learning, nor the Age, ſuitable to ſuch a Dignity. Not long after this, the Preſident of Magdalen College died, and the King ſent the Fellows a Mandamus, requiring them to chooſe one Farmer, an ignorant, vicious Perſon, who had no other Merit than his Apoſtacy, and turning Papiſt. Mandamus Letters had no legal Authority in them; but all the great Preferments of the Church being in the King's diſpoſal, thoſe who pretended to Favour, were not apt to refuſe his Recommendation, leſt that ſhould afterwards be remember'd to their prejudice. But now ſince it was viſible in what Channel Favour was like to run, leſs regard was had to ſuch a Letter; and the Fellows of that Houſe choſe the reverend and worthy Dr. Hough, one of their Body, who was in all reſpects a ſtatutable Man. They carry'd their Election according to their Statutes, to the Biſhop of Wincheſter their Viſitor, who confirm'd it, which was a legal Settlement of that Matter, but the Court highly reſented it. Biſhop Burnet writes, "It was much obſer-
"ved, that this Univerſity, that had aſſerted
"the King's Prerogative in the higheſt Strains
"of the moſt abject Flattery poſſible, both in "their Addreſſes, and in a wild Decree they "had made three Years before this, in which "they had laid together a Set of ſuch high-
"flown Maxims, as muſt eſtabliſh an uncon-
"troulable Tyranny, ſhould be the firſt Body of "the Nation that ſhould feel the Effects of it
"moſt ſenſibly." The Cauſe was brought before the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners; the Fellows were firſt ask'd why they had not choſen Farmer, in Obedience to the King's Letter? They anſwer'd by offering a Liſt of many juſt Exceptions againſt him, the Subject was fruitful, and the Scandals he had given were very publick. The Court was aſham'd of him, and inſiſted no more on him; but they ſaid the Houſe ought to have ſhewn more Reſpect to the King's Letter, than to have proceeded to a Choice in Contempt of it. The Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion declar'd the Election of Dr. Hough null, and put the Houſe under Suſpenſion. Then Parker Biſhop of Oxford was recommended by the King, and the Fellows were commanded to proceed to a new Election in his favour. They excus'd themſelves, ſince they were bound by their Oaths to maintain their Statutes; and having made a legal Election, legally confirm'd, they could not proceed to a new Choice, College Preferments being Free-Holds could only be judg'd in a Court of Record. The King in his Progreſs next Year came to Oxford, ſent for the Fellows, and order'd them to go preſently and chuſe Parker for their Preſident in a Strain of Language ill ſuited to the Majeſty of a crown'd Head; for he ſpoke to them very coarſely, and in a very angry Tone, yet it had no Effect upon them: They inſiſted ſtill on their Oaths, tho' with a Humility and Submiſſion, which they hop'd would have mollify'd him; and they continuing thus firm, a ſubaltern Commiſſion was ſent from the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners to finiſh the Matter. Biſhop Cartwright was the Head of this Commiſſion, Sir Charles Hedges the King's Advocate to manage it. Cartwright acted in ſo rough a manner, that it ſhew'd he was reſolv'd to ſacrifice all things to the King's Pleaſure. Biſhop Burnet ſays, "'Twas an afflicting thing, which
"ſeem'd to have a peculiar Character of Indig-
"nity in it, that this firſt Act of Violence, com"mitted againſt the legal Poſſeſſions of the "Church, was executed by one Biſhop, and
"done in favour of another."

Fellows of Magdalen College proſecuted.

Oxford for Tyranny, according to Biſhop Burnet.

The new Preſident was turn'd out, and becauſe he would not deliver the Keys of the Houſe, the Doors were broken open, and Parker forcibly put in Poſſeſſion. The Fellows were requir'd to make their Submiſſion, to ask Pardon for what was paſt, and to accept of the Biſhop for their Preſident; they ſtill pleaded their Oaths, and were all turn'd out, except two that ſubmitted. The Nation as well as the Univerſity look'd on all this with a juſt Indignation. It was thought an open Piece of Robbery and Burglary, when Men authoriz'd by no legal Commiſſion came, and by Force turn'd Men out of their Poſſeſſion and Freehold. It agreed ill with this King of his Word's Profeſſions ſo often repeated to maintain the Church of England, as by Law eſtabliſh'd; for this ſtruck at the whole Eſtate, and all the Temporalities of the Church, and could not but inflame the Church Party and the Clergy. From this Time the Meſſages to the Prince of Orange were very preſſing, all the pretended Notions of Paſſive-Obedience and Non-Reſiſtance were univerſally exploded, recanted and renounc'd, even by the Biſhops, the Prieſts and Deacons, by the two Univerſities, by even the Addreſſers and Abhorrers; thoſe Doctrines which Echard ſaid were ſo neceſſary, are now diſown'd and deteſted. The King gave himſelf great Liberties in Diſcourſe courſe againſt the Church, and it was plain all the Services that Party had done him, both in oppoſing the Excluſion, and upon his firſt Acceſſion to the Crown, were forgotten.

Perſecution in King Charles the Second's Time.

Jerry White collected the Names of 60,000 Perſons, who were proſecuted on a religious Account, from the Reſtoration to the Revolution, 5000 of whom died in Priſon; he told Lord Dorſet that King James offer'd him 1000 Guineas for the Liſt, as far as he had carry'd it in his Time, to expoſe the Church, but Jerry would not part with it.

Cambridge had ſome time before this felt the Weight of the King's Diſpleaſure. He ſent his Mandamus to order F. Francis, an ignorant Benedictine Monk, to be receiv'd a Maſter of Arts, as a Way to let Monks into the Degrees of the Univerſity. The Mandamus was refus'd with great Unanimity and Firmneſs, which the Court had not expected from them. New and repeated Orders full of ſevere Threatnings in caſe of Diſobedience were ſent to them. Some feeble or falſe Men of the Univerſity try'd to compound the Matter by granting this Degree to F. Francis, but enacting at the ſame time that it ſhould not be a Precedent for any other of the like nature. This was not given way to, and the Vice-Chancellor Dr. Peachel was ſummon'd before the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion to anſwer this Contempt. Biſhop Burnet obſerves, He was a very weak Man, and made a poor Defence, and it was no ſmall Reflection to that great Body, that their chief Magiſtrate was ſo little able to aſſert their Privileges, or to juſtify their Proceedings. Echard takes no notice of this, and indeed he's very cautious of letting us be acquainted with any of the Foibles of either of our Univerſities, or any of their Doctors. Jefferies treated Peachel with great Contempt, and the Court turning him out of his Place, the Univerſity choſe Dr. Balderſton, Maſter of Emanuel College, Vice-Chancellor; who in his Speech which he made of courſe on his Election, promis'd that during his Magiſtracy neither Religion, nor the Rights of that Body ſhould ſuffer by his means.

Cambridge University in Diſgrace.

Dr. Peachel Vice-Chancellor inſulted by Jefferies.

The King was not contented with invading the Rights and Properties of thoſe Seminaries of Learning, he endeavour'd to break in upon the Charities of generous Founders of Hoſpitals; and the Charter-Houſe at London being the greateſt Endowment in Europe for the Uſes intended by the Founder, an Attempt was made againſt his Statutes, in favour of Andrew Popham a Papiſt, whom he recommended for an Out-Penſioner's Place in Sutton's Hoſpital, by a Letter dated the 17th of December this Year; which Letter was not deliver'd to the Maſter, the celebrated Dr. Burnet, Author of the Theory of the Earth, but to the Regiſter at his Houſe in the City, who came not to acquaint the Maſter with the Contents of it, but ſent Andrew Popham to him to be admitted with a Certificate in the uſual Form. The Maſter ask'd Popham where his Letter of Nomination was, and to whom it was directed? He ſaid it was directed to the Governors of the Hoſpital, and he had left it in the Regiſter's hands. The Maſter told him if it was directed to the Governors, it muſt be delivered to them before he could act upon it; and ſo telling him when there would be a Meeting of the Governors, he diſmiſs'd him without Admiſſion. The Meeting was about a Month after, Popham appear'd, and his Buſineſs was heard. The King's Letter being read, Jefferies Lord Chancellor preſently mov'd that they ſhould immediately, without any Debate, proceed to vote whether Andrew Popham ſhould be admitted or no according to the King's Letter; and it was put upon the Maſter as Junior to vote firſt, but the Maſter told them he thought it was his Duty to acquaint their Lordſhips with the State and Conſtitution of that Hoſpital before they proceeded to vote. This was oppos'd by ſome, but after a little Debate the Maſter was heard, and acquainted their Lordſhips that to admit a Penſioner into that Hoſpital without taking the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, was not only contrary to the Conſtitutions of the Houſe, but alſo to an Act of Parliament provided in that Caſe, which he nam'd, and repeated the Clauſe relating to the Charter-Houſe. When the Maſter had done, one of the Governors ſaid, What's this to the Purpoſe? The Duke of Ormond reply'd, I think it is very much to the Purpoſe, for an Act of Parliament is not ſo ſlight a thing, but that it deſerves to be conſider'd. Upon which, after ſome Diſcourſe, the Queſtion was put whether Andrew Popham ſhould be admitted or no, and it was carry'd in the Negative. The Governors intended to return an Anſwer in writing forthwith to the King's Letter; but as ſoon as the Vote was paſt Jefferies flung away, and ſome others following him, there was not a Number left to act as an Aſſembly. The Archbiſhop attempted ſeveral times to have another Aſſembly in order to write that Letter, but could not get a full Number till Midſummer-Day.

A. D. 1686.

The Attempt againſt the Charter-Houſe.

While the Buſineſs was hanging thus, there happen'd an Accident which the Governors thought would have put an end to the Controverſy. Another Perſon appear'd with a Letter of Nomination from the King of a Date antecedent to Popham's, and it was a Perſon qualify'd for the Place, one Cardonel, a French Proteſtant naturaliz'd; this they thought had been a ſoft Method invented by the Court to ſuperſede Popham's Letter, and ſo let the Controverſy fall without noiſe: but it prov'd otherwiſe, for when this Man's Pretenſions came to be made known at Court, the King ſent another Letter to exclude Cardonel, and to reinforce his former Order for Popham. Thus there were two Letters under the Signet, and there wanted only a Broad Seal, that all the Forces of the diſpenſing Power might be employ'd in this Attack againſt the Charter-Houſe. At length a Broad Seal was ſent to compleat and ratify Popham's Diſpenſation for not taking the Oaths, and Witneſſes came to prove the Delivery of it. The King's ſecond Letter to the Governors was read at their Midſummer Meeting, as was alſo the Diſpenſation for Popham; upon which a Letter was drawn up to give Reaſons to his Majeſty why they could not comply with his Pleaſure as to the Admiſſion of Andrew Popham into that Hoſpital. This Letter was ſign'd by eight Governors.

Oppos'd by the Governors.

When it was read to the King he gave it to Jefferies, ſaying, Find out a Way that I may have Right done me at that Hoſpital; and the Charter-Houſe was threaten'd with a Quo Warranto, and Dr. Burnet the Maſter with a Proſecution before the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners; but the Governors were of ſo great Character, ſo much conſider'd by the Nation, and ſo well able to defend their Cauſe, that the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, who were the Support of the Diſpenſing Power, had no mind to meddle with them; beſides, they had their Hands full of other Buſineſs, they being at the ſame time quarrelling with the two Univerſities on the ſame Point.

We

A. D. 1686.

We are now to look into the Affairs of Scotland and Ireland, where Popery appears more bare-fac'd even than in England, eſpecially in Ireland, where inſtead of a Toleration for themſelves, the Papiſts begin to threaten the Proteſtants that it will be a very great Favour if they are tolerated.

Scotland.

Mention has been made of the ſevere Act paſt in the Scots Parliament, and the Conſequences of it were ſuch as made the Tyranny in Scotland intolerable. Perth the Chancellor had behav'd well at his firſt Appearance in the World, but to advance himſelf in Poſts and Honours, he engag'd deeply in the fouleſt and blackeſt of Crimes, to uſe Biſhop Burnet's Expreſſion. The Duke of Queensbury, the King's Commiſſioner, gave very full Aſſurances in the point of Religion, that the King would never alter it, but would maintain it as it was eſtabliſh'd by Law; and in Confirmation of them he propos'd the Act enjoining the Teſt, which was paſt, and was look'd on as a full Security, tho' it was very probable that all the Uſe the Council would make of the diſcretional Power lodg'd with them, would be only to tender the Teſt to the Covenanters, and not to the Papiſts. They had a Power by another Act to require all Perſons, under Pain of Treaſon, to anſwer ſuch Queſtions as they ſhould put to them; upon which it was eaſy to have grafted an Inquiſition, as ſoon as the King pleas'd. The Parliament did not ſit long, but they did a great deal of Miſchief, and gave the King for Life all the Revenue that had been given to his Brother, with ſome additional Taxes.

Mr. Carſtairs, who had been put to the Torture in the late King's Time, having drop'd ſome Words in his Confeſſion, which touch'd Sir Hugh Campbell and his Son, then Priſoners in London; the Earl of Melfort, Perth's Brother, got the Promiſe of his Eſtate, about 1000 l. a Year, as ſoon as he ſhould be convicted of Treaſon; upon which, an Act was brought into the Scots Parliament, which was to laſt only ſix Weeks, and enacted, that if within that Time any of the Privy Council would depoſe that any Man was prov'd guilty of High Treaſon, he ſhould upon ſuch Proof be attainted; upon which, as ſoon as the Act was paſt four of the Privy-Council ſtood up and affirm'd that the Campbells were prov'd by Carſtairs's Depoſition to be guilty; then were both Father and Son brought to the Bar to ſee what they had to ſay why Sentence ſhould not be executed. The old Gentleman near eighty, ſeeing the Ruin of his Family was determin'd, and that he was condemn'd in ſo unuſual a manner, took Courage, and ſaid the Oppreſſion they had groan'd under had driven them to Deſpair, and made them think how they might ſecure their Lives and Fortunes; he own'd he had ſome Meetings with Baillie in London, and that one was ſent to Scotland to hinder all Riſings; that an Oath of Secrecy was indeed offer'd, but was never taken; upon all this. What he ſaid was term'd a Confeſſion, and he was condemn'd, but out of a Shew of Mercy pardon'd; the Earl of Melfort poſſeſſing his Eſtate, the old Gentleman died ſoon after, and very probably his Death was haſten'd by his long and rigorous Impriſonment, and this unexampled Concluſion of it, which, according to the Biſhop of Salisbury, was ſo univerſally cry'd out againſt, that when the News of it was writ to Foreign Parts, it was not eaſy to make People believe it poſſible.

And can any thing be more monſtrous and incredible than that the Repreſentative of a Chriſtian Nation ſhould make a Law to laſt ſix Weeks only, on purpoſe to deſtroy an antient Member of their Body, and put another Man in Poſſeſſion of his Eſtate? Melfort to deſerve it turn'd Papiſt, as his Brother Perth did, who came to Court upon ſome Difference with Queensbury to complain of him; but when his Complaints were heard, they were ſo ſlight that the King was aſham'd of them, and all the Courtiers juſtify'd the Duke of Queensbury. The Earl of Perth ſpeaking of it to the Marquis of Hallifax, and expreſſing ſome Concern about what might happen upon it, Lord Hallifax ſaid, Fear nothing, your Faith will make you whole, and ſo it prov'd; the Duke of Queensbury was ſoon after turn'd out of the Treaſury, and the Earls of Perth and Melfort had the Management of Scotland. Perth prevail'd with his Lady to turn Papiſt as ſhe was dying, and a few Weeks after her Death very indecently marry'd the Duke of Gordon's Siſter, his firſt Couſin: They did not ſtay for a Diſpenſation, and Cardinal Howard could not without great difficulty obtain one. In return for this, Perth ſet up a Chappel for Maſs in the Palace, the Rabble of Edinburgh broke into it, and defac'd the Chappel, and if Perth had not been convey'd off in Diſguiſe he had probably been torn to pieces. The Guards diſpers'd the Mob, ſome were taken, and the Ring-leader hang'd, who at his Execution told Mr. Macom a Miniſter, he was offer'd his Life if he would accuſe the Duke of Queensbury as the Perſon that had ſet on the Tumult, but he would not ſave his Life by ſo falſe a Calumny. Macom did not call any of thoſe that were preſent to bear Witneſs of it, but being an honeſt Man, went in the Simplicity of his Heart to the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, and told him what had paſt; the Archbiſhop acquainted the Duke of Queensbury with it, and he writ to Court and complain'd of it. The King order'd the Matter to be examin'd, and the poor Miniſter having no Witneſs to atteſt what the Criminal had ſaid, was declar'd the Forger of the Calumny, upon which he was turn'd out. My Lord of Sarum reflects thus, "How ſeverely "ſoever thoſe in Authority may handle a poor "incautious Man, yet the Publick is apt to "judge true; and in this Caſe as the Miniſter's "Weakneſs and Misfortune was pitied, ſo the "Earl of Perth's Malice and Treachery was as "much deteſted." Such were the Converts the King made to his Religion! ſuch were the Fruits of their Converſion!

A. D. 1686.

In the Summer 1686, the Earl of Murray, another new Convert, was ſent the King's Commiſſioner to hold a Parliament in Scotland, and to try if it would be more compliant than the Engliſh Parliament had been. The King by his Letter recommended to them in very earneſt Words the taking off all Penal Laws and Teſts relating to Religion, and all poſſible Methods were us'd to prevail on a Majority; but two Accidents happen'd before the opening of the Parliament, which made great Impreſſions on the Minds of many.

We muſt not forget with what Applauſe Mr. Echard brings off the Murderers of Dr. Doriſlaus, and we will now ſee what was the Behaviour of one of them in his laſt Moments, when he apprehended himſelf about to appear before that Tribunal, at which thoſe who have diſpens'd the Judgments of the Almighty without his Warrant, will be call'd to a ſtrict Account, and receive everlaſting Doom.

Whitford in Deſpair.

Whitford, ſays Biſhop Burnet, "Son to "one of their Biſhops, before the Wars had "turn'd Papiſt, he was the Perſon that kill'd "Doriſlaus in Holland; and that he might "get out of Cromwel's reach, he had gone into

A. D. 1686.

" into the Duke of Savoy's Service, and was " there when the laſt Maſſacre was com- " mitted on the Vaudois. He had himſelf " committed many barbarous Murders, and " had a ſmall Penſion given him after the " Reſtoration. He died a few Days before the " Parliament met; he declar'd to ſome Mi- " niſters his forſaking of Popery, and his Ab- " horrence of it for its Cruelty. He ſaid he had " been guilty of ſome execrable Murders in " Piedmont, both of Women and Children, " which had purſu'd him with an intolerable " Horror of Mind ever after that; he had gone " to Prieſts of all Sorts, the ſtricteſt as well as " the eaſieſt, and they had juſtify'd him in his " Maſſacres, and had given him Abſolution; " but his Conſcience was ſo ſtung, that he died " as in Deſpair, crying out againſt that bloody " Religion."

Sir Robert Sibbalds recants Popery.

The other Accident was the Remorſe and Recantation of Sir Robert Sibbalds, a Doctor of Phyſick, and the moſt learned Antiquary in Scotland, who had liv'd in a Courſe of Philoſophical Virtue, but in great Doubts as to Reveal'd Religion, and was prevail'd on by the Earl of Perth to turn Papiſt, which he had no ſooner done than he began to be aſham'd that he had made ſuch a Step upon little Enquiry: Upon which he went to London, and retir'd for ſome Months from all Company; he went into a deep Courſe of Study, by which he came to ſee into the Errors of Popery with ſo full a Conviction, that returning to Scotland ſome Weeks before the meeting of the Parliament, he could not be at quiet till he had publiſh'd his Recantation in the Church. The Biſhop of Edinburgh was ſo much a Courtier, that apprehending many might go to hear it, and that it might give offence at Court, he ſent him to do it in a Church in the Country; but the Recantation of ſo learned a Man, upon ſo much Study, had a great Effect on many.

Scots Biſhops for the Papiſts, and againſt the Presbyterians.

The two governing Biſhops, Roſſe and Paterſon, reſolv'd to let the King ſee that their Submiſſion was as abſolute as his Power, and procur'd an Addreſs to be ſign'd by ſeveral of their Bench, offering to concur with the King in all he deſir'd, with relation to thoſe of his own Religion, provided the Laws might ſtill continue in force, and be executed againſt the Presbyterians. With this Paterſon was ſent up to Court. He communicated the Matter to the Earl of Middleton, who adviſ'd him never to ſhew that Paper, for it would be made uſe of againſt them, and render them odious. The King and all his Prieſts were ſo ſenſible of it, that they were reſolv'd to have a general Toleration, or none, ſo the Addreſs was never preſented; but it ſhew'd that the Scots Biſhops, who are in ſuch high Eſteem with the Archdeacon, were more eager to promote Popery and deſtroy Presbytery than even the King and his Prieſts. When the next Seſſions of Parliament was open'd, Duke Hamilton was ſilent in the Debate about the Penal Laws and Teſts, having promiſ'd not to oppoſe the Motion, tho' he would not be active to promote it. The Duke of Queensbury was alſo ſilent, and the King was made to believe he managed the Oppoſition under-hand. Paterſon and Roſſe did ſo entirely forget what became their Characters as Proteſtant Biſhops, that they us'd their utmoſt Endeavours to perſuade the Parliament to comply with the King's Deſire. The Archbiſhop of Glaſcow oppos'd it fearfully, the Biſhops of Galloway and Dunkeld made a reſolute Oppoſition: The reſt were ſilent, but were reſolv'd to vote for the Continuance of the Laws, yet ſuch was the Meanneſs of moſt of the Nobility, and of the other Members, that few of them did ſo much as hope for an effectual Reſiſtance to the Court-Meaſures. However the major Vote was againſt the Repeal, and for a Suſpenſion of thoſe Laws during the King's Life. The King deſpis'd this, ſo the Seſſion was put off, and the Parliament quickly diſſolv'd. The Archbiſhop of Glaſcow, and the Biſhop of Dunkeld were immediately turn'd out by the King's expreſs Command. The worthleſs Paterſon was made Archbiſhop of Glaſcow, and one Hamilton, noted for Prophaneneſs and Impiety, which ſometimes broke out into Blaſphemy, was made Biſhop of Dunkeld. No Reaſon was aſſign'd for turning out theſe Biſhops, but the King's Pleaſure. This Proceeding provok'd the Nation in general, and they began to return to their old Zeal againſt Popery. Few Proſelytes were made, and tho' the Presbyterians were freed from the great Severities they had long ſmarted under, yet, according to Biſhop Burnet, they expreſs'd on all occaſions an unconquerable Averſion to Popery, and the Court was ſoon convinc'd they were not to be depended on; notwithſtanding which, the King began his formal Proclamation of Toleration in Scotland, with aſſerting his Sovereign Prerogative, Authority Royal and Abſolute Power, which all his Subjects were to obey without RESERVE: he us'd the Phraſe, Moderate Presbyterians, which left the Conſtruction of their Moderation in the Council ſtill, but the Papiſts were allow'd their Religion in the full Extent of it, and all the Laws that prohibited it were at once vacated and annull'd by the King's Royal Edict, which was to paſs now as the Edicts paſs in France, and Parliaments were either to be nothing, or no more than the Parliaments in France, Tools of the King's Will and Pleaſure.

The King erects a Tyranny.

No ſooner was King James ſettled in the Throne, than he ſent Orders to the Duke of Ormond to come to England. The Duke foreſeeing that the new Hoſpital, a ſtately Fabrick near Dublin, erected for poor Soldiers, would infallibly fall into Popiſh Hands, he ſate ſeveral Days with the Council and Judges privately in the Caſtle to conſult how to prevent it, and they went as far as they could in it; but whatever Proviſion they made againſt it, was no Fence againſt ſuch a Tyrant as Tyrconnel, under ſuch a King as James II. His Grace appointed a Dinner at the Hoſpital for all its Officers, and the Officers of the Army then in Dublin, which being over, he took a large Glaſs of Wine in his Hand, bid the Servant fill it up to the Brim, then ſtood up, and ſaid, Look here, Gentlemen, they ſay at Court I am now become an old doating Fool, you ſee my Hand does not ſhake, nor does my Heart fail, nor doubt but I will make ſome of them ſee their Miſtake. Upon his Arrival at Court he ſoon ſaw how the King was breaking down all the Barriers of the People's Liberties and Properties, and preparing the Way for Popery and Slavery. An Attempt was made to charge him with imbezzling the Publick Money, under pretence of the Charge of the Hoſpital; but they were aſham'd of it, and it came to nothing.

Ireland.

The Lord Primate and the Earl of Granard were appointed Lords Juſtices, who were very vigilant and prudent in the Exerciſe of that important Truſt. The Iriſh pretended daily to diſcover Plots, and their Grandees appear'd to ſupport their Evidence, preſſing the Lords Juſtices for Orders of Council to impower Papiſts and Mongrel Proteſtants, ſuch as Worth before-mention'd to examine them, and to commit without Bail any Perſon impeach'd. The Lords

A. D. 1686.

Juſtices and Council would not agree to this Arbitrary Power, yet were ſo inſulted by them, that they iſſu'd out ſuch Orders of Council, but they were always directed to Proteſtants, which made the Iriſh weary of that Stratagem. Several Privy-Counſellors had been turn'd out by Command from England for their Zeal and Activity in their Country's Cauſe; but as yet no Papiſts were put in, however it will not be long before there will be ſcarce any one elſe. They grew daily more and more inſolent, and began to affront and bully the Proteſtants before Lord Clarendon came over. The Lord Clanrickard, Sir Valentine Brown, (made a Viſcount by King James) Col. Moor, and ſome others being at Leſlip, ſeven Miles from Dublin, fell on their Knees, and drank Confuſion to all Proteſtants and their Religion. This made a noiſe, and to ſtifle it, ſuch as were Eye Witneſſes of the Fact, and threaten'd for not pledging the Health, were ſeiz'd with Warrants, and menac'd to have their Throats cut if they did not deny it. Sir Standiſh Hartſtong, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, was given to underſtand he ſhould loſe his Employ, if he did not take off his Son-in-law, who was one of thoſe that reported it. Theſe repeated Inſolences made the Lords Juſtices weary, and one of them, the Lord Granard, writ to England to be diſmiſs'd: But the Papiſts repreſenting that he had a great Intereſt among the Presbyterians, his Lady being one, he was continu'd, the King writing him a Letter with his own Hand, containing great Promiſes and Aſſurances, that nothing ſhould be acted prejudicial to the Proteſtant Intereſt, for which this Lord was then thought ſo very zealous, that ſome were apt to believe he inclin'd to declare for the Duke of Monmouth. The Iriſh were perpetually teaſing the Lords Juſtices with falſe Informations againſt the Engliſh, as if they had Night-Meetings to plot the Deſtruction of the Iriſh. Examinations were taken before Juſtices of the Peace put in Commiſſion for ſuch Purpoſes; and as falſe and irrational as they were, yet Complaints were ſent to the King, that the Engliſh were not proſecuted, and he ſent private Inſtructions, with a Reprimand to the Lords-Juſtices about this Affair, upon which they iſſu'd a Proclamation, forbidding all Night-Meetings, tho' the Lords knew well there was no ſuch thing. This Contrivance was in order to make way for greater Miſchief, by preparing Evidence to bring the moſt conſiderable of the Engliſh into Plots.

They began with one Moor of Clonmel, who was indicted for High-Treaſon before Sir John Mead in the Palatinate of Tipperary. Moor had a vaſt Eſtate, and they bent their whole Force againſt him. To countenance the Buſineſs, the Earl of Tyrconnel and Juſtin Maccarty came to the Trial at Clonmel, and in the publick Court preſum'd to reproach the Judge and the Jury. Maccarty call'd him Fanatick, and both he and Talbot, now Tyrconnel, aſpers'd him and the Duke of Ormond for employing him, calling him Rogue, and uſing other ſuch foul Language, as, ſays my Author, was only fit for ſuch Bloodhounds to expreſs. Notwithſtanding which, Moor and ſome others that were impeach'd were acquitted. But ſuch an extravagant partial Account of the Matter was ſent over to the King, that he queſtion'd the Duke of Ormond how he came to employ ſuch a Fanatick. The Duke anſwer'd, I did it in duty to your Majeſty, as believing I could not intruſt a better Man than one of your Majeſty's Servants; for ſo he was when Duke of York, being his Attorney-General in Ireland.

A. D. 1686.

Tyrconnel then began to model the Army; but before he ventur'd on that bold Step, he thought it convenient to diſarm the Proteſtants. In order to this, the King and Council wrote over to the Lords Juſtices, that there was reaſon to believe the Rebellion of Monmouth had been of ſuch ſpreading Contagion, as to infect many, wherefore it was not ſafe to have the Militia Arms diſpers'd abroad. They would be in a greater readineſs both for the Militia and their own Defence, if they were depoſited in the ſeveral Stores of each County. A Proclamation was iſſu'd purſuant to this Order, and, as has been obſerv'd, the Papiſts found Proteſtants who refus'd not to do their Work for them. Boyle the Primate, and one of the Lords Juſtices, ſent for the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of Dublin, and in a florid Speech magnify'd their unſhaken Loyalty in the worſt of Times, adding that their ready Obedience and prevalent Example would be of great Service to the King and Kingdom; and in the cloſe he told them, it was expected they ſhould bring their Arms, which ſhould be always ready for their Service. The City was ſenſible of their Condition, but not knowing how to help it, their Arms were brought in, and the Country did the ſame. To render the Deſign more effectual, the Iriſh gave out, that if any Arms were reſerv'd in Proteſtant Hands, ſuch would be interpreted as diſaffected to the King and Government, and that it would be no Excuſe to ſay they were their own Arms, and not belonging to the Militia. This frighted many, and operated ſo powerfully, that great Numbers of People deliver'd in their Arms bought with their own Money. The Proteſtants being thus diſarm'd, Tyrconnel proceeds to deſtroying the Army then about 8000 Men, and began with the Officers in the ſame Method which was deſign'd in King Charles's time, and that was to diſplace all Officers who had been in the Parliament or Oliver's Army, or were the Sons of any ſuch. The Duke of Ormond had had Directions to do this, but he made no Progreſs in it, under pretence of gaining time to find them out, for he foreſaw it was to make room for Papiſts.

When Tyrconnel had turn'd out two or three hundred Officers, he went for England to receive new Inſtructions, and took with him one Neagle, a cunning Iriſh Lawyer, afterwards knighted and made Secretary of War, whoſe Character however was ſuch, as the King would not at firſt ſee him, he being a furious inſolent Man, very obnoxious to the Engliſh, and even to the moſt generous Papiſts. The Lords Bellaſis and Powis were for having him ſent back to Ireland immediately: But the Queen, Father Petre, and the moſt bigotted Catholicks ſav'd him from that Diſgrace, tho' he was not now much hearken'd to. Tyrconnel's Deſign in coming over was to get the Lieutenancy, if poſſible; but things were not yet ripe enough for that. At a Conſult upon the Subject of the Lieutenancy of Ireland, he was mention'd with Tenderneſs. He was ſo hated and dreaded by the Engliſh, that it was not then thought ſeaſonable to bring him upon the Stage in that Quality: So Lord Bellaſis was propos'd, but being infirm, it was thought he would not be able to carry on their Deſigns; and till they could come to other Reſolutions, it was reſolv'd that the Earl of Clarendon ſhould be Lord Lieutenant, and Tyrconnel return Lieutenant-General of the Army, to be a Check on the other, who, tho' well diſpos'd, had it not in his power to do the Proteſtants Juſtice, and had the Court thought otherwiſe, they would not have ſent him. My Lord of of Sarum writes thus of it: "The King re-

" ſolv'd alſo to model Ireland, ſo as to make
" that Kingdom a Nurſery for his Army in Eng-
" land, and to be ſure at leaſt of an Army there,
" while his Deſigns were to go on more ſlowly
" in Britain. The Earl of Clarendon was de-
" clar'd Lord Lieutenant, but the Army was put
" under the Command of Talbot, who was made
" Earl of Tyrconnel, and he began very ſoon
" to model it a-new. The Archbiſhop of Ar-
" magh had continu'd Lord Chancellor of Ire-
" land, and was in all Points ſo compliant to
" the Court, that even his Religion came to be
" ſuſpected on that account; yet it ſeems he " was not thought thorough-pac'd, ſo Sir Charles
" Porter, who was a zealous Promoter of every " thing that the King propos'd, and being poor,
" was thought a Perſon fit to be made a Tool of,
" was declar'd Lord Chancellor of Ireland. To
" theſe the King ſaid he was reſolv'd to main" tain the Settlement of Ireland. They had " Authority to promiſe this, from Echard's King of his Word, " and to act purſuant to it;
" but as both the Earl of Clarendon and Porter
" were poor, it was hop'd that they would un-
" derſtand the King's Intentions, and ſee thro'
" thoſe Promiſes which were made only to lay
" Men aſleep, and that therefore they would " not inſiſt too much on them, nor purſue them
" too far.

" However, the Earl of Clarendon, upon his
" firſt coming over, gave publick and poſitive
" Aſſurances, that the King would maintain " their Act of Settlement. He did it very often
" and very ſolemnly, and proceeded accordingly.
" In the mean while the Earl of Tyrconnel went " on more roundly: He not only put Iriſh Pa-
" piſts in ſuch Poſts in the Army as became " void, but upon the ſlighteſt Pretences he broke
" the Engliſh Proteſtant Officers, to make room
" for the others: And in concluſion, without ſo
" much as pretending a Colour for it, he turn'd
" them all out. And now an Army paid by vir" tue of the Act of Settlement to ſecure it, was " wreſted out of legal Hands, and put into the " Hands of thoſe that were engag'd both in " Religion and Intereſt to deſtroy the Settle" ment, and thoſe concern'd in it, which was " too groſs a Violation of Law to be in any ſort
" palliated. So the Engliſh Proteſtants of Ire-
" land look'd on themſelves as at Mercy, ſince
" the Army was now made up of their Enemies.
" And all that the Lord Lieutenant, or the " Lord Chancellor could ſay, did not quiet their
" Fears."

They were indeed too well grounded to be blown away by good Words. The Tyranny of Tyrconnel, countenanc'd by his Maſter King James, is hardly to be parallel'd in any Hiſtory antient or modern. The Iriſh Papiſts in all parts of the Kingdom proceeded in their Stratagem to impeach Proteſtants for Plots; but theſe were generally ſo ridiculouſly contriv'd, and made up of ſuch palpable Contradictions and Incongruities, that they ſerv'd only to demonſtrate the Innocence of the Proteſtants, and the horrid Perjuries and implacable Malice of the Papiſts, who, failing in this, apply'd themſelves to other Courſes. Many of them went out Tories, and robb'd upon the Highway. They broke open Houſes, ſtole Cattle, kill'd them in the Field, and cut out the Tongues of Sheep alive, with innumerable Barbarities all acted upon the Engliſh; who were ſo diſmay'd and diſcourag'd with theſe Tragedies, that Thouſands deſerted the Kingdom and came for England, under as great Fears and Jealouſies as if there had been an open Rebellion. Five hundred together tranſported themſelves to Virginia, Carolina, Penſilvania, New-England, and the Weſt-Indies; which ſtill weakening the Engliſh Intereſt in Ireland, was extremely grateful to the Iriſh: who, to uſe Biſhop King's Words, "openly declar'd that they lik'd
" no Government but that of France; that they " would make the King as abſolute as the French
" King was: and they publickly and privately
" affirm'd with many Oaths, that they would in a
" ſhort time have the Eſtates and Churches of " the Proteſtants; and if they ſuffer'd them to " live, they would make them Hewers of Wood,
" and Drawers of Water: That Ireland muſt
" be a Catholick Country whatever it coſt, and " as for the Engliſh, they would make them as " poor Devils as when they firſt came into Ire-
" land."

A. D. 1686.

Biſhop King gives numberleſs Inſtances of Facts, to prove that this was the Deſign of King James and his Iriſh Miniſtry, and Tyrconnel's modelling the Army was alone a ſufficient Proof of it. In the room of my Lord Shannon, Captain Robert Fitzgerald, Captain Richard Coote, and Sir Oliver St. George, he put in Kerney, one of the Fellow Conſpirators with Pickering and Grove to murder King Charles II. Anderſon a mean Fellow, Sheldon a profeſs'd Papiſt, and one Graham. Tyrconnel himſelf, by the Name of Richard Talbot, was nam'd by Oates in his Narrative for this very Employment of modelling the Army: Upon which, many who before did not believe his Plot, gave credit to it now, ſaying, If Oates was an ill Evidence, he was a good Prophet; and his way of proceeding in his Model, was as barbarous and provoking as 'twas unjuſt and dangerous. See Biſhop King. " He exercis'd at the ſame time ſo much
" Falſhood and Barbarity that if the Army had " not been the beſt principled with Loyalty
" and Obedience of any in the world they " would have mutiny'd, or at leaſt diſpatch'd
" him. In the Morning he would take an Offi" cer into his Cloſet, and with all the Oaths,
" Curſes and Damnations, that were never wan-
" ting to him, he would profeſs Friendſhip and " Kindneſs, and promiſe him the Continuance " of his Commiſſion, and in the Afternoon ca-
" ſhier him with all the Contempt he could
" heap on him; nay, perhaps while he was
" thus careſſing of him, he had actually given a" way his Commiſſion. As for the Soldiers and " Troopers, his way with them was to march
" them from their uſual Quarters to ſome diſ-
" tant place, where he thought they were leaſt
" known, and would be put to greateſt Hardſhips;
" there he ſtripp'd them of their Clothes, for " which they had paid; and from the Troopers
" took their Horſes, Boots and Furniture, bought
" with their own Money, and ſet them to walk
" bare-footed 100 or 150 Miles to their Homes,
" or their Friends, if they had any. Sometimes
" he would promiſe them ſomething for their
" Horſes, but then he told them they muſt come
" to Dublin for it; and if any came to demand
" that ſmall Pittance, he contriv'd it ſo, that " they ſhould be oblig'd to wait till they had
" ſpent twice as much as they expected, and " moſt of them, after all, got nothing. In the " mean time, the new-rais'd Forces and Officers
" being put into Arms and Command to which " they were ſtrangers, into good Clothes, and
" mounted on Horſes for which others had paid,
" behav'd themſelves with all the Inſolence
" common to ſuch ſort of Men when unworthily
" advanc'd. They every where inſulted over
" the Engliſh, and had their Mouths continually
" full of Oaths, Curſes, and Imprecations a-" gainſt them. They rail'd on them, and gave " them

A. D. 1686.

" them all the opprobrious Names they could ; " and if any chaſtiſed them for their Saucineſs, " tho' ever ſo much provok'd, they had the " Judges and Juries on their ſide. They might " kill whom they pleas'd without fear of Law, " as appear'd from Capt. Nangle's murthering " his disbanded Officer in the Streets of Dublin ; " but if any kill'd or hurt them, they were ſure " to ſuffer, as Captain Aſton found to his Coſt, " who was hang'd for killing a Papiſt, upon his " abuſing the Captain's Wife in the Street."

Let it not be pretended that King James knew nothing of this Tyranny and Cruelty. Can any one ſuppoſe that he was unacquainted with the Character of Tyrconnel, or that he did not like it from the Semblance it had with his own ?

What little Regard the Lieutenant-General had for the Lord-Lieutenant, appears from the following Story.

The Earl of Clarendon going to Church upon a Sunday Morning, perceiv'd an Iriſh Officer he never ſaw before, commanding the Guard of Battle-Axes that attended his Perſon, which exceedingly ſurpriz'd him. He ſtopp'd and demanded who he was, and who put him there. The Iriſhman was as much frighted as the Lord Lieutenant was diſturb'd ; but with ſome difficulty, and with broken Expreſſions, occaſion'd by Fear, he ſaid, He was a Captain put in by the Lord Tyrconnel. The Earl of Clarendon ask'd when ? The Fellow reply'd, This Morning. Lord Clarendon bid his Attendants call the former Captain, and diſmiſs'd Tyrconnel's, whom he ſent for the next day, and queſtion'd him for this Action. Tyrconnel reply'd, I did nothing but by the King's Orders. To which the Lord Lieutenant return'd Anſwer, While his Majeſty intruſts me with the Government, I will not be diſpos'd by the Lieutenant-General. Complaints on both ſides were made to the King, and ſo it ended.

A Conſult of the Papiſts at the Savoy.

Some time after Tyrconnel went to England to aſſiſt at a general Meeting of the Catholicks, which was held at the Savoy, in order to conſult what Method was fitteſt to be purſu'd for the Promotion of the Catholick Cauſe. They were afraid of the King's Weakneſs or Timorouſneſs. They were ſenſible that he advanc'd in Years, and thought their carrying the main Point, the changing Religion, to be ſo impracticable, that ſome of them were for moving the King to procure an Act of Parliament for the Security of their Eſtates, and only Liberty for Prieſts in their own private Houſes, and to be exempted from all Employments. Father Petre oppos'd this as too terreſtrial, and founded upon too anxious a Solicitude for the Preſervation of their ſecular Intereſts. Others of the Papiſts were for addreſſing the King to have Liberty to ſell their Eſtates, and that his Majeſty would intercede with the French King to provide for them in his Dominions. At laſt it was agreed to lay both theſe Propoſals before his Majeſty, and ſome of their number to receive his Anſwer, which was, That he had, before their Deſires came to him, often thought of them, and had provided a Sanctuary and Retreat for them in Ireland, if all thoſe Endeavours ſhould be blaſted in England, which he had made for their Security, and of whoſe Succeſs he had not yet reaſon to deſpair. This Encouragement to the Papiſts in England was attended with the moſt zealous Expreſſions of his ardent Love to the Catholick Church, for which he ſaid he was ready to be a Martyr. Then freſh Conſults were ſet on foot, relating to the Government of Ireland, which, by accident, came to the knowledge of the Earl of Rocheſter Lord-Treaſurer, who immediately acquainted the King with it, and he abſolutely deny'd there was any Intention of changing the chief Governor, but, on the contrary, aſſur'd him of his great Satisfaction in the Lord-Lieutenant there. Within a few days the Earl of Rocheſter receiv'd the ſame Intimations from his Brother Clarendon, which he inform'd the King of, who diſown'd the whole Matter as poſitively as before ; and to remove the Jealouſies of the Lord-Lieutenant, wrote a Letter to him with his own Hand, aſſuring him there were yet no Thoughts, and he believ'd never would be in him, whilſt both liv'd, to remove him from the Government of Ireland. Notwithſtanding which, the Papiſts in Ireland confidently affirm'd, that the day before the King wrote the Letter, he had given Aſſurances to Father Petre, that Tyrconnel ſhould be Lord Lieutenant. This is Echard's King of his Word ; and it was not long before the King himſelf, in Council, pretended, tho' he had before reſolv'd, to ask their Advice, who was fit to be plac'd in the Government of Ireland, and himſelf at laſt nam'd Tyrconnel, who was oppos'd by all but Sunderland. Powis, whom the King had once, in a Paſſion, call'd both a Coward and a Fool, was conſider'd as a Perſon of moderate Carriage, and being naturally covetous, his Friends adviſ'd him to agree with Sunderland, as the Lord Berkley did with the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, and the Bargain was made for 4000 l. a Year. But whatever the bottom of the Deſign was, Sunderland never forſook Tyrconnel at the Council-Board ; and ſome conjectur'd, that having acquained the King of his Bargain with Powis, the King made Tyrconnel agree to the ſame. The News of his being preferr'd to the Lieutenancy of Ireland, threw all the Proteſtants there into the moſt terrible Conſternation. Every one lamented the deplorable Condition they were fallen into ; almoſt all that could, deſerted the Kingdom. Every thing diſcover'd a gloomy and melancholly Proſpect. At laſt he arrives, and the Lord Clarendon deliver'd up the Sword to him at the Archbiſhop of Dublin's Palace, where he made a Speech, wherein, among other things, he ſaid, We of the Church of England can brag, that when Rebellion overſpread the three Kingdoms, not one orthodox Member of our Church was engag'd againſt the Crown. His Lordſhip would not allow the Archbiſhop of York to be Orthodox, for he did engage againſt the Crown. But this occaſion of Bragging has occaſion'd the frequent printing of this Speech, which has nothing in it more remarkable.

State-Tracts, Vol. III. p. 635.

In February 168⅚.

The Duke of Ormond, the Lords Juſtices, and the Earl of Clarendon, by their wiſe Adminiſtration, had brought the Affairs of Ireland into a good Method of Management, till the Ruffian Tyrconnel had the Sword put into his Hands ; Trade encreas'd, Lands were improv'd, and Ireland was a flouriſhing Kingdom, as may be ſeen by the State of the Revenue for the Years

Which not only maintain'd the Army and Civil Liſt, but enabled that Government to make Remittances to England to the Value of 100000 l per Ann. But this fair Proſpect darken'd on Tyrconnel's being made chief Governor. The thriving Inhabitants fled to England, Scotland, the Iſle of Man, and America. For there was nothing but Ruin, Slavery and Death, to be expected from his intolerable Tyranny. Sir Charles

A. D. 1686. Charles Porter was turn'd out, and the Seal given to one Fitton, whom King James afterwards made a Lord. He had been detected of Forgery, not only at Weſtminſter and Cheſter, but alſo fin'd by the Houſe of Lords. This vile Fellow was taken out of Goal, and ſet on the higheſt Court of the Kingdom to keep the King's Conſcience. He did not ſtick to ſay publickly, that all the Proteſtants were Rogues, and amongſt 40000 there was not one who was not a Traytor, a Rebel and a Villain. One Nugent, the Son of an attainted Popiſh Rebel, was made Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench. Rice, a Gameſter and Sharper, was made Lord Chief Baron. Beggarly Kerns were made Juſtices of the Peace, and Sheriffs; one of them, Turlogh Donelly, Sheriff of Tyrone, liſted himſelf for a Soldier, to avoid paying a Debt of 16 l. upon Bond. Having fill'd the Courts of Juſtice with proper Inſtruments, Tyrconnel took away the Charter of Dublin, and the other Corporations in Ireland. The firſt Proclamation he iſſu'd was in breach of an Act of Parliament to take off the Duty upon Iron, to encourage the Importation of Spaniſh Iron, in hopes that Silver would come along with it; which was ſo ill lik'd in England, that the King put forth a contrary Proclamation, and Tyrconnel's Folly was ſo much condemn'd in Council, that Lord Bellaſis ſwore, That Fellow in Ireland is Fool and Madman enough to ruin ten Kingdoms. Father Petre reprimanded him for it in a Letter, and ſaid, If you do not act with greater Caution, it will be impoſſible for the King to preſerve you in that Government.

1687.

A. D. 1687. TYranny being thus eſtabliſh'd in Scotland and Ireland under Perth, Melfort, Tyrconnel, and the Petty-Tyrants, King James the more ſtrenuouſly endeavour'd its Eſtabliſhment in England; the Diſpenſing Power had been declar'd to be a Part of our Law, by hireling Judges in Weſtminſter-Hall, and in the Exerciſe of it, the King declar'd to the Privy-Council, he reſolv'd to iſſue out his Declaration for a general Liberty of Conſcience to all Perſons, which Declaration came forth the 25th of April, and contain'd, among other things, That it had been a long time his conſtant Senſe and Opinion, That Conſcience ought not to be reſtrain'd, nor People forc'd in Matters of mere Religion, and that it was contrary to his Inclination, as he thought it to be the Diſintereſt of the Government, by ſpoiling Trade, and depopulating Countries, &c. Coke's Reflection upon this is not amiſs: "Sure "no Power ever acted ſo in extremes, yet his "Actions ſo diametrically oppoſite to his Pro-"feſſion. Here you ſee a jeſuited Prince plead-"ing for Liberty of Conſcience, to the breaking "down the Laws which before he had ſo often "profeſs'd to maintain, and for ſuch a ſort of "Men whom but a little before he had ſlaugh-"ter'd, baniſh'd, and impriſon'd, as if he had "deſign'd to extirpate the whole Race of them. "If to reconcile theſe to Truth or Reality be "not as great a Miracle as is in any of the Po-"piſh Legends, I'll believe them all, and be "reconcil'd to the Catholick Church how incon-"ſiſtent ſoever the Terms be."

The general Toleration.

Echard's Hiſtory and Reflection upon it are here falſe and malicious to Aſtoniſhment. I am ſenſible of the Reſpect a Writer owes to his Readers, and that he ought no more to appear in paſſion before them, than before his Superiors; but one cannot, without Indignation, ſee a Trifler inſult great Bodies of ſober religious Men, and one in whoſe Writings, with regard to Religion, there is a Coldneſs, Deadneſs, and Inſenſibility enough to quench all Fervour in a devout Mind, abuſe with frigid Raillery Men of Conſcience and Piety. He ſays the Diſſenters receiv'd this Declaration with Joy and Satisfaction: They were ſo tranſported, that they caught greedily at the Bait, without the leaſt diſcerning the Hook in it; which is directly contrary to the Truth. Coke abovemention'd ſays, the Diſſenters did both dread and deteſt it, of his knowledge, and I can ſay the ſame of mine. Biſhop Burnet tells us, The wiſer Men among the Diſſenters ſaw thro' all this, and perceiv'd the Deſign of the Papiſts was now to ſet on the Diſſenters againſt the Church. Tho' they return'd to their Conventicles, yet they had a juſt Jealouſy of the ill Deſigns that lay hid under all this ſudden Grace and Kindneſs. Again, Some few of the hotter Diſſenters anſwer'd the Expectations of the Court; angry Speeches and virulent Books were publiſh'd, yet theſe were diſ-ſy'd as to own'd by the wiſer Men amongſt them. Echard then, with very mean Malice, repeats Paragraphs in ſome of their Addreſſes, and reflects particularly on the late Learned and Reverend Mr. Alſop of Weſtminſter, who having had a Son in Monmouth's Buſineſs, or ſome other ſuch Peril, he was pardon'd by King James, and it is excuſable, if his Son's Life, and his own Liberty, produc'd ſome lively Expreſſions of Gratitude in a generous Mind. Why could not Echard have told us as my Lord of Sarum does? Some of theſe Addreſſes were penn'd by Perſons whom the Court had gain'd; few concurr'd in them, and the Perſons that brought them up were mean and inconſiderable. Why could not ſome ſuch Thoughts as theſe, taken from Dr. Welwood, have enter'd into the Archdeacon's Head?

Conduct of the Diſſenters juſtified as to the Addreſſes.

"The Diſſenters were not ſo fond of Perſe-"cution and ill Uſage, as to refuſe a Liberty "that was frankly offer'd them, which neither "their Prayers nor Tears could obtain before; "nor did they think it good Manners to enquire "too narrowly how that Liberty came about, "as long as they were ſhelter'd thereby from "the Oppreſſions they lay under."

Dr. Calamy writes of it thus: "As thankful "as they were for their Eaſe and Liberty, they "were fearful of the Iſſue:" Echard told us, they did not in the leaſt diſcern it; "neither can "any Number of them, of any Conſideration, "be charg'd with hazarding the publick Safety, "by falling in with the Meaſures of the Court, "of which they had as great a dread as their "Neighbours. I am not the Perſon that would "undertake to vindicate all the Addreſſes which "were made by the Diſſenters after their Li-"berty, but I ſhould think their Brethren of the "Church of England ſhould tread ſoftly when "they lay them to their Charge, conſidering "that ſome of the Churchmen concurr'd with "King James to over-turn the legal Eſtabliſh-"ment."

Five of the Biſhops, Crew of Durham, Barlow of Lincoln, Cartwright of Cheſter, Wood of Litchfield and Coventry, and Watſon of St. David's, prevail'd on ſome of their Clergy to ſign Addreſſes; but Parker Biſhop of Oxford was not ſo ſucceſsful, his Clergy refuſing to ſign one. In the mean time the King continu'd increaſing his Army, and the Soldiers grew intolerably inſolent. The Officers whenever they pleas'd pretended to be exempt from the Civil Power; and tho' the King was in perfect Peace, yet an old obſolete Act of Parliament that made it Death for Soldiers to deſert their Colours, was now made to extend to the new-rais'd Army on Hounſlow-Heath. And becauſe the worthy Recorder of London, Sir John Holt, would not expound that Law according to the King's Decree, he was put out, and Sir Bartholomew Shower, a Renegado Presbyterian, was put in his Place. Sir Edward Herbert was alſo remov'd from being Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, to make room for Sir Robert Wright to hang a Soldier on that obſolete Statute. Wythens, who had charg'd himſelf with the Guilt of ſo much Blood in the laſt and this Reign, was turn'd out, and Sir Richard Allibone, an angry Papiſt, put in his Place on the King's-Bench. Milton's Brother Chriſtopher, whom he ſcorn'd even to take notice of, was remov'd from the Exchequer to the ſame Court of King's-Bench.

Parliament.

Echard ſpeaks ſtill of the Parliament, as if it had been ſuch a Senate as the two laſt Parliaments at Oxford and Weſtminſter; there were great Expectations to ſee them meet. My Lord of Salisbury ſays, It would not have been eaſy in all England to have found 500 Men ſo weak, ſo poor, and ſo devoted to the Court. Richeſt and Wiſeſt, ſays Echard. The King diſſolv'd them the 2d of July, and then he and his Creatures ſet themſelves to work, by Cloſettings, Promiſes, and Threats, by Quo-Warranto's, and altering Magiſtrates and Officers, indeed by all the Arts and Artifices they could think of, to get the People to chuſe ſuch Members for the next Parliament, as would take off the Penal Laws and Teſt.

Pen the Quaker ſent to the Prince of Orange.

Pen the Quaker was ſent to Holland to perſuade the Prince of Orange to come into the King's Meaſures concerning it. He had two or three long Audiences of his Highneſs, who readily conſented to a Toleration of Popery, as well as of the Diſſenters, provided it were propos'd and paſs'd in Parliament; and he promis'd his Aſſiſtance, if there was need of it, to get it to paſs: But for the Teſts, he would enter into no Treaty about them. He ſaid it was a plain betraying the Security of the Proteſtant Religion to give them up.

Pope's Nuntio's Audience.

The Day after the Diſſolution of the Parliament, the Pope's Nuntio Seignor Dada had a publick Reception at Windſor. He was very civil in all his Deportment, but it did not appear that he was a Man of great Depth, nor had he Power to do much. It was by Law High-Treaſon for any one to aſſume the Character of the Pope's Nuntio, yet was he admitted to Audience with more than ordinary Ceremony and Magnificence. But the People could not help ſhewing their Indignation at ſeeing him in his Pontificalibus, preceded by a Croſs-Bearer, and a Herd of Prieſts and Monks in their Habits. His Grace the Duke of Somerſet, as illuſtrious for his Love to his Country, as for his high Birth and Rank, being then the Lord of the Bed-Chamber in waiting, the King order'd him to attend the Nuntio at his Audience. But his Grace deſir'd his Majeſty to excuſe him from an Office which the Laws of the Land made criminal. The King reply'd, Don't you know I am above the Law? His Grace anſwer'd, If the King is, I am not. The King reiterated his Orders; and my Lord Duke perſiſting in his Denial, his Majeſty told him in a Paſſion, I will trouble you no more with any Commands, and therefore I expect you will reſign your Places of Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber and Colonel of Dragoons. To which the Duke was obedient, without the leaſt Concern, as being content to preſerve his Conſcience and Honour, while he loſt nothing but the King's Favour. The Duke of Graſton obey'd that Command which the Duke of Somerſet refus'd. A Court-Biſhop was leſs ſcrupulous, and made part of the Nuntio's Train; tho' his Coachman, a ſturdy Proteſtant, refus'd to drive him: of which the Biſhop might have been aſham'd, if he had had any ſhame in him. The Nuntio wanted an Opportunity to appear publickly at London, and therefore it was projected that he ſhould be invited to come with the King himſelf to dine in Guild-Hall with the Lord-Mayor, and he was accordingly receiv'd very ceremoniouſly at Temple-Bar by Sir John Parſons and Sir Baſil Firebraſs, the two Sheriffs, both ſtaunch Churchmen: Which I ſhould not have taken notice of, if Echard had not remember'd that Sir John Shorter the Lord-Mayor was a profeſs d Diſſenter. The King knighted the two Aldermen who were deputed to make this Invitation, Sir John Bawdon and Sir William Aſhurſt, who were both Diſſenters. Jenour, who was then Recorder, and the Mouth of the Deputation, was order'd to invite the Princeſs Anne and Prince George of Denmark. The Princeſs pretended Indiſpoſition, but it is thought it was only a pretence to avoid being ſeen with the Nuntio; and I remember it was then reported, that Jenour, that Blunderer and Bigot, ſhould ſay to the Princeſs, If your Royal Highneſs cannot come yourſelf, will you pleaſe to let the Prince come? To which her Royal Highneſs anſwer'd, The Prince will do what he thinks fit; which was alſo to avoid giving any Countenance to Dada.

Jenour's Blunder.

Duke of Somerſet in Diſgrace about him.

There were great Hopes that thoſe open avow'd Acts of Arbitrary Power, and in favour of Popery, would have ſo united all Britiſh Proteſtants, that we ſhould never more have heard of Fanaticiſm, and Conventicles, and Schiſm, and Forty-one, and the Jargon in the Hiſtory of the Rebellion, and the Archdeacon's Hiſtory. We were promis'd it by the Marquis of Halliſax in his Declaration in behalf of the Church Party, an admirable Piece equally rational, nervous, elegant and polite. He declares, That all their former Haughtineſs was for ever extinguiſh'd, and that the Spirit of Perſecution was turn'd into a Spirit of Peace, Charity, and Condeſcenſion; that the Church of England was convinc'd of its Error in being ſevere to them, and all thinking Men were come to a general Agreement, no more to cut ourſelves off from the Proteſtants abroad, but rather enlarge the Foundations upon which we are to build our Defences againſt the common Enemy.

Baſe Practices to get a Parliament.

We have mention'd the Tricks and Contrivances of the Court to procure ſuch a Parliament as would enter into the King's Meaſures, which, and the King's Religion, were the Courtiers Cant at this time. The Judges were directed to feel the Pulſe of the Gentry in their Circuits, commiſſion'd in the Militia, or in the Peace, and where they found any averſe to thoſe Meaſures to turn them out of all Offices and Employments: The Practices of this kind were ſo mean and unwarrantable, that a Man, and much more a King, of any Spirit and Honour would have ſcorn'd it. 'Tis ſaid in a Memorial ſent to the Prince of Orange, "His Majeſty has perſonally "ſollicited and attack'd ſo many of the Electors "for Parliament by his Frowns and Smiles in "ſecret to accept of ſuch for their Deputies in "Parliament as will comply with his Intention, "that his cloſetting Electors is become a By-word "among People; he has made them conſent to "be barr'd of their Freedom in electing for Par-"liament, and in voting therein if they be cho "ſen, to be a Teſt of their Fitneſs to hold their "Offices or Employments of Profit and Truſt, "and to have a Place in the Magiſtracy." Dr. Welwood makes this Obſervation upon it in a Diſcourſe about calling a new Parliament in the Year

A. D. 1687.

Year 1690. " What woful Breaches have been " made of this our native Privilege, we have " had too many Experiences in the laſt Reigns, " when Letters, Promiſes, and Threats from " Court were made uſe of to promote Elections, " and when few durſt venture to ſerve their " Country, if not recommended by thoſe at " the Helm. But in order to ſet our preſent Con- " dition in a better Light, it may be perhaps not " amiſs to give a Letter communicated to me " from a noble Perſon, to whom it was wri[t]ten " in King James's Reign, by a great Miniſter " of State, upon a Deſign of calling King " James's Parliament."

My Lord,

It being his Majeſty's Royal Intention to render all his Subjects, of whatever Perſuaſion in Religion, happy and eaſy under his Government, and for that great End to call a Parliament to meet at Weſtminſter on ——— next; it is expected of your Lordſhip, and I am commanded by his Majeſty to acquaint you, that it is his Pleaſure you make uſe of your Intereſt in the County of ——— for getting, [here are two Perſons nam'd] duely Elected Knights of the ſaid County in the enſuing Parliament, as Perſons of whoſe Loyalty and good Affection his Majeſty has receiv'd ſufficient Information. And I am to aſſure your Lordſhip, that as your hearty Compliance herein will be eſteem'd ſingular good Service done to his Majeſty, and incline him to put ſome Mark of his Favour upon you for ſo doing; ſo a Neglect herein will be look'd upon by his Majeſty with Diſpleaſure, which will be more than enough to ruin you in the preſent Circumſtances your Lordſhip is in. I put no Doubt in your Lordſhip's hearty Compliance in this Matter, and am,

My Lord,

Your Lordſhip's Humble Servant.

Welwood thinks very juſtly upon it. I queſtion after all, whether the Parliament, which King James was thus labouring to model, would have anſwer'd his Expectation, had they come to ſit, for Men's Eyes were open'd more and more every day, and the noble Principles of Engliſh Liberty began to kindle afreſh in the Nation. He proceeds, " Tho' the Diſſenters who might be " choſen into Parliament upon this new Model, " would probably have made Terms for them- " ſelves to prevent their falling under any fu- " ture Perſecution; yet being as averſe to Po- " pery as any others whatſoever, it is not to be " imagin'd that they would have unhing'd the " Conſtitution of England upon that Conſidera- " tion, to enable the Roman Catholicks to break " in upon the eſtabliſh'd national Church, which " in the End might have inevitably ruin'd both " it and themſelves." And if one might gueſs at the Sentiments and Intentions of the Electors all over England, by the Characters of the four Citizens that were talk'd of for London, Sir Robert Clayton, William Love Eſq; Sir John Eyles, and Sir John Bawdon, it is more than probable that King James's intended Parliament would have been of the Opinion of Mr. Love before-mention'd, who, when a Member, told the Houſe of Commons, That tho' he was a Diſſenter he did not deſire any Favour for themſelves, if it was to make way for the favouring of Papiſts.

King James's Miſtake as to a Parliament.

A little before this there fell out an Accident which help'd mightily to buoy up the ſinking Spirits of the Nation, and which was occaſion'd by the forward Zeal of ſome about the King, contrary to their Intentions. While the Project was going on to take off the Penal Laws and Teſts, King James was ſet upon making a Trial of the Inclinations of the Prince and Princeſs of Orange in that Matter; their Highneſſes had look'd on with a ſilent Regret, and obſerv'd all the irregular Steps that were making in England. They were unwilling to publiſh their Opinion of them, ſince they knew it could not but be diſpleaſing to King James. To know the Mind of the Prince and Princeſs concerning the Teſt and Penal Laws was a thing the moſt deſir'd by the Proteſtants; but it would hardly have been poſſible for them to come to this Knowledge, if King James himſelf had not help'd them to it.

There was one Mr. James Stewart a Lawyer, afterwards Sir James, who had given over the Practice of the Law, becauſe all that were admitted to the Bar in Scotland were requir'd to renounce the Covenant, which he would not do; this recommended him to the Confidence of the Covenanters, who made great uſe of him, and truſted him entirely. The King had long conſider'd him as the chief Manager of all the Deſigns againſt him, more particularly of Argyle's, and one of Pen's Errands to Holland was to engage him to come over, upon Promiſe not only of Pardon, but Favour, which was made good to him; before he croſs'd the Seas he came to the Prince of Orange, and aſſur'd him of an inviolable Fidelity to him, and to the common Intereſts of Religion and Liberty. He had been often with Penſioner Fagel, and had a great meaſure of his Confidence. Upon his coming to Court he was careſs'd to a degree that amaz'd all who knew him. He either believ'd the King was ſincere in the Profeſſions he made, that he deſign'd only a full Liberty of Conſcience, or he thought that it became a Man who had been ſo long in Diſgrace not to ſhew any Jealouſies at firſt, when the King was ſo gracious to him. He undertook to do all that lay in his power to advance his Majeſty's Deſigns in Scotland, and to repreſent his Intentions ſo at the Hague, as might incline the Prince to a better Opinion of them, which he endeavour'd to do in ſeveral Letters to the Penſioner, and preſs'd him vehemently in the King's Name, and by his Direction to perſuade the Prince to concur with the King in procuring the Laws to be repeal'd. He laid before him the inconſiderable Number of the Papiſts, ſo that there was no reaſon to apprehend much from them; he alſo enlarg'd on the Severities which the Penal Laws had brought on the Diſſenters, which Laws the King was reſolv'd ſhould not be repeal'd, unleſs the Teſts were taken away with them, and the refuſing to conſent to this, might at another time bring them under another ſevere Proſecution. Stewart, after he had witten many Letters to this purpoſe without receiving any Anſwers, try'd if he could ſerve the King in Scotland with more Succeſs than it ſeem'd he was like to have at the Hague; but he found there that his old Friends were much alienated from him, looking on him as a Perſon entirely gain'd by the Court.

Mr. Stewart brought over from Holland by Pen.

Stewart writes to Penſioner Fagel about the Teſt.

Penſioner Fagel laid all his Letters before the Prince, they were alſo brought to Dr. Burnet, then marry'd and naturaliz'd in Holland. The Prince thought upon this, that a full Anſwer made by Fagel in ſuch a manner, as that it might be publiſh'd as a Declaration of his Intentions, would in many reſpects be a Service to him, eſpecially in Popiſh Courts, which were on civil Accounts inclin'd to an Alliance againſt France, but were now poſſeſs'd with an Opinion of the Prince, and of his Party in England, as deſigning nothing but the Ruin and Extirpation tirpation of all the Papiſts in thoſe Kingdoms; ſo the Penſioner wrote a long Letter in French to Stewart, and Dr. Burnet put it into Engliſh.

Fagel's Letter about it to Stewart.

He began it with great Aſſurances of the Prince and Princeſs's Duty to the King. They were both of them much againſt all Perſecution on the account of Religion, they freely conſented to the covering Papiſts from the Severities of the Laws made againſt them on the account of their Religion, and alſo that they might have the free Exerciſe of it in private, they alſo conſented to grant a full Liberty to Diſſenters; but they could not conſent to the Repeal of thoſe Laws that tended only to the Security of the Proteſtant Religion; ſuch as thoſe concerning the Teſts, which imported no Puniſhment, but only an Incapacity of being in publick Employments, which could not be complain'd of as great Severities. This was a Caution obſerv'd in all Nations, and was now neceſſary, both for ſecuring the publick Peace and the eſtabliſh'd Religion. If the Numbers of the Papiſts were ſo ſmall as to make them inconſiderable, then it was not reaſonable to make ſuch a Change for the ſake of a few; and if thoſe few that pretended to publick Employments would do all their own Party ſo great a Prejudice, as not to ſuffer the King to be content with the Repeal of the Penal Laws, unleſs they could get into the Offices of Truſt, then their Ambition was only to be blam'd, if the Offers now made were not accepted.

The Letter was carry'd by Stewart to the King, who brought it to the Cabinet Council, but nothing follow'd upon it: The King order'd Stewart to write back, He would either have all or nothing. It is ſaid the main Body of the Papiſts were for what was offer'd, that the Emperor of Germany was fully ſatisfy'd with it, and promis'd to uſe his Intereſt at Rome to get the Pope to write to the King to accept of this as as a Step to the Teſt; but the Jeſuits and the French Embaſſador were for Extremities, and the King was in all Points govern'd by them.

Father Petre's ill Conduct chaſtiz'd.

Father Petre affected great Modeſty, when it was propos'd to make him a Privy Counſellor, and Lord Sunderland ſeem'd to meet with much Difficulty in prevailing with him to conſent to it. It was given out, that the King reſolv'd to obtain a Cardinal's Cap for him, and make him Archbiſhop of York. If this Pope continued firm in his Reſolution againſt it, it was hoped the next would be more complying. This Jeſuit was very officious in ſerving the King which way he pleas'd, whether to the Prejudice of Proteſtant or Papiſt; and the Colony of Maryland being under a Popiſh Proprietor, Lord Baltimore, who conſidering the Intereſt of his Propriety more than that of the Prieſts, was very kind to his Proteſtant Tenants; it was reſolv'd, to take it into the King's hands, and put the Papiſts there, in Poſſeſſion of the Government. In order to this, Petre was very earneſt with his Lordſhip to part with it for a Sum of Money: and one time in Diſcourſe with him about it, uſing ſome hard Words, which his young Son, the late Lord Baltimore, took to be an Affront to his Father, he ran immediately to the Jeſuit, pull'd off his Cap or Wig, and flung it into the Fire, which frighted this Petre ſo heartily, that he made off as faſt as he could, and never again mention'd Maryland to the Lord Baltimore.

Popiſh Biſhops confirm.

There was then a Faction between the ſecular Prieſts and the Jeſuits, which was ſometimes near breaking out into a Rupture; but the King was ſo partial to the Jeſuits, that the Prieſts found they could maintain no Competition with them. Biſhop Leybourn, and three other Biſhops, who had been conſecrated in England, were ordered to make a Progreſs all over the Kingdom, confirming and doing other epiſcopal Offices wherever they came, and great Numbers gather'd about them.

A. D. 1687.

The Confidence of the Jeſuits.

The Jeſuits thought all was ſure, and that their Scheme was ſo well laid, it could not miſcarry, as appear'd by the Behaviour of their contemptible Tool Albeville, at the Hague. It is fit to give ſome Account of that miſerable Wretch: he was an Iriſh Man, his true Name White, and he had been long a Spy for the Spaniards, who not paying his Appointments well, he accepted of the Title of Marquiſs d'Albeville from them, in part of Payment. He then turned to the French, who paid their Spies and Emiſſaries more punctually; Biſhop Burnet tells us, he was a moſt deſpicable ridiculous Creature, who had not the Appearances either of Decency or Truth. Such Inſtruments as theſe were made uſe of, by both King Charles and King James; and the Work they had to do, would not admit of better.

Albeville's Character.

Lord Sunderland had a vaſt Genius, but his Conſcience was of a like Extent, and by thoſe Qualifications, he became ſo intimate a Favourite, that nothing could be got at Court, but by his Intereſt, and when the King was told, he got all the Money, his Anſwer was, he deſerves it. Nay, his Intereſt at laſt was become ſo remarkable, that his Majeſty himſelf would ask, when any Grant was given, Have they ſpoke with Sunderland? Fagel's Letter was communicated to him and Melfort, by Stewart, and we ſhall ſee preſently, how complying both his Conſcience and his Honou was in that Affair.

Lord Sunderland's.

Chudleigh, who was the Engliſh Envoy in Holland at this King's Acceſſion to the Throne, behav'd ſo inſolently to the Prince of Orange, that he would not ſee him, and his Succeſſor, Skelton, manag'd Matters with ſo little Senſe, and ſuch an univerſal Diſlike, that the King thought fit to ſend him to France, where there was little to do, Barillon the French Ambaſſador at London, having all that Buſineſs in his hands.

Albeville was ſuch a Fool, that he did nor ſtick to ſpeak out, what was not fit to be ſpoken, tho' he had known it to be true. One day, when the Prince of Orange was talking of the King's Promiſes, and the Oath he had taken to maintain the Laws, and the eſtabliſh'd Church; inſtead of pretending, the King had ſtill kept his Word, this blundering Iriſhman ſaid, Kings muſt upon ſome Occaſions forget their Promiſes. And when the Prince ſaid, the King ought to have more Regard for the Church of England, which was the main Body of the Nation; Albeville reply'd, The Body you call the Church of England, will not have a Being two Years to an end. He thus talk'd too plainly and too openly, and at the ſame time behav'd in all other Reſpects ſo poorly, that he became the Jeſt of the Hague. The Foreign Miniſters, Monſ. d'Avaux the French Ambaſſador not excepted, did not know how to excuſe or bear with his Weakneſs, which appear'd on all Occaſions, and in all Companies.

Albeville juſtifies the King's forſwearing himſelf.

What he wrote to England upon his firſt Audiences in Holland, was not known; but it was ſoon ſpread about the Kingdom, that the Prince and Princeſs had now conſented to the Repeal of the Teſts, as well as of the Penal Laws. His Highneſs, to prevent the ill effects which might follow on ſuch Reports, gave Orders to print the Penſioner's Letter to Stewart, which was ſent to all Parts of England, and received with univerſal Joy.

Fagel's Letter printed by the Prince of Orange's Order.

The Diſſenters ſaw themſelves now ſafe in the Prince's Intention towards them. The Church-Party was confirm'd in their Zeal for maintaining the Teſts; and the Lay-Papiſts ſeem'd alſo

A. D. 1687. alſo to be ſo well pleas'd with it, that they complain'd of thoſe ambitious Prieſts and hungry Courtiers, who were reſolv'd, rather than lay down their Aſpirings and other Projects, to leave them ſtill expos'd to the Severities of the Law, tho' a Freedom from theſe was now offered them. But it was not eaſy to judge, whether this was ſincerely meant by them, or whether it was only a popular Art to recommend themſelves under ſuch a moderate Appearance. The Court ſaw the Hurt this Letter did them, and hop'd at firſt to have ſtifled it by calling it an Impoſture. This is Biſhop Burnet's Account of it, and the Way they took to ſtifle it was a Piece of impudent Falſhood, A. of N-t. which the greateſt Chicaneur in the Kingdom might have been aſhamed of; for there was a Pamphlet publiſh'd, intitled, Parliamentum Pacificum, another healing Parliament being expected to take off the Penal Laws, wherein it was affirmed, that Penſioner Fagel's Letter was not only ſuppoſitious, but alſo that the Author miſrepreſented the Sentiments of the Prince and Princeſs of Orange. This Pamphlet with this ſtaring Lye in it, was licens'd by the Earl of Sunderland principal Secretary of State, and Preſident of the Council; upon which, Mr. Fagel wrote a Letter to Albeville, which he cauſed to be printed with ſome of Stewart's Letters. In that to Albeville, the Penſioner tells him, His Majeſty and all the Court knew the Letter to be genuine; That Albeville knew Fagel had own'd it to him; That the Earl of Sunderland knew as well as any body, that the Letter to Stewart was not ſuppoſititious; That Albeville himſelf knew and had often own'd it; That their Highneſſes, and particularly Her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs, had ſeveral times told the Envoy their Opinion concerning the Teſt, as he had expreſt it in the Letter to Stewart: notwithſtanding all which, the Court got a Pamphleteer to aver 'twas an Impoſture, and obliged Mr. Stewart to deny that he ever wrote to Mr. Fagel, tho the latter had the Originals of his Letters by him.

Earl of Sunderland licenſes what he knew to be falſe.

Fr. Hiſt. Rev. p. 120. After this unſucceſsful Attempt, the King took a large Progreſs, and one of his Cloſet Attendants was William Pen the Quaker. His Intention was ſaid to be to view Portſmouth and other Ports and Harbours, but the ſecret Deſign was to influence and prepare the Electors of every Corporation thro' which he paſt, to make ſuch a Choice of Members for the next Parliament, as would anſwer his Ends. The People receiv'd him every where with Shouts and Acclamations, and dutiful Acknowledgements were paid him at Portſmouth, Bath, Glouceſter, Worceſter, Ludlow, Shrewsbury, Cheſter, where Tyrconnel met him from Ireland, and receiv'd Encouragement to go on in the Project of deſtroying the Proteſtants in that Kingdom.

His Majeſty was receiv'd in the ſame manner at Newport, Litchfield, Coventry, Banbury and Wincheſter; and I think we ſhould not forget that he kill'd a Dog at Banbury, that Action being celebrated in the State-Poems. But theſe Acclamations and Shouts did him more miſchief than the free Speeches of thoſe that dreaded and hated his Meaſures. He thought they proceeded from the Heart, whereas they were the Breath of the Multitude; and he found by ſad Experience ſoon after, that he depended upon them to his ruin——as he might have foreſeen, if his Foreſight had been but equal to his Zeal: For having on Sunday, December 11, declar'd in Council, that he would have no Lord-Lieutenants, nor Deputy-Lieutenants, nor Juſtices of the Peace in the ſeveral Counties, but ſuch as ſhall concur with, and aſſiſt him to have his Toleration paſs'd into a Law; the Lord-Lieutenants by his Order, and in his Name, ſummon'd the Chief Officers and Gentlemen in their reſpective Shires, and laid the Caſe before them, ſo as to flatter or terrify them out of their Freedom in the Election of Parliament-Men, as the Regulators did in Corporations. But notwithſtanding all theſe Wiles and Weapons, the King found himſelf diſappointed in his hopes of having a Parliament at his devotion. In ſome Counties almoſt all the Gentry diſappear'd on a ſudden to avoid the Summons of the Lords-Lieutenants. The Gentlemen of Dorſetſhire being aſſembled by the Earl of Briſtol, were no ſooner acquainted with the King's Intentions, than they anſwer'd, That an Affair of ſo great Importance deſerv'd to be diſcuſs'd in the great Council of the Nation, to which they would ſend their Repreſentatives when his Majeſty ſhould think fit to call a Free Parliament. The like Anſwer was made in ſeveral other Counties; and in Cheſter, of about 700 Perſons, there were only 17 who could be made to promiſe a Conſent to the repealing of the Penal Laws.

A. D. 1687.

The Counties modell'd for Elections.

The Opinion of the Prince and Princeſs of Orange having gone a great way towards the ſpreading of it in the Nation, the King in his Reſentment order'd Albeville to demand the ſix Regiments, three Engliſh and three Scots, in the Dutch Service: but the States refus'd to ſend them, alledging, they were not oblig'd by Treaty to do it, unleſs England was in War; that they were levy'd at their Charge, and by frequent filling up, moſt of thoſe Troops were now natural Hollanders, or of other Provinces, or Germans. However, they order'd Paſſports for all Engliſh and Scots Officers who were willing to quit their Service, and about 40 took them; at which the Prince of Orange was not diſpleas'd, for thoſe Officers having been corrupted by Chudleigh and Skelton, were very inſolent and troubleſome.

The King in his Progreſs viſited the Queen at the Bath, where he ſtaid only a few Days, two or three at moſt, and ſhe continu'd on in her Courſe of Bathing. Many Books were now writ for Liberty of Conſcience; and ſince all People ſaw what Security the Teſts gave, ſome of theſe ſpoke of an Equivalent to be offer'd, that ſhould give a further Security beyond what could be pretended from the Teſts. It was never explain'd what was meant by this. But the Marquis of Hallifax ſufficienly explain'd, it could mean nothing, in his Anatomy of an Equivalent. People took it to be an artificial Method to lay them aſleep with a high-ſounding Word. Some talk'd of new Laws to ſecure civil Liberty, which had been ſo much ſhaken by the Practices of theſe laſt Years, ever ſince the Oxford Parliament: Nay, we are told by Biſhop Burnet, that a very extravagant thing was given out upon it, how the King was reſolv'd to ſet up a ſort of Commonwealth; and the Papiſts began to talk very high every where for publick Liberty, trying by that to recommend themſelves to the Pepole.

An Equivalent.

King James a Republican.

When the King came back from his Progreſs, he reſolv'd to change the Magiſtracy in moſt of the Cities of England. He began with the City of London, where he not only chang'd the Aldermen, but the Government of many of the Companies. Among other Diſſenters, he made Mr. William Kiffin, a Baptiſt Preacher, an Alderman. He did all this by virtue of the great Powers reſerv'd in the new Charters. Thoſe who had ſtood up for the King during the Debate about the Excluſion, were now turn'd out with Diſgrace. And thoſe who had appear'd moſt violently againſt him, were put into the Magiſtracy. My Lord of Sarum adds, "All "this turn'd upon the King, who was ſo given "up to the Humours of his Prieſts, that he ſa-"crific'd both his Honour and Gratitude as they "dictated; and the new Men that were brought "in, ſaw this too viſibly to be much wrought "upon by it. The King threw off his old Party in "too outragious a manner ever to return to them "again. But he was much ſurpriz'd to find the "new Mayor and Aldermen took the Teſt, and "order'd the Celebration of Gunpowder-Trea-ſon-day."

Nuntio not invited into the City by the Lord-Mayor.

We have mention'd the Nuntio's being invited to dine at Guild-hall when the King din'd there, but we ſhould have remember'd, that the Mayor and Aldermen diſown'd the Invitation, and made an Entry of it in their Books, that the Nuntio came without their knowledge: Which the King took very ill, and ſaid, I ſee the Diſſenters are an ill-natur'd ſort of People that cannot be gain'd. He ſignify'd to the Lord Mayor that he might uſe what Form of Worſhip he lik'd beſt in Guildhall-Chapel, deſigning by this to engage the Diſſenters to make the firſt Change from the eſtabliſh'd Worſhip. And if a Presbyterian Mayor ſhould do this in one Year, a Popiſh Mayor might do it in another. But the Mayor put the Deciſion of the matter upon thoſe to whom the governing of the Dioceſe of London was committed during the Biſhop's Suſpenſion, and ask'd their Opinion in it, which three Biſhops could not but give in behalf of the eſtabliſh'd Worſhip. So the Church-Service was kept up in Guildhall-Chapel, and the Room where now is the Receipt of the Bank in Grocers-Hall, where Sir John Shorter kept his Mayoralty, was made a Place for Worſhip in the Presbyterians way.

Steps towards the Revolution.

In this languiſhing deſperate Condition Great Britain caſt her mournful Eyes on Holland, where only ſhe was in hopes of finding a Deliverer in the midſt of her Diſtreſs and Deſpair; and it is very certain his Highneſs the Prince of Orange had his Eye as much upon Britain, to watch for her Preſervation and Safety. King James's ill and arbitrary Government, and his Deſign to eſtabliſh Popery and Slavery, awaken'd in him a lively Concern for our Religion and Liberties, long before he receiv'd a perſonal Provocation, by an attempt to impoſe a pretended Heir on the Nation, and to deprive his Conſort the Princeſs and himſelf of their Right of Succeſſion to the Crown.

In the Years 1685 and 1686, the Prince often took occaſion to ſpeak of the Affairs of England, which he did very freely. He was highly diſſatisfy'd with the King's Conduct, apprehending he would give the People ſuch Jealouſies of him, as would throw him into a French Management, and force violent Remedies. He had very faithful and large Accounts of all Proceedings at Court, in the City and Country, from Perſons of good Intelligence, by word of Mouth, and by Letter: And upon ſetting up of the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, ſome from England preſſed the Prince and Princeſs to write over againſt it; but he did not think fit to intermeddle at that time, waiting for further Advices and Inſtances from his Friends: of which he had enough, upon the Proceedings againſt the Univerſities: The breaking in upon the Statutes of Magdalen-College, and turning out Dr. Hough the Preſident, and the Fellows by force, was thought an open piece of Robbery and Burglary, when Perſons authoriz'd by no legal Commiſſion came and forcibly turn'd Men out of their Poſſeſſion and Freehold. Biſhop Burnet informs us, "This highly inflam'd the Church Party

Addreſſes to the Prince of Orange.

"and the Clergy, who ſent over very preſſing "Meſſages upon it to the Prince of Orange, de-"ſiring he would interpoſe and eſpouſe the Con-"cerns of the Church, and that he would break "upon it, if the King would not redreſs it." His Highneſs did not think fit to ſhew ſuch Letters as theſe; but he often ſaid he was preſs'd by many of thoſe, who were afterwards his bittereſt Enemies, to engage in their Quarrel. The firſt thing he reſolv'd on, was to ſend Monſieur Dykvelt to England, with Directions how to talk to all ſorts of People, to the King, to thoſe of the Church, and to the Diſſenters. Dr. Burnet drew his Inſtructions, which he follow'd very cloſely.

A. D. 1687.

Dykvelt ſent into England.

He was order'd to expoſtulate decently, but firmly, with the King upon the Methods he was purſuing both at home and abroad, and to try, if poſſible, to bring him to a better Underſtanding with the Prince.

He was to aſſure the Church Party, that the Prince would ever be firm to the Church of England, and to all our national Intereſts. The Clergy, by the Biſhop of London, had deſir'd him to uſe all his Credit with the Diſſenters, to keep them from going into the Meaſures of the Court; and ſent over very poſitive Aſſurances, That in caſe they ſtood firm now to the common Intereſt, they would in a better time come into a Comprehenſion of ſuch as could be brought into a Conjunction with the Church. How theſe Aſſurances agreed with the Behaviour of Jane, Aldrich, and the Convocations, after the Prince of Orange had done their Buſineſs; how with the Schiſm Bill and Occaſional Bill, after Sacheverell's Tumult, is too well known to need remembring here. Nay, the Clergy were ſo complying at this time, that they deſir'd the Prince to ſend over ſome of the Diſſenting Preachers, whom the Violence of the former Years had driven to Holland, and to prevail effectually with them to oppoſe any falſe Brethren, ſuch as Lob, &c. whom the Court might have gain'd to deceive the reſt. The Prince did this. Mr. Howe, Mr. Shower, and many others return'd to England, to ſeveral of whom his Highneſs gave ſuch Preſents, as enabled them to pay their Debts, and undertake the Journey. Dykvelt was order'd to perſuade all to ſtand off, and not to be drawn in by any Promiſes the Court might make them to aſſiſt in electing ſuch Members as would repeal the Teſt and Penal Laws. Dr. Calamy tells us, "he gave "the Nonconformiſts great Aſſurance, that they "ſhould find Reſpect from the Prince, when "Opportunity offer'd, and that they might be "ſatisfy'd he was no Friend to Rigour and Se-"verity in religious Matters, but a great Friend "to Liberty of Conſcience." He was to try all ſorts of People, and to remove the ill Characters that had been given them of his Highneſs.

Clergy promiſe the Diſſenters a Comprehenſion.

Albeville did all he could to divert this Journey; for he knew well Dykvelt's way of penetrating into Secrets, he himſelf having been often employ'd by him, and well paid for ſeveral Diſcoveries made by his means. He aſſur'd the Prince and the States, that the King was firmly reſolv'd to maintain his Alliance with them; that his Naval Preparations were only to enable him to preſerve the Peace of Europe: For he ſeem'd much concern'd to find that the States had ſuch Apprehenſions of theſe, that they were putting themſelves in a Condition not to be ſurpriz'd. Albeville in his ſecret Negociations with the Prince and Princeſs, poſitively aſſur'd them, the King intended never to wrong them in their Right of Succeſſion: That all he was now engag'd in, was only to aſſert the Rights of the

A. D. 1687. Crown, of which they would reap the Advantage in their turn. That the Teſt was a Reſtraint on the King's Liberty, and he was therefore reſolv'd to have it repeal'd, as well as all Penal Laws in Matters of Religion. They ſaw too well the Advantages Holland had by Liberty of Conſcience among them, to oppoſe the King in this Particular. His Majeſty could not abandon Men, becauſe they were of his Religion, had ſerv'd him well, and ſuffer'd only on his account, and on account of their Conſcience.

King James condemns the French King. He told their Highneſſes how much the King condemn'd the Proceedings in France, and that he ſpoke of that King as a poor Bigot, who was govern'd by the Archbiſhop of Paris and Madam de Maintenon: Whereas he knew Pere de la Chaiſe had oppos'd the Perſecution as long as he could, but his Maſter hated thoſe Maxims; and therefore he receiv'd the Refugees very kindly, and had given Orders for a Collection of Charity over the Kingdom for their Relief.

I have been the longer upon this, becauſe it was not only the Subſtance of what Albeville ſaid to the Prince and Princeſs, but what the King ſaid to Dykvelt, who return'd a like Anſwer to the King, as their Highneſſes did to Albeville.

The Prince and Princeſs of Orange's Anſwer to Albeville. That they were fix'd in a Principle againſt Perſecution in Matters of Conſcience, but they could not think it reaſonable to let Papiſts in to fit in Parliament, or to ſerve in publick Truſts. The reſtleſs Spirit of ſome of that Religion, and of their Clergy in particular, ſhew'd they could not be at quiet till they were Maſters. And the Power they had over the King's Spirit, in making him forget what he had promis'd upon his coming to the Crown, gave but too juſt a ground of Jealouſy. It appear'd they could not bear any Reſtraints, nor remember paſt Services, longer than thoſe who did them could comply in every thing with that which was deſir'd of them. They thought the Prerogative, as limited by Law, was great enough, and they deſir'd no ſuch exorbitant Power as ſhould break thro' all Laws. They thought the ſureſt as well as the beſt way was to govern according to Law. The Church of England had given the King ſignal Proofs of their Affection and Fidelity, and had comply'd with him in every thing, till he came to touch them in ſo tender a Point, as the legal Security they had for their Religion. Their ſticking to that was very natural; and the King's taking that ill from them, was liable to great Cenſure. His Majeſty, if he pleas'd to improve the Advantages he had in his Hand might be both eaſy and great at home, and the Arbiter of all Affairs abroad; but he was prevail'd on by the Importunities of ſome reſtleſs Prieſts to embroil all Affairs to ſerve their End. They could never conſent to aboliſh thoſe Laws, which were the beſt, and now the only Fence of that Religion, which they themſelves believ'd to be true. Albeville ſaid the Princeſs was more intractable than the Prince; Dykvelt argu'd often with the King on theſe Topicks, but found him obſtinately fix'd in his Reſolution.

The King's Diſcourſe with Dykvelt. The King ſaid, I am the Head of the Family, and the Prince ought to comply with me, but he always ſets himſelf againſt me. Dykvelt reply'd, The Prince cannot carry his Compliance ſo far as to give his Religion to your Pleaſure; but in all other things he has ſhew'd a ready Submiſſion to your Will. The Peace of Nimeguen, of which your Majeſty is Guarantee, is openly violated in the Article relating to the Principality of Orange; yet ſince you do not think fit to eſpouſe the Prince's Intereſts in that Matter, he has been ſilent, and has made no Proteſtations upon it: Thus you ſee he is ready to ſacrifice his own Concerns rather than diſturb your Majeſty's. To this the King made no Reply; but the Earl of Sunderland, and the reſt of the Miniſtry preſs'd Dykvelt mightily, to endeavour to bring the Prince to concur with the King, they engaging to him, that if that were once ſettled, his Majeſty would go into cloſe Meaſures with his Highneſs againſt France. The Embaſſador put an end to all thoſe Propoſitions, by ſaying, The Prince will never be brought to hearken to them. Thus his Negotiation at London, and Albeville's at the Hague, had no Effect on either ſide. Dykvelt ſucceeded much better with thoſe whom he had Inſtructions to apply to, as the Marquis of Halliſax, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Earl of Devonſhire, the Earl of Nottingham, the Earl of Danby, the Lord Mordaunt, the Lord Lumley, Admiral Herbert, Mr. Ruſſel, who were the Perſons chiefly truſted, and upon the Advices that were ſent over by them, the Prince govern'd all his Motions.

Lords conſult with Dykvelt.

This Year Dr. Burnet, to whoſe Memoirs we are ſo much indebted, fell under a ſevere Proſecution for the many admirable Pieces he wrote abroad in Defence of our Religion, Rights, and Liberties, which were carefully diſpers'd, and greedily read by the well-affected of all Denominations. He had finiſh'd his Travels in France, Italy, Swiſſerland, and Germany, and was ſettled in the United Provinces, where he was about to be marry'd to a conſiderable Fortune; and with a ſpiteful Intent to prevent it, the King's Advocate in Scotland was order'd to cite him before the Parliament, to anſwer a Charge of High Treaſon for holding Correſpondence with the Earl of Argyle, James Stewart, then in the King's Favour, Robert Ferguſon, Chaplain to the late Earl of Shaftesbury, as it is ſaid in the Citation; but is an impudent Falſhood, for he was never Shaftesbury's Chaplain, the Earl being no Diſſenter, and Ferguſon a Cameronian, &c. The Witneſſes whoſe Names were put to this Citation, according to the Cuſtom in Scotland, were Sir John Cockran, John Cockran Eſq; his Son, Mr. Robert Weſt, the perjur'd Evidence in the pretended Presbyterian Plot, Mr. Zachary Bourn, another ſuch Evidence, Mr. William Carſtairs, Miniſter, Mr. Robert Baird, Merchant in Holland, and Mr. Richard Baxter, the two latter at leaſt were no doubt put in without their knowledge. The Appearance was to be the 27th of June, and the Doctor publiſh'd a full Anſwer to the Charge the 17th of May, at what time he wrote alſo an elegant Letter in his own Vindication to the Earl of Middleton, Secretary of State.

Dr. Burnet proſecuted.

In his Anſwer he ſets forth that he had not ſeen the Earl of Argyle in nine Years before his Condemnation, that he had had no Correſpondence with James Stewart in twenty Years paſt, that he had not ſeen Sir John Cockran in four Years, that he never ſaw Weſt and Brown to his knowledge, that he knew not Carſtairs, nor if there was ſuch a Man as Baird in Holland, that he had had no Converſation with Mr. Baxter in twenty-two Years laſt paſt, unleſs once or twice by Accident at a third Perſon's Houſe, and had not then any private Diſcourſe with him; notwithſtanding all which, the Doctor was condemn'd for Contumacy, that is, for not putting himſelf into the hands of Perſons, who would ſurely have murder'd him. He wrote other Letters to the Earl of Middleton; but inſtead of an Anſwer, Albeville was order'd to demand of the States General, that he ſhould be baniſh'd their Provinces, and at the ſame time ſeveral Ruffians were hir'd to aſſaſſinate him, and once he had a narrow Eſcape in his Garden; but being married, and in conſequence of it naturaliz'd, the States granted him their Protection, according to the Law of Nations. However, Albeville ſo often, and ſo earneſtly preſs'd the Prince and Princeſs of Orange to forbid him their Court, that their Highneſſes could not at laſt refuſe it without a Quarrel, yet they conſtantly maintain'd a ſecret Correſpondence with him, communicated to him their Advices from England had him conſulted upon them, and made uſe of his Pen upon all Occaſions. Among other Pieces in Vindication of the Church of England, and the Laws of the Land, which Dr. Burnet wrote, was an Anſwer to Parker Biſhop of Oxford's Book, entitled, Reaſons for abrogating the Teſt impos'd on all Members of Parliament, which Book was licens'd by the Earl of Sunderland, and his Majeſty commanded the Bookſellers not to print any Anſwer to it, which was equally fooliſh and tyrannical; for it at once gave People an Itch of reading and anſwering, and took away the natural Right which every Man has to make uſe of his Reaſon in all ſorts of Argument. Parker inſulted the Divines of our Church with an Inſolence ſuperior to that of the Papiſts, and, as might eaſily have been foreſeen, ſeveral ſharp Anſwers came out againſt it, notwithſtanding the King's Command, but none made ſo much noiſe as Dr. Burnet's, who very luckily turn'd Parker's Title againſt him. Parker having ſaid in his Title-Page, Written for the Author's own Satisfaction, and now publiſh'd for the Benefit of all others whom it may concern; Burnet ſaid the Words were certainly wrong plac'd, for the Truth of the Matter is, that it was written for the Author's own Benefit, and now publiſh'd for the Satisfaction of all others whom it may concern. Speaking of the whole Body of the Biſhops, he ſays, If there were two or three ſuch as he among the twenty-ſix, they may comfort themſelves with this, that a Dozen of much better Men had one among them, that I confeſs was not much worſe, if it was not for this, that he let the Price of his Treachery fall much lower than Sam. Oxon. does. The Apoſtate had a very good Word from Echard, and others of his Stamp, when he was abuſing Proteſtant Diſſenters, till Marvel laſh'd even his Impudence out of countenance. Dr. Burnet added, "When "one reflects on two of the Biſhops that were of "that venerable Body, whoſe Memory will be "bleſs'd in the preſent and following Ages, "thoſe two great and good Men that fill'd the "Sees of Oxford and Cheſter, Fell and Pearſon, "we muſt conclude, that as the World was not "worthy of them, ſo certainly their Sees were "not worthy of them, ſince they have been "plagu'd with ſuch Succeſſors.——With what "ſenſible Regret muſt thoſe who were ſo often "edify'd with the Gravity, the Piety, the Ge-"neroſity and Charity of the late Biſhop of Ox-"ford, look on, when they ſee ſuch a Harle-"quin in his room?" Parker charg'd Burnet with writing Lampoons upon the preſent Princes of Chriſtendom; upon which Dr. Burnet retorted with this ſatyrical Period, It is Lampoon enough upon the Age that he is a Biſhop, but it is a downright Reproach that he is made the Champion of a Cauſe, which if it is bad of itſelf, muſt ſuffer extremely by being in ſuch hands. This Tool of Arbitrary Power and Popery was ſo ignorant of Facts, or ſo maliciouſly wicked, that he makes the Teſt to be one of the Productions of Oates's Perjury. His firſt Reaſon for abrogating it, is, becauſe it had a ſhameful Origin, being the firſt Production of Oates's Conſpiracy, made on purpoſe to give Credit and Reputation to Perjury. Now the Teſt Act paſt in 1672, and Oates's Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot was not till ſix Years after. King James himſelf ſent Parker Dr. Burnet's Anſwer, hearing no body elſe durſt put it into his hands, and hoping it would raiſe his Indignation to make a Reply; but he died about that time, and one Timothy Hall, a ſort of a Presbyterian, was made Biſhop of Oxford, and Gifford, a Popiſh Biſhop, Preſident of Magdalen College.

Jeſuits attempt to get the Savoy French Church.

The Jeſuits having ſettled a College in the Savoy, had a Deſign upon the French Chapel there, and Pulton their Rector tamper'd with Mr. Dubourdieu the Hugonot Miniſter, in order to engage him to reſign that Church, promiſing him, as from the King, to build them another on any Ground they ſhould chuſe between Whitehall and Temple Bar, with a large Sum of Money beſides. Monſieur Dubourdieu made anſwer, that being but one, he deſir'd Time to communicate the Propoſal to the other Miniſters and Church-Wardens in the Savoy. Theſe being met upon this critical Affair, it was agreed, that before they gave the Jeſuits a poſitive Anſwer, they ſhould conſult with ſuch Lords as were moſt conſpicuous for their Wiſdom and Affection to the Proteſtant Intereſt. Accordingly Mr. Dubourdieu waited upon the Marquis of Halliſax, the Earl of Danby, and Earl of Nottingham, and others, who all freely adviſ'd them never to hearken to any Terms with the Jeſuits; let them purſue their violent Meaſures, ſuffer yourſelves to be thruſt out of your Church, for by that means you will do your own and the Nation's Buſineſs.

I have not been very curious about the Honours and Preferments in theſe Reigns, for a Reaſon already mention'd; but leſt any body elſe ſhould have more Curioſity, I will copy from the compleat Hiſtorians, who tell us, that this Year, Honours and Preferments.

The Earl of Sunderland was made Knight of the Garter, as was alſo the Duke of Berwick; the Duke of Albemarle, Governor of Jamaica; Sir Francis Ratcliff, Baronet, of Northumberland, Earl of Derwentwater; Roger Earl of Caſtlemain, William Duke of Hamilton, and the Anabaptiſt Quack, Sir Nicholas Butler, Privy Counſellors. The latter, an obſcure Fellow, turn'd Papiſt, and after the Revolution went again to the Baptiſt Meeting; Charles Carteret Eſq; Edward Vaudrey Eſq; and Captain William Phips of New England, were knighted: The latter for bringing home a great Treaſure, which was taken out of the Sea, after it had lain there forty-four Years. He had been diving for it before, and being pretty ſure of finding it, came to London in the Year 1685, and was there ſome time without being able to get any one to engage in his Deſign; he try'd the Merchants in vain, and then made a Trial of the People of Quality. At laſt the Duke of Albemarle agreed to go half of the Charge, and Phips offer'd a Merchant a Quarter for the Ship he embark'd in, then call'd the Bridgwater Merchant, but the Owner choſe rather the Money for her, which was 1500 l. and he heartily repented it afterwards. The Duke of Albemarle had for his Half above 300,000 Pieces of Eight, and Phips got for himſelf about 80,000 Pieces, clear of all Charges.

I do not enter into the Biography of the Compleat Hiſtorians, being writing a Hiſtory, and not Lives; but I cannot omit taking notice of the Death of ſo conſiderable a Perſon as the Duke of Buckingham, George Villiers, the famous Stateſman and Wit. He had above 30,000 l. a Year at the Reſtoration, which ſome time before his Death was reduc'd to 10,000 Pounds, and that ſo

A. D. 1687. encumbered, that he had been obliged to paſs it over by Deed to Truſtees for Payment of his Debts to Sir Robert Clayton, Serjeant Rotheram, &c. reſerving to himſelf 2500 Pounds per Ann. which was all he had left for his Subſiſtence, and being much too little for his profuſe way of living, he took with him a Company of Ruffians, and went down to Helmeſly in Yorkſhire, a Manor worth about 5000 Pounds a Year, bought afterwards by Sir Charles Duncomb. Here he and his Companions took Money from the Tenants by force contrary to a Decree in Chancery, and were guilty of a Riot in an Inn, for which he muſt have been try'd, had he return'd to London, but it threw him into a Diſtemper, of which he died, and with him expired the Buckingham Villiers Family and Eſtate in the ſecond Generation. And may all Fortunes and Honours, ſo acquired as theirs were, ſo expire.

A. D. 1688. ONE of the firſt Events in this wonderful Year very much haſtened the Revolution, which was the greateſt Wonder of it, and that was the publiſhing a Proclamation the ſecond of January declaring very falſely and blaſphemouſly, That it had pleas'd God Almighty to give his Majeſty apparent Hopes and good Aſſurance of his having Iſſue by his Conſort, who was now with Child. Wherefore a Thankſgiving Day was appointed a Fortnight after, and a Form of Prayer made by three Biſhops, Crew of Durham, Sprat of Rocheſter, and White of Peterborough; Two Toms and a Nat, as the Lampoon upon it ſaid. This Form was ſtitch'd into the Common-Prayer and had theſe Expreſſions in it, Bleſſed be that good Providence, which has vouchſafed us freſh Hopes of Royal Iſſue by our Gracious Queen Mary. Strengthen her we beſeech thee, and perfect what thou haſt begun. Command thy Holy Angels to watch over her, an Idolatreſs, and defend her from all Dangers and evil Accidents, that what ſhe has conceived may be happily brought forth to the joy of our Sovereign Lord the King, the further Eſtabliſhment of his Crown, the Happineſs and Welfare of the whole Kingdom, and the Glory of thy great Name. Echard minces the matter, and ſays the greateſt part of the Clergy did not pronounce theſe Expreſſions; but if they pronounc'd any Expreſſions by way of Solemn Prayer on that Thankſgiving-day for that pretended Bleſſing, they mock'd God and the World. The Day was kept every where with great Coolneſs and Indifferency, the People from the very Whiſper of the Great Belly believing it to be a Cheat, and the bloody Popiſh Queen Mary and her Cuſhion, were in every one's Mouth except the Papiſts, who were ſo elevated with the Sham, that they gave out, tho' the Child ſhould prove a Daughter, yet it would cut off the Princeſſes of Orange and Denmark from the Succeſſion, on a vain Suppoſition, that a Daughter born ſince the King's advancement to the Throne ought to take place before Princeſſes born while he was Duke of York; but they took care to prevent any ſuch Litigation by ſecuring a Son and Heir, the Effect of a ſolemn Petition, as the Jeſuits ſaid, which the late Dutcheſs of Modena had put up in Heaven to the Bleſſed Virgin with a Preſent of a golden Image: Others ſay a Smock enrich'd with precious Stones; and I verily believe this is the trueſt Circumſtance in all the Story. I do not build very much upon what I am going to ſay of this miraculous Conception, but I remember, that being at Bath in the Year 1690, I went with a Gentlewoman a Relation of mine, to ſee one Mrs. Chapman an Apothecary's Daughter, who was one of thoſe that waited on the Queen as a Guide when ſhe bath'd, and tho' the Decency of the Sex did not admit of my hearing what was ſaid on this Subject, yet my Kinſwoman, who was indeed a very near one, aſſured me afterwards, that Mrs. Chapman ſaid ſhe could not be with Child when ſhe left Bath, for Reaſons fitter to be imagined than expreſt. Biſhop Burnet writes, "After the King left her, ſhe "purſued a full Courſe of Bathing, and having "reſolv'd to return to London in the end of September, an Accident took her to which the Sex "is ſubject, and made her ſtay there a Week longer. She came to Windſor the ſixth of October. It went current, that the Queen believed "herſelf to be with Child in that very Inſtant "in which her Mother pray'd to the Lady of Loretto, where there is a ſolemn Record of it. "A Conception ſaid to be thus begun, look'd ſuſpicious. It was now fix'd to the ſixth of October; ſo the nine Months were to run to the ſixth "of July. She was in the Progreſs of her big "Belly let blood ſeveral times, and the moſt aſtringent Things that could be propoſed, were "uſed. It was ſoon obſerved, that all things about her were manag'd with a myſterious Secrecy, into which none were admitted but a few "Papiſts. She was not dreſt nor undreſt with "the uſual Ceremony. Prince George told the "Biſhop, that the Princeſs went as far in deſiring to be ſatisfy'd by feeling the Motion after ſhe ſaid ſhe was quick, as ſhe could go without breaking with her, and ſhe had ſometimes "ſtaid by her even indecently long in Mornings, "to ſee her riſe and to give her her Shift. But "ſhe never did either, ſhe never offer'd any Satisfaction in that Matter by Letter to the Princeſs of Orange, nor to any of the Ladies of Quality, in whoſe Word the World would have acquieſced. The thing upon this began to be "ſuſpected, and ſome Libels were writ treating "the whole as an Impoſture. The Uſe the Queen "made of this, was to ſay, that ſince ſhe ſaw "ſome were ſuſpecting her as capable of ſo black "a Contrivance, ſhe ſcorn'd to ſatisfy thoſe who "could entertain ſuch Thoughts of her."

A. D. 1688.

The Queen's big belly.

An impious Prayer for her.

The Conception falſe.

This is the pooreſt Evaſion that ever Trickſters pretended to; what is Modeſty or Decency to Ambition and falſe Zeal? She knew if ſhe was really with Child, 'twas no matter who got it, and rather than have left any room for Suſpicion if ſhe could have help'd it, ſhe would have been delivered upon Charing-Croſs, or in the moſt open manner, as other Princeſſes have been on the like Occaſions. The Empreſs Conſtantia Wife to the German Emperor Henry VI. being in Years, and the People ſuſpecting ſhe was paſt Child-bearing, the Emperor gave abundant Proof of her being big and of her Delivery; he prepared a Place in publick, where ſhe remain'd till her Labour Ventre Cuſtodito, with Keepers, that no ſuppoſititious Child might poſſibly be convey'd to her, and there in ſight of the Citizens and all the Matrons that would and could poſſibly approach her, none being excluded, ſhe brought forth a Prince, who was afterwards the Emperor Frederick II. A like Story is told of a Queen of Arragon. 'Twas abſurd and ridiculous to ſay ſhe ſcorn'd to ſatisfy them. If ſhe had ſo done, ſhe would have been ſufficiently reveng'd on them for ſuſpecting her. Biſhop Burnet gives us ſome other Reaſons againſt her Conception prior to thoſe already given.

"The Queen had been for ſix or ſeven Years "in ſuch an ill State of Health, that every Winter brought her near Death. Thoſe about her "ſeem'd well aſſured that ſhe, who had bury'd "all her Children ſoon after they were born, and "had now for ſeveral Years ceaſed bearing, would "have no more Children. Her own Prieſts ap-

" prehended it, and ſeem'd to wiſh for her death. " She had great and frequent Diſtempers that " return'd often, which put all People out of " their Hopes and Fears of her having Chil- " dren."

Upon the whole, it appears as plain as any thing can appear, which is not to be determin'd by the Senſes, that ſhe was in no Condition to conceive, and that ſhe did not conceive, and that the Tricks and Oaths made uſe of afterwards to prove it, were the Juggles of wicked or deluded People, in which the Legerdemain was ſo clumſy, that it diſcover'd itſelf.

Another Author aſſures us, ſhe never had the firſt moſt natural, known and common Signs of Conception, her Menſis Profluvium continu'd, her Breaſts never ſwell'd, nor was there ever any Milk ſeen in them by any credible Witneſs. All the outward Parts of her Body that encompaſſed the Womb, were of the ſame Proportion as at other times. She, contrary to her former uſual Courſe, always withdrew into her Cabinet, or ſome other private Room, when ſhe chang'd her Linnen, and would never ſuffer any Proteſtant Lady to be by. A French Author ſays, Bien des Proteſtans ſoupçonnerent que cette Groſſeſſe n'etoit qu'un coup de politique, d'autant plus que les Moines debitoient & vouloient meme parier que ce ſeroit un Fils. A great many Proteſtants ſuſpected that the Queen's Big belly was only a Trick, and the rather becauſe the Prieſts gave out, and offer'd to lay Wagers that it would be a Son. Echard with his uſual Wiſdom ſays, Great ſtreſs was laid on the Incredibility of the Impoſture; " That a " King and a Queen ſhould conſpire to put " ſuch a Cheat upon themſelves, as well as the " Nation, was unnatural and ſhocking." No ſtreſs in the world was laid upon this by any Proteſtant in his Wits. There was not one Circumſtance of the Impoſture, but what was credible; and for ſuch a King and ſuch a Queen to cheat a Princeſs the next Heir, and a Nation whom they hated for the ſake of a Religion to which they were Bigots, is unnatural and ſhocking indeed to good Engliſhmen and good Proteſtants; but very natural and agreeable to Papiſts. The Compleat Hiſtorian writes thus of it: " The " Queen's Phyſicians and Domeſticks were not " ſatisfy'd in the Signs of her Conception. The " Impatience of the Popiſh Party in preſuming " and propheſying the Birth of a Son, and ſe- " veral other concurring Reaſons, made the Pro- " teſtants ſuſpect a Fraud, and they were con- " firm'd in their Suſpicion by reflecting that a " like Deceit had been put upon the People in " the Reign of Popiſh Queen Mary: for then " to relieve themſelves from the Fears of a Pro- " teſtant Princeſs in Succeſſion, the Romiſh " Prieſts gave out that the Queen was with " Child. Prayers were order'd for her ſafe De- " livery, and a Popiſh Preacher at St. Paul's " pretended to tell of the Birth, and deſcribe " the Boy; when after all, the Sham was car- " ry'd no farther." What follows is very ſilly, but it is in other Hiſtories as well as the Compleat One; " Becauſe, as verily believ'd, King Philip " was too juſt and generous to conſent to any ſuch " Impoſture." Philip was one of the greateſt Tyrants then reigning in the whole World, and it was not his Juſtice or Generoſity that hinder'd his permitting of the Cheat, but becauſe ſuch an Impoſtor muſt have ſucceeded him in all his Kingdoms, both in the old World and the new.

If the Talk of a Child by the Queen was deſign'd to divert the People from fixing their Eyes and Hearts upon a Proteſtant Succeſſor, it had not that effect: On the contrary, the Nation look'd more and more towards the Court in Holland, and the Princeſs Anne at home. The King was ſenſible of it, and found the Prince and Princeſs of Orange to be more popular for refuſing to approve of the Repeal of the Penal Laws and Teſt. Under this Apprehenſion, he began to give out Commiſſions for the raiſing of new Troops, and was preparing a better Fleet with extraordinary Diligence; which gave the Dutch a good Pretence to go on with their Armaments by Sea and Land, eſpecially conſidering the great Power and Preparations of Lewis the XIV. who they had good reaſon to believe was in a ſecret League with King James for their Deſtruction, as his Brother King Charles had been.

The Dutch make warlike Preparations.

Petre the Jeſuit had by this time gain'd ſuch an Aſcendant, that he was look'd on as the firſt Miniſter of State. The Nuntio Dada mov'd the King to interpoſe and mediate a Reconciliation between the Courts of Rome and France; but the King anſwer'd, Since the Pope will not gratify me in the promotion of Father Petre, I will leave him to free himſelf of the Trouble into which he has involv'd himſelf the beſt way he can. And the Court of England reckon'd that as ſoon as the Pope felt himſelf preſs'd, he would fly to the King for protection, and grant him every thing he ask'd of him in order to obtain it. Petre gave daily new Proofs of a weak and ill-govern'd Paſſion, and diſcover'd all the ill Qualities of one that ſeem'd rais'd up to be the common Incendiary, and to drive the King and his Party to the Precipice.

Father Petre Prime Miniſter.

On the 27th of April, the King renew'd the Declaration he had ſet out the former Year for Liberty of Conſcience, with an Addition, declaring that he would adhere firmly to it, and that he would put none in any publick Employments, but ſuch as would concur with him in maintaining it. He alſo promis'd to hold a Parliament in November following; which Promiſe, ſo long beforehand, was ſomewhat extraordinary: But Father Petre and William Penn perſuaded the King to it, tho' with a different Proſpect. Penn, and all the Tools that were employ'd by him, had ſtill ſome hopes of carrying a Parliament to agree with the King, if too much time was not loſt, Whereas the delaying a Parliament rais'd Jealouſies as if none were intended, but that it was only talk'd of to amuſe the Nation till other Deſigns were ripe. On the other hand, Petre and his Cabal ſaw the King was kept off from many things they propos'd with the Expectation of the Concurrence of a Parliament: And the fear of giving new Diſguſts, had begot a Caution that was very uneaſy to them. They thought much time was already loſt, and that they made but a ſmall Progreſs. They began to apprehend that the Regulators of Corporations, who were ſtill feeding them with hopes, and were asking more Time and more Money, intended only to amuſe them to wear out the Buſineſs into more length, and keep themſelves the longer in Credit and in Pay; but that they did not in their Hearts wiſh well to the main Deſign, and therefore acted an inſincere Part with the King. For theſe Reaſons, they reſolv'd to put that Matter to the laſt trial, reckoning if the King ſaw it was in vain to hope for any thing in a Parliamentary Way, he might be more eaſily carry'd to extreme and violent Methods.

Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience.

A Parliament promis'd.

And why.

Theſe were the Counſels that hurry'd on this King, otherwiſe weak and impetuous, to his Ruin.

The Lord Sunderland continu'd ſtill in full Favour, having promis'd the Queen to turn Papiſt if ſhe was deliver'd of a Son. About this time Letters were ſent by the Penny-Poſt from an an unknown Hand to ſeveral Lords, as the Marquiſs of Hallifax, the Earl of Dorſet, the Lord Lumley, and others, admoniſhing them to change their Religion, and make their Peace with God and the King, and threatning if they did not ſo do, they ſhould not ſurvive the ſixth of February. The Lord Lovelace was ſummon'd to appear at the Council-Table, for ſaying, that the Judges and Juſtices of the Peace put in by the King's Diſpenſing Power, ought not to be obey'd, they being prefer'd contrary to Law.

Declaration order'd to be read by the Clergy.

The King was not ſatisfy'd with the publiſhing his Declaration. He reſolv'd to oblige the Clergy to read it in all their Churches in time of Divine Service. "And now, ſays Biſhop "Burnet, it appear'd what bad Effects were "like to follow on that officious Motion that "Sancroft had made, for obliging the Clergy to "read the Declaration King Charles ſet out in "the Year 1681, after the Diſſolution of the "Oxford Parliament." An Order paſs'd in Council, May the 4th, requiring the Biſhops to ſend Copies of the Declaration to all their Clergy, and to order them to read it on two ſeveral Sundays in time of Divine Service.

Sancroft's Counſel turn'd againſt him.

This put the Clergy under great Difficulties, and they were at firſt much divided about it, even many of the beſt and worthieſt of them were under ſome Diſtraction of Thought. They had many Meetings, and argu'd the Point long among themſelves in and about London; at laſt they came to a Reſolution not to read it. They ſaw of what Importance it was that they ſhould be unanimous in it; nothing could be of more fatal Conſequence than their being divided in their Practice; for if any conſiderable Body of the Clergy, ſuch as could carry the Name of the Church of England, could have been prevail'd on to give Obedience, and only ſome Number, how valuable ſoever the Men might be, ſhould refuſe to obey, then the Court might ſtill pretend, that they would maintain the Church of Englaad, and ſingle out all thoſe who had not given Obedience, and fall on them. Thus the Church would be broken within itſelf upon this Point, and the one Half be deſtroy'd by means of the other. The Court depended upon this, that the greater part would obey, and ſo they would be furniſh'd with a Point of State, to give a colour for turning out the diſobedient, who were like to be the Men that ſtood moſt in their way, and croſſed their Deſigns moſt, both with their Learning and Credit. And indeed the Behaviour of the Clergy on this occaſion was worthy of the Prieſthood in the Primitive Chriſtian Church, and had the ſame Virtue and the ſame Temper prevail'd from that time to this, the Happineſs of this Nation would have been admir'd or envy'd by all Chriſtendom.

Clergy refuſe to read the Declaration.

Their good Behaviour.

Biſhops betray the Church.

The Biſhops who were engag'd in the Deſign of betraying the Church, Crew, Watſon, Cartwright, Hall, Wood, Barlow, were perſuaded this would be the Event of the Matter, and poſſeſs'd the King with the Hope of it ſo poſitively, that he ſeem'd to depend upon it. The Correſpondence over England was manag'd with that Secrecy, and theſe Reſolutions were ſo communicated to the Clergy in the Country, that they were generally engag'd to agree in their Conduct, before the Court came to apprehend that they would be ſo unanimous, as it prov'd in Concluſion that they were.

Dr. Sancroft, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, wrote round his Province, and deſir'd ſuch Biſhops as were able, to come up and conſult together in a Matter of ſo great Concern; and he ask'd the Opinion of thoſe, whom their Age and Infirmities diſabled from taking the Journey. He found that 18 of the Biſhops, and the main Body of the Clergy, concurr'd in the Reſolution againſt reading the Declaration; ſo himſelf, with the ſix Biſhops who came up to London, and had a Conſultation in his Palace at Lambeth, reſolv'd upon a Petition to the King, in which they would lay before him the Reaſons that determin'd them not to obey the Order of Council which had been ſent them. This flow'd from no Want of Reſpect to his Majeſty's Authority, nor from any Unwillingneſs to let Favour be ſhew'd to Diſſenters, in relation to whom they were willing to come to ſuch a Temper, as ſhould be thought fit, when that Matter ſhould be conſider'd and ſettled in Parliament and Convocation. We muſt not go further without obſerving how well this Temper has appear'd in all the Convocations that have been held from that time to this, how well in Oxford Sermons, Bath Sermons, Aſſize Sermons, Town Sermons and Country Sermons on the 30th of January, and at other Times; how well it agreed with the pious Bills Schiſm and Occaſional, which cannot be remember'd with too much Indignation and Abhorrence. The Archbiſhop about two Months after, while he and his Brethren were under Proſecution, ſent certain Articles to his Clergy, wherein he explain'd this good Temper a little farther, and exhorted them to have a very tender Regard to our Brethren the Proteſtant Diſſenters, to viſit them at their Houſes, and to receive them kindly at their own. I knew a Vicar, who not long ago, turn'd off his Curate for viſiting a Presbyterian Neighbour. To treat them fairly wherever they meet them, to take all Opportunities of aſſuring and convincing them, that the Biſhops of the Church are really and ſincerely irreconcilable Enemies to the Errors, Superſtitions, Idolatries and Tyrannies of the Church of Rome: There ſpoke the divine Spirit of the true Church of England; And that the very unkind Jealouſies which ſome have had of the Biſhops to the contrary, were altogether groundleſs; and in the laſt place warmly and moſt affectionately to exhort them to join with us in daily fervent Prayer to the God of Peace for an univerſal bleſſed Union of all Reform'd Churches both at home and abroad, againſt our common Enemies, &c. How contrary are theſe pious charitable Sentiments to thoſe of Bancroft, Laud, Sheldon, Morley? How contrary to the Lord Clarendon's, who would not allow the Reform'd Church at Charenton to be a true Church, as Archbiſhop Sancroft calls it, nor give his Conſent that King Charles ſhould go to it.

The Biſhops petition the King.

They promiſe Kindneſs to the Diſſenters.

Archbiſhop Sancroft deſires the Prayers of the Presbyterians.

The Biſhops alledg'd in their Petition, That the Declaration being founded on ſuch a diſpenſing Power as had been often declar'd illegal in Parliament, both in the Year 1662, and in the Year 1672, and in the Beginning of the King's own Reign, and being a Matter of ſo great Conſequence to the whole Nation, both in Church and State, they could not in Prudence, Honour and Conſcience make themſelves ſo far Parties to it, as the Publication of it once and again in God's Houſe, and in the Time of divine Service muſt amount to.

The Archbiſhop being then in an ill State of Health, he ſent the other ſix Biſhops with the Petition. Orleans, who ſets an Example to Echard, affirms that the Archbiſhop preſented it Perſon. The ſix Biſhops were St. Aſaph, Bath and Wells, Ely, Chicheſter, Peterborough, and Briſtol, who went the very ſame Day, May the 18th, the Friday before the Declaration was firſt to have been read, to Whitehall, where being introduc'd by the Earl of Sunderland, they deliver'd their Petition to the King. Upon the reading of it he ſtartled, ſeem'd very much incens'd, and made this Anſwer in a very angry Tone, I have heard of this before, but did not believe it; I did not expect this from the Church of England, especially from some of you, meaning Ken I suppose; if I change my Mind, you shall hear from me; if not, I expect my Command shall be obey'd. The Bishops with all Reverence reply'd, We resign ourselves to the Will of God. The King's threatning Answer terrify'd the Bishops a little. However they remain'd firm and unshaken, and only five of the Prelates of England caus'd the Declaration to be publish'd; nay, it was observ'd that in some Churches, where the Ministers either thro' Fear or Mistake comply'd with the Orders of their Superiors, the greatest part of the Congregation disappear'd as soon as they began to read the Declaration. In London it was only read in four or five Churches, and of those that comply'd we have the Names only of three, Hall, Elliot and Thompson. There were not above 200 Ministers in all England that read it. Matters were now brought to a Crisis, the King was engag'd on his part as the Bishops were on theirs. All People look'd on with great Expectations, reckoning that upon the Issue of this Business a great Decision would be made, both of the Designs of the Court, and of the Temper of the Nation. The King for some Days consulted with all that were now employ'd by him, what he should do upon this Emergency, and talk'd with People of all Persuasions. Mr. Lob, who preach'd in the Meeting-House in Fetter-Lane, was entirely gain'd to the Court, and advis'd the King to send them to the Tower: This Lob had been as deep in Plots against him as any Man; there was once a Proclamation to apprehend him, but having been pardon'd, and taken into Favour, he flatter'd King James with the most dangerous Counsels, finding they were most grateful to him. Father Petre seem'd transported with Joy, for he thought the King was engag'd to break with the Church of England, and it was reported that he broke out into that indecent Expression upon it, They shall be made to eat their own Dung. The King was long in doubt. Some of the Popish Nobility earnestly entreated him to let the Matter fall, but he was hurry'd on by his evil Genius to do every thing that might hasten his Destruction; and the violent Advices of Father Petre, and the Jesuit Party, were so fatally suited to his own Temper and Passion, that they prevail'd over the wiser Counsels of almost all that were advis'd with. After a Fortnight's Consultation the Bishops were cited to appear before the Council. The Petition was offer'd to them, and they were ask'd if they own'd it to be their Petition; they answer'd, It seem'd they were to be proceeded against on that Account, so they hop'd the King would not press them to a Confession, and then make use of it against them. At last the Archbishop of Canterbury own'd that he wrote the Petition with his own Hand, and that himself and the other Bishops sign'd it. They were then charg'd with the Publication of it, for it was then printed, but they absolutely deny'd that it was done by their means. The Archbishop had taken no Copy of it, and had never shewn it to any Person. Thus it was not publish'd by them, but must have been done by some of those to whom the King had shewn it. They were then required to enter into Bonds to appear in the Court of King's Bench, and answer to an Information of Misdemeanor. They excepted to this, and said, that by their Peerage they were not bound to do it, and insisting still upon it, they were sent to the Tower, by a Warrant sign'd the 8th of June, by

Bishops sent to the Tower.

Father Petre did not sign it, being excus'd by the King's express Order. The Court was so apprehensive of the People's Resentment, that the Bishops were sent to the Tower by Water; but both Sides of the River were crowded with People, who with loud Acclamations extoll'd the Bishops Constancy, and on their Knees crav'd their Benedictions. Some Companies of Soldiers were order'd to be up in Arms for fear of a Tumult; but the Tyranny the Nation groan'd under was too great for tumultuous Motions, and nothing could have reliev'd them but a thorow Change in the Government. The King being told what Demonstrations of Tenderness and Respect were paid to the Bishops, order'd the Tower Guard to be doubled; his Army was then encamp'd on Hounslow Heath, and the News of the Bishops being sent to the Tower affected them as much as the Citizens of London.

The Imposture of the Pretender continu'd.

I shall be very large in my Account of the Imposture of the Pretender, having a Manuscript Information which was taken from Dr. Lloyd late Bishop of Worcester, by a very worthy Gentleman now living, a Man of Honour and Character in the World: But before I enter upon that, I will repeat what Bishop Burnet says of it, and desire the Reader to excuse Repetitions, if there are any in the two Accounts, the one in those places confirming the other.

Mr. B. of S.

Bishop Burnet's Account of it.

Things went on thus till Monday in Easter-Week. On that Day the King went to Rochester, to see some of the Naval Preparations; but was soon sent for by the Queen, who apprehended she was in danger of miscarrying. Dr. Scarborough was come to Knightsbridge to see Bishop Ward; but the Queen's Coach was sent to call him in all haste, since she was near miscarrying. Dr. Windebank, who knew nothing of this Matter, staid long that Morning upon an Appointment for Dr. Wallgrave, another of the Queen's Physicians, who the next time he saw him excus'd himself; for the Queen, he said, was then under the most apparent Signs of miscarrying. Of this the Doctor made Oath, and it is yet extant.

On the same day, the Countess of Clarendon being to go out of town for a few days, came to see the Queen before she went, knowing nothing of what had happen'd to her. And she being a Lady of the Bed-Chamber, did, according to the Rule of the Court, go into the Queen's Bed-Chamber, without asking Admittance. She saw the Queen abed bemoaning herself in a most doleful manner, saying often, Undone! Undone! And one that belong'd to her carry'd somewhat out, which she believ'd was Linnen taken from the Queen. She was upon this in some Confusion. And the Countess of Powis coming in, went to her, and said with some Sharpness, What do you here? and carried her to the Door. Before she had got out of the Court, one of the Bed-Chamber Women follow'd her, and charg'd her not to speak of any thing she had seen that Day. This Matter, whatever was in it, was hush'd up, and the Queen held on her Course.

The

A. D. 1688. The Princeſs had miſcarry'd in the Spring, and as ſoon as ſhe had recover'd her Strength, the King preſs'd her to go to the Bath, ſince that had ſo good an effect on the Queen. Some of her Phyſicians, and all her other Friends were againſt her going. Lower, one of her Phyſicians, told Biſhop Burnet he was againſt it: He thought ſhe was not ſtrong enough for the Bath, tho' the King preſs'd it with an unuſual Vehemence. Millington, another Phyſician, told the Earl of Shrewsbury, that he was deſir'd to go to the Princeſs and adviſe her to go to the Bath. The Perſon that ſpoke to him told him, the King was much ſet on it, and expected it of him, that he would perſuade her to it. Millington anſwer'd, he would not adviſe a Patient according to Direction, but according to his own Reaſon. Scarborough and Wytherley took it upon them to adviſe it; ſo ſhe went thither in the end of May.

As ſoon as ſhe was gone, thoſe about the Queen did all of a ſudden change her Reckoning, and began it from the King's being with her at Bath. This came on ſo quick, that tho' the Queen had ſet the 14th of June for her going to Windſor, where ſhe intended to lie-in, and all the Preparations for the Birth, and for the Child, were order'd to be made ready by the end of June: Yet now a Reſolution was taken for the Queen's Lying-in at St. James's, and Directions were given to have all Things quickly ready. The Bath Water either did not agree with the Princeſs, or the Advices of her Friends were ſo preſſing, who thought her abſence from the Court at that time of great Conſequence, that in compliance with them, ſhe gave it out it did not, and that therefore ſhe would return in a few days. The Day after the Court had this notice, the Queen ſaid ſhe would go to St. James's and look for the good Hour. She was often told, that it was impoſſible, upon ſo ſhort a warning, to have Things ready: But ſhe was ſo poſitive as to ſay, I will lie there this Night, tho' I lie upon the Boards. And at night, tho' the ſhorter and quicker Way was from Whitehall to St. James's through the Park, and ſhe always went that way, yet now by a ſort of Affectation, ſhe would be carry'd thither by Charing-Croſs, thro' the Pall-mall. And it was given out by all her Train, ſhe was going to be deliver'd. Some ſaid it would be next Morning, and the Prieſts affirm'd very confidently it would be a Boy. The next Morning about nine a-clock, ſhe ſent word to the King that ſhe was in Labour. The Queen Dowager was next ſent to. But no Ladies were call'd; nor were any Women in the Room, but two Dreſſers, one Under-Dreſſer, and the Midwife. The Earl of Arran ſent notice to the Counteſs of Sunderland, ſo ſhe came. The Lady Bellaſis came alſo in time. The Proteſtant Ladies who belong'd to the Court, were all gone to Church before the News was let go abroad; for it happen'd on Trinity Sunday, which was that Year on the 10th of June. The King brought over with him from Whitehall a great many Peers and Privy-Counſellors, and of theſe, 18 were let into the Bed-Chamber; but they ſtood at the furtheſt end of the Room, and the Ladies within the Alcove. The Curtains of the Bed were drawn cloſe, and none came within them, but the Midwife and Under-Dreſſer. The Queen lay all the while a-bed; and in order to the warming one Side of it, a WARMING-PAN was brought: But it was not open, that it might be ſeen there was Fire and nothing elſe in it; which gave great cauſe for Suſpicion, and all People were fill'd with it.

A little before Ten the Queen cry'd out as in a ſtrong Pain, and immediately after the Midwife ſaid aloud, ſhe was happily brought to bed A. D. 1688. The Lords cry'd, Of what? The Midwife anſwer'd, The Queen muſt not be ſurpriz'd. Only ſhe gave a Sign to the Counteſs of Sunderland; who upon that touch'd her Forehead, by which, it being the Sign before agreed on, the King ſaid, I know it is a Boy. No Cries were heard from the Child, nor was it ſhewed to thoſe in the Room. It was pretended more Air was neceſſary. The Under-Dreſſer went out with the Child, or ſomewhat elſe in her Arms to a Dreſſing-Room, to which there was a Door near the Queen's Bed. But there was another Entry to it from other Apartments. The King continu'd with the Lords in the Bed-Chamber for ſome Minutes, which was either a ſign of much Phlegm upon ſuch an occaſion, or it look'd like the giving time for ſome Management. After a little while, they went all into the Dreſſing-Room, and there the News was publiſh'd. Nobody was call'd to lay their Hands on the Queen's Belly, in order to a full Satisfaction. And when the Princeſs came to town three Days after, ſhe had as little Satisfaction given her. Chamberlain the Man-Midwife, who was always order'd to attend her Labour before, and who brought the Plaiſters for putting back the Milk, wonder'd that he had not been ſent to. He went, according to cuſtom, with the Plaiſters; but he was told they had no occaſion for him. All that concern'd the Milk, or the Queen's Purgations, was manag'd ſtill in the dark, which made every one believe there was a baſe Impoſture put on the Nation. One Hemmings, a very worthy Man an Apothecary, who liv'd in St. Martin's-Lane, the very next door to the Family of an eminent Papiſt, Browne, Brother to the Viſcount Montacute, the Wall between his Parlour and theirs being ſo thin, that he could eaſily hear any thing that was ſaid with a louder Voice than ordinary; heard, the Night after, one coming into that Parlour ſay in a doleful Tone, the Prince of Wales is dead; upon which, a great many that liv'd in the Houſe came down ſtairs very quick. They were in Confuſion, and he could hear no more. The next Morning he went to the Biſhops in the Tower, and told them. The Counteſs of Clarendon came thither ſoon after, and ſaid ſhe had been at the young Prince's Door, but was deny'd Acceſs; at which ſhe was amaz'd, and ask'd if they knew her? They ſaid they did, but the Queen had order'd that no Perſon whatſoever ſhould be ſuffer'd to come into him. This gave Credit to Hemmings's Story, and look'd as if all was order'd to be kept ſhut up cloſe till another Child was found. One that ſaw the Child two days after, told Biſhop Burnet, that he look'd ſtrong, and not like a Child ſo newly born. Windebank met Walgrave the Day after this Birth, and remember'd him of what he had told him eight Weeks before. He acknowledg'd it; but added, God works Miracles, to which no Reply could or durſt be made by the other. It needed none; So healthy a Child being ſo little like any of thoſe the Queen had borne, it was given out he had Fits, and could not live: But thoſe who ſaw him every day, obſerv'd no ſuch thing. On the contrary, the Child was in a very proſperous State. None of thoſe Fits ever happen'd when the Princeſs was at Court; for ſhe could not be deny'd Admittance, tho' all others were. It was thought this was reported to make the Matter more credible. 'Tis true, ſome Weeks after that, the Court being gone to Windſor, and the Child ſent to Richmond, he fell into ſuch Fits, that four Phyſicians were ſent for. They all look'd on him as a dying Child. The King and Queen were ſent for. The Doctors went to dinner, and wondering often why they were not call'd, they took it for granted the Child was dead. But when they went to him after dinner, they ſaw a ſound healthy Child, that ſeem'd to have had no ſort of Illneſs on him. It was ſaid the Child was ſtrangely reviv'd of a ſudden. But ſome of the Phyſicians told Biſhop Lloyd, that it was not poſſible for them to think it was the ſame Child. They look'd on one another, but durſt not ſpeak what they thought.

Moſt of theſe Paſſages were Informations ſent over to the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, from whom Biſhop Burnet had them. He adds, I do not mix with theſe the various Reports that were both then and afterwards ſpread of this Matter; of which Biſhop Lloyd has a great Collection, moſt of them well atteſted. This very Collection is fallen into my hands, and I ſhall inſert it as I had it from the Gentleman, who had it from the Biſhop himſelf, in the following Letter.

Biſhop Lloyd's Account of the Impoſture.

FInding myſelf and others likely to be oblig'd to take the Abjuration Oath, I thought it would be much for my Satisfaction, if I could get ſome Information of the Birth of the pretended Prince of Wales. For which purpoſe I wrote to a Friend then in London, deſiring him, if he could, to make ſome Diſcovery of the Matter; which I thought he might do, by conſulting with ſome conſiderable Perſons whom I mention'd.

In a little time my Friend return'd me Anſwer, that he had conſulted the Biſhop of Worceſter, (who was one of them;) and that he told him, if I would make a Journey to him at Hartlebury, he did not doubt but that he ſhould give me full Satisfaction as to the ſuppos'd Birth of the pretended Prince of Wales. Upon which, on Monday the 15th of June 1702, being accompany'd with my Friend Mr. M. I attended his Lordſhip at his Houſe at Hartlebury, where we were very kindly receiv'd, and entertain'd a Night and two Days, in which time we had much of the Biſhop's Company; and being alone with him, his Diſcourſe for the moſt part related to that Subject, which we heard with great Satisfaction, and took Minutes of it with his leave. He began it with the Marriage of King James and Queen Mary, which he ſaid was doubtleſs intended by the French King, for the Ruin of England. Upon which account, the then Biſhop of Sarum and he being together when they heard the News of the Match's being concluded, put up their Prayers for averting the Miſchiefs thereby deſign'd. She was made a Daughter of France, and had 40000 l. aſſign'd for Dowry, that being the Sum given by King Charles to the Duke of Orleans with his Siſter.

The Marriage (he ſaid) was in 1673; and in the Years 74, 75, and 76, ſhe had three Children, who all died within the compaſs of a Year after their Birth, the Phyſicians concluding there were Mala Stamina Vitæ, by reaſon of the D's Diſtemper; and the ſame being hereditary in her Family, in as high a degree or higher than in any Family in Italy, they thought there would be no Child to live.

From 76 to 87 we heard of nothing but Miſcarriages, but then it was reſolv'd that a Child muſt be had. November the 27th, Proclamation was given out for Days of Thankſgiving to be kept in January, (when it might be ſuppos'd that the Queen would be quick) the Tokens till then were ſomewhat uncertain; and about that time, 'twas with great Confidence given out by a Popiſh Prieſt at Cheſter, that the Queen was with Child of a Son; and it being demanded of him how he knew it to be a Son, his Anſwer was, becauſe the King had pray'd for a Child and a Son to St. Winefred, whoſe Rule was to grant all that was ask'd, or nothing; and therefore ſince it appear'd that the Queen was with child, they might certainly conclude it to be a Son.

A. D. 1688.

But whatever it were, the Queen miſcarry'd on Eaſter-Monday, which appears thus: The Biſhop of Worceſter being with ſome Friends at Samuel Biſhop's in Oxfordſhire, there came to him the Earl of Clarendon, deſiring him to go with him to London about ſome Buſineſs of the Earl's. The Biſhop ask'd the Earl what News, and whether the Queen had miſcarry'd, (which they had heard ſome little time before.) The Earl anſwer'd, He would tell him nothing of the matter then, but he ſhould know more of it when they came to London, where, being come on the Saturday following, they met the Counteſs, who was come home the ſame day from her Eſtate in Berkſhire, and being by the Earl deſir'd to acquaint the Biſhop with that Buſineſs, ſhe ſeem'd to be ſomewhat at a ſtand; but the Earl telling her that he had not told him any thing of it, but had promis'd him he ſhould know it, the Counteſs gave him this Account: That deſigning to go into Berkſhire on Eaſter-Tueſday, ſhe was oblig'd (as being Lady of the Bed-Chamber) to attend the Queen, and to ask her leave. Accordingly ſhe went to Court on Monday, and coming into the Lodgings, ſhe could ſee nobody: but when ſhe came to the Bed-Chamber, ſhe heard a lamentable Voice crying, I am undone! I am undone! At which being ſurpriz'd, ſhe caſt about to find whence the Voice came, and found it to come from the Bed, where ſhe ſaw the Queen ſitting up, and beating herſelf in a fearful manner, uttering theſe Words; at which ſhe being herſelf ready to ſink, the Marchioneſs of Powis came flying upon her, and laying hold of her, ſaid, Madam, what makes you here? and ſo thruſt her out of the Room.

The ſame day, Eaſter Monday, Sir Charles Scarborough, and the Biſhop's Apothecary were invited to dine with the Biſhop of Sarum at Knight's-bridge, and deſired to be there before the reſt of the Company, that my Lord of Sarum might have Leiſure to conſult with them about his Health, where they came accordingly at eleven a-Clock; but they had not been there long, before Sir Charles, being the Queen's Phyſician, was told there was a Meſſenger from Court to ſpeak with him; upon which the Doctor went forth, and coming preſently in again told them he muſt be gone, for the Queen had miſcarried, which Information Biſhop Lloyd had from the Doctor, and Mr. Hemmings the Apothecary. The ſame day, as his Lordſhip was alſo inform'd by Dr. Windebank, Dr. Walgrave, another of the Queen's Phyſicians and a Papiſt, had appointed to meet the ſaid Dr. Windebank at a certain Place and Time upon a Conſult, where Dr. Windebank waited a great while for him; but Doctor Walgrave not coming, the other Doctor was much offended, and ſignify'd his Reſentment to him when he came, or when he ſaw him the next time; upon which Doctor Walgrave excuſed himſelf, telling him that he could not help it, being detain'd with the Queen, with whom he ſtay'd till he plainly ſaw it to be a Miſcarriage, by tokens then mentioned.

Dr. Windebank meeting Dr. Walgrave in St. James's Park on Trinity Sunday in the E-

A. D. 1688. vening, asked him whether he did not tell him two Months before that the Queen had miſcarried, whereas a Child was that Day born; to which Walgrave reply'd, that nothing was impoſſible to God; the other anſwer'd, nay, if you have Miracles among you, I know not what to ſay. Her late Majeſty Queen Anne did not believe the Queen to have been with Child at all, as ſhe told Biſhop Lloyd, till his Lordſhip gave her this Account; and her Reaſon was this, that it being the Cuſtom, when the Queen, or Dutcheſs, did ſhift herſelf, for the greateſt Perſon preſent to do the Office, ſhe had often had the doing of it, at which times ſhe had the Opportunity of ſeeing her naked Body, and when ſhe was quick with Child ſhe would put the Princeſs's Hand on her Belly, and ask her, whether ſhe felt how her Brother kick'd her; but ſhe was never admitted to this Office and Freedom all the time of this Breeding; the Reaſon of which Biſhop Lloyd conceived to be, that there being Apprehenſions of a Miſcarriage, ſhe was kept thus at a diſtance, that ſhe might not diſcover it. The Biſhop ask'd her Highneſs whether ſhe was ſent to the Bath, who ſaid no, that ſhe went upon the Advice of her Phyſicians, but that ſhe ſtay'd there longer than ſhe would have done, before ſhe could get leave to come home; and when ſhe came, ſhe was not admitted to that free Acceſs to the Queen, which ſhe might have expected. His Lordſhip was inform'd by Captain Wright, and a Boatſwain, or from ſome Perſon that had it from them, that they brought over, with the Counteſs of Tyrconnel from Ireland, two big-belly'd Women, the one being taller than the other, and from the Hoſteſs at Lichfield he was inform'd there were two ſuch lodged at her Houſe with the ſaid Counteſs, and ſhe ſaid ſhe heard that one of the Gentlewomen was deliver'd on the Road to London, he thought at St. Albans.

On the Saturday before Trinity Sunday, the Queen being at Cards was pull'd by the Coat, upon which ſhe ſtarted up and left the Company; about eight a-clock the next Morning, as it appears by ſome of the Depoſitions, her Travail begun, it being affirm'd that then her Water broke down, notwithſtanding it does not appear that ſhe had any Company to ſtay with her till about nine: Thoſe few that came in, as Turini an Italian, &c. all Confidents, being told by her Majeſty that ſhe thought herſelf to be in Travail, (whereas the Water is ſaid to be only the Beginning of it) thoſe Perſons were all ſent to call ſome others.

The Counteſs of Sunderland depoſes, that ſhe went that Morning to St. James's Chapel about eight a-clock, deſigning to receive the Sacrament, and that at the Beginning of the common Service, one came and told her that ſhe muſt come to the Queen, who anſwer'd, that ſhe would come when the Service was ended; afterwards ſhe being at the Altar, another came and told her the Queen was in Travail, upon which ſhe went, which muſt be near nine a-clock at leaſt, and was told by the Queen that ſhe thought ſhe was in Travail. All this while the Midwife was not there, neither did ſhe come, as may be gathered from what paſſed, till near Half an Hour after Nine, about which time ſhe came in at a Door on the dark Side of the Bed, which Biſhop Lloyd ſuppoſes to be towards Mrs. Grey's Lodging, and there kneel'd down, the Queen being in Bed; after her comes Delabady the dry Nurſe, and kneeling down by her, as ſhe herſelf depoſes, gave her ſome Clothes for the Queen, in which Clothes the Biſhop ſuſpects the Child newly brought from Mrs. Grey to have been; for ſoon after, preciſely three Quarters after Nine, the Child was brought out of the Bed, not naked, but in looſe Clothes, as the Depoſitions ſay, and being ſhew'd, appear'd to be a Boy. On that ſide of the Bed there were not above three or four Perſons, all Confidents; but on the other ſide, the Curtains being open, ſeveral Perſons ſtood; the Room was long, but one Window in it, four Doors, the Bed at the dark End, and the Feet towards the Window. A. D. 1688.

It is to be obſerv'd, that tho' ſeveral of the Deponents affirm that they ſaw her Majeſty's Shift ſtain'd or ſtiffned with Milk, yet there was no mention of drawing her Breaſts, nor of ſeeing the Milk run out of them after her Delivery; but in February, and without ſpecifying the Day there is, which might be at the Time of her Miſcarriage.

The King told the Privy Council that he was with the Queen all the while of her Travail; yet the Lord M. as I remember, ſwore that he was ſeveral times talking with them in the Drawing-Room. Note the time of the Travail from the coming of the Midwife could not be much more than a Quarter of an Hour.

Here again we muſt obſerve, that this was the firſt time that her Majeſty was delivered in Bed, ſhe being ever before deliver'd openly upon a Pallet-Bed; but then 'twas pretended not to have been air'd, and ſo not ſafe for her Majeſty to make uſe of it. Note, as Dr. Wallis in a Letter to the Biſhop of Worceſter, dated December the 6th or 7th, 1701, which I myſelf read, obſerves, ſhe was not removed into any other Bed after ſhe was deliver'd, nor ſo much as to the other ſide of that, as any the meaneſt Woman muſt have been on Peril of her Life. Several Perſons that ſaw the Child on Sunday ſaid it was black in the Face, and they generally concluded that it could not live till the next Morning. It is ſuppoſed that this was occaſion'd by its being kept ſo long without Air.

The next Day being Monday 'twas reported that the Prince was dead. On that Day the Counteſs of Clarendon went to the Tower to viſit the Biſhops, who ask'd her what News, and whether the Prince was dead; the Counteſs told them that ſhe going that Day to the Lodgings, had the Door ſhut againſt her by a Page, of which ſhe demanded the Reaſon, having Authority, as Lady of the Bed-Chamber, to command any Door to be open'd unto her; but the Page anſwer'd, he had done no more than what he had Command for: upon which, ſhe order'd the Deputy Governeſs, the Lady Strickland, to be call'd, who came and open'd the Door a little, holding it, and told her that by the Queen's Command ſhe muſt not be admitted in.

On Tueſday Mr. Hemmings the Apothecary came to his Lordſhip, then in the Tower, the Biſhop enquired alſo what News; Hemmings ſaid the Prince is dead. Biſhop Lloyd ask'd him how he knew it; he anſwer'd, your Lordſhip knows that there is but a Lath Wall between me and Mr. Brown, Brother to the Lord Montacute, a zealous Papiſt; and I heard in the Night great Lamentation there, that the Prince was dead. On that Day ſeveral Perſons came bringing the ſame News with like Lamentation; among which, one being ask'd how he knew it, ſaid he ſaw it: But towards the Evening came a Popiſh Prieſt, and ask'd why they cry'd, and made ſuch ado, and to comfort them told them the Prince was not dead.

Biſhop Lloyd was told by a Lady that ſaw the Child on Sunday, that the Make of its Face was fine and round, the Eyes black, and that ſhe doubted

A. D. 1688. doubted not but that the Hair would have been ſo; but coming to ſee it ſome time after, the Form was much chang'd, the Face long, the Eyes of a Hazel Blue, or Grey, and the Hair of a reddiſh Yellow, which ſhe obſerving, put her Face very near it; inſomuch, that the Lady Strickland ſpoke to her, and told her that ſhe would hinder its breathing. The ſaid Lady ask'd her how ſhe lik'd it; ſhe ſaid not at all, for that ſhe did believe it to be decaying, and that it would not live, ſhe obſerving ſome Lines in its Face to be the ſame that had been in the Faces of two of her own, who both died; and this Lady added, that ſhe would ſwear 'twas not the ſame Child which ſhe ſaw on Sunday.

Biſhop Lloyd ask'd the Lady of . . . . . how the Queen's Milk was, who ſaid, that ſhe coming to her ask'd that Queſtion, and that the Queen reply'd, that whatever the Matter were, ſhe had none that time. The Biſhop had the ſame Account from the Counteſs of M. ſince he came to Worceſter.

Dr. Chamberlain the Man-Midwife, one of the Queen's Phyſicians, who had been with her at the Birth of all her other Children, but was not call'd at this time, as neither was Mrs. Jackman her old Midwife, being with the Biſhop, his Lordſhip ask'd him how the Queen's Milk was wont to be at other times; the Doctor ſaid it was her Diſeaſe, her Blood turning all to Milk, ſo that they could not dry it up with Plaiſters and Powders, but with great Difficulty, being under Apprehenſions of its throwing her into a Fever. Upon which the Biſhop ſaid, But Doctor, what think you of a Friend of mine that has had a Child, and yet no Milk at all; to which Dr. Lower, who was alſo preſent, reply'd, then I will burn my Books. After this the Child was carried to Richmond for Air, where it had a ſort of an Iſſue made in its Neck on the the 4th or 5th of Auguſt, being Sunday, and the Princeſs was at Tunbridge where Dr. Wake was to preach before her; but before they went to Church, a Meſſenger came from Richmond, bringing an Account that the Prince was dying, and that 'twas ſuppos'd he would be dead before the Meſſenger could come thither; upon which, her Highneſs forbore going to Church, but deſired the Doctor to preach before her in her Lodgings in the Afternoon.

It was ſaid by the Phyſicians, that they ſtaid with it ſo long that they ſaw it dead upon the Bed; and it is further ſaid that the Surgeon who made the Iſſue, and his Wife that aſſiſted him, and, as I think, by holding the Child, looking afterwards on the living Child, found it had no ſuch Iſſue.

Biſhop Lloyd was alſo told by one Cob a Hat-Maker, that he was wont to ſell Hats to a certain Popiſh Haberdaſher who liv'd near Somerſet Houſe, and whom his Lordſhip named, who having given off the Trade, came for Monies that were owing him, at which time the Woman having a young Child in her Arms, bid Cob look upon it, and then went to the Window, bidding him to come and look well upon it, ſeeming to be under ſome Concern, and then ſhe ask'd him whether he thought that would not have made as fine a Prince of Wales of, as any of the reſt. Upon which her Husband coming in, ask'd what they were talking of; the Wife anſwer'd, that ſhe was ſpeaking to Mr. Cob to take Hats for Part of the Money; and Cob to cover the Matter, ſaid he would take thoſe again that were his own, but he would take no others: ſo the Husband was kept from knowing what the Diſcourſe was. Biſhop Lloyd ſpoke once of theſe Matters to the Biſhop of London, it being ſuppoſed that ſeveral Children were laid out for about this time, to be in readineſs. My Lord of London told him there was one, which his Lordſhip of St. Aſaph, afterwards of Worceſter, knew not of, but might inform himſelf from the Wife of a certain Bricklayer that work'd at St. Paul's, who was the beſt Workman there, and a very honeſt Man, but the Biſhops had forgot his Name. So Dr. Lloyd meeting with the Deputy Surveyor, ask'd who was the beſt Workman about St. Paul's, who told him ſuch a one, naming him, and ſaid he believ'd him to be the beſt Workman in England, and a very honeſt religious Man. A. D. 1688.

The Biſhop ask'd him whether he might ſpeak with the Man's Wife, and the Deputy told him he ſhould, and that ſhe ſhould come to him, which accordingly ſhe did, and gave him this Account of the Matter, that ſhe being with Child, and near her time, not long before Whitſuntide there came to her one day, as ſhe was alone in the Shop, ſhe living with her Father and Mother in King's-ſtreet, a buſy intriguing Popiſh Woman that liv'd thereabouts, and ask'd her whether ſhe would part with her Child, ſaying ſhe would help her to a Place for it. To which ſhe reply'd, that they were well enough able to breed up their Children, and therefore ſhe deſir'd no ſuch thing; upon which the Goſſip ſaid ſhe would help her to 1000 l. for her Child, and that he ſhould be bred up like a King. Her Mother over-hearing the Diſcourſe came forth in ſome Paſſion, and ſaid, What will you have my Daughter's Child from her, Children are God's Bleſſings, and ſhe ſhall not part with it for 100,000 l. upon which the Goſſip haſted away with great Speed. Her Father, who was ſitting at the Door ſmoking a Pipe, hearing his Wife in a Paſſion, came in and ask'd what the matter was? who being told the Buſineſs, ſaid they were certainly ſeeking for a Prince of Wales.

Biſhop Lloyd gave us the ſight of two Letters he receiv'd from Dr. Wallis, the one dated November the 19th, the other December the 6th, 1701. In the firſt of which the Doctor gives account of a Meſſenger that came to Oxon, and from thence to a Place in the Country, bringing him a Letter for the Earl of . . . . . then Secretary of State, in which Letter there was an incloſed Paper ſomewhat ſullied, written in Cyphers; the Earl deſir'd the Doctor to decypher it, and to return it by the ſame Meſſenger, if it might be done in a ſhort time, or by another, if it requir'd a longer time, who ſhould be well paid if the Contents of it were of Concern. The Letter was taken in a Trunk among other Papers in Pater-noſter-Row, and was mark'd in the Margin N° 4. and had ſeveral Names and Marks of Names on the Side, ſuppoſed to be Witneſſes at the opening the Trunk; the Superſcription was to Mr. Labadie; I ſaw it in the Doctor's Letter as in Cyphers 'twas written, with the Doctor's Key for opening it, as 'twas decypher'd by him. The Doctor adds, that he ſhew'd the Copy of the Letter to the then Archbiſhop Tillotſon, who did not appear to look upon it as being ſtrange to him, but ſaid, that they did not want for Evidence, if 'twere thought fit to make it publick.

His Lordſhip talking with Dr. Turner Biſhop of Ely about theſe Matters in the time of his Suſpenſion, the ſaid Biſhop told him, that all was to no purpoſe, for he ſhould never take the Oaths whilſt King James was living, but when he ſhould be once dead, he would take them. After King James was dead, the Biſhop met with Dr. Windebanke an old Acquaintance of his, Uncle to Biſhop Turner: The Doctor ſaid to him,

A. D. 1688. now if my Nephew the Biſhop of Ely were living he would take the Oaths; for which the Biſhop ſaid Dr. Hicks was angry with Dr. Windebank, as ſlandering the Biſhop when he was dead.

The Subject of the before mention'd Letter to Delabadie, is to this Effect, and in theſe Words, as near as I remember.

My Dear,

I Am extremely ſollicitous to think how her Majeſty will behave herſelf in this hazardous Undertaking, but I have hope, that by reaſon of the Ingenuity of her Country ſhe will go through with it; Lord! what a happy thing it would be if we could get a Succeſſor to our King that would reſtore the Worſhip of our Forefathers, which can never be but this way. I think it would be well if thoſe Hereticks could be removed from her. Adieu, my Dear, pray do not fail to write to me, and in the ſame hand.

I find I was miſtaken in ſaying, there is no mention made in the Depoſitions of Milk running out of the Queen's Breaſt, ſeveral of them making mention of it; but it is to be obſerved, that none of them ſay 'twas after the time of the pretended Delivery: but one ſays ſhe ſaw it in February, and others ſay they ſaw it without fixing any time, which the Biſhop ſays might well be about the time of her Miſcarriage.

But had they affirm'd it to have been after the pretended Birth, they had contradicted the Queen, who had declar'd to the Counteſs of Clarendon, (his Lordſhip no more doubts of the Counteſs of Clarendon's Salvation than of any Perſon's not recorded in Scripture,) a moſt religious Perſon, and to the Counteſs of M. &c. that ſhe had none. Biſhop Lloyd obſerves, that they had at that time no Apprehenſions of the Buſineſs ever being brought into queſtion, there being then a great Standing Army, a Fleet bigger than that of the Dutch, and the French King to back them, and ſo the Queen was willing to ſave herſelf the trouble of plaſtering and phyſicking, &c. which ſhe muſt have endur'd under pretence of drying up her Milk had ſhe pretended to have any, it being a Work (as Dr. Chamberlaine affirmed) to be done with great difficulty, and not under a Month or ſix Weeks time.

But when the Prince's Declaration came over, queſtioning the matter and giving notice that he would have it clear'd in Parliament, then Depoſitions muſt be made, and ſome Appearance of Milk muſt be provided; I was told before Eaſter laſt by a Gentlewoman who abode at Richmond the laſt Summer, (as I believe ſhe might ſeveral others before) that the Gentry there ſay the Child certainly died, and they believe it to be buried at Chiſwick; that 'twas ſaid there, the Child being ſick the King came to ſee it by Water, and ſent in the Lord Feverſham to ſee whether 'twere living, ſaying if it were dead he would not go in, and that the Lord brought him word again that 'twas alive, but there was no hope. The ſame Gentlewoman ſaid, that ſhe was told by one that was preſe nt in the Room when the Servants came crying out, and ſaying the Prince is dead, yet the next Morning it appeared very well, and a ſtrong lively Child; which agrees with what a Gentlewoman told the Biſhop of Worceſter, that ſhe was to ſee the Child whilſt it was ill, when it was poor and weakly; and that having been away about a Week, ſhe coming to ſee it again, found it to be ſtrangely altered, and that ſhe told them ſhe could not have thought it poſſible for them to have ſo improv'd the Child in that time.

I was told by another Gentlewoman, that being at London when King James was crowned, there came to ſee the Gentlewoman where ſhe was, being with Child, Mrs. Jackman the Midwife, to whom Mrs. Mills ſaid, it would be brave for her to be Midwife to the Queen, ſhe having been ſo for all her Children; to whom the Midwife reply'd, that were it not for the Money, ſhe had rather be Midwife to a meaner Perſon, the Buſineſs being uſually very offenſive, and ſhe added that tho' ſhe did not doubt but that ſhe might conceive, yet ſhe did believe ſhe could not bring any to live: which agrees with what Dr. Walgrave told Dr. Windebank, that for a Reaſon that he knew, there would be no Child to live; with which Dr. Windebank charg'd him in St. James's Park at the time before mentioned; however Mrs. Jackman was not call'd at the time, as neither was Dr. Chamberlaine, which as the Biſhop obſerves was for this good Reaſon, becauſe there was no need of him. The ſame Gentlewoman told me, that being ſince in London, there came into the Houſe where ſhe was, one Mr. Major, a Gentleman of 6 or 700 l. per ann. living in Southwark, of whom the Gentlewoman of the Houſe deſir'd that he would tell her what he had obſerv'd of the Prince of Wales, who told her this Story, that he had a Daughter married againſt his Will to a Courtier and a Papiſt, who was proffer'd a Rocker's Place, whom he frequently viſited, and he was wont to obſerve that there was not that Attendance about the Prince as might have been expected, of which he ſpake to his Daughter, who told him that 'twas thought to be better for the Child's Health. But once coming after ſome time of abſence, he obſerv'd a great Change, and challeng'd his Daughter upon it, who begg'd him upon his Life not to mention ſuch a Thing; but yet by ſome means it got ſome light, and he was brought upon Examination, but no Evidence appearing, he came off.

I was alſo told by another Gentlewoman, that ſhe conceiv'd the Queen Dowager did not believe it to be a true Birth, for that being well acquainted with the Maſter of her Wardrobe, a Welch Man and a Proteſtant, ſhe ask'd him what his Miſtreſs thought of it, and he ſaid Queen Dowager told them, that coming into the Room after the Buſineſs was over, there was ſhew'd her a Child newly born, but ſhe did not ſeem to be of Opinion that 'twas born of the Queen's Body.

Another corroborating Circumſtance.

The Princeſs Anne, then at Tunbridge, hearing the Prince of Wales was dangerouſly ill, ſent Col. Sands her Gentleman Uſher to Court with a Compliment to know how he did. The Duke of Beaufort was the Lord of the Bedchamber in waiting, and the Colonel met him as he was coming up the great Stair-Caſe. As ſoon as the Duke ſaw him, he cry'd, Is it you, Sands? Yes, my Lord, reply'd the Colonel; I am ſent by the Princeſs and the Prince to know how the young Prince does, and deſire your Grace to introduce me to the King as ſoon as can be conveniently. The Duke went away in order to it, and Col. Sands going forwards, came into a Room, where he ſaw a Child dead in a Cradle, and Labadie weeping by it, her Hood over her Face, it had a long pale Viſage full of Puſtles like the ſmall Pox. Sands held his Head down, and try'd to find if it breath'd or not, but ſaw it was dead. He haſten'd to his Audience, and the King having heard his Meſſage, inquired of the Prince and Princeſs of Denmark's Health. After which he ask'd him, if he had ſeen the Child. Col. Sands apprehending that it was intended he ſhould be thought alive, and that there was Danger in ſaying otherwiſe, ſaid, No Sir, I was in the Room, but I did not ſee the Prince. The King ſaid, Then you ſhall ſee him preſently. But he was before that introduc'd to the Queen, who in an extraordinary manner came forth as far as the Stair-caſe, her Eyes ſwoln and red with weeping, and he made her the ſame Compliment as he had done the King from their Royal Highneſſes. Then a Table was laid, and ſeveral Officers, moſt of them Iriſh, attended with a Deſign to drink him to a pitch, as was very plain by their toaſting Bumpers; which he avoided, under pretence that he was to return to Tunbridge that Day, and drinking would ſo diſorder him, he ſhould not be able to perform the Journey. Having refreſh'd himſelf, he was ſhewn the Prince, the Marchioneſs of Powis on one ſide of him, and Mrs. Labadie on the other. He was a luſty Boy, playing with the Fringe of the Curtain in full Health, plump viſag'd, and to appearance ſeveral Months old. As ſoon as Colonel Sands had a convenient Place, he wrote it down all; and riding Poſt back to Tunbridge, arriv'd there ſo tir'd, that he could not relate the Facts at large, but deliver'd it in Writing to the Princeſs; who having read it, cry'd, Good God! Is it poſſible? Some Years after, when ſhe was Queen, ſhe ſhew'd the Paper to Dr. Lloyd Biſhop of Worceſter, telling him, She would ſend for Sands to confirm it. The Biſhop told her he knew him, and would ſpeak with him about it. A few Days after he met the Colonel in St. James's Court; and the Biſhop taking him aſide, had the Matter repeated and circumſtantiated to him. The Queen, in the latter part of her Reign, grew out of humour with this Story, and look'd coldly on the Colonel for telling it, tho' he had always, till then, been in her good Graces. This, with other Circumſtances forgotten by me, I had from Colonel Sands, in Preſence of a very worthy Gentleman now living. The Colonel told this frequently, and there are many Perſons of Note who can bear witneſs to it. Biſhop Lloyd had not ſpoken with Colonel Sands when he gave my Friend the foregoing Account of the Impoſture.

A. D. 1688.

As there is no where ſo full and ſo clear an Account of it, we muſt endeavour to remove an Objection or two that may be made to it.

The firſt is, as to the Information from Bath, That the Queen was not with child when ſhe left that Place, which does not agree with her miſcarrying at Eaſter. It muſt be obſerv'd, that ſhe might have conceiv'd afterwards, and have had the Miſcarriage at Eaſter. And the Princeſs Anne did not think the Queen was with Child at all, till ſhe had heard the Account we have given of it after Biſhop Lloyd.

In the next place, if ſhe had really been with Child, ſhe might, as uſual, have ſafely diſcover'd it to the Princeſs: But ſhe, and all her Confidants might, even in ſuch caſe, have been apprehenſive of the Miſcarriage: And being reſolv'd, at all adventures, that there ſhould be a Child, and a Son, the Princeſs was not admitted to her former Privacies, to prevent her diſcovering the Cheat, if ſhe ſhould miſcarry, and they ſhould be oblig'd to put a ſham Prince upon the Nation.

The King was well adviſ'd by ſome of his true Friends, to take hold of the pretended Delivery of the Queen, for an occaſion of granting a general Pardon to celebrate the Joy of the Birth, in which Pardon the Biſhops would be included, and that Matter well over; but he was inflexible, ſaying, My Authority will become contemptible, if I ſuffer ſuch an Affront to paſs unpuniſh'd.

A. D. 1688.

A Week after their Commitment, June 15th, the Biſhops were brought up on a Habeas Corpus to the King's-Bench Bar, where their Counſel offer'd to make it appear to be an illegal Commitment, but the Court allow'd it good in Law. They were requir'd to enter into Bonds for ſmall Sums, the Archbiſhop 200 l. and other Biſhops 100 l. each, to anſwer the Information that Day fortnight. Then they were diſcharg'd of their Impriſonment, and People of all ſorts ran to viſit them as Confeſſors, one Company going in as another went out. The Appearance in Weſtminſter-Hall was very ſolemn, all the Streets were full of Shoutings the reſt of the Day, and with Bonefires at Night. The Biſhops Trial.

When the fix'd Day for their Trial came, there was a vaſt Concourſe in Weſtminſter-Hall, and all the Places about were full of People, who were ſtrangely affected with the Matter.

This noble Appearance was owing to the indefatigable Care of the Clergy, eſpecially Dr. Tenniſon, late Archbiſhop of Canterbury. What follows, is copy'd from Biſhop Burnet's Hiſtory.

The Trial coming on, was chiefly manag'd againſt the Biſhops by Sir William Williams, who had been Speaker to two ſucceſſive Parliaments, and was a zealous Promoter of the Excluſion. He had continu'd many Years a bold Pleader in all Cauſes againſt the Court; but he was a corrupt and vicious Man, who had no Principles, and in all things follow'd his own Intereſts. Sawyer the Attorney-General, who had for many Years

A. D. 1688. Years ſerv'd the Ends of the Court in a moſt abject and obſequious Manner, would not ſupport the Diſpenſing Power; ſo he was turn'd out, and Powis put in his Place. He acted his Part in this Trial as fairly as his Poſt could admit of. But Williams the Sollicitor-General took very indecent Liberties, and had great Advantages over Sawyer and Finch, who were among the Biſhops Counſel, by reflecting on the Precedents and Proceedings during their being the King's Counſel. There was no ſufficient Proof that the Biſhops Hands were truly theirs, and the King's Counſel were forc'd to have recourſe to the Confeſſion they had made at the Council-Board, which was thought very diſhonourable ſince they had made that Confeſſion in confidence, truſting to the King's Honour. Their publiſhing it was not prov'd, which was the main Point. Their preſenting it to the King, and afterwards their owning it to be their Petition, when it was put to them at the Council-Board, was all that the King's Counſel could offer for proof of this, and which was ſuch an apparent Strain, that even thoſe Judges who were the ſureſt to the Court did not ſeem to be ſatisfy'd. It was much argu'd againſt them, that this Petition was a Libel, tending to the defaming the King's Government. To this it was anſwer'd, That they, having receiv'd an Order, to which they found they could not give Obedience, thought it was incumbent on them as Biſhops and as Subjects, to lay before the King their Reaſons for it. All Subjects had a Right to petition the King. They as Peers were of his Great Council, and ſo had yet a better Claim to that, eſpecially in Matters of Religion; for the Act of Uniformity in Queen Elizabeth's time had requir'd them, under a Curſe, to look carefully after thoſe Matters. The Diſpenſing Power had been often brought into debate in Parliament, and was always voted to be againſt Law; and the late King had yielded the Point, by recalling his Declaration. Thus they thought they had a Right to repreſent theſe things to the King. Occaſion was often taken to reflect on the Diſpenſing Power. The King's Counſel ſaid in anſwer to this, That the Votes of one or both Houſes were not Laws, till they were enacted by King and Parliament; and the late King's paſſing once from a Point of his Prerogative, did not give it up, but only wav'd it for that time. They urg'd much the Sacredneſs of the King's Authority, that a Paper might be true in fact, and yet be a Libel; as good Nonſenſe as one could expect from the Jargon of Chicane. That in Parliament the two Houſes had a Right to petition, but it was Sedition to do it in a Point of Government out of Parliament.

The Trial laſted above ten Hours, the Croud continuing all the while in expectation, and expreſſing ſo great a Concern for the Biſhops, that the Witneſſes who were brought againſt them were not only treated with much Scorn and loud Laughter on every occaſion, but were in ſuch danger, that they eſcap'd narrowly, going away by a back Paſſage. Two of the Judges, Powell and Holloway, deliver'd their Opinions, that there was no ſeditious Matter in the Petition, and that it was no Libel. Wright the Chief Juſtice call'd it a Libel, but did not think the Publication was prov'd. Allibone ſaid it was a Libel, but in giving his Opinion made ſuch a Blunder, that little heed was given to any thing he ſaid afterwards. The Jury were all along very well ſatisfy'd of the Biſhops Innocence, and were ſoon agreed to acquit them; but it was thought to be the more ſolemn and the ſafer Way, to continue ſhut up till the Morning. The King ſtill flatter'd himſelf with the Hope that the Biſhops would be brought in Guilty. He went that Morning to the Camp, for the ill Humour the Soldiers had appear'd in the Day before on news of the Biſhops Trial, made him think it neceſſary to go and keep them in Awe and Order by his own Preſence. A. D. 1688.

The Court ſate the next day, and then the Jury came in with their Verdict Not guilty Upon which the Marquiſs of Hallifax waving his Hat over his Head, cry'd Huzzah! The Lords and Gentlemen took the ſhout from him. It in an inſtant fill'd the whole Hall with the loudeſt Acclamations of Joy, which were immediately taken again by the Crouds waiting in Palace-Yard and in Weſtminſter: from whence, like a Roll and Roar of Thunder, it was carry'd in and thro' the City of London, and ſpread over the Parts adjacent, and as faſt as it could fly, over the whole Kingdom. Every Man ſeem'd tranſported, and notwithſtanding the King diſpatch'd an Order to the Lord Mayor to hinder Bonefires, and the Conſtables were every where out to execute it; yet ſeveral Bonefires were made, and many Illuminations of ſeven Candles, the longeſt in the middle to repreſent the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the ſix Biſhops, then term'd the ſeven Golden Candleſticks. Sir William Williams was much offended with the Shoutings in Weſtminſter-Hall, where, during the Trial, he had been ſeveral times hiſs'd. He mov'd, that ſuch as ſhouted ſhould be ſeiz'd, as was a Gentleman of Gray's-Inn, to whom the Chief Juſtice ſaid, Sir, I am as glad as you can be that my Lords the Biſhops are acquitted; but your manner of rejoicing here is indecent, you might rejoice at your Chamber or elſewhere, and not here. With this Reproof he was diſcharg'd. When the Soldiers heard at the Camp on Hounſlow-Heath that the Biſhops were acquitted, there was ſuch an univerſal Shout, that it ſtartled the King then at an Entertainment in the Earl of Feverſham's Tent, whom he ſent out to know what was the matter. Feverſham coming back, told the King, It was nothing but the Soldiers ſhouted upon the News of the Biſhops being acquitted. The King ſtamp'd his Foot on the Ground, and ſaid, Do you call that nothing? But ſo much the worſe for them. 'Tis generally thought the King meant ſo much the worſe for the Soldiers, whom he would caſhier as he could fill their Places with Iriſhmen and Papiſts: But I read in a French Author that he ſpoke it of the Biſhops, Tant pis pour eux, ſo much the worſe for them. His Preſence kept the Army in ſome Order, but he was no ſooner gone out of the Camp, than he was follow'd with a loud and general Shout, as if it had been a Victory obtain'd. He began now to be afraid he ſhould not be able to get a Parliament to anſwer his Ends, and that he ſhould be oblig'd to make uſe of open Force. In order to this, he thought fit to propoſe the taking off the Penal Laws and Teſt to all the Regiments one by one. A Writing was drawn up for them to ſubſcribe, whereby they engag'd themſelves to contribute, as far as in them lay, towards the Repeal of the Teſts and Penal Laws. He began with the Earl of Litchfield's Regiment, the Major of which was order'd to open his Majeſty's Deſire to that Battalion, and command all ſuch as would not inſtantly comply with it, to lay down their Arms. And he was not a little ſurpriz'd, when he found that except two Captains, and four or five Popiſh Soldiers, the whole Regiment obey'd the latter part of his Command. The King remain'd ſpeechleſs for a while, and having recover'd Biſhops acquitted.

Great Rejoicings.

The King tries the Army about the Penal Laws and Teſt.

ver'd himſelf of his Aſtoniſhment, he commanded them to take their Arms; adding, with a diſcontented ſullen Look, I for the future will not do you the Honour to ask your Advice. And from that time he made all the haſte he could to model the Army, by caſhiering both Proteſtant Officers and Soldiers, ſending for others over from Ireland, to incorporate them in the Engliſh Regiments. Several of the latter were put into the Duke of Berwick's Regiment at Portſmouth.

Lieutenant Colonel Beaumont and his Officers will not admit the Iriſh in their Regiment.

The Lieutenant Colonel John Beaumont Eſq; and five Captains remonſtrated to the Duke, That they did not think it conſiſtent with their Honour to have Foreigners impos'd upon them, without being complain'd of that their Companies were weak, or Orders had been ſent to recruit them, not doubting if ſuch Orders had been given, that what firſt in very ill Times rais'd them Hundreds, could eaſily now have made them according to the King's Complement; therefore they humbly petition'd, that they might have leave to fill up their Companies with ſuch Men of this Nation, as they ſhould judge moſt ſuitable for the King's Service, and to ſupport their Honours, or otherwiſe that they might be permitted with all imaginable Duty and Reſpect to lay down their Commiſſions. Theſe Officers rais'd their Companies at their own Charge in the Time of Monmouth's Expedition. The King being inform'd of it, immediately order'd Lieutenant Colonel Beaumont, Captain Paſton, Captain Pack. and three other Captains to be taken into Cuſtody, and a Court Martial was appointed to try them for their Lives as Mutineers, and no doubt he would have put them to death, if the News from abroad had not ſomewhat moderated his Counſels, for he could not but ſee by the very Reſpect that was paid, not only to the ſeven Biſhops, but to the ſix Captains, whoſe Pictures hung up in almoſt every Houſe, that the Meaſures he had been taking were bringing him into the utmoſt Peril, and that it was high Time for him, who had been upon the Gallop ever ſince his Acceſſion to the Throne, to think of a more gentle Pace; yet he could not help ſhewing his Reſentment againſt Judge Powell, and Judge Holloway, whom he diſcarded, and made Serjeant Baldock, one of the Counſel againſt the Biſhops a Juſtice of the King's Bench. He was under ſuch Infatuation, that even after the Acquittal of the Biſhops, he permitted the Tools of the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion to do the Work of the Papiſts, by proceeding violently againſt the Proteſtant Clergy, who had not read the Declaration. Citations were ſent out, requiring the Chancellors and Archdeacons to ſend in the Liſts of all the Clergy, as well thoſe that had obey'd, as thoſe that had not. Some of the latter were now ſo much animated with the Senſe the Nation had expreſs'd of the Biſhops Impriſonment and Trial, that they declar'd they would not obey the Order, and others excus'd themſelves in ſofter Terms. When the Day came to which they were cited, Auguſt the 16th, the Biſhop of Rocheſter, tho' he himſelf had obey'd the Order, and had hitherto gone along ſitting with the other Commiſſioners, but had always voted on the milder ſide; yet now, when he ſaw Matters were running ſo faſt to the Ruin of the Church, he not only would ſit no more with them, but wrote a Letter to them, in which he ſaid it was impoſſible for him to go on with them any longer, for tho' he himſelf had obey'd the Order of Council, which he proteſted he did, becauſe he thought he was bound in Conſcience to do it; yet he did not doubt but that thoſe who had not obey'd it had gone upon the ſame Principle of following their Conſcience, and he would much rather chuſe to ſuffer with them, than to concur in making them ſuffer. This ſtop'd Proceedings for that Time, and put the Court to a Stand; ſo they adjourn'd themſelves, and never ſate more.

The Clergy ſtill proſecuted.

Biſhop of Rocheſter leaves the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners.

A. D. 1688.

It was apparent to thoſe that were leaſt clear-ſighted, that the whole Conſtitution of England was ſubverted, and that the Adminiſtration was in all its Branches arbitrary and illegal. The King aſſum'd to himſelf a Power to make Laws void, and to qualify Men for Employments, whom the Law had put under ſuch Incapacities, that all they did was null and void. The Sheriffs and Mayors of Towns were no legal Officers. Judges, one of them being a profeſs'd Papiſt, who took not the Teſt, were no Judges. Thus was the Government broken. A Parliament return'd by ſuch Men was no legal Parliament. All this was done by virtue of the diſpenſing Power, which chang'd the whole Frame of our Conſtitution, and ſubjected all the Laws to the King's Pleaſure; for upon the ſame Pretence of that Power, other Declarations might have come out, voiding any other Laws which the Court found ſtood in their way, ſince we had ſcarce any Law that was fortify'd with ſuch Clauſes to force the Execution of it, as thoſe that were laid aſide had in them. And when the King pretended this was ſuch a ſacred Point of Government, that a Petition offer'd in the modeſteſt Terms, and in the humbleſt manner poſſible, calling it in queſtion, was made ſo great a Crime, and carried ſo far againſt Men of ſuch Eminence, it was plain the Deſtruction of the Conſtitution was total, avowedly begun, and violently proſecuted; and according to the Principles of the higheſt Aſſerters of Submiſſion and Obedience. it was now lawful for the Nation to look to itſelf, and ſee to its own Preſervation. Wherefore as ſoon as Men were convinc'd this was lawful, there remain'd nothing but to look to the Prince of Orange, who was the only Perſon that either could ſave them, or had a Right to it. Since by all the Laws in the World, even private as well as publick, he who has in him the Reverſion of any Eſtate has a Right to hinder the Poſſeſſor, if he goes about to deſtroy that which is to come to him after the Poſſeſſor's Death. Let us here turn to the learned Acherley. "King James had parted with the laſt "Parliament in Indignation, and had exercis'd "a Government ſo arbitrary and unwarrantable, "that every one concluded he never intended to "aſſemble another until he could force the Elec-"tions. The Lords and Commons therefore, in "order to diſturb his arbitrary Adminiſtration, "ſent a grand Invitation to the Prince of O-"range, a Prince of the Royal Family, incom-"parably qualify'd, and equally great in the "Field and in the Cabinet, requeſting him as "their Captain to come and attempt their Deli-"verance, and to compel the aſſembling a free "Parliament: At the ſame time thoſe Inviters "ſollicited the States of Holland to furniſh the "Prince with a Fleet and Army ſuitable to the "Undertaking, promiſing not only to reimburſe "the Charges, but to make Returns ſuitable to "the Kindneſs, if their State ſhould ever want "the like Aſſiſtance.

The Conſtitution entirely ſubverted by the King.

The Nation's Right to apply to the Prince of Orange.

And his Right to deliver them.

"Happy it was for Britain, that Holland at "this time was under terrible Apprehenſions "of Invaſion from France by Land, and from "England by Sea, in Execution of the ſecret "League between the two Kings, which made "the Dutch readily embrace the Invitation, to "extricate and wreſt Britain from the French "Alliance." And it is to be remember'd that the Biſhops, according to the Prince's Declaration tion being among thoſe Inviters, they did the ſame thing that was done in 1640 with reſpect to the Scots, and one cannot condemn the Engliſh, who invited the Scots into England, without involving the Biſhops, who invited the Dutch, in the ſame Crime, if it was one, which I am far from aſſerting. Not long before this Noiſe and Clamour upon the Biſhops Trial, and the Attempt to entail Popery and Slavery upon us by ſecuring a Popiſh Succeſſor, Mr. Ruſſel, afterwards Earl of Orford, went to Holland at the Deſire of many of great Power and Intereſt in England, to ſpeak very freely to the Prince, and know poſitively of him what might be expected from him. Mr. Ruſſel had much Diſcourſe with his Highneſs on the Situation of Affairs, the Danger Religion and Liberty were in, and the Hopes People had of his interpoſing effectually to prevent it. The Prince anſwer'd at laſt, that if he was invited by ſome Men of the beſt Intereſt, and the moſt valued in the Nation, who ſhould both in their own Name, and in the Name of others who truſted them, invite him to come and reſcue them, he believ'd he could be ready by the End of September to come over; which acceptable News Mr. Ruſſel carry'd to England, and return'd ſoon after with an Invitation in Form from a great Number of Lords and Gentlemen, and ſome, but not many, Biſhops. Orleans ſays, all the ſeven Biſhops invited him. He had the important Letter made up in the Heel of one of his Shoes, and Mr. Zuyleſtein, whom the Prince had ſent to England to congratulate the Birth of the Pretender, when he return'd to Holland, confirming and corroborating all the Information Mr. Ruſſel had given him, he was fully fix'd in his Purpoſe, and ſet himſelf with great Application to prepare for the intended Expedition, in which he was very much encourag'd by the Accounts he receiv'd of the Hatred the Soldiers and Seamen daily expreſs'd againſt the Papiſts: The latter had ſhewn it in a particular Manner, by threatning to throw ſome Prieſts over-board, whom Sir Roger Strickland had brought to the Fleet to ſay Maſs.

More Steps towards the Revolution.

It has been hinted, that the Engliſh apply'd to the States-General as well as to the Prince of Orange, and it is confirm'd by what is ſaid of it in a Treatiſe written by John Hampden Eſq;

Mr. John Hampden's Account of the Applications to the States and the Prince of Orange.

" The deplorable State of things awaken'd the " Minds of thoſe of our Nobility and Gentry, " who had any thing remaining in them of the " Engliſh Liberty, and Impatience of Slavery, " which has ſo often reſcu'd the Nation from " the Brink of Ruin. They ſaw to what the " Neceſſity of Self-Defence oblig'd them, and " reſolv'd to ſhake off the Yoke they could not " bear. In order to this, many of them apply'd " to ſome principal Members of the States Ge- " neral of the United Provinces, and to the " Prince of Orange their Stadtholder and Cap- " tain General, repreſenting to them how near- " ly they were concern'd in what then paſt in " England, which was but one Branch of " the Deſigns driven on by the French King " and his Adherents, for enſlaving all Eu- " rope, and rooting out what they call'd the " Northern Hereſy, both Name and Thing. " They ſhew'd them, that if they ſuffer'd " the Conſpiracy of our common Enemies to " go on any further, they would infallibly be " involv'd in our Ruin, and that very ſpeedily, " and muſt neceſſarily fall under the French " Yoke, of which they had felt the Weight in the " Years 1672 and 1673; and had lately heard " more of it from thoſe great Numbers of " French Proteſtants, who had taken Refuge in " their Country. They put them in mind of " what had heretofore been done for their Re- " publick by the Engliſh Nation, when they " had newly caſt off the Spaniſh Tyranny, and " were forc'd to implore the Succour of their " Neighbours, againſt a Power which then car- " ry'd on the ſame Deſigns, and much by the " ſame Methods, which we have ſeen copy'd " from them by the French in our Time. They " convinc'd them that all Reaſons of Gratitude, " Humanity, Policy, and Chriſtianity concurr'd " to incline them to the Requeſt of the Engliſh, " and put a helping Hand for oppoſing a Bank " to that Torrent, which otherwiſe would over- " flow all Chriſtendom. Neither was this Buſi- " neſs of a nature to admit Delay; they prov'd " to them by unanſwerable Reaſons, that if " they ſlipt the preſent Opportunity, by the " French King's drawing his Forces to the Up- " per Rhine, to begin the War by the Siege " of Philipsburgh, it would in all probability be " too late to attempt any thing hereafter: The " two Kings hoping by their joint Counſels and " Powers in a ſhort time to put both the Dutch " and Engliſh out of a Capacity to diſpute their " Pleaſure."

A. D. 1688.

Foreign Affairs.

The French King, at the ſame time that he attack'd Philipsburgh, had gone a great way to ſecure Cologne to himſelf, by means of Cardinal Furſtembergh, whom his Money had corrupted ſo far as to betray his native Country Germany to France; and having by the ſame Money got a Majority to chuſe him Elector of Cologne, he was to have put that City and Country into the French King's hands, who would by that means have had a Paſſage open to fall on the Spaniſh Netherlands, and the United Provinces at his pleaſure. The Pope would not confirm the Election of Furſtembergh, and the Confederates got Prince Clement of Bavaria choſen Biſhop, by a ſufficient Number of Voices to procure the Pope's Confirmation: But to ſupport this Election againſt France, 'twas neceſſary for the Allies to make warlike Preparations; and it furniſh'd the Prince of Orange with ſo good a Blind for his, that neither the King of England, nor the King of France had any Jealouſy of their being deſign'd againſt England, till the Operations of the Campaign on the ſide of Germany were concluded upon, which left the Prince at liberty to purſue his intended Expedition for the Deliverance of the Engliſh.

The Diſpoſition of foreign Princes towards the Enterprize.

The Elector of Brandenburgh came heartily into the Deſign, as ſoon as it was communicated to him, ſo did Dankleman his chief Miniſter and Favourite, who had great Influence over him.

The Emperor of Germany, and even the Pope approv'd of it, as the only Means to hinder the King of England's putting his whole Weight into the French King's Scale, and utterly deſtroying the Ballance, which in good Policy and Intereſt he ought to have maintain'd.

The King of Sweden fell generouſly in with it, and offer'd to ſupply the States with any Number of Troops which they ſhould ſend to England with the Prince.

The Landgrave of Heſſe-Caſſel, the Duke of Lunenburgh-Zell, who had a particular Regard and Affection for the Prince of Orange, made the like Offers; and ſeveral other German Princes, as well Papiſts as Proteſtants, had the Deſign communicated to them, and not only gave it their Approbation, but promis'd their Aſſiſtance, by purſuing thoſe Meaſures on the Continent, which would be moſt favourable to it.

In the mean time ſeveral Lords and Gentlemen went forwards and backwards to and from Holland under various Pretexts, and the Court of England was ſo exalted with the Hopes of a Popiſh Succeſſor, that they did not much con-

A. D. 1688. cern themſelves about Foreign Affairs, but remain'd in great Security till they were in the Extremity of Danger.

Carry'd on in London. I have mention'd Mr. Ruſſel's coming to England for the Invitation in Form; beſides him the Lord M—— came privately over with Inſtructions to feel the Pulſe of the principal Citizens of London; and he had ſeveral Meetings with them in the Houſe of one of the Houblons, from whom he receiv'd all the Aſſurances that were deſir'd of them. And I remember very well that after one of thoſe Meetings I was at Dinner with two Aldermen, Sir J. B. and Sir J. F. when much Diſcourſe was of a ſpeedy Deliverance; and the former being going to Tunbridge in Auguſt, told the latter, he hop'd they ſhould have the good News by the Time he came back again. I was too young to give them any Caution as to my hearing them, and had it explain'd to me after the Revolution.

About the ſame time one Joſeph Flight, afterwards a Tobacconiſt near the Royal Exchange, brought over near Fourſcore Letters to as many of the prime Nobility and Gentry; he mention'd to me the Earl of Devonſhire in particular, that Lord being very open with him, and delivering him ſome Advices by word of Mouth, he carry'd back Anſwers with great Diſpatch and Safety.

And in Holland. The Prince prevail'd with the States to provide a Fund for 9000 Seamen, and order'd a ſelect Body of Troops to rendezvous near Nimeguen, not far from the Elector of Brandenburgh's Camp, who had march'd his Army thither, to act in conjunction with the Confederates, alarm'd by the Dauphin's Hoſtilities in Germany.

The Prince's frequent Journies to the Army had given Umbrage to the Count d'Avaux and Marquis d'Albeville, Ambaſſadors of England and France at the Hague; eſpecially when there was an Interview between the Prince and the Marquis de Caſta naga Governor of the Spaniſh Netherlands on the Frontier, wherein Matters were concerted for the Defence of thoſe Provinces in the Prince's abſence. His Highneſs's Friends gave out it was about ſome Affairs depending between the Prince and the Count de Solne, concerning certain Lands in the Dependance of Conde, France having undertaken the Protection of that Count. This was in Auguſt, and tho' the Marquis d'Albeville went to London about that time, ſo ſecret were the Prince of Orange's Counſels, that King James had then no manner of Notice of his Highneſs's Intentions. The whole Expedition was manag'd with ſo much Secrecy and Caution, as fully confirm'd the Character which common Juſtice extorted from the Mouth of his implacable Enemy, the French King, who ſaid of him, that he was, *Le meilleur Homme de Cabinet en l'*Europe, The greateſt Man for Counſel in Europe.

The Prince having detach'd from his and the Brandenburgh Camp, what Forces he thought neceſſary, the King of Sweden furniſh'd the Dutch with a Body of Troops equivalent to thoſe his Highneſs had order'd to march nearer the Coaſts, to be ready for Embarkation. The ſeveral Cities of Holland had provided their ſeveral Quota's of Ships, Men of War and Tranſports, purſuant to the Orders that had been ſent them three Months before, which were executed with all poſſible Chearfulneſs and Diſpatch. There was not a Man in Holland, Papiſts only excepted, who was heard to murmur at the Charge and Hazard of the Enterprize. Men, Women and Children lifted up their Prayers to Heaven for his Highneſs's Succeſs, and the Deliverance of England.

Both the Prince and the States ſtill kept up the Forms that are uſual between Princes and Powers not in War. King James ſtill continu'd to write Letters of Civility, till near the Time of the Expedition; and the King's Stateſmen complain'd, that the Secret of a Buſineſs, which depended entirely upon Secrecy, was not communicated to them; tho' it would have ſhewn the Court at the Hague to be as ill Politicians as that at Whitehall, if they had given the latter an Opportunity to obſtruct the Deſign by calling in French Forces. A. D. 1688.

We muſt leave the Conduct of this important Affair for a while, to ſee how it was become extremely neceſſary in the Kingdoms of Scotland and Ireland.

Nothing very remarkable happen'd in Scotland, from the Proclamation for Liberty of Conſcience to the Revolution. The Proclamation having blunted the Edge of Perſecution for a time, we ſhall content ourſelves with a ſummary Relation of the Sufferings of the Proteſtants in Scotland under Sharp, and his Succeſſors, made by one who had it from a Reverend Miniſter of the Church of Scotland. " more and more."

Which extremely exaſperated their Perſecutors, who, notwithſtanding the Toleration, rag'd ſtill againſt them, as in the Caſe of the Reverend Mr. James Renfrew, whom the Prelatical Party in Scotland murder'd, even after the Prince of Orange was landed in England; and juſt at the ſame time did the Scots Prelates ſend a Letter to King James, wherein they ſay, We magnify the Divine Mercy in bleſſing Your Majeſty with a Son, and us with a Prince, whom we pray Heaven may bleſs and preſerve to inherit with your Dominions, the Illuſtrious and Heroick Virtues of his auguſt and moſt ſerene Parents. We are amaz'd to hear of the Danger of an Invaſion from Holland, which excites our Prayers to God to give ſuch Succeſs to Your Majeſty's Arms, that all who diſturb the Peace of your Realms may be cloath'd with Shame; and that you may have the Hearts of your Subjects, and the Necks of your Enemies. Sign'd by,

This Letter, written at a time when the reverend Biſhops and Clergy of England were deeply engag'd in the Deſign to defend their Religion, Laws and Liberties, which this King had ſo often and ſo tyrannically invaded and broken, gave univerſal Offence, and prepar'd the way for rooting out Prelacy and Perſecution in Scotland, where, ever ſince the Reformation, they had always gone hand in hand.

P. 288. The Author of the Memoirs of the Church of Scotland informs us, that Mr. Renfrew the Miniſter was put to death the 17th of February, the beginning of the Revolution Year, teſtifying that the Prelatical Party in Scotland, who were in ſuch high Eſteem with Archdeacon Echard, never "abated or relented, were never "ſatiated with Blood; but went on as long as "they had power, even till they ſaw the very "Cloud hovering, and the Storm ready to break "upon their Heads. Nor had their Thirſt of "Blood been quench'd to this day, or as long "as there had been a faithful Member of the "Church of Scotland left alive, had their Power "laſted; ſo that it was the end of their Go-"vernment which put an end to their ſangui-"nary Severities, and no Clemency, Pity, or "Compaſſion in them. No ſuch things were ſo "much as nam'd among them." Mr. Renfrew before he was executed, made a very affecting Speech, in which was this remarkable Expreſſion: Do not fear that the Lord will caſt off Scotland, for he will certainly return again, and ſhew himſelf gracious in our Land. He added, I leave my Teſtimony againſt all Profaneneſs, and every thing contrary to ſound Doctrine. I leave my Teſtimony againſt all Uſurpations made upon Chriſt's Rights, who is the Prince of the Kings of the Earth, who alone muſt bear the Glory of Ruling his own Kingdom the Church. And in particular, I leave my Teſtimony againſt the abſolute Power uſurp'd by this Uſurper, that belongs to no Mortal, but is the incommunicable Prerogative of JEHOVAH, and againſt this Toleration flowing from that abſolute Power. Here he was bid have done, and the Executioner did his Work. Is there any great difficulty in diſtinguiſhing the Cauſe that ought to have been eſpous'd? That of the Scots Prelates, who in the midſt of their Glory and Pride, bore their Teſtimony for that abſolute Power; or that of the Scots Miniſter, who with his dying Breath, and when he was about to yield up his Spirit into the Hands of God who gave it, bore his Teſtimony againſt it.

Ireland. We have mention'd the Alteration made in the Government of Ireland upon Tyrconnel's Advancement to it; and the Advances towards Tyranny and Popery were every day there more forward and direct. The Privy-Council of Ireland is a great Part of the Conſtitution, and has conſiderable Powers and Privileges annex'd to it. This was ſo model'd, that the Papiſts made the Majority; and thoſe few that were Proteſtants, choſe for the moſt part to decline appearing at the Board with ſuch a ſorry Company, ſince they could do thoſe of their Religion no Service. A Gentleman then on the ſpot tells us, "Except Rice, Daly and "Nagle, there was not a Man of them that had "common Senſe; inſomuch that Rice and Daly "would often complain, that nothing could paſs "at the Council-Board which concern'd the Pub-"lick, but their Country-men muſt firſt ask Tague, "If that would not ſpoil his Potatoe-Garden." A. D. 1688.

The great Barrier of the People's Liberties in Ireland, as well as England, was their Right to chuſe their own Repreſentatives in Parliament; which being once taken away, they became Slaves to the Will of the Prince. The Proteſtants of Ireland finding a Neceſſity of ſecuring this Right in their own Hands, had procur'd many Corporations to be founded, and had built many corporate Towns at their own Charges: from all which, the Roman Catholicks were by their Charters excluded. To break this Barrier, Tyrconnel began with the City of Dublin. In order to this, he had got a Letter from the King in the Lord Clarendon's time, to admit Papiſts to the Freedom of that City, and all other Corporations: Which the then Lord Mayor refus'd, but his Succeſſor Caſtleton paſs'd the Iriſh Freemen, and the Example was follow'd throughout the Kingdom. However, the Papiſts were ſo mean and beggarly in moſt of the trading Towns, that the Proteſtants ſtill kept the Majority. Upon which, Tyrconnel reſolv'd to call in the Charters by the King's Authority; and ſending for the Lord Mayor, told him it was his Majeſty's Pleaſure, that the Charter of Dublin ſhould be ſurrender'd into his hands. All Application to him being to no purpoſe, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council ſent their Recorder Sir Richard Rieves to London, with a Petition to the King; to whom he was introduc'd by the Duke of Ormond, and deliver'd the Petition on his Knees; but the King had been ſo prepoſſeſs'd againſt it by Tyrconnel, that upon the firſt ſight of Sir Richard, he ask'd him, If he had the Lord Deputy's Leave to come with it; adding, I have thoſe in Ireland that underſtand the Law better than yourſelf, and ſo he turn'd from him. The Duke of Ormond told him frankly, he could do him no Service, ſo Rieves went back as he came. And the Charter of Dublin being diſſolv'd by Quo-Warranto, there was no hope of ſaving any other Corporation, tho' there was not the leaſt Shadow of Law for diſſolving them. New Charters were granted to all the Corporations, with a Clauſe in every one of them, by which they were ſubjected to the Will and Pleaſure of the King, and conſequently were put into the power of the Chief Governor to turn out and put in whom he pleas'd, without ſhewing a Reaſon or formal Trial at Law.

Having formerly made mention of Sheridan, who was now become Prime Miniſter in Ireland, as far as Tyrconnel would let him, we muſt add ſomething of both of them out of a Treatiſe entitled, The ſecret Conſults and Intrigues of the Romiſh Party in Ireland. Tyrconnel having diſcover'd that Sheridan had a ſeparate Purſe in the Buſineſs of ſelling of Places, and being both Principal Secretary of State and firſt Commiſſioner of the Cuſtoms, had great Opportunities of doing it, was much diſguſted; but much more, when he found out that many of thoſe Bargains were made under pretence of the Perſons being recommended by himſelf: For Sheridan overdoing of it, made one Dickinſon, another Commiſſioner, write to the Lords of the Treaſury againſt putting in unqualify'd Perſons, which were recommended by Tyrconnel as he thought; and the Lords wrote back, that the Commiſſioners ſhould take no notice of any ſuch Recommendation, and Orders were ſent to the Lord-Deputy not to intermeddle in the Revenue. Tyrconnel highly reſented it, and Sheridan from that time time contriv'd to undermine him. His firſt Stratagem was, to prepoſſeſs the Romiſh Clergy againſt him; and to accompliſh it, he contracts an intimate acquaintance with Tyrconnel's Chaplain, who moſt frequently officiated. The Prieſt pick'd up what he could of Tyrconnel's Contempt of the Maſs and Prayers. One particular Charge was, that when the Army was in the Camp at the Currah of Kildare, the Deputy being at play in his Tent, his Chaplain came to know if his Excellency would go to Maſs; he reply'd, No, I will ſend one, naming ſomebody by him, to ſtand in my Place, and that will do as well.

This and other ſuch Sayings being put together, were tranſmitted to Father Petre, whoſe Niece Sheridan had marry'd, and his Zeal recommended him to the Favour not only of that Jeſuit, but all the Iriſh Clergy, particularly the titular Primate of Armagh, who contracted an intimate Familiarity and Acquaintance with him; and in conjunction with the beforemention'd Prieſt, form'd Articles againſt Tyrconnel, which Sheridan was to carry to Court; but the Deputy deny'd him a Licence to go to England: upon which, Sheridan writes to a Couſin of his at London to take out a Licence from the King. Tyrconnel came to the Knowledge of it, and conſulted with his two Confidents Rice and Nagle, what he might intend by it; and it was reſolv'd, that another Prieſt belonging to the Deputy ſhould get into the Confidence of Sheridan and the Chaplain: which he effected by ſpeaking againſt Tyrconnel, and pretending to add Articles againſt him to their Information, he was let into the whole Secret of it; and a Charge being drawn up by Sheridan himſelf, was incloſ'd in a Letter to his Couſin, under Covert with other Letters. The Prieſt having ſeen Sheridan do all this, gives notice of it immediately to Rice and Nagle, who with the Lord-Deputy conſulted how to intercept the Packet, which was eaſily done. A Meſſenger was ſent at twelve a-clock at night aboard the Boat for the Mail, which they open'd, took out Sheridan's Packet, open'd that alſo, and taking out the Letter with the Charge in it, ſent the reſt forward in the Mail.

Rice and Nagle advis'd Tyrconnel to write to Lord Sunderland, ſetting forth Sheridan's Briberies and other ſiniſter Practices, without taking any notice of Sheridan's Contrivances againſt himſelf. Lord Sunderland acquainted Father Petre with it, and Tyrconnel not doubting but Sheridan would have it all from that Jeſuit, came to an open Rupture with him, upbraided him with ſending a Charge againſt him to London; and on the Secretary's denying it, he ſhew'd it to him under his own Hand. Upon which, Sheridan charging him with writing againſt him, Tyrconnel call'd him Rogue, Cheat, Traytor, and offer'd to kick him; but Judge Daly pieced them together again, leaving ſtill mutual Jealouſies working in their Breaſts.

Tyrconnel, out of hatred to Sheridan, reviv'd the Quarrel the Iriſh Clergy had with the titular Primate, who was Friend to Sheridan; and it went ſo far, that the Archbiſhop of Caſhel and others apply'd to the King to have a Coadjutor impos'd on the Primate: For the Popiſh Biſhops in Ireland behav'd as if they had been already in poſſeſſion of the Powers and Revenues belonging to the Proteſtant Prelates. The King wrote to the Pope about it, aggravating the Primate's Miſcarriages: But the Pope anſwer'd, He was one of his own chuſing, and Father Petre wrote a Letter of Reprimand about it to Tyrconnel, the Church being made ridiculous by this Jarring. So the Matter was huſh'd up, and the Primate reconcil'd to the Deputy. A. D. 1688.

Sheridan being a ſecond time refus'd Leave to go to England by Tyrconnel, apply'd a ſecond time to the Court of England, and by his Wife's means obtain'd it. But when he arriv'd at London, he waited near four-and-twenty Hours before he could ſpeak with the Earl of Sunderland, and had then but a cold Reception; and he found by his other Applications, that Tyrconnel was ſupported by the French Intereſt, being more a Deputy to King Lewis than King James; inſomuch, that when News came to Paris that Tyrconnel was turn'd out, 'twas ſaid, There was none in England durſt move him.

The Lord Caſtlemain and Lord Powis wiſh'd well to Sheridan's Project, but were afraid to truſt him with their Sentiments; nor would Father Petre carry him to the King. At laſt, upon his diſſembling the Matter, and proteſting he had no Articles againſt the Lord-Deputy, Sunderland introduc'd him: yet even then the King would not hear him ſpeak, ſo afraid was he of offending the French King, whoſe Creature Tyrconnel was.

Sheridan had not been three Days in London before he was follow'd by the Lord Dungan, Son to the Earl of Limerick, who brought Letters to Sunderland, ſetting forth Sheridan in ſuch black Characters, that Father Petre would admit him no more into his preſence. The Lords Powis and Caſtlemain deſerted him, by which means he was wholly left to himſelf, and Tyrconnel's Party vigorouſly proſecuted him as a Delinquent, and the Matter was by the King's Order referr'd to the Judges in Ireland. After the Secretary's Place had been taken from him, Lord Sunderland wrote to Tyrconnel to have compaſſion on the poor Man in conſideration of that. Upon his return to Dublin, he repair'd to the Caſtle, but the Deputy would not ſee him. He then went to the Cuſtom-Houſe to take his Seat at that Board. Upon which the Judges were conſulted, and they advis'd Tyrconnel to ſuſpend him. An Order of Suſpenſion was accordingly ſent him, and he coming to the Caſtle, diſputed the Matter as not being in the Power of the Deputy. This aggravating his former Crime, upon further Conſult with the Judges 'twas agreed, that the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms ſhould write to all the Collectors in the Kingdom to hold no Correſpondence with Sheridan, in regard he was ſuſpended from acting in the Revenue. A Day being appointed for hearing him, he mov'd for longer time, which was readily granted, on account of a Storm that threaten'd Tyrconnel from Rome, which requir'd the beſt Cunning of his Counſellors and Creatures to divert it.

The Earl of Caſtlemain, who had ventur'd his Neck for a vain uſeleſs Embaſſy to the Pope, found no notice taken of him at his Return, which made him write back to his Friends at Rome, to repreſent his Merits to the Holy See, and the Diſregard he met with in England. The Pope wrote to his Nuntio to addreſs the King in his behalf, but at preſent there was no Vacancy. So to make one, Father Petre ſtruck at Jefferies, whom he accus'd of dealing doubly in the Affair of Magdalen-College, and of Backwardneſs in other Inſtances, to the Prejudice of the Catholick Cauſe; which could never be eſtabliſh'd, unleſs the Prime Miniſters and the World were given to underſtand, That no Service they had done, or could do, ſhould protect them, if they fail'd in the leaſt Circumſtance. Upon this, the Lord Caſtlemain's Affair was brought into the Cabinet-

Jefferies like to be out.

A. D. 1688.

Cabinet-Council the 17th of December 1687, at Night, when it was reſolv'd, That Jefferies ſhould be put out, and that three of the Lords of the Treaſury ſhould be made Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, and the Earl of Caſtlemain Lord Treaſurer. Which Reſolve continu'd ten Days. The Scene was on a ſudden chang'd, and Jefferies fix'd faſter than ever, ſuppos'd to be by the Intereſt of the Queen and Sunderland. This adminiſter'd freſh Cauſe of Diſguſt to Caſtlemain, and to the Church Party; for now it began to appear, that Affairs went as France directed, even in oppoſition to the Pope. Such inſuperable Difficulties, ſays my Author, had the Folly of that poor unfortunate King expos'd him to! His Zeal and Affection led him to adhere to Rome, but his Dependance was entirely built upon France.

The Church-Party embrac'd the Opportunity of Sheridan's Quarrel with Tyrconnel to recommend Caſtlemain as a fit Perſon for the Government of Ireland, Tyrconnel proceeding by too ſlow a Motion, and Caſtlemain was a Man of great Parts, who would win upon People by his prudent Carriage, whereas Tyrconnel had frightned away Thouſands out of the Kingdom. The Lord Deputy had ſoon Intimation of it, ſo had his Friends at Paris; and he held a new Conſultation with Rice and Nagle how to avoid the Danger that threatned him, and the beſt way they could think of, was to draw up an Act of Parliament, which in a manner put the Lands of the whole Kingdom in the power of the King, and then the only Hope that remain'd for the keeping them, would be by being of the King's Religion. They doubted not of getting a Parliament to paſs it, the Corporations and Sheriffs being already their own. With the Draft of this Act Rice and Nagle went to London, where they ſoon had the Term of the Iriſh Ambaſſadors conferr'd on them. Rice made his Court to Sunderland, whom he found not very favourable to his Deſign, neither was Father Petre at firſt; but the French Faction encouraged him, and Petre was brought over by the Aſſurances he gave him of Tyrconnel's Zeal and Conſtancy in the Cauſe, as was alſo Lord Sunderland in an Opinion, that it would preſerve Tyrconnel in the Lieutenancy, out of which he had ſo good Rent. The King approv'd of the Project preſently, and took upon him to bring it into Council, which he did in few Words, acquainting them with its Contents and Importance, and by whom preſented to him. No Man ſpoke for or againſt it, but they deſir'd it might be heard; which being done, the Lord Bellaſis inveigh'd bitterly againſt it, ſaying, If ſuch Deſigns as theſe are encourag'd, they of England, meaning the Papiſts, had beſt in time look out for ſome other Country, and not ſtay to be made a Sacrifice for Iriſh Rebels. Powis according to the beſt of his Underſtanding ſeconded it, and in a word 'twas ſo run down, that neither Sunderland nor Petre durſt attempt to ſpeak a Word in its Vindication, but only deſired that thoſe Gentlemen who brought over thoſe Papers might be heard. Lord Bellaſis was for committing them, or commanding their immediate Return, but 'twas at laſt thought reaſonable to hear them, ſo a Day was appointed.

The Iriſh Ambaſſadors heard.

The Noiſe of this, and the Succeſs it met with at the Council-Board, flew abroad with great Exclamations, the Boys in the Street running after the Coach where Rice and Nugent at any time were, with Potatoes ſtuck on Sticks, and crying, Make room for the Iriſh Ambaſſadors.

When the Hearing came on, Rice made a Speech in anſwer to the Lord Bellaſis's and Lord Powis's Objections; but when Nugent came to ſpeak, my Author ſays, "He kick'd down all "that Rice had done, and Bellaſis preſently diſ- "cover'd the Defect of his Wild-Iriſh Under- "ſtanding, as he call'd it, railing at him beyond "the Reſpect due to the Place where the King "was, calling him Fool and Knave, &c. Lord "Powis did the ſame."

A. D. 1688.

They were not long in tearing this fine Project to pieces, which when they had done, Bellaſis bid them make haſte to the Fool their Maſter, and bid him next Meſſage he ſent, to employ wiſer Men, and upon a more honeſt Errand. Powis ſaid, Tell him the King has better uſe to make of his Catholick Subjects in England, than to ſacrifice them for a Reprize to the Proteſtants of Ireland in lieu of their Eſtates there. After this the Iriſh Ambaſſadors appear'd no more.

Then new Attempts were made in behalf of Caſtlemain, and many juſt and reaſonable Allegations were laid down before the King for the Removal of Tyrconnel by ſober conſidering Perſons, yet were they all to no purpoſe; for tho' the King kept it private from moſt of the Council, Yet, continues the ſame Writer, certain it is, he had promiſed the French King the Diſpoſal of the Government of Ireland. P. 653

Upon the Return of Rice and Nugent, Sheridan began to reſume his former Inſolence, expecting that their ill ſucceſs would have ruin'd Tyrconnel; and he himſelf thought he ſhould be removed, ſaying to ſome Officers, Tho' I have had great Aſſurance from the King, that I ſhall not be diſplac'd, yet now I hear I ſhall, and wiſh I had given 500 Pounds to have known it a Month ſooner.

The Charge againſt Sheridan was for Bribery and Extortion, and tho' the Proof was ſufficient, his Puniſhment was only to loſe his Employments.

About the ſame time, News was brought to Ireland of the Birth of the ſuppoſed Prince of Wales; for which, the Bearer Sir Mat. Bridges, receive the Honour of Knighthood, and no Tongue can expreſs the Extravagance of the Joys of the Iriſh. They ſo inſulted the Engliſh upon it, that the latter were become the Scorn of their very Slaves and Vaſſals, inſomuch that the meaneſt Labourer would now on the leaſt Provocation threaten to hang his Maſter. My Author was an Ear-Witneſs of one Inſtance of it. A Labourer came to his Maſter very ſoberly and told him, he ow'd him a Cow, and bid him give it him preſently. The Gentleman laugh'd at him as owing him nothing: the Fellow grew angry; the Gentleman call'd him Raſcal, and offer'd to beat him, but the Servant was not only too quick but too ſtrong for his Maſter, whom he was very fairly about to cudgel, if Company had not interpoſed and diverted him from his Intention. However he ſaid in Iriſh, You Engliſh Churl, by St. Patrick I will hang thee with theſe Hands, as well as ever thou waſt hang'd in thy Life. The poor Gentleman was afraid he would have given him ſuch a hanging as is never uſed but once.

As ſoon as it was ſaid the Queen had conceived, the Iriſh were confident it would be a Son, and would lay Twenty Guineas to One upon it.

The Deputy took away Chriſt Church from the Proteſtants for the Uſe of the Papiſts. Prieſts and Monks appeared every where in their Habits, and when the Proteſtants were celebrating the anniverſary Feſtival for the Extinction of the Iriſh Rebellion in 1641, the Papiſts fell upon them, and ſome Troops were order'd to diſperſe or kill them. Certain Soldiers nail'd a Bible to the Gallows, and making a Fire, tore the Leaves out by Parcels and flung them into the Flames as a Traytor condemned to ſuch Puniſhment; but a Proteſtant having ty'd ſome Beads about a Dog's Neck, was whip'd by the common Hangman.

I might here fill a large Volume with Inſtances of the Injuſtice, Cruelties, Robberies, Rapines, and Rapes exercis'd by the Iriſh againſt the Engliſh, from this time to the Revolution; but it is related ſo copiouſly in the above mention'd Tract, and Biſhop King's State of the Proteſtants of Ireland, that I muſt refer to them.

Tyrconnel had the firſt News of the Prince of Orange's intended Expedition by a Ship from Amſterdam: he ſent the Letter to England; the Lord Sunderland ſhew'd it to the King, who made a Jeſt of it, as appear'd by Sunderland's ridiculing his Intelligence. However, the News coming every day, it was at laſt generally believ'd; and the Deputy for a while behav'd as if he was in great Doubt and Conſternation: But the impudent Nugent told the Grand Jury of Dublin, The States of Holland are weary of the Prince, and have ſent him over to be dreſs'd as Monmouth was, but that is too good Fortune for him; I doubt not before a Month paſſes, to hear that they are hung up all over England in Bunches, like Ropes of Onions. This poor Creature was made Lord Rivsrſton by King James, and a Seat given him in the Houſe of Peers in Ireland, when he much better deſerv'd a Place in the Pillory, or rather on that Gibbet, to which his Countrymen nail'd the Bible.

The Progreſs of the Revolution.

Thus we ſee the whole Conſtitution of the three Kingdoms, Spiritual and Temporal, entirely ſubverted, the Coronation Oath broken, the Laws violated, and Religion alter'd, as far as the King could do it; what then remain'd, but for the three injur'd Nations to apply for Deliverance, to the Prince who had a Right and an Inclination to deliver them. The means for accompliſhing it continu'd to be concerted in England and Holland, and things by the latter end of Auguſt were in ſuch Forwardneſs, that it was not poſſible to keep it long a Secret. The firſt Cauſe of Suſpicion which made Impreſſion on King James, was an Information daily given of vaſt Remittances made to Holland, as near 40,000 l. by the Earl of Shrewsbury, who borrow'd it on his Eſtate

Lords and Gentlemen engage with the Prince of Orange.

Mr. Johnſtoun.

Beſides Mr. Ruſſel before-mention'd, Mr. Johnſtoun, Son to the Laird of Wariſtoun, paſt from England to France, and ſo to Holland, with very good Intelligence; on which his Highneſs the Prince of Orange built very much, and made uſe of him as his Secretary, for the Engliſh Correſpondence to the Time of the Embarkation. This worthy Gentleman is the ſame who was afterwards Secretary of State for Scotland, and who has on many Occaſions diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by his Services to the Publick in the Cauſe of Religion and Liberty, for which he has the beſt Qualifications, by Genius and Experience.

Mr. Hampden.

Richard Hampden Eſq; Son of the great Hampden in Charles the Firſt's Time, was very inſtrumental in forwarding the Prince's Expedition, by engaging in it many Perſons of great Worth and Intereſt, and he was in the Depth of the Secret; as was alſo his Son John Hampden Eſq; before-mention'd, and Mr. Powle, afterwards Speaker of the Houſe of Commons.

Admiral Herbert.

Admiral Herbert had been hardly us'd by the King in paſſing his Accounts, and was alſo diſguſted that Lord Dartmouth had more of the King's Confidence than himſelf, which, according to Biſhop Burnet, was believ'd the Root of all the Sullenneſs he fell under towards the King, and of all the Firmneſs that grew out of that. But his Behaviour after the Revolution, and at his Death, gave reaſon to believe that he acted out of Principle.

A. D. 1688.

The Lord Mordaunt, now Earl of Peterborough, went to Holland in 1686 with the King's Leave, and preſs'd the Prince of Orange to undertake the Buſineſs of England, repreſenting it ſo eaſy, that Biſhop Burnet ſays, it appear'd too romantical; but he could not repreſent it more eaſy, than by God's Providence it prov'd to be. His Highneſs told him, If the King went about to change the eſtabliſh'd Religion, or to wrong the Princeſs in her Right, or to raiſe forg'd Plots to deſtroy his Friends, he would try what he could do.

Lord Mordaunt.

We have ſpoken of the Earl of Shrewsbury already, he came over to the Hague in 1687, and was extremely welcome to his Highneſs, in whom his modeſt Deportment gave him ſuch an Intereſt, that he never ſeem'd ſo fond of any of his Miniſters.

Earl of Shrewſbury.

Mr. Ruſſel communicated the Deſign firſt to this Earl, and then to the Lord Lumley, afterwards Earl of Scarborough, who were both Converts from Popery; and their Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion and the Liberty of their Country, was a juſt Reproof to many, who never had been of any other Religion.

Lord Lumley.

Mr. Sidney, Brother to the Earl of Leiceſter and Col. Sidney, had been in Holland in the Beginning of this Reign, and having no mind to put himſelf under it again, he went to travel till Matters were ripe for Negotiation. In Italy 'tis ſaid he had private Audiences of the Pope, and propos'd to him Methods to hinder England's joining with France againſt the Liberties of Europe. There could be no other Method but the Revolution, and ſo far 'tis probable Odeſcalchi fell in with it. Mr. Sidney returning to Holland, found things were ripening, and from thence he paſt over to England, where he try'd the Marquis of Hallifax, as to inviting the Prince of Orange, which that Lord did not at firſt approve of, as too raſh and impracticable an Experiment. The Earl of Danby came heartily into it, and drew in the Biſhop of London, who from that Time held a conſtant Correſpondence with their Friends at the Hague. The Earl of Nottingham agreed to it at the firſt Propoſition, but fell off afterwards; however, he promis'd to be as far criminal as Concealment could make him.

Earl of Danby.

The Earl of Devonſhire had been fin'd 30,000 l. for ſtriking Col. Culpeper, who had affronted him in the Verge of the Court. King James offer'd to excuſe the Fine, but that had no effect on that brave and generous Nobleman. He choſe rather to expoſe himſelf and Fortune to the Rigour of the Court, than to deſert the Intereſt of his Country in ſuch a Time of Peril; ſo he join'd in the Undertaking with great Readineſs and Reſolution.

Earl of Devonſhire.

Then the Officers of the Army were try'd, and the chief, Lord Churchil, Col. Kirk, and Col. Trelawny engag'd in it, as did alſo the Biſhop of Briſtol, Sir Jonathan Trelawny, whom his Brother the Colonel prevail'd on. As to Lord Churchil's Engagement, he has been ſo often, and ſo unjuſtly accus'd for it, that we cannot do Juſtice to his glorious Memory, without inſerting what Biſhop Burnet ſays in his Vindication.

" ſels. The Earl of Gallway told me, that when he " came over with the firſt Compliment upon the " King's coming to the Crown, he then ſaid to " him, If the King is ever prevail'd on to " alter our Religion, I will ſerve him no longer, " but withdraw from him, ſo early was his Re- " ſolution fix'd in him; when he ſaw how the " King was ſet, he could not be contented to ſee " all ruin'd by him. The Lord Churchil alſo under-took that Prince George and the Princeſs Anne ſhould leave the Court, and come to the Prince as ſoon as poſſible.

Earls of Macclesfield and Wiltſhire. The Earl of Macclesfield had been in Holland ever ſince the Duke of Monmouth's Embarkation there.

The Earl of Wiltſhire, afterwards Duke of Bolton, was one of the firſt that went to the Hague, accompanied by the Lord William Pawlet his Brother.

Ld Wharton. The good old Lord Wharton took the Prince of Orange's Court in his way to Germany, where he was moſt honourably entertain'd by ſeveral Princes, and preſented with a very fine Set of Horſes by the Elector of Brandenburgh. It is not queſtion'd but he had Matters to negociate with them, relating to his Highneſs, and the Expedition to England. His Sons Thomas Wharton Eſq; and Mr. Wharton. Col. Henry Wharton, were not only in the Secret, but went early to the Prince of Orange.

Ld Eland. The Marquis of Halliſax coming into the Deſign afterwards, his Son, the Lord Eland, was a voluntary Hoſtage with the Prince, for his Father's Sincerity.

D. of Leeds The Duke of Leeds, then Lord Dunblain, went alſo to the Hague, to offer his Highneſs his Service, which was of very great Importance.

Earl of Argyle. The Earl of Argyle, whoſe Father and Grandfather had been ſacrificed to Popery and Arbitrary Power, was impriſon'd by King James on Suſpicion; but there being no Proof, he was at laſt diſcharg'd, and going over to Holland, had his Share in this glorious Undertaking: A Glory inherent in the Houſe of Campbell.

E. of Bath. E. of Dorſet. The Earls of Bath and Dorſet, ſent the Prince a Promiſe, that they would join him, by Mr. Ruſſel.

Lord Herbert. Mr. Herbert, afterwards Lord Herbert of Cherbury, went to the Hague to attend the Prince of Orange in his Expedition, as did alſo

Col. Herbert. Col. Herbert, Brother to the Admiral.

Ld Cutts. Talmaſh. Mackay. Mr. Harbord, afterwards Privy Counſellor, and Ambaſſador in Turky; Col. Cutts, afterwards Lord Gowran; Col. Talmaſh, and Col. Mackay, with other Chief Officers of the Engliſh and Scots Regiments in Holland. Sir Rowland Gwynn, Sir Rowl. Gwynn. that eminent Member of Parliament, came from Holland with King William, and from Hanover with King George, at the firſt and ſecond Deliverance of England, ſince the Reſtoration.

Major Wildman, Major Manley, Mr. Iſaac Manly his Son, and ſome Gentlemen, who had ſhelter'd themſelves in Germany, againſt the Tyranny in England, repaired to the Hague, to be aſſiſting in her Deliverance.

Mr. Fletcher. Mr. Andrew Fletcher, who diſtinguiſh'd himſelf in the Scots Parliaments afterwards, joined with others who had been with the Duke of Monmouth, in this Expedition, as Col. Matthews, Col. Foulks, Robert Ferguſon, &c.

Sir R. Peyton. Sir Robert Peyton, Sir John Guiſe, and many other Engliſh Gentlemen of Character and Intereſt, waited at the Hague to attend his Highneſs, and have their Share of the Peril and the Honour.

A. D. 1688.

The Gentlemen who ſtaid in England, were not leſs uſeful by engaging their Friends and Dependants, and preparing to join him after he was landed, as Sir Scroop How, Mr. John How his Brother, Mr. Ruſſel, Brother to Admiral Ruſſel, the Duke of Norfolk, Lord Delamere, Lord Lovelace, Lord Colcheſter, Lord Willoughby of Eresby, and at laſt the Marquiſſes of Wincheſter and Halliſax.

Matters having been concerted between the Earl of Shrewsbury, Mr. Ruſſel, Mr. Sidney, and Mr. Johnſtoun, who were to return to the Prince in Holland, and the Earl of Devonſhire, the Earl of Danby, the Lord Lumley, and other Lords and Gentlemen, who were to ſtay in England; the former croſt the Seas, and the latter diſperſt themſelves in the North, and other Parts of England, for which they had undertaken. The Thing was in the hands of many thouſands, yet none of them made any Diſcovery, nor was any Suſpicion given, till about September, when it was known in Holland that many Arms were beſpoke; and tho' 'twas given out to be for the King of Sweden, and ſome German Princes, yet it was thought to be a Blind. France took the Alarm, and gave it firſt to the Court of England, who publiſh'd the Advertiſements they had received a little too raſhly; for all People were much animated when they heard it from ſuch a Hand. The King ſoon ſaw his Error, and to correct it, ſaid on many Occaſions, Whatever the Deſigns of the Dutch may be, I am ſure they are not againſt me. It was given out ſometimes that they were againſt France, and ſometimes they were againſt Denmark. However he ordered 14 Ships more to put to Sea, with many Fireſhips. He recalled Strickland, and gave the Command of the Fleet to the Lord Dartmouth.

Secrecy.

The French King alarms K. James.

When the French King gave K. James Notice that the Dutch Armaments were againſt him, he offer'd him Aſſiſtance, 15000 Men, or as many more as he deſir'd, provided Portſmouth was put into his hand, to keep the Communication open with France. All the Prieſts, and moſt of the Popiſh Lords were for it, and the Earl of Sunderland was the only Privy Counſellor in Credit who oppos'd it. His Reaſons were ſuch as will convince any reaſonable Man, he could not have given his Maſter better Counſel. He ſaid, the Offer of an Army of 40000 Men might be a real Strength; but then it would depend upon the Orders that came from France. They might perhaps maſter England, but they would become the King's Maſter at the ſame Time, ſo that he muſt govern under ſuch Orders as they ſhould give: thus he would quickly become only a Viceroy to the King of France. An Army leſs than that would loſe the King the Affections of his People, and drive his own Army to Deſertion, if not to Mutiny. Tho' the Offer was not accepted, yet it was not dropt, and 100 Merchant Ships were bargain'd for, to tranſport Forces from France, when King James deſired them. The French King made a greater Step, ordering the Count d'Avaux, his Ambaſſador in Holland, to preſent a Memorial to the States, declaring, there was a ſtrict Alliance between his Maſter and the King of England, and that he would look on every thing done againſt England, as an Invaſion of his own Crown. This put King James and his Miniſters quite out of Countenance, and the French King ſhew'd by it that he car'd not what became of his dear Brother of England, if he could by any means hinder the Engliſh and Dutch joining againſt him, which would be the Conſequence of the Prince's Succeſs againſt K. James, who had always deny'd deny'd there was any ſuch Alliance; and his Ambaſſador Albeville continu'd to deny it, even after D'Avaux had preſented his Memorial. Nay, the King himſelf deny'd it afterwards to Van Citters the Dutch Ambaſſador at London. The Blame of the putting it into the Memorial was laid to Skelton the King's Envoy at Paris, who was diſown'd in it, and upon his coming over to England, ſent to the Tower: But to ſhew the Giddineſs, as well as Weakneſs of their Counſels, a few days after he was made Governor of the ſame Place he was impriſon'd in. The French Ambaſſador at Conſtantinople ſhew'd the Engliſh Ambaſſador Sir William Trumbal a Letter to him, from a Miniſter of State in France, importing that now an Alliance was concluded between the two Kings. One would think ſuch Princes and ſuch Miniſters were Infidels, and believ'd neither God nor Devil, Heaven nor Hell, ſo ſolemnly and ſo frequently to deny a Fact, on which the ſpiritual and temporal Welfare of ſo many Millions of People depended.

About this time the French King publiſh'd two Manifeſto's; one againſt the Emperor, which was the beginning of that War which laſted till the Peace of Reſwyck. The other againſt the Pope. In the latter of which, the French King himſelf made the firſt mention of the Impoſture of the Prince of Wales, by charging the Pope with giving the Prince of Orange's Emiſſaries the Boldneſs to term it ſo; whereas an Author of a Book writ for that purpoſe in Holland was puniſh'd.

French K. the firſt that publickly term'd the Prince of Wales an Impoſtor.

In the mean time the German Princes were every where making Preparations to oppoſe the Invaſions of the French. The Prince of Orange, under the pretence of the Buſineſs of Cologne, had an Interview at Minden in Weſtphalia with the Electors of Saxony and Brandenburgh, the Landgrave of Heſſe-Caſſel, and the Lunenburgh Princes, when Meaſures were concerted to recover England, as well as depreſs France. The Brandenburgh Troops encreaſing in the Country of Cleve, Mareſchal Schomberg, who commanded there for that Elector, ſent a Body of them to Cologne, which were admitted into that City, and prevented its falling into the hands of the French; by which means the States were ſafe on all hands for this Winter, and the Prince of Orange had great Quiet in proſecuting his Deſigns upon England: The Elector of Brandenburgh having alſo ſent the States a Meſſage, that there ſhould always be a Force in readineſs in the Dutchy of Cleve, to ſecure them from all danger on that ſide. The States had hired 10000 German Troops to augment their Army, beſides thoſe from Brandenburgh and Sweden; ſo that when the Forces intended for the Expedition were march'd from the Encampment near Nimeguen, they could eaſily, in a few days, make up the miſs of them. But how to raiſe Money for the Prince, without declaring for what uſe, was the great Difficulty: which was remov'd by that great Politician Fagel, who, under colour of repairing the Fortifications on the Frontier towards Cologne, from whence look'd the Danger, got the States to create a Fund to pay Intereſt for a Loan of four Millions of Guilders, which they readily lent the Prince of Orange. It paſs'd the States without any Oppoſition, to the Amazement of all that ſaw it: For it had never been known that ſo great and ſo dangerous an Enterprize had been ſo eaſily agreed to in ſuch a Seaſon, without ſo much as one diſagreeing Vote.

The Pr. of Orange and the States at leiſure to mind England.

Admiral Herbert commands the Dutch Fleet.

Admiral Herbert went to Sea with the Dutch Fleet, to look on the Engliſh, and try if any would come over, of which ſome hopes were given, or to engage them while they were not above twenty Ships ſtrong; but he was hinder'd by contrary Winds. Things being ſo forward, it was thought fit to draw up a Declaration. Heads of one had been ſent from England, penn'd by the Earl of Danby, who five or ſix Years before was for executing the Lord Shaftesbury for penning an Aſſociation, which indeed he did not pen. Major Wildman made a Draft of a Declaration, which being not enough in favour of the Church Party, was not made uſe of, tho' approv'd of by the Earl of Macclesfield, the Lord Mordaunt, and many others: But the cooler Heads, the Lord Shrewsbury, Mr. Sidney and Mr. Ruſſel, were for ſtriking out every thing that reflected on the Management in King Charles IId's Reign, it being to go too far back, and would diſguſt the Nobility, Gentry, and Clergy, who had encourag'd Perſecution and Paſſive-Obedience. Beſides, it was by no means prudent to upbraid People with Non-Reſiſtance, when they were inviting them to reſiſt: ſo a Temper was found, and the exceptionable Parts of ſeveral Drafts being thrown out, that which paſs'd was printed, and is the ſame which is to be ſeen in almoſt all Hiſtories of that Time.

A. D. 1688.

The Prince's Declaration.

In the beginning of October the Troops marched from Nimeguen, and were put aboard in the Zuyder-Zee, where they lay above ten Days before they could get out of the Texel. Never was ſo great a Deſign executed in ſo ſhort a time, a Fleet of 500 Tranſports hired in three Days! All things, as ſoon as they were order'd, were ſo quickly got ready, that every body was amaz'd at it. Meſſieurs Bentinck, Dykvelt, Mr. Herbert, and Vanhulſt, were for two Months conſtantly at the Hague, giving the neceſſary Orders with ſo little Noiſe, that nothing broke out all that while. Mr. Bentinck was the Perſon moſt truſted and employ'd by his Highneſs. I take what follows verbatim from Biſhop Burnet.

" I waited on the Princeſs a few Days before " we left the Hague, ſhe ſeem'd to have a great " Load on her Spirits, but to have no ſcruple as " to the Lawfulneſs of the Deſign." After much other Diſcourſe, I ſaid, If we got ſafe to England, I made no great doubt of our Succeſs in all other things. I only begg'd her pardon to tell her, that if there ſhould happen to be at any time any disjointing between the Prince and her, that would ruin all. She anſwer'd, You need fear no ſuch thing; if any Perſon ſhall attempt that, I ſhall treat them ſo, as to diſcourage all others from adventuring on it for the future. " She was very ſolemn and ſerious, and pray'd " God earneſtly to bleſs and direct us."

The Princeſs's ſaying of the Expedition

I come now to one of the moſt moving Paſſages in all Hiſtory, the Prince of Orange's taking his leave of the States: in which there is ſomething ſo affecting, that the celebrated Parting of Titus and Berenice is inſipid in compariſon with it, as it is thus told by my Lord of Sarum.

" On the 16th of October, the Wind, that had " ſtood ſo long in the Weſt came into the Eaſt; " ſo Orders were ſent to all to haſte to Helvoet- " ſluys. That Morning the Prince went into the " Aſſembly of the States General, to take leave " of them. He told them he was extremely ſen- " ſible of the Kindneſs they had all ſhew'd him " upon many Occaſions: He took God to Witneſs " he had ſerv'd them faithfully, ever ſince they " had truſted him with the Government, and " that he had never any End before his Eyes, " but the Good of the Country: He had always " purſued it, and if at any Time he err'd in his " Judgment, yet his Heart was ever ſet on pro- " curing their Safety and Proſperity. He took " God to Witneſs, he went to England with no

" other Intentions, but thoſe he had ſet out in " his Declaration. He did not know how God " might diſpoſe of him, to his Providence he " committed himſelf: whatſoever might become " of him, he committed to them the Care of " their Country; and recommended the Princeſs " to them in a moſt particular manner. He aſ- " ſured them ſhe lov'd their Country perfectly, " and equally with her own. He hoped, that " whatever might happen to him, they would " ſtill protect her, and uſe her as ſhe well de- " ſerved. And ſo he took his Leave. It was a " ſad, but a kind Parting. Some of every Pro- " vince offer'd at an Anſwer to what the Prince " had ſaid, but none could ſpeak; all melted " into Tears and Paſſion. At laſt ſome broken " Words dropt from them, very ſhort and ex- " tream tender, only the Prince continued firm " in his uſual Gravity and Phlegm."

The Dutch Fleet ſails.

On the 19th of October his Highneſs went on board, and the whole Fleet put out that Night; but the next Day the Wind turn'd to the North, and ſettled in the North-Weſt. At Night a great Storm roſe; the Dutch Fleet wrought againſt it all that Night, and the next Day, and ran no ſmall Hazard, being a great Number of Ships, and obliged to keep together, yet not to come too near one another. On the 21ſt in the Afternoon the Signal was given to go in again, and on the 22d the far greater Part got in. Many Ships were at firſt miſſing, and were believed to be loſt, Put back by a Storm.

but after a few Days all came in ſafe, and there was not at laſt a Ship miſſing, and but one Man, who was blown from the Shrouds into the Sea. Some Ships were ſhatter'd, and render'd unſerviceable, and about 500 Horſes dy'd for want of Air. The States were not at all diſcourag'd with this hard beginning, but gave the neceſſary Orders for Supplies of every thing that was needed.

We muſt now ſee what Preparations were making in England, to oppoſe the Prince of Orange, and we ſhall find the King in great Perplexity, both as to Counſel and Action.

He had but ſmall Satisfaction, from the States Anſwer to his Iriſh Envoy Albeville in Holland; who having demanded of their High Mightineſſes, What they meant by their great and ſurprizing warlike Preparations, both by Sea and Land, at that Time of the Year, had for Anſwer, That they arm'd in Imitation of his Britannick Majeſty, and might with more Reaſon demand an Explanation about the Alliances into which he was lately enter'd; and which was confirm'd by d'Avaux's Memorial to the States, who had Orders for it from his Maſter the French King, who, as great a Politician as he was, ſent thoſe Orders at the meer Motion of Skelton, without any previous Direction from England. France, to recover this falſe Step, offer'd, by Barillon, the French Miniſter in England, that his Maſter would abandon the Siege of Philipsburgh, and turn his Arms againſt Holland, if the King of England would accept of Aſſiſtance from him; which was approv'd of by four or five of the Council, who would rather have been Slaves to France, than Subjects to the free Conſtitution of England. The wiſer of K. James's Counſellors objected, that ſuch a Violation of former Treaties with Holland, would raiſe the Clamours of the whole Nation, and alienate the Minds of all the Engliſh Proteſtants from the King. Theſe French Negociations, which were indeed deſperate and dangerous, were improv'd to the advantage of the Prince of Orange's Expedition, by cauſing a Report, that the Dutch Armament was only deſign'd to hinder the French from landing in England, where, in purſuance of the ſecret Treaty made with King James, they were to extirpate the Proteſtant Religion. Such uſe was there made of Skelton's blundering Advice, and the French King and his Miniſters purſuing that Blunder to the Ruin of the unhappy Prince they pretended to ſave. After all the falſe Reaſonings of the Jeſuit Orleans, and his Copiſt Echard, about Lord Sunderland's treacherous Advice, in hindering his Maſter's accepting the Aſſiſtance of France, it appears to be very prudent and faithful Counſel; for ſuppoſing that King James's Soldiers were generally Well-wiſhers to the Prince of Orange's Undertaking, and his Seamen the ſame, as I think no body queſtions, and that the Appearance of French Forces, tho' they had been 3000 Men, had occaſion'd a general Revolt; that the Engliſh Army had join'd the Dutch, and the Engliſh Fleet the Dutch Fleet, which was more than probable, notwithſtanding what Lord Dartmouth told Biſhop Burnet to the contrary, and that upon theſe two Junctions, the whole Body of the Nation had taken Arms againſt King James, and his Frenchmen; can any one doubt but the Iſſue of it muſt have been fatal, not only to King James, but to the French King himſelf, who having loſt ſuch an Army, would have been in an ill Condition to make War with the Dutch in the Winter, when he had the German Confederates at the back of him?

Lord Sunderland's Advice good.

King James's raſh Counſellors, the Earl of Melfort, and all the Papiſts, adviſ'd the ſeizing all ſuſpected Perſons, and ſending them to Portſmouth. The Earl of Sunderland oppos'd it vehemently, ſaying, " It will not be poſſible to " ſeize on many at the ſame time, and the " ſeizing on a few would alarm all the reſt: It " would drive them in to the Prince, and furniſh " them with a Pretence for it." He propos'd rather, that the King would do ſuch Popular Things as might give ſome Content, and lay that Fermentation, with which the Nation was then, as it were, diſtracted: which Advice was follow'd in a few Inſtances; tho' the Papiſts hated Sunderland heartily for giving it.

On the 19th of September the King went to Chatham to view the Fortifications there and along the Medway, and forward the Equipment of the Ships that were to join his Fleet.

The ſame Day he ſet out for Chatham, the Princeſs of Denmark return'd from Tunbridge, and tho' the Queen was alone, and Prince George with the King, ſhe did not go to Court as uſual, her Reception there being lately very cold, and the Reaſon of it was ſaid to be, that ſhe was thought to hold too good Intelligence with the Princeſs of Orange her Siſter.

A Proclamation for a Parliament.

When the King came back, he cauſed his Proclamation for calling a Parliament to be publiſh'd, wherein he declar'd, " His Intention to " eſtabliſh an univerſal Liberty, and to preſerve " the Church of England by ſuch a Confirmation " of the ſeveral Acts of Uniformity, that they " ſhould never be alter'd." He excluded Roman-Catholicks from the Houſe of Commons only, which, it was ſaid, imply'd that the Popiſh Lords might ſit, and with that view the Lord Stafford was reſtored to the Dignity of Viſcount. This Proclamation was ſo ambiguouſly worded, that it had little Effect on the People, who look'd upon it as a forc'd Buſineſs, and all their Eyes were caſt towards the Eaſt, from whence they had News next day, that the Dutch Troops were embarking, and that the Prince of Orange was at Rotterdam to overſee it. Upon which, a freſh Augmentation of Forces was reſolv'd on, and more Men added to the Troops of Horſe and Dragoons, and to the Companies of Foot. A

A. D. 1688. Regiment of Horſe was raiſed, and the Command of it given to Armand de Bourbon Marquis de Miremont, deſcended from the famous Charles de Bourbon kill'd at the Aſſault of Rome. He was a French Refugée, and Nephew to the Earl of Feverſham and to the Count de Roye. The King offer'd the Command of his Army to the Count de Roye another Refugée, who declining that Office, 'twas given to the Lord Feverſham, who was no better a General than he was a Proteſtant.

The Lord Dartmouth was diſpatch'd to take on him the Command of the Fleet, and the King ſent for the Lord Mayor and Aldermen to recommend the Care of the City to them. He offer'd three of the Biſhops Seats at the Councilboard, but they excuſed themſelves, for that there were ſeveral Papiſts Members of the Council; and to quiet things abroad as well as at home, Albeville, who had diſown'd d'Avaux's Memorial as to the Secret League, had Orders to offer the States a new Treaty for maintaining the Peace at Nimeguen, and the twenty years Truce concluded in 1684: but the Dutch Miniſters eaſily ſaw thro' this Diſguiſe, and it had ſucceſs accordingly. There was a Talk that the Lord Godolphin ſhould go to the Hague and forward this Negotiation, which it is ſuppoſed that Lord was not willing to engage in, as knowing it was a Feint, and taken for ſuch by the Dutch. About the latter end of September, Advice came from Holland, that 12000 Foot, 2000 Horſe, and 1000 Dragoons were put aboard the Tranſports; and it was reported, the Deſcent would be at Burlington in Yorkſhire, tho the Secret was communicated to none but Fagel, Bentinck, Ruſſel, Sidney, and Dykvelt. That the Expedition was againſt King James, was no more made a doubt of, and the Count de Neville, who call'd himſelf an Envoy from Poland, declar'd at London, that the Duke of Zell told him ſo. The next Courier finiſh'd King James's Conſternation, for Albeville having told Monſ. Fagel that Van Citters had aſſured the King the Fleet and Army were not deſigned againſt England, the Penſioner reply'd, He had no Orders from the States to ſay ſo. The Envoy further inform'd the King, that many Engliſh Lords and Gentlemen were arriv'd at the Hague to accompany the Prince of Orange. Upon reading this Letter, The poor King, ſays Echard, turn'd pale, and for a while remain'd ſpeechleſs and aſtoniſh'd; and may one not now imagine the injured Ghoſts of Ruſſel, Sidney, Bailie, Corniſh, and the Hecatombs in the Weſt and in Scotland, haunted his Dreams amidſt the Extremity of his Diſtreſs and Deſpair; that now his bloody Whippings, his Dungeons, his intolerable Fines, his Violation of Oaths and Laws, were like ſo many Vulturs to his tortured Soul? For Affliction makes it ſenſible of every Touch; whereas it is harden'd by Succeſs and Proſperity. Echard, who waited on his triumphal Chariot, when he was riding over the Lives, Liberties, and Properties of Proteſtant Diſſenters; even Echard cannot help remarking, The airy Caſtle of unlimited Power rais'd by the Magick of jeſuitical Counſels, now vaniſh'd in a Moment, and the miſ-led Monarch, by the Prince's Approach, freed from his Enchantment, found himſelf upon the Brink of a Precipice, while all his intoxicating Flatterers ſtood thunderſtruck at a diſtance, without daring to lend him a helping Hand, for fear that both he and they ſhould be involv'd in the greater Ruin. Here are a pretty many Words indeed, and the Senſe is only, the King being miſ-led by jeſuitical Conjurers, was abandon'd by his daſtardly impotent Flatterers, tho no body has flatter'd him more than the Archdeacon himſelf.

The King knows the Deſign to be againſt him.

He is in deſpair.

In this Fright he ſent for the Biſhops, Winche- A. D. 1688.

The Biſhops pray'd for time to conſult together about ſo weighty a matter, and repairing to Lambeth, had the Sentiments of the Archbiſhop in their Anſwer. On the 28th of September he iſſu'd out a Proclamation, ſetting forth the Advice he had received of the Prince's intended Invaſion to conquer theſe Kingdoms, and ſubdue and ſubject them to a foriegn Power, which oblig'd him to recall his Writs for electing Members of Parliament, and which ſhould rather have oblig'd him to have haſten'd its ſitting. To cajole the People, the Biſhop of London's Suſpenſion was taken off; Sir John Eyles a Baptiſt, whom he had nominated to be Lord Mayor, was remov'd, and Sir John Chapman a Churchman, put in his Place. He alſo reſtor'd the Charter of London, which Jefferies himſelf carry'd back, and put on the the Appearance of Joy and Heartineſs when he gave it to the Mayor and Aldermen at Guild-hall. Every body ſaw through this Affectation, for he had rais'd himſelf chiefly by adviſing or promoting the Surrender.

Proclamation againſt the Prince of Orange.

Charter of London reſtor'd.

The Confuſion the King was in, appear'd by the Unſteadineſs of his Counſels, undoing to-day what he did yeſterday, being for a thing and againſt a thing in the Compaſs of a few Hours and always ſhewing that every Popular Act was againſt his Will, and as a Force put upon him might be diſavow'd or diſannull'd, when he was out of danger. Intelligence being given him, that ſeveral Perſons paſt over to Holland to avoid being ſeiz'd, as Melfort adviſed, he publiſh'd a general Pardon, excepting ſeveral Perſons; but ſome Words in it concerning the Church of England giving the Biſhops Offence, a ſecond Proclamation came out with particular Exceptions, as,

Perſons excepted out of the Pardon.

This Pardon was drawn up by Jefferies, and in the main, by ſeveral Clauſes, excepted the whole Nation, but none regarded it. The Thunders of Whitehall were no more minded now in England, than thoſe of the Vatican. So fearful was the Court of every one's Motions, that Mr. Goodwin Wharton being near Portſmouth ſeeking after Marcaſſites to make uſe of them in his Chymical Experiments, he was ſeiz'd and ſent to London; but his Buſineſs being better underſtood, they did not detain him.

It was ſome Conſolation to the deſpairing Monarch, that his Friends, real or pretended, did not all forſake him.

Lords offer the King their Aſſiſtance.

The Duke of Newcaſtle wrote him a Letter to offer him his Service againſt all his Enemies; ſo did the Earls of Lindſey and Derby.

The Earl of Ailesbury came to London on purpoſe, and preſented to the King two of his Brothers, who had agreed to ſerve as Voluntiers in Sir John Lanier's Regiment of Horſe.

The Duke of Ormond propos'd to accompany the King in the Army as a Volunteer alſo, attended by Lieutenant-Colonel Beaumont, and the five Portſmouth Captains.

The Earl of Burlington made a Tender of his Service, and after the Prince was landed, ſent only a Page on horſeback.

The

A. D. 1688. The Lord Viſcount Falconbridge, Oliver Cromwell's Son-in-Law, made the like Tender.

The Earl of Dyſert, Col. Talmaſh's Brother, did the ſame, as alſo the Lord Dover and the Lord Baltimore. The latter was ſo unlucky, that after King James had endeavour'd to take from him his Plantation of Maryland, he rais'd a Troop of Horſe to ſerve him againſt the Prince of Orange, which was remember'd after the Revolution, and the ſame Endeavours continu'd by the then Government.

Preparations made by him. Commiſſions were given to the Duke of Newcaſtle, Col. Henry Gage, and Col. Solomon Richards, to raiſe three Regiments of Foot. Two Thouſand Foot and five Hundred Horſe were tranſported from Dublin to Cheſter, and three Thouſand Scots advanced to Carliſle. Thus if the King's Troops had been all together, they would have form'd an Army of about Thirty Thouſand Men; but their chief Officers were under other Engagements, and the greateſt part of the Soldiers as unwilling to fight the Prince's Army, as the Engliſh Seamen were to fight his Fleet; and I have been well inform'd, that if the Lord Dartmouth had attempted it, he would have been deſerted by many of the Captains, who were under the ſame Engagements as were the Land Officers. Beſides, it did not ſeem as if he himſelf had Intention to engage the Dutch, he having but forty Men of War, and the Dutch fifty-two, larger Ships and better provided. As to Biſhop Burnet's Objection, that he might have diſpers'd the Tranſports, 'tis obvious he could have done them little hurt till he had beaten the Fleet, of which there was little Hope.

The King having reſtor'd the Charter of London, a Council was held to conſider the Affair of the other Charters, October the 17th.

This Condeſcenſion was ſuppos'd to be one of the Effects of the Biſhops Propoſals, which they deliver'd to the King. 1. To put Perſons qualify'd into Offices. 2. To annul the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion. 3. To grant no Diſpenſations for Qualifications, and reſtore the Preſident and Fellows of Magdalen College. 4. To ſet aſide all Licences for Popiſh Schools. 5. Not to exerciſe the Diſpenſing Power. 6. To inhibit the four Popiſh Biſhops. 7. To fill the vacant Biſhopricks in England and Ireland, particularly York. 8. To reſtore the Charters. 9. To iſſue Writs for calling a Parliament. 10. To hear Reaſons for his returning to the Church of England. Biſhops Propoſals. Moſt of which Propoſals were comply'd with, but in ſuch a manner as like the Caſe of Magdalen College, ſhew'd the King would undo what he was doing as ſoon as he was out of the Fright he was then in. For the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Viſitor of Magdalen College, having on the 16th of October caus'd a Citation to be fix'd on the Gates of that Houſe, to recall Dr. Hough the Preſident, and the Fellows, upon News of the putting in of the Dutch Fleet, this weak King, and his weak Council, could not help ſhewing their Infirmity ſo far as to recall the Biſhop to London; and upon other News of the Prince of Orange's being ready to put to Sea again, the Biſhop a Week after was ſent back to Oxford, to finiſh his Work at Magdalen College: which confirms the Opinion I have always given of the Heads, as well as the Hearts, in this unfortunate Adminiſtration. The King's weak Counſels.

The King ſent an Order to the Biſhops to compoſe Prayers againſt the Prince of Orange. How the Nonſenſe runs thro' every thing? Heretical Biſhops, according to him, to make Prayers for a Catholick King. If he thought the Prayers of Hereticks avail'd any thing, when according to his Church they were in a State of Damnation, why was he ſo obſtinate againſt the Church of England, in which he was baptiz'd? The Prayers were ſo well drawn, that even thoſe that wiſh'd for the Prince might have join'd in them. Biſhop Burnet's Obſervations here are very juſt. " The Church Party did High-Church for Reſiſtance. " now ſhew their Approbation of the Prince's " Expedition in ſuch Terms, that many were " ſurpris'd at it both then and ſince that " Time. They ſpoke openly in favour of it. " They expreſs'd their Grief to ſee the Wind ſo " croſs. They wiſh'd for an Eaſt Wind, which " on that occaſion was call'd the Proteſtant " Wind. They ſpoke with great Scorn of all " that the Court was then doing to regain the " Hearts of the Nation; and indeed the Pro- " ceedings of the Court that way were ſo cold, " and ſo forc'd, that few were like to be de- " ceiv'd by them, but thoſe who had a mind to " be deceiv'd. The Writs for a Parliament " were often order'd to be made ready for the " Seal, and were as often ſtop'd. Some were " ſeal'd and given out, but they were call'd in " again. The Matter of the greateſt Concern, " and that could not be drop'd, was the Birth " of the Prince of Wales. And therefore the " Court thought it neceſſary, now in an After- " Game, to offer ſome Satisfaction in that Point.

" So

" So a great Meeting was call'd, not only of the " Privy-Counſellors and Judges, but of all the " Nobility then in Town; to whom the King " complain'd of the great Injury that was done " both him and the Queen by the Prince of O- " range, who accus'd them of ſo black an Im- " poſture. He ſaid he believ'd there were few " Princes then alive, who had been born in the " Preſence of more Witneſſes than were at his " Son's Birth; he had therefore call'd them to- " gether, that they might hear the Proof of that " Matter." It is great Pity but their Names ſhould be remember'd!

On a Suppoſition that the King and Queen were really capable of ſuch an Impoſture, one cannot but ſuppoſe they were capable of every thing for the Support of it. Biſhop Burnet's Account of this bawdy Buſineſs is the beſt and modeſteſt.

" It was firſt prov'd that the Queen was de- " liver'd a-bed, while many were in the Room, " and that they ſaw the Child ſoon after he was " taken from the Queen by the Midwife; but " in this the Midwife was the ſingle Witneſs, " for none of the Ladies had felt the Child in " the Queen's Belly. The Counteſs of Sun- " derland did indeed depoſe, that the Queen " call'd to her to give her her Hand, that ſhe " might feel how the Child lay, to which ſhe " added, which I did; but did not ſay whe- " ther ſhe felt the Child or not." If ſhe had ſo ſaid, it would indeed have been good Evidence; but inſtead of that ſhe told the Dutcheſs of Hamilton, who told it to the Biſhop of Saliſbury, that when ſhe put her Hand into the Bed, the Queen held it, and let it go no lower than her Breaſts.

All the Proofs deſtroy'd by one.

After this, what ſignify a hundred Witneſſes? The Queen herſelf call'd for her to feel the Child in her Belly, and when ſhe came, the Queen would not let her feel it. Beſides, tho' the Queen was too modeſt or too proud to give the People Satisfaction, was it not in her power, by letting the Princeſs Anne feel the Child as ſhe was wont to do, to confound all Gainſayers, and to put the thing out of queſtion? 'Tis monſtrous to think ſhe would not have done it, if ſhe had had a Child in her Belly, before the Princeſs went to Bath.——The Biſhop again ſpeaking of Lady Sunderland's Depoſition. A. D. 1688.

" So that really ſhe felt nothing, and this De- " poſition, brought to make a Shew, was an " Evidence againſt the Matter rather than for " it, and was a violent Preſumption of an Im- " poſture, and of an Artifice to cover it. Many " Ladies depos'd they had often ſeen the " Marks of Milk on the Queen's Linnen near " her Breaſts; two or three depos'd, that they " ſaw it running out at the Nipple. All theſe " depos'd, that they ſaw Milk before the pre- " tended Delivery, but none of them depos'd " concerning Milk after the Delivery, tho' Na- " ture ſends it then in greater abundance; and " the Queen had it always in ſuch a Plenty, " that ſome Weeks paſt after her Delivery, be- " fore ſhe was quite freed from it. The Ladies " did not name the Time in which they ſaw the " Milk, except one, who nam'd the Month of " May: But if the Particulars mention'd be- " fore, that happen'd on Eaſter Monday, are " reflected on; and if it appears probable by " theſe, that the Queen miſcarry'd at that time, " then all that the Ladies mention'd of Milk in " her Breaſts, particularly ſhe that fix'd it in " the Month of May, might have follow'd upon " that Miſcarriage, and be no Proof concerning the " Birth. Mrs. Pearſe the Laundreſs depos'd, " ſhe took Linnen from the Queen's Body once, " which carried the Marks of a Delivery, but " ſhe ſpoke only to one Time; that was a main " Circumſtance, and if it had been true, it muſt " have been done often, and was capable of a " more copious Proof, ſince there is occaſion for " ſuch things to be often look'd on, and well " conſider'd. The Lady Wentworth was the " ſingle Witneſs that depos'd, that ſhe had felt " the Child move in the Queen's Belly: She " was a Bed-Chamber Woman as well as a ſingle " Witneſs, and ſhe fix'd it on no Time; if it " was very early ſhe might have been miſtaken, " or if it was before Eaſter Monday it might be " true, and yet have no relation to this Birth."

This was the Subſtance of all the Evidence, which was order'd to be enroll'd and printed, and had no other Effect than to make Jeſts for lewd People. " The Preſumption of Law be- " fore this was all in favour of the Birth, ſince " the Parents own'd the Child; ſo that the " Proof lay on the other ſide, and ought to be " offer'd by thoſe who call'd it in queſtion. " But now that this Proof was brought, which " was ſo apparently defective, it did not leſſen, " but increaſe the Jealouſy, with which the " Nation was poſſeſs'd; for all People conclu- " ded that if the thing had been true, it muſt " have been eaſy to have brought a much more " copious Proof than was now publiſh'd to the " World."

This Matter is pretty well diſcuſs'd in the Memorial of the Church of England, addreſs'd to their Royal Highneſſes the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, ſaid to be written by Major Wildman. It contain'd the Grievances of the Engliſh Nation under King James, and the Impoſture of the Pretender; 'tis very long and very curious. The Charge of the Impoſture oblig'd King James to collect theſe obſcene Depoſitions, for the Memorial had not been long diſpers'd in Holland, before Care was taken to diſperſe it in England alſo.

The King offer'd to have the Queen ſworn as well as her Ladies, but the Company were too good Courtiers to admit of that; and indeed one can't ſee the uſe of it, for he or ſhe who makes no Conſcience of a Cheat, will certainly make no Conſcience of ſwearing to it. Lord Hallifax ſaid, when the Printing the Depoſitions was talk'd of, It muſt be for the Rabble only, Perſons of Honour do not want them. The Child was chriſten'd about the ſame time, and nam'd James Franci-Edward, the Pope's Nuntio being his Godfather. The King told ſome Lords he had three Witneſſes more to prove the Birth, but he would not produce them out of reſpect to their Profeſſion; he meant Father Petre, Father Galli the Queen's Confeſſor, and the Abbot Maſſa, Maſtro di Camera to the Nuntio; Rare Evidence! and it would have been pleaſant to have met them among the other Witneſſes. On the 28th of October the Earl of Sunderland was remov'd from his Places of Preſident of the Council, and Principal Secretary of State. It was thought the King had ſome Diffidence of his having Correſpondence with the Prince of Orange; but whether he had or not, 'tis no queſtion his Lady had with the Princeſs. Skelton, to juſtify his Conduct in France, inform'd the King, that he receiv'd Information of the Prince of Orange's Deſign from Mr. Bude de Verace, of Geneva, who had been Steward of the Houſhold to the Princeſs Dowager of Orange, of which he had written ſix or ſeven Letters to the Earl of Sunderland, and having had no Anſwer, he apply'd to the French King, who upon that ſent Bonrepos to London, and Orders to d'Avaux at the Hague to expoſtulate the Matter with the States. This Account of the prime Miniſter confirm'd all former Suſpicions of him, which had ſtill further Confirmation by the Depoſition of one Wickſtead, formerly a Monk, who being ſeiz'd for holding Correſpondence with the Enemy, charg'd the Earl of Sunderland to his face, with revealing his Majeſty's Secrets to the Prince of Orange. Upon which, Wickſtead was committed to a Meſſenger, from whom he made his Eſcape out of a Window two Pair of Stairs high, and Lord Sunderland own'd the Receipt of Skelton's Letters; but added, he took no notice of them, out of an invincible Contempt for that Tool and all his Intelligence, which was generally ſecond-hand News. Lord Sunderland had taken out a particular Pardon, ſo had Jefferies, Sir Nicholas Butler, the Biſhops of Durham and Cheſter. Sunderland expecting to be remov'd, turn'd off above a Dozen of his Domeſticks twelve Days before; and the next Day after retir'd to his Houſe, which had been Prince Rupert's, at Windſor, from whence he withdrew into Holland, after the Prince was ſail'd for England, and there publiſh'd his Apology; as Dr. Sprat, Biſhop of Rocheſter, did in a Letter to the Earl of Dorſet; and the Earl of Mulgrave in a Letter to Dr. Tillotſon; but neither of them are clear'd, even by the Account they themſelves give of their own Conduct.

Earl of Sunderland in Diſgrace.

By this time the Prince of Orange's Declaration was almoſt in every one's hand. It was firſt brought over by Captain Langham, who commanded a Company of Foot in an Engliſh Regiment in the States Service; who coming to London, was recommended to lodge at a Man's Houſe, who had been with the Duke of Monmouth. Langham ask'd him to get ſomebody to ſhew him where the Dutch Ambaſſador dwelt, and enquiring the Price of a good Horſe, ſaid he did not value ten or twenty Guineas more or leſs, if he could have a good one. When he went out he was very earneſt with the People of the Houſe to take great care of his Portmanteau; all which Circumſtances rais'd a Suſpicion, and the Man of the Houſe having been pardon'd by King James, either out of Gratitude, or in hope of Reward, open'd his Portmanteau, took out the Declarations, and carry'd them to the Lord Mayor, who order'd Langham to be ſeiz'd, and ſent him and the Declarations to Whitehall, where the Council was preſently ſummon'd to examine him. Langham boldly deny'd that he brought over any ſuch Paper, alledging he came for England, purely to take hold of his Majeſty's moſt gracious Pardon lately publiſh'd; and adding, that ſuch Uſage would fright People from venturing into England upon it. Skelton ſeeing the Captain, ſaid he was a great Enemy to the King; upon which he was committed, and ſet aſide for Trial. A Proclamation was publiſh'd November 2. againſt reading, or keeping that Treaſonable Libel, as it was call'd, and great Care was taken to hinder its being diſpers'd; inſomuch, that a Copy of it could not be procur'd for Silver or Gold. The Grand Jury, before whom a Bill of High Treaſon was laid againſt Langham, refus'd to find it, becauſe no Declaration appear'd; however, in a few Days it was reprinted, and ſpread about Town and Country. The King then finding there was no way to hinder it, permitted the printing of it, with a ſorry Anſwer, ſaid to be written by Penn; tho' I muſt confeſs I think the Prince of Orange's firſt Declaration to be by no means worthy his glorious Cauſe: 'tis dry and tedious, and wants the Spirit and Fire, which is the Characteriſtick of the Genius of Liberty; it has Truth every where, and it might have had Life and Beauty, had Biſhop Burnet had the penning of it. The Subſtance of it was the Enumeration of the Grievances of the three Kingdoms, and the means of redreſſing them by a Free Parliament; to which he referr'd every thing, in an additional Declaration the 24th of October N. S. His Highneſs publiſh'd this to remove any ill Impreſſions that might have been made by the King's ſaying, that he came to conquer theſe Kingdoms; for he aſſur'd them he was coming only to deliver them from Popery and Slavery, of which they were in the moſt extreme Danger.

A. D. 1688.

Prince of Orange's Declaration.

The King was indecently elevated with the falſe Accounts, which had been given of the Ruin of the Dutch Fleet; he ſuffer'd it to be printed in the Gazette, that 400 Horſe had been thrown over-board, and ſeveral dead Men; that 1500 Horſe were render'd unſerviceable, &c. The Harlem and Amſterdam Gazettes were order'd to give a diſmal Relation of the great Damage the Prince's Fleet had ſuſtain'd, on purpoſe to encreaſe King James's Security, and it had ſuch Effect on the Engliſh Court for a few days, that the King could not help diſcovering his Mind ſo far as to begin to recall ſome of his late Acts of Grace, and to ſhew, ſays Echard very quaintly, They were more the Reſult of Neceſſity than Inclination. When that Expreſſion in the Prince's Declaration was firſt read to him, That his Highneſs was invited over by divers of the Lords both Spiritual and Temporal, and by many Gentlemen and others, he ſtartled, and in great Perplexity ſent for the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of London, Rocheſter, Peterborough, and others, of whom he demanded, Whether their inviting the Prince of Orange was true? The Biſhops ſeeing the Biſhops of Cheſter and St. David's with the King, told the Lord Preſton, Secretary of State, that they ſhould not ſpeak as long as thoſe Prelates were there; ſo they were ſent away. The other Biſhops not giving him a ſatisfactory Anſwer, he fell into a Paſſion, and requir'd them, fixing a ſhort Day for it, to bring him a Paper under their own Hands, ſignifying their Abhorrence of the Prince of Orange's intended Invaſion, which they evaded, and upon which read the learned Lawyer.

Biſhops refuſe to abhor the Prince of Orange's Expedition.

"This Juncture brought into View the Exactneſs of the Parallel between the King, now in "want of Aſſiſtance, and his Father; for when "the Scots invaded England in 1640, King "Charles required the Lords and great Commoners at York, to ſign a Proteſtation, containing, that the Subſcribers did diſclaim and renounce their having any Correſpondence with "thoſe Rebellious Invaders. But the Lord Viſcount Say, and the Lord Brook, poſitively refuſ'd, even in the King's own Preſence, to "make any ſuch Proteſtation, inſiſting, that if "the King ſuſpected their Loyalty he might proſecute them as he thought fit; but that it was "againſt Law to impoſe Oaths, or Proteſtations, "which the Law did not enjoin, and in that "reſpect they ought not to betray the Common "Liberty, but would ſubmit to his Majeſty's Proſecution, if any ſhould be. The King therefore impriſon'd them, but the Complaints againſt that illegal Proceeding being general, they were diſmiſt. The Biſhops now in 1688, follow'd thoſe two Lords Example, even in "King James's own Preſence, in declining to "obey his expreſs and perſonal Commands, and "refuſing to betray the publick Liberty. From "which two Inſtances may be collected theſe "ſhort Remarks: That King James was now "come over to Sidney's Opinion; That ſome "Power is derived from the People; That Britons, whatſoever be their Pretences, will, when "Preſſures and Sufferings come to be their own "Caſe, fly to the Conſtitution for ſhelter; and "that the Biſhops now thought it no Diſparagement to imitate the Proceedings in 1640"

Biſhops imitate 1640.

The King told them he muſt have their Abhorrence, for his Succeſs depended upon it, and he had left room to print it in his Proclamation againſt the Prince, which he was forced to publiſh without it.

The Biſhops offer'd to diſown verbally what was ſaid of them in the Declaration, and he might make what uſe of it he pleas'd. The King could get nothing more from them, and when he diſmiſt them he ſaid ſullenly, I'll depend upon my Army.

His Highneſs wrote a Letter to the Army, and Admiral Herbert another to the Fleet, which had great Influence on the Minds both of Soldiers and Seamen, well enough prepared to receive ſuch Impreſſions as were in the Contents of thoſe Letters.

The Prince ſails from Holland.

All the Damage his Highneſs's Ships had receiv'd being repaired, he ſet ſail from Helvoetſluys the 1ſt of November, and it is certain, he even then deſign'd for the North of England, for the Fleet try'd till next day at Noon, if it was poſſible to ſail Northward. About Noon November 2, the Signal was given to ſteer Weſtward, and the Wind being full Eaſt, it not only happily diverted them from their firſt intended Courſe, but kept the Engliſh Fleet in the River; nor was it poſſible for them to come out, tho' they were fallen down ſo low as the Gunfleet. By this means the Prince had the Sea open to him, with a fair Wind and a ſafe Navigation. On the 3d of November he paſs'd between Dover and Calais, and before Night came in ſight of the Iſle of Wight. The next Day, November the 4th, on which the Prince was both born and married, he fancy'd if he could then land, it would look auſpicious to the Army, and animate the Soldiers; but it was the general Opinion, that the 5th of November, being Gunpowder-Treaſon Day, would be thought the more fortunate for their landing, as an Æra of Deliverance from Popery, which his Highneſs was now attempting. It was reſolv'd to land in Torbay, or where it could be beſt done near it, that being at ſuch a diſtance from London, Horſes might be got, and every thing put in order, before the King could march his Army againſt the Prince; beſides, the Men might be refreſh'd at Exeter. The Pilots overſhot the Bay in the Night, and found themſelves paſt not only that, but Dartmouth in the Morning, ſo that 'twas thought the Fleet muſt ſail on to Plymouth. Admiral Ruſſel, who ſaw the Pilots Error was in great Diſorder upon it, when on a ſudden, to the Wonder of all, the Wind turn'd into the South, and a ſoft and happy Gale carried the whole Fleet in four Hours into Torbay.

A. D. 1688.

Lands in Torbay.

On Saturday the 3d of November, News came to Whitehall, that the Dutch Fleet was in the Channel between Dover and Calais, half Seas over, ſailing Weſtward with a fair Wind, ſo numerous that they were ſeven Hours paſſing thoſe Streights. Courier after Courier arriv'd from the South Coaſts to bring an Account of its Motions. The King expected the Prince would land in the North, and for that Reaſon the Scots halted at Carliſle. But it would not have been the better for him; the Earl of Danby, Earl of Devonſhire, Earl of Stamford, and Lord Fairfax having ſecured thoſe Counties for the Prince. The Earl of Devonſhire caus'd the Prince's Declaration to be read in the Town of Derby, from whence he wrote a Letter to the Lord Middleton, to aſſure him that he took not Arms out of enmity to the King's Perſon, but for the Good of his Country, and to obtain a Free Parliament; and whereas it was ſaid in the Prince's Declaration, that he was invited by ſeveral Peers of the Realm, he own'd that himſelf was one of them; which Letter he caus'd to be printed, and it very much mortified the King and his Adherents. He pleas'd himſelf with thinking that the Prince would not be able to recruit his Cavalry in the Weſt, Albeville having written him that the Dutch had loſt 1500 Horſe. The Court gave out that the Lord Dartmouth was in purſuit of them; and the King himſelf ſaid, If the Wind is the ſame at Sea as at Land, he doubted not he would ſoon be up with them, and a terrible Battle enſue. He founded this Judgment on the Milan Almanack, where ſuch a Combat was propheſy'd to fall out in the laſt Quarter of the Moon; but Great Heroes build nothing upon Almanacks. Capt. Aylmer, afterwards Lord, who commanded the Swallow Frigat, ſeeing a large Dutch Pink lagging in the Tail of the Fleet, made ſail to her, and found her juſt ready to ſink; ſhe had 4 Companies of Foot on board, belonging to Col. Babington's Regiment; they were commanded by Major Columbine, and one of the Companies was Capt. Langham's who brought over the Declaration. Another Dutch Tranſport, laden with Hay, was brought into the Thames by the Maſter, to whom the King gave both Ship and Cargo. Captain Aylmer follow'd the Dutch Fleet till he ſaw them into Torbay, and on Tueſday ſent an Expreſs to the King, that the Troops were landing. The Man made ſuch haſte, and was ſo tir'd, that he fell down at the King's Feet, and could not ſpeak, which was the greater Diſappointment to the Court, becauſe the Particulars were referr'd to the Expreſs; but he was ſoon followed by other Couriers, from whom the King had full Intelligence, which however was kept as ſecret as poſſible. He proceeded with the utmoſt Diligence, to get a fine Train of Artillery in readineſs, and the Troops were were order'd to rendezvous near Salisbury. There was, from the firſt News of the Prince's Landing, no great Fear of their doing the Dutch any harm, for as they were marching thro' the City of London, and thro' great Crouds, that came to ſee them, to teſtify their Hopes of the Prince of Orange's Succeſs, many of them drank to it privately, People waiting with Bottles of Wine and other Liquors to give them: The Officers might eaſily have ſeen it, but they would not, and the Soldiers knew very well that they were in no danger of them.

Prince of Orange's Standard.

Upon the Arrival of the Dutch Fleet in Torbay, the Prince of Orange gave Orders that his great Standard ſhould be put up. It had this Motto, THE PROTESTANT RELIGION AND LIBERTIES OF ENGLAND, and underneath JE MAINTIENDERAI, I will maintain, the Motto of the Houſe of Naſſau. The White Flag was put uppermoſt, ſignifying his moſt gracious Offer of Peace to all ſuch as would live peaceably, and under that the red or bloody Flag was ſet up, ſignifying War to all that oppos'd his juſt Deſigns. Drawing into the Bay's Mouth, they diſcover'd the People of Devonſhire flocking in great Numbers to the Sea-Shore, not to oppoſe the Prince's landing, but to welcome their Deliverer, with joyful Shouts and Acclamations, and to furniſh him and his Followers with Proviſions for their Refreſhment. Coming very near, juſt before any landed, a Divine of the Church of England, on board the Golden Sun, got upon the Poup of the Ship, and flouriſhing his Bible in his Hand, cry'd out, For the Prince and the Proteſtant Religion. The Bells rung all along Shore, as the Prince coaſted it. The Engliſh and Scots Regiments were order'd to land firſt, himſelf follow'd about Noon, on the fifth of November, and took his Quarters at a Fiſherman's in Torbay, ordering a Camp to be mark'd out on the Top of the Hill, which conſiſted of 26 Regiments, having, 1000 Inferior Officers.

78 Field Officers.
15400 Soldiers, Horſe and Foot.

About 2000 more than the Liſt publiſh'd by King James's Order. As ſoon as the Prince and Mareſchal Schomberg got aſhore, they were furniſh'd with ſuch Horſes as the Village of Broxholme could afford, and rode up the Hill to view the Ground, which was found to be as convenient as could be imagin'd for the Foot in that Seaſon. The Prince ſent for all the Fiſhermen of the Village, and ask'd them which was the propereſt Place for landing his Horſe, and he was next Morning ſhew'd one below Broxholme, where the Ships could be brought very near the Land, againſt a good Shore, and the Horſes would not be put to ſwim above 20 Yards. This prov'd ſo happy for landing, tho' known by meer Accident, that there could not have been found a properer Place in the whole Iſland.

There was a dead Calm all that Morning, and in three Hours time all the Horſe were landed, with as much Baggage as was neceſſary, till the Army got to Exeter. By next day Noon it was in full March, and march'd 4 Miles that night, being then about 20 Miles from Exeter. No ſooner were they thus diſengag'd from their Fleet, than a great Storm blew from the Weſt, but the Dutch Ships were cover'd by the Land; and the King's Fleet, which was come as far as the Iſle of Wight, in purſuit of them, were ſo ſhatter'd by this contrary Wind, that being forc'd into Portſmouth, they were no more fit for Service that Year.

Beſides the Mareſchal de Schomberg, his Highneſs had with him of Foreigners, Count Charles and Count Meinhardt Schomberg, Monſieur Bentinck, Monſieur Zuyleſtein, Seigneur Auverquerque, Monſieur Keppel, Count Naſſau, Baron Genkle, the famous Generals Fagel and Hompeſch, Monſieur Caillemotte, Brother to the Lord Galway. The Prince made haſte to Exeter, where he ſtaid 10 Days to refreſh his Troops, and give the Country time to ſhew their Affections, which they did by ſhouting and ringing of Bells, but did by no means crowd in to him, as they did to the Duke of Monmouth; the Devonſhire Men telling the Prince's Officers, You are enough of yourſelves to do the Buſineſs. His Highneſs brought Arms ſufficient for as many more as he had with him; but he, having a regular Army, and not ſtanding in ſo much need of Aſſiſtance as the Duke of Monmouth did, was not haſty in giving out Commiſſions. The firſt he gave were to the Lord Viſcount Mordaunt, Sir John Guiſe, and Sir Robert Peyton, who being curious in their Men, did not compleat their Regiments in the Time that Monmouth compleated his whole Army.

The firſt Place the Prince of Orange's Declaration was publickly read at, was Newton Abbot, a Market Town near Exeter, and the firſt Man who read it was a Clergyman. His Highneſs ſtaid two Nights at Sir William Courtney's, and was nobly entertain'd; from thence he went to Chudleigh; and thence, on the 8th of November, to Exeter, where he made a ſplendid Entry, which was mightily magnify'd at London, and a Paper came out, with an Account of the Form and Manner of it, adding ſuch a terrible Deſcription of his Finland Guards, cloath'd in Bear Skins, and his Swiſs with Whiskers, as made a ſtrong Impreſſion on the Vulgar, who look'd on King James's Liſt of his Forces, tho' not much ſhort of the Truth, as a Fable to leſſen his Strength. The Cannon and heavy Baggage was brought by Water to Topſham, three Miles from Exeter. The Clergy and Magiſtrates of Exeter were very fearful and very backward. The Prince ſent for them, and ſpoke very obligingly to them. The Biſhop ran out at one Gate while the Prince enter'd at another, and was made Archbiſhop of York, for his Cowardice, or ſomething worſe. The Dean too ſcamper'd in the Fright, but he return'd before his Highneſs was gone from his Houſe, which he took for his Lodgings. Te Deum was ſung in the Cathedral, and after the Collect was ended, Dr. Burnet read his Highneſs's Declaration; at the beginning of which the Clergy ſhuffled out of their Seats, but the People were very attentive; and when at the End of the Declaration, the Doctor cry'd God bleſs the Prince of Orange, they ſhouted for Joy. The Clergy almoſt every where elſe ſhew'd their Aſſent to the Prince's Undertaking, by their chearful Reception of his Followers, and opening the Church-Doors, to ring the Bells in the Places thro' which he paſs'd. Thoſe of Exeter were order'd by Dr. Burnet, in the Prince's Name, not to pray for the pretended Prince of Wales; but one of them ſo doing, two of the Lords who came over with the Prince, ſtood up and put on their Hats, in Abhorrence of it, kneeling down at all the other Collects. His Highneſs was three Days at Exeter before he was join'd by any of the Nobility or Gentry who had invited him over, or were in his Intereſt. The Mayor and Aldermen of the City were very cold, and only one Tuthill and another Alderman declar'd for him. The Army was kept under ſuch exact Diſcipline, that every thing was paid for, where it was demanded; tho' the Soldiers were contented with ſuch moderate Entertainment, that the People generally ask'd ask'd but little for what they had of them. The Prince was a Week at Exeter, before any of the Gentlemen of the Country came in to him, tho' Perſons of Condition came every Day from other Parts. The firſt was the Lord Colcheſter, Son to Earl Rivers, Lieutenant of the Lord Dover's Troop of Guard, who brought ſome of the Troopers with him to Exeter; with him, or ſoon after, arriv'd Thomas Wharton Eſq; Son of the Lord Wharton; Col. Godfrey, who had married the Duke of Berwick's Mother; John How Eſq; Mr. Ruſſel, Brother to the late Lord Orford; at laſt came Mr. Edward Seymour, Sir William Portman, Sir Francis War, Col. Palmer, Major Bowyer, and many Weſt Country Gentlemen. As ſoon as Mr. Seymour, afterwards Sir Edward, was come, he ſent for Dr. Burnet, and ask'd him, Why they were a Rope of Sand? Why they had not an Aſſociation? which was then drawn up, and laid on the Prince's Table, where the Lords and Gentlemen of his Court ſign'd it as follows.

Lords and Gentlemen join the Prince. Lord Colcheſter.

Sir Edward Seymour's Aſſociation.

WE whoſe Names are hereunto ſubſcrib'd, who have now join'd with the Prince of Orange for the Defence of the Proteſtant Religion, and for the maintaining of the antient Government, and the Laws and Liberties of England, Scotland, and Ireland, do engage to Almighty God, to his Highneſs the Prince of Orange, and to one another, to ſtick firm to this Cauſe in the Defence of it, and never to depart from it until our Religion, Laws, and Liberties, are ſo far ſecur'd to us in a Free Parliament, that we ſhall be no more in danger of falling under Popery and Slavery. And whereas we are engag'd in this Common Cauſe under the Protection of the Prince of Orange, by which Caſe his Perſon might be expoſed to Danger, and the curſed Attempts of Papiſts and other bloody Men; We do therefore ſolemnly engage to God and one another, that if any ſuch Attempt be made upon him, we will purſue not only thoſe that make it, but all their Adherents, and all that we find in Arms againſt us, with the utmoſt Severity of a juſt Revenge to their Ruin and Deſtruction. And that the Execution of any ſuch Attempt, which God of his infinite Mercy forbid, ſhall not divert us from proſecuting this Cauſe, which we do now undertake, but that it ſhall engage us to carry it on with all the Vigour that ſo barbarous an Action ſhall deſerve.

Oxford for Reſiſtance.

While the Prince was in Exeter, there came to him from Oxford a Head of a College, who invited him thither in the Name of that Univerſity, and his Highneſs deſign'd to go to Oxford, had not King James's Flight from London call'd him thither when he was got as near it as Abington; however the abovemention'd Aſſociation was carry'd thither, and ſigned by the Heads of the Houſes and others, with Expreſſions of the greateſt Zeal in this Reſiſting Cauſe, that their Hearts went with their Hands.

After the abovementioned Gentlemen, the Earl of Abington, Captain Clarges, and other Perſons of Quality arrived at Exeter, as did alſo the Lord Cornbury Colonel of a Regiment of Horſe, with which, and Part of the Duke of St. Albans's Regiment of Dragoons and the Royal Regiment of Horſe, he pretended to attack ſome of the Pr. of Orange's advanc'd Guards, as he gave out, by the Kings Order. His Highneſs had notice of his Deſign to come over to him, and commanded a Body of his Men to advance and aſſiſt him in caſe the ſubaltern Officers ſhould make any Reſiſtance. They were within twenty Miles of Exeter, and within two Miles of the Prince's Body, when a Whiſper ran among them that they were betray'd. Biſhop Burnet ſays, the Lord Cornbury had not the Preſence of Mind, which ſo critical an Affair required; ſo they fell in Confuſion, and many rode back. One entire Regiment and about a Hundred of the other two came forward with him to Exeter, which much encourag'd the Prince's Friends, and ſhew'd them they had not been deceiv'd in what was told them of the Inclinations of the King's Army. On the other hand, thoſe who ſtudy'd to ſupport the King's Spirit by Flatteries, aſſur'd him, he might even at this time depend entirely upon his Army, ſince thoſe that intended to carry over thoſe Regiments, were forc'd to manage it with ſo much Artifice, and durſt not diſcover their Deſign either to Officers or Soldiers; and as ſoon as the latter perceiv'd it, the greater Part of them turn'd back. Falſe News, which is poor Food for Men in Diſtreſs to feed upon. The Truth and Circumſtances of this important Defection, are as follows.

A. D. 1688.

On Sunday three Regiments of Horſe, the Duke of Berwick's, late Earl of Oxford's, commanded by his Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Francis Compton Brother to the Biſhop of London; the Duke of St. Albans's, commanded by his Lieutenant-Colonel Langſton; and Sir John Fenwick's, commanded by Sunderland his Lieutenant-Colonel; and the Regiment of Dragoons, commanded by the Lord Cornbury in Perſon, arriv'd in the Evening at Salisbury, and about three a-Clock on Monday Morning they ſounded to Horſe, and the Dragoons beat a March. Sunderland Lieutenant-Colonel to Fenwick, ſent his Major to Sir Francis Compton to know What Orders? Compton reply'd, their three Regiments of Horſe were ordered to march farther Weſtward. Sunderland deſiring to ſee thoſe Orders, Compton ſaid he had them not, but Lord Cornbury had, who commanded that Detachment. Upon this, Sunderland went to be ſatisfy'd by that Lord, who was not in the way. The three other Regiments march'd, and thoſe that were in the Secret told the reſt they were to ſeize an Out-Poſt before the Dutch were advanc'd to it. Theſe Regiments rode 18 Miles without ſtopping, then they halted two Hours, and rode on 20 Miles more without unbridling. At length Major Clifford of Cornbury's Dragoons perceiving they drew near the Dutch, miſtruſted the Deſign, which when he diſcover'd, he, with three other Officers and about thirty Dragoons, refus'd to go further. The Duke of Berwick arriv'd at Salisbury the ſame Evening, and underſtanding his Regiment was gone, follow'd Poſt, but he could not overtake them. He pick'd up about a hundred Troopers and Dragoons of the three Regiments, which the Court gave out were 400, but the contrary was apparent.

King James at Salisbury.

The King was come to Salisbury, in very great need of Aſſiſtance both in Mind and Body, his Spirits ſunk extremely; ſo it is always with Guilt in Deſpair, his Blood was in ſuch Fermentation, that he had frequent Bleeding at the Noſe: he ſent many Spies to obſerve the Motions of the Prince, and they all took his Money, but never return'd to him; or if they did return, they brought him only common Reports, which magnify'd the Numbers of the Dutch, as much as he and his Creatures leſſen'd them. He had not been long at Salisbury before he heard that London was unquiet, that the Earls of Devonſhire, Danby, and the Lord Viſcount Lumley were drawing great Bodies together in the North, that York and Newcaſtle had declar'd for the Prince, notwithſtanding the Bluſter made by the

A. D. 1688. Duke of Newcaſtle. That the Lord Delamere had arm'd and mounted his Tenants in Cheſhire, making above 200 Horſe; and among this, and a great deal more ill News, he had only the Comfort to hear, that the Lord Lovelace paſſing thro' Cirenceſter to join the Prince, with about 50 Horſe, had been intercepted and taken by Beaufort's Militia after a Skirmiſh, in which ſeveral of the Militia were ſo ſtout as to be kill'd, among whom was the Major and his Son. 'Twas talk'd of bringing Lord Lovelace to Salisbury, and trying him immediately by a Council of War; but the Defection from King James came on too faſt, and he, and thoſe about him, became more ſollicitous to ſave themſelves than to deſtroy others.

Archbiſhop of Canterbury.	Biſhop of Rocheſter.
	Biſhop of Peterborough.
Archbiſhop of York elect.	Biſhop of Oxford.
	Lord Oſſulſton.
Duke of Graſton.	Earl of Clarendon.
Duke of Ormond.	Earl of Rocheſter.
Earl of Oxford.	Earl of Burlington.
Earl of Clare.	Earl of Angleſea.
Lord Viſcount Newport.	Lord Paget.
Biſhop of St. Aſaph.	Lord Chandos.
Biſhop of Ely.

The Subſtance of it was, that he would call a free Parliament, and enter into a Treaty with the Prince. Theſe Peers had been inform'd the King ſhould have ſaid, He would take it highly ill of any Man that offer'd ſuch a thing to him. But inſtead of ſo high a Tone, the Anſwer was, My Lords, what you ask of me I moſt paſſionately deſire, and I promiſe you on the Faith of a King that I will have a Parliament, and ſuch a one as you ask for, as ſoon as ever the Prince of Orange has quitted this Realm; for how is it poſſible a Parliament ſhould be free in all its Circumſtances, while an Enemy is in the Kingdom, and can make a Return of near 100 Voices? One would think it impoſſible for a Man who had liv'd near threeſcore Years in the World, and been converſant with Courts and Councils, to diſcover ſo much Weakneſs; he promiſes on the Faith of a King, who had in the moſt notorious manner broken it; he calls the Prince an Enemy, when all the Nation took him to be their beſt Friend; he ſays it is not poſſible to have a free Parliament while he's in the Kingdom, and every Soul in it believ'd there never would be a free Parliament, if he once left it.

Several Lords, as the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Oxford, the Marquis of Hallifax, the Earl of Nottingham, and the Lord Carbery, refus'd to ſign the Lords Petition, becauſe it was not ſtrong enough; and they inſiſted upon it, that the Engliſh Peers who were with the Prince of Orange might have Writs of Summons to Parliament, and that it ſhould be mention'd.

The King's Journey to Salisbury was haſten'd by the Advice of the Count de Roye, whoſe Officiouſneſs in this Buſineſs gave great occaſion of Scandal to the French Proteſtants. Before the King went, he nominated Dr. Lamplugh, late Biſhop of Exeter, for the Archbiſhoprick of York, and Sir Jonathan Trelawny, Biſhop of Briſtol, for the See of Exeter. He made the more haſte, upon hearing that the City of London, the Counties of York, Kent, and other Shires, were preparing Petitions to the ſame Purport with that of the Peers. The Duke of Grafton, who had ſign'd that Petition, told the King he did it, becauſe he thought it was for the Intereſt of his Country, but that he would accompany him, and fight to the laſt Drop of his Blood for his Service; adding, If Your Majeſty brings in any French, I'll be d——n'd if any one will ſerve you. The King reply'd, Nobody can ſpeak plainer. There was then a Report that the Sieur Gaberet, Commander of a Squadron of French Ships, was taking in Troops at Bologne or Calais, to be tranſported to England, which Report, tho' falſe, ſet the Nation ſtill more againſt the Court. As the King depended much upon the Milan Almanack, the London Mob built much on the Falling of the Scepter out of the Hand of Popiſh Queen Mary's Statue on the Royal-Exchange, as portending the Downfall of Popery. They had been alarm'd with a Talk of Cauldrons, Gridirons, Knives and Spits being found in the Popiſh Seminary at St. John's, which was aſſaulted by them, as was that in Bucklersbury, where they gutted the Romiſh Chappel; and a Prieſt ſneaking off with one of the Silver Candleſticks, had his Hand, Candleſtick and all, cut off, by a Goldſmith's Apprentice whom I knew. The Maſs-Houſe at Lime-ſtreet was reliev'd by the Trained Bands, or it had been utterly demoliſh'd, both Prieſts and People that frequented it, having been more inſolent than thoſe in Bucklersbury. The Mob's Juſtice here, and at the Maſs-Houſe in Wild-ſtreet, was remarkable; for having decreed the Furniture and Implements to the Fire, there was nothing of it plunder'd, and when ſome Raſcals endeavour'd to purloin ſome part, they were immediately taken hold of, and us'd in a worſe manner than the Law uſes Pilferers. Before the King left London, or while he was yet almoſt in the Hearing of it, there was a Hue and Cry after Father Petre, who ſhelter'd himſelf in the Train of the Lord Waldegrave, who was ſent Ambaſſador to France, the only Place where an Ambaſſador from King James now ſignify'd any thing.

The King had ſent for the chief Officers of the Army, upon hearing of the Defection of the Lords Cornbury and Colcheſter. The Duke of Grafton, the Lord Churchill, Col. Trelawny and Col. Kirk attending him, he told them he was reſolv'd to call a free Parliament to redreſs Grievances, and do what was deſir'd of him; with which, if they were not ſatisfy'd, he would grant them Paſſes to go to the Prince of Orange, and ſpare them the Shame of deſerting their lawful Sovereign. He can't help it; the grand Air muſt always be kept up, and whatever unlawful things he did, muſt ſtill be the lawful!

The King arriving at Salisbury on the 19th of November, was complemented by ſuch Officers of the Army as were moſt devoted to him, who all expreſs'd their Abhorrence of the Lord Cornbury's Deſertion; but the next day moſt of the chief Officers, and even ſome of the laſt mention'd, who diſapprov'd of the Lord Cornbury's Defection, apply'd to the Earl of Feverſham, deſiring him to aſſure the King, They would ſpill the laſt Drop of their Blood in his Service, but could not in Conſcience fight againſt a Prince, who was come over with no other Deſign than to procure the calling of a free Parliament for the Security of their Religion and Liberties. Officers refuſe to fight againſt the Prince of Orange.

The King intended to go that day to Warminſter, to view four or five Battalions which lay thereabouts, under the Command of Col. Kirk, but he was hinder'd by the bleeding of his Noſe, for which he was twice let blood. A Party of the Brigade in and about Warminſter, being inform'd that there was a Party of Scots detach'd from the Prince's Army, advanc'd as far as Bruton, they march'd thither, and hearing the Scots were at Wincaunton in Somerſetſhire, four Miles off, they reſolv'd to ſurprize them, their Commander

A. D. 1688.

Sarsfield being an Iriſh Papiſt; but a Miller gave the Scots Notice of their coming, and the Scots lining the Hedges, receiv'd them ſo warmly, that they thought fit to retire, the Miller and others crying out, the Dutch, the Dutch. Cornet Web was mortally wounded. The next day the Lord Churchil, who commanded a Brigade of 5000 Men, went over to his Highneſs, with the Duke of Grafton, Col. Berkley, four or five Captains, and as many as were willing to follow him, leaving a Letter behind, containing great Expreſſions of Duty and Gratitude, but nothing ought to come in competition with his Conſcience; he join'd the Prince at Axminſter. The next day, November the 29th, on a falſe Alarm of the Duke of Schomberg's advancing with the Dutch Army, whoſe Forlorn was indeed within four Miles of Salisbury, to give the King Battle, he left that City with great Precipitation, and at Andover was himſelf left by Prince George of Denmark, the Duke of Ormond, the Earl of Drumlanerig, Sir George Hewett, and others. The Prince wrote him a Letter, repreſenting that his Religion, and the Concern he had for the Liberties of Europe, now in danger from the French King, oblig'd him to uſe his Endeavours for the Preſervation of both. When the News came to London, the Princeſs was ſo ſtruck with the Apprehenſion of the King's Diſpleaſure, that ſhe ſaid to the Lady Churchil ſhe could not bear the Thoughts of it, and would leap out at Window rather than venture it. The Biſhop of London then lodg'd very ſecretly in Suffolk ſtreet, Lady Churchil knew of it, and went to him immediately; they concerted the Method of the Princeſs's withdrawing from Court. Her Highneſs went ſooner to bed than ordinary; about Midnight ſhe went down a back Stairs from her Cloſet, attended only by the Lady Churchil and Lady Berkley, in ſuch haſte, that they carry'd nothing with them. They were waited for by my Lord of London, who carry'd them to the Earl of Dorſet's, whoſe Lady furniſh'd them with every thing, and ſo they went Northward as far as Northampton, where that Earl, attended with a Body of Horſe to ſerve as a Guard to the Princeſs, and in a little while a ſmall Army was form'd about her, who choſe to be commanded by the Biſhop of London, and Biſhop Burnet ſays, he too eaſily accepted it. Theſe things put the King in an inexpreſſible Confuſion, he ſaw himſelf now forſaken, not only by thoſe whom he had truſted and favour'd moſt, but even by his own Children; and the Army was in ſuch Diſtraction, that there was not any one Body that ſeem'd entirely united and firm to him. Biſhop Burnet takes notice that a fooliſh Ballad was made at that time, treating the Papiſts, and chiefly the Iriſh, in a very ridiculous manner. It was ſung in the Play-houſe by the Officers of the Army between the Acts; ſome Iriſh Officers reſenting it, Col. Harry Wharton, and 40 or 50 Engliſh Officers, who were there by Concert, roſe from their Seats to vindicate their Ballad, and the Iriſh Burthen of Lero Lero Liliburlero, which made an Impreſſion on the Army that cannot well be imagin'd by thoſe who ſaw it not. At laſt all People both in City and Country got it, and were perpetually ſinging it, and perhaps never had ſo ſlight a thing ſo great an Effect.

Lord Churchil goes to him, with Duke of Grafton, Col. Berkley, &c.

The Prince of Orange having ſtaid twelve Days at Exeter, left the Government of that City with Mr. Seymour the Recorder, and a ſmall Garriſon, to take Charge of his heavy Artillery, under Col. Gibſon, whom he made Deputy Governor as to the military Part.

At Crewkern in Somerſetſhire, Dr. Finch, Son to the Earl of Winchelſea, Warden of All Souls College in Oxford, was ſent to the Prince from ſome of the Heads of Colleges, to aſſure him they would declare for him, and to invite him to come thither, telling him that their Plate ſhould be at his Service, if he needed it. Biſhop Burnet obſerves, This was a ſudden Turn from thoſe Principles that they had carried ſo high a few Years before.

Doctors of Oxford offer the Prince their Plate.

The Earl of Shrewsbury and Sir John Guiſe enter'd Briſtol without Oppoſition; the latter ſent to the Keeper of the Caſtle at Glouceſter, to diſcharge the Lord Lovelace and his Followers, which was done immediately. The Earl of Bath prevail'd with the Garriſon of Plymouth to declare for the Prince of Orange, and moſt of the Dutch Men of War harbour'd there for ſome time. One of the King's Ships commanded by Captain Churchil, afterwards Admiral, came in to them, the Captain having read the Prince's Declaration on board it. At Shireburn the Gentlemen of Dorſetſhire came in a Body to the Prince, who haſten'd his March towards London, where things were in a high Fermentation.

Earl of Bath for the Prince of Orange.

The Northern Lords before-mention'd, with a great Concourſe of Nobility and Gentry, met at Nottingham, and declar'd for the Prince; and in their Declaration explain'd what Rebellion is, and what a juſt Reſiſtance. We hope all good Proteſtants will with their Lives and Fortunes be aſſiſtant to us, and not be bugbear'd with the opprobrious Term of Rebels, by which the Court would fright them, to become perfect Slaves to their tyrannical Inſolences and Uſurpations; for we aſſure ourſelves that no rational and unbiaſs'd Perſons will judge it Rebellion to defend their Laws and Religion, which all Engliſh Princes have ſworn at their Coronations; which Oath, how well it has been obſerv'd of late, we deſire a Free Parliament may have the Conſideration of. We indeed own it a Rebellion to Reſiſt a King that governs by Law; but he was always accounted a Tyrant that made his Will his Law, and to Reſiſt ſuch a one, we juſtly eſteem no Rebellion, but a neceſſary Defence.

Northern Lords explain Reſiſtance.

Revolution Principles what they are.

At Shireburn his Highneſs had Advice that the King was retir'd to London, and the broken Remains of his Army to Reading; upon which he immediately proceeded to Salisbury, where he made a publick Entry, accompany'd by the Prince of Denmark, the Dukes of Ormond and Grafton, Mareſchal Schomberg, Count Solmes, Count Naſſau, Meſſieurs Zuyleſtein, Bentink, Overkirk, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Earl of Macclesfield, the Lord Viſcount Mordaunt, the Lord Wiltſhire, the Lord Churchil, the Lord Cornbury, the Lord Colcheſter, with many other Lords and Perſons of Quality. His Highneſs rode in a triumphant manner to the Biſhop's Palace, which was prepar'd for his Reception. The Mayor, Aldermen and Corporation of Salisbury attended in their Formalities; the Spectators were innumerable; their Joy and Exultation extatick, and vaſt Multitudes crowded in from all Parts of the Country to get a ſight of him, whom they look'd on as the Hope and Deliverer of the Nation. Happy had it been if they had been as grateful afterwards as they were glad then; and why they were not, the Gentlemen who ſent his Highneſs an Offer of their Plate can beſt tell.

The Prince's Entry into Salisbury.

The North was ſecur'd with a great deal of Eaſe for the Prince: York by the Earl of Danby, Lord Dunblain, Lord Fairfax, Lord Willoughby. Newcaſtle, by the Lord Lumley. Hull by Col. Copley, who made the Lord Langdale, the Popiſh Governor, the Lord Montgomery, and other Papiſts, Priſoners. The Earl of Stamford join'd the Lord Delamere, and both of them advanc'd to aſſiſt the Earl of Shrewsbury, in his Design upon Briſtol; who, however, wanted not their Aſſiſtance. The Duke of Somerſet, the Earl of Oxford, and many other Lords came in to the Prince daily. The unhappy Duke of Ormond was then ſo animated with Revolution, Principles, and was ſo zealous for the Proteſtant Religion, and Engliſh Liberties, that taking with him a Party of the Prince's Horſe, he went to Oxford, and caus'd his Highneſs's Declaration to be publickly read there. The Town of Berwick follow'd the Example of York, and declared for the Prince: and tho' the Duke of Gordon was ſent from London to ſecure Edinburgh Caſtle for the King, yet the Scotch Lords ſent the Duke of Queensberry, the Earl of Balcarras, and three other Deputies to London, to demand a free Parliament. Thus in a few Days only, the Defection became almoſt univerſal, and as Echard ſays it ought to be remembred, "That the chief "Actors were all Church of England Men, and "proceeded, as Biſhop Sprat terms it, upon "Church of England Principles." For, as the Earl of Danby writes, in a Tract, intituled, Thoughts of a private Perſon, It is neither againſt Scripture, nor Moral Honeſty, to defend their juſt and legal Rights, againſt the illegal and unjuſt Invaders of them.

D. of Ormond carries the Prince's Declaration to Oxford.

The Revolution on Ch. of England Principles.

We have mention'd the Retreat of the Princeſs of Denmark, which when the King heard of, he burſt into Tears, and cry'd, God help me, my own Children have forſaken me: But he conſider'd not, that he himſelf had forſaken God, his Country, and even his own Children, in forſaking the Church of England, in introducing Arbitrary Power, and in ſetting up an Impoſtor, to prevent the Succeſſion of his Daughters.

Her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs Anne left a Letter for the Queen, wherein ſhe complain'd of her Father's being miſled by the violent Counſels of Prieſts, and tells her, ſhe's fully perſuaded the Prince of Orange deſigns the King's Safety and Preſervation. The Biſhop of London convoy'd the Princeſs to Nottingham, where the Earl of Devonſhire gave her a Guard of 200 Horſe, by whom ſhe was ſafely conducted to Oxford, and was there joyfully receiv'd by her Husband, who met her with a ſtrong Detachment of the Prince of Orange's Forces.

In the mean time, the Lord Molineux made a fruitleſs Attempt to raiſe the Papiſts in Lancaſhire; and Sir Edward Hales, a Papiſt, Governor of the Tower, pointed two Mortar-Pieces on the Tower Battlements, as if he intended to bombard the City, which being rumoured, ſeveral ſkilful Engineers and Sea Officers, were conſulted by the Prince's Friends, how to ſeize the Tower in caſe ſuch an Attempt was made. It is ſaid, that the Project was laid to enter it at the Wharf, which would have been made eaſy by Communication with ſome Officers and Soldiers of the Garriſon. The City complaining of Hales's mounting his Mortar-Pieces to terrify them, that worthleſs Piece of Chivalry was turn'd out, and a Man of not much greater Worth put in his Place.

Before the Prince of Orange left Salisbury, a bold Man, probably Mr. Samuel Johnſon, publiſh'd a third Declaration in the Prince's Name: It was penn'd with great Spirit, and had as great an Effect. One Hugh Speke, whoſe Character is ſpared out of Reſpect to a very worthy Name and Family, pretended to be the Author or Contriver of it; but Echard thinks 'twas a vain Pretence, only to aſſume the Merit of a Thing, after the Prince ſucceeded, for which he wou'd have been hang'd, had his Highneſs been unſucceſsful; and indeed he could no more write it, than he could have written Mr. Locke's Eſſay on Human Underſtanding. It ſet forth the deſperate Deſigns of the Papiſts, and the extreme Danger the Nation was in, by their means; and requir'd all Perſons immediately to fall on ſuch Papiſts, as were in any Employments, and to turn them out; to ſecure all ſtrong Places, and do every thing that was in their power, to execute the Laws, and to bring all Things again in their proper Channels. This ſet all Men at work, for no doubt was made that it was truly the Prince's Declaration, tho' he knew nothing of it; and it was never certainly known who was the Author. The King was under ſuch Conſternation, that he neither knew what to reſolve on, nor whom to truſt. As no Pity is due to the Pityleſs, inſtead of ſympathizing in his extreme Miſery, I preſently call to mind the bleeding Eſſex in the Tower; the murder'd Ruſſel in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields; the quarter'd Corniſh in Cheapſide; the ſcourg'd and mangled Mr. Johnſon, all the way from Newgate to Tyburn; the infamous Chancellor and Judges; the Biſhops in Priſon; the Franchiſes of Corporations forcibly taken away from them; the Herds of Frock'd Prieſts in City and Country, and I can without relenting ſee him mourn over his Misfortunes.

King in deſpair.

The pretended Declaration put the City in a Flame. It was carried to the Lord Mayor, Sir John Chapman, by Captain Henry Baker, and he required him to execute it. The Papiſts were ſeized with inexpreſſible Terror, and it is wonderful that the People had not every where fallen upon the Popiſh Party. The Proteſtants were ſo encouraged, that a Bill of Indictment was preferred to the Grand Jury of Middleſex, againſt the Earl of Salisbury, not one of the wiſe Cecils, for turning Papiſt, contrary to the Laws of the Land. The King return'd to Whitehall, November 26, and two Days after, order'd the Lord Chancellor to iſſue out Writs, for ſummoning a Parliament to meet at Weſtminſter the 15th of January next, in which he was no more ſincere, than in that he pretended to call two Months before, being all the while conſulting with his Queen and Creatures, how to amuſe the Prince of Orange and the Nation, till he could ſend away his Wife, her pretended Son, and then follow them himſelf, out of the Kingdom 'Twas rumour'd, that the Lord Dartmouth refus'd to tranſport the Queen and the Impoſtor from Portſmouth to France; ſo the Marquis of Powis, who carried him thither, return'd with him to London.

He had conſulted the Lords, who were then in Town, on the preſent wretched State of his Affairs, and they all adviſ'd him, not only to call a Parliament, but to ſend Commiſſioners to the Prince, to treat with him, which was much againſt his Inclinations; yet he was in ſuch Dejection that he conſented to it. The Earl of Clarendon propoſed it, as alſo a general Pardon, and to turn all Papiſts immediately out of Employments. To the latter, the King ſaid he would leave it to the enſuing Parliament, but agreed to every thing elſe. The Lords in Nomination to be Commiſſioners for the Treaty, were the Marquis of Halliſax, the Earl of Rocheſter, the Lord Godolphin; the Biſhops of Wincheſter, and Ely; but after a long Conſultation their Number was fix'd to theſe three, the Marquis of Halliſax the Earl of Nottingham, and the Lord Godolphin. The Earl of Rocheſter was left out, on account of the irreconcilable Enmity between his Family and the Marquis of Halliſax; whoſe greater Genius gave him greater Credit with the Prince of Orange. That Enmity is ſuppos'd to quicken the Earl of Clarendon's joining his Highneſs, in hopes of perplexing the Negociation, or leſſening the Marquis of Halliſax's Reputation in it. On this Reſolution a Trumpeter was diſ-patch'd by the Earl of Feverſham, to demand the neceſſary Paſſes of the Prince of Orange, whom he found at Edingdon, between Bath and Salisbury, in his way to Oxford. This Trumpeter ſet out the laſt of November, the ſame day with the Date of the Proclamation for calling a Parliament, and having obtain'd thoſe Paſſes, the Prince ſent a Trumpeter to demand a Paſs for a Gentleman to wait on the Princeſs of Denmark. The Dutch Ambaſſador alſo demanded a Paſs to go to the Prince of Orange, and the King granted it ſo readily, 'twas thought he expected ſome Good from that Miniſter's Mediation; for he was now in the moſt terrible Deſpondency. Whatever he had ſaid of the Prince's deſigning a Conqueſt, and to take his Crown from him, he did not himſelf, at that time believe it, and indeed there does not ſeem to be any ſuch Deſign in the Prince, and thoſe that invited him. If he had in earneſt ſet about redreſſing of Grievances, in conjunction with good Counſellors, and a free Parliament; if he had ſecur'd the Succeſſion of his Daughters, and the Maintenance of the Church and the Laws, to the Satisfaction of his People, no doubt he might have reign'd to his Death; but his implacable Hatred to our Religion and Liberty, his obſtinate perſiſting in it, when he was at the laſt Extremity, had ſo ſet the Hearts of all the Nation againſt him, that he was in mortal Fear of their Reſentment; and his Flatterers being as fearful as himſelf, it is probable that they had all come to a Reſolution to leave the King, if the Commiſſioners did not ſucceed in their Treaty; and they could have no Succeſs if they did not ward off a free Parliament, for which only the Prince of Orange came to England. At this time the Duke of Norfolk, Lord Lieutenant of that County, rais'd the Militia, and aſſembling the Citizens of Norwich, declar'd to them his Reſolution to aſſiſt his Highneſs in obtaining the Ends of his Declaration. The Town of Lynn put themſelves under his Grace's Protection, and declar'd the ſame.

Barillon, the French Ambaſſador, was now the King's moſt Chief and Secret Counſellor. He was very buſy, both with him, and with the principal Lords who wiſh'd well to the Prince. He repreſented to theſe that the Engliſh would do well to act with Moderation; that the Emperor was a great Bigot to his Religion, and would not fail of defending it in England.

Foreign Miniſters Behaviour

The Pope's Nuntio was very deſirous to be gone, and ſaid Father Petre would anſwer to God Almighty for all the Miſchief he had been the Cauſe of. The Queen was all the while packing up her Jewels, and preparing to get off.

Commiſſioners to treat.

The three Commiſſioners began their Journey December the 2d, and came next day to Reading, where they met the Trumpet with the Paſſes deſired from the Prince. Three Days after they acquainted the King, that they were to meet the Prince that Night at Amesbury; but they inform'd him next day, that his Highneſs had made a new Appointment to meet at Hungerford. They came thither, and having delivered their Meſſage, the Prince call'd all the Peers, and others of chief Note about him, to adviſe with them what Anſwer ſhould be made. A Day was taken to conſider of it: The Marquis of Hallifax ſent for Dr. Burnet; but the Prince ſaid, Tho' I will ſuſpect nothing from ſuch a meeting, others may, upon which it was put off, and the Doctor ſaw him only in publick; yet the Marquis took occaſion to ask him, ſo as no body obſerv'd it, Have you a mind to have the King in your hands! The Doctor reply'd, By no means, for we will not hurt his Perſon. Lord Hallifax ſaid, What if he has a mind to go away? Dr. Burnet's Anſwer was, Nothing is ſo much to be wiſh'd for. The Doctor told this to the Prince, and he lik'd it. His Highneſs order'd the Earls of Oxford, Shrewsbury and Clarendon, to treat with the Lords the King had ſent, and they deliver'd the Prince's Anſwer to them on Sunday the 8th of December. He deſired a Parliament might be preſently called, that no Men ſhould continue in any Employment who were not qualified by Law, and had not taken the Teſts; that the Tower of London might be put into the Keeping of the City; and all the ſtrong Places of the Kingdom might be put into the hands of the Proteſtants; that a Proportion of the Revenue might be ſet off for the Pay of the Prince's Army; and that during the Sitting of the Parliament, the Armies might not come within 20 Miles of London; but that the Prince might come on to London, and have the ſame Number of his Guards about him, that the King kept about his Perſon. The Lords Commiſſioners for the King ſeem'd very well ſatisfy'd with this Anſwer; and when the King read it, he ſaid, It was as fair as he could have expected; but he had then fix'd the very Hour for his going off. In the mean time there happen'd a Skirmiſh at Reading, between a Party of the King's Iriſh Men, and a ſmaller Party of the Prince's, who drove the other out of the Town, by the help, as 'twas ſaid, of the Townſmen, who fir'd out of Window at the Iriſh Men, of whom another Party was poſted at Maidenhead Bridge; but ſome of the Inhabitants beating a Dutch March in the Night, the Iriſh abandon'd their Poſts, leaving their Cannon behind them. The Prieſts, to frighten away the Queen, told her ſhe would certainly be impeach'd; upon which ſhe reſolv'd to fly for it immediately, and carry the Child with her. The Midwife, and all thoſe that aſſiſted at the Birth, were alſo carry'd over to France, or ſo diſpos'd of, that it could never be learn'd what became of them afterwards. The King promis'd to ſtay only a day or two after her, in hopes that the Shadow of Authority might keep Things ſo quiet, that ſhe might have an undiſturb'd Paſſage. The Queen and her Company croſt over to Lambeth in a ſtormy Night, December the 10th, went on board a Yatch at Greenwich, and had a very quick Paſſage to Calais. I think Biſhop Burnet errs in ſaying ſhe embark'd at Portſmouth. The King having read the Prince's Anſwer, ſent for the Lord Chancellor to come to him next Morning, but he ſecretly order'd the Great Seal to be brought him, and the Parliament Writs to be burnt, and about Three next Morning, Decemb. 11. he went away in Diſguiſe, with truſty Sir Edward Hales, one Sheldon a Papiſt, and Labadie the Dry-Nurſe's Husband: he paſs'd for Hales's Man. As they croſt the River they flung the Great Seal into it, which was ſome Months after taken up by a Fiſherman, near Vaux-Hall, and went down to a miſerable Fiſher-Boat, which Hales had provided for them.

The Prince's Demands.

The Queen frighted away.

With the Impoſtor, and all at the pretended Birth.

The King quits the Kingdom.

With this, ſays Biſhop Burnet, his Reign ended, for this was a plain Deſerting his People, and the expoſing the Nation to the Pillage of an Army, which he had order'd the Earl of Feverſham to disband; and the doing this, without paying them, was the letting ſo many arm'd Men looſe upon the People, and they might have done much Miſchief, if the Execution of thoſe Orders that he left behind had not been ſtopp'd.

Lord Hallifax and Dr. Burnet's Diſcourſe about the King's Perſon.

The Night before the King went away, a whole Battalion of Douglas's, an old Scots Regiment, went off to the Prince. That Morning the King ſent the Letter he left for the Earl of Feverſham, about disbanding the Army, to the Counteſs de Roye, the Earl's Siſter, to be con-vey'd to him, and it was the laſt Order he gave. The Marquis of Miremont, who had lately repented of what he had done, got his Regiment together, five Hours after the King went, and told his Officers, he thought it beſt to declare for the Prince of Orange; they all joining with him, he commanded all the Popiſh Troopers to alight, and quit their Arms and Cloaks, which 15 of them did. The Duke of Northumberland, Captain of a Troop of Guards, declared alſo for his Highneſs, as did his whole Troop.

The Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, meeting at Guildhall, the Peers agreed upon a ſolemn Declaration, to aſſiſt his Highneſs, in obtaining a free Parliament, to ſecure the Church of England, the Laws and Liberties of the Nation, and a due Liberty of Conſcience to Proteſtant Diſſenters. They promis'd to take care of the City, to diſarm all Papiſts, and apprehend Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits. It was ſign'd by,

And ſent to the Prince by the Earl of Pembroke, Lord Viſcount Weymouth, and Biſhop of Ely.

Biſhops and Lords for Reſiſtance.

The Lords at the ſame time ſent for Col. Skelton, Governor of the Tower, who was poſted there by the King's Commiſſion, and demanded the Keys of him; than which I defy all Hiſtorians to ſhew me a greater Act of Diſloyalty, according to High-Church Interpreters. Having turn'd him out, they made the Lord Lucas Governor, and if this is not Reſiſtance with a vengeance, there can be no Inſtance given of it. Among theſe Reſiſters, were four Nonjuring Biſhops, and ten Lords, whoſe Names may be found among the Abhorrers.

The Lieutenancy of London ſent an Addreſs of Thanks to his Highneſs, by Sir Robert Clayton, Sir Baſil Firebrace, Sir William Ruſſel, and Charles Duncomb Eſq;

The Earl of Feverſham, Sir John Lanier, Sir John Fenwick, and Col. Oglethorp, General Officers of the King's Army, ſent a Letter to the Prince, notifying, that by the King's Command, they had disbanded the Troops that were with them; which the Prince, not at all approving of, he return'd them no Anſwer. Several Regiments and Troops had deſerted to the Prince before the disbanding Order came, among which was even Sir John Lanier's Regiment, and he follow'd it himſelf, notwithſtanding he ſign'd the above-mention'd Letter. Moſt of the Lords at London look'd upon the Earl of Feverſham's Conduct as raſh and dangerous. The letting ſo many Soldiers looſe, threw the whole Kingdom into a Panick, the moſt general and aſtoniſhing that was ever heard of. It began at Weſtminſter, December 11. about eleven a-clock: Some Country Fellows reporting, that the Iriſh, in a deſperate Rage, were advancing to London. It went from Street to Street thro' the City, Southwark, and thence thro' all the Cities, Towns and Pariſhes in England; at one City, they were ſaid to be burning and maſſacring in the next, and ſo in every Town and Pariſh. The Train'd Bands were every where rais'd; People every where ran to Arms; Lights were every where hung out; The Iriſh are coming! The Iriſh are coming! was in every one's mouth. This Fright and Alarm was ſuppos'd to be a Stratagem of the Duke of Schomberg's: But I do not ſee what End it could anſwer, unleſs it was to diſcover the Bent of the Nation at this Juncture; for it could not be to put them in Arms againſt the disbanded Iriſh, becauſe 'twas univerſal in one Night, and muſt have been concerted long before there was any Thought of their being disbanded in that manner. His Highneſs publiſh'd a Declaration, requiring the Commanders of thoſe Soldiers to reaſſemble them, and keep them in good Order and Diſcipline till further Orders. He wrote to the Earl of Danby to come to him, and ſent the Lord Churchil to London, to gather his Troop of Guards together; and the Duke of Grafton to Tilbury Fort, to garriſon it, with his Regiment of Foot: With which, as he was marching at their Head thro' the Strand, a Trooper of the Iriſh Regiment of Salisbury preſented his Carbine againſt him to ſhoot him, which a Soldier of his firſt File obſerving, ſhot the Trooper dead on the Spot. The Duke alighted, and gave the Soldier all the Pillage of the Trooper. The next day the Peers and Privy Counſellors iſſued an Order for all Iriſh Officers and Soldiers to repair to their reſpective Bodies, and deliver up their Arms to the Officers of the Ordnance. It was ſign'd December the 14th, 1688.

As ſoon as it was known in London, that the King was gone, the Prentices and the Rabble, who had been a little quieted when they ſaw a Treaty on foot between the King and the Prince, now broke out again upon all ſuſpected Houſes, where they believ'd there were either Prieſts or Papiſts. They ſpar'd not the Houſes of Ambaſſadors, particularly thoſe of the Spaniſh and Florentine Ambaſſadors. The Spaniſh Ambaſſador, Don Pedro de Ronquillo, had forwarded the Revolution more than any other Foreigner. The Populace knew not that, but they knew he was a Papiſt, and therefore rifled his Houſe, where many Catholicks had depoſited their beſt Effects, for which the next Parliament made him ample Satisfaction. No body was killed in this Uproar, no Houſes were burnt, no Robberies were committed; never was ſo much Fury ſeen under ſo much Management.

Jefferies runs away, and is taken.

Jefferies finding the King was gone, ſaw what reaſon he had to look to himſelf, and apprehending he was now expos'd to the Rage of the People, whom he had provok'd with ſo particular a Brutality, he diſguis'd himſelf in a Seaman's Habit, and was in a Seaman's Houſe in Wapping in order to eſcape to Hamburgh; but was diſcover'd as he was looking out of a Window, by a Chancery Clerk, who accidentally paſt that way. Upon which he was ſeized immediately, and was inſulted by the Populace, with as much ſcorn and rudeneſs as they could invent. After he had been toſt about many Hours, they carried him before the Lord Mayor, Sir John Chapman, in his Seaman's Habit: The Lord Mayor was ſo ſtruck with the Terror of ſuch a boiſterous Multitude, and the Diſgrace of a Man, who had made all

People tremble before him, that he fell into Fits upon it, and was never well afterwards. The Populace held Whips and Halters up to Jefferies's Noſe, as near as they could come at it, and growing warmer by Communication, would doubtleſs have torn the wicked Wretch in a thouſand pieces, had not the Train'd Bands been rais'd, and no leſs than two Regiments appointed to guard him to the Tower. When he was in the Coach, they continued preſſing on the Militia, who kept them off with their Pikes, as they would Horſe, to come at him. He held up his Hands, ſometimes on one ſide of the Coach, ſometimes on the other, crying, For the Lord ſake keep them off! For the Lord ſake keep them off! I ſaw him, and heard him, and I truly ſay, without Pity; tho' I never ſaw any other Malefactor in his Diſtreſs, without Compaſſion and Concern. The Lords at Whitehall ſent the Lord Lucas a Warrant for his Commitment. He promis'd to confeſs ſomething that would merit Pardon; but he choſe rather to ſave himſelf from a publick Death, by large Draughts of Brandy, which ſoon diſpatch'd him. He very much complain'd of Sprat, Biſhop of Rocheſter, who incited him to go thoſe Lengths in the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, and then publickly charg'd it upon him. Sprat wrote the Romance of the Rye-houſe Plot, and Jefferies hang'd the pretended Plotters.

His ill End.

In the mean while the Prince of Orange came to Littlecot, a Seat of the Pophams in Wiltſhire, from thence to Hungerford and Abington, deſigning to viſit the Univerſity of Oxford, and meet the Princeſs Anne there; but being ſurpriz'd with the King's Deſertion, and the Diſorders which the City and Neighbourhood of London were falling into, he could hardly believe it, till he received an Expreſs from the Lords Hallifax, Nottingham and Godolphin, upon which he ſaw how neceſſary it was for him to make all poſſible haſte to London. So he ſent to Oxford to excuſe his not coming thither, and to offer the Aſſociation to them; Which, ſays Biſhop Burnet, was ſign'd by almoſt all the Heads, and the Chief Men of the Univerſity; even by thoſe, who being diſappointed in the Preferments they aſpir'd to, became afterwards his moſt implacable Enemies. For none but Idiots can be impos'd upon ſo far as to believe, that thoſe very Men, who offer'd the Prince of Orange their Plate to enable him to reſiſt K. James, did afterwards, from Conviction, when the Danger was over, return again to their Vomit, and again preach up the Doctrines of their deteſtable Decree.

Why the Pr. went not to Oxford.

Their Gratitude to him.

The King being come to the Coaſt of Kent, embark'd aboard a Smack, commanded by Capt. Sanders, who was to carry him to a Frigat, commanded by Capt. Mackdonald, an Iriſh Papiſt, who, by concert, waited for him at Margate. When they were aboard, Hales ſent his Footman to the Poſt-Office at Feverſham: A Gunner belonging to Dover Caſtle, whom Hales had formerly caſhier'd, knowing the Footman by his Livery, and hating his Maſter, dogg'd him to the River-ſide, and ſaw him make Signs to ſome on board the Smack; upon which he got a Rabble together, carry'd them to the Water-ſide, boarded the Veſſel immediately, and ſoon diſcover'd Sir Edward Hales. As for the King, who was in a plain Suit, and a Bob-Wig, they took him to be a Popiſh Prieſt, and ſuppos'd him to be Hales's Chaplain; for which Reaſon they put many groſs Indignities upon him, and ſearching his Pockets found 400 Guineas, ſeveral valuable Seals, and other Jewels; but ſeveral People, continuing to crowd aboard the Smack, among the reſt was a Conſtable, who knowing the King, kneel'd down, and begg'd Pardon for the Rudeneſs of the People, which he was afterwards ſo far from complying with, that out of the Abundance of his Humanity, he excepted three of the poor Fiſhermen Hunt, Edwards and Stapleton, out of his Declaration of Indemnity, together with the Duke of Ormond, Duke of Bolton, Duke of Leeds, Earl of Nottingham, Earl of Clarendon, Earl of Marlborough, Biſhop of London, Sir Stephen Fox, and Alderman Duncomb. The Conſtable bid the Fiſhermen return what they had taken from him; he only took the Jewels, and ſaid, I hope you will uſe me well. Notwithſtanding the Reſpect that was paid him, he earneſtly endeavour'd to be gone; but they forc'd him to go to Feverſham, from whence he ſent for the Earl of Winchelſea, whom he made Lord Lieutenant of Kent, and was prevail'd with by him, to return to London. The Management at London, was very odd, on this Occaſion. The Peers had ſent a Deputation to compliment the Prince on his approaching nearer London, and now they heard of the King's being at Feverſham, they ſent another Deputation to compliment him without conſulting the Prince, or communicating their Intention to him. The Earl of Middleton, the Earl of Ailesbury, the Earl of Yarmouth and the Earl of Feverſham, were order'd to wait on the King, and invite him to Whitehall; and after they had reſolv'd ſo to do, they let the Prince know that the King was in England ſtill.

Bad Management the Occaſion of all future Troubles.

K. James taken.

Biſhop Burnet has ſome judicious Remarks on the King's being brought back to Feverſham. "Here was an Accident that ſeem'd of no great "Conſequence, yet all the ſtrugglings of the Ja-"cobite Party ſince did riſe out of it. For, if "he had got clear away, by all that could be "judg'd he would not have had a Party left; all "would have agreed, that here was a Deſertion, "and that therefore the Nation was free, and at "liberty to ſecure itſelf; but what follow'd up-"on this, gave them a Colour to ſay, he was for-"ced away. Till now ſcarce any one was for him "but Papiſts, but from this Incident a Party grew "up, that has been long active for his Intereſts. "Two Gentlemen came from Kent, to the Prince "at Windſor, to inform him of what had hap-"pen'd at Feverſham; upon which his Highneſs "order'd Monſieur Zuyleſtein to go thither im-"mediately to ſee the King ſafe, and at full li-"berty to go wherever he pleas'd." What the Biſhop, and others ſay, of the King's being received, at his return to London, with joyful Acclamations, is exaggerated. I remember it well, that there was ſome ſhouting, by Boys chiefly, and that ſome of the Guards bid them hollow. At his coming to Whitehall he had a great Court again about him, even the Papiſts crept out of their lurking Holes, and appear'd there with much Aſſurance. One of their Prieſts ſent to the Earl of Mulgrave, Lord Chamberlain, to new-furniſh his Lodgings, for he intended to continue in them. The King himſelf began to take heart, and both at Feverſham and Whitehall talk'd in his ordinary high Strain, juſtifying all he had done. Only he ſpoke a little doubtfully of the Buſineſs of Magdalen College: But when he came to reflect on the State of his Affairs, and on a Free Parliament, which it was impoſſible for him to prevent, he found there was no way left for him, to make good his Allegations; ſo he ſent the Earl of Feverſham to Windſor without a Paſs, and order'd him to deſire the Prince to come to St. James's, to conſult with him of the beſt Way for the ſettling of the Nation.

King returns to London.

The Prince of Orange did not think the Privy-Council at London had us'd him well in ſending for the King without conſulting him, after they had ſent to him to take the Government upon him. He call'd his Friends about him at Windſor, and ask'd their Advice. All agreed that it was not convenient that the King ſhould ſtay at Whitehall; neither the King, nor the Prince, nor the City could have been ſafe, if they had been both near one another. The Guards and the officious Flatterers of the two Courts would have been unquiet Neighbours. It was thought neceſſary to ſtick to the Point of the King's Deſerting his People, and not to give up that by entring upon any Treaty with him; and ſince the Earl of Feverſham, who commanded the Army againſt the Prince, was come without a Paſs, he was for ſome days put in Arreſt. The Reſult of theſe Conſultations was, that the Marquiſs of Hallifax, the Earl of Shrewsbury, and Lord Delamere, ſhould go to London, and order the Engliſh Guards that were about the Court to be drawn off; when that was done, Count Solms, with the Dutch Guards, was to come and take all the Poſts about Whitehall and St. James's. It was Midnight before all was ſettled. The Engliſh Guards having receiv'd no Orders from their General, the Lord Craven, to quit their Poſts, ſtood to them in a Poſture of Defence, and the Dutch Guards advanc'd in a fighting Poſture; but the former underſtanding that matters were ſo concerted, retir'd, and the Dutch Guards poſted themſelves in their Places. Then the three Lords ſent to the Earl of Middleton to deſire him to let the King know they had a Meſſage to deliver to him from the Prince. He went to the King, and ſent them word from him, that they might come with it immediately. They came and found him a-bed. They told him the Neceſſity of Affairs required that the Prince ſhould come preſently to London, and he thought it would conduce to the Safety of the King's Perſon, and the Quiet of the Town, if he retir'd to ſome Houſe at a little diſtance, particularly Ham-Houſe near Richmond. The King ſeem'd much caſt down, and ſaid, Muſt it be done immediately? they told him, he might take his Reſt firſt: and they added, he ſhould be attended by a Guard, who ſhould not only guard his Perſon, but give him no ſort of Diſturbance. Having ſaid this, they withdrew. The Earl of Middleton came quickly after them, and ask'd, if it would not do as well if the King went to Rocheſter? for ſince the Prince was not pleas'd with his coming up from Kent, it might be perhaps acceptable to him, if he ſhould go thither again. It was very viſible this was propoſed in order to a ſecond Eſcape, and very probable that the Prince would not diſlike it. The three Lords promiſed to ſend word immediately to his Highneſs, who lay that Night at Sion, eight Miles from London. He very readily conſented to it, and the King went next day, December 18, to Rocheſter, having order'd all that which is call'd the Moving Wardrobe to be ſent before him; Count Solms ordering every thing to be done as the King deſired, who was attended by the Earls of Ailesbury, Litchfield, Arran, and Dunbarton, ſix of his own Yeomen of the Guard, and about a hundred of the Prince's Forces, who left him at full Liberty, and paid him rather more Reſpect than his own Guards had done lately. Moſt of them, as it happen'd, were Papiſts, ſo when he went to Maſs, they aſſiſted at it very reverently; and when they were ask'd how they could ſerve in an Expedition that was intended to deſtroy their own Religion, one of them anſwer'd, My Soul is God's, but my Sword is the Prince of Orange's. The King was ſo much delighted with this Anſwer, that he repeated it to all that came about him.

Three Lords ſent to deſire the King to go to Ham.

King goes to Rocheſter.

In the ſhort time the King ſtaid in London, which was but two Days from his firſt to his ſecond Deſertion, as it proved to be, and as he intended, he had time to ſummon his Privy-Council the 16th of December, and paſs an Order for ſuppreſſing all riotous and tumultuous Meetings. The Deſign was to hinder the demoliſhment of Maſs-houſes. This was his laſt Act of Government, if it deſerves the Name, for no body minded it. The Privy-Counſellors were,

Duke of Hamilton.	Lord Preſton.
Earl of Craven.	Lord Godolphin.
Earl of Berkley.	Sir John Trevor.
Earl of Middleton.	Col. Titus.

Not a Papiſt amongſt them, except Lord Middleton was one.

The Populace did not only burn the Maſs-houſes, but alſo the King's Printing-houſe, the Printer Henry Hills, having turn'd Papiſt. The French Ambaſſador was buſy Night and Day packing up and moving off his Goods. The Privy-Council ſent Guards to ſecure the Houſe of Mr. Sarotti the Reſident of Venice, who had always oppos'd King James's raſh and irregular Proceedings.

The ſame Day the King went to Rocheſter, the Prince came to London: all the way from thence to Sion, was crowded with Spectators, who welcom'd him with Shouts and Acclamations as loudly and heartily as Men could expreſs themſelves; but it being a rainy Day, it ſpoilt much of the Glory of the Show. Orders were immediately given for diſarming and disbanding all Popiſh Soldiers, and for diſarming all Papiſts. The Nuntio and the Envoy of Savoy who had been plundered, were put under honourable Arreſt for the Safety of their Perſons, his Highneſs knowing that neither of their Maſters wiſh'd him ill. The Poliſh Envoy Neville was plunder'd alſo, but 'tis ſaid he had ſo little to loſe, that the Rabble cudgel'd him.

The Prince of Orange comes to St. James's.

The Council ſent three Interrogatories to Jefferies in the Tower: 1. What he had done with the Great Seal? 2. Where the Parliament Writs were, and how many were iſſu'd? 3. Whether the King had given him leave to depart the Kingdom? To the firſt he ſaid, the King ſent for the Great Seal ten Days before, and tho' he had the Purſe and Mace carry'd about with him, yet he had not ſince then had the Seal. To the ſecond he anſwer'd, that he had given the King the Writs that were not ſent into the Country, and the Clerks of the Chancery could tell better than he what was become of thoſe that were. To the third he ſaid, the King had given him leave to depart the Kingdom, and he had Paſſes from the French and Spaniſh Ambaſſadors.

When the King at his Return was ask'd for the Great Seal, he ſaid, the Queen took it with her. This is James the Juſt, the King of his Word!

He was then preſs'd to iſſue the Writs for ſummoning the Parliament, but he would determine nothing, only he ſign'd Orders to the Treaſury for Payment of a round Sum of Money; but the Officers would not pay it, without the Prince of Orange's Conſent. There was then 50,000 l. in the Exchequer, which was of ſingular Uſe to his Highneſs; we are told the King wanted Money ſo much for his Pocket, that he borrow'd 100 Guineas of Lord Godolphin.

The Lords of the Houſhold, and all other Officers who bore the Badges of their Offices, laid them down upon his Highneſs's coming to St. James's, who the next day viſited Queen Katherine, going by water from Whitehall to Somerſet-

A. D. 1688. Somerſet-Houſe; where the Queen Dowager taking notice in Raillery of the Detention of her Chamberlain, the Prince immediately aſſur'd her Majeſty, ſhe ſhould no longer want his Service.

The ſame day his Highneſs viſited alſo the Princeſs of Denmark, who then arriv'd from Oxford, having been in all her Journies attended by the Biſhop of London in a Purple Velvet Coat, Piſtols in his Holſters, and a naked Sword in his hand, at the head of her Guards.

On the 20th of December the Aldermen, the Lord Mayor being ſick, the Sheriffs and Common-Council of London, waited on his Highneſs, to complement him on his Arrival, and the Recorder Sir George Treby made a moſt excellent Speech to him on that happy Occaſion, which is very well worth inſerting.

The Recorder Treby's Speech to him.

May it pleaſe Your Highneſs,

THE Lord Mayor being diſabled by Sickneſs, Your Highneſs is attended by the Aldermen and Commons of the Capital of this Kingdom, deputed to congratulate Your Highneſs upon this great and glorious Occaſion; in which, labouring for Words, we cannot but come ſhort in Expreſſion; reviewing our late Danger, we remember our Church and State over-run by Popery and Arbitrary Power, brought to the Point of Deſtruction by the Conduct of Men, who were our true Invaders, that broke the ſacred Fences of our Laws, and which was worſt, the very Conſtitution of our Legiſlature, ſo that there was no Remedy left but the Laſt. The only Perſon under Heaven that could apply this Remedy, was Your Highneſs. You are of a Nation, whoſe Alliance in all Times has been agreeable and proſperous to us. You are of a Family moſt illuſtrious, Benefactors to Mankind; to have the Title of a Sovereign Prince, Stadtholder, and to have worn the Imperial Crown, are amongſt their leſſer Dignities. They have long enjoy'd a Dignity ſingular and tranſcendent, to be the Champions of Almighty God, ſent forth in ſeveral Ages to vindicate his Cauſe againſt the greateſt Oppreſſions. To this Divine Commiſſion our Nobles, our Gentry, and among them our brave Engliſh Soldiers, render'd themſelves and their Arms upon your appearing.

Great Sir,

When we look back to the laſt Month, and contemplate the Swiftneſs and Fulneſs of our preſent Deliverance, aſtoniſh'd, we think it miraculous! Your Highneſs, led by the Hand of Heaven, and call'd by the Voice of the People, has preſerv'd our deareſt Intereſts, our Laws, which are our antient Title to our Lives, Liberties and Eſtates, and without which, this World were a Wilderneſs. But what Retribution can we make to your Highneſs? our Thoughts are full charg'd with Gratitude; Your Highneſs has a laſting Monument in the Hearts, in the Prayers, in the Praiſes of all good Men amongſt us, and late Poſterity will celebrate your ever-glorious Name, till Time ſhall be no more.

If I could prevail with the Reader, I would have him, when he has read this truly ſublime Speech, turn to the Earl of Clarendon's long Speeches about the Uniformity Act, Militia Act, Corporation Act, Five-Mile Act, and all the Acts which are the Ornaments of his Miniſtry; and to Speaker Turner's Speeches on thoſe Subjects. Here he ſees what is true Eloquence, what the true Sublime? There he will ſee quite the contrary.

Addreſſes to his Highneſs. The Biſhops waited on the Prince, all in Town, except the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who agreed to go with the others, but fail'd them. Such Steps as theſe are not the Motions of a regular Conſcience, but the Inſtigations of Fear and Caution. Old Serjeant Maynard came with the Men of the Law, he was then Ninety; yet he ſaid the livelieſt thing that was heard of on that occaſion. The Prince took notice of his great Age, ſaying, You have out-liv'd all the Men of the Law; he anſwer'd, I had like to have out-liv'd the Law itſelf, if your Highneſs had not come over. The Clergy of London, and a great many other Bodies of Men came with their Compliments: The Ambaſſador of Spain had a private Audience of the Prince, ſo had the Reſident of Venice; and the next day, December the 21ſt, the Peers aſſembled at St. James's, to whom his Highneſs made a ſhort Speech, telling them, he deſir'd them to adviſe the beſt manner how to purſue the Ends of his Declaration, in calling a Free Parliament. The Prince then withdrew, and the Lords voted their particular Thanks for his coming over, and reſolv'd to aſſemble in their Houſe at Weſtminſter, to conſider of what his Highneſs had recommended to them. They nam'd five of the moſt eminent Lawyers, as their Aſſiſtants, in the room of the Judges, who were moſt of them out of the way, as Sir John Maynard, Mr. Pollexfen, Sir John Holt, Mr. Bradford, Mr. Atkinſon. They alſo appointed Mr. Francis Gwin, ſtill living, to ſign ſuch Orders as ſhould from time to time be made by them. The Lawyers adviſ'd his Highneſs to declare himſelf King, as Henry VII. did; but the Prince would not hear of it, as being contrary to his Declaration, to leave every thing to a Free Parliament.

A. D. 1688.

Serjeant Maynard's Saying to him.

Peers meet the Prince at St. James's.

One of the firſt Motions made in this auguſt Aſſembly, was the ſigning of the Exeter Aſſociation, which they all did, to the Number of above ſixty. It was refus'd by the Duke of Somerſet, the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Nottingham, my Lord Wharton, and all the Biſhops, except the Biſhop of London. A French Writer pretends to give the Earl of Nottingham's, and the Earl of Pembroke's Reaſons for it; becauſe Mr. Finch, Brother to the one, and Sir Robert Sawyer, Father-in-Law to the other, were not nam'd among the Aſſiſtants to the Houſe of Peers; tho' I doubt very much his Authority for it, and that he ſpeaks at random. The ſame Author pretends to give the Lords Reaſons for not naming them; becauſe Mr. Finch pleaded for putting the Lord Ruſſel to death; and what a ſhare Sir Robert Sawyer had in it, has been already related. The Lord Wharton ſaid, he had ſign'd ſo many Aſſociations which had no Effect, that he was reſolv'd to ſign no more. His Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty was too well known to expoſe him to any Jealouſy; but there ſeems to be ſome of the old Leaven in the Biſhop's Refuſal.

The King continu'd five Days at Rocheſter, and both he himſelf, and every body elſe, ſaw he was at full Liberty, and that the Guard about him put him under no ſort of Reſtraint. Many of his Friends went to him, and preſs'd him to ſtay, flattering him with Hopes that a Party would appear for him, good Terms be got, and things be brought to a reaſonable Agreement. He was much diſtracted between his own Inclinations, and the Importunities of his Friends.

The Queen hearing what had happen'd, writ a moſt vehement Letter to him, preſſing his coming over, and remembring him of his Promiſe, which ſhe charg'd on him in a very earneſt, if not in an imperious Strain. This Letter being intercepted, the Prince ſent it to the King, and he preſently reſolv'd to do what ſhe would have him, in which he was like to find no Moleſtation; ſo on Sunday Morning, December 23, about three a-clock, he left Rocheſter without communicating his Deſign to any one, not ſo much as to the Lord Dunbarton, who lay in the ſame Chamber, and wak'd not till after he was gone. He had not above three or four Perſons with him, of whom the Duke of Berwick and Labadie were two. He rode on horſeback to a convenient Place in the River Medway, where Mackdonald before-mention'd receiv'd him aboard his ſmall Veſſel, and landed him at Ambleteuſe in France. The Earl of Middleton, who attended him at Rocheſter, found a Letter written by him on the Table in his Chamber, deſiring Middleton to gratify the Captains of the Prince's Guards with 100 Guineas each, the Lieutenants and Enſigns with 50 Guineas, and to reward ſome others that had attended him in proportion. He alſo left a Paper behind him, which made a great noiſe after he was gone, tho' it was capable really of doing nothing elſe, but making a noiſe, for it had neither Reaſon nor Truth in it.

The King leaves the Kingdom.

His Paper.

He ſaid the Earl of Feverſham had been made a Priſoner againſt the Law of Nations, which was not true; for that Earl, the General of his Army, came into the Prince's Quarters without a Paſs, and to ſeize him was according to the Law of all Nations. As to any other Force put upon him, beſides the deſiring him to remove to Ham-Houſe, he himſelf, and every one elſe knew there was none; but on the contrary, that the Prince's Friends wiſh'd him his full Liberty, and that he had it, to give him an Opportunity to do what he did, and what he all along intended; for I don't reckon this Elopement to be truly a ſecond one, but a Continuation and an Accompliſhment of the firſt. What follows is not much in the Courtly Manner, I appeal to all that know me, nay even to himſelf, the Prince, that in their Conſciences, whether he nor they can believe me in the leaſt capable of ſo unnatural a Villainy, nor of ſo little common Senſe to be impos'd on in a thing of ſuch a nature. No, if he had not been in the Secret, and conſented to the Impoſture, he could not have been impos'd on. But what can one not believe of a Prince, who apoſtatis'd from his Religion, who broke his Word, his Oath, the Laws, who endeavour'd to deſtroy the Conſtitution and Liberty of his Country, eternally ſacred! who hated the Proteſtant Religion, and all who ſincerely profeſs'd it, among whom were his two moſt religious, moſt excellent, and moſt beloved Daughters; who thought he could not merit Heaven by any Act ſo likely, as by eſtabliſhing Popery in theſe Kingdoms; and who could not eſtabliſh it, but by wronging his Daughters in their Right of Succeſſion. Again, What had I to expect from one, who had taken ſuch pains to make me appear as black as Hell! He had taken no more pains than in the bare Relation of his various Violations of the Laws, and his Attempts againſt the Religion he had ſworn to defend. If Truth had ſuch an Effect, he had better have conſulted his Conſcience about it than his Paſſion; but Biſhop Burnet and others having animadverted largely on this Paper, I ſhall ſay no more of it, but that it is hardly worth the pains we have been at about it.

The News of the King's quitting the Kingdom, as well as the Government, reaching London, the Lords aſſembled, and agreed upon an Addreſs to his Highneſs, to take upon him the Adminiſtration of the publick Affairs, Civil and Military; and to have a particular Care of Ireland, till the Meeting of the Convention, which was propos'd to be January the 22d; and they preſented another Addreſs to his Highneſs, to deſire him to write miſſive Letters to the Perſons to whom Writs were to be iſſu'd for calling a Parliament, as had been done for calling the Parliament, who call'd home King Charles II. Biſhop Burnet tells us, the Earl of Nottingham objected againſt it, "That ſuch a Convention "could be no legal Aſſembly, unleſs ſummon'd "by the King's Writ; therefore he mov'd, that "an Addreſs might be made to the King, who "was by that time in France, to order the Writs "to be iſſued out." Few were of his mind, and indeed it was not likely that the King, who had order'd Writs, and recall'd them two or three times, when he was in England, and on the Throne, ſhould ſend Orders from France for ſuch Writs, when it was more than probable he would never ſit upon it again. The Marquis of Halliſax was Chairman of the Houſe of Lords, and behav'd with great Wiſdom, Courage and Zeal for the Good of the Commonwealth. Their Lordſhips made an Order for all Papiſts to remove ten Miles from London, with ſome general Exceptions, and ſome particular, as the Dutcheſs of Bouillon, the Dutcheſs of Mazarin, the Marquis de Seiſſac, the Marquis de Flamarin, Monſieur de St. Evremont, and the Chevalier St. Victor.

The Lords addreſs the Prince to take the Government.

To confirm the Reſolutions of the Houſe of Peers, and know as well as might be the Sentiments of the Commons, his Highneſs ſummon'd all ſuch Commoners as had ſerv'd in any of the Parliaments in King Charles the Second's time, that of King James II. not being fit to be truſted; as alſo the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Deputies of the Common-Council, to meet him at St. James's, on Wedneſday the 26th of December; to whom he ſpoke to the ſame Purport as he had ſpoken to the Peers, and deſir'd them to adviſe the beſt manner how to purſue the Ends of his Declaration in calling a Free Parliament, for the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, and the reſtoring the Rights and Liberties of the Kingdom, and ſettling the ſame, that they may not be in danger of being again ſubverted. The Lord Mayor being ſtill indiſpos'd, the Prince gave the Copy of his ſhort Speech to Sir Thomas Allen, eldeſt Alderman. Theſe Gentlemen immediately repair'd to the Houſe of Commons, and choſe Henry Powle Eſq; Chairman. They reſolv'd on the Queſtion, that the Requeſt of his Highneſs was a ſufficient Authority for them to aſſemble. Sir Robert Sawyer, to puzzle matters, ask'd, How his Highneſs could take upon him the Adminiſtration of Affairs without a diſtinguiſh'd Name or Title. Serjeant Maynard reply'd briskly, This Aſſembly will loſe a great deal of Time, if they wait till Sir Robert can conceive how that is poſſible. A Motion being made for ſigning the Aſſociation, 'twas carry'd that it ſhould lie on the Table, and all ſign it that would.

Commons ſummon'd

To meet the Prince.

This Aſſembly agreed on an Addreſs to the Prince of the ſame nature with the Lords, to take on him the Government Civil and Military, the Diſpoſal of the publick Revenues, the Care of Ireland, till the Meeting of the Convention the 22d of January; which Addreſs was read to his Highneſs the ſame day by Mr. Powle their Speaker, attended by moſt of the Members. The Prince took time to conſider of it till Friday, December the 28th, and then he accepted of their Offer in a very gracious Speech, firſt to the Lords, and afterwards to the Commons. The News of which flying about Town, the Tower Guns were fir'd, and all uſual Demonſtrations of Joy were every where ſeen.

Their Addreſs.

He takes the Sacrament.

Barillon the French Ambaſſador had been very buſy in ſowing Diviſions among the Members of both theſe Aſſemblies, and the Prince

A. D. 1688. order'd him to depart from London in 24 Hours. He desir'd longer Time, but it was not granted; and Mr. L'Etang, the Officer who afterwards arrested Mareschal Boufflers at Namur, conducted him to Dover, where he refus'd the Presents Barillon would have given him for his Civility. With him went Signor Ranzoni the Envoy of Modena, who had no more Business here, after Mary d'Este had left the Kingdom.

The Post from France brought Advice that the young Earl of Essex and other Englishmen were put under Arrest at Paris; upon which it was propos'd to stop Barillon at Dover, but the Prince did not imagine that Lord Essex would be long detain'd, so the French Ambassador was suffer'd to embark. He order'd the six English and Scots Regiments in the States Service to be sent back to Holland, to which the Lords had not only agreed, but offer'd his Highness the 10,000 Men that England was oblig'd by Treaty to send to the Assistance of the States, and more if there was occasion.

The Earl of Arran returning from his Attendance on King James, went to make his Excuses to the Prince for not waiting on him sooner; but methinks his Excuses were worse than his staying away, for he said he would not have come then if the King had not been gone. His Highness told him next day, that he had given his Regiment to the Earl of Oxford, who was its old Master.

On the 29th of December the Prince of Orange went to the Treasury, where there was in Cash 80,000 l. with which he order'd the King's Houshold Troops and Officers to be paid, and the latter to be discharg'd. He took into consideration the difficult Affair of Ireland, and Preparations were made to ship off Arms and Men, which were interrupted by the Artifices of Tyrconnel, and the Treachery of Richard Hamilton, afterwards Lieutenant General. Tho' Tyrconnel talk'd of raising 30,000 Men and standing it out, yet he sent away his Wife and his richest Moveables to France; nay, he was in such Terror, that he had a Ship always ready to carry him thither after them. Several of the Privy-Council in that Kingdom propos'd to submit to the Government of England, and he pretended to be of the same Opinion sometimes, but said he would not part with the Sword till he was ask'd for it. He pretended to be very kind to the Protestants, in hopes they would be kind to him and his Friends: which was all Grimace. He had disarm'd them, and had them almost every where at Mercy, except in Ulster, where they were stronger than in Munster and the other Provinces. Their chief Leaders the Earl of Granard, and the Lord Montjoy, kept still such Measures with Tyrconnel, that they would not take the Conduct of them. Two Towns that had both very little Defence, and a very small Store of Provisions, were secur'd by some brave young Men, who refus'd to receive a Popish Garrison; these were Londonderry and Iniskilling, both advantageously situated. Great Numbers fled to them, and brought in Provisions; upon which they resolv'd to defend themselves, with a Firmness of Courage that cannot be enough admir'd; for when they were abandon'd by both Gentry and Military Men, those two small unfurnish'd, unfortify'd Places, stood out against good Armies, both Irish and French, till Relief came from England, where some thought Ireland would follow the Fate of that Kingdom, especially after the Protestants, by Tyrconnel's Persuasions and Menaces, wrote over that he would deliver up the Government, if he might have good Terms for himself. They apply'd to Lord Clarendon, on whom they much depended, and those who were employ'd by Tyrconnel to deceive the Prince, made their Application to Sir William Temple. These said they were sure Tyrconnel would never part with the Sword, if Lord Clarendon was to succeed him; and that it might not hinder the Treaty with Tyrconnel, his Highness avoided speaking to the Earl of Clarendon of these Matters, which so disgusted the Earl, that he ever after gave the Prince all the Opposition he could. A. D. 1688.

Ireland.

The Treaty manag'd by Temple, and the Advice of the Marquis of Hallifax, that the Danger of Ireland would quicken the Convention in settling the Government of England, are suppos'd to be two fatal Causes of those dilatory Measures, which put the Nation to so great an Expence of Blood and Treasure to preserve the English Interest in Ireland. For tho' I have a Contempt for such Argument in common, as is us'd in the History of the REBELLION, IF the Duke of Ormond and General Mackay, as was then talk'd of, had been sent with 7 or 8000 Men to Ireland, as soon as the King was elop'd, and while Tyrconnel was in Terror and Suspence, there's no question but he would have accepted of honourable Terms: Instead of this, the Temples, Father, Son, and Brother, prevail'd with the Prince to send Lieutenant-General Hamilton before-mention'd, an Irish Officer and a Papist, who was a sort of Prisoner of War in England, to Tyrconnel, with whom he had great Credit, and undertook to prevail with him to deliver up the Government, which at that time the Lord Lieutenant was inclining to do, giving every thing for lost in England. But the Traytor Hamilton coming over, and representing to him, that things were like to take another Turn in favour of the King, he resolv'd to dissemble still, till he was strong enough to throw off the Mask, and sent two Privy-Counsellors, Montjoy and Rice, to France, to represent to the King the Necessity of submitting to England. Montjoy was immediately clapt up in the Bastille. Tyrconnel gain'd Time by it, perfected his Levies, sent Forces to the North, and invited the King to Ireland. Hamilton's Treachery had such a terrible Effect on Mr. Henry Temple, Sir William's Son, that he leap'd into the River of Thames near the Bridge, and was drown'd.

Things went on much more smoothly in Scotland, notwithstanding the Duke of Gordon had got into Edinburgh-Castle, where he had but a very small Force. As soon as News came of the Prince of Orange's being landed with an Army in England, and that King James was not able to stand his ground, the People in the West of Scotland, for they were the first, ran immediately to Arms, and declar'd for the Prince. This was done with so universal a Resolution, and the Consternation the other People were in at the general face of things, was such at the same time, that there was no Capacity, or even Disposition to oppose them. The Western People not only took Arms, but turn'd the Episcopal Curates out of the Churches, which they had possess'd by Tyranny and Oppression; they restor'd the old Worship, and recall'd the banish'd Presbyterian Ministers. Scotland.

The Populace at Edinburgh broke into all Popish Chapels, and into the Church of Holyrood House, which had been adorn'd at great Charge for the Order of St. Andrew. They defac'd it quite, seiz'd on the Earl of Perth and other Delinquents, and the whole Kingdom declar'd for the Prince, the Castle of Edinburgh only excepted. The Episcopal Party in Scotland finding they had no other Game to play, stuck to the Viscount Dundee. Upon the Prince's coming coming to London, Duke Hamilton call'd a Meeting of all the Men of Quality of the Scottiſh Nation then in Town, where after ſome ſmall Oppoſition made by the Earl of Arran, his Son, they agreed on an Addreſs to his Highneſs to take on him the Government in Scotland, as at the Requeſt of the Lords and Commons he had done in England. This Addreſs was ſign'd by above 30 Lords and 80 Gentlemen, and preſented to his Highneſs, who on the 14th of March made a like Anſwer to it, as he had given to the Addreſs of the Engliſh Peers and Commoners.

Before the Convention, ſummon'd by the Prince of Orange's circular Letters, met, the Privy Council receiv'd a Letter from K. James, dated at St. Germaine en Laie in France, wherein he tells them, It had been his conſtant Care, ever ſince his Acceſſion to the Crown, to govern his People with that Juſtice and Moderation as to give no Occaſion of Complaint. His Juſtice appear'd in ſuffering the Freeholds of his Subjects to be taken from them by Force, as in the Caſe of Magdalen College and innumerable other Caſes; his Moderation in taking pleaſure to hear the Accounts of that Butcher Jefferies's bloody Aſſizes in the Weſt. Is it not prodigious to Aſtoniſhment, that he ſhould boaſt of his Moderation and Juſtice, when there was no Part of the Kingdom that was not groaning and trembling under his Tyranny, and deploring the Loſs of their Liberties and Properties, and the Danger they were in of loſing their Religion? He aſſures them he had redreſs'd all Grievances before he went away, and anſwer'd all the Ends of the Prince of Orange's Declaration. Every Word of which, every one of thoſe Counſellors knew to be untrue. However he goes on, and deſires them to carry this good News to the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in and about the City of London and Weſtminſter; to the Lord Mayor and Commons of London, that he deſires nothing more than to hold a Free Parliament, and have an Opportunity to ſhew the Sincerity of his Proteſtations, to preſerve the Liberties and Properties of his Subjects, and the Proteſtant Religion, more eſpecially the Church of England as by Law eſtabliſh'd. Men of Ingenuity and Modeſty cannot conceive how it was poſſible for any one, who juſt came from breaking his Word with the Church in the moſt notorious and enormous manner, which he knew was well known to every Soul in the Nation, to boaſt of his Sincerity in promiſing to preſerve it. This was a fine Recommendation to his Council to recall him, and the Effect of it was ſuitable to the Merit; they took no notice of his Letter, and,

King James's Letter to the Privy-Council.

Convention.

On the 22d of January, the Convention met at Weſtminſter. Both Houſes immediately proceeded to the Choice of their Speakers. The Marquis of Hallifax carry'd it in the Houſe of Lords againſt the Earl of Danby; and Henry Powle Eſq; was unanimouſly choſen by the Houſe of Commons, tho' it was thought Mr. Edward Seymour would have ſtood in competition with him. The Chairs being thus fill'd, the Prince of Orange's Letter to both Houſes was read to them, containing in Subſtance, Prince of Orange's Letter to them.

" A Recommendation to them to anſwer the " Ends of his Declaration, and lay the Foundation of a firm Security, for their Religion, " Laws, and Liberties. He mention'd to them " the dangerous Condition of Ireland, and the " Danger the States of the United Provinces were " in, which call'd for their early Aſſiſtance."

Mr. Powle's Speech.

This Letter being read, Mr. Powle, the Speaker, repreſented " the dangerous State of the " Nation, the fatal Conſequence of Anarchy, " the deplorable Condition of Ireland, the " Growth of the Power of France, the vaſt Deſigns " of that aſpiring turbulent Monarch, not only the " Perſecutor of the Proteſtant Religion, but likewiſe the known Enemy of England. He excited them to put the Nation into a poſture, not " only to ſecure themſelves againſt his Attempts, " but alſo to make ſuch a powerful Diverſion in " the Bowels of his Dominions, as that they " might recover their former Conqueſts in " France, &c."

A. D. 1688.

This Speech was univerſally applauded, and indeed there was ſuch a Spirit then in the People of England, animated by their Deliverance, and glorying in their Deliverer, that nothing leſs was talk'd of than marching directly to the Walls of Paris; the Wagers running on that ſide. The firſt thing the Convention did, was to vote an Addreſs of Thanks to his Highneſs the Prince of Orange, to acknowledge his Care, and deſire him to take on him the Adminiſtration of publick Affairs. In this Addreſs the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons joined, and the Prince in his Anſwer the next day, accepted of the Adminiſtration, and recommended to them Diſpatch, not only for a Settlement at home upon a good Foundation, but for the Safety of Europe. Even now a Party, who never had eaſe if any one elſe were eaſy, grown proud by Succeſs, and wanton by Security, began early to envy the Peace which was promis'd our Diſſenting Brethren, and fall off from the Publick Intereſt, as it was an Enemy to Perſecution. This appear'd by their Oppoſing the Vote for the Vacancy of the Throne. Mr. Dolben was the firſt that ſtood up, January 28, and made a long Speech, tending to prove that the Throne was vacant, which another Member oppoſing with ſome Heat, Sir Richard Temple ask'd him, If the Throne is not Vacant, what Buſineſs have we in this Place, and what need was there of calling a Convention? The Party, who repented of what they had been doing for the Good of their Country, out of ſpite to the Nonconformiſts, who they were afraid would be the better for it, and inclined to invite King James back again, finding they were not ſtrong enough to divide the Houſe, made many Harangues againſt the Vacancy; and it will doubtleſs not be amiſs to remember the Names of thoſe Gentlemen, that their Memory may have a ſhare of the Glory they aſcrib'd to themſelves for the Stand they made againſt the Revolution.

Mr. Dolben first moves the Vacancy of the Throne.

Theſe were all againſt the Vote that the King had Abdicated, and that the Throne was Vacant; and others ſpoke againſt it, who when the laſt Queſtion was put, either abſented themſelves, or ran down with the Stream, as probably Mr. F—, who made a very long Speech, and yet he is not in the Liſt of thoſe that voted againſt the Abdication. The Subſtance of his Speech was as follows; "That the Prince of O-"range was too great and too good to accept of "the Crown if it was offer'd him. That the "Popiſh Princes would not ſuffer a Popiſh King "to be thruſt out of his Kingdom, and inſtead "of invading France, we ſhould find it difficult "enough to preſerve ourſelves; that thoſe who "wiſh King James's Humiliation do by no "means wiſh his Perdition and Excluſion from "the Crown, neither do they believe the Faults "to be ſingly his, or if they were, not to be "ſufficient to juſtify the depoſing him.

Speech made by Mr. F.

"We are alſo of a Church that has been Singu-"lar for her Loyalty and Deference to Kings, and "if we have any Honour for her, we ought to "tread tenderly in that Point." I can repeat no more of it, 'tis too wordy and too trifling to entertain the Reader; he clos'd his Speech, with a Motion for an Addreſs to the Prince of Orange, to call back the King his Father, as the only way to make him renown'd in all the Hiſtories of Europe. With juſt ſuch a ſort of Renown as the French Monarch deſerv'd, of whom the old bald Rhime, The King of France, with forty thouſand Men, &c.

A. D. 1688.

This Faction, the Cavaliers firſt, and the Tories after them, they being one and the ſame ſort of Men, are always excuſing Tyranny, by tranſferring the Faults from the King to his Miniſters, Who, ſays this Gentleman, ſees by the Eyes and Ears of other People, and therefore is not in fault. If the Prince did not know his Miniſters did ill, and was ready to puniſh them as ſoon as he knew it, this Argument would have weight in it; but it is not pretended that this was the Caſe of King James; and if a Prince knows his Miniſters do ill, if he protects them in it, if he commands them to do it, which is the Caſe of that King, the Fault is primarily and principally in him: and as to King James's Faults not being ſufficient to abdicate him, we refer to the Declaration of Right, reſolv'd by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons aſſembled at Weſtminſter.

'Tis pretty odd to hear this florid Speaker cry up the Loyalty of the Church, when the Biſhops and chief Churchmen had juſt then been inviting the Prince of Orange to bring an Army againſt King James, and had as ſoon as he landed given him all Aſſiſtance; as if every Step of that kind which had been taken, wou'd not have been deem'd as errant Rebellion as that of Monmouth, had the Prince of Orange been unſucceſsful, and as if the Aſſociation drawn up at Exeter, and ſign'd by the Duke of Ormond, the Earl of Abington, Earl Rivers, John How Eſq; late Duke of Leeds, late Earl of Scarborough; nay by Sancroft Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and eight Biſhops more, was not thought by King James and his Adherents, to be as Treaſonable as the famous Aſſociation, for which he would have hang'd the Earl of Shaftesbury, and againſt which ſo many hundred Addreſſes were ſent up to London by the Party Mr. F— means, when he calls them the Church. Incongruity and Inconſiſtency, Contradiction and Nonſenſe are Parts of the Compoſition of theſe Men's Principles and Practices. The abovemention'd Speech had no more Effect than it deſerv'd, and the Houſe proceeded vigorouſly towards the Settlement of the Nation.

Hiſt. Revol. Ech p. 222

The Houſe of Lords appointed Special Aſſiſtants, to adviſe them in Matters of Law, as Lord Chief Baron Mountague, Sir Robert Atkins, Sir William Dolben, Sir Creſwell Levins, Sir John Holt, Sir Edward Nevile, Mr. Whitlock, Mr. Bradbury, and Mr. Petit. They alſo order'd a Thankſgiving to Almighty God, for having made the Prince of Orange the Glorious Inſtrument of the great Deliverance of this Kingdom from Popery and Arbitrary Power; in which the Commons alſo join'd with them, and eleven Biſhops were appointed to compoſe the Prayers, as Dr. Compton, Biſhop of London; Dr. Loyd, Biſhop of St. Aſaph; Dr. Loyd, Biſhop of Norwich; Dr. Turner, Biſhop of Ely; Dr. Lake, Biſhop of Chicheſter; Dr. Frampton, Biſhop of Glouceſter; Dr. Ken, Biſhop of Bath and Wells; Dr. White, Biſhop of Peterborough; Dr. Barlow, Biſhop of Lincoln; Dr. Sprat, Biſhop of Rocheſter; Dr. Trelawny, Biſhop of Exeter. Six of whom were afterwards Nonjurors, tho' in this very Act of theirs, they were, in their own King's Senſe, guilty of as much Treaſon, as was Col. Algernon Sidney, who was condemned to be hang'd, drawn and quarter'd, for writing againſt Filmer.

Aſſiſtants.

All the World knows King James treated the Prince of Orange as at the Head of a Rebellion, that he call'd his Adherents Rebels, and yet theſe ſix Nonjurors, Loyd, Turner, Lake Frampton, Ken, White, pray, That God, who in Times of Trouble and Danger, does raiſe up Deliverers of his People, would bleſs his Highneſs the Prince of Orange.

of Orange, whom he has ſent to be the Defender of our Laws and Religion, that he would protect his Perſon, ſtrengthen his Hands, &c. In the general Thankſgiving Prayers, Dr. Ken, Dr. Frampton, Dr. Turner, Dr. Lloyd, Dr. White, Dr. Lake, bleſs the holy Name of God, who has rais'd up for them a mighty Deliverer, by whom he has wrought this great Salvation. Theſe Nonjuring Biſhops here call the Reſiſtance made by the Prince of Orange and his Adherents, The Salvation of the Lord. And in another Prayer, The Work of the Lord, and pray the Almighty to bleſs the Hands of thoſe, who drew their Swords againſt King James. Their own Words are, Go on to perfect, O gracious God, the Work that thou haſt begun amongſt us, bleſs and proſper the Hands by which thou haſt convey'd this Mercy to us. In another Prayer, theſe Nonjurors ſay, We give Glory to thy holy Name for our Deliverance from the intolerable Yoke of the Romiſh Church. Again, It was becauſe thy Compaſſions fail'd not, that our holy Reform'd Religion was not overwhelm'd with Popiſh Superſtition and Idolatry, that our Laws and Liberties are reſcu'd from the Bands of Violence and Oppreſſion. They own King James to have been a Tyrant, and thank the Almighty for the Reſiſtance that delivered them: let us compare this with the Oxford Decree, with the Sermons and Libels of Hicks, Leſley, Hill, Sacheverel, T—p, &c. with the Behaviour of thoſe Biſhops afterwards, and then we ſhall have a juſt Conception of their Congruity, Conſiſtency, their Sincerity and Piety.

Ech. ib. p. 233.

Echard aſſures us the Motion made by Mr. Dolben, was for the Convention to proceed, as if King James was actually dead, and that this home Motion was ſeconded by Sir Richard Temple, and ſupported by Sir Robert Sawyer; which is not very likely, Sawyer being in the black Liſt of thoſe who voted againſt the Abdication, and it is very likely that he is not injur'd by being enroll'd there.

Sir Robert Howard made an eloquent convincing Speech on the ſame ſide of the Queſtion with Mr. Dolben and Sir Richard Temple. Echard affirms, he was the firſt who ventur'd to aſſert the Vacancy of the Throne, and the Breach of the Original Contract by a continu'd Series of illegal Acts. 'Tis true as to the latter, but Mr. Dolben firſt aſſerted that the Throne was Vacant, and being an Archbiſhop's Son, did in a manner ſet the Church at the Head of this Affair. Sir Robert Howard's Allegations were maintain'd by Mr. Sacheverel, Mr. Pollexfen, Sir George Treby, Mr. Somers, Sir Thomas Lee, Mr. Garraway: theſe Gentlemen were oppos'd by Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave, Mr. Heneage Finch, Lord Fanſhaw, Sir Thomas Clarges, Sir Edward Seymour, &c. Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave ſaid, that to vote the Throne to be vacant, would be actually to depoſe the King. What Strength there is in their Arguments? To place one Man in a Chair which another Man has left, is to turn that other Man out of it. Muſgrave deſir'd to know from the Gentlemen of the Long Robe, Whether that could legally be done? What do theſe Sophiſters pretend to? Why did not he ask the Gentlemen of the Long Robe, whether the Earl of Danby could legally riſe in Arms againſt King James in the North? Whether the Earl of Abingdon could legally do the ſame in the Weſt, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury legally make a Prayer for thoſe whom King James call'd Rebels, and who would have been treated as Rebels had they not ſucceeded? Why did he not ask the Gentlemen of the Long Robe, if the Heads of Colleges at Oxford could legally ſign an Aſſociation to ſtand by a Prince, whom their Sovereign Lord declar'd to be in Arms againſt him.

A. D. 1688.

'Tis the ſame Cant that was us'd in King Charles the Firſt's time. That Prince, who had ſo little govern'd by Law, had, as has been often obſerv'd, nothing oftner in his Declarations than the Law, the Laws of the Land, and the like. Thoſe who oppos'd the Settlement of the Nation, having no better Reaſons than Mr. *F——*and Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave; the Committee, Richard Hampden Eſq; in the Chair, and afterwards the whole Houſe, January the 28th,

Reſolv'd,

That King James the Second, having endeavour'd to ſubvert the Conſtitution of the Kingdom by breaking the Original Contract between King and People, and by the Advice of Jeſuits and other wicked Perſons, having violated the Fundamental Laws, and withdrawn himſelf out of the Kingdom, hath abdicated the Government, and that the Throne is thereby vacant. Which Reſolution was immediately ſent up to the Lords for their Concurrence. Abdication Vote.

Before the Commons came to this Grand Vote, they receiv'd a Letter ſent them by the Lord Preſton, and hearing it came from King James, they would not ſo much as open it. The Contents of it were the ſame with that directed To the Lords and others of the Privy-Council, before mentioned. The like Letter was ſent by the ſame Lord to the Houſe of Peers, where a Motion was made for reading it, but it was warmly oppos'd and rejected. However, their Lordſhips ſent for Preſton, and demanded how he came by the Letter, who ſaid, he had it from a Scotſman; upon which, he was order'd to produce him, and attend the Houſe with him within three Days. The Scotſman's Name was Hays, and at the time appointed he appear'd in the Houſe, whom he inform'd, " That when he " left Paris, on the Monday before, the King " commanded him to call at St. Germains on " the Earl of Melfort for a Packet of Letters to " the Lord Preſton, which he did, and had de- " livered them according to his Orders, and that " was all he knew of the Matter." A Motion was again made for reading the Letter, but it was again rejected. Echard tells us that the Letter being ſign'd by Melfort, diſguſted ſeveral of the Lords, who had before been zealous for the King. Debated by the Lords.

On the 29th of January, the Lords conſider'd the Grand Vote, ſent up to them by the Commons in a Committee of the whole Houſe, the Earl of Danby, afterwards Duke of Leeds, in the Chair. The firſt Motion was, " Not to agree " with the Commons that the Throne was vacant, " but only firſt to ſuppoſe it for the preſent, " leaving it to be further examined afterwards, " in order to cut ſhort ſeveral other Queſtions by " determining this firſt, Whether the Throne be- " ing vacant, it ought to be fill'd by a Regent " or a King?

It is a very unpleaſant Task to me to repeat what was ſaid for the Regency, it being in ſome places trifling, in ſome abſurd, and all ſo well anſwer'd by the Marquis of Hallifax, the Earl of Danby, and thoſe illuſtrious Peers and Patriots, who aſſerted the Liberty of the Conſtitution, were great in Argument and like Truth prevail'd. It was alledg'd, I muſt not name Names, " That if upon any Pretence whatſoe- " ver the Nation might throw off their King," even after that King had thrown off the Kingdom, " then the Crown muſt become precarious, " and the Supremacy be lodg'd in the People, " which depoſing Power would deſtroy the hap- " py Mixture in the Engliſh Monarchy, and end " in a new Species of Government unknown to " this Nation." Here is twice Nation in one Sen- tence, yet a Biſhop inſulted Baxter at the Savoy Conference for making uſe of the Term as Republican. If the Nation might not on any Pretence whatſoever throw off their King, then the Engliſh were oblig'd to ſubmit firſt to the Pope, and afterwards to the King of Fez and Morocco, when King John had given them his Kingdom; the Abſurdity of which, is too viſible to need Explanation.

If there's a Mixture in the Engliſh Monarchy, what is it that is mix'd with it? Is it not the legiſlative Power as lodg'd in Lords and Commons? And if that Power is not to guard againſt the Subverſion of the Laws, it is a Shadow only, and has no Subſtance; of which I ſhall be convinc'd, when I can believe that One is more than Two, and the Whole leſs than a Part. Echard adds, that in the ſame Speech much was brought both from the Laws and Hiſtory of England, to prove, "That not only the Perſon, "but the Authority of the King is ſacred." Eternal Sophiſtry! The Perſon and Authority of the King, governing according to Law and his Coronation Oath, is ſacred, and to reſiſt him a damnable Sin. This is univerſally granted; but when he throws off the Authority the Law gives him, and aſſumes an arbitrary tyrannical Power over his Subjects, Body and Soul, is his Authority then ſacred? Thoſe that are minded to ſee more of this edifying Argument againſt placing King William and Queen Mary on the Throne, againſt the Succeſſion of Queen Anne, King George I. his preſent Majeſty, and his Royal Poſterity, are refer'd to Echard, and the common Hiſtories, where that and other Arguments of equal force are in great plenty. The Archdeacon owns, "Some intended to bring "King James back, and artfully join'd in this, "as the probable means of ſoftning the Nation, "and removing the preſent Averſion to that "Prince; which done, a little Time might "bring about their Deſigns."

Lords for the Vacancy.

The noble Peers who inſiſted that the Throne was Vacant, and that it might be fill'd with a King, urg'd, "That a Regent was as much or "more againſt Monarchy than what they had "propos'd. If a King's ill Government gave "the People a Right in any caſe to take away "his Power, and lodge it with another, owning "that the Right to it ſtill remain'd with him; "this would have as ill Conſequences as the "pretended Danger by Diverſity of Factions, "and Variety of Elections, ſince recourſe would "be had to this violent Remedy as often and as "raſhly as the other. By the Propoſition of a "Regent, there would be in effect two Kings at "the ſame time, one with the Title, and the "other with the Power, which was more illegal "and unſafe than the Method then propos'd. "If the Oaths to King James were thought to "be ſtill in force, his Subjects by theſe were "not only bound to maintain his Title, but all "his Powers and Prerogatives; and therefore "it ſeem'd abſurd to continue a Government in "his Name, and to ſwear to him as King, "when all the Kingly Power was taken out of "his hands. If the Government ſhould be "carry'd on in the Name of King James by "the hands of others, the Body of the Nation "would conſider him as the Perſon who was "really their King; and if any ſhould plot or "act in his behalf, they could not be proſecuted "for High Treaſon, as conſpiring againſt the "Perſon or Government of the King; when it "would be apparent, that they were only de-"ſigning to preſerve his Perſon, and reſtore him "to his Government. To proceed againſt, and "to condemn any to die for ſuch Practice, would "be to add Murder to Perjury." Theſe and other Arguments had ſuch weight in this auguſt Aſſembly, that when the Queſtion was put, there were 51 for a King, and but 49 for a Regency. Among the latter were,

Lords againſt the Vacancy.

Duke of Somerſet,	Lord Leigh,
Duke of Ormond,	Lord Ferrars,
Duke of Southampton,	Lord Maynard,
Duke of Grafton,	Lord Chandos,
Duke of Beaufort,	Lord Jermin,
Duke of Northumberland,	Lord Arundel of Trerice,
Earl of Kent,	Lord Dartmouth,
Earl of Pembroke,	Lord Griffin,
Earl of Clarendon,	Archbiſhop of York,
Earl of Rocheſter,	Biſhop of Norwich,
Earl of Craven,	Biſhop of Wincheſter,
Earl of Weſtmorland,	Biſhop of Ely,
Earl of Scarſdale,	Biſhop of Bath and Wells,
Earl of Cheſterfield,	Biſhop of Peterborough,
Earl of Litchfield,	Biſhop of Chicheſter,
Earl of Yarmouth,	Biſhop of Rocheſter,
Earl of Lindſey,	Biſhop of St. David's,
Viſcount Weymouth,	Biſhop of Oxford,
Lord Coventry,	Biſhop of Glouceſter,
Lord Brook,	Biſhop of Lincoln.

Mr. Archdeacon informs us, that the Earl of Huntington, and the Earl of Mulgrave, whom King William afterwards created Marquis of Normanby, did not appear in the Houſe, and the Lord Churchil alſo abſented himſelf, pretending ſome Indiſpoſition; but it was ſuppos'd he was abſent out of Decency only, and in conſideration of the Favours he had receiv'd from the abdicated King. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury was always abſent, and Mr. Echard adds, "Indeed the Odiouſneſs of a Depoſing Power "had made ſo deep an Impreſſion on the Minds "of the Clergy, that none of the Biſhops knew "how to come into the Opinion of filling up the "Throne, but Dr. Compton Biſhop of London, "and Sir Jonathan Trelawny Biſhop of Briſtol." But they knew very well how to come into the Opinion to invite the Prince of Orange to come with a mighty Fleet and Army againſt the King, who fill'd the Throne, and to make Prayers for the Prince's Succeſs againſt him, which was as criminal in the Opinion of King James, as the drawing the Duke of Monmouth's, or the Earl of Argyle's Declaration. The Duke of Ormond, and three of King Charles's natural Sons, the Dukes of Southampton, Grafton, and Northumberland, ſoon left the Party for the Regency, and fell in with that for a King.

The Lords proceeded farther on the Grand Vote, January 31. and put this Queſtion, Whether or no there was an Original Contract between King and People? Some maintain'd that Kings held their Crowns by Divine Right, which was vehemently deny'd by others, who aſſerted, "That all Power originally belong'd "to the Community, and to the King only by "Mutual Contract." The former inſiſted that there was no ſuch thing in being, and ask'd, Where it was kept, and how they might come at it? We have obſerv'd of the Cavaliers in former Times, that whenever they pretended to Wit, 'twas as aukard and clumſy as the Jeſts of Clowns, or the Mirth of Fools. The Original Contract was kept in the Coronation Oaths, till Laud and Sancroft alter'd them, and might there be found as well as in all the Records of antient Times. Sir Robert Philips, Knight of the Shire for Somerſet in King James the Firſt's Time, aſſerted this Original Contract in Parliament, in the very Terms, above Threeſcore Years before this Convention, as may be ſeen in that Reign; and now, ſays Echard, and thinks he ſays ſomething, they ask'd where the Original Contract was kept, and how they might come at it ? as if it had been Articles of Agreement had and made between John a Nokes, and Tom a Stiles laid by in an old Coffer.

Original Contract aſſerted.

A. D. 1688.

The Archdeacon himſelf can't help repeating enough of what was ſaid in Anſwer to it, to juſtify this Mirth. " Others anſwer'd it was " imply'd in a legal and limited Government, " tho' in a long Tract of Time and dark Ages, " there was not ſuch an explicit Proof of it to be " found. Yet many Hints from Law-Books, " antient Hiſtories, and the Proceedings at Co- " ronations, ſupported the Truth of it ; and e- " ven the Conqueror himſelf was receiv'd upon " his promiſing to keep the Laws of Edward the " Confeſſor, which was plainly the Original " Contract between him and the Nation. Theſe " were often renew'd by his Succeſſors, more eſ- " pecially by their ſeveral Confirmations of " Magna Charta, and Edward II. and Ri- " chard II. were depos'd for breaking theſe " Laws and Contracts, which Proceedings were " ſtill good in Law ; ſince they were never re- " vers'd, nor was the Right of Depoſing them " ever renounc'd or diſown'd. It was ask'd, " what ſignify'd all the Limitations of the Regal " Power, if when a King broke thro' them all, " the People were left without Remedy to " maintain their Laws, and preſerve their Con- " ſtitution ? "

The contrary Notion is like that Nonſenſe, with which the ſame Party complemented Queen Anne, upon H——y's hated Revolution in the Miniſtry. They cry'd up in their Addreſſes her divine, hereditary, unalienable, indefeaſible Right to the Crown, at the ſame time that they affirm'd the Pretender to be her true Brother : Thus it was an unmix'd mix'd Monarchy, a limited unlimited Government ; for all Limitations, of Regal Power, according to theſe Men, were no where to be come at, and the Subjects had no Remedy to main- rain their Laws and preſerve their Conſtitution. Upon the finiſhing of this Debate, which was un- equally maintain'd by the Negative, the Queſtion, Whether King James had broke the ſaid Original Contract, paſt in the Affirmative, Yea's 53, No's 46 ; by which it appear'd, that the Num- ber of thoſe who were for the Regency was much leſſen'd. In the mean time the People began to diſreliſh theſe Debates, and the Stand that was put to the wiſh'd-for Revolution. They were impatient of the old Cathedral Topicks of Jure Divino, and a Petition was drawn up and carry'd about London for Hands, addreſs'd to the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, aſſembled in the Grand Convention, &c. wherein it was ſaid,

A Petition to the Lords.

" Whereas we are in a deep Senſe of the " Danger of Delays and perplex'd Debates a- " bout ſettling the Government, at this time " Vacant, by reaſon whereof the neceſſary Ends " of Government cannot be duly adminiſtred, " we humbly deſire that his Illuſtrious Highneſs " the Prince of Orange, and his Royal Conſort " the Princeſs, may be ſettled on the Throne ; " by whoſe Courage, Conduct, and Reputation " this Nation and the Proteſtant Religion may " be defended from our Enemies, both at home " and abroad ; and that Ireland, now in a " bleeding and deplorable Condition, may be " reſcu'd from its Miſeries, and theſe Kingdoms " ſettled on a laſting Foundation in Peace and " Liberty."

His Highneſs had not appear'd on any ſide of the Queſtions debated in the Convention, which he reſolv'd ſhould be free, and that there ſhould not be the leaſt colour for the Enemies to our Liberty and Peace to ſay they were under any Direction ; Therefore to prevent its being in- ſinuated that he approv'd of this Petition, he caus'd the Lord Mayor to iſſue an Order to ſup- preſs it.

A. D. 1688.

King James's Acceſſion-Day, February 6th, approaching, the Houſe of Peers order'd it ſhould not be obſerv'd as a Holiday, and took into conſideration the Word Abdicated, and con- cluded that the Word Deſerted was more proper for this occaſion. They next examin'd the Word Vacant, and put this Queſtion, Whether King James having broken the Original Contract be- tween him and his People, and Deſerted the Go- vernment, the Throne was thereby Vacant ? Thoſe who were for bringing back King James, and all the Miſeries that he had carry'd away with him, debated this Queſtion with greater Heat, but I can't ſay with greater Force than any of the former ; and ſome, according to E- chard, were for a Tye between him and the Na- tion, inſtead of the Original Contract. How- ever the Term Vacant was ſtill too ſtrong for the Major Vote, and when it was put to the queſtion, it was carry'd in the Negative by eleven Voices. And a Motion being made that the Prince and Princeſs of Orange be immediately declar'd King and Queen, it was alſo carry'd in the Ne- gative by five Voices. Againſt which Vote the Marquiſſes of Halliſax and Wincheſter, the Earls of Danby and Devonſhire, the Lord De- lamere and others, to the Number of Forty, en- ter'd their Proteſt. Lord Lovelace offer'd a Pe- tition to the Houſe ; upon which the Earl of Cla- rendon mov'd, " That according to a ſtanding " Order of the Houſe he himſelf ſhould open it, " and acquaint the Houſe with the Contents of " it, and by whom it was ſign'd." The Lord Ferrars ſeconded that Motion ; upon which Lord Lovelace withdrew it, ſaying, It was not yet ſign'd, but ſhould be by Hands enough. E- chard adds, " Great Numbers of the Rabble " flock'd that Morning to Weſtminſter, with " Will. Killegrew at the head of them, but it " made little Impreſſion on their Lordſhips." By Rabble he and his Brother Hiſtory-Writers mean every Man, whoſe Zeal for the Conſtitution is apt to break out into any kind of Activity. There was to my knowledge among thoſe whom he calls Rabble, Men of ſuperior Cha- racter to himſelf, in whatever light we look upon him ; and it would not have been eaſy for the Enemies of the Revolution to have hinder'd its taking effect, had they continu'd their En- deavours. The Lords the ſame day, February the 4th, ſent a Meſſage to the Commons, That they had conſider'd of their Vote of the 28th of January laſt. Inſtead of the Word Abdicated they would have Deſerted to be put in, and theſe Words, And that the Throne is thereby become Vacant, to be left out.

Votes a- gainſt the Vacancy.

Lords A- mendment to the Grand Vote of the Commons.

Does there not ſeem ſomething very extraor- dinary, I will not ſay extravagant, in theſe A- mendments ? If King James was gone, and as the Earl of Clarendon ſaid, His own Opinion would concur to ſecure the Nation againſt his Return, is not the plain Senſe and Engliſh of it, He has put himſelf out, and we'll keep him out ? Call it Deſertion or Abdication, the Conſequence is the ſame to King James ; and if the Throne was not Vacant, he muſt be out of it and in it at the ſame time, which is a new Doctrine of Tran- ſubſtantiation, that could not be ſwallow'd by good Proteſtants. And as ſoon as the Commons had conſider'd of theſe Amendments, it was car- ry'd by a great Majority, February 5th, that a Committee ſhould be appointed to draw up Reaſons why that Houſe could not concur with their Lordſhips ; which were as follows : As to the

A. D. 1688.

the firſt Amendment, the Word Deſerted did not fully expreſs the Concluſion from the Premiſes, which the Lords had agreed in agreeing to all the reſt of the grand Vote, except the Abdication and Vacancy, their Lordſhips having Commons Reaſons againſt the Amendment.

Reſolved,

That King James II. had endeavour'd to ſubvert the Conſtitution of the Kingdom, by breaking the Original Contract between King and People, and had violated the Fundamental Laws, and withdrawn himſelf out of the Kingdom.

Now the Word Deſerted, as the Commons argued, reſpected only the withdrawing; but the Word Abdicated reſpected the whole, for which purpoſe the Commons made choice of it.

And as to the ſecond Amendment the Commons could not agree to leave out the Words, And that the Throne is thereby vacant. 1ſt, Becauſe they conceived, that they might well infer, from ſo much of their own Vote, as their Lordſhips had agreed to, That King James the Second had Abdicated the Government, and that the Throne was thereby Vacant. So that if the Commons ſhould admit their Lordſhips Amendment, that he had only Deſerted the Government, yet even thence it would follow that the Throne is vacant, as to King James II, deſerting the Government, being in true Conſtruction deſerting the Throne. 2dly, The Commons conceived, they needed not to prove to their Lordſhips, that as to any other Perſon the Throne was alſo Vacant, their Lordſhips having, as the Commons conceived, already admitted it, by their Addreſſing to the Prince of Orange, the 25th of December paſt, to take upon him the Adminiſtration of Publick Affairs, both Civil and Military, and to take into his Care the Kingdom of Ireland, till the meeting of this Convention; and by their Lordſhips renewing the ſame Addreſs to his Highneſs, ſince they met, and by appointing of Publick Thankſgivings to be obſerv'd throughout the whole Kingdom. All which the Commons conceived to imply, that it was their Lordſhips Opinion, that the Throne was Vacant, and to ſignify ſo much to the People of England. 3dly, It is from thoſe who are upon the Throne of England, when there are any ſuch, from whom the People of England ought to receive Protection, and to whom, for that Cauſe, they owe the Allegiance of Subjects; but there being none now from whom they expect Regal Protection, and to whom for that Cauſe, they owe the Allegiance of Subjects, the Commons conceived the Throne Vacant. Theſe Reaſons were given the Lords by Richard Hampden Eſq; at a Conference which the Earl of Wiltſhire, afterwards Duke of Bolton, had been ſent to deſire: At which Conference, Mr. Hampden reported, February the 6th, that the Earl of Nottingham ſaid, "The Lords had deſir'd this Conference, "that they might be as happily united to the "Commons in Opinion, as they are inſeparable "in their Intereſt, and that they are at this "time uneaſy, that they cannot concur with the "Commons in every thing, becauſe it is of ſo "great Concern to the Nation, and from ſo great "and wiſe a Body.

Earl of Nottingham at the Conference.

"That the Lords did inſiſt upon the firſt A-"mendment, becauſe they did not find, that the "Word Abdicated was a Word known to the "Common Law of England, and becauſe in the "moſt common Acceptation in the Civil Law, "Abdicated was a voluntary expreſs Act of Re-"nunciation, which was not in this Caſe, and did "not follow from the Premiſes, That King "James the Second, by having withdrawn him-"ſelf, after having endeavour'd to ſubvert the "Conſtitution of the Government, by breaking the "Original Contract between King and People, "and having violated the Fundamental Laws, "may be any more properly ſaid to have Abdi-"cated than to have Deſerted. A. D. 1688.

"That the Lords alſo inſiſted on the Second "Amendment, to leave out the Words, And the "Throne is Vacant; for tho' their Lordſhips have "agreed that the King has deſerted the Govern-"ment, and therefore have made Application to "the Prince of Orange, to take upon him the Ad-"miniſtration of the Government, and thereby to "provide for the Peace and Safety of the King-"dom; yet there can be no other Inference "drawn from thence, but only that the Exerciſe "of the Government by King James the Second "is ceaſed; ſo as the Lords were and are wil-"ling to ſecure this Nation againſt the Return "of the ſaid King into this Kingdom, but not "that there was either ſuch an Abdication by "him, or ſuch a Vacancy in the Throne, as that "the Crown was thereby become Elective, which "they cannot agree."

1ſt, Becauſe by the Conſtitution of the Government, the Monarchy is Hereditary and not Elective.

2dly, Becauſe no Act of the King alone can bar or deſtroy the Right of his Heir to the Crown; and therefore in Anſwer to the third Reaſon alledg'd by the Houſe of Commons, if the Throne be Vacant of King James II. Allegiance is due to ſuch Perſon as the Right of Succeſſion doth belong to.

The Reverend Archdeacon's Reflections on theſe Arguments, I make uſe of his own Words, are ſome of the beſt in his Book. "Their Lord-"ſhips diſſented from a tender Regard to the "Proteſtant Succeſſors, and the reſpectful, legal "Notions of Hereditary Monarchy; which had "been too long rooted, to be eaſily removed at "once." That Reſpectful Notion did not allow to thruſt King James out of his Seat, but it allow'd to hinder his ever getting again into it; and to keep a Man out of his Chair, when he ſtrives to get in again, is I think as diſreſpectful as to diſplace him, when he was in it. The reſpectful Notion of Hereditary Monarchy did not hinder this illuſtrious Aſſembly, from applying to a Prince who was not apparently Hereditary, to take on him that Government, to which the Hereditary Monarch aſſerted his Right.

Mr. Hampden having made the Report of the Conference, February the 6th, the Queſtion was put, Whether the Commons do agree with the Lords in the firſt Amendment? and it paſt in the Negative with great Unanimity: and then the Queſtion being put, That the Houſe do agree with the Lords in the ſecond Amendment? a warm Debate enſu'd, and the Houſe divided upon the Queſtion. The Yeas to go forth; the Tellers for the Yeas, Sir Joſeph Tredenham and Francis Gwynn Eſq; Tellers for the No's Mr. Dutton-Colt, and Mr. Herbert. I think Names on both ſides ought to be remembred on this Occaſion. The Yeas were 151, the No's 282, the Majority 131.

To manage the Conference.

Ordered,

That Mr. Dolben do go up to the Lords, and deſire a free Conference with the Lords upon the ſubject Matter of the laſt Conference.

Mr. Dolben reported,

That he having, according to the Order of this Houſe, attended the Lords, to deſire a free Conference with their Lordſhips, upon the Subject Matter of the laſt Conference, they had agreed to a free Conference, preſently in the painted Chamber; and the Managers going thither, conferr'd with the Managers for the Lords, who were,

Committee of Lords. Earl of Pembroke. Duke of Somerſet. Earl of Nottingham. Biſhop of Ely. Earl of Rocheſter. Biſhop of Peterborough. Earl of Clarendon. Biſhop of Rocheſter. Earl of Ailesbury. Archbiſhop of York. Earl of Cheſterfield. Biſhop of Wincheſter. Earl of Weſtmorland.

The Debates at this memorable Conference were carried on with great Solemnity and Strength of Argument. But Echard tells us ſomething that is very true upon it, according to the Senſe of the Nation, the Commons had much the Advantage, and I have often been puzzled to comprehend what thoſe noble Perſons meant by oppoſing the Settlement. Let us ſuppoſe, that out of Complacency to the Oxford Decree, and the reſpectful Notions of Hereditary Monarchy, a Negative had paſs'd in the Houſe of Peers to the laſt important Queſtion, Whether the Prince and Princeſs of Orange ſhould be declared King and Queen: It was viſible the People of England were bent upon it, and how could any Engliſhman think of the Conſequence of ſuch a Negative without trembling? Had the Arguments for it been ſtronger than any I have met with, the People were not to be argued out of the Security which they expected for their Religion, Liberties, Rights and Properties, by ſettling the Government on that Prince and Princeſs. Inſtead of abdicating, it was the univerſal Opinion, as Echard confeſſes, that King James had forfeited his Right, and as to the pretended Prince of Wales, the Impoſture was ſo generally believ'd that he was not thought worth mentioning. What then was to be done, but to have recourſe to the next undoubted Heir, the Princeſs of Orange, who willingly transferr'd her Divine Right to the Prince, with the Conſent of the Legiſlature?

Mr. Hampden. The Debate at the Conference was open'd by Mr. Hampden, who among other Things ſaid, "That the Common Law of England is not acquainted with the Word Abdicate, is from the "Modeſty of our Law, which is not willing to "ſuppoſe there ſhould be any unfortunate Occaſion of making uſe of it."

Mr. Somers. Mr. Somers enlarg'd in anſwer to that Objection, and urg'd, that there was the ſame Exception to their Lordſhips word Deſertion, which has not a known Senſe in the Common Law of England. Then he explain'd the meaning of the Word Abdicate, as ſignifying a Renouncing not only by Expreſs Words, or Writing, but by doing ſuch Acts, as are inconſiſtent with the holding or retaining of the Thing; in which Senſe 'tis taken by Grotius, Calvin, Briſonius, Budæus: Whereas Deſerted ſignifies only a bare Withdrawing, which leaves the Party at liberty to return to it again, for which he quotes Spigelius and Bartolus; adding, that to deſert in the Canon Law is only Non-reſidence, with reſpect to a Benefice, in which Caſe the Party hath not only a Right to return, but is bound to return again. Mr. Somers added, "As the "Commons do not take this to be the preſent Caſe, "ſo they cannot think that your Lordſhips do, "becauſe it is expreſly ſaid, in one of your Rea"ſons given in Defence of the laſt Amendment, "That your Lordſhips have been, and are wil"ling to ſecure the Nation againſt the Return of "King James; which your Lordſhips would "not in juſtice do, if you did look upon it no "more than a withdrawing, which leaves the "Party at liberty to return."

A. D. 1688.

"The Queſtion is not ſo much, whether the Serj. Holt. "Word Abdicated be as antient as the Common "Law, for that will be no Objection againſt the "uſing it, if it be a Word of a known and certain "Signification, becauſe that we think will juſti"fy the Commons making uſe of it." He then prov'd the Signification of it to be the ſame, as in the Senſe the Commons us'd it, out of Cicero, and our Countryman Minſhew; adding, "We "have very few Words in our Tongue that are "of equal Antiquity with the Common Law. "Your Lordſhips know the Language of Eng"land is alter'd greatly in ſeveral Succeſſions of "Time, and the Intermixture of other Nations, "and if we ſhould be oblig'd to make uſe only "of Words then known and in uſe, what we "ſhould deliver in ſuch a Dialect, would be ve"ry difficult to be underſtood. He then prov'd, that the doing an Act inconſiſtent with the Being and End of a Thing, but quite the contrary, is an Abdication, and formal Renunciation of that Thing.

Earl of Nottingham. The Earl of Nottingham ſaid, "The main "Reaſon of the Change of the Word is upon the "account of the Conſequence drawn in the Con"cluſion of the Vote, That the Throne is thereby "vacant, that is, what the Commons mean by "that Expreſſion, whether you mean it is ſo "Vacant, as to null the Succeſſion in the Here"ditary Line, and ſo all the Heirs to be cut off, "which we ſay will make the Crown Elective.

Serj. Maynard. When there is a preſent Defect of one to exerciſe the Adminiſtration of the Government, I conceive the Declaring a Vacancy, and Proviſion of a Supply for it, can never make the Crown Elective. The Commons apprehend there is ſuch a Defect Now, and by Conſequence a preſent Neceſſity for the Supply of the Government. If the attempting the utter Deſtruction of the Subject, and the Subverſion of the Conſtitution, be not as much an Abdication, as the attempting of a Father to cut his Son's Throat, I know not what is. The Conſtitution, notwithſtanding the Vacancy, is the ſame; the Laws that are the Foundation and Rules of that Conſtitution are the ſame; but if there be, in any particular Inſtance, a Breach of that Conſtitution, that will be an Abdication, and that Abdication will infer a Vacancy.

I ſhall not be very particular, in relating the whole Conference, for tho' the Conſequence of it was of the laſt Importance, yet the Subject ſeems not to be ſo: The Difference being chiefly about the Signification of Words; for as to Things, both Houſes ſeem to be pretty well agreed. The Lords allow'd that King James had deſerted the Government, and ſhould never return to it, if they could help it; but they did not allow the Word Abdicate; nor that the Throne was Vacant, tho' there was no body in it, which was plain by their agreeing that he had deſerted it; for Throne and Government are all one in a Political Senſe. I ſhall only remember ſome Remarkables in certain Speeches at the Conference,

Biſhop of Ely. Dr. Turner, Biſhop of Fly: He was for the Abdication of King James, if the Right Line of Succeſſion was continued. This Prelate,

A. D. 1688. after King William and Queen Mary were crown'd, held a Treaſonable Correſpondence with the ſame King or his Agents: notwithſtanding he own'd that he would take the Oaths to them, if that King was dead, as not looking upon the Pretender to be the right Line of Succeſſion; which is ſpoken of elſewhere, and ſerves to ſhew the Conſiſtency of theſe Men in Sentiment and Practice.

Againſt the Pretender.

Earl of Clarendon

Said, nobody will make the Coronation-Oath to be the Original Contract. One would think indeed that if a Man ſwears to do a thing, he does more than contract to do it.

Sir George Treby.

" We are gone back too far, when we offer to " enquire into the Original Contract, whether " any ſuch thing is known or underſtood in our " Law or Conſtitution? And I offer this to your " Lordſhips Conſideration for two Reaſons: " Firſt, It is a Phraſe and Thing uſed by the " Learned Mr. Hooker, in his Book of Eccleſiaſtical Polity, whom I mention as a valuable " Authority, being one of the beſt Men, the " beſt Churchman, and the moſt Learned of our " Nation in his time; and his Works are very " worthily recommended by the Teſtimony of " King Charles the Firſt." He allows, That Government did originally begin by Contract. What follows proves, that, as I ſaid before, the Difference was about the Signification of Words only. " But I have a greater Authority than " this to influence this Matter, and that is your " Lordſhips own, who have agreed to all the " Vote but this word Deſerted, and the Vacancy " of the Throne." Their Lordſhips had agreed that King James had broken the Original Contract, and it remain'd that he had deſerted thereby or abdicated the Throne. It was urg'd, that his Abdication not being a voluntary Act, could not be a Renunciation, no more could it be a Deſertion, for that was not voluntary. Now as to Renunciation, King James's indeed was not ſo ſolemn and expreſs as Queen Chriſtina's of Sweden: But what then? It was as effectual and legal, as Lord Nottingham granted it to be. I will not undertake to diſpute whether a King of England may or may not renounce his Kingdom? For my own part, I think he can, and I may go ſo far in agreement with thoſe that have ſpoken to this Point, to yield that he may do it by implicit Acts, contrary to his Kingly Office. In which his Lordſhip ſeems to go as far, according to my Underſtanding, as the Commons intended; for certainly the ſubverting the Conſtitution of the Kingdom, and the breaking the Original Contract, are the greateſt Implicit Acts contrary to the Kingly Office, and makes the Word Abdicated the only proper one, to expreſs the Senſe of the Convention and the Nation. His Lordſhip confirms what he was pleas'd to ſay before by what follows: For a King to ſay, he will not govern according to Law, and for a King to act wholly contrary to Law, and do that which would ſubvert the Conſtitution, is, I think, the ſame thing. I do not repeat what his Lordſhip adds entirely, becauſe I do not conceive there is the ſame Force of Reaſon in it. However I ſhall add this, If every Tranſgreſſion or Violation of the Law, by the Prince's Connivance or Command, were ſuch a Breach of the fundamental Laws, as would infer an Abdication, then were it in vain to call any of his Miniſters to account. Then the Action is the King's, and not theirs, and then adieu to the Maxim of A King can do no Wrong. This Argument has the Infirmity, which is in moſt of the Earl of Clarendon's, in his Hiſtory. The Houſe of Commons and their Committee, and indeed any one reaſonable Man in the Kingdom, did not pretend that every Tranſgreſſion or Violation of the Law was ſuch a Breach of the Fundamental Laws, as would infer an Abdication; but they did all pretend and aſſert, and the Houſe of Lords had agreed to it, that King James had endeavour'd to ſubvert the Conſtitution, broken the Original Contract, and violated the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, which is infinitely more than a ſingle Tranſgreſſion. As to the Maxim of a King can do no Wrong, let thoſe make the moſt of it who believe and preach it. I believe King Charles the Firſt did wrong, when he enter'd the Houſe of Commons with Men in Arms, and that his Miniſters were not accountable for it; and many other Inſtances of Wrong will be met with in the Reigns we write of.

Earl of Nottingham.

A. D. 1688.

In the Debate about the ſecond Amendment, the Throne being vacant, Mr. Sacheverell, ſpeaking of the Notion of King James's having left the Exerciſe of the Government, and continuing ſtill the Office, ſaid, " If the Caſe were ſo, " then all the Actions we have done in this " Convention are wholly not juſtifiable. You " are in no Place or Station to relieve yourſelves " or the Nation in this Exigence, unleſs you " will think of ſetting up another Regency by " your own Authority, without his Conſent; " which I conceive, by the Laws of England, " you cannot do. What then follows upon all " we have done? We have drawn the Nation " into a Snare by the Steps we have taken, and " leave all in ſuch an Intricacy, as we have no " Power by Law to deliver them out of." This is one of the terrible Conſequences of the Negative to the Commons grand Vote, which I have given Hints of in the preceding Page.

Mr. Sacheverell.

That great Lawyer Mr. Pollexfen ſpoke as to the Diſtinction between the Exerciſe of the Government, which their Lordſhips agreed to be ceaſed as to King James, and his Right to the Government, which the Committee underſtood would remain in the Senſe of the word Deſerted, and which they were reſolv'd ſhould remain no where. Mr. Pollexfen argu'd thus: " The Adminiſtration or Exerciſe of the Kingly Government is in Conſtruction and Conſideration of Law all one and the ſame; and, I think, no body that would reaſon aright from thence, can ſay there is any Diſtinction between Government and the Exerciſe of Government: for whoſoever takes from the King the Exerciſe of Government, takes from the King his Kingſhip; for the Power and the Exerciſe of the Power are ſo join'd, that they cannot be ſever'd. And the Terms themſelves, taking them as the Law of England, which we are to argue from this Caſe, teacheth them, are ſo coincident, that they cannot either ſubſiſt without conſiſting together. If a Man grant to another the Government of ſuch a Place, this imports the Exerciſe of the Government there to be granted thereby."

Mr. Pollexfen.

Another Reaſon which the Managers for the Lords urg'd againſt the Vacancy of the Throne was, that the Government which was Hereditary would thus become Elective; and indeed the Managers ſeem'd to have direful Apprehenſions of an Increaſe of the People's Liberty by it, tho', as we have long experienc'd, there was not the leaſt danger of it; for, thanks be to God, the Succeſſion in the Proteſtant Line has continu'd above forty Years uninterrupted, and is like ſo to continue longer than any Succeſſion has hitherto done in the Throne of England, for which every good Engliſhman prays with all the Powers of his Soul.

The

A. D. 1688.

The Learned Mr. Pollexfen ſpoke to this alſo: "For the Concluſion, which your Lordſhips "have added to your Reaſon, as making it from "the very Words of your Vote, That it would "infer ſuch a Vacancy in the Throne, as that "the Crown ſhould thereby become Elective: This "we conceive is a Concluſion that hath no Pre-"miſſes either from our Actions or our Say-"ings, or our Votes, or any thing elſe in this "Caſe; nay, it is quite varying from all Pre-"miſſes: But when ſuch a Concluſion can be "ſhewn to follow from them, then it will be "time enough for us to give our Anſwer to it."

The Earl of Claren-don.

How is the Throne vacant? Is it only as to King James, or is it as to him and all or any of his Poſterity, or any of thoſe that are in the Remainder in the Royal Line in Succeſſion? I do not find that the Word Heirs or Heirſhip has been in the leaſt hinted by any one of the Houſe of Commons. That came naturally into conſideration, after the Vacancy of the Throne was ſettled, and not before. Lord Clarendon proceeded, If it be as to them too, then it muſt neceſſarily follow, that the Kingdom muſt thereby become Elective, or the Government changed into a Commonwealth; which no Man in his Wits dreamt of, and his Lordſhip muſt needs dread it as much as a Deluge or Conflagration.

Serjeant Maynard.

"I am ſure if we be left without a Govern-"ment, as we find we are, ſure we muſt not be "perpetually under Anarchy. The Word E-"lective is none of the Commons Word, nei-"ther is the making the Kingdom Elective "the Thing they had in their Thoughts or In-"tentions; all they mean by this Matter, is to "provide a Supply for this Defect in the Go-"vernment, brought upon it by the late King's "Male-Adminiſtration."

Earl of Pem-broke

Said againſt the Vacancy, You, Gentlemen, ask who the Throne is full of? I think it is ſufficient to know that there are Heirs who are to take the Lineal Succeſſion, though we do not, or cannot poſitively name the particular Perſon. By which, in my Conception, his Lordſhip rejects the Prince of Wales as an Impoſtor; for if he had been a true Son, they could have poſitively nam'd the particular Perſon in the Succeſſion.

Earl of Notting-ham.

Lord Nottingham ſpoke about the Heirſhip, and making the Kingdom Elective. But as to the Heirſhip, it did not yet come into the Queſtion. As to the Elective, Mr. Sacheverell ſaid,

Mr. Sache-verell.

"You put it upon us to ſay, the Execution or "Exerciſe of the Government is ceaſed, but you "will not ſay the Throne is vacant, ſo much as "to King James. And if it be not, what have "we to do to conſider or debate of any Conſe-"quence, whether it will infer an Election or "not? What Satisfaction can it be to your "Lordſhips, or us, or the Nation, to know that "ſuch things as are mention'd in the Votes have "been done by King James, and that he has "deſerted, as you ſay, the Government, if he "ſtill retain a Right to it, and your Lordſhips "will not declare he hath no Right, but amuſe "the Kingdom with the doubtful Words of the "Exerciſe, as to him, ceaſing. If that be all "you mean, what need the Queſtion be ask'd, "How far it is vacant? for it ſhould ſeem it is "not vacant at all."

Earl of Notting-ham.

Will you pleaſe to ſuppoſe it vacant as to King James; that is, that he hath no Right? then let us go on to the next ſtep.

Mr. Sache-verell.

"That, my Lords, we cannot do; for all our Buſineſs is to maintain our own, That the Throne is vacant.

Mr. So-mers.

"My Lords, your Lordſhips, as a Reaſon a-"gainſt the Word Abdicate, ſay, It is not a "Word known to our common Law. But the "Word vacant, about which we are now diſpu-"ting, cannot have that Objection made to it; "for we find it in our Records, and even ap-"plied in a parallel Caſe to this of ours, in "1 Hen. IV. where it is expreſly made uſe of "more than once, and there it doth import "what I think it doth import in this Vote of "the Houſe of Commons, now in debate; and "to require any further or other Explica-"tion of it than the Record gives, will be ve-"ry hard and unreaſonable, for we are here to "give the Commons Reaſons for maintaining "their own Vote, and nothing elſe. If your "Lordſhips pleaſe to look into the Record in "that Caſe, there was firſt a Reſignation of the "Crown and Government, made and ſubſcrib'd "by King Richard II. and this is brought into "the Parliament, and there they take notice "that the Sedes Regalis, thoſe are the Words, "fuit vacua: and the Reſignation being read "both in Latin and Engliſh in the great Hall "at Weſtminſter, where the Parliament then "aſſembled, it was accepted by the Lords and "Commons.

"After that, it proceeds further, and there "are Articles exhibited againſt Richard II. "and upon theſe Articles they went on to Sen-"tence of Depoſition and Deprivation, and then "followeth the Words in the Record: Et con-"feſſim, ut conſtabat, ex præmiſſis & eorum Oc-"caſione Regnum Angliæ cum pertinentis ſuis "vacare. Then Henry IV. riſes up out of his "Place as Duke of Lancaſter, where he ſate "before; and ſtanding ſo high that he might "be well enough ſeen, makes claim to the "Crown. The Words in the Record are, Dic-"tum Regnum Angliæ, ſic ut præmittitur, va-"cans una cum Corona vendicat. After that the "Record goes on: Upon this Claim, the Lords "and Commons being ask'd what they thought "of it, they unanimouſly conſented, and the "Archbiſhop took him by the Hand and led "him ad Sedem Regalem prædictam.

"Nay, and after all this, it is there taken no-"tice and particularly obſerv'd, that prius Va-"cante Sede Regali, by the Leaſion and De-"poſition aforeſaid, all the publick Officers "ceaſed; there is care taken for Henry IVth's "taking the Royal Oath, and granting of new "Commiſſions.

"My Lords, the Commons do therefore ap-"prehend, that with very good Reaſon and Au-"thority they did in their Vote declare the "Throne to be vacant: But as to the going fur-"ther, to enquire into the Conſequences of that, "concerning the Heirs and the Election, or "what is to be done afterwards, is not our Com-"miſſion, who came here only to maintain their "Expreſſions in their Vote againſt your Lord-"ſhips Amendments."

Earl of Rocheſter.

The Lord Rocheſter had no regard to that Commiſſion, but inſiſted upon it, that the Va-cancy of the Throne would make the Monarchy elective. And did not the Deſertion of the Government do it every whit as much, when another was to have it? and ſince that other Perſon could not beſtow it upon himſelf, but muſt have it conferr'd on him by others, that Conferring is Electing, and reduces the Debate ſtill to a Difference about Words only.

Earl of Claren-don

The Earl of Clarendon continu'd the Doubt of turning the Kingdom into a Common-Wealth, adding, I hope you will take into your Conſideration, what will become of the Kingdom of Scotland, if they ſhould differ from us in this Point. And truly they did differ in an extraordinary manner, for they would not make uſe of either of the two Words Deſerted or Abdicated, but I think they us'd a much better better Word, Forefaulted, declaring that King James by many ill Acts of Government had forfeited the Kingdom, and had no more Right to it, than the late Earl of Mar has to his Lands in North Britain.

A. D. 1688.

Sir Robert Howard.

" We do not doubt but that Power which " brought in another Line upon the Vacancy of " the Throne by the Leasion of Richard II. is " still, according to the Constitution, residing " in the Lords and Commons, and is legally " sufficient to supply the Vacancy that now is: " Use what Words you will, Fill up, or Nomi- " nate, or Elect." It being very plain, their Lordships did agree that there was nobody in the Throne, and that it was necessary it should be fill'd, but not with King James, the Difference continues still about the Terms only; and if they us'd, to Elect, or Nominate, or Fill up, either of them would have kept King James out as effectually as Abdicated, but 'twould not have alike preserv'd the Force and Vigour of the Constitution, which the Commons insisted upon.

Earl of Clarendon.

" Suppose you say nothing, but fill the Throne, " is it not to take away the right Line of Inhe- " ritance?" And does not Desertion imply a Vacancy as well as Abdication? That was not disputed.

Sir Thomas Lee.

" The Amendments your Lordships have " made to the Commons Vote, are not agreeing " with your other Votes, nor any of the Acts " since the Abdication. You were sensible we " were without a Government, by your desiring " the Prince to take the Administration, and to " issue out his Letters for this Convention. My " Lords, I would ask this Question, Whether " upon the Original Contract, there were not a " Power preserv'd in the Nation, to provide it " self in such Exigencies? That Contract was " to settle the Constitution; the making of Laws " is a Part of that Contract, and that those " Laws should oblige all Sides, when made; " but yet so as not to exclude this Original Con- " stitution, in all Governments which commence " by Compact, that there should be a Power in " the States to make Provision in all Times and " upon all Occasions, for extraordinary Cases " and Necessities, such as ours now is."

Sir G. Treby.

" To discourse whether the Crown of England " would by this means become Elective, is al- " together unnecessary, and I think your Lord- " ships have given no Reasons that are sufficient " to make the Objection out, neither any An- " swers to the Commons Reasons for their Vote. " It seems to me an odd way of Reasoning, first " to mistake the Meaning, and then give Rea- " sons against that mistaken Meaning. The " proper single Question here, is, Whether we " have well affirm'd upon the Premises that are " mention'd in the former Part of the Vote, that " King James has Abdicated, and that the Throne " is thereby Vacant. Your Lordships in part a- " gree, for you say he has deserted the Govern- " ment. Then you say, He is not in it: and it " is as much as to say, He has left the Kingdom " destitute of a Government. Now, if there be " any Sense, in which our Proposition is true, " will you deny the whole Proposition, because " it may be taken in a Sense that is dubious and " uncertain? You cannot say, the Throne is Full; " if then there be a Doubt with you, to be sure " it is not like to be evident to us, especially in this " Case. You are the Persons that usually are, " or ought to be present at the Delivery of our " Queens, and the proper Witnesses to the Birth " of our Princes. If then your Lordships had " known who was on the Throne, we should " certainly have heard his Name from you, and " that had been the best Reason against the Va- " cancy as could have been given.

A. D. 1688.

Their Lordships would not touch this Point. It would have exasperated the Nation beyond measure. Sir Robert Howard just hinted it, We know something has been pretended to, as an Heir-Male, of which there are different Opinions; and in the mean time, we are without a Government, and must we stay till the Truth of the matter be found out?

Earl of Pembroke.

Lord Pembroke, The Laws made, are certainly Part of the Original Contract: which his Lordship would not have asserted, if no such thing was to be come at.

Serjeant Maynard.

" If we look into the Law of Nature, which is " above all human Laws, we have enough to " justify us in what we are now a-doing, to pro- " vide for our selves and the Publick Weal in " such an Exigency as this."

Sir R. Temple.

If Laws made about the Succession be so obliging, what then shall we say to the Succession of Queen Elizabeth, who had an Act of Parliament; to the keeping of which an Oath was required, against both her and her Sister?

Earl of Pembroke.

" But to shew what Opinion she herself, and " the wise Men of her Times, had, and were " of, in this Point, there is an Act made in her " Reign yet in being, which declares it to be a " Præmunire, to affirm that Parliaments cannot " settle the Succession of the Crown or alter it." By this Statute, all the Addresses in K. Charles and K. James's Reigns, and at the latter end of Queen Anne's, which affirm'd the Right of Succession to be Unalterable, were subject to a Præmunire; and it were to be wish'd, that whenever the Unalienable, Indefeasible, Unalterable, is preach'd up again, a Præmunire may be executed upon the Preacher.

Sir R. Temple.

I think we are in as full a Capacity to take care of the Government as any of our Predecessors, in such an Exigence, and if we do as they have done before us, that is not to be call'd a Changing of the Monarchy from an Hereditary to an Elective.

Earl of Nottingham.

Gentlemen, " If any of you can settle this mat- " ter in its true Light, it would do very well, " and it is you must do it, for the Words are " yours, and so we must be told your Significa- " tion and Intention by yourselves. If you mean " by Abdication and Vacancy only, that the " King has left the Government, and it is de- " volv'd upon the next Successor, that may per- " haps satisfy my Lords, and we may agree " upon some Settlement."

Mr. Paul Foley.

" We are pursuing those Methods that agree " with our Laws and Constitution; for tho' the " Monarchy of this Nation be Hereditary in the " ordinary Course of Succession, yet there may " fall out a Case wherein that cannot be com- " ply'd with, and a plain Vacancy may ensue. " For put the Case, the whole Royal Line should " fail, as they are all mortal as well as we ourselves " are, should we in that Case have no Govern- " ment at all? And who then should we have but " the Lords and Commons? And I think that Case " comes nearest to the Case in question, where " the Successor is not known; for if he had been, " we should have heard of him before now. " And what is the Reason that it should then " in the former Case devolve to Lords and " Commons, but that there is no King? And " they being the Representative Body of the " Kingdom, are the only remaining Parts of the " Government, and are only to supply the De- " fect by providing a Successor. And is there " not the same Reason here? We are without " a King, I am sure I do not know of any that we

A. D. 1688.

" we have; if that fall out to be the Caſe now, " that will infer a Vacancy with a witneſs; and " it will be of Neceſſity that the Lords and " Commons take care to ſupply it."

My Lords,

Mr. Eyre. " We are led, and I think out of the way, into " a very large Field, hunting after the Conſe- " quences of a Vote not yet ſettled or agreed un- " to: we have, as I conceive, nothing but the " Vote itſelf to conſider of or debate upon. We " do not pretend to prejudice any legal Right; " but what the Conſequences of this Vote may be, " before the Vote itſelf be paſt, I believe no Man " can reaſonably pretend to aſcertain, unleſs he " have the Spirit of Prophecy. The Throne may " be Vacant as to the Poſſeſſion, without the Ex- " cluſion of one that has a Right to the Succeſ- " ſion, or a Diſſolution of the Government in the " Conſtitution; neither will there be room for " the Objection of a King de Facto, and not de " Jure, which ſome of the Lords were pleas'd " to expreſs their Fears of.

" The Gentleman that ſtands by me in- " ſtanc'd in a Record, and that was miſtaken, " as a Precedent for the Proceeding in this Caſe: " It was only mention'd by him to ſhew, that " by uſing the Word Vacant, the Commons did " no more than our Anceſtors did before us, and " therefore it was not an unknown Word or " Thing to have the Throne Vacant. We do appre- " hend we have made a right and apt Concluſion " from the Premiſes, for otherwiſe all the Vote " is but Hiſtorical. We declare the late King " hath broke the Original Contract, hath viola- " ted the Fundamental Laws, and withdrawn " himſelf out of the Kingdom; that he hath Ab- " dicated, actually Renounc'd the Government. " What occaſion was there for ſuch a Declara- " tion as this, if nothing were concluded from it? " That were only to give the Kingdom a com- " pendious Hiſtory of thoſe Miſeries they have " too well learn'd by feeling them; therefore " there was a Neceſſity to make ſome Conclu- " ſion, and none ſo natural as this, that we are " left without a King, in the Words of the " Vote; that the Throne is thereby Vacant, " which it may be as to the Poſſeſſion, and yet " the Right of Succeſſion no way prejudiced. " But, my Lords, we come here, by the Com- " mands of the Houſe of Commons, to debate " the Reaſons of their Vote, and your Lord- " ſhips Amendments, not to diſpute what will " be the Conſequences, which is not at preſent " our Purpoſe."

This Debate laſted ſeveral Hours, and as ſoon as the Managers for the Lords had made a Report in that Houſe, a new Debate aroſe there, long and warm, whether or no they ſhould inſiſt on their Amendments, or agree with the Grand Vote of the Commons. Many of the chief Mem- bers, who were before for a Regency, came over to the Party who were for a King, which was alſo encreas'd by the Arrival of ſome Lords; inſomuch, that when the two Queſtions about the Words Abdicate and Vacant were put, they were both carry'd in the Affirmative; upon which Mr. Archdeacon makes a very grave, but childiſh Ob- ſervation, " From which Principles, and the gene- " ral Opinion of both Lords and Commons, " that the perſonal Right of King James was " not unalienable, it has been often infer'd, " That there can be no indefeaſible Right in any " of his Heirs, either near or remote." He has no Heirs nearer than his Couſins in Savoy, and the People of England don't care whether their Right be defeaſible or indefeaſible: They will ne- ver draw any Inference from that Vote, which was not before infer'd from the Original Contract, and the natural Right of their Repreſentative to fill up the Throne, when it is at any time Vacant.

A. D. 1688.

The next day after the Houſe of Commons had paſs'd their Grand Vote, they reſolv'd, " That it hath been found by Experience to be " inconſiſtent with this Proteſtant Kingdom to " be govern'd by a Popiſh Prince;" which Vote they ſent up to the Lords for their Concur- rence: And their Lordſhips having concurr'd in it, did it not imply that the Government of King James was inconſiſtent with the Govern- ment of England, and that that Inconſiſtency turn'd the Deſertion into an Abdication? Nay, Echard himſelf acknowledges that King James had forfeited his perſonal Right, which, if he thought ſo, muſt make him read the Arguments for the Word Deſerted with great Prejudice and Averſion. Hiſt. Revol. p. 253.

While they were debating it, his Highneſs the Prince of Orange continu'd his remarkable Reſer- vedneſs and ſeeming Indifference ſome time, hearing all that was ſaid to him without making Anſwers upon this Head. All he ſaid himſelf was, He came over upon Invitation to ſave the Kingdom, and now he had brought together a true and free Repreſentative of the Nation, he therefore left it to them to do what they thought beſt for the Good of the Kingdom; and when things were once ſettled, he ſhould be well ſatis- fy'd to return back to Holland, in which 'tis pro- bable he preſerv'd his Phlegm more than his Sincerity, for not long after he ſent for the Mar- quis of Hallifax, the Earls of Shrewsbury and Danby, and ſome other leading Members of the Houſe of Lords, to whom he ſpoke to this ef- fect, " That he had been ſilent till then, be- " cauſe he would neither ſay nor do the leaſt " thing that might ſeem to intrench upon any " Man's full Freedom of deliberating and voting " in Matters of ſuch Importance. He was re- " ſolv'd neither to court nor threaten any Perſon " whatſoever, and therefore he had wholly " declin'd giving out his own Thoughts. He " found ſome were for putting the Government " into the hands of a Regent. He would ſay " nothing againſt that, if it was thought the beſt " means for ſettling their Affairs; only he " thought it neceſſary to tell them, that he him- " ſelf would not be the Regent. Therefore, if " they continu'd in that Deſign, they muſt look " out for ſome other Perſon to be put in that " Station; for he himſelf ſo well knew the Con- " ſequences of it, that he would not accept of " it."——He ſaid, " He found that others were " for putting the Princeſs ſingly on the Throne, " and that he ſhould reign by her Courteſy; to " which he ſaid, no Man could eſteem a Woman " more than he did the Princeſs, but he was of " that Temper, that he could not think of hold- " ing any thing upon ſuch Terms as the Life of " a Wife; nor could he think it reaſonable to " have any ſhare in the Government, unleſs it " was veſted in his Perſon, and that for the " Term of Life. If they thought fit to ſettle it " otherwiſe, he would not oppoſe them in it, " but he would return back to Holland, and " concern himſelf no more in their Affairs." Which I take however to be a kind of Menace. He added, That whatſoever others may think of a Crown, it did not appear ſuch a thing in his Eyes, but that he could live very well, and very well pleas'd without it. He concluded, " That tho' he could not reſolve to accept of a " Dignity, ſo as to hold it under the Life of ano- " ther, yet he thought that the Iſſue of the " Princeſs Anne ſhould be preferr'd in the Suc- " ceſſion to any Iſſue he might have by any o- " ther Wife after the preſent Princeſs." It muſt be own'd, that there was great Reaſon for the Prince to ſay what he ſaid, that a Regency would have ill Conſequences, an eternal Struggle between that and a prior ſuperior Right, which on all emergent Occaſions would have broke out to perplex and ruin the Regent, whoſe Power being ſo uncertain and diſputable, would be but a ſmall Encouragement for Foreign Princes to enter into Alliance with him, which was what his Highneſs had moſt at heart, after the Settlement of this Nation, to put a ſtop to the Growth of the exorbitant Power of France. His Sentiments were not deſign'd to be kept ſecret, and being reported abroad, they had great Influence in the Debates at Weſtminſter, and haſten'd things to a Concluſion.

Princeſs of Orange.

I do not think there were really ſo many Difficulties ſtarted, with relation to the Right of the Princeſs of Orange, as Echard pretends, or that her Diſpoſition was ſo little known as to create Doubts; tho' probably ſome might be apprehenſive, that if ſhe thought herſelf injur'd, ſhe, who by reaſon of her Youth and Health was like to outlive the Prince, might take revenge on all that poſtpon'd her Succeſſion, when it was in her power. The Satisfaction of theſe was left to Dr. Burnet, who had diſcours'd her Highneſs on that nice Subject two Years before, and knew her Mind. Accordingly he, with the Prince's Leave, declar'd her Royal Highneſs's Reſolution to ſubmit to the Preference that might be given her Royal Conſort, on account of his great Genius, Experience, and all Princely and Heroick Qualities. The Princeſs Anne of Denmark conſented to have her Succeſſion ſuſpended in favour of the Prince of Orange; but I have been told her Conſent was not procur'd very eaſily, nor was ſhe ever heartily reconcil'd to it, tho' ſhe did not let it be known to any but her moſt truſty Confidents.

Earl of Danby for the Princeſs of Orange.

The Earl of Danby carry'd things very high in favour of the Princeſs of Orange; he was ſo officious as to ſend a Meſſenger over to Holland with a Letter to her, giving her an Account of the State of the Debate, and deſiring to know her own Senſe of the Matter; for if it was her Deſire, He did not doubt but he ſhould be able to ſet her alone on the Throne. She return'd him a ſharp Anſwer, letting him know, She was the Prince's Wife, and would never be any other than what ſhould be in conjunction with him, and under him; and that ſhe ſhould take it extreme unkindly, if any, under the pretence of their Care for her, ſhould ſet up a divided Intereſt between her and the Prince. Wiſe and generous Sentiments, worthy ſo pious and ſo prudent a Princeſs; not content with this, ſhe immediately ſent both the Lord Danby's Letter, and her Anſwer, to the Prince, which open Proceeding was the moſt effectual Diſcouragement that could be to any future Attempt to create a Miſunderſtanding or Jealouſy between them. His Highneſs bore it coolly, and without any Expoſtulation with the Earl of Danby, who atton'd for this wrong Step by a warm Speech after the Report of the laſt Conference with the Commons, not only to prove the Vacancy of the Throne, but the Neceſſity of ſupplying it by the Prince of Orange, in which he was ſtrenuouſly ſupported by the Marquis of Halliſax, who from the firſt of the Debates to the laſt had been moſt zealous for the Prince, and taking advantage of this favourable Opportunity, immediately put the Queſtion, Whether their Highneſſes the Prince and Princeſs of Orange ſhould be declar'd King and Queen? and it was carry'd in the Affirmative by 20 Voices. Yea's 65, No's 45.

Marquis of Halifax puts the Queſtion for King William and Queen Mary.

Reſolv'd, "By the Lords Spiritual and Temporal aſſembled at Weſtminſter, that the "Prince and Princeſs of Orange ſhall be declar'd "King and Queen of England, and all the "Dominions thereunto belonging."

Which Vote their Lordſhips explain'd at their next Seſſion by the following one.

Reſolv'd,

Settlement of the Crown.

"That the Prince and Princeſs of Orange "ſhall be King and Queen of England, &c. "for their natural Lives, and the Life of the "longer Liver of them; and that the ſole and "full Regal Power be in the Prince only, in the "Name of both. And that after their Deceaſes "the Crown ſhall belong to the Heirs of the Bo"dy of the Princeſs; and for Default of ſuch "Iſſue to the Princeſs Anne of Denmark, and "the Heirs of her Body; and for Default of "ſuch Iſſue, to the Heirs of the ſaid Prince of "Orange; and for Default of ſuch Iſſue, to the "Perſon that ſhall be nam'd, and in ſuch man"ner as ſhall be limited by Act of Parliament; "and for Default of ſuch Limitation and Regu"lation, to the lawful Heirs of the ſaid Prince "of Orange." A Lord, whom Echard does not think fit to to name, mov'd ſeveral Lords to enter their Diſſents to theſe Votes; but it ſeems, tho' they were ready enough in their Inclinations, yet they thought the Caſe ſo nice, that they all refus'd to ſubſcribe their Names, for which I am very ſorry; it would have been a fine Roll to have oblig'd Poſterity with.

Their Lordſhips having agreed to abrogate the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, which had been ſo miſchievous in the former Reigns, Reſolv'd, that the following Oaths ſhould be taken inſtead of them.

New Oaths.

I A. B. do ſincerely promiſe and ſwear to bear true Allegiance to their Majeſties King William and Queen Mary.

So help me God.

I A. B. do ſwear, that I do from my Heart abhor, deteſt, abjure, as impious and heretical, this damnable Doctrine and Poſition, that Princes excommunicated or deprived by the Pope, or any Authority of the See of Rome, may be depos'd or murther'd by their Subjects, or any other whatſoever. And I do declare, that no Foreign Prince, Perſon, Prelate, State or Potentate, hath, or ought to have, any Juriſdiction, Power, Superiority, Preheminence or Authority, Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual, within this Realm.

So help me God.

Theſe Votes and Reſolutions being ſent down by the Lords to the Commons for their Concurrence, the latter, after a ſhort Debate, agreed to them with ſome Amendments; and to the new Oaths without any Amendment: But they were proteſted againſt in the Upper Houſe by eleven Biſhops, and twelve Temporal Peers, whoſe Number within two or three Days encreas'd to thirty-ſeven; and who not only declar'd againſt the Oaths, but expreſs'd themſelves againſt the Abdication, and the Vacancy of the Throne.

Declaration of Rights.

In the mean while a ſelect Committee of the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Somers at their head, were buſily employ'd in drawing up a ſolemn Declaration of Rights, containing the ſeveral Facts and Reaſons for King James's Forfeiture of the Crown; aſſerting the undoubted Rights and Liberties of the Subject, ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown, and appointing the New Oaths. Mr. Archdeacon Echard diſcovers a Secret here,

The

A. D. 1688. The Management of the Prince had ſuch an Effect upon the Leaders, as to cauſe them to haſten and ſhorten the famous Declaration, which was ſent up to the Lords for their Concurrence, February the 11th, At what time the ſingular Lord he ſpeaks of, who ſtuck faſt by King James, propos'd to thoſe Peers, who in moſt of the Votes had been of his mind, That they would all agree by Conſent to leave the Houſe at once; by which they would have abdicated their Seats there, as King James had abdicated the Throne; and no doubt that Auguſt Aſſembly would have dealt with them accordingly. But two wiſe and noble Lords, the Earls of Pembroke and Nottingham, could not approve of ſuch Raſhneſs and Temerity, and told them, that it would be of ill Conſequence, that they muſt ſupport the Government as well as they could, and could never anſwer it if they left the Houſe.

On the 12th of February the Lords had a Conference with the Commons about the Declaration, and the Amendments to the Votes beforemention'd. Managers for their Lordſhips were,

Earl of Bridgwater.	Earl Rivers.
Lord Delamere.	Earl of Stamford.
Earl of Kingſton.	Lord Viſcount Newport.
Biſhop of London.	Lord Vaughan.
Lord Montagu.	Earl of Northampton.

The very Names of theſe Lords lead us to the Expectation of a happy Agreement between the two Houſes for the Settlement of the Nation; which was ſoon compleated, and both Lords and Commons agreed to the Votes and Declaration of Rights by which King William and Queen Mary were ſettled on the Throne, and the Subjects Liberties aſſerted and ſecur'd in the manner following.

It was objected by Mr. F..... againſt the Grand Vote for the Abdication, that King James's ill Acts of Government amounted not to what was underſtood by the Word, Such a Violation of his Truſt, as was a Subverſion of the Conſtitution, and a Renouncing of it. We ſhall ſee beſt, whether it was ſo or not, by reading the following Declaration.

" Whereas the late King James II. by the " Aſſiſtance of divers evil Counſellors, Judges, " and Miniſters employ'd by him, did endea- " vour to ſubject and extirpate the Proteſtant " Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of this " Kingdom,

" And exceſſive Bail hath been requir'd of " Perſons committed in criminal Cauſes, to e- " lude the Benefit of the Laws for the Liberty " of the Subject,

" And exceſſive Fines have been impoſed,

" His Highneſs the Prince of Orange, whom " it hath pleaſed Almighty God to make the " Glorious Inſtrument of delivering this King- " dom from Popery and Arbitrary Power, did, " by the Advice of the Lords Spiritual and " Temporal, and divers principal Perſons of the " Commons, cauſe Letters to be written to the " Lords Spiritual and Temporal, being Pro- " teſtants, and other Letters to the ſeveral Coun- " ties, Cities, Univerſities, Boroughs and Cinque- " Ports, for the chuſing of ſuch Perſons to repre- " ſent them, as were of right to be ſent to Parlia- " ment, to meet and ſit at Weſtminſter, Janua- " ry 22, 1689, in order to ſuch an Eſtabliſh- " ment, as that their Religion, Laws and Li- " berties might not be again in danger of being " ſubverted; upon which Letters, Elections " have been accordingly made,

" And thereupon the ſaid Lords Spiritual and " Temporal, and Commons, purſuant to their " reſpective Letters and Elections, being now " aſſembled in a full and free Repreſentation of " this Nation, taking into their moſt ſerious " Conſideration the beſt means for the attaining " the Ends aforeſaid, do, in the firſt place, as " their Anceſtors in the like Caſes have uſually " done, for the vindicating their ancient Rights " and Liberties, DECLARE,

" That the pretended Power of ſuſpending " Laws, or the Execution of Laws by Regal " Authority, without Conſent of Parliament, is " illegal,

" That the pretended Power of Diſpenſing " Laws, or the Execution of Laws by Regal " Authority, as it hath been aſſumed and exer- " ciſed of late, is illegal, Princeſs of Orange arrives in England.

The Day before this Declaration and Tender of the Crown were offer'd to their Royal Highneſſes, the Princeſs of Orange arrived in England. She had been oblig'd to ſtay longer in Holland than ſhe deſir'd to have done, by Froſt and contrary Winds; which gave the Prince's Enemies occaſion to give out, ſhe was detain'd there by his Order, that ſhe might not come and put in her Claim to the Crown; for the Cavaliers, Tories, and Jacobites have always been fed with falſe Reports, to keep up their Spirits in Diſtreſs and Deſpair; and thoſe Reports being ever ſo fooliſh, abſurd and incredible, have not hinder'd their Currency. They alſo gave out, That ſhe was not well pleas'd with the late Tranſactions, with reſpect both to her Father and the preſent Settlement. Upon which, it is ſaid the Prince wrote to her, " That it was ne- " ceſſary ſhe ſhould at firſt appear ſo chearful, " that no one might be diſcourag'd by her Looks, " or made to apprehend that ſhe was uneaſy " at any thing that had been done:" Which Advice ſhe very punctually follow'd, and put on an Air of Gaiety, which had very little of Affectation in it. The Prince and Princeſs of Denmark met her Royal Highneſs at Greenwich; from whence they paſs'd by Barge up to Whitehall, amidſt the loud Shouts and Acclamations of the Multitude, who doubly rejoic'd for her happy Arrival, and her being juſt declar'd Queen. Never was Joy ſo reaſonable, ſo general, and ſo tranſporting. A. D. 1688.

Echard very ſqueamiſhly obſerves, She had ſome tender Pangs when ſhe enter'd her Father's Palace, and was going to mount his Throne; which is doubtleſs as falſe as what follows: She ſaid, She was under Direction, and acting a part that was not natural to her. I can hardly think even he would have ventur'd to have reported ſuch a Falſity, had he ſeen her then as I did, and there was nothing to be ſeen in her Looks which was not as natural and as lovely, as ever were Charms in Woman; nor was her Empire leſs over the Hearts than over the Wills of the Engliſh.

A Popiſh Lady furniſh'd the Archdeacon with the next Story. " Falling the ſame Night " into a more private Converſation with the " Earl of Danby, ſhe ſhew'd her Sentiments " with full Freedom and Openneſs." Upon his Diſcourſe to her of the late Proceedings, and the intended Settlements, ſhe ſaid to this effect: Do you but take care to ſecure the Proteſtant Religion, the Liberties of England, and the general Good of the Publick, and then make me what you pleaſe — I value neither Titles nor Honours, but to ſupport theſe great Things. When you can make them ſure without me, ſend me back as ſoon as you pleaſe. Such Notions as theſe, are indeed worthy the Greatneſs of her Royal Highneſs's Soul. However, Mr. Echard's pretended Pangs for her mounting her Father's Throne; which, by the way, was then no more her Father's, than it was the Archdeacon's; agree very little with what I have heard that ſhe ſhould ſay at her Coronation. The Princeſs of Denmark obſerving that ſhe was heated with the Royal Robes, the Breath of ſuch a prodigious Crowd as aſſiſted at it, and tired with the Time and Ceremony, ſaid ſoftly to her, I pity your Fatigue, Madam. Her Majeſty reply'd, A Crown, Siſter, is not ſo heavy as it ſeems to be, or ſomething like it.

The next day, February 13th, both Houſes of Convention waited upon their Royal Highneſſes the Prince and Princeſs of Orange in a Body at the Banquetting Houſe, where the Prince and Princeſs ſate on two large Seats under a Canopy of State.

Convention tender the Crown to the Prince and Princeſs of Orange.

The Clerk of the Crown having read the Declaration of Right with a loud Voice, the Marquis of Hallifax, Speaker of the Houſe of Lords, in the name of both Houſes, the Repreſentative of the Nation, made a Tender of the Crown to them, purſuant to the Prayer in that Declaration. To which his Royal Highneſs the Prince return'd the following Anſwer.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The Prince accepts it.

This is certainly the greateſt Proof of the Truſt you have in us that can be given, which is the thing that makes us value it the more, and we thankfully accept what you have offer'd. And as I had no other Intention in coming, than to preſerve your Religion, Laws, and Liberties, ſo you may be ſure that I ſhall endeavour to ſupport them, and ſhall be willing to concur in any thing that ſhall be for the Good of the Kingdom, and

A. D. 1688. and to do all that is in my power to advance the Welfare and Glory of the Nation.

Upon which there was a Shout ſo juſt and ſo loud, that it may bear Compariſon with the Acclaim in Holy Writ, when the Morning Stars ſang, and the Sons of God ſhouted for Joy. Such was the Voice of a People, who had their Deliverer and Liberty before them. The Multitudes without caught the grateful Acclamation, and Joy and Rapture ſounded in every Mouth, and ſparkled in every Eye.

Both Houſes had paſs'd a Proclamation in form, and it was ſolemnly publiſh'd, with a noble and numerous Attendance, in all the uſual Places, filling City and Suburbs, and afterwards the three Kingdoms with ſuch Exultations, as they had never felt or heard of before. The Proclamation was in the following Terms.

Proclamation for King WILLIAM and Queen MARY.

Whereas it has pleaſed Almighty God, in his great Mercy to this Kingdom, to vouchſafe us a Miraculous Deliverance from Popery and Arbitrary Power, and that our Preſervation is due, next under God, to the Reſolution and Conduct of his Highneſs the Prince of Orange, whom God hath choſen to be the Glorious Inſtrument of ſuch an ineſtimable Happineſs to us and our Poſterity: And being ſenſible and fully perſuaded of the great and eminent Virtues of her Highneſs the Princeſs of Orange, whoſe Zeal for the PROTESTANT Religion will, no doubt, bring a Bleſſing along with her upon this Nation; And whereas the Lords and Commons now aſſembled at Weſtminſter, have made a DECLARATION and preſented the ſame to the ſaid Prince and Princeſs of Orange, and therein deſir'd them to accept the Crown, who have accepted the ſame accordingly: We therefore, &c. do with full Conſent Publiſh and Proclaim, according to the ſaid Declaration, WILLIAM and MARY, Prince and Princeſs of Orange, to be KING and QUEEN of England, France and Ireland, with all the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging, &c.

Thus have I finiſh'd my Journey with great Pains and Patience. I have travel'd thro' difficult and dangerous Ways, where many Travellers before me have been bewilder'd and loſt. Some have fallen from Precipices, and periſh'd by their Raſhneſs and Obſtinacy; probably the Author or Authors of Clarendon's Hiſtory will be reckon'd among theſe. Others have been miſled into Bogs and Mire by falſe Lights, like that of Ignis fatuus, which was the Misfortune of the Compleat Hiſtorian and Archdeacon Echard; and none have kept their Way with an equal and ſober Pace, which is the only ſure one to bring a Man to his Journey's End with Pleaſure and Profit. A. D. 1688.

What I propos'd by this Undertaking, was to ſhew that the Royal Houſe of Stuart, from the Acceſſion of the Firſt King James to the Throne of England, to the Abdication of the Second, did endeavour to ſubvert the Conſtitution, and ſubject this Kingdom to Arbitrary Power Eccleſiaſtical and Civil; That in the Proſecution of their Deſign, they met with vigorous Oppoſition from the moſt Virtuous and Generous of the Engliſh Nation, who aſſerted their Liberty upon all Occaſions, according as the Neceſſity of the Caſe requir'd, and preſerv'd it, when in the utmoſt Peril of being loſt, by their Courage and Conſtancy.

The Fate of King James the Second, which is the Cataſtrophe of this Hiſtory, would, like that of a Tragedy, move Pity as well as Terror, if that Prince had been the leaſt ſenſible of his Miſgovernment: But all Compaſſion is taken off by his glorying in the Attempt to bind theſe Nations in the Chains of Spiritual and Temporal Bondage, and his ſhewing no Sorrow, but for his not being able to accompliſh it.

There is nothing in his Example which is in any danger of Temptation, but there is much in the Example of our Countrymen to invite us to imitate it, and to leave it in the beſt manner recommended to Poſterity, for whoſe ſake chiefly this Work was undertaken.
